Weep Not, Christian.

Weep not Christian, though oppression
O'er these wretched lands abound,
Wrongs, with uncontrolled aggression,
Spread their baneful influence round ;
Still forbear impassioned feeling,
Wipe the trembling tear away,
God for thee is now revealing
Worlds of infinite array.

Sigh not Christian tho' thy crosses
Far exceed what others bear,
Heaven will reimburse thy losses,
All thy injuries repair.
Beauteous robes will soon be tendered,
For the anguish here sustained,
More than double will be rendered,
More than Paradise regained.

Fear not Christian, war's fierce minions,
Firmly grasp thy sword and shield ;
Dauntless, hear their hostile clarion,
Challenge to the battle field ;
Led by virtue's nobler interest—
Bolder than a lion stand,
God will mark thy way to conquest,
With a strong and mighty hand.

Fear not, Christian, life's rough ocean,
Though its waves infuriate be ;
Raging seas in wild commotion,
Will not, cannot injure thee.
Thou shalt brave the howling tempest—
Fearless ride the foaming main,
By omnipotence encompassed,
Heaven's peaceful harbor gain.

There, perpetual calm and glory,
Past the surging billows roar,
Bliss unfading, lies before thee,
Where the winter's storms are o'er ;
Far surpassing expectation,
Bloom the regions of the blest,
There the grieved find consolation,
And the weary soul a rest.

Sigh not, Christian, thou hast treasures,
Richly stored in realms sublime,
Pure, serene, Elysian pleasures,
In a more exuberent clime ;
Happier scenes than these will greet thee,
Where thy weeping shall be o'er,
Kindred spirits soon shall meet thee
Where the landscape fades no more.

Sigh not, Christian, full enjoyment
Shall thy endless portion be ;
Sweetest praise thy lov'd employment,
Chapted through eternity ;—
There where rest each gentle spirit,
Peace extends a boundless sway,
There the ransomed shall inherit
 Mansions of eternal day.

Here we know not what we shall be,
But when Jesus shall appear,
Clothed with all his dazzling glory,
Then we shall his likeness bear.
Hallelujah to our Savior,
Who hath washed us in his blood ;
Glory be to him forever,
He hath brought us home to God.

Oh ! ye cherub millions aid us,
Tune your soft, ethereal lyres,
Praise who redeemed and made us
All ye high angelic choir.
Hallelujah to our Savior,
Who hath washed us with his blood ;
Glory be to him forever,
He hath brought us home to God.

Last Experiment on Definite Time.

Concluded.

But I have one more argument to present for your consideration, which is still more definite, and to my mind, ensures the termination of the vision this year. It is on

THE MIDST OF THE WEEK.

It is conceded by all, that Christ was crucified within the 70th week. At what point in the week, has been a subject of dispute among the good and the learned. Ferguson, Prideaux, Bullinger, Blair, and others, terminate the 70 weeks at the Crucifixion; while Lydiat, Usher, Petavius, and others, extend them three and a half years beyond. The controversy has turned much upon the word rendered "Midst," in our translation; which word in the original, has the definition "midst, (or middle,) last half, latter part," but is never used to signify first part, or half. Some, therefore, took the position that the word should be understood in the sense of "middle;" while others (among whom were our modern commentators) understood it in its most extended signification—"latter part," and placed the cross at the end of the 70th week. I must confess, I can see no propriety in the use of the term "midst," unless something definite was intended: especially when we take into consideration the fact, that the angel had before told Daniel, in verse 26th, that "Messiah was cut off AFTER" the 7 and 62 weeks, and of course in the 70th. With this view, agrees the opinion of one of the most profound biblical critics of the age—as quoted by Hale, page 60—Hengstenberg :—

"Without any reference to the question which we are discussing, but to vindicate the faithfulness of God against the cavils and objections of neologists, in reference to the fulfilment of the 70 weeks, he uses the following strong language :—
"The prophecy itself bears all the marks of chronological definiteness. The commencement and termination are not fluctuating, but designated by strictly limited events. The whole period of 70 weeks is not only divided into three parts of 7, 62, and 1 week, but also this latter into two halves. How could this happen, if no regard was paid to half a hundred years, more or less? God himself would have given occasion to doubt his word, if a prophecy, bearing all the marks of chronological definiteness, was proved by the fulfilment to be indefinite."—(Christology, vol. 2, p. 380 : Wash., 1839.

I therefore take the ground that something definite is intended by the word "midst," and that it means middle; consequently the cross should be placed in the middle of the 70th week. That Christ was crucified in the spring of A. D. 33, is settled from Gospel history, in connexion with astronomical facts. It is known from the testimony of the Evangelists, that our Savior was crucified at a passover, and on Friday; and from the Old Testament, as all admit, that the time appointed for the passover is in the first month, at the full of the moon. Then it must be evident, that the crucifixion must have taken place in a year when the passover full moon would fall on Friday. From our astronomical tables we learn, that the only passover full moon that fell on a Friday, during the period covering the entire ground of dispute for the year of the crucifixion, was in the spring of A. D. 33;—(and Ferguson says, "for several years before and after."—See Ast., p. 388, 7th ed., London, 1785.) Therefore it is a conceded point that Christ was crucified in the spring of A. D. 33. If, then he was crucified at the middle point of the 70th week, and in the spring of A. D. 33, it is evident that his baptism must have been in the fall of A. D. 29—at which point terminated the 69 weeks (or 483 yrs. of the vision.) And if 483 years of the vision ended in the fall of A. D. 29, (leaving 1817 yrs.,) it is evident that the entire vision must end in the fall of A. D. 1846. And this view, harmonizes with all the facts of Gospel history, and of Astronomy, pertaining to the birth, baptism, and Crucifixion of Christ. For as Luke 3: 23 informs us, Christ "began to be about thirty" when baptized; and as he was baptized in the fall of A. D. 29, it is evident the eclipse which marked his birth, must have been in the year 1 B. C. This agrees also with Luke 3: 1-3: where we learn John commenced his ministry in the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, which is also fixed by an eclipse to have been from August A. D. 28, to Aug. A. D. 29. And as the Scriptures inform us, (Luke 1: 1-36,) that John was just 6 months older than Jesus, and as John under the law could not commence his ministry short of thirty, and Christ was about thirty when baptized, it is evident that John's ministry could not have exceeded six months up to the time he baptized Jesus. This allows abundant time for John to commence his ministry in the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, and to baptize Christ in the fall of A. D. 29. And as the 69th week terminated at his baptism, in the fall of A. D. 29, and he was crucified in the middle of the 70th week—3½ years from his baptism—it is evident that he was crucified in the spring of A. D. 33. With this view, all the facts harmonize and confirm each other.

In our argument for the termination of the vision in 1843, we took the most extended signification of the word rendered "midst," and following in the wake of our modern commentators, placed the cross at the end of the 70th week—leaving 1810 years remaining of the vision from the cross. Now it is evident that if the 70th week terminated at the cross, in A. D. 33, the whole vision must have terminated in 1843. But the vision tarried; and Time, the great truth-teller, rolled on—pushing the termination of the 70th week beyond the cross, and at the same time moving the cross toward the middle point of the week. It is now within about nine months of that point, beyond which it cannot pass, if we are correct in the use of the word "midst." But as doubts may exist upon that point, I will endeavor, from the sure word of prophecy, to fix a bar at the middle point of the week, that cannot be passed, which, if I can do, the vision will assuredly terminate this year, as that Christ was crucified in the spring of A. D. 33.

Christ had a ministry, of which we have a faithful record, from his baptism to his crucifixion. Now if a train of events can be obtained from that history, that will fill $3\frac{1}{2}$ years (or the first half) of the 70th week, it will be evident to all that the vision must terminate by the fall of this year.

Now as Christ was baptized in the fall of A. D. 29, at which point the 69th week terminated, and as his crucifixion took place at a Passover, (which was in the spring,) $3\frac{1}{2}$ years from that point, it is evident the first passover he could have attended after his baptism, must have been just six months, and in the spring of A. D. 30. Now by referring to the Diagram below, you will find a passover put down at six months from his baptism; and by turning to John 2: 13, we find the record of the first passover Jesus attended after his baptism, and by consulting the chronology of your Bibles, you find it put down A. D. 30. At one year from that point, a second Passover—recorded John 5: 1, A. D. 31: and by consulting all the authorities within my reach, I find they agree that was the Feast of the Passover. Again, John 6: 4, a third Passover—A. D. 32. And in John, 11th to 18th chapters, a fourth Passover Jesus attended, A. D. 33—during which he was betrayed and crucified. These four passovers—allowing the first to be six months from his baptism, (which it must be, inasmuch as he was crucified at a Passover in the spring,)—fill up precisely $3\frac{1}{2}$ years, or the first half of the 70th week. Consequently the 70th week cannot extend more than $3\frac{1}{2}$ years beyond the cross, neither the 2300 days beyond the fall of 1846. Other facts might be given, (as there are abundant materials in the Evangelists) to prove Christ's ministry to be $3\frac{1}{2}$ years; but this must suffice.

Now as the 69 $\frac{1}{2}$ weeks (or 486 $\frac{1}{2}$ years) of the vision cannot extend beyond the cross, and as 486 $\frac{1}{2}$ years taken from the 2300 years leaves 1813 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, it is evident that the extreme amount of time from the cross to the end of the vision, cannot exceed 1813 $\frac{1}{2}$ years. And as it is a conceded fact that Christ was crucified in the spring of A. D. 33, to which add the 1813 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, (the extreme amount of time from the cross to the end of the vision,) it becomes a self-evident fact that the extreme point for the termination of the vision, must be in the fall of 1846. And just as sure as that Christ was crucified in the spring of A. D. 33, just so sure it is that the vision will terminate this year. For the moment you extend the 69 $\frac{1}{2}$ weeks beyond the cross, you crowd out one of those Passovers, add-cut down the period of Christ's ministry to 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, which the Gospel history will not admit of.

Bless the Lord, O my soul! The 70 weeks will indeed SEAL UP the vision, and make it SURE, that the WISE may UNDERSTAND. We have, indeed, a sure word of prophecy, to which we do well to take heed; for it is becoming truly, a light on this hitherto dark point, and clearly shows that the vision will end and bring "OUR GOD" this year. I believe it with all my soul. Then let us, my brethren, awake. We have but an hour to fight, and the victory is ours.

HARMONY WITH THE OTHER PERIODS.

The remarkable harmony of the prophetic periods was considered a strong confirmation of the argument for the termination in 1843. Whenever, therefore, a different calculation is presented, the question naturally arises—"How do you harmonize it with the other periods?" It is well known to all who have examined the subject with any care, that a discrepancy has ever existed in the dates of all the prophetic periods. And the most remarkable thing to my own mind connected with the entire subject, is the fact that about the same difference should exist in their dates, and that the extreme difference among all our chronologists of any note, from Christ's day to the present time, does not exceed four years.

In our argument for '43, we in every instance took the earliest dates for the commencement and termination of the periods. But the time passing, proved their incorrectness, and we are of necessity driven to the latest dates. And as we have now entered upon the last year of disputed ground, we must either take the position that the promise of Christ to his disciples, that he would "send the Comforter, who would lead us into all truth," has in no sense been realized, and no light been imparted to the Church on this highly important subject, during the entire dispensation of the Holy Spirit for 1800 years—or we must come to the conclusion that the coming of Christ is near, even at the door.

From the above considerations, we perceive there is no more difficulty in harmonizing the other periods with the present than with the former argument. The main periods to be harmonized with this termination of the 2300 years, are the Seven Times, the 1335, 1290, and 1260 yrs. The Seven Times, or 2520 years of the Jewish subversion, we dated from the captivity of Manasseh. This captivity is placed in B. C. 607, by Dr. Prideaux, Archbishop, Usher, Jackson, Playfair, Blair, and others—which was the date taken in our argument for 1843. The latest date is by Dr. Jarvis, in B. C. 674, which extends the period to 1846. For the harmony of the other periods, I give an extract from Hale's article, published in the "Voice of Truth," Vol. 7, No. 1.

"The 1290 begin, it would seem, with the 1335, and end 45 years earlier, as the 1260 end with the 1290, and begin 30 years later; the only question therefore, in reference to these periods is this—Can we find any events which may justly be considered the starting point of each, and corresponding events to mark the termination of the 1260 and 1290, 45 years, or thereabouts, before the supposed termination of the 2300 and 1335 years?"

The interpretation of the prophecy in each case, so far as its application to events is concerned, we still consider as settled—i. e., "the daily and the abomination that astonisheth," are paganism and popery. And if any reliance can be placed upon the testimony of history, it must be that the balance, which had so long swung by turns in favor of Christianity and paganism, preponderated finally in favor of the former in the reign of Clovis; that the papal form of Christianity was established by law in the reign of Justinian; that the supremacy given to the pope by the 'Justinian Code,' was abolished, for a time at least, by the 'Code Napoleon.'

It is well known that in fixing the dates of the periods now under consideration, as in the case of the longer periods, and as it was very proper for us to do, we have taken the earliest events of a positive character, in a series of such events, for the ground of our calculations—the last victories of Clovis, as the leader of the 'Catholic faction' in 508—the conquest of Rome by Belisarius in 538, and its conquest by the French in 1798. We now refer to the latest events in the series at each period. According to Gibbon, (Milman's Gib., vol. 2, p. 419,) Clovis died in 511. Gifford says:

"It was on his return from his (last) expedition that he received at the city of Tours, the ambassadors of Anastasius, Emperor of the East, who sent him the title and insignia of patrician and consul, and conferred on him the dignified appellation of "august." The new patrician, after dismissing the ambassadors, returned to Paris, which he made the capital of his empire.—Success had hitherto attended all the plans of Clovis; and allowing for the ferocious and martial spirit which then prevailed, he had preserved his fame from any material pollution; but his good fortune and his heroism appear to have forsaken him at the same time. It was probably to wipe out the infamy incurred by the commission of so many crimes, that he founded a great many churches and monasteries. It was probably from similar motives that he assembled a council of 33 bishops in the town of Orleans, A. D. 511. We learn from history that it was not only assembled by his orders, but that he fixed on the topics of discussion. The assembling of the council of Orleans was the last remarkable event in the life of Clovis, who died the same year, at the age of 45, and was buried in the church of St. Peter and St. Paul, which he had caused to be built. [Hist. of France, p. 39.]

That Clovis attained to supreme authority in the western empire, and that the whole weight of his authority was devoted to the establishment of 'Catholic Christianity,' is settled beyond dispute. Whether he was invested with the consular office, is a subject of doubt, though the manner in which it was spoken of, showed that the bestowment of that dignity could have added nothing to his real power.

"A. D. 510. After the success of the Gothic war, Clovis accepted the honors of the Roman consulship. The Emperor Anastasius, ambitiously bestowed upon the most powerful rival of Theodoric, the titles and ensigns of that eminent dignity; yet for some unknown cause, the name of Clovis has not been inscribed in the Fasti, either of the east or west. * * * * * The actual or legal authority of Clovis, could not receive any new accession from the consular dignity."—[Mil. Gibbon, Vol. 2, p. 418.]

According to this testimony, Clovis was made consul, if at all, in 510. His power was publicly devoted to the establishment of Catholic Christianity, just before his death in 511, so that the latest date which can be given to the agency of Clovis must fall in that year. 1335 years, beginning in 511, brings us to 1846.

'A. D. 533, the Pope was declared the head of all the churches by the Emperor Justinian.'—[Croly.] In 533, the city of Rome was conquered by the armies of the same Emperor. In 541, thirty years after the death of Clovis, 'the succession of consuls finally ceased, in the thirteenth year of Justinian, whose despotic temper might be gratified by the silent extinction of a title which admonished the Romans of their ancient freedom.'—Milman's Gib. Vol. 3, p. 55.] So that there was never afterwards any power resident at Rome acknowledged as supreme, excepting that of the Pope, till after its conquest by the French in 1798. 1260 years, the period during which the saints were to be subject to the papacy, beginning in 541, extend to 1801. 1290 years, beginning at 511, terminate at the same point; and 1801 is the latest date that can be assigned for the humiliation of the Pope by Napoleon. In that year the former was constrained to make a full acknowledgement of subjection to the latter.

Napoleon was made consul in 1799. All Europe was at peace with France in 1801; and to be at peace with her then, was to acknowledge France the conqueror. This acknowledgement was made by the Pope in what was called the concordat. Of this transaction, of which Thiers says: 'There does not exist a more curious negotiation, or one more deserving of meditation.' [History of the Consulate and Empire, p. 325, Note.]—we shall find the opinion of three historians—Rotteck, Scott, and Thiers. The first of these says:

"Not only the civil code, but also religion and the Church were abused as instruments of despotism. Bonaparte selected from the Catholic usages or abuses merely what he (without prejudice to himself) could yield to the Pope, and for the advantage of his ambitious plans. In this spirit a concordat was negotiated with the last, whereby consul and pope granted to one another what neither of them had a right to dispose of, and one sacrificed to the other, and received in return as a sacrifice, the liberty of the Church, which he ought to have protected. A national council had been opened at Paris, (June 29th 1801,) but Bonaparte dissolved it (August 16th,) in order to gain the Pope, who was afraid of it." [History of the World, vol. 4, p. 148.

Scott speaks of it as follows:

"This important treaty was managed by Joseph Bonaparte, who, with three colleagues, held conferences for that purpose, with the plenipotentiaries of the Pope. The ratifications were exchanged on the 18th of December, 1801; and when they were published, it was singular to behold how submissive the once proud See of Rome lay prostrate before the power of Bonaparte, and how absolutely he must have dictated all the terms of the treaty. Every article innovated on some of those rights and claims which the Church of Rome had for ages asserted as the unalienable privileges of her infallible head." * * * * * Such was the celebrated compact by which Pius VII. surrendered to a soldier, whose name was five or six years before unheard of in Europe, those high claims to supremacy in spiritual affairs, which his predecessors had maintained for so many ages against the whole potentates of Europe." [Life of Napoleon, Vol. 1, p. 502, Phil. 1827.

Our limits will not admit of giving extracts from Thiers. Those of our readers who desire to see all the particulars with reference to the event—the parties concerned in it—their character and position, we would refer to Thiers's Consulate and Empire, where is given the most exact and authentic history extant: from which we learn that "Bonaparte made Peris VII Pope, in 1801, but dependent on his own will, and this arrangement was called the Concordat—in which Bonaparte took care to retain in his own hands the power of nomination to the benefices of all the dignified clergy; and an oath of fidelity to the French Republic is enjoined by the Concordat to be taken by clergymen, and prayers to be put up by them for the republic and councils."—The Concordat was entirely the work of Bonaparte. The negotiations upon it commenced in March, 1801. But so high were the pretensions of the court of Rome on the one part, and so great the demands of Napoleon on the other, as almost to imply an impossibility of their coming to an understanding. But Bonaparte persisted in his purpose with the most invincible firmness and determined perseverance, until every demand necessary for the accomplishment of his ambitious designs was acceded to by the Pope.

Scott, in his Life of Napoleon, says: Bonaparte introduced his own name as much as possible into the Concordat. To honor Napoleon, the Catachumen was taught, was the same as to honor and serve God himself—to oppose his will was to oppose God, and expose the one so doing to eternal damnation." The closing scene of the negotiation, and the signing of the act, is thus recorded by Thiers, p. 337: "They met together for form's sake, at Joseph Bonaparte's house; they read over the acts again; they made some slight changes of detail, always reserved for the last moment; and on the 15th of July, 1801—26th Messidor—this great act was signed, the most important that the court of Rome had ever concluded with France, and perhaps with any Christian power, for it terminated one of the most frightful storms that the Catholic religion had ever gone through." Nothing was now wanting to complete the submission and humiliation of the Roman Pontiff, but the ratification of the Concordat at Rome, which took place in the month of September following, in grand consistory, and in the most imposing manner—which consummated the entire new re-modelling of the Papal system, and brought the Pope into as complete submission to the will of Bonaparte, as other kings had been to that of the Pope. This event marks the termination of the 1260 and 1290 year periods, and gives us, as the latest date we can refer to for their termination, 1801. "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the one thousand three hundred and thirty-five days," or 45 years beyond—reaching to the fall of 1846—For then shall Daniel, with all the redeemed hosts of God, stand in their lot, in the presence of their king, to go no more out forever.

And with such a pledge, my brethren, as God has given us of the faithfulness of His word, in raising up Napoleon—that mighty instrument of his providence—to give and heal the deadly wound of the Beast, (which is only a foretaste of the destruction that awaits it at the coming of Christ,) can we not wait, and patiently, the few days that remains of the vision! Oh, let us get our eye upon the mark, and press for the prize, rejoicing in the speedy consummation of our hope.

IN CONCLUSION,

I would remark, I have endeavored to give as fully as the limits of the sheet would allow, the present light on Definite Time. To my own mind, the evidence is clear as a sunbeam, that the vision cannot extend beyond the fall of the present year. It may not appear so to you. I have only to ask a careful and prayerful examination of the subject. And may God give you his Spirit to discern between truth and error, and enable you to receive all the truth in the love of it, and lift up your voice and warn the world to prepare for judgment. What is done, my brethren, must be done quickly. For this I say unto you, "time is short." And that we may all so redeem the time as to secure a part in the first resurrection, is my sincere prayer. Yours in the blessed hope of seeing the King of Glory this year.

E. R. PINNEY.

From the Advent Herald.

Letter from Bro. Elon Galusha.

TO BRO. J. B. COOK.

Dear Bro. Cook—Your affectionate letter of Jan. 16th came late to hand, on account of my absence from home, or I should have responded to it more promptly. Doubting whether this would reach you, if directed to the place where yours was dated more than a month ago, and not knowing where to address you, I send my reply to your private letters and public essay to the "Herald" for insertion; presuming that you will sooner receive it through that medium; and not fearing any dissatisfaction on your part, as neither of us hold any religious sentiments which we would conceal from the public eye.

I most cordially reciprocate the christian love which you so fraternally express. I also assent to the truthfulness of your assertion, that "the spirit and principle which led you to the baptismal stream, and into the Advent, is the spirit and principle by which you are now governed." And I can unhesitatingly affirm the same of myself. But it must be admitted that neither of us were perfect in our knowledge of the word of God, either when we entered the baptismal stream, or when we embraced the Advent doctrine; nor have we yet made that unearthly attainment. Nor does your quotation of Ps. 25: 9, 14; Dan. 12: 10; Amos. 3: 7; 1 Thes. 5: 4, 8; John 14: 15, 18, 26, 27, in which it is said, "the meek will be guide in judgment; and the meek will he teach his way"—"the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant"—"The wise shall understand"—the Lord will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets"—"ye are not in darkness," &c.—"I will send the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, to teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you," prove that human chronology is infallible. All these texts (unless we except the last, which is addressed to the inspired apostles) must be limited in their application to fallible mortals, however meek and upright they are. "For," says the apostle (1 Cor. 13: 12,) "now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." You say the texts above quoted "cannot yield to mistakes in chronology, or anything else." That is very true. They cannot yield—but you and I must yield to mistakes in chronology, when we are meek enough and wise enough to be taught such mistakes by the providence of God, in the passing of the time. I have ever considered the Advent calculations vulnerable at this point. Hence I never believed or taught the coming of Christ in '43 or '44 as an absolute certainty; but as a high probability—not as a matter of positive faith—but of honest rational opinion.—457 B. C. appeared to be so well settled as the date of the decree in the 7th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, and had obtained so general credence throughout Christendom, and made such a wonderful harmony with other chronological data, that I did not see how anything but the passing of the time could disprove it. When that infallible witness gave in his testimony, I bowed in humble submission, as to the voice of God. Further light upon the subject has made it manifest, that however credible that date appeared, it must be at least three years too early.

Your error, my dear brother, I apprehend to be that of placing divine and human testimony upon a common level, or confounding them with each other. You appear to have regarded the year 457 B. C. the starting point, of equal authority with 2300 years, the measure of the 2300 symbolical days; whereas the former rests upon the word of man, and the latter upon the word of God. As you cannot give up the latter you cling with equal (and unwarrantable) tenacity to the former. But "what is the chaff to the wheat?" In interpreting the prophetic periods, you compared scripture with scripture, and thus by the aid of the Spirit apprehended the truth; which filled you with joy: for your heart was in love with the truth. Your diligent study of the word of God, and importunate prayer for divine guidance, brought you near to him, and gave you more of his Spirit. Hence the truth was so clear, so bright, and gave you such sweet communion with its glorious author, that you regarded it as sealed on your heart. Then connecting your honest opinion (embraced with the same confidence, in the same humble and devout frame of mind,) that 457 B. C. commenced, and 1843 terminated the 2300 days, you very naturally considered '43 as also sealed by the same Spirit. Forgetting that the Spirit is limited in its teachings by the Word, and that "the spirits are to be tried by the Word." Forgetting also that the arch deceiver, by "transforming himself into an angel of light," is capable of taking advantage of our best, as well as our worst state of mind, and that his efforts are the strongest when our attainments are the highest. Alas! how many good men from this high elevation, have been pushed into presumption, spiritualism, and fanaticism, under the idea of making still higher attainments. The erroneous notion that '43 and the 10th day of the 7th month "were sealed by the Spirit," has led some to believe that "the door of mercy is shut," and to ascribe to Christ a first-second coming (as bridegroom, not as judge and king,) and others to reject the doctrine of his personal coming totally, and to convert the "new heavens and earth" into the "souls and bodies of the saints," to imagine that they themselves, were "executing the final judgment"—yea, even to assert that they "have their immortal bodies now," while they "hunger and thirst," are subject to pain, and dare not submit their veins to so simple a test as the touch of the lancet. When men follow what they deem the Spirit, one step beyond the word of the Lord, there is no stopping place but in the labyrinth of confusion, or the vortex of ruin. You, my dear brother, have not reached the awful extreme to which some others have gone; but you are on the same road in which they travelled, step by step, to your present position; and unless you retrace your steps, and return to the plain word of God, you will inevitably plunge over the same fearful precipice. Doubtless the adversary would persuade you, that you were unreservedly consecrated to God and led by his Spirit, and therefore he would not suffer you to err in such a spiritual state of mind. But he is careful not to remind you that Abraham, in the highest state of faith and holy obedience (by virtue of which he became the father of the faithful, and an example to believers, to the end of the world,) was suffered to entertain one erroneous idea. He verily thought that God intended he should slay Isaac. And the subsequent correction of his error did not vitiate ~~either his faith or his obedience~~; but God by that very misconception of the ~~divine intention~~ proved the strength of his faith, and the perfection of his obedience. There was so much that was correct in his views, and so much that pleased God in his heart, that he signally blessed him. So with us in '43, and on the 10th day of the 7th month.—If our Heavenly Father never blessed us when there was a defect in our views, he would never bless us in this imperfect state. Did the error in the expectation of Moses and the elders of Israel, respecting the time of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, cause the Lord to withdraw his favor from them? The trial of Abraham's faith and the deliverance of the Hebrew bondmen were of God; but the human instruments which he employed bore the marks of human imperfection. So I believe the advent message was of God, and that deliverance to the captives will come at God's appointed time; but he has shown that his servants whom he called to this work are but fallible men. "He will not give his glory to another," any more than he will "give his praise to graven images." "He will stain the pride of all glory, and bring into contempt all the honorable of the earth."

You, my brother, as well as others, have been disappointed, and are constrained to admit that you have been mistaken. But instead of placing the mistake upon the most rational, probable and reconcilable ground (human chronology), in my view, you place it upon the most irrational, improbable and unreconcilable ground (the plain inspired description of the event.) The difference in our views is as follows:—You think the 2300 days have ended, and, therefore, the event which characterizes their termination has occurred. While I think the event which characterizes their termination has not occurred, and therefore, the 2300 days have not ended. Both admit a mistake—you in the manner, I in the time. For a knowledge of the manner of the fulfilment, we have to rely solely on the divine testimony—God's word declares it. But as to the time, we have to rely partly on human testimony. Prophetic chronology rests upon divine, but historical chronology upon human authority. The Bible tells us what event marks the commencement of the 2300 days, and the year of the monarch's reign in which that event took place. And respectable, but uninspired, chronologers tell us that that year synchronizes with the year 457 B. C. That part of our calculation, therefore, which rests upon the divine testimony, is infallible; but that which depends on human is fallible; and a failure in the latter does not, in the least, invalidate the former. Hence a mistake in the time of the final event only impeaches human judgment; while a mistake in the manner actually impeaches the fidelity and intelligibility of divine word. Therefore to maintain the infallibility of human chronology (as to 457 B. C.) you have (implicitly) to charge the word of God with imperfections, or obscurity; and to suit it to the event which you have substituted for that which is predicted, you have to wrest it from its plain and obvious import, and attach to it a spiritual or mystical sense. What can be plainer than the Bible description of the event with which the 2300 days terminate? The end of the transgression of desolation—the last end of the indignation—the breaking without hand of the Roman power,—the consummation,—the pouring of that which is determined upon the desolator. (Dan. 8 : 13, 19, 25; 9 : 27.) Did all this occur either in the spring of '43, or the autumn of '44?—Has the Papal abomination ceased to pollute the sanctuary, and tread the host under foot? Has the last end of the indignation been realized? See Isa. 26 : 20, 21.—"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut to thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment until the indignation be past.—For behold, the Lord cometh out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." Has the Roman power been broken without hand? or does the strength of her iron still remain mixed with the potter's clay in the unsmitten toes of the image? Has the stone which Daniel foresaw smite them yet appeared thus? Has the parallel Dan. 7th been fulfilled—the thrones cast down, the judgment set, the books opened, and the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven given to the people of the saints of the Most High God? or that other parallel, Dan. 12 : 1—3?—Has Michael the Prince stood up—the time of trouble come—those written in the book all been delivered—many that slept in the dust awaken, and are the wise shining as the sun in the firmament? Has the consummation been witnessed? and that determined been poured upon the desolator? See parallel Rev. 11. Have those who destroy the earth been destroyed—the time of the dead come that they should be judged, and reward given to the prophets and saints, and all that fear his name, small and great? If these events have not occurred, then the 2300 days, at the termination of which they were to occur, have not ended. "For at the time appointed the end shall be." (Dan 8 : 19.) This language is not symbolical, but the literal interpretation which divine inspiration has given us, of the symbols of which it is the interpretation. There is no room for parabolic imagery, spiritualism, or mysticism. Such language as this can never be made to represent an invisible coming of Christ as "bridegroom," nor anything else but the world's final catastrophe—and this is the language which infinite wisdom has chosen to mark the end of the 2300 days.

Now let me give a simple illustration of the two methods of accounting for the disappointment of those who looked for such a catastrophe at the time specified. Suppose a company of us set out together to trace an ancient line and find its termination. We examine the survey bill, and find the line is 2300 chains in length. Our first inquiry then is, what is the length of a chain, as the word is used in the survey bill. On examining a number of bills of the same surveyor, and tracing several shorter lines of his running, where the boundaries are correctly sustained, we are all agreed as to the length of his chain, and adopt one of the same description. Next we inquire for the course of the line, and arrive at a unanimous decision on the subject. We then inquire for the object which marks the terminus of the line, and find it to be saxum, which the survey bill explains to be a rock. The last thing to be ascertained is the exact point at which the line commences. That we find denoted by a stake and stones—so described in the ancient survey. We find a stake and stones which are said to be at that very period; but on inquiry of the oldest inhabitant, we learn that the original bounds had long since become invisible:—the stake had rotted away, and the stones had been scattered abroad—that their fathers, several generations ago, had endeavored to ascertain and re-establish the boundary, and that after diligent search, the majority of the investigators, from surrounding objects which appeared to resemble those described in the ancient survey, judged that the original stake and stones were placed about where the modern ones now stand; and notwithstanding other respectable individuals of their number judged the primitive bounds to be (some a greater and some a less distance) farther on toward the termination of the line, and stuck their respective stakes accordingly (which are still to be seen); still the majority set up their stake and stones, where we now find them standing—and that the modern inhabitants had generally come to regard that as the identical point of the original stake and stones. Well, we all adopt it, and commence the measurement at that point with different degrees of confidence that the given number of chains will bring us to the rock. We measure off the 2300 chains with great precision, and are disappointed in not finding the rock. We then set about ascertaining the cause of our disappointment.—All agree that the chain is right—the course is right—the measurement accurate, but, some of us say, "It has proved as we feared from the beginning it might turn out, that those who established the bounds from which we commenced our measurement, mistook the point and sent us too far back, hence we have not yet come to the termination of the line. And perhaps some one of the other points marked by the minority may be the true starting point, and perhaps none of them are exactly right; but we have seen so many of the sure marks of the line, and have passed so many of the objects noted in the original survey, that we are confident we are in the right course, and if we keep on in the same direction, we shall find the rock at no great distance." Others say, "No, we have had such confidence in the starting point, and felt it so sealed in our hearts, that the point where we now stand is the real termination of the line,—that we cannot be mistaken in this matter. But we have all been mistaken in the meaning of the word saxum,—it does not mean a rock, as we supposed, but a knoll, in the shape of a rock, and here it is at the very end of the last chain. How blind we all were!—We should have recognized it at first if we had not been looking for a rock." But the former reply, "We cannot be mistaken in the object looked for; as the original surveyor himself has assured us that the meaning of saxum is a rock, and that marks the termination of the line, and surely there is no rock here; consequently the termination of the line must be further on. And on examining the minutes of the modern surveyors more critically, we see clearly that the majority have set the bounds too far back; and we ought to go on till we get the 2300 chains from the nearest point marked for the commencement by the minority, if we do not find the rock short of that distance." All agree that the original surveyor could not be mistaken, and would not deceive, and that rock is his own definition of saxum—his own symbol. Now which of the two parties gives the most rational, probable, reconcilable account of the mistake? If you, my dear brother, still say, as some have said "'43, as the time, was so sealed upon your heart, that you cannot give it up"—permit me to ask if the personal appearing of Christ was not as much sealed on your heart (as the event) as '43 was (as the time)? Both of those could not have been sealed by the divine spirit (if either was), because they are contradictory. One of them, then must be given up. Why not give up the time, then, which rests only on human opinion, and not the event, which depends on divine testimony.

I am aware that you lay great stress on the parable of the Ten Virgins (Matt. 25) for the support of your theory, of the "bridegroom come, and the door of mercy closed on the 10th day of the 7th month." But let me remind you, that parables are not designed to teach new doctrines, but only to illustrate those which are taught in the word of God, in literal language: and can be relied upon for a knowledge of doctrine, so far as they are explained; either in the context, or elsewhere by the inspired writers. They are similitudes, in the interpretation of which only some prominent feature, or features, can safely be regarded. They are not to be made (as Henry says) to "go on all fours." We are no more at liberty to use their imagery in all its minute detail, to represent correspondencies in the things illustrated by them, than we are to treat metaphors in the same way. Christ is called a lion; but what sacrilege we should commit, to make that animal in his body and limbs, bones and sinews, external and internal organs, represent correspondencies in our adorable Lord, because for majesty and strength the sacred Scriptures liken him unto that king of beasts. It is just as unwarrantable—though not as ridiculous and wicked—to make all the circumstances and ceremonies of a Jewish wedding represent correspondencies in the coming of our Savior, "the second time without sin unto salvation;" because he has used that similitude to represent the awful disappointment with which many of his ostensible servants will meet in that solemn hour, in consequence of their not watching and preparing for its approach. What shipwreck of faith has been made, by spiritualizing the lamps, the going forth, the number of the virgins, the vessels, the oil, the slumbering, the midnight cry, the trimming of the lamps, the coming of the bridegroom, the going out of the foolish virgins' lamps, their asking for oil, their going to buy, the going into the marriage, the shutting of the door, &c.—as though all this drapery applied to the coming of Christ "as bridegroom." How different the application which our Lord makes of the parable. Hear it: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man (not the bridegroom) cometh"—showing that he designed by that parable to teach the simple fact, that many who would expect to enter into his kingdom at his coming, through heedlessness and neglect would fail; by which consideration he urges the necessity of watchfulness to avoid such a disaster. He himself informs us in what the similitude bears an application to the subject of his coming. It is but the enforcement of the same lesson taught in the 42d verse of the preceding chapter, and there urged from a consideration of the sudden and unexpected overthrow of the antediluvians and the Sodomites, showing that the destruction of the heedless at his coming will be similar, as the character and state of the victims will be similar. The parable of the Ten Virgins no more teaches the doctrine of Christ's coming in the character of bridegroom, than Rev.

3:3 teaches the doctrine of his coming in the character of a thief. Both show that he will come unexpectedly to those who do not watch, and they will be suddenly overtaken with the predicted ruin.

Our Savior's coming is mentioned five times in the preceding chapter as that of the Son of man, and four times as Lord. In this chapter he is twice said to come as the Son of man, and thrice as judge and king. Indeed, in all these descriptions of his coming, his character as judge and king are involved, as they all respect the kingdom. The various other Bible representations of his second advent ascribe to him the same character. He is to "judge the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom." (2 Tim. 4:1.) But he is nowhere represented as coming in the character of bridegroom. Then do not, my dear brother, continue to advocate a theory respecting so momentous a subject, which is built upon so fanciful and unscriptural a foundation, as that of Christ's having already "come (since his ascension) as bridegroom."—There is but one second coming of our Lord, and that has been described—"to judge the world in righteousness"—"in flaming fire, taking vengeance," &c.—personally and visibly (Acts 1:11)—"in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory" (Matt. 24:30)—then "every eye shall see him, and they also who pierced him, and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him," (Rev. 1:7)—or as expressed in Matt., "then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, when they shall see the Son of man coming," &c.

The general principles of your essay on the "Doctrine of Providence," I approve and admire; and your application of those principles I think just, until you fly off on the tangent of the bridegroom come and door-shut theory; and my views of the remainder of the article you will learn from the foregoing.

My dear brother, I cannot give up the cherished hope that you will see your error and abandon it; for I verily believe you are one of God's beloved children, who has given up all for Christ, and whose heart is sincere and upright still.—Both my earnest prayers and confident expectations are, that, like our dear brother Pearson, sister Clemons, and others, you will ere long escape the snare, and bless God that the spall is broken. May the Lord grant it speedily—and permit us to lift up our voices together, and shout deliverance with all the ransomed, on the shores of a blessed immortality.

Mrs. G. joins in most affectionate remembrance to Mrs. C.

Yours truly in "the blessed hope."

Br. Marsh.—I wish to say a few words thro' the medium of your paper to my sisters in the Lord: I have long neglected writing, knowing my inability, but on seeing the great day of the Lord fast approaching, and my heart being often grieved while I see much pride still living and reigning in the hearts of many who are looking for the Lord, I now undertake the task. Is not pride sin? Let us look at the word of God a moment. "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord"—"a high look and a proud heart is sin"—"pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall"—"God resisteth the proud"—"the Lord knoweth the proud afar off"—"behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts." Much is said against a proud heart in the scriptures of truth, let us, therefore, who are looking for speedy deliverance from this world of sin and bondage, and expect an inheritance in the new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, let us, I say, lay aside this sin that caused the children of Israel to desire a king that they might be like other nations, and now inclines our hearts to look, dress, and act like the world and cold hearted professors. Let us seek to adorn ourselves with that meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price. The apostle says, "love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; if any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him; for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, are not of the Father but of the world." "Whence come out from among them (the world and worldly church) and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you." He says, "I have chosen you out of the world." Let me ask, if we are chosen of God and dead to the world and alive in Christ, why, as though we were of the world, are we subject to its fashions and maxims. Do not say (as has often been said) it is of little or no consequence how we dress if our hearts are only right. Remember the dress does not affect the heart so much as the heart does the dress, for out of the heart proceeds evil thoughts and those desires that regulate the dress.

Perhaps some may consider pride but a small sin and think it is no matter how fashionable we dress, if we only believe the Lord is soon coming. Sisters, as in, however small it may be, if it is large enough to shut us out of the kingdom, let us shun it as deadly poison, and as faith without works is dead, I think merely a belief in the coming of Christ will not change these vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body; but we must keep the commandments of God, have the faith of Jesus and the love of God in our hearts, for if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his; therefore, be not conformed to this world but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable, and perfect will of God. I think we might as well have stayed in Babylon as to come out so loaded down with her goods, and our hearts so full that there is no chance for putting on the armour of God or traveling in that narrow way which leadeth to life. Do not spend your money needlessly and worse than uselessly for ornaments or articles of dress, but rather help the needy, and assist our brethren in proclaiming the coming of our Lord as far as duty may require. And let us neither spend our time uselessly to adorn the body, but in searching the scriptures, seeking wisdom and understanding of God; "and besides this giving all diligence, add to our faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity; for if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." Brethren, do not think the sisters have got all the pride and that you are exempt from this sin, lest you deceive yourselves and be found among the stubble in the great burning day. May the Lord enable us one and all to put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil, and having our loins girt about with truth, our lamps trimmed and burning, we waiting, watching, praying until our Savior appears, that we may then say, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us," is the prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ. "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

A WORD IN SEASON.

Bro. Marsh:—I see by the last paper, that you want some soul-stirring Bible communications. I am aware of my inability, but the ability I have is of God, and I love to improve it in that way, that shall glorify him, and benefit his children. For sometime past, while being privileged to read "The Voice of Truth," and being cheered by its "glad tidings of the kingdom at hand," I have wished to speak to the children scattered abroad, who are also blessed with its cheering voice, but until now have been silent. But now permit me to say to the dear brethren and sisters in tribulation and hope, who, with me, are striving to stand on the sure "foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone," being made free from sin and from all sects, save that which is every where spoken against; let us see that we have our "fruit unto holiness," and then the end will be "everlasting life."

We, my brethren, are accused, for the hope of the promise made of God to our fathers. Although they did not expect the fulfillment of this promise in their pilgrimage—neither in their death, as we are plainly informed by Paul, Heb. 11th., yet they were "persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were mere strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Let us call to mind the faith of our Fathers, for they with Christ, should be our example. See how their faith wrought works that were pleasing to God. Remember that all they did was through faith. Hence, the expression in Heb. 10:38; "But the just shall live by faith." Paul also says, the time would fail him to tell of them, "Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, and others were tortured not accepting deliverance, (not that they might go to heaven at death, but) "that they might obtain a better resurrection." And others had trials of cruel mockings, scourgings, bonds and imprisonment, were starved, sawn asunder, tempted, slain with the sword, wandered in sheep skins and goat skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, &c., and these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, (or its fulfillment,) God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us, should not be made perfect." What a lesson of faith is here taught us; and the apostle continues, by exhorting us to lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth most easily beset us, and let us run with patience, &c., looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, &c. O how little do we think of these things, when we complain of our trials, our afflictions and oppositions. But we ought to "consider him who endured such contradiction of sinners, lest we be weary and faint in our minds. Have we also forgotten the exhortation which says, "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him." If we endure chastening, then God dealeth with us as with sons—he doeth it for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness.

My heart has been pained sometimes, while hearing or reading of those who made so much ado about their conflicts. It is true that we have the principalities and the rulers of the powers of the darkness of this world to contend with, and spiritual wickedness in high places, and all manner of evil that the devil and wicked men can invent, to contend with. But we must not oppose it in our own name or strength. We are to do it in Jesus Christ, for without him we can do nothing—but through Christ strengthening us, we can do all things. Glory to God, we do not war at our own charges. Let us, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Let us have on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Let us stand, having our loins girded about with truth, and have on the breast plate of righteousness. Let our feet be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. This shield will enable us to conquer. The Apostle says, this is your victory, even your faith; of course it must be that faith that works by love and purifies the heart, and overcomes the world. Remember, "that all who will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." Christ told his disciples, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." We will lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees, and make straight paths, for our feet, following peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. We have peculiar privileges. The light of the past, the experience of all the early people of God, and their example.

We have now strong reasons why we should look for the return of that "same Jesus who was taken up into heaven," to "so come in like manner," to see the King of glory in his beauty, the Lord of hosts, mighty in battle. The time is nigh at hand when he will gather them that are his, both dead and living, and will destroy them that destroy the earth—cleanse the sanctuary that has been polluted and trodden down—renew the earth, and "the meek shall inherit it, and dwell therein, forever." Praise the Lord.

Are we ready for such an event? Have we become so accustomed to talk of it as to stand its effects on the heart? to forget the necessity of a pure heart, to be a subject of that kingdom which is to be the saint's? Has the subject lost its power to quicken all the powers of the soul? Has it ceased to be the main spring of self-denial, of full submission to God, of constant faith in the all-cleansing atonement of Christ? If so, let us look to ourselves—examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith, prove ourselves, lest a promise being left us, we come short of it. O, see to it, that we do not fall after the same manner of unbelief, as did the Jews. The Lord is coming, we may expect him every moment—we have no time but now, and "Not every one that saith Lord, shall enter the kingdom, but they that do the will of my Father;" this is a test. "Whosoever he be of you that forsake not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple." I repeat the exhortation, let us examine ourselves. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." But, say some, the love of the world troubles me. Well, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." But remember that as many as are baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. If we be risen with Christ, we must seek those things which are above. But, says another, pride hinders me. Then remember, "God beholdeth the proud afar off;"—beside, they shall be burned, with all that do wickedly. It is the meek that are to inherit the earth, "the pure in heart" that shall see God—they that overcome, shall sit down with Christ on his throne. "He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witness in himself."

Let us be sure that we abide in Christ the Vine, that we may have our "fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."

Yours, waiting for the coming of the Lord.

SPIRITUALISM.

Dear Br. Marsh.—Whilst errors and delusions are thickening around us, it is cheering to have the Voice of Truth to assist in the investigation of the sure word, and also a medium of communication for the household of faith, through which we can "speak often one to another," and be encouraged in our pilgrimage by mutual exhortations, and an interchange of views on the subject of our blessed Lord's coming again.

Spiritualism with its blighting influence has found its way to Michigan, and many of our former brethren are no longer looking for the Lord, but have taken the old universalist ground that the second coming of Christ is spiritual. This doctrine is an old acquaintance of mine; having been converted from universalism through the instrumentality of Br. Miller's writings. I know something of the nature of spiritualizing God's holy word. If my experience is as safe a guide for me as many of our brethren think theirs is to them, then our brethren have passed from light to darkness in abandoning the advent faith and going back to the quicksands of spiritualism. The apostle Peter tells us plainly "there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them." Who is it among us that have denied the Lord that bought them? All among us of whatever name or sect, admit the spiritual existence of Christ. In this sense he existed before the world was; (John 17: 5;) a little more than 1800 years ago the man Christ Jesus came into the world, and his body was offered a sacrifice for us; (see Heb. 10: 12;) "but this man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God." It was the sacrifice of the literal body of Christ that bought them, and denying its existence (to say the least) comes the nearest to denying the Lord that bought them of any thing I have yet seen among us. If these spiritualizers are not the ones the apostle had in view, who among us is it? or are we to look for them yet to come? To what purpose was the body of our Lord raised from the dead, if death has at last triumphed in its extinction?

Dearly, my brother, do I love that immaculate Saviour who left the glory which he had with the Father, and came into this revolted world; was persecuted, and scoffed at, derided, spit upon, crowned with thorns, and finally crucified, "that we through his stripes might be healed;" and now to be told that I will never see him, except in the person of his saints, is worse than being fed on husks, it has positively a starving influence. But that I shall tread the gold-paved streets of the New Jerusalem, and see my Saviour, and converse with him, is a reflection that is food to my soul. I can feast on it day by day. It is more than my meat and my drink.

Be patient therefore brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Be ye also patient, establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. And when he comes he will not be scattered abroad throughout the United States, and world, in the persons of his saints, grovelling here on this sin cursed earth, but he will sit on the throne of his glory. He will come "with power and great glory." He will come "in clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him."

Take courage then, my brethren: by faith we see "a better land than this," by faith we see at no great distance the dawn of that glorious day when earth shall put on her Eden beauty, and become the residence of the immortalized saints. By faith we see the Babe of Bethlehem raised to kingly honors, taking to him his great power, and reigning. Then shall he see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Then shall the redem-ed sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Then shall thine "eyes see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall never be taken down."

Your brother, waiting for the coming of the Lord.

UNBELIEF.

"Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth."

The apostle Paul tells us that perilous times shall come in the last days, and we have truly fallen upon them. The devil has come down to us having great wrath, for he knows that he hath but a short time, and he has pulled the gauze work of infidelity over the eyes of many, and ere they are aware of it, he will drag them down to destruction. And hence, the language of the text is very appropriate and applicable to the present generation, for in it, will the Son of man come. The Savior well knew that the great mass of people would believe in his coming at some future time, but not in their day, and such are not looking for the coming of Christ. They are looking for death and the grave. And will he appear to such without sin unto salvation?—No! for "to them that look for HIM, will he appear without sin unto salvation." And we cannot look for the coming of Christ and something else at the same time. Neither can people look for him when they are dead. But when the Lord comes, there will be a class that have been and will be looking and watching for his appearing. And we have seen a great many of that class, but where are they now? Some have gone over to spiritualism, and but few are what we think they should be.

If it is our duty to cry against the sins of any people, it is the sins among ourselves. We are not where we once were, or should be. We have not that faith in God we once had, which purifies the heart and overcomes the world. "But now, the just shall live by faith." Faith in God, in his word, in the coming of Christ, and faith in the time of his coming; for the time cannot be separated from the event,—and the time cannot pass, and the event not come, any more than the event can come before the time; for "at the time appointed, the end shall be." If the time appointed is revealed in the Bible, then it is for us to know when it is, if faith can know. But how hard it is for people to believe in definite time.—Well, the Savior knew that so it would be, and hence the language of the text. "Shall he find faith on the earth?"

The text implies a probability of but very little faith on the earth when the Lord comes. We find any quantity of faith in the coming of Christ, and but very little in the time of his coming. It is faith in the TIME of his coming. And strange it is, that those who have been strong and immovable upon definite time, now cavil with the inspired testimony of the Bible, which is as immutable as God's throne, and unchangeable as its Author. God has called the united testimony of historians, and the infallible science of astronomy, to confirm his truths: he says, "in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every WORD SHALL BE ESTABLISHED," and yet, men will not believe!

The carcasses of the children of Israel fell in the wilderness through unbelief, and the carcasses of scores and thousands will fall short of the kingdom to perish forever, through unbelief! If it was right for us to believe the evidences pointing to '43 or '44, then it is our duty to believe them now; for they are indisputable, and we think there is no possibility of their failing.—O, awake thou that sleepest, and arise from your deathlike state, from your indifference in regard to time; for while you are indifferent to that, you are to all other truths, for they all cluster around it. We expect this will be our last struggle—the victory will soon be ours. Michael will stand up, and we shall be delivered. We are doing our last work, and are doing it with all our might. Brethren, wake up, or destruction lies in your path. The reckoning time has almost rolled round, and steward and servant must now be faithful.

C. CRAWFORD, JUN.

Letter from Bro. Lyon.

Bro. Himes:—After reading in the "Herald," a short time since, an extract of a letter from a brother, and finding in it a remark something like the following—"I have some thoughts of returning to the church of which I have been a member for forty years," &c.—I had a desire to say a few things to the brethren scattered abroad, who are looking for the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus Christ the second time without sin unto salvation. Dear brethren, it is evident that a strong effort is being made on the part of the various sects to induce you to give up this faith and return to them. Now, my dear brethren, I want you to take your Bibles and go into your several closets, "and when thou hast shut thy door," read the following passages:—Col. 2:8; Phil. 3:2-10; 2 Tim. 3:1-6; 2 Cor. 6:14-18; Eph. 5:11; Gal. 1:6-12; 2 John 8-11; Heb. 11:24-27. Then, upon your knees before God, ask yourselves, in view of the judgment, whether it is right for you to go back and unite in fellowship with those who, on any consideration, reject the glorious truths of the Second Advent doctrine? Is it right for you to cast your influence in sustaining bodies who are as incongruous in their associations as they are inconsistent in practice? Is it right for you to use the goods that God has made you stewards of, in supporting those who are crying peace and safety, when sudden destruction cometh, and who refuse to give the church and world warning of the grand crisis that is just at hand, and are not willing that others should do it? who are making every exertion to keep their people away from what they call Miller meetings, and teaching them to make light of the glorious appearing of Christ? Is it right, I repeat, for you to go back to those who close their pulpits against the truth that the Lord is soon to come, and at the same time trying to destroy the character of those who are preaching what you profess to believe? Remember, dear brethren, that by returning to them, you would give the enemies of the truth cause to triumph. Were the blessed Jesus here, methinks he would weep over such a course taken by you, as he did over Jerusalem. Remember the vast responsibility that rests upon you. God has given you light on this subject, and has commanded you to let it shine, (Matt. 5:16,) and has told you what will be the consequences if you do not.—Ezek. 3:18-20; 33:6. But you say I am not a watchman. Very well; but you are a believer in the coming of Christ: and James says, show your faith by your works; and he further says, that "faith without works is dead, being alone." Also read James 3d chap., and Matt. 25:31-46, and there you will learn that our works must correspond with our faith, if we would stand guiltless before the Judge of quick and dead. But you say, that you are alone. Very well: this is just as our Heavenly Father designed it should be. In order to illustrate this, let us look at the wisdom that the farmer displays, who has a large number of hands mowing for him. Does he put them all into a half-acre lot? No; he scatters them, in order that they may labor to better advantage. Thus God has displayed his wisdom in scattering us in every part of the land, and commanded us to give the last note of warning to the people, saying to them, "Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come," &c.; and in doing this, he is fulfilling the prophecy. Let me remind you of what God said to the children of Israel, after he had led them out of Egypt, and brought them to the borders of the red sea. He bade Moses to "speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward." Very soon your deliverer will appear, and who shall be able to stand? Yours in tribulation,

R. V. LYON.

Herald.

Bro. Armstrong to Bro. Robinson.

Bro. Robinson.—I feel constrained this afternoon to address a few lines to you to inform you how myself and the advent brethren are getting along in this city.

When I arrived here I found a few interesting brethren and sisters, who, with all their souls were looking for and loving the appearing of the Savior. They have not been privileged as the brethren at the east have of hearing the living preacher of the gospel of the kingdom, but though denied this blessed privilege, they have not forgotten to assemble themselves often, as the manner of some is, and to speak to, and encourage each other, and so much the more as they see the day approaching. When I first met with them my soul was refreshed, and I have continued to meet with them until the present, and I can assure you my brother we have enjoyed some heavenly seasons together; love seems to be a binding cord which unites us together, and would the worldly and professing christian but come among us, they would be constrained to say, "how these brethren love one another." And I assure you my brother, and all the dear waiting brethren with whom you are associated, and who, no doubt feel a deep interest in the spiritual welfare of all the scattered flock of Christ, that we are growing stronger and stronger in the faith of the near coming and kingdom of our blessed Savior.

The brethren here are strong, intelligent christians, always considered such while connected with the churches, and the churches would be glad to have them come back again.

Our dear brother Brown was long a deacon in the Congregational Church, and esteemed for his piety and christian faithfulness. We meet twice on the Sabbath, and 2 or 3 times in the course of the week, and are always favored with the presence of the Comforter. The consequence is, we have peace and joy in believing. We cease not in all our supplications to remember our brethren of like precious faith who are scattered up and down the world, and also the case of yourself and others of God's faithful servants who are laboring to feed the flock of Christ with meat in due season. And our fervent and continued prayer is that God would incline the heart of yourself or some other faithful Herald of the cross to visit us and the brethren in this region of country, and break unto us the bread of life.

There are a great many in this region who would be glad to hear upon this subject. Our brethren here have endeavored to do their duty to the ministers and churches of this city, and I trust some good has been done. Some few in the church have attended our meetings and have been revived, and have blessed God that they ever overcome their prejudices so far as to meet with us. We do feel that what we want now is, that (yourself if possible) some faithful brother would come and present publicly the reasons of our faith. Numbers, we think, would hear and receive the truth. You told me last fall that you thought of coming this way. How do you feel now? The brethren in this city would cheerfully support yourself and family, which they are able to do as long as you are inclined to stay among us. Does not this sound like the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us? This is a pleasant, beautiful country, fast filling up with emigrants.

Milwaukie is estimated to contain some eight thousand inhabitants, and it is increasing rapidly. We would get the Court-house for you to lecture in; one of our brethren (the keeper of the jail) has the promise of it. Furthermore, if there was any of our ministering brethren here, several of our brethren would follow the Savior in the ordinance of baptism; all they are waiting for is an opportunity. O do come, my brother. I wish you would immediately answer this letter, and inform me what encouragement you can give us as to coming. I have written to Bro. Needham, and told him to write to you, and if you could both come and stay with us a season and hold a sort of conference, we think good might be done. If you conclude to come will you not come in the first boat, if not immediately, and we feel willing to contribute to all expenses what may be necessary. Whatever you need please inform us in your letter. Your brother in hope,

LUZERNE ARMSTRONG.

Milwaukie, March 8, 1846.

P. S. I send this letter to the "Voice of Truth," not knowing certainly where you be at present, having sent one letter but received no answer.

ROCHESTER, APRIL 1, 1846.

This Number.

We issue this week a double number, or the amount of matter for two papers, in one. Our Subscribers, therefore, will not be served with our paper next week. We do this in order to be freed from the daily cares of our office during the conference.—We trust this will be satisfactory to all: it certainly will to all who know but in part the confinement and incessant toil of body and mind, of a faithful editor of a weekly sheet. Our toils that weary, and confinement that is unpleasant, will soon close,—we therefore labor in hope.

Bro. Galusha's Letter.

The valuable letter in this number from Bro. Galusha to Bro. Cook, we copy from the Advent Herald. We trust it will be read with pleasure and profit, by many.

EXTRAS ON TIME.

The proposed extras on Time, will be delayed a few weeks longer. Several have told how many copies they will want; their orders will be attended to in due season. Let others send their orders without further delay, that we may know very near how large an edition to print.

Faith in the Time.

We became a believer in the time of the Savior's coming, because we could not do otherwise and be an honest man. The evidences which first produced faith in our mind, are still good—all speak with the same clearness, harmony, and definiteness as when we first heard them. It is true, we did not understand the full import of the testimony on a certain point. We thought it made the 70 weeks of Dan. 9, or 490 years, terminate at the death of Christ; this made us look with confidence for the termination of the remainder of the 2300 years in '43. But on a more careful examination of the testimony, we find it does not say that the 70 weeks were to end at the crucifixion, but that the "sacrifice and oblation were to cease or the crucifixion take place in the midst of the week."

We have erred in making "midst of the week" mean end of the week; which has made a mistake in our reckoning of three years and a half. Give to every word of the witness, the most common acceptance, and we shall be clearly taught that the 70 weeks did not end until 3½ years after the crucifixion. And if the crucifixion was in the spring of A. D. 33, as the united testimony of nearly all chronologists agree, then the 70 weeks ended in A. D. 37, vulgar era. Add to this 1810 the remainder of the 2300 years, and it brings us to A. D. 1847, vulgar era, for the coming of the Son of Man. And as the evidence in the case clearly shows that the true A. D. commenced one year earlier than the vulgar A. D., therefore the conclusion is that A. D. 1846 is the year to which the testimony clearly points for the coming of the Lord.

With this understanding of the testimony in the case, our faith in the time of the Lord's coming is unshaken,—was never more grounded and settled than now. And why should it be otherwise? Can any one tell? They cannot. All who have candidly examined the case, are constrained to acknowledge that the evidences for the coming of the Lord in '46, are at least as conclusive as they appeared to be for '43; yet many who make this admission, manifest an unwillingness to hear much said on time. Their faith in definite time has not only wavered, but is gone: they are mere nominal believers in the time of the Second Advent of Christ.

With us, the time of the Lord's coming is something or nothing. That is, it is either a revealed truth of the Bible, or we have been deceived and deceived others, not wickedly, but ignorantly, and owe a confession to the church and world. We fully believe that we are not deceived, but that the time is a clearly revealed truth of the word of God, which, by its eternal and immutable Author, will soon be vindicated. Hence our duty is clear, to continue to proclaim, "Behold he cometh"—whether men will hear or not. This we mean faithfully to do so long as the evidences in the case point, or seem to point as clearly to the time of the advent of Christ as they now do. We cannot do otherwise and be an honest man, true to our calling. If permitted to live, we mean by the grace of our Faithful Lord, to see the extreme point of time, at which it is even probable that the prophetic numbers may extend, or behold before that time, the coming of our Lord. That time is evidently at the very door: the evidences in the case seem clearly to point to this year. And for fear of another disappointment, we cannot, dare not keep those evidences from the people, nor blunt their edge, or weaken their force by expressing our doubts and fears in the matter, or treating the momentous question with marked indifference and neglect. We repeat it, that the time of the coming of the Lord is or is not a subject of revelation. We believe it is revealed; and if revealed, then no subject in the whole volume of inspiration, is of equal importance to be faithfully proclaimed at this time, as this one. It is the last, the crowning truth of the Bible. And shall we my brethren, be silent on a question so important? God forbid. Let us wake up to the time of our Lord's coming, lest He come suddenly and find us sleeping; at an unexpected hour, when we in heart are saying, he delays, or we can know nothing about the time of his return.

We think it not important to publish the apology or explanation of Sister Perkins. The case is local, and if a mistake has been made among true christians they will correct the same without troubling the public with it.

S. S. of Canada West on the licentious teaching and practices of J. D. Poor must give his real name before he can be heard, and then we think it would not be wisdom to say much on this subject which if let alone we think will soon die a natural death.

News of the Day.

Crime of the most revolting character, is still on the rapid increase in our country and world. The power of truth, nor the stern arm of the civil law will not, can not, stop the overflowing tide of iniquity, in our doomed world. It has been gathering strength for six thousand years, from ten thousand streams of vice, until it has increased to a torrent which nothing can check in its desolating course.—It will continue to increase like the overflowing scourge, until its frightful waves are stilled, and its deep waters of destruction are dried up by the purifying fires of the great day of righteous retribution. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." And "The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand." Blindness has come over the world and the church, each are crying peace and safety, and quietly repose under the enchantment of their own song.

The church is like those who dream, when nature by the power of sleep, becomes measurably insensible to surrounding objects and dangers: they dream of pleasure, but awake to disappointment and sorrow. So with the church in her apathy. She talks of sunny days, of millennial glory; but a dark storm of vengeance is thickly gathering over her horizon, and will soon break in wild confusion and everlasting destruction upon her slumbers. She makes long prayers, and spends her thousands and millions of dollars for the ostensible object of converting the heathen; but converts more of them in two or three days, from life to death in the battle field, than she does from sin to holiness, in double that number of years. In justification of these remarks, we give the following account of a recent battle, in which christian England's (?) troops were victorious over the poor, down trodden heathen.

3,300 British and Native Troops Killed and Wounded—and Reported Loss of 30,000 Sikhs at Moodkee and Ferozeshah.

Our advices from Bombay, since the sailing of the Steam-Ship Cambria, come down to January 17, and furnish accounts of one of the greatest battles ever fought by the British in our Indian Empire, in which we have sustained the known loss of 3,300 of our brave soldiers, including the gallant Sir Robert Sale, Sir J. M'Caskill, and Maj. Broadfoot. When these accounts left the scene of action for Bombay, for transmission to England, there were several regiments from which returns had not been received, so that a farther loss may be calculated upon.

An Extraordinary Gazette gives the official account of all the military operations in this great struggle. The result, we are proud to say, is as glorious and decisive a victory as ever crowned the British arms, and equalled only by the field of Waterloo. We prefix the following brief outline:—On the 12th, 13th, and 14th of December, the Sikh army crossed the Sutlej, with, at the lowest estimate, 80,000 men (of whom 20,000 or 30,000 were cavalry,) and about 150 pieces of cannon of the largest calibre moveable in the field, and exquisitely finished—an artillery immeasurably more powerful than was ever brought into the field by Wellington or Napoleon. It is only in morals that the Sikhs are to be ranked as barbarous. They are a race as vigorous in body, as acute in intellect, and as skilful in all the arts they cultivate, of which war is the chief, as the generality of Europeans. The place at which this formidable host passed the river, may be about 40 or 50 miles from Lahore, the capital of the Punjab, and within a much less distance of Ferozepore, the most advanced of the British posts. Ferozepore, is about 15 or 20 miles from the point at which the Sikhs crossed the river, if it is so much. The invaders having established themselves and organized their force on the British side of the Sutlej, made some slight demonstration of attacking Ferozepore in the interval between the 15th and 18th; but upon the last named day, broke up, and taking the direct road to Delhi, proceeded in a southerly direction, as if they would mask Ferozepore, leaving it on their right. In this direction, a division of 30,000 of the invaders had proceeded about 25 miles to a place called Moodkee, when, on the evening of the 18th, they were met by a part of the British army commanded by Sir Hugh Gough and the Governor-General, Sir Henry Hardinge, who, as second in command, took the field in person. A fierce conflict ensued, in which the Sikhs lost the artillery attached to their division, in number, 17 guns. It was in this stage of the battle that Sir Robert Sale and General McCaskill fell. The contest proceeded languidly through the 19th and 20th, the armies on both sides being occupied with the burial of their dead, and the re-organization of their respective armies. During these two days the British commander received some reinforcements; but the invaders having fallen back upon their main body, probably 30,000 or 40,000, presented a prodigiously augmented force, when the shock of battle was renewed on the 21st, at a place called Ferozeshar, about 12 miles in retreat from Moodkee. At Ferozeshar, the invaders had prepared a strongly entrenched camp, which they stood prepared to defend with 100 pieces of their huge artillery, and 60,000 men. Imagination can scarcely depict the fury and the obstinacy of the two days' fight that must have preceded the capture of the invaders' camp, with all its material and artillery, and the utter dispersion of the invading army on the 22nd December. The most fortunate escaped to islands on the Sutlej, or perhaps to the Punjab bank, but the greater part were scattered in broken parties through the British territories. Their loss is variously estimated at from 25,000 to 35,000 in killed and wounded. Our loss in killed and wounded, it is to be feared, falls little short of 3,300, including 50 European officers.—European Times.

Ill fated Mexico is still threatened with anything but peace at home, and holds a menacing attitude towards the United States. From Hayti, the following intelligence is received:

The ship Henry, Captain Noyes, from Havre, put into Port Paix, St. Domingo, on the 1st inst., for a supply of water. Capt. Noyes reported that the Haytien army were assembling at that place in three divisions, to the number of about 50,000 men; under orders to march against the Dominicans. Two of these divisions were to concentrate at Azua, under command of President Pierrot, to recapture St. Domingo. The third division was to march to Port Platte, via. St. Jago.—N. O. Pic., March 15.

Finally, the nations of the entire globe, are in a restless, feverish condition: troubled with pauperism, crime, oppression, and internal broils at home, threatened with a war with each other, and making all the preparation in their power, for the anticipated bloody crisis. But the four winds are yet held, and will not be suffered to hurt the earth until the servants of God are all sealed. Then the angry nations will be gathered together, not to war with each other, but to be destroyed in the "battle of the great day of God Almighty," or destroyed by Christ at his coming. Their cup of blood is nearly full—the time of the wicked gentile rule is nearly closed. A few days more, and He whose right it is, will take the kingdom, and possess it for ever and ever.

Diagram.

The price of the Diagram has been reduced one half. They are now offered for 3 cents single, and two dollars for one hundred copies. The reason for these two prices is simply this. The first cost of the first edition of the diagram was considerable.—Br. Pearson had not the means to meet the expense; nor any great assurance that enough of the work would be sold to pay for it; hence by the counsel of some others, he placed the first price to the work, until enough was sold to meet the first expense so far as to warrant him in reducing the price as he has. He did not wish to contract debts that he could not meet, neither does he now wish to speculate on the truth.

☞ The communication of our good brother in which he compares Ezekiel's waters with the advent movement in '43 and '44 is too fanciful for the benefit of those who love the truth. Our fruitful imaginations are very fanciful in this age of new theories. There is no safety in following any other guide than the plain word of the Lord.

Sister Clemons.

In our last week's paper we omitted to place the name of sister Clemons to her article on "Death, Life, Resurrection." It was a mistake; our remarks, however, which immediately followed, will inform the careful reader who is the author of the preceding article.

We are sorry to differ from sister C. and those with her in sentiment, on points of such importance as those on which she has written. Her sentiments are not new in their elementary parts; in their disunited form they have long existed in the different sects. They however may have been organized into a theory quite recently. The first we have seen among us, of an attempt to present them, or a part of them, in a theory, was in some of the recent numbers of the "Day Star." We were in hopes they would find no advocates of note among us. We therefore let them pass unnoticed. But as some of our brethren have fully, and others partially embraced their views, and as our sister has commenced advocating them, we have thought it our duty to notice them, and show from the Lively Oracles, the mistakes of our brethren before the error shall grow into a hurtful evil. We shall give one, or more, article more from sister C. with our remarks. The reader will examine the whole with prayerful attention, receive what is truth, and reject what is error; remembering it is an age of error, of perils, and if possible the very elect will be deceived. The following is sister Clemons's article on

LIFE & FIRST RESURRECTION.

We are to take the Lord's plain teachings to explain the symbolical. He saith "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is (the time cometh, or rather is come. Campbell.) when the dead (in trespass and sin) shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." John, 5: 24—26. This is the first resurrection; for plainly it is a resurrection, and as there is no resurrection prior to it, it is the first.*

In this connection how harmoniously come in the next verses, 27—29. "And he hath given him authority to execute judgement, also, (when? at his second coming, for behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all. "This honor have all the saints.") because he is the Son of man, marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life & they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation," or as Campbell renders it, "They that have done good shall arise to enjoy life; they that have done evil shall arise to suffer punishment."

* We are reminded of certain passages in Rev. 20: in harmony with this view, which will be noticed in another article.

Thus does our Lord explain the doctrine of passing from death unto life (vs. 24—26) through true faith, and also settle the doctrine of one literal general resurrection (vs. 27—29) when all that are in the grave shall hear his voice, and shall come forth separated to their respective rewards. When all that are in their graves come forth; this must be a final work of calling forth, and as we have seen that there is a resurrection prior to it, cannot be the first resurrection. Yet it is "the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers," "the better resurrection as it respects the children of God.

Now the just shall live by faith, although they are born of God, 1 John 5: 4; created anew in Christ Jesus, made after the power of an endless life, still it doth not appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; blessed, and holy men of old lived the life by faith, yet they "received not the promise," God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. And as God is no respecter of persons, the reverse of this must be true, we without them should not be made perfect.

The Spirit resurrection is the earnest of the redemption of the body. "Christ is risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept;" "If ye be risen with Christ," &c. Ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit: the redemption of our body. In whom (Christ) also, after that ye believed ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession. Eph. 1: 13; 14.

Briefly recapitulating we will take leave of the subject.

1st. Life, death and resurrection presented in the text, relates to the soul, and not the body.

2d. Life signifies in the word of God the existence in a certain state.

3d. Death signifies the extinction of existence in a certain state.

4th. There is a life of the spirit or the soul and a death of the soul; spiritual life means a life to God—denotes the enjoyment of God's favor—the constant inhaling of his spirit by the soul.

Spiritual death is the term we use to indicate the extinction of this life in God—death in trespasses and in sins.

5th. Death the penalty of the fall; eternal life through the Savior provided as an antidote.

6th. The passing from death unto life is a resurrection; as there is no resurrection prior to it is the first resurrection.

7th. All who live by faith, being united Christ the true vine as living branches, have eternal life, or have part in the first resurrection.

8th. The Spirit resurrection, or the resurrection of the soul, is the earnest of the redemption of the body. Here we have life, hereafter m—than life, (see Campbell's translation, John 10: 10;) "A far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

9th. The adversary will object to this doctrine, of literally in heart passing from death unto life, as it is destructive to his wives—his opposition is no proof that it is false, rather an evidence in its favor: instance, the devil who opposed it in Christ's time.

10th. Be exhorted to avoid unbelief, and have an enlightened understanding respecting the life that is light, glory and blessedness to the soul.

There are but two prominent features in the above article which we feel called upon to notice, the life and resurrection of which the writer speaks.

The life, eternal, everlasting life in its first sense, of which the Scriptures so frequently speak is not, as Sister Clemons supposes, man's "existence in a certain state," for then the most immutable principle in the universe would be dependent for its existence on changeable man, the most unstable being in the world. Our sister seems to blend the change in the creature and the life he receives in one, and makes the two when united constitute the eternal life of the Bible. Whereas they are entirely separate and distinct; as much so as the vessel and the water which it receives. And we might with equal propriety say that water is the "existence in a certain state" of the vessel which contains it, as to suppose that life, eternal life, is the "existence in a certain state," of mortal man who receives it. It is true the vessel must be in a certain state or condition to receive water, so must man be in a certain state of preparation to receive life.

Life is the principle of eternal existence, received from God, the fountain of life, through Jesus Christ, by all who comply with the terms of life laid down in the gospel. It is the opposite of death. Death, the dissolution of the whole man, or his return to the dust from whence he was taken, was the penalty of the fall. "Death [the sentence] has passed upon all, for all have sinned." All are under the sentence of death, are already condemned who are in their sins. God in his abundant mercy, "when we were dead in trespasses and sins," under the sentence of death, and in our sins, "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—Shall not "perish," be destroyed, or experience the second death, but if they believe, comply with the terms of the gospel, "do his commandments, shall have right to the tree of life," and live forever.

Those who comply with the requirements of the gospel are said, in this mortal state to have "passed from death unto life," "have eternal life." That is they receive the earnest, the foretaste, the assurance that if they continue in the faith they shall live.— Their life, eternal life, is not in fact fully and unchangeably possessed here, but as Paul says, their "life hid with Christ in God, and when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 3, 4. Then the crown of life, eternal life, will be awarded to all the righteous, and will then. Eternal life is the reward of faith and obedience, and the reward is not received until Christ comes and rewards every man according as his work shall be. Then the wicked will "go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Matt. 25: 46. Whatever the life is which we now have, it is evident we possess it by faith.— As Paul says, Gal. 2: 20, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live

BY THE FAITH of the son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me."

But our sister seems to think the spirit or soul of man and not the body, receives eternal life here, and this is the sense in which life is very generally used in the Bible. We readily admit that man in spirit, at heart, mentally, sincerely, must receive the principles of the gospel, the Spirit of God, or mind of Christ, which is the earnest, the foretaste of eternal life, in order to reap the reward of eternal life at the coming of Christ. But that the spirit and not the body, the whole man, receives it, we think the Bible furnishes no proof; but right to the reverse. Whatever life, or degree of life is promised in this mortal state, is promised to, and received by the whole man, soul, body, and spirit. The gospel makes no such nice distinctions in its offers, requirements and rewards, as Sister C. makes between the soul or spirit, and body of man. It addresses the man, the whole mental and physical man.

We feel fully assured that if our sister will examine every passage of Scripture which she has quoted to sustain her views on this subject, with the express object to learn whether a distinction is made between the spirit and body of man in the offers and blessings of the gospel, she will readily see her mistake. As an example, we will glance at one of the texts she had quoted. It is John 5: 24, 25. Here she thinks the "death, life and resurrection" of the spirit and not the body is taught. But if the whole man is not addressed, why is it said, "He that heareth"—and "They that hear shall live." And in the same connection why is it said, "The Father quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will; for the Father judgeth no MAN, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all MEN should honor the Son even as they honor the Father?" vs. 21—23. Why these personal pronouns and nouns, not only here, but uniformly in the Bible where this subject is treated upon, if the spirit and not the body is the subject of the "life, death and resurrection" it names? No satisfactory answer can be given. But all is plain, and full of meaning and force when we understand man as he is, and that the whole, not a part of the man is the subject of the death threatened, life offered, and resurrection promised.

Volumes might be written on eternal life, and then scarcely begin to enter upon the merits of this glorious subject, when viewed in the light of divine truth. It is not a spiritual, indescribable, invisible something in the soul or spirit of man in this corruptible state, but it is the life of God infused through the whole physical and mental man in his state of immortality, in the renovated earth, or everlasting kingdom of God. This is the life promised to all under the sentence of death, who will "do the commandments" of God.

The first resurrection. On this point we feel the fullest assurance that our sister is greatly mistaken; and her mistake evidently grows out of the incorrect premises of her theory. She seems to admit that the spirit or soul of man is an intelligent, responsible being, separate from the body; then teaches us that the soul or spirit, and not the body, is dead in trespasses and sins; that it, not the body, is quickened, made alive, spiritually in Christ; and finally, as a matter of course, this quickening of the soul must be a resurrection, and if a resurrection, the conclusion is it must be the first resurrection; and if first then there can be but one more which will follow in which all the dead, righteous and wicked, will be raised. Thus we may clearly trace to the origin this error upon error. With our sister this mode of spiritualizing the death and life of the Bible, has not led her to the conclusion to which others have come, viz.; a denial of a literal resurrection of the body.* If they can make the distinction which our sister seems to make between the spirit or soul, and body of man, and then spiritualize the death, and life, and resurrection of the soul, it is a very easy matter to dispense with the resurrection of the body altogether. But our sister avoids this conclusion, and is not therefore chargeable with this last error, though her theory may easily lead her to it.

That the first resurrection relates to the soul, and not to the body, is evidently a doctrine that is neither directly or indirectly taught in the Bible. Our sister thinks differently but has given no valid reason for her conclusion. It is true after quoting John 5: 24—26, and without any divine warrant for calling the death there named a spiritual death, by putting into the Savior's divine lips words he never uttered in reference to this subject, and conveying a sentiment he does not teach in this chapter, she makes him say in reference to her spiritual resurrection, "This is the first resurrection." Oh! to what daring perversions of the word of the Lord will a false theory lead its zealous advocates! That the Savior does not teach a spiritual resurrection in his discourse in John 5, must be apparent to every one who will carefully read it.

V. 20. Christ said the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that he doeth; and he will show him greater works than these that ye may marvel." What greater works? Raising up the dead. For the next verse says, "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." This is a part of the "greater works," raising up the dead. Another part of the 'greater works' the Savior would do is named in the next verse. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father," &c. What will be the reward of honoring the Son? The next verse tells. "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath [by faith, by promise] everlasting life, and shall not [in the day of judgment] come into condemnation, but is [will then have] passed from death unto life."

That Christ had power to quicken, raise from the dead, give eternal life, judge the world in the last day, and execute judgment upon those who would not honor him, he evidently meant to teach in verse 25. He says, "Verily, verily I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." As much as if he had said, I will give you a demonstration of my power soon; some of the dead shall be raised from their grave by my voice or word; which was actually done in the resurrection of Lazarus, the widow's son, and others, and many at his own resurrection.

V. 28, 29. In view of his power to raise Lazarus and others, before the general resurrection, Christ in these verses says, "Marvel not at this, [partial exhibition of my power] for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

This view of the subject gives meaning and force to the words of the Savior, while the opposite destroys their harmony and power. We have no divine warrant for giving the same words of the Savior in this one discourse, in one instance a spiritual, and in another a literal signification. This our sister has done. In one breath she thinks Christ was talking about a spiritual death, life, and resurrection of the spirit or soul, and in the next breath, without an explanation or qualification, that he uses the same words, but means a literal death, life, and resurrection of the body! It is not our divine Lord that changes the meaning of his words in this mysterious manner, but the incorrect theories and fruitful imaginations of erring mortals that attempt to do it; nevertheless the truth is unchangeable, the foundation of God standeth sure.

It should be borne in mind that whatever the "death, life, and resurrection" are, spoken of in the discourse of the Savior in John 5, or elsewhere in the Bible, relate to the whole man, physical and mental, and not to the spirit or soul as our sister supposes. We admit that the exaltation of man from sin to holiness, from the bondage of sin to the liberty of the sons of God, may be metaphorically compared to a resurrection; but then the metaphor is used in reference to the whole man, and not the spirit only.—"He hath raised us up and made us sit together in heavenly places"—"If ye be risen with Christ."—These and other like expressions relate to the resurrection: but the question is, how do they relate to it? They do not speak of it as a spiritual resurrection, for there is no such resurrection taught in the Bible. But they use the resurrection as a metaphor, to illustrate the exaltation of man redeemed from the power of sin, or they speak of the believer in Christ as being raised by faith: not in fact raised to life, but by faith are confidently looking for this change at the appearing of Christ. Hence, Paul says, Rom. 6: 5. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." "Shall be," are not yet in that likeness, only by faith; hence, verse 8 says, "Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him." Under this faith, verse 11, as Macknight renders it, says: "So then, conclude ye yourselves to be dead verily by sin; but alive by God, through our Lord Jesus Christ." The meaning we understand to be this. Christians should look upon themselves as "dead by sin," that is, under the sentence of death which came upon all on account of sin; but "alive by God through Christ," that is, God has promised a resurrection to eternal life, from this death, to all who believe and obey Christ; and our faith and confidence in God should be so strong that he will fulfill his promise, that we should reckon or conclude ourselves as in actual possession of the blessings of the immortal state. In this sense, and we think no other, do Christians (not their souls only,) experience a resurrection in this mortal state: it is by faith, as Paul says, Col. 2: 12. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are RISEN with him THROUGH THE FAITH OF THE OPERATION OF GOD, who hath raised him from the dead."

This view of the subject, and we think it is according to the Word, conclusively shows that the first resurrection cannot be any spiritual or moral change wrought either on the soul or body, or both, of man in this mortal state of being. If it is a moral or spiritual change, then the man who has once been changed, relapses again into sin, and is again restored to the favor of God, as is frequently the case, experiences not only the first, but the second resurrection; and the third and fourth, and as many resurrections as he sins, and is again restored to the favor of God. This conclusion cannot be avoided according to our sister's theory; for it teaches us that the life received in the first resurrection is the Spirit of God in the soul; and we all must admit that when man sins, the Spirit of God departs from him; then, according to her theory, spiritual life is extinct—Spiritual death must necessarily ensue; and a Spiritual resurrection is necessary, that the soul may spiritually live again.

We are not dependent on the spiritual or fanciful opinions of the best divines or expositors of the Word, for an understanding of what will constitute the FIRST RESURRECTION. That Word reveals this mystery, this blessed hope of the gospel, too clearly to be misunderstood. Let us leave our unprofitable and dangerous ramblings, and giddy heights of fancy, and settle down upon the safe rock of ages, the word of truth. It teaches us that the first resurrection, is the resurrection of "the dead in Christ."—1 Thes. 4: 16. "The dead in Christ shall rise first." We know the next thing in order is, "then we which are alive, shall be changed." Nothing is said about the resurrection of the wicked as following next; and for very good reasons, viz: the living saints were next to be changed; then all caught up to meet Christ. All this, cleansing the earth, and the reign of Christ and his saints a thousand years, were to intervene between the resurrection of the dead in Christ, and the resurrection of the wicked. If the righteous are not raised first, then why does Paul say the dead in Christ shall rise first? He should have said, the dead shall rise first, if all, saint and sinner, rise at the same time. The qualifying words, "IN CHRIST," leave the wicked in their graves, when the righteous come forth to the resurrection of life. The same truth is clearly taught in 1 Cor. 15: 23. "Afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." In a word, before, Paul says, "every man in his own order," or "in his own proper band," as Macknight renders it. Then those who are not Christ's, will not be raised at his coming, the time of the resurrection of the righteous band. The unrighteous must be raised in their own proper band, and after the resurrection of the righteous; for none but the "dead in Christ" are said to be raised at his coming.

Phil. 3: 11. "That by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Macknight renders the verse thus: "That any how I may arrive at the resurrection from the dead." Dr. Clark says, "St. Paul uses a peculiar word, which occurs no where else in the New Testament;" the signification of which, as the Dr. says, "in the best mss. is as follows: to that resurrection which is of the dead."—The import is, from, or from among the dead, as the best critics admit; clearly signifying that all the dead will not be raised in that resurrection unto which Paul greatly desired to attain. The same doctrine we think is clearly taught by Christ, in Luke 20: 35. "But they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead."—Campbell's translation puts the resurrection first.—"But among them who shall be honored to share in the resurrection and the other world."

Other passages of a similar import might be given, but these are sufficient to settle the point that the inspired writers looked for a resurrection of the righteous, before the wicked would be raised. This glorious resurrection, doubtless, is the same referred to by Christ, in Luke 14: 14. "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." By Paul, in Heb. 11: 35; "That they might obtain a better Resurrection." And by John, Rev. 20: 5. "This is the first Resurrection." And "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Not that holiness or the principle of godliness in the soul is this resurrection, as our sister supposes, but the holy and no others, will be blessed with a part in it. No wonder that Paul desired, "if by any means," to share in its eternal rewards. May we all with the Apostle, have a part in the first resurrection.

Bro. J. Cass, Lodi N. Y., March 7th, writes: "Though we have many discouragements, yet we have not given up the advent faith. We number but six or seven; some of our band have left the sure word of prophecy, and gone after fables.—Our meetings have run down, and we are rather low in our minds, but we are steadfast in the doctrine of the coming of Christ.

Letter from Bro. Paine.

Bro. Marsh:—I feel pretty confident in my own mind, that the last calculations are now made that ever will be made, on the ending of the prophetic periods; there is stronger evidence to my mind, that they end this present year, than at any former period. The promise is, that the wise shall understand, and I am led to believe that such as have endeavored to keep to the word and testimony of God on this point, now have nearly all, if not quite all the understanding that God intended they should have; but this understanding can be had only by faith, and we cannot have faith without evidence. The Lord has given us such an amount of evidence from his word, the fulfilment of the signs, the state of the professed church and the world, that we cannot doubt for a moment, that he has given us the true understanding promised to the wise. Our faith and understanding are now made so sure, that we are enabled to lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption is nigh. We should do well to remember that every moment of this present life must be a life of faith, for it is equally certain that we can never know the exact time when our Lord will return. For this, we must continually watch. None of the wicked will have this understanding, because they will not believe the evidences God has given. The Lord has fixed every thing just right, and my soul bows in submission to him.

I fully believe we are now called to pass thro' our last trials. Jesus says, "Behold I have foretold you all things." Well, has he told us of the trials we now have? I think he has. Then, if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there is Christ, or in the desert, or the secret chamber, believe it not, for such will arise, and will deceive many; but go not after them, nor follow them. It cannot be denied that these things have now arisen among us to an alarming extent, and many are leaving the plain words of the Savior respecting his coming, and are following the Lo heres and theres. It is painful in the extreme, to reflect that many of our brethren who have been faithful and zealous in the cause of God, have borne the burthen and heat of the day, should now make shipwreck of their faith, just as they are entering the port of endless rest. These things do, indeed, make our situation trying and perilous. A sense of these things causeth me to cry out in the anguish of my soul, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly! But God has provided great consolation in this hour of trial. We find by looking at our heavenly chart, that these most fatal and dangerous rocks, lie close around the harbor of endless rest, and when we have once passed them, we are safe forever. O my God, protect and save thy people.

Yours, patiently waiting for deliverance,
Acton, March, 1846. J. L. PAINE.

Bro. C. Crawford, Casadaga, March 12, writes:—The little church in this place are, with humility, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, for the end of which, we look this year. The force of evidence prompts us to exhortation, watchfulness and prayer—but more energy than what is manifested, should be put forth. Say, my brethren and sisters, will you pledge yourselves with this unworthy dust, to engage with renewed zeal and diligence in this blessed cause? Let us go again to our neighbors and friends, and if possible persuade them, thro' the evidences we present, to look immediately "for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," in reality, not in vision. Let us gird ourselves anew for the contest, through this hour of temptation. Let us "be sober, vigilant, because our adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour, whom resist, steadfast in the faith," &c.

BRO. E. S. ROBBINS, Copenhagen, N. Y. Mar 20, writes—I would that I could say as I could have said last fall, that we are filled with the good Spirit of the Lord. But no, my heart is sad while I write to think of the change that has taken place in our once united and happy band.

I did hope the experience of others would be some advantage to us, but I find many must have the experience themselves. Our meetings have in a great measure lost their interest, I believe in consequence of conflicting views, and thus diverting the mind from Jesus.

Several of the brethren and sisters in this region are inclined to believe in the main with Br'n Rhodes and Peavy. That the door is shut, that Christ is King, and that feet-washing and the salutation should be regarded as ordinances. Others of us believe as strongly that these views cannot be sustained by the lively oracles. Thus you may readily perceive that we are not as happy as when we all spake the same things.

Br'n. Bates and Mansfield have been lecturing in West Martinsburg for three weeks past in the Methodist meeting-house; there is quite a waking up there among christians, and some hopeful conversions.

Letter from Bro. Hacking.

DEAR BRO. MARSH:—I am highly gratified at seeing you take such a decided stand on the termination of the Prophetic Periods. I most heartily agree with you that the preaching of the time unhesitatingly, and giving the demonstrative evidence of the termination of the periods in 1846 will be the most efficient means of arousing the now slumbering virgins to activity and vigilance. It has for nearly two years past been fully settled in my mind, that the crucifixion of our Savior occurred in the middle of the week, and if I could see it demonstrated that 33 was the correct date for that event, I should confidently expect the Savior by the latter part of 1846, and as it is now proved to a demonstration, that he was crucified in the spring of 33, and baptized in 29, and born B. C. 1, what shadow of reason is there to doubt the termination of the vision in '46? I confess I can see none whatever, but sheer unbelief. There was some reason to doubt their termination in '43, because there were many defects and discrepancies in several dates assigned for certain events, which mark the close of the 69 weeks, the baptism and ministry of Christ: for instance, the date of his baptism is set down as A. D. 26 or 27, and his return from the temptation in the wilderness A. D. 30. Now, how was this? Have we the least grounds for believing that three years intervened between the baptism and commencement of Christ's ministry? See Luke 4th, 1, 14, 21. It is evident that our chronologists become confused here, by placing his baptism in 27; they were under the necessity of leaping over 3 years in order to make his crucifixion occur at the fourth Passover, in the year 33. I discovered this discrepancy about two years ago; and therefore was not so much disappointed as some at the failure of the calculations.

I have just laid my hands on a certain scroll, which, among some other, I made in the summer of 1844; perhaps it will not be too great a tax on your patience to copy it, it reads thus:

"I believe Bro. Miller has fallen into the error of supposing the prophetic periods end in '43 by following Dr. Clark and others, who supposed that the 70 weeks of Dan. 9: 24, reach only to the crucifixion, when in fact the prophecy does not give any sufficient reason to believe that 70 weeks terminated at the cutting off of the Messiah, but that he should be put to death, or cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the middle or half of the last week, which would make, instead of 490 years from the decree to the crucifixion, only 486½ years; making a difference of 3½ yrs., so that instead of 1810 from the crucifixion to the end of the vision, it would require 1813½ yrs. from that event to the last end of the indignation; and if the crucifixion occurred in the year 33, the vision cannot end till the year 1846 in the Autumn. But if the crucifixion was in the year 31, as many suppose, the vision would have ended in the Autumn of 1844."

Thus you see, I was prepared to subscribe to Bro. Hale's article on time, as soon as I read it. There are very few indeed in this vicinity, who are looking for the coming of our Savior, because that wickedness abounds, the love of many is waxing cold. The churches are nearly sunk to a dead level with the world. Seeing that such is the case with the world and the church, what hope have we of seeing any great improvement in society in general, before the great catastrophe?—and seeing that the world is rapidly growing worse, and heaping wrath against the day of wrath, have we not reason to pray more earnestly that the Lord would come and put an end to the wickedness of the wicked, and save his people before they are all carried away by the abounding wickedness that prevail on every hand? Indeed the prospects are most gloomy, if it were not for the blessed hope, I should be ready to lie down in despair.

I am yours in the hope of Israel,

W. HACKING.

Sharon, C. W., March 6, 1846.

Letter from Br. Pratt.

Dear Bro. Marsh: We are indeed a scattered and tried people, "a wonder unto many;" but the Lord is our strong refuge. "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name forever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen," Ps. 72: 18, 19. "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." This is our hope; and while we sojourn here we are indeed thankful to God that there are those who will fearlessly present the "cause of our evils" to the consolation of the scattered flock, who had been charged (by one they love) of "waging an unholy crusade against the sects." Three and a half years ago I was, through the goodness and grace of God, begotten "again" unto a lively hope through the resurrection, to an inheritance; being often solicited to join the Baptists and the Methodists, and having no one to advise impartially here, I sought wisdom from Him who giveth liberally and upbraideth not, being satisfied that selfishness on the part of the sects was devouring the little flock, (some 40 or more young converts) with great zeal, from a sense of duty and love for souls, I used my feeble efforts for oneness in religion. I solicited and obtained appointment for meetings at my house, first for one then the other sects; a few meetings brought both sects together. I felt, then, by hearing their confessions to each other, that my efforts to bring about a unison, were about to be realized, for which I earnestly labored and wept. But alas! when no prospect appeared for gaining my name to either sect, I was utterly abandoned by both. I was impressed that it was my duty to be baptised, although I had been sprinkled in infancy, but could not, unless I joined the sect. This I could not do, for my whole soul recoiled at the thought. At length my sister came from Williamsburgh, N. Y. to be baptised. I thought that the Lord would then open the way for me. We repaired to the spot, our friends knowing our views, solicited the services of a man of God, who bore the impress of the spirit in preaching the gospel to the poor, (an old fashioned Methodist.) My pathway was immediately made plain, through a great depth of ice into the liquid grave. This was indeed the true figure of our salvation, dead and buried to the world, but alive and risen in the newness of life. He (the preacher) says, go on your way rejoicing.

After this it was laid to my charge, that I was not obeying the commands, by not communing or partaking of the sacrament. I said you will not let me. Then I again implored with my whole soul direction from Him who has said, "I will never leave nor forsake you." And with an almost audible voice, I heard the declaration, "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free." A few months more rolled on, and I found myself with some 100 others surrounding the Lord's Table, where it was proclaimed, "Let every one examine himself and so let him eat and drink." Suffice it to say that I was overwhelmed with the glory and goodness of God. It seemed that my greatest earthly hope was realized. The liberty of the gospel ravished my soul, and I began to tell to all around, what I had learned by observation and experience, that the sects were proud, high minded, selfish, &c. And that their preachers had not faith even enough in God for the smallest salary.

By and by I heard from every quarter, "come out of her my people"; and the few that obeyed in this section, have felt to praise the Lord with all their heart, that their eyes were opened by this cry. And seeing them come out, and turned out, one says, "I loved them so, I could no longer stay behind." Now, dear brethren, you know that all who have not obeyed, but seeing the light have lingered on all the plains, have lost their confidence, and instead of its being "unholy" it has been mighty through God in pulling down strong holds.

Therefore I would say, go on dear brother, (not Elijah) for if you have ever endeared yourself to the weary pilgrim, it is in fearlessly shewing that we were not waging an "unholy crusade" but fighting a good fight."

Yours in hope,

II. PRATT.

WALES, March 21, 1846.

Bro. C. Perry, Natick Mass., March 9, writes:—As to the cause in Natick, we once had a united and happy company of about a dozen, who were looking for the Lord. Some have removed from the place, some have gone back to the professed church whence they came out, so that our number is reduced to three or four. We still meet on the Sabbath, to exhort and comfort one another, and have no inclination to return to a church whose minister has preached the "funeral sermon of Millerism," and edifies his hearers with the stories about "ascension robes." I feel thankful to my heavenly Father, who has kept me through all the trials that we have been called to pass. I still feel determined to lean alone on his almighty arm. And may you, dear brother, be sustained in your arduous labors, and be enabled to give meat in due season.

Bro. C. P. Whitten, Fitchburg, March 21st, writes:—Templeton Mass. will be my place of residence for the present. God bless you in scattering the light. I wish that I could be at your Conference, but cannot. Hope the Divine Spirit will attend it. I love the cause and its re-proached devotees. The God of the faithful will tabernacle around us even to the end, which is very near.

Bro. J. D. Boyer, Shiremanstown, Pa., Mar. 14, writes:—The Advent cause in several counties in this state is in a good condition; we have been much revived. The church in Shiremanstown is still contending for the faith. Several have been hopefully converted to God. In Philadelphia the cause is much revived. Bro. Hale's argument on time has made deep impressions on the minds of many.

SAD, BUT TRUE.

The following we cut from the "Christian Mirror," a religious paper published in Portland, Me., by the Congregationalists. It gives a sad but true account of the nominal church. Comments are unnecessary, the article, especially the closing remarks of it, speak the painful truth of the case in language too plain to be misunderstood: Read it, not with the spirit of exultation over a fallen church, but in deep humility, in self abasement, sorrow, and mourning, remembering that thou standest by faith; be not high-minded but fear. The following is the article. The friend who forwarded the paper that contains it, will accept our thanks for the favor.

THE SPIRIT'S DEPARTURE.

One cause is, the low standard of religious experience among us—the defective model after which, or near to which professors try to shape themselves.

Where now is the deep acquaintance in the things of God, the inner experience of the depths and heights, and lengths and breadths of "the love of God." That acquaintance with the heart and with God.—That union with the Divine mind, that nothingness of self, that really, not in a few rapturous emotions, but really install God forever sole dictator in the heart, and cherish him as the fairest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely. That secret inner life of Christ in the soul, Christ in us, "the hope of glory." That deep penitence and continual remembrance of past sin, because of its relation to the blessed Savior. That self-loathing, arising from a lively view of the infinitely lovely character of Christ. That panting to awake in his Savior's image.—That controlling and overflowing gratitude to Christ, for his great love to sinners, and for what Christ is as a Savior. That constant

"Godly grief, the pleasing smart
The meltings of a broken heart;
The Godly deep humility
That wonder why such love to me."

That inward retiring, that Christ may be seen above and before all that will not show itself only to exhibit Christ in some way that gratitude prompts. Where that constant presence of Christ, that assures, yes! assures the soul of its title to glory and eternal life? That constant victory through Christ? That constant view of the opened portals above, of a sealed inheritance, that inner eye that sees always the smiling face of God, or relies when darkness veils as firmly as in the glad hour of unutterable assurance.

O! my brethren, where are these legacies? In what celler or garrat is this rich patrimony stowed while the children starve and pine. Few alas! look for it. Few look for more than a fair probability, all things considered, that they are converted. This hope they cherish, and aim to live as they have made up their minds is a christian deportment. And what of the rest of their life? Duty when convenient—business and profits—health and comfort always; and they choose to be their own judges about duty. O! draw a veil over the church. Don't expose the meagre specimen! Yet alas! this has become about the pattern—some are a little above it—many a little below it. Yet these die, and of course they were "faithful to the last," and our hope is they are now rejoicing in the lord. Faithful in what? in unbelief? Yes! clave to that till the last, rejoicing in Christ. Then a great change must be effected, for they rejoiced but little in being like Christ here. We have been wonderfully afraid of Perfectionism—Yes! and in aiming to avoid that rock, we have dashed on another. We have been too afraid of urging the deepening of the inner life—the hidden communion, and real power of the life of Christ, lest we should be classed with boasting errorist. It is the characteristic of poor human nature to rush to extremes. We must, if we would invoke the Spirit's mighty achievements—we must know more of God, till filled with the knowledge of his will; we must search into the deep things of God. In other words we must make our own hearts the welcome scene of his great working, and then, when he finds a suitable workshop in the church, the glorious doings of Sovereign grace will multiply like the drops of the morning around us.

I am sure this is one of the causes of the departure and withholding of the Spirit.—Do we know it? Do we acknowledge it?—Do we mourn it? Do we deplore it so as to cast us in the dust? How can we expect the Spirit to work for the church and around the church, when he is not a welcome worker in the church. How can we expect God to achieve the mighty conquests in subduing and adopting sons, when his family of sons are in exile—a voluntary rebellion, a state of resistance to all the intentions which were comprehended in their adoption.

This is not God's way. But I will tell you what often is God's way. When the visible church is permitted to fall into this state—his way is to leave them to their own deceivings. He will take the precious from their midst, either to their better home, or he will scatter them to other regions, where Zion will come forth of them, and be the glory of her Lord. Repair a moment to India—to the churches of Asia—to Italy. New life multiplied in Europe when Asia fell. The Piedmont and Vaudois Vallies teemed with life when Rome began to die. God will work. Zion cannot die. But this is the gloomy thought. The Lord is known in Zion; but we do not know him. Then we are not Zion. And the real church will re-appear somewhere else! Alas! too well, our inward misgivings and fears accord with this dreadful argument. We shall soon be whited sepulchres and the church like Arabia's city of rocks. Like Idumea! There are the houses cut in solid rocks—a whole city reposes in eternal silence, save as broken by the hooting owl, the screeching bittern, and the flapping bat. We shall be like it, if we do not repent. Our holy and beautiful house where our fathers once worshipped, will be a desolation, a bye-word and reproach. This long drought is gloomy, but its omens are gloomier still. May God revive us or we perish.—Rev. T. Castleton.

PRETENCE.

How heinous in the sight of Him who is of "purer eyes than to behold evil and cannot look on iniquity," must a pretence be in things divine.

A hypocrite is set forth in the book of God as very odious in his sight. "God looketh at the heart." "The broken and contrite heart" he loves—their offerings he accepts. The truly honest and sincere will lose nothing in the coming day of judgment—though now for a little season they be objects of hate, be made an "offender for a word," hated and cast out by the world—"great is their reward in heaven"! glory to God. But the false-hearted, pretended people of God, how confused with speechless shame, how dismayed with dread apprehensions of the righteous judgments of the most High when brought to witness the scenes of that day in which all the hidden corruptions of their hearts will be revealed.

For what is the hope of the hypocrite though he hath gained, when God taketh his soul.—Job 27: 8.

The prophet Maiachi by the Holy Ghost addressed the idolatrous Jews on this subject in the most cutting manner. He says, "ye have robbed God, yet ye say wherein have we robbed thee? in tithes and offerings;" is the answer. They would come to the altar of God with their apparently sacred vows, and there, in solemn mockery, offer up the lame, blind and sick, for unblemished offerings as God required, when they knew it was deception, and had no reason to expect a blessing, but for a pretense they did it. Read the curse pronounced against all such in ch. 3: 5. "Also when the day of the Lord cometh that shall burn as an oven," 4: 1.

"For a pretense the Pharisees in the days of our Saviour made long prayers," "disfigured their faces that they might appear unto men to fast," and "all their works they did to be seen of men." Hear their doom from the lips of the Son of God, "therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation."

Ananias with Sapphira his wife, were of this sort. Having a possession, sold it and kept back part of the price of the land; the other parts they brought and laid it down at the apostle's feet, all in pretense. Satan had doubtless filled their hearts with such suggestions as these—you had better reserve for old age or the present gratification of your lusts a part of this treasure. You may come to want if you so unreservedly cast your lot with these poor Nazarines as to cast into their treasury the whole. At any rate you can keep back a part and let no one know it, and still hold on to your profession, you will appear as good as they who are so careful to be honest at heart. Besides having the advantage of them in that you will have a treasure laid up at home when the church fails, &c.

So we see, 1st. unbelief, 2nd. love of money took root in their distrustful hearts; 3rd. hypocritical pretense, knowing themselves to be liars and walking in darkness, they still said professionally that "they had fellowship with Christ." They were immediately struck by the hand of God whom they had insulted, and were carried out and buried! How should such examples of warning affect the church of God in these days, as it did the church then, cause us to fear God, be honest-hearted, cheerfully and unreservedly submit to his just commands. "Our righteousness must exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees or we can in no case enter the kingdom of God."

Do any of us say, my brethren, "if we had been in the days of these unholy characters we would not have been partakers of their secret dishonesty and works of darkness"! So said the pharisees of their bloody fathers who killed God's servants. "We would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Are we harboring any of the money-loving, selfish disposition of those of whom I have spoken and many of whom God speaks in decided terms of disapprobation? Ah, are we doing this, and still pretending we are "Jews"? "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." "Let love be without dissimulation." May the "testimony of our conscience" say that in "godly sincerity and simplicity we have our conversations in the world" and in the church. And may we "be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ."

GEO. W. BURNHAM.

GREENVILLE, March 26, 1846.

Letter from Sister Corey.

Br. Marsh.—It is comforting to hear the experience and daily advance in grace of our waiting brethren. We who are established and grounded in the faith of the everlasting kingdom at hand, can tell of the operations of the spiritual life and energy of soul that advances us for heaven, and gives a clear and decided witness that we are participants of God's "everlasting covenant." Trust in God is a peaceful and happy confidence. It does not leave much room for suspense—am I a child of God—O that I had the witness of the Spirit, &c. The love of Christ constraining us, will move the springs of action, and though called to fight the good fight of faith in these perilous times, the armor will be bright and every joint move harmoniously.

There was much said by advent believers about a year ago, upon the necessity of reading their "title clear" to the expected inheritance. But the birthright of Esau was sold for a mess of pottage; and because we are waiting for the restitution of all things, is this less important? "Abraham trusted in the Lord, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness." Which of us have found the answer of peace by a true faith in coming up to the call of definite time or '43? I speak for myself: the witness came, and has not left me. For union and fellowship of holy love casts out all fear of judgment, and the reminiscences of past anticipation with present expectation keeps a steady and firm assurance that Jesus is mine.

I like your remarks dated Feb. 1st, "Upon Waking up again." The command given to Daniel, ch. 12: 13, shuts out, in my view, any union in waiting. The words are, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh," &c. There would seem from the sense conveyed, a fulfillment of the words of Moses the servant of God, Deut 32: 3. "For the Lord shall judge his people, and repent himself for his servants; when he seeth that their power is gone and there is none shut up, or left." There are so many evil enchantments in these perilous days, that lull to sleep on this important subject; such as mesmeric prepossessions—for it is not to be contradicted that disease can be checked by its guidance, wickedness exposed, and the solar system partially explained, &c. These disclosures occupy conversation and reflection, and undoubtedly displace God's word, that it is not in all the thoughts. Satan knoweth his time is short; therefore, no matter, if his kingdom is divided, first to induce the wicked to do wickedly, and then send one in mesmeric sleep after them. It would be surprising that so many queries have arisen, whether the influence were good or bad; were it not one of the last devices of satan. But he so artfully mingles the picture that it needs the magnetizing influence of the Holy Spirit to point us to Jesus, and by the sympathies of true holiness, animate and quicken that intelligence breathed into us by God.

Newark, N. J., March 6, 1846.

Letter from Bro. Byron.

Bro. Marsh.—It may be gratifying to the readers of the Voice of Truth, to hear the state of the advent cause, in western Michigan. I have been lecturing in this State about five years, on the glorious subject of our blessed Lord's coming to take home his faithful ones; how much has been accomplished, the glorious day will very soon determine. This glorious truth has proved to be the great separation, not only between truth and error, but has made it manifest who love and who hate the Lord's coming. The general opposition to this glorious doctrine, is plain among the sects, more so than in the old; it appears as though there is a combination, and a determination, to put down this glorious truth, by silence on the subject, or evading having any thing to say on it. The advent is a subject they will avoid if any way possible, should their subject lead them into it. It appears to me that such kind of preaching is either the result of gross ignorance, or willfulness; but how can we expect it to be otherwise, in this age and popularity of the world? Oh the professed Ministers that thus act, crying peace and safety, and venting their spite at the failures of "Millerism," so called, will soon meet a fearful doom. I will give a late specimen of such kind of preaching on Climax Prairie; a Methodist, at a funeral, took for his text, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."—This chapter, Matt. 24th, he said had a fulfillment at the destruction of Jerusalem, and passed it off upon the people; but those who read this chapter carefully, and are acquainted with history, &c., know that such assertions are for the want of information and a proper knowledge of the word of God.

The signs of the times it seems to me are about all fulfilled that should take place before the advent. The foolish and presumptuous scoffers have appeared as foretold—the church and world are perfectly indifferent on this subject; more and more disunion and want of faith among professed christians—covetousness and love of the world—an increase of infidelity among the youth of our country, together with an increase of crime; all are omens of that terrible day being right upon us. When we consider that the preaching of the advent is more calculated to stop the current of vice, and to awaken and qualify the christian to meet his Lord, and then to have ministers and people undervalue it, scoff and call it lies, delusion, &c., we tremble at the fearful responsibility they incur. So we see the same state of things here, as in every other place where the Lord's coming is proclaimed! But shall this deter us? No! in the strength of God we will loudly proclaim, "the hour of His judgment is come!"

I do believe the Lord will come this year—I cannot see beyond. I have made myself acquainted with this subject, and have spared no pains to get all the light I could on this subject from a variety of sources. The present light I believe to be the best, and I am calculating accordingly, soon to meet our Lord. Oh my brethren and sisters, let us attend to the great work of consecration, and may the Lord seal us to the day of redemption, Amen.

I have of late been in Washtenaw, Ingham, Jackson, and Calhoun counties, and find the brethren and sisters generally, strong in the faith that the Lord will come this year. A small church in Jackson, are living in the union of saints. In the town of Albion, in Bro. Babcock's neighborhood, we have a few good souls, also on Climax, where I live, we have a few who are standing ready to meet their Lord. Holiness is our motto. We have some good brethren in other places we calculate on visiting, as soon as we can. On the whole, I think we shall be ready. Amen.

Yours, in hope of immortality and eternal life

J. BYRON, JR.

Jackson, Mich., March 4, 1846.

Sister P. Neal, Fort Hill, Lake Co. Ill., Feb. 23, writes:

I love to hear about the time. The Scripture evidence published in your paper last fall, seems indisputable, and the Word says: "At the time appointed, the end shall be." "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." These are truly perilous times, and God alone is able to keep us from falling in this hour of temptation.—Some tell us that Christ has already come, but the scripture teaches, that when the Lord comes, he will bring his saints with him, and many of them yet sleep in the dust of the earth, and "till the heavens are no more, they shall not awake nor be raised out of sleep."

I can appreciate your remarks in the last "Voice of Truth," (Feb. 4,) with regard to the teaching of some of our dear brethren, with whose writings I am somewhat familiar. May your timely warning be the means of saving some from wandering into error, and of persuading others to test their views by the plain word of God. I believe that now "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved," is as true as it was two years since, and I would, as Peter says, "account that the long suffering of our Lord is salvation." Let us, then, who are looking for the Savior, still take heed to our lamp: we shall not be in darkness. "Let us who are of the day be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet, the hope of salvation." O, it will be a blessed, glorious time, when this earth, so long filled with sin and sorrow, and groaning under the curse, shall be the abode of peace and righteousness. When sorrow and sighing shall flee away, and he, whose right it is to reign, shall sit on David's throne, and rule in righteousness. O let us all keep the end in view, the glorious prize, and walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we have been called, that we may dwell in the new earth, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

Bro. G. Lee, Jun., Oswego, March 9, writes:—The church here is looking up; we hold two meetings on Sabbath, in the Tabernacle, and three prayer meetings during the week. We have no one to preach to us, so that we are compelled to hold prayer and conference meetings, and thus we are endeavoring to fulfil the law of Christ.—Cannot Br'n. Miller and Himes give us a visit after the conference in Rochester.

Bro. O. Smith, Orland Ia., March 3, writes:—As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is your worthy paper to me. I believe it is verily what it purports, the Voice of Truth; and is just what I need, situated as I am, in a distant land, and at a distance from those who are looking for the immediate appearing of the Savior. I embraced the advent views almost thirteen years ago, while searching the scriptures to find what is called a temporal Millenium. I knew nothing about chronology, nor any means whereby we might know the time of Christ's second coming, but the scripture said, "As it was in the days of Noah, so should the coming of the Son of man be. I tho't perhaps, it might take place that year. I saw none, however, that advocated that doctrine, till 1843, when I heard two or three lectures on the subject. In Oct. '44, we moved from Ohio to Indiana, situated in a small village among three denominations of Christians, viz: Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians, who assemble every Sabbath for worship, harmoniously, but I fear the true spirit and power of religion in a great degree, is wanting. O that the Lord would send some flaming messenger this way, that would be the means of arousing the slumbering world around us, and cause christians to wake up from the dreadful sleep they have fallen into. Cannot, will not some of the advent preachers come this way? I visited our friends in Ohio this winter, and had the privilege of attending one advent meeting in Bloomingville, which was truly refreshing, and I felt to thank the good Lord for his mercy.

Yours in the bonds of christian love,

OLIVE SMITH.

P. S. I will just say that we are indebted to our friends in Ohio, for the perusal of your paper, to whom we feel grateful and not only to them, but to God, the Author of all good.

O. S.

Letter from Bro. Johnson.

Bro. Marsh:—I have reached Seneca Falls, on my journey to Western New York. I intend to be at the Conference in Rochester. Previous to that I expect, the Lord willing, to help Brother Pinney supply some of his calls. We hope to be at Geneva over Sunday, though we are both rather ill.

I was in Germanville, six miles from Troy, four days last week and last Sunday, and had the use of a meeting house built for and by different denominations. They never had heard any lectures on the Advent in that village, before about three weeks ago, when brother Chandler went there from Troy, (where they have a little band with whom I staid the Sunday previous.) I found in Germanville, a man who, before brother C. went there, was very profane, as also his wife and little boys; so that the neighbors did not like to have them in the company of their children. But what an alteration for a few weeks past. Mr. Barber, for that is his name, went to hear brother Chandler only twice on Sunday, and was awakened, begun, and continued to read and study his Bible, and pray in his family; and his children have left off their profanity. I had a season of prayer and conversation last Saturday evening with his family—when his wife and oldest daughter promised to begin in earnest to seek salvation. The next day I spoke three times, and this woman and mother were at meeting for the first time for some years. Monday, she tho't God for Christ's sake had forgiven her sins. One of her near neighbors also was very tender and wanted salvation.

Praise the Lord. Bro. Barber said, all those wicked dispositions, and the ugly temper he used to have, were all gone, and it seemed to be more than his meat and drink to sit down and hear the bible explained. He is a poor man, but is richer than some of his rich neighbors, I think. Not many wise, not many noble after the flesh are called. Well my brethren, let us go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in. "Wisdom is justified of her children." "O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion, get thee up into the high mountain, [where you can be seen.] O thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, behold your God! Behold! the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arms shall rule for him; behold his reward is with him, and his work is before him." Isa. 40: 9, 10. I have given the marginal reading. I think it the best; certainly we have got good tidings, or the gospel of the kingdom, and the Lord is coming with his reward. Shall we withhold? May the Lord help us to cry aloud and spare not.

Yours in haste,

JONAS D. JOHNSON.

Seneca Falls, N. Y. March 20, '46.

Bro. D. Keeler, Copenhagen N. Y., March 2, writes:—The brethren in this place, (last fall so happy and united,) are now torn to pieces through the influence of two certain persons, well known by yourself. If the labors of Bro. Bates, or some other good brother could be had here, good might be done. But unless the evidences of the speedy coming of the Lord can be faithfully given by some qualified brother, I fear the good that has been done, will be lost.

Bro. C. Snell, Brockett's Bridge, March 16th, writes:

I wish the Lord would turn the attention of some brother this way once more, to give us a course of lectures on the time. It seems as tho' this place was ripe for destruction. I dare scarcely presume to mention to you what rapid progress Satan is making here: such as drunkenness, lying, cheating, gambling, frolicing, two or three times in a week, cursing and swearing, and blaspheming God and his word. It is not possible to turn the attention of many of those who do such things, to the Bible. Even professors have no relish to hear that the Lord Jesus is coming this year or next, yet they have no proof to offer, save "the day and hour knoweth no man;" as though nothing could be known about the time. I am strong in the faith, that it is the Lord's will that his children should know, and that the time is revealed in the bible, for thus saith the Lord: "I have foretold you all things," "there is nothing hid that shall not be revealed," nor "secret that shall not be made known." It may, I sincerely believe, be known as near as "nigh, even at the door."

Bro. D. Peacock, Norwich, March 16, writes:—There has been quite a revival in the churches here, this winter, and many of the converts date their conviction from Bro. Chapman's lectures. There is a little company of us here, numbering about thirty, who are strong in the faith of the speedy coming of the Savior. We meet every Wednesday evening, and hold a prayer meeting. Although surrounded by a seofling and wicked world, we endeavor to live as those who have a full hope in the first resurrection.

W. D. Cook, Sodus Point, Feb. 22, writes:—Although there are some things in the paper to which I cannot subscribe, (and among them, the articles on definite time;) yet I receive both with pleasure, and profit from its perusal. And it is but justice for me to say that I have received more light on various doctrines of the bible from brethren Pinney and Barry's articles on the subject of the New Birth, than from any thing which I have seen in a long time. Indeed, I now believe, that had the doctrine of the new birth been before time, the whole great controversy, with its attendant bitterness, concerning the doctrines of Sinless Perfection, Water Baptism, Fore-ordination, Perseverance of the Saints, and so on, to the end of the chapter, might have been spared from this sin-stricken world. Truly, "knowledge is increasing, and the end of all things is "at the door."

Sister A. N. Seymour, Warren Pa. March 24, writes:—We are in Warren Co., preaching the gospel of the kingdom with some success. Many feel interested, and are studying their Bibles; among whom is a Methodist class-leader, near 60 years of age. He converses about the Lord's coming in the class. I would like to write more, but cannot now. However, I would say here is a great field here and can you not send some faithful brother to assist us in these regions of darkness and death? It seems that I can read the coming of Christ upon every visible object. O Brother, the harvest is about ripe.

Bro. B. Brown, Metropolis, Massac Co. Ill., Feb. 5, writes:

Bro. Marsh:—It is now several months since I left our dear brethren at the east, to see what I could do for Zion in this desolate field. I felt when I left that region, that very few more would probably be gathered into the fold of Jesus:—and those few from "the highways and hedges."—And I find it, especially in this part of the field, very difficult, so to present the truth, as to have any abiding influence. Some few, I trust, have been converted to the faith in Christ, and are now looking for his coming. Yet I find truth does not take hold of mind, as it did two years ago. I feel sometimes as if I may as well return, and spend what little time remains, in trying to feed the household. My inquiry is, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do."

Since I have been in this section, I have but seldom seen a copy of the "Voice of Truth." I wish you to forward it to me at this place, and may the peace of God rest on you forever.

P. S. In this place, I preach in a bar-room.

Bro. A. Pond, Hornby N. Y., Feb. 12, writes:—Our privileges of hearing from our preaching brethren since Bro. E. Miller left this section, have been few; but we still hope, if time should continue a little longer, that some brother will come this way and preach the word of comfort to us, that we may be encouraged to endure to the end, and at last reign on the new earth.

Elder G. A. Hendrick resides in this place, and is the only one that preaches the advent doctrine. He is strong on all points except time.

Letter from Bro. Mansfield.

Bro. Marsh:—It will be welcome intelligence to the advent brethren. I have no doubt, to hear that God has been pouring out His spirit during a few weeks past, in West Martinsburgh. Bro. Bates and myself have been occupied in lecturing there about three weeks, and our expectations of good, were more than realized. No lectures upon the near advent of the Lord, had been given there for some time, and indeed, only a few had ever been given in that place. We occupied the Methodist place of worship, and the truth was cordially listened to, and made a deep impression upon many who had been greatly prejudiced against the advent doctrine and its advocates.—Professed christians who had become backsliders, and had lived so for years, were revived and greatly blessed, and I trust will be found looking for and loving the Lord's appearing. I have never seen the power of God more evidently manifested, than in this meeting, and I should dishonor God to doubt his presence in this meeting, as really as in any effort I have ever seen made to save souls. The impenitent were deeply impressed, and several were brought to entire submission to God; at least they gave testimony to that effect, and so far as we can judge by fruits, we cannot doubt the genuineness of the work in many hearts. It was, in all respects, one of the most precious and profitable meetings I have ever attended. There are many pious souls there, who bore testimony to the blessing they had received by hearing the truth, as well as those converted by its instrumentality. It has encouraged my heart very much, and has established me more firmly in the belief that "God is not slack concerning his promise as men count slackness, but is long suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." I have not a doubt but our work is still to "save men with fear, pulling them out of the fire," and to "make disciples of all nations," sustained by the sweet assurance of our blessed Jesus. "Lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world." Brethren from another part of the town of Martinsburgh, who had before embraced the doctrine of the advent near, were with us night and day, and aided us much by their prayers and exhortations. Bro. Bates was very much exhausted by his incessant labors when I left. He is still in that vicinity, to which I purpose soon to return, and labor in adjacent places. We meet with the opposition usual from the clergy—while many members of the churches were favorable, and seemed imbued with the Spirit of Christ. To God be all the glory for the precious manifestations of His presence in our midst.—Brethren, let us be encouraged to go forward, until Jesus comes. I hope there will be much of divine influence in the contemplated meeting at Rochester, for without it, all meetings are barren.

Yours, in hope of a speedy resurrection,

Pulaski, March 25, '46.

Fly swift around ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day.

Bro. R. Baker, Chicopee Falls Mass., March 23, writes:—The Bible is our chart still, and we are safe so long as we abide by that sacred rule. I rejoice to find as I travel from place to place to break the bread of life to the dear children of God, that there are a people on the earth who love the truth, and feel that the truth makes them free. I find in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont, so far as I have been able to visit, the dear brethren, many of them, are strong in the faith that the Lord will come this year, but at any rate they are resolved to hold on to the faith of the gospel, and be ready and waiting until they see their Lord and Savior for themselves and not another. God is deepening the work of grace in some hearts, and my earnest prayer is, that the number may be increased. Praise God for the fulness there is in Jesus—it is good to trust in the Lord with all our heart, to let go all unbelief and abide in him, so that we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

OBITUARY.

Our dear Bro. Ambrose Nash, is no more with us. He fell asleep in Jesus, on Friday morning, Feb. 13th, full in the faith of a speedy resurrection. He was in the 48th year of his age. The last twenty years of his life, was that of consecration to God. Soon after his conversion, he experienced the blessing of sanctification. He was truly a man of God. For a number of years he was a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was ever fearless in crying out against the sins of the age. He embraced and preached the coming of the Lord in '43, also the 10th of the 7th month in '44, and when he died, was strong in the faith that '46 would end the time of treading down the sanctuary, and bring us to the last end of indignation, perhaps in the spring of '46. He longed to have the day arrive, and although his sufferings were long, and sometimes severe, yet he bore them all with christian patience. He died of consumption: has left a wife and many friends to mourn their loss. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Truly has this been witnessed in the death of our brother, Francis Sherman, who departed this life on the 7th inst., aged 45 years 10 months and 3 days, after a long and painful disease. He fell asleep in Jesus in full faith of a speedy resurrection to eternal life. He was not a believer in the glorious hope of soon seeing Jesus until the last few weeks of his sickness, neither did he enjoy the evidence that he was sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, yet he never opposed the Advent doctrine but would always say he believed it was very near, and he could get along with it all except setting time; but when he was truly converted to God, notwithstanding his painful disease, could rejoice in the prospect of so soon getting home and he would pray for the Lord to finish the work and let him rest a little while, as he expressed it.

I spent much time with him in prayer and reading the Bible, and in conversation, and I bless God for the privilege; for it was glory to my soul to hear a dying saint shout glory to God, bless the lord, amen, &c., and to hear the faithful warnings he gave to all who came into his sick room. He had his senses until the last, and when he found that he was going he warned the sinner to repent and the cold-hearted professor to be more faithful, until a few minutes before he fell asleep. His last words were to a nominal professor, "push on, sister, and meet me in heaven; I am going—I can say no more; farewell," and in a few moments after he calmly and sweetly closed his eyes in death, or rather sleep. The day before his departure, after some conversation about the coming of the Lord this year, he said, "well, brother, I shall not get home much first, shall I?" To which I replied, "brother, the dead in Christ shall rise first, so that we shall all get home together;" and he broke out in praise to God for such a glorious hope. He became much attached to the Advent brethren, and would often say after a visit from a cold-hearted professor, I am glad he is gone, his heart is cold, he loves the world too well, he is one of Job's comforters, &c. But lest I shall weary your patience I must close by saying, that as he never opposed the coming of the Lord, he found peace in believing and joy in the Holy Ghost, whereas, others who have opposed the coming of the Lord remain hard and cold, and twice dead, and unless they can be made to see their error, soon will go down to perdition. My faith was never stronger than now. Glory to God, I expect to see Jesus soon. Praise God for such a glorious hope.

Sister Matthewson.

In answer to recent enquiries relative to the present condition of Sister Matthewson, of Coventry, Ct., we give the following letter from Bro. Cook, recently published in the Day Star, under date of Feb. 14, 1846; he says:

"It came in my way to call on Sister Matthewson in Coventry. She is still free from pain, also from any apprehension of it, is perfectly well except that she had not been able to walk for near 12 years—cannot now use her limbs to walk at all. Her statement to me was, in substance what you have seen. This was confirmed by two of the neighbors, and by the family. She fasted fourteen weeks,—was not hungry afterward—ate but little for a long time, now she eats and enjoys her food as usual.

She does not attempt to describe what she saw after her death, further than has been published. She said that she could not; it was too glorious. She saw angels. She heard them sing. The music was both vocal and instrumental. It was unlike any thing earth ever knew.

Her statement is without any affectation. Her spirit seems as pure as an angel—She is, I think she said, without temptation. I have found a few others who seem in the same moral and religious condition,—pure and artless and innocent as Eden! She wants patience to wait for the glory she saw; but has the assurance of it, if faithful, soon. Has faith now that she shall not "sleep," but be "alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord." To sustain her faith, I gave her John 11: 26, in which she was interested.

She asked what I thought of the state of the dead, I gave her 1 Thess. 4: 13, 18. The word "sleep" is employed four times, and then the idea is again expressed by the term "dead in Christ." The "dead"—those asleep are placed in contrast with those who are "alive" in Christ, at his coming. She thought it was so, because prior to her death she knew all that was passing, and after she came out of that state, but knew "nothing at all" during that period. "The dead know not any thing," they shall "not awake nor be raised out of their sleep" till the resurrection. Job 14th & 19th chapters. Exposition of the 24th Chapter of Matthew.

This chapter has ever been a kind of sheet anchor to my soul, that has, amid all the discordant views among us, and the passing by of those periods when we confidently looked for Jesus, held me steadfast in the faith of his coming being near, even at the door. There is perhaps no one chapter upon which there is more darkness, nor one that is a greater stumbling block to the mass on the subject of Christ's coming, than this. For this reason: the mass apply it all to the destruction of Jerusalem, and can see nothing beyond. But to my own mind, there is not a prophecy in the Bible that more clearly brings to view the end of the present age, and the coming of the Son of man from heaven with power and great glory, to gather all his elect; nor one, that if rightly understood, is better calculated to inspire faith in the speedy consummation of all things. It has long been my desire that some one would give us an exposition of it in cheap form, for general distribution, and as none has appeared, I have been led, from a sense of duty, to assume the task. I feel my insufficiency, but trusting in God, my prayer is, that he would guide me by his spirit into the truth, and that the feeble effort may be blessed of God to the sanctification of his people, and the salvation of souls.

My design will not be to make a critical exegesis of the chapter, but to give a plain and brief exposition as I understand it, and leave the reader to try it by the sure word of prophecy.

The chapter is a record of a private conversation of Christ with his disciples on Mount Olivet, in which he answers certain questions proposed by them as recorded in the 3d verse. "When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"—The circumstances which induced the questions, are found in the preceding context, in the 23d chap. Christ is in the temple, charging home upon the Scribes and Pharisees (the representatives of the Jewish church,) their unbelief, corruption, and hypocrisy. After denouncing the heaviest woes against them, and declaring that upon them should "come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of Abel down to Zechariah, whom they slew between the temple and the altar;" He pronounces their doom in their final rejection, in these words: Vs. 38. "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." As Paul says, Rom. 11: 20, "Because of unbelief, they (the Jews—the natural branches,) were broken off." Consequently they are no longer the people of God—the elect. Whatever therefore may be said of the elect in the 24th chapter, cannot in any sense apply to the Jews. In the last verse he speaks of his coming and departs from the Temple.

Chap. 24: 1, 2. "And Jesus went out and departed from the Temple: and his disciples came to him for to shew him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, see ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." The expression "these things," refers to the buildings of the temple, the destruction of which is here foretold, and consequently of Jerusalem, as predicted by Moses and the prophets. See Deut. 28: 49–53; Levit. 23: 29–33; Jer. 25: 17, 18, 26, 29, and Dan. 9: 26. After uttering this prediction, he went across the brook Kedron with his disciples, and ascended the Mount of Olives. Verse 3d; "And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? i. e. when shall the buildings of the Temple, or which is the same thing, when shall Jerusalem be destroyed? "And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

The coming referred to in this question, must be his second, for he was then upon the earth.—By the "end of the world," I understand the end of the present age. It could not mean the Jewish age, for that ended with the death of Christ. See Gal. 3: 16, 19; Col. 2: 14. And in this same connexion, verse 6th, after informing them that they would hear of wars and rumors of wars, the Savior adds: "But the end is not yet." Luke 21: 9, reads, "But the end is not by and by."—(Camp. trans.) "But the end will not immediately follow," which is the true idea. Consequently it could not refer to the termination of the Jewish age. Again, that the word aiolos is here correctly rendered "world," is evident from its use in other parts of the New Testament. See Math. 28: 20; 13: 40. Luke 20: 34, 35. From which passages we perceive the aiolos or age, extends to the end of the present dispensation, and is rightly rendered world.

Some have supposed there to be but one question here, for the reason that the disciples connected the destruction of the temple and the end of the world and Christ's coming. That they did so connect the events in their minds, I have no doubt. But that there are two questions here, is evident from the fact that Christ (who understood the subject if his disciples did not,) makes two questions of it, and in his answer takes them up and considers them separately and distinctly. And in order to a correct understanding of the answer given, it should be distinctly kept in mind.

1st. That the Jews are no longer the people of God—the elect. 2d. That Christ is alone with his disciples, for whose benefit he imparts the instruction here given. 3d. That the disciples are the representatives of the entire christian church.

From the 4th to the 14th verses inclusive, is a synopsis of the prominent events connected with this world's history. In which is brought to view the persecutions of the church, the political commotions among the nations of the earth, and the false Christs and false prophets which should arise to deceive the church and world, down to the end of time. And I consider the events as arranged in their chronological order, so far as their commencement is concerned, although they may have a general application through all time.

Vs. 4, 5. "And Jesus answered and said unto them, take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." The general expectation of the Messiah about the time our Savior appeared, induced many after his death and ascension, to "come in his name," saying, I am Christ, one even before the destruction of Jerusalem, (of which Josephus gives an account,) as well as after. The Savior foreseeing the persecutions they were to pass through, and the temptations they would have, to accept of deliverance who would come in his name, warns them against being deceived by them. False Christ's have arisen in all ages, and we find the Savior after speaking of the Papal tribulation they were to pass through, particularly warning them against such. See v. 23–27. Verse 6. "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet." (Or as we showed above, "will not immediately follow.") Verse 7th. Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places. These wars came, and the first of any note was that in which Jerusalem was destroyed; followed by those that broke up and divided the Roman kingdom—took away the daily and established the abomination that maketh desolate. According to the word of the Lord by Jer. 25: 15–33, God would call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth beginning at Jerusalem, and those wars have continued to destroy and desolate the earth more or less, down to the present day. But the wars particularly referred to in these verses, were those that broke up and divided the Roman kingdom, down to the establishment of Papacy. For he adds, verse 8, "All these are the beginning of sorrows." Verse 9–11. "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you, and ye (my disciples) shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many." These verses refer to the great papal tribulation upon the church of Christ. "Ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." This cannot apply to the Jew. For a Jew was never hated for Christ's sake, they hate and reject Christ themselves, counting him an impostor. During the Papal tribulation, these verses were fulfilled to the letter, in every particular; as all know who are particularly acquainted with the history of that time of tribulation upon the earth.

Vs. 12th. "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." That this is a perfect representation of the present state of things, none will pretend to deny. Wickedness abounds to an alarming extent, in every form. Deeds of the blackest dye are of daily occurrence, and have become so common as scarce to demand a passing remark. Take up almost any journal of the day, and you may read the fulfilment of this verse, on almost every page. Paul's perilous times have indeed come, both in and out of the church. When men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof:—from such turn away." 2d Tim. 3: 2–5.

A volume might be written, showing the exact fulfilment of these words in the present state of the world, but I trust it is sufficiently manifest to

Bro. R. Baker, Chicopee Falls Mass., March 23, writes:—The Bible is our chart still, and we are safe so long as we abide by that sacred rule. I rejoice to find as I travel from place to place to break the bread of life to the dear children of God, that there are a people on the earth who love the truth, and feel that the truth makes them free. I find in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont, so far as I have been able to visit, the dear brethren, many of them, are strong in the faith that the Lord will come this year, but at any rate they are resolved to hold on to the faith of the gospel, and be ready and waiting until they see their Lord and Savior for themselves and not another. God is deepening the work of grace in some hearts, and my earnest prayer is, that the number may be increased. Praise God for the fulness there is in Jesus—it is good to trust in the Lord with all our heart, to let go all unbelief and abide in him, so that we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

OBITUARY.

Our dear Bro. Ambrose Nash, is no more with us. He fell asleep in Jesus, on Friday morning, Feb. 13th, full in the faith of a speedy resurrection. He was in the 48th year of his age. The last twenty years of his life, was that of consecration to God. Soon after his conversion, he experienced the blessing of sanctification. He was truly a man of God. For a number of years he was a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was ever fearless in crying out against the sins of the age. He embraced and preached the coming of the Lord in '43, also the 10th of the 7th month in '44, and when he died, was strong in the faith that '46 would end the time of treading down the sanctuary, and bring us to the last end of indignation, perhaps in the spring of '46. He longed to have the day arrive, and although his sufferings were long, and sometimes severe, yet he bore them all with christian patience. He died of consumption: has left a wife and many friends to mourn their loss. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Exposition of the 24th Chapter of Matthew.

This chapter has ever been a kind of sheet anchor to my soul, that has, amid all the discordant views among us, and the passing by of those periods when we confidently looked for Jesus, held me steadfast in the faith of his coming being near, even at the door. There is perhaps no one chapter upon which there is more darkness, nor one that is a greater stumbling block to the mass on the subject of Christ's coming, than this. For this reason: the mass apply it all to the destruction of Jerusalem, and can see nothing beyond. But to my own mind, there is not a prophecy in the Bible that more clearly brings to view the end of the present age, and the coming of the Son of man from heaven with power and great glory, to gather all his elect; nor one, that if rightly understood, is better calculated to inspire faith in the speedy consummation of all things. It has long been my desire that some one would give us an exposition of it in cheap form, for general distribution, and as none has appeared, I have been led, from a sense of duty, to assume the task. I feel my insufficiency, but trusting in God, my prayer is, that he would guide me by his spirit into the truth, and that the feeble effort may be blessed of God to the sanctification of his people, and the salvation of souls.

My design will not be to make a critical exegesis of the chapter, but to give a plain and brief exposition as I understand it, and leave the reader to try it by the sure word of prophecy.

The chapter is a record of a private conversation of Christ with his disciples on Mount Olivet, in which he answers certain questions proposed by them as recorded in the 3d verse. "When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"—The circumstances which induced the questions, are found in the preceding context, in the 23d chap. Christ is in the temple, charging home upon the Scribes and Pharisees (the representatives of the Jewish church,) their unbelief, corruption, and hypocrisy. After denouncing the heaviest woes against them, and declaring that upon them should "come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of Abel down to Zechariah, whom they slew between the temple and the altar;" He pronounces their doom in their final rejection, in these words: Vs. 38. "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." As Paul says, Rom. 11: 20, "Because of unbelief, they (the Jews—the natural branches,) were broken off." Consequently they are no longer the people of God—the elect. Whatever therefore may be said of the elect in the 24th chapter, cannot in any sense apply to the Jews. In the last verse he speaks of his coming and departs from the Temple.

Chap. 24: 1, 2. "And Jesus went out and departed from the Temple: and his disciples came to him for to shew him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, see ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." The expression "these things," refers to the buildings of the temple, the destruction of which is here foretold, and consequently of Jerusalem, as predicted by Moses and the prophets. See Deut. 28: 49-53; Levit. 23: 29-33; Jer. 25: 17, 18, 26, 29, and Dan. 9: 26. After uttering this prediction, he went across the brook Kedron with his disciples, and ascended the Mount of Olives. Verse 3d; "And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? i. e. when shall the buildings of the Temple, or which is the same thing, when shall Jerusalem be destroyed? "And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

The coming referred to in this question, must be his second, for he was then upon the earth.—By the "end of the world," I understand the end of the present age. It could not mean the Jewish age, for that ended with the death of Christ. See Gal. 3: 16, 19; Col. 2: 14. And in this same connexion, verse 6th, after informing them that they would hear of wars and rumors of wars, the Savior adds: "But the end is not yet." Luke 21: 9, reads, "But the end is not by and by."—(Camp. trans.) "But the end will not immediately follow," which is the true idea. Consequently it could not refer to the termination of the Jewish age. Again, that the word aionos is here correctly rendered "world," is evident from its use in other parts of the New Testament. See Math. 28: 20; 13: 40. Luke 20: 34, 35. From which passages we perceive the aionos or age, extends to the end of the present dispensation, and is rightly rendered world.

Some have supposed there to be but one question here, for the reason that the disciples connected the destruction of the temple and the end of the world and Christ's coming. That they did so connect the events in their minds, I have no doubt. But that there are two questions here, is evident from the fact that Christ (who understood the subject if his disciples did not,) makes two questions of it, and in his answer takes them up and considers them separately and distinctly. And in order to a correct understanding of the answer given, it should be distinctly kept in mind.

1st. That the Jews are no longer the people of God—the elect. 2d. That Christ is alone with his disciples, for whose benefit he imparts the instruction here given. 3d. That the disciples are the representatives of the entire christian church.

From the 4th to the 14th verses inclusive, is a synopsis of the prominent events connected with this world's history. In which is brought to view the persecutions of the church, the political commotions among the nations of the earth, and the false Christs and false prophets which should arise to deceive the church and world, down to the end of time. And I consider the events as arranged in their chronological order, so far as their commencement is concerned, although they may have a general application through all time.

Vs. 4, 5. "And Jesus answered and said unto them, take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." The general expectation of the Messiah about the time our Savior appeared, induced many after his death and ascension, to "come in his name," saying, I am Christ, one even before the destruction of Jerusalem, (of which Josephus gives an account,) as well as after. The Savior foreseeing the persecutions they were to pass through, and the temptations they would have, to accept of deliverance who would come in his name, warns them against being deceived by them. False Christs have arisen in all ages, and we find the Savior after speaking of the Papal tribulation they were to pass through, particularly warning them against such. See v. 23-27. Verse 6. "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled; for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet." (Or as we showed above, "will not immediately follow.") Verse 7th. Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places. These wars came, and the first of any note was that in which Jerusalem was destroyed; followed by those that broke up and divided the Roman kingdom—took away the daily and established the abomination that maketh desolate. According to the word of the Lord by Jer. 25: 15-33, God would call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth beginning at Jerusalem, and those wars have continued to destroy and desolate the earth more or less, down to the present day. But the wars particularly referred to in these verses, were those that broke up and divided the Roman kingdom, down to the establishment of Papacy. For he adds, verse 8, "All these are the beginning of sorrows." Verse 9-11. "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you, and ye (my disciples) shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many." These verses refer to the great papal tribulation upon the church of Christ. "Ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." This cannot apply to the Jew. For a Jew was never hated for Christ's sake, they hate and reject Christ themselves, counting him an impostor. During the Papal tribulation, these verses were fulfilled to the letter, in every particular; as all know who are particularly acquainted with the history of that time of tribulation upon the earth.

Vs. 12th. "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." That this is a perfect representation of the present state of things, none will pretend to deny. Wickedness abounds to an alarming extent, in every form. Deeds of the blackest dye are of daily occurrence, and have become so common as scarce to demand a passing remark. Take up almost any journal of the day, and you may read the fulfilment of this verse, on almost every page. Paul's perilous times have indeed come, both in and out of the church. When men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof:—from such turn away." 2d Tim. 3: 2-5.

A volume might be written, showing the exact fulfilment of these words in the present state of the world, but I trust it is sufficiently manifest to all. And what is the effect upon the church?—Has not the love of many, yea the greater number (as Campbell renders it,) waxed cold?—Where is the church that has not to confess their lukewarmness? Where is the one that is not forced to confess that the life and power of religion is gone from among them? All acknowledge that for some cause the spirit of God is withdrawn from the churches. It is true for the last few weeks there have been reports of revivals and some conversions. But what is the character of the children? They are so weak and sickly that they die immediately, scarce one that lives a month.

Verse 13. "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." He that by faith endures and casts not away his confidence, in the midst of the wickedness, corruption, and general want of the life and power of religion, shall be saved. "But if any man draw back, my soul (saith God) shall have no pleasure in him."

Verse 14. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." "This gospel of the kingdom." Some have supposed this to be the gospel of the common salvation, while others suppose it to be the glad tidings of the coming and kingdom of Christ, and is parallel to Rev. 14: 6. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth to every nation, saying, the hour of his judgment is come, &c." I am of the latter opinion, and I think Campbell's translation favors the idea. "And this good tidings of the reign shall be published through all the world, for the information of all nations, and then shall come the end." But in whatever sense you take it, no fact is more clearly established than its fulfillment to the letter. If you say it is the gospel of the common salvation, it has been fulfilled.—The heads of all our missionary departments tell us there is not a nation on earth to whom the gospel has not been preached. "Rev." J. O. Choules, author of the greatest work ever published on missions, giving their history, from the Apostolic age down to the present day, being asked in May 1842, if he knew of any nation which had never received the gospel, replied that he did not. "Rev." Mr. Janes, agent of the Amer. Bib. Soc., being asked the question, gave the same answer. Dr. Nathan Bangs, for many years at the head of the Methodist missionary operations, was asked the question in July, 1842, and replied after reflecting some time, that he believed there was a tribe somewhere upon the N. W. coast of North America, to whom it had never been preached. That was nearly 4 years since, and as the tribes all around have the gospel, they doubtless have heard it long ere this. We might give particulars, showing that every nation have had the gospel, but this testimony must suffice.

If you on the other hand, suppose reference to be had to the proclamation of Christ's coming, and the end of the world, we have equally clear evidence of its fulfillment. As early as 1842, second advent publications had been sent to every missionary station in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, both sides of the rocky mountains.—Joseph Wolf, the Jewish missionary, we find from the journal of his labors, visited most of the missionary stations in the east, from 1831 to 1834, and preached this doctrine. He had free conversation with the missionaries, and also with the Jewish and Mahomedon priests.

We find this doctrine in Tartary, about twenty five years ago, and the time for the coming of Christ to be in 1844. This fact is obtained from an Irish Missionary in Tartary, to whom the question was put by a Tartar priest, "When Christ would come the second time?" And he made answer, that he knew nothing about it.—

The Tartar priest expressed great surprise at such an answer from a missionary who had come to teach them the doctrines of the bible. And remarked, "he thought every body might know that, who had a bible." The Tartar Priest then gave his views, stating that Christ he thought would come about A. D. 44. The Missionary wrote home a statement of the facts, which were published in the Irish Magazine, in 1821. The commanders of our vessels, and the sailors, tell us they touch at no port where they find this proclamation has not preceded them, and frequent inquiries respecting it, are made of them.

I noticed in a late number of the "Voice of Truth," that a brother traveling on the lakes, met with a Russian gentleman, direct from his country, who informed him the doctrine of "Christ's coming, and the end of the world," had been preached throughout Russia, but was only received by the lower classes. Many similar statements might be adduced, but the above fully confirm the position, that the gospel has been preached in all the world for a witness. Therefore we have abundant reason for expecting the end immediately.

Having thus delineated the prominent events in the world's history down to the end, the Savior at the 15th verse, takes up the first question. "When shall these things be?" i. e. when shall Jerusalem be destroyed? The answer was designed expressly for the benefit of his disciples, that they may know when to depart from the city.—It could not benefit the Jews, who deemed him only a deceiver and impostor.

Verse 15. "When ye, (my disciples) therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand:) then let them which be in Judea, flee into the mountains." There has been much controversy concerning the power designated by "the abomination of desolation," which is an Hebrew expression, meaning "an abominable or hateful destroyer." Some contending that Pagan Rome, others that Papal Rome is meant. Now as Papal Rome did not exist until more than 400 years after the destruction of Jerusalem, it must be evident that power could not have been intended. The Savior speaks of one abomination, using the singular, but Daniel (11: 31), speaks of two abominations, one to succeed the other. We are informed such was the understanding of the primitive Christians, who, while suffering the most cruel persecutions under Pagan dominion, yet prayed for its continuance from the apprehension of its more cruel successor.

R. Fleming, of Rotterdam, writing previous to 1693, on "the fulfilling of Scripture, says on 2d Thess. 2:," "The mystery of iniquity, even in the times of the apostles, did begin to work, and what for a time withheld his coming, the heathen empire of Rome hath long since been taken out of the way, which caused some christians in those days, to wish the standing and continuance of that empire, from the terror they had of that adversary, who, according to the word, "they knew was to fill his room." The destruction of Jerusalem here referred to by the Lord, and the first prominent event after his crucifixion, is doubtless the same as described in Dan. 9: 26.—"And after three score and two weeks shall the Messiah be cut off; but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." The divine commentary on this passage in Luke 20: 21, 22, settles all controversy in my mind. The spirit leads him to state the event in his own language, while Matthew uses the symbolical language of Daniel. "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know the desolation thereof is nigh." The same exhortation following in both gospels—"Then let them which are in Judea, flee to the mountains,") appears to remove all doubt. The disciples, seeing the armies of that power symbolized by the dreadful and terrible beast of Dan. 7: 7, that was to devour and break in pieces, and stamp the residue under its feet, approaching the devoted city, recognized the sign of that desolation of which they had been forewarned, and in accordance with the admonition of the Lord, fled to Pella, and other places in the mountains of Perea.

Doddridge says, "by the special providence of God, after the Romans under Cestius Gallas made their first advance towards Jerusalem, they suddenly withdrew again, in a most unexpected, and indeed, impolite manner; at which, Josephus testifies his surprise, since the city might then have easily been taken. By this means, they gave as it were, a signal to the Christians to retire, which, in regard to this admonition they did, some to Pelta, and others to Mount Libanus, and thereby preserved their lives." Josephus also states, "that when Vespasian was drawing his force towards Jerusalem, a great multitude fled from Jericho into the mountainous country for their security." Whitley says, "Then the Christians fled to Pella, in Persia, a mountainous country, and other places under the government of king Agrippa, where they found safety."

Verse 17, 18. "Let him which is on the housetop, not come down to take any thing out of his house: neither let him which is in the field, return back to take his clothes." In the eastern walled cities, the flat-roofed houses had stairs on the outside, and usually formed continued terraces from one end of the city to the other, which terminated at the gates. In the mild climate of Judea, these terraced roofs were the resorts of the inhabitants during many hours of the day, and from thence the signal of their flight would be first perceived. How appropriate then the admonition, that they should not descend into their houses, lest by their desire to save their effects, their escape would be intercepted.

The 19th verse pronounces a woe upon such, as might be subjected to even natural disabilities for a speedy flight from Judea.

Verse 26. "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Not in the winter, for that would increase the difficulties and dangers of a speedy flight, beside fleeing under those circumstances, not permitted to carry any thing with them, many would perish. Not on the Sabbath, lest the Jews should interpose. Their well known superstitious regard for that day, prevented their attention to even works of mercy and self defence; or permitting it in others of their nation. The Lord, doubtless, intended thereby, to cherish in his disciples, a regard to a Sabbath day, therefore they were admonished to pray that even works of necessity might not be imposed on them by such a providence.

Verse 21. "For there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, to this time, no, nor ever shall be." When was this tribulation to come? After the flight of the disciples before enjoined. Upon whom was it to come? Surely on the christians, his disciples. For the Lord is not talking to or about the Jews, nor were these admonitions for their benefit.—Remember he was alone with his dear disciples, admonishing them of those appalling sufferings which were to befall them after the destruction of Jerusalem; when only some 10 or 12 hundred thousand are computed to have perished or been sold into captivity during the entire siege. Was that greater than the destruction of the cities of the plain by fire and brimstone, or the old world containing its hundreds of millions, by the flood? What was the tribulation of the Jews by the Romans, compared with that which shall be when the Lord is revealed from Heaven in flaming fire, to destroy all the ungodly of the present world? When "all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 4: 1. And "their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth."—Zech. 14: 12. Surely, here is a far greater tribulation, than at the destruction of Jerusalem.

But again, if this tribulation is applied to the Jews, or any other class of the wicked, it cannot be harmonized with Dan. 12: 1. "And at that time shall Michael (Jesus Christ) stand up, (reign—see Dan. 11: 2, 3,) the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time." Now we all allow that the time of trouble here spoken of, is to be at the coming of Christ the Lord, and consequently, is to be the destruction of the wicked. The remainder of the verse removes all doubt of the above view being correct. "And at that time thy people (Daniel's people which are God's people,) shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." (The book of life.) And the names of the redeemed were written in the book of life from the foundation of the world. See Rev. 17: 8. Therefore the tribulation in Math. 24: 21, must be on the saints the disciples of the Lord, for there cannot be two tribulations on the same class of persons, "the greatest that ever was or shall be.—The 22d verse strengthens this view. "And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

Now if all the Jews engaged in the siege of Jerusalem had perished, and all the Christians who escaped, (which were only 3 or 400) had remained to perish with them, it could not with any propriety be said, even comparatively speaking, that "except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved." for the Jews engaged in it constituted but a small part of that nation, and there were christian churches established in all the then known world. As God's people escaped from the city before the siege, how were the elect to be benefitted by shortening its days?—This tribulation could not therefore, have reference to the Jews, or their city, Jerusalem. Neither Matthew or Mark speak at all of the troubles of the Jews. After noticing the sign by which the disciples were to know when to flee, they describe the afflictions of the saints down to the end, while Luke speaks of the troubles of the Jews, and denominates them as great distress and wrath. This spirit appears to have led the evangelists to record different trains of events.

The question now returns, what is the tribulation here spoken of? Answer, it was the 1260 years of Papal persecutions of the church of Christ, spoken of by Dan. 7: 25. "And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out (a long tribulation,) the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time, and times, and the dividing of time." John also in Rev. 13: 5, 7. "And there was given unto him (the Papal Beast,) a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months." "And it was given unto him to make war with the saints and to overcome them." See also Rev. 12: 6, 14, 11: 2, compared with Num. 13: 34; Ezek. 4: 5, 6. From which we learn the time of the tribulation to be 1260 years. Here, indeed, is a tribulation which has worn out the saints of the Most High; appointed for 1260 yrs. but was shortened 100 years "for the elect's sake, that some flesh might be saved." Under that tribulation 50, and according to some writers, 68 millions of Christians perished by the rack, flame and sword, and every other engine of cruelty, that wicked men and devils could invent.

Heb. 11: 36-38. "They had trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonments. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth." The greatest tribulation that ever was or ever shall be upon the saints. Yes, Glory to God! Their trials are over and the saints will enter into rest.

This period of tribulation commenced in 541, when the Emperor Justinian gave to the Pope civil and consular powers, and fulfilled the words of Rev. 13: 2. "And the Dragon gave his power," (which was by the decree of Justinian in 533, by which the Bishop of Rome was appointed head over all the churches with power to punish heretics at pleasure and to determine all questions of church polity which was previously vested in the emperors.) "And his seat," Rome, which was wrested by Justinian, from the Ostragoths, (who were Arians, and opposed to the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome,) in 538, and given to the Pope. "And great authority." Conferring on him civil or consular powers in 541. Gibbon says, "In 541 thirty years after the death of Clovis, the succession of consuls ceased in the 12th year of Justinian." Milman's Gibbon, vol. 3, p. 55. Thereafter no authority at Rome was acknowledged as supreme but that of the popes, until the overthrow of Papal sovereignty by Napoleon. Commencing the 1260 years in 541, their termination would be in 1801. But for the elect's sake, those days of tribulation shall be shortened. Dan. 11: 33, 34. "They shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days. Now when they shall fall they shall be holpen with a little help."

The reformation under Luther modified this tribulation and continued to restrain the rage, and consume the power of Papacy until 1700; since which time, according to all church history, there has been no general persecution against the church. Soon after the tribulation ceased, Apostolic revivals commenced and have been extended until vast multitudes have been added to the church of Christ. Thus their days were shortened about 100 years that some flesh might be saved. During those ages of darkness and persecution the light of the gospel was almost extinguished, and had they continued until the consummation there would have been comparatively no flesh saved. But for the elect's sake they were shortened.

Verses 23—25. "Then if any man shall say unto you, lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christ's, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders inasmuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before." During those days of tribulation many false Christ's and prophets did arise to mislead multitudes. The Ency. Rel. Knowl. under article Messiah, gives an account of 24 false Messiahs, all but 4 of whom arose during the 1260 years of Papal tribulation. Some writers make 50 who claimed to be the Messiah after the destruction of Jerusalem, till the persecution of the church ceased. Verse 26th. "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, behold, he is in the desert," (as with a Mormon Smith, or as some in the fall of '44 taught to leave the cities, and go into the fields,) go not forth." "Behold, he is in the secret chambers," with or in the person of Ann Lee or as many are teaching in these last days that he came in the secret chambers on the 10th day of the 7th month, others that he comes at death, in a revival, in the person of his saints, or by an inward manifestation, says Jesus—"believe it not." The reason follows in v. 27th, "For (because) as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be." There can be no time to retire into the secret chambers, much less to go out into the deserts to see him, not even to say, lo here, or there is Christ, for his coming will be as sudden and visible to all as the lightning of heaven. "Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him, even so, Amen." Rev. 1: 7.

With such plain teachings there can be no excuse for being deceived by the lo here's or there's. Yet for a double guard against deception, he gives an additional reason in verse 25th. "For whosoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together." As surely as instinct will direct the eagles to the carcass, so surely will the spirit convey the saints to their coming Lord, none will be lost or left. For at that time shall every one be delivered whose name is written in the book of life. "For the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." 1 Thes. 4: 16, 17. For Jesus "shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." See also Isai. 26: 19-21.

Some modern commentators applying this to the destruction of Jerusalem, make the carcass to represent the city, and the Eagles the Roman standards; such an interpretation better becomes the light of the dark ages than of the 19th century. That it applies to Christ and his disciples, is fully confirmed by Luke 17: 36, 37. Speaking of the coming of Christ in his kingdom (see context from verse 22d,) says, "two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. And they answered (the disciples) and said unto him, where, Lord? (i. e. where will you take us,) And he said unto them, "whosoever the body is, thither will the Eagles be gathered together." For "it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God: we have waited for him, he will save us." Can this be applied to Jerusalem? Thus we have the answer to the first question.—"When shall these things be? Having given the sign for his disciples to escape the destruction coming on Jerusalem, he takes up a train of events showing the suffering of his people through a long period of tribulation down to his second coming, in power and great glory, to gather all his elect. At the 29th verse, the Evangelist takes up the second question; "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

A Good Minister.

Bro Marsh:—On my way to this city, I fell in company with a certain person living about 16 miles distant from my place of residence, and having had knowledge of a chapel being lately built in that neighborhood, I inquired if they had obtained a minister that suited their wishes. He told me that they had secured the labors of an excellent minister. I then made inquiry relative to the manner of his preaching. Does he, said I, ever speak about the resurrection? No, was the answer. Does he speak about the coming of Christ, and the consummation of the Christian's hope? No, was the answer.

I have stated these things merely to show the rule by which men judge of a good minister in the nineteenth century! How different this, from that brought to view in the New Testament.

ROCHESTER, APRIL 8, 1846.

This Number.

It is due to our correspondents to say, that the cares which our recent interesting Conference has necessarily added to our labors, have prevented us from bestowing but little attention to them in this number. We have been under the necessity of filling our sheet this week with those communications which first came to our hand, which needed no correction, nor called for remarks by the Editor. Some communications of this character may be deferred a week or two longer, in order to get before our brethren the Address of the Conference as soon as possible. This explanation we trust will be satisfactory to sister Clemons and others.

Our Conference.

Agreeable to previous notice, our Conference commenced in this city on the 2d inst., and continued until Wednesday of the following week. Br'n. Himes, Chandler, and Johnson from the east, Bro. Robinson from Ohio, and Br'n. Grant, Henly, Perry, and Peter and Philip Hough from C. W., and our lecturing brethren generally in Western New York were present. We were, however, greatly disappointed in not seeing Br'n. Galusha, Morley and Hill. Bro. Galusha, we learned designed to attend the meeting, but was prevented by the ill health of Sister Galusha; we did not however, learn that she was considered dangerously ill. A large number of brethren from the surrounding country were also in attendance. Several things in connection with this meeting, if noticed may contribute to the edification and comfort of the saints scattered abroad in this hour of trial. And

1st. The union manifested. It might have been reasonably expected that a difference of sentiment, if not division of feeling and interest, would have made their appearance among us at this peculiar point of our history. But in this we were happily disappointed. All hearts seemed deeply imbued with the pure disinterested love of Jesus, and the glory of God appeared to be the ultimate object of all. Hence, with this divine principle in the soul, and this worthy object before our brethren, sweet christian union must as a matter of course be the happy result of their associated action and worship together.—Truly the understanding beholder could say, "see how they love one another," and "how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

So long as we are governed by the heavenly principles of love which seemed to influence the entire meeting, we have nothing to fear from the attempts of our foes to destroy us; God will be the defence of such a people. But when sectional interests and selfish principles influence our minds and govern our acts, divisions unavoidably follow, and we are left to be devoured by ourselves, or destroyed by our enemies. May we cautiously guard against every spirit, word and practice, that would sunder the holy ties of christian union which now bind our hearts in one; and under all of our trials, faithfully "endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace."

2d. Devotion to the cause. Never had we seen our brethren apparently more deeply and understandingly devoted to the cause of God, than at this meeting. All seemed deeply sensible of the importance of personal holiness in order to be ready to meet their expected Lord. It is true we did not during the meeting, witness the unnecessary excitement which has attended some of our past meetings, but we saw something manifested far better, more rational, healthy, and congenial with the Spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ; it was the deep, calm, understanding, joyful, melting spirit of truth, which enlightened the head, warmed and filled the soul with "that blessed hope," watered the eye with the tear of gratitude, and tuned the tongue with the high praises of our God. Let our brethren act upon these holy and consistent principles, and nothing can harm them. God ever has and ever will bless the "pure in heart," who unreservedly do his commandments. They may err in faith and practice, yet God will bless them; not for their errors, but on account of their purity and devotion to his cause according to what light they have. But his face is against the impure and disobedient, whatever may be their character in other respects. Therefore, let holiness and perseverance continue to be our motto, and soon with all the pure in heart we shall see God, and dwell in his presence forever.

3d. The faith manifested. After meeting with our disappointments, and experiencing the various trials which have troubled us of late, we did expect to see more unbelief manifested in the fundamental principles of our faith on the time of the Lord's coming than what we saw at this meeting. Indeed, unbelief seemed to have long been a stranger to nearly every heart, and each one appeared grounded and settled in the faith of the personal appearing of Christ being nigh, even at the door. On this sure foundation the feet of all seemed immovably to stand. Some however thought they now did, or might understand the time more definitely than "nigh at the door," yet they were not dogmatical, nor so tenacious of their views as to make them a test by which to try the christian character of others. Neither were those who were not so positive on definite time, tried with those who were positive; in short the spirit of christian forbearance was not wanting among our brethren on this highly important point. Though this friendly difference was manifest, yet every impartial observer we thought could see that in the fundamental principles our brethren were one. They are all grounded and settled in the faith of the personal appearing of Christ, and that his coming is emphatically nigh, even at the door.

In this faith we may all stand unshaken, constantly looking for the return of our Lord. The passing by of particular dates will not cause our faith to waver. "NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOOR," as the Savior taught us to know, under all circumstances will be our sure refuge, the imperishable foundation of our hopes. "Nigh, even at the door." can be the position, laid down by the Savior, and the signs, the historical prophecies, and the prophetic numbers, with all the exactness, positiveness, and definiteness that the case will justify, may and should be urged in support of this position, nigh at the door. This is safe, healthy, and happy ground. It makes the New Testament the expositor of the old; gives meaning and power to the divine instructions of Him who spake as never man spake—harmonizes the testimony of all the witnesses, definite and indefinite, which relate to the coming of our Lord—clothes them with divine authority, and unites their voice in proclaiming with trumpet tongue the coming of the Son of man "Nigh, even at the door." This is as definite, we think, as our divine Lord warrants us in being, and as the nature of all the testimony will admit—more definite than the year, as definite as now, this moment. And is it not sufficiently definite to answer the great design for which the prophecies were given, viz.; to prepare men to meet their Lord? So it appears to us. Let a man believe, fully believe that the coming of the Son of man in power and great glory, is in the strictest sense, at the door, may be witnessed at any moment, and if any thing will induce him to make the necessary preparation to meet the Lord, this faith will do it. It will keep us just as the Savior taught us to be at this very time, with our loins girded, and our lamps burning, and we constantly watching and praying, lest that day come upon us unawares, and at an hour when we are unprepared to meet it. In this faith, we think our brethren were never more united and settled than now.

4th. A desire to hear. It was truly reviving to our spirits, after a long time of disappointment, conflict, and desertion from our ranks and meetings, to see our large hall again crowded with attentive hearers, who seemed to listen with profound interest to the truths presented. It reminded us of old times, or of the days of general interest before the supposed failure of our theory was witnessed, when thousands flocked to hear on this subject. May the interest apparently waked up in the community continue to increase until many shall be brought to make the preparation necessary to stand when the Son of man shall appear.

5th. The business of the meeting. A part of Friday and Saturday was spent in a friendly and interesting investigation of certain points of our faith, and in devising the best means of extending the truth to those who are yet uninformed relative to its present claims upon the world. There seemed to be but one mind relative to what was our duty. It was to publish and send out an address to our brethren, showing them that we are justified by evidences the most immutable in holding fast the profession of our faith in the immediate advent of Christ. The address is designed to give a synopsis of our faith—name our mistakes, and account for them—refer to errors in doctrine and practice, and difficulties which have recently sprung up among us, and show, not only that they are no part of the true faith in which we stand, but that they are nothing new under the sun; for the same or similar evils have attended the rise of every religious sect, not excepting the church gathered by Christ and his apostles. When we remember that in this respect no strange thing has happened unto us, we shall be the better prepared to endure patiently these severe trials.

It was thought that the address will be just what is wanted for general distribution at this time.—Hence it was agreed to print five thousand copies for this purpose, and before the meeting was closed nearly half the amount of money necessary to defray the expenses of the work was raised by subscription and collection. Others have promised to aid with the Lord's money committed to their trust in this worthy enterprise. And here we will distinctly say that those who may feel it duty to assist in this work can do so according as the Lord has prospered you, by sending your orders without delay for the number of copies you may want. If you have no money, send; but if you have money, devote that part to this good work which duty may dictate; it is the free-will offering we call for, we want no other. The Lord loves the cheerful giver.

We are unprepared to give the price of the address to those who may wish to buy; it will soon be printed, then we will speak of the price definitely.—But what appears of the highest consideration, and which we most seriously urge upon our brethren is to see that the address is freely and quickly circulated among all classes of people whom there may be a bare possibility of benefiting.

The subject of conferences was then taken into consideration, and the following brethren were chosen to make appointments at different places, and at such times as not to interfere with each other.—P. Hough, R. Grant, and G. Henly of C. W., D. I. Robinson, of O., E. R. Pinney, E. Galusha, J. Pearson, Jr., J. J. Porter, and J. Marsh. These brethren ren have agreed upon certain appointments which we publish in this day's paper, and to which those concerned are referred. Our brethren in different places desiring a conference will do well to make their wants known to some one or more of the above named brethren, who will consult with others associated with them, and if possible supply all the calls that may be made to them.

Let us be up and doing in this important work.—Remember we shall all soon be called to give an account of our stewardship. If we can do any good in any way to the blinded eyes, and deaf ears, and hardened hearts of a certain class of our fellow beings, it is by our conferences, or general associations: they will not come out to hear on other more common occasions. And besides, such meetings greatly revive the spirits and strengthen the faith of our scattered brethren. As iron sharpeneth iron, so does the countenance of a man his friend. Let us meet often as we can and exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

Finally, our meeting was one of uncommon interest. The preaching was according to the oracles of God, and attended with the power of truth upon the hearts of many, if not to the awakening of the sinner, to the comfort and joy of many a glad heart which was looking for redemption at the coming of Christ. The fervent prayers, warm exhortations, and heavenly songs, during the meeting, were with "the Spirit and understanding;" and the "communion of the body and blood of Christ," or the Lord's Supper, Sabbath afternoon, was a season of joyful interest to the hundreds who were happy guests at the sacred feast. Soon, if faithful, they, with all the true seed of Abraham, will eat bread in the kingdom of God. May none be found unworthy of being admitted to the eternal joys of that better country.

UNEXPECTEDLY.

"I think I ought to show you one mistake in your No. for March 4, '46. "The simple design of the parable of the ten virgins, (say you,) was to impress the solemn truth repeated again and again in Matt. 24; that the trump of God, and the coming of the Son of man, would be as sudden and unexpected to the ready and not ready, as were the midnight cry and the coming of the Bridegroom to the wise and unwise virgins in the Parable." I think you might as well say the event will never transpire while God's people are expecting it. Did the virgins expect the Bridegroom? Has Jesus Christ a waiting and expecting people now on the earth? Will he have when he shall come? I was met and put down with such reasoning, till I better understood Luke 21: 34, 35, 36. Take heed lest (conjunction implying condition,) lest that day come upon you unexpectedly. 35. For it shall come unexpectedly on all that dwell &c. 36. Watch and pray—the way to escape the snare. No use in taking heed, or in watchfulness and prayer, if the event is to come alike unexpectedly to all. If thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, (unexpectedly.) Suppose we do not watch, and we cannot watch without expecting, we cannot wait unless we are ready. O let us be ready! Many will say in that day, Lord, open unto us! then will be wailing!"

Thus writes a good Brother, whose name we are not at liberty to give. And the object in publishing his kind note, is to correct a mistake into which he and perhaps others have fallen, relative to our remarks on the parable of the ten virgins. We do believe as before stated, "that the coming of the Son of man will be AS sudden and unexpected to the ready and not ready, as were the midnight cry and the coming of the Bridegroom, to the wise and unwise virgins in the parable."

But how unexpected to the ready? is the question. Not unexpected to them in any sense, for they will be watching, ready, and expecting their Lord every moment.

This was the case with the wise virgins in the parable; they were expecting the Bridegroom, and therefore were ready to meet him at any moment. Neither wise nor unwise virgins knew the precise moment or hour when the Bridegroom would come, but they should have expected him every moment. The wise did thus expect him, and therefore were not taken on surprise when he did come. Likewise, near the time of the Lord's coming, the day and hour will not be known, but the evidences will be sufficient to warrant his children in looking for and expecting him every hour. Hence, when he does come "suddenly," as the "lightning," as a "thief," as a "snare," though in the field or mill at work, or reposing in bed, they will not be taken on surprise, but will be ready to meet their Lord with joy.

This is the auspicious hour in which we live! O may our lamps be constantly burning, our loins girded, and we like men, who wait the return of their lord from the wedding, be momentarily ready to meet our Lord; "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

The Bible Advocate.

This is the title of a small weekly sheet recently commenced being published in Oshawa, C. W., by S. Pettit, and P. Hough. Several numbers of the Advocate were issued before we received any from the conductors. Had they sent us their sheet at an earlier date, it would have been noticed by us sooner. We ardently pray that the "Advocate" may advocate nothing but plain Bible truth. If it does this, it will prove a blessing to the cause in Canada. But if it is lax in its principles, and made the messenger of every fanciful opinion of every good brother or sister, instead of being a guide to the wandering, it will be guided by them, and all will plunge into error together.

We do not say this on account of any thing we have seen in the Advocate, but knowing the inexperience in the editorial calling of our good brethren who conduct the Advocate, the trials of an editor, and the perils of these last days, we as a brother, give a word of caution on this particular point. Better send out partly or fully, a pure blank sheet, than to have it bear to its readers the unhealthy food with which many an honest soul, if suffered to do it, would load its pages. Nothing but the truth, the plain truth of the Bible will do the people good, or secure success to the Advocate. The Lord make it a blessing to his cause, wherever its influence may be felt.

Bro. Wm. Miller.

Since publishing our articles on the "Cause of Evils," Bro. Miller has expressed an opinion that his letter which gave rise to those articles should have been published entire. He thinks the reader will not fully comprehend his meaning by simply reading the extract we gave, and on which we offered our comments. We should be exceedingly sorry to give a wrong meaning to any man's words or sentences, especially those spoken or written by Bro. Miller, whom we dearly love and highly esteem. And lest we may have done this in the case under consideration, we now give Bro. Miller's letter entire.

With the most of the letter we are highly pleased; it is according to the doctrine and Spirit of the gospel; and we are not tried with Bro. Miller for uttering his sentiments on those points from which we dissent. He has a right to his opinion; perhaps he is correct, but we think he is mistaken, and have with the best of feelings, and a desire to arrive at the truth in the matter, shown wherein we thought him mistaken. Here we are willing to let the matter rest, with none other than the kindest regards and purest love for our aged brother, and efficient pioneer in the blessed cause in which we unitedly labor, hoping soon to meet him and all the faithful in Christ in the kingdom of God, for which we now suffer.—We now copy it from the Herald. The following is

THE LETTER

Dear Bro. Hines:—I am yet in this land of toil; where sin has spoiled all the blessings and the enjoyments of earth, which were appointed by our beneficent Creator for the best good of his creatures, and which had it not been for sin, would have led us to reverence and adore that being who had produced by his power, this earth and all its appurtenances, and placed in it man—rational, intelligent, social man—to enjoy this vast and wondrous piece of mechanism. Perhaps we are unable rightly to appreciate the blessings which were placed within the reach of man at his creation, when "the sons of God shouted for joy." Yet I think that we do realize some of the evils which man is heir to by reason of "sin, and death by sin," which have entered the world. How manifest it is, at the present day, that all the influences of the pit are inciting men to crime, bringing in their trail consequences ten-fold more dreadful than those entailed upon us by the sin of our first parents! If there were one spark of philanthropy existing in the world, methinks it must bleed at beholding the rapid increase of evil within the last few years. I confess that to me it would be but a dismal and appalling prospect in the future, did not a ray of light beam forth from the word of God, that there should be a glorious and final renovation of all things! This "exceeding great and precious promise," to the man of God, is the only hope that cheers him in his weary pilgrimage. Every means that the wisdom of man could devise for the melioration of the condition of man have failed; ministers of the gospel have been sent into every land; Bibles have been scattered broadcast in the earth, translated into almost every tongue, and placed in the hands of the poor "without money and without price;" schools of every grade, from the college to the common, have sprung up, in which have been developed the highest mental qualities of man; societies have been multiplied, for the moral improvement of our race—to Christianize the heathen—to reform the inebriate—to break the bonds of the enslaved—to liberate the debtor—to stop the horrid practice of legal murder—to promote peace among nations—to protect the orphan—to clothe the naked—to feed the hungry—to nurse the sick, and even to bury the dead. These, and many other noble and benevolent enterprises, have been formed within the present century. But how much good have they accomplished? That great good has been done, cannot be denied. But it is likewise true, that evil has predominated in a far greater ratio than at any former period.—Even many of the benevolent institutions of the day have been perverted from their original design by their managers, and have become sinks of iniquity, by which to build and uphold civil and ecclesiastical power over the bodies and souls of men. Others are converted, like the temple at Jerusalem, into places for the sale of merchandise. Some have corrupted the morals of the community, by whom virtue is no more rewarded, while vice is suspected in every man, who disinterestedly carries out the principles of a benevolent heart. It is almost universally the case, that where any new benevolent object is presented for the support of the philanthropist. It meets with the most determined opposition from the leaders of the older societies. The cry is at once raised, "selfishness," "money-making business," "fanaticism," "insanity," "incendiaries," "world-burners," &c., &c. How can they judge so readily? I answer, by experience. You will doubtless call to mind, that these same societies, when they were first started, encountered similar hostility from the older ones, which continued until they, in turn, became popular. Then these very men become persecutors, and so the work of the evil one is perpetuated. Why is it so? I answer: Man is a sinner, and while the world remains in its present state, sinners will continue to "do wickedly;" and while Satan is permitted to roam through the earth, if the children of God unite for any object, no matter how holy or benevolent that object may be, he is sure to appear among them, and introduce corrupt motives, false theories, pride, when his servants, by scores, are ready to seize the reins and ride into power and popularity—the two great objects of Satan's influence.

Who ever heard of any old church, or society, originating any reform movement, resulting in any great good to the mass of men? Reforms are generally brought about by obscure individuals, whom God in his providence, leads forward in the work. Again: What moral institution, society, or church, ever became purer, holier, or more harmless by age? In all these things, our first days were confessedly our best.

But to bring this matter home to ourselves.—When I look back to the period when we began to publish the news of a coming Savior, I think it the happiest time of my life. How were our hearts refreshed by the readiness of the dear brethren in Christ to hear, believe, and obey the simple gospel of the kingdom! With what delight have I, in company with many of the dear, anxious children of God, read and re-read the Scriptures, searched diligently and compared the prophecies, Jesus Christ and his apostles, to see if these things were so. What glorious light I have often seen in that holy book while thus engaged! And with what joy have I taken sweet counsel with kindred hearts in the house of God, where our faith was more and more established by the word of His grace—where our prayers were mingled at the same altar, and arose together, as incense, to the mercy-seat of our Redeemer, for a preparation to meet the coming glories, which we then expected shortly to realize—where our hearts burned with love and gratitude to God for the good news of the near approach of the King of kings—where our songs of praise and hallelujahs to the Lamb cheered our drooping spirits, and prepared us more vigorously to pursue our weary pilgrimage to the land of promise, which, from evidence to us conclusive, and which I am not ashamed of, we soon expect to reach.—Then heart beat in unison with heart, soul mingled with soul, and love, holy, heavenly, divine, united us in that oneness of gospel truth, and prejudice and party were dissipated from our thoughts like midnight darkness, or the morning mists by the rising sun. And may I not say where I learned the practical lesson of gospel union? Were we wrong in that? If so, then error will impart love as holy as that of angels, and pure as the waters of life. If this is wrong, then bitter is sweet, and sweet is bitter, bigotry is love, and charity hatred. No. This was a time of love, a time of faith, working by love and purifying the heart. It was this hope, "the blessed hope," that made us purify ourselves from our sectarian prejudices and bigotry. I have often thought that we then enjoyed a foretaste of the love and fellowship of the saints in light. Why is it not so now? The reason is as obvious as the sun at noon-day. We have been drawn from our first principles by wicked and designing men, who have crept in among us and drawn us into parties, and to follow men instead of God, and to form new tests instead of the Bible. Some of our lecturers first began the confusion, by declaring an unholy crusade against the sects, which brought in men of blood instead of men of peace. True, after the manner of men, the sects had provoked us to the course we took by all the wicked arts and misrepresentation of our views and motives that human and Satanic agency could invent, by slanders, ridicule, and wresting the word of God from the meaning which had long been laid down in their own creeds, and departing from those rules by which their fathers, for centuries, had applied mystic Babylon to the church of Rome. We were not called, in my humble opinion, to engage in so universal a war; I think we have in this "left our first principles," which were to preach the blessed hope, and beseech men to be ready for the "glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," without personal or denominational considerations. And while we pursued this course, God blessed us in our work. We were commanded by the word to be patient, sober, to judge not, not to be high-minded, but to fear, and by so doing, manifest the same spirit that was in Christ.—What have been the fruits of this departure from the plain path of duty? Surely they have not been love, peace, and joy, such as we formerly experienced, when we believed in our hearts that Christ was at the door. On the contrary, it has in many instances, separated those who had been knit together in the closest friendship, fomented jealousies, produced "lo heres, and lo theres;" while some have blasphemously arrogated to themselves names and titles which belong to Christ. With such I have no sympathy—no fellowship. I will refer them to Christ's words, Rev. 3: 3—"Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast and repent. If therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee."

The glorious appearing of Christ is my only hope: to this I cling—it is my anchor; and all who look for and love his appearing are my brothers and sisters, and with such I have fellowship in the Lord, and exhort them to watch.

WM. MILLER.

Low Hampton N. Y., Jan. 13, 1846.

BEARING THE CROSS.—Luke 14: 27.

Many Ministers and professors of religion, preach and talk as though bearing the cross consisted mainly in joining an "evangelical church," attending her appointments, and speaking in some of her meetings. Under the influence of such a sentiment, it is no wonder that thousands have got into the "evangelical churches," who practically regard religion as an "up hill business," and who will submit to no other cross than that authorized by the church, and multitudes of them not even to that, as their vacant seats and broken vows testify.

This state of things is chargeable mainly upon these professed teachers, who, for the time, ought to be teachers (in truth and of truth.) and yet have needed that one teach them again, which is the first principles of the oracles of God.

Bearing the cross, whatever is meant by it, is the indispensable condition of becoming a disciple of Christ. He says, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple. Luke 14: 27. In the two previous verses it is said,—then went great multitudes with him: and he turned and said unto them, If any man come to me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brothers and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. In verses 28–32, we are referred to the wisdom of the builder and the warrior, who, if they would not be mocked at in defeat, must first count the cost. Also the warrior, if he have not a rational prospect of victory over his enemy, will, in due time send an embassy, desiring conditions of peace. In verse 33, we have the application; so likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh [or renounceth] not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

What is the true idea of bearing the cross? I will give my understanding of it, in a paraphrase of the passage. Whosoever doth not hold himself "ready to undergo the severest trials and sufferings" even unto death for my sake, and doth not imitate my example, cannot be my disciple. We have this first principle of the oracles of God, stated (in substance,) seven times in the four evangelists. And generally connected with it, as I suppose to explain, and more definitely to declare the same great truth, we find the following: For whosoever shall save his life, shall lose it: but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's shall save it. Mar. 8: 35. Also, he that loveth his life shall lose it: and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal. Joh. 12: 25. See also Matt. 10: 37–39, and Luke 9: 23, 24; 17: 33. Again, I understand Peter, Paul, and John, to teach the same doctrine, and that because they received it from Christ himself. Peter and John "in the days of his flesh," and Paul after his ascension. [Gal. 1: 11, 12; 1 Cor. 11: 23.]

Peter says,—For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye take it patiently? but if, when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto, [to suffer for well doing.] were you called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not; but committed himself [his cause, margin.] to him that judgeth righteously. 1 Pet. 2: 26. He adds, that the sufferings of Christ "on the tree," were to the end that we "being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness." None but those who are willing to die for Christ, can be "dead to sins." If not dead unto sins, how can they "live unto righteousness?" If they do not live unto righteousness, how can they be the disciples of Christ? In the 4th chap. 1st v., he says,—Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, (he has just said Christ was put to death in the flesh,) arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin; that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. Such a state or disposition of mind, must be an armor indeed, a complete defence against the flatteries and frowns of a proud and hating world. Paul says, let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who made himself of no reputation, but humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Dear reader do you possess "this mind?" Is your attachment to Christ like that which existed between David and Jonathan, or between Pythias and Damon? if it is, you would not refuse to die for him. How willingly then, if you love Christ as you ought, could you die even the death of the cross for Him.

In Rom. 12: 1, Paul beseeches his brethren to present their bodies a living sacrifice, which he declares to be a reasonable service. He uses the strongest possible motive—"by the mercies of God"—who can number them? I think by the term "bodies" here, we should understand the whole being. As he says in another place, "ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price:—therefore glorify God in your body and spirit, which are God's." Certainly it would be hypocrisy to pretend to give up our spirit, or heart, and keep back the body or natural life. We are then, to bring our bodies, and present them to our Great High Priest, and consider ourselves as sheep set apart for the slaughter. How would it look for that Jew who had presented his victim for sacrifice, to begin to remonstrate with the priest, and seek to recover his offering, when the time had come for its blood to flow? or on the other hand, to dress up the victim with garlands and roses, purple and fine linen? It would be heathenish.

Now the question is, is this state of "living sacrifice" an indispensable accompaniment of true religion? Is it required in the outset, in becoming disciples, or can it be safely deferred until death, or the coming of Christ? There can be no true religion without bearing the cross: and no bearing our cross for Christ's sake, while we "seek to save our lives."

See this truth illustrated in the life of Paul, which is recorded not so much for our admiration as for our imitation.

He declares that in the very outset of his religious course, he "conferred not with flesh and blood." A little before this, while a mad sectarian, he kept the clothes of the young men who stoned righteous Stephen to death. And he must have been aware of his liability to share a similar fate, if he became a similar man: but we hear him boldly declare, None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, &c.—[Acis 20: 24.] It is evident that Paul considered this state of mind in regard to his own life, as essential to the final result so much desired; that is, to finish his course with joy. Thousands who profess to be ministers of the same gospel, will undoubtedly "lie down in sorrow," because they have uniformly counted their lives dear unto themselves.

Again he says, "For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus sake. [2 Cor. 4: 11.] Also as it is written, [in the 44th Ps.,] For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter," and adds: "I am persuaded that neither death nor life, things present nor things to come, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." [Rom. 8: 36-39.] Why is it that so many modern professors of religion, are totally destitute of this "persuasion" or assurance, concerning their acceptance with God? Manifestly, because they do not bear their cross, and consequently are not the disciples of Christ. They neither account themselves as sheep for the slaughter, for Christ's sake, nor are they so accounted of by the world.

But much is said among those professors, about a "resurrection of the martyr spirit in the Millennium: [implying the fact just stated, viz: that it is now dead in the churches.] But what is the martyr spirit? Is it a disposition to do right, and be holy, when there is no opposition to righteousness and holiness? If so, it is totally unlike the martyr spirit which, [according to the theory,] has died, and therefore should not be called its resurrection. But what is the martyr spirit, more or less, than the spirit of Christ? "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." [or is not his disciple.] "The beloved disciple" says, Christ laid down his life for us, therefore we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. [1 John, 3: 16.] And Christ will say, inasmuch as ye have done it for "the brethren," ye have done it for me. I suppose the candid reader will say, The gate indeed is straight, and the way is narrow; so said the Savior. Will you say Amen, I will walk in it, for it is pleasant, and all his paths are peace? Is not the plan of salvation perfect? then let us rejoice in it. Is not the yoke that Christ would have us wear, easy? is not his burden light? then let us wear and bear them thankfully: for be assured, if you will not bear Christ's yoke, you must the devil's. There is no middle ground, no neutral way to a neutral world to come. Baal or God—God or Mammon you must and will serve. O choose! choose now! Be either cold or hot. The cold are dead, the lukewarm are about the same as dead—the hot or zealous, are the only ones who are really and truly on the Lord's side.

"The Lord my God will soon appear,
A thousand signs bespeak him near,
With trumpet tongues they sound aloud
He comes to burn the wicked, proud,
But like the sun the Lord will rise,
His rays attract those to the skies
Who here, with patience and alone
His humble, holy cross have borne.

Come fellow pilgrim once again
We'll take the cross, the shame, the pain,
While righteous crowns by faith we see,
Purchased for us upon the tree.
The way, though narrow, yet is strait—
Is entered through the gospel gate,
Our willing feet then onward move
Till we obtain the heaven of love.

*Luke 14: 27.

Absurdities of Spiritualism.

"The kingdom is the saints."

That it is composed of the saints, as one of its constituent parts, every biblical student knows. But that they are the whole, is just as absurd as to say, one fourth part of a thing, is the whole of that thing. The least we can make of a kingdom, will give four constituent parts, viz: ruler, subjects, laws and territory, or location.—Spiritualism takes away three parts, and then calls the fourth, the whole. He that can swallow down such an absurdity, must be in a fit condition to embrace any error. Let us read Dan. 7: 27. "And the kingdom, [the saints,] and dominion, [saints,] and the greatness of the kingdom [greatness of the saints,] under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom [saints] is an everlasting kingdom [saints,] and all dominion [saints] shall serve and obey him [them.] Surely I must have "new eyes," before I can see through such absurdities. To such monstrous conclusions, such false premises inevitably lead us.

A brother who had embraced spiritualism, came to see me. After listening to his experience, which amounted to just nothing at all, I asked him the following questions: What is the kingdom? Ans. The saints and Christ in or with them. What is it to be born into the kingdom? Ans. It will be difficult for me to make you understand it, because your heart is wrong—while you must get a right heart, and then I make you understand. I said, you must not come to me with such stuff as this—God treats me as a rational being—addresses my intelligence, and says, "come now, and let us reason together." What if I should say to my little girl thus: "My little daughter, go and do something,—well, what do? O your heart is wrong, I can't make you understand what: but I will punish you if you do not do it. Would you call me a reasonable father? In just such a light you put God." Finding it difficult to answer the question, I said, let me analyze it: you mean, to be born into the kingdom, is to be born into the saints? No answer. Well, tell me when the kingdom was set up? Ans. On the tenth of the seventh month. Then there was no kingdom previous? No. Please keep in mind your definition of the kingdom. What was the first saint born into? Could not tell, but was aware I might ask questions he could not answer. Here was an immortal saint who had been born into the kingdom, i. e. into the saints, having Christ directly for his teacher, who could not answer the question of a poor, blind, carnal-hearted teacher! "Now I know in part, then shall I know even as also I am known." O that honest souls may have their eyes opened to see the truth and be saved forever.

2d. "The Laodicean church is the last—there are but two ways out of it: one into the kingdom, the other into perdition—which will you choose? If you do not get out of it by opening your heart and suffering the Savior to come in, i. e. being born into the kingdom, you must have perdition." Let me ask you a question: When did the Laodicean church begin? Ans. On the tenth of the seventh month. When did the seventh angel sound? Ans. On the tenth of the 7th month.—What transpired then? Ans. The kingdoms of this world became the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ; i. e., Christ's kingdom began. Well then, Christ's kingdom and the Laodicean church began at the same time.

The saints compose the kingdom: the saints compose the Laodicean church, or there are no saints and no church. Conclusion: the saints must be born out of the saints, into the saints, or go to perdition! Monstrous! A man came but a few weeks since all the way from Cleveland, (200 miles,) to persuade me to swallow down a parcel of such monstrosities! He offered but one alternative, swallow them or go to perdition. O what blindness, infatuation must rule such a mind! They would be far more tolerable, but for the death and damnation dealt out along with them.

3. "The gospel age has ended." Can sinners be saved? "Yes"—"No." There it is, sometimes "Yes," sometimes "No." Now I ask, what but remedial scheme offers forgiveness to any man? Nothing. I defy Spiritualists or Judaizers to find one promise or intimation, direct or remote, of forgiveness to men, between the lids of God's book, after the gospel day ends. If saint or sinner steps aside after that time, their doom is sealed! It drives men under a system of law, or no law, (?) (many act as if there was no law,) and then they must be as perfect as angels, or perish. It must inevitably drive its adherents to the position, that they cannot possibly sin. This ground, some are already taking. What follows—what has ever followed? Lukevanness. Such being too proud and self-confident to yield their theory, will consequently set all law, all order, all obligation, all accountability aside, and become utterly reckless—justify themselves for every abomination the devil and their unhalloved lusts may lead them to perpetrate. I speak advisedly. I have seen, heard, and understood these things in by gone days. Antinomian perfectionism of recent date, affords a most lamentable specimen of the fruits of spiritualism. I have not forgotten that but a few years since, John B. Foot jumped on his bible and cried out, "Exalt God alone!" It may be fresh in the minds of some in the city of Rochester. Some three years ago, after I came to Ohio, where was J. B. Foot then? In jail for adultery! Who was among the first to embrace Spiritualism in 1845? Patten of Utica, ten years since a Perfectionist. I speak plain—duty demands it.—Will my dear brethren and sisters who have not yet fallen, be warned? Spiritualism in 1846, is but the tenth or twentieth edition of the same old delusion of Satan, new vamped and suited to our day.

Again: The gospel is the good news of the kingdom of heaven. This is the meaning of the original word—good news—glad tidings. Of what? That God has determined to recover the kingdom which Adam lost. It makes known forgiveness of sins to rebellious, revolted men. It alone, does so. Says Paul, "I am not ashamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Amen. "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in his name, shall receive remission of sins."

I repeat, the gospel, and it alone, breathes salvation to lost sinners. When that day ends, salvation ends. Then he will gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, &c. Then the day of trial ends—the sins of God's people are blotted out forever, and sinners are damned!—Then the commission of God's servants ceases. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, and lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world." If this has ended, it is time every minister on earth hushed his voice in silence—that your press stopped, and every other, and let the world go to hell. What! preaching the glad tidings when there are no tidings—telling men lies in the name of the Lord—that they may be saved when there is no salvation? Christians may cease "exhorting one another" if that day has come—mind no more the "sure word of prophecy," if "the day has dawned, and the day star arisen in their hearts." Why! I would just as soon turn over the pages of the Koran, or Joe Smith's Mormon Bible, for the practical duties of life, or for light, as to what is in the future, as the Bible, if the gospel age were ended.—O, shame on such trifling with God's word, and the great and solemn interests of men! There is forgiveness, and may God forgive those who are doing, they know not what.

4th. Spiritualism is bold, unblushing infidelity. It denies out right, the word of God. It denies the Lord that bought us. I charge no man with infidelity who simply differs with me about the particular application of any given scripture:—but when he boldly and unblushingly denies our scripture, a principle has entered his heart which will lead him to deny every scripture that runs athwart his theory. This spiritualism does. It unhesitatingly denies the Lord Jesus Christ. It says "there is no Christ." Besure it admits "the divine word lives," but says "he who ascended up on high, first descended into the lower parts of the earth," and those "lower parts of the earth" was the womb of the virgin Mary!—Whereas God's word says, "there is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the MAN Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all." Again: This MAN, when he had offered one sacrifice for sins, sat down forever at the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his [this man's] enemies be made his footstool. "Because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that MAN whom he hath ordained, wherof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him up from the dead." "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth [he then became the Christos] with the Holy Ghost, and with power"—"him God raised up the third day and commanded us to preach and to testify that it was HE that was ordained of God to be Judge of living and dead." To Saul of Tarsus he said, I am JESUS of NAZARETH, whom thou persecutest." Was Jesus of Nazareth "the Divine word" that come down from heaven? Not unless Nazareth was in heaven. To get rid of the body of Christ, seems to be the great desideratum with Spiritualists. I asked one what had become of it? He said we had eat it up in the sacrament!

I have seen Spiritualists thrown into paroxysms of distress at the recital of some of the above plain declarations of God's word proving the identity of Christ. We have been measurably free from this blighting foe. Not so now—it come with whirlwind blast, and we are divided.—The Lord knows where these things will end.—We trust in him. I confidently believe it has no more votaries in this part of Michigan. It may be necessary hereafter to say something more definitely about our division—at present I let it rest. Yours, waiting for God's Son from Heaven, even Jesus, Appointments.

At our recent Conference in the city of Rochester, the following Committee were appointed to arrange a series of Camp-meetings and Conferences, and to see them attended, and also to supply the destitute, as far as possible, with Lecturing brethren, if desired. Brethren can address their requests to either of the Committee.

D. I. Robinson,	Elon Galusha,
Peter Hough,	E. R. Pinney,
J. Marsh,	R. Grant,
J. J. Porter,	J. Pearson,
G. Henly.

MEETINGS.

Conference at	TORONTO, C. W.,	May 28.
"	" BUFFALO, N. Y.,	June 4.
"	" CLEVELAND, O.,	" 11.
"	" CINCINNATI, O.,	" 16.
"	" in Michigan,	" 16, where the friends may appoint.

Camp-meeting at DARLINGTON, C. W., June 25.
At Toronto Conf. Brn. Pinney and Pearson are expected to attend.

At Cleveland Conference, Brn. Galusha, Pinney, Porter, Pearson and Marsh.

At Cincinnati, Bro. Porter, Robinson and Pinney. Brn. Galusha, Porter and Marsh, are expected to be present at the Conference in Michigan.

Bro. Himes will attend at Cleveland and Cincinnati, if possible.

Brethren in other places can send in their requests—make their arrangements, and work while the day lasts. The way is opening for more work, laborers and success. Now let us up and be doing, redeeming the time. Where you are not able, we will come freely: and where you are, you must do what you can to meet the expenses. God's blessed truth must be preached, and his hungry children fed. Arise, and gird on the armor for the contest, till our Lord shall come and say, well done good and faithful servants, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

D. I. ROBINSON, for the Committee.

D. I. Robinson will lecture in Detroit the first Sabbath in May, and at Milwaukie on the second Sabbath. Will Bro. Needham meet me at Detroit!

OTHER APPOINTMENTS.

Bro. J. Pearson is expected to be at Cleveland O., the second Sabbath in May; at Akron the 3d Sabbath; and at other places in Ohio, as the way may open. Letters on this subject, can be addressed to him, or D. I. Robinson, Cleveland.

Bro. Chandler, Syracuse, April 6, writes:

Bro. Marsh:—I preached here three times yesterday, to large and attentive congregations. The people want I should stop a few days longer. I think good will be done. Many are very much concerned about their souls. I shall stop and preach this evening and to-morrow evening, if I am able. I have had quite a sick turn. I expect to be at the Conference at Oswego, if the Lord will. I send you my appointments, which I wish you to publish in the Voice of Truth. I will preach at the following places if the Lord will, and the brethren will give out the appointments as follows:

Seneca Falls, eve's. of April 30th, and May 1st.
Rochester, Sunday, May 3d.
Lockport, May 5th and 6th.
Buffalo, from 7th to 10th.
Cleveland O., 14th to Sunday 24th.
Detroit, Mich., 28th to 31st.
Milwaukie, Sunday, June 7th.

Bro. Chandler designs locating at Milwaukie.

ADDRESS OF THE CONFERENCE.

The Elders and brethren, believers in the Second Advent of Christ at the door; assembled in Rochester, N. Y., April 2, 3, 4, 5, A. D. 1846, to their brethren of like precious faith scattered abroad, Greeting:—

Dear Brethren:—Assembled, as we trust we are, agreeably to the will of God, for the mutual instruction, strength and comfort of each other, we are naturally led to remember the deprivations, sorrows and afflictions of our brethren scattered abroad, who are denied the privilege which we now enjoy. We deeply sympathize with you in your deprivations and sore trials, and would not only rejoice to share a part in your afflictions, but would gladly render you any assistance in our power to impart, to relieve your present sufferings, strengthen your faith in the evidences of the near coming of Christ, and increase your joy in "looking for that blessed hope." It is not in our power to visit you in order to strengthen your faith and confirm your hope, by proclaiming the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand; we therefore address you this epistle, by which we hope, by the blessings of our heavenly Father, to be able to "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance" of your present duty; successfully exhort you, and "so much the more as we see the day approaching," to "hold fast the profession of your faith, without wavering," unto the end; and "to be helpers of your hope and rejoicing, until the day of the Lord Jesus."

We wish it distinctly understood, that we claim no right, nor entertain the disposition, to hold dominion over your faith, to prescribe rules of action, and give tests of christian character: this is not our work, but His' whom we serve, and who is Head over the church. But we not only claim it as a right, but as our imperative duty as watchmen, as under shepherds, or servants of the household, faithfully, fearlessly, and in love, to give to our brethren the word of exhortation, admonition, warning, counsel, and comfort, as opportunity may offer. This is the light in which we wish you to understand this address. Receive, love, and obey the truths it may teach; not because we have penned them, either in our individual or associated capacity, but because they are truths, taught and enforced in the word of God, and cannot be discredited nor rejected, without incurring the displeasure of their eternal Author, the Lord of glory.

We are aware that many, very many things, at this time, are peculiarly trying to your patience, and well calculated to shake your confidence in the evidences which we have fully believed prove the coming of Christ to be emphatically at the door, but when these trials, or the cause or causes which produced them are rightly understood, they serve to strengthen instead of weakening our confidence in the fundamental principles of the precious cause in which we are engaged.—

Suffer us to refresh your minds with the truth, the correctness, the divinity of some of those principles. And

1st. THE PERSONAL SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST. No truth in the Bible is more clearly taught, or strongly proved, than this. The principle of interpretation that denies the personality of his second coming, equally militates against the personality of his first coming. For many of those texts of scripture which prove his first coming to be personal, equally demonstrate the personality of his second advent. We cannot go into a lengthy argument on the evidence of the personal coming of Christ: the length of this address will admit of nothing further than a reference to a few of the many Scripture proofs which sustain this point. You are requested to examine them, and their parallel texts.

Paul says, Heb. 9: 28, "And unto them that look for him, shall he appear the Second time, without sin unto salvation." "Second time"—The first time of his coming had then passed; the Second time was then, and still is future, and soon will be witnessed. And in speaking to his Thessalonian brethren who had turned from their idols to serve the living God, he says:—"And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivered us from the wrath to come." 1 Thess. 1: 10. Nothing can be more conclusive than this text: it clearly proves that the same person or Jesus, who was "raised from the dead," will come again from heaven. Rev. 1: 7. "Behold he cometh with clouds"—Who? V. 18 tells. He that liveth and was dead."

The institution and perpetuation of the supper of the Lord is without meaning, if Christ is never to appear again personally. But it is full of meaning when we understand that he will so appear. The supper was instituted to show the death [of the body] of Christ until he [the body or person] should come again; and those who do not "discern the Lord's body," or the real person of Christ when they eat, eat damnation to themselves. See Luke 22, and 1 Cor. 11. The same body that descended into the grave, ascended to heaven, and will come again. Eph. 4: 10. "He that descended [into the grave,] is the same also that ascended" to heaven. "Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things." What then? "And he shall send Jesus, which, before [his death] was preached unto you." "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 3: 20, 21; 1: 11.

In short, the whole burthen of the entire Book of inspiration, goes to prove that the Son of man, the true heir to David's throne, the seed of Abraham, the Son of God, King of kings and Lord of lords, who was once dead but is now alive, will descend himself from heaven, in power and great glory, to reward every man as his works shall be, and to reign forever and ever over the new earth, or the kingdom restored. Hence, dear brethren, whatever disappointments you may be called to meet, or trials to endure, they should not in the least affect your faith in this most glorious fundamental principle, the Personal, Second Advent of Christ. Relative to this truth, the foundation of God standeth sure. On this imperishable rock, we may stand secure amidst all the rude assaults of contending foes.—

The Lord will come again—may and should be the theme of our prayers, exhortations, sermons and songs; the strength of our faith, and the joy of our hope.

2d. THE RESURRECTION OF THE JUST AT THE APPEARING OF CHRIST. This also is a clearly revealed truth of the Bible. One on which enlightened minds cannot differ. It constitutes one of the fundamental principles of the foundation of our hope. If the dead rise not, then is our hope vain, and of all men, we who believe in the resurrection are the most miserable. But thanks to our heavenly Father, the resurrection of Christ, and many immutable promises of his word, assure us that the dead shall be raised. We can refer to only a few of those passages in which that assurance is found.

John 5: 28, 29. "The hour is coming, in the which, all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth; they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation." In this and similar passages, the two resurrections, the one "unto life," and the other "unto damnation," are simply stated, not naming the time that shall intervene between them. A sure evidence, however, is furnished, that the dead will be raised, and that "those who have done good will come forth unto the resurrection of life. The same sentiment is taught in Acts 24: 15. It was the hope of Paul, and a truth acknowledged by the Jewish Church, as the text says, "And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust."

The burthen of Paul's argument in 1 Cor. 15, is to prove the resurrection of the saints. In speaking of their bodies, he says: "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." This glorious work, the apostle assures us, will be consummated on those who "are Christ's at his coming." Then they will have part in that resurrection unto which Paul labored if "by any means to attain." Phil. 3: 11. Then shall the Lord "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." V. 21. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thes. 4: 16-18. To these words of comfort, of joy and hope, should be added the following strong assurance from the same inspired pen. Let unwavering faith lay hold on the exceeding great and precious promise it imparts. "Behold, (says Paul,) I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power." Rev. 20: 6.

If the resurrection of the righteous, and change of the living saints, at the coming of Christ, are not clearly revealed truths of the Bible, then we cannot conceive of any truth that is clearly taught in that Book. We do not mean a spiritual resurrection and spiritual change, but a literal resurrection, and change of these mortal bodies, from corruption to incorruption and eternal life. Therefore, dear brethren, let no one overthrow your faith in the resurrection, by telling you that it has already passed, or that it is to be spiritually understood. But hold fast your confidence, and faithfully labor, like the ancient worthies, to "obtain a better resurrection, (Heb. 11: 35,) and the recompense that shall be given "at the resurrection of the Just." Luke 14: 14. Under all your trials, ever remember, that though some have erred concerning the truth, "saying—that the resurrection is past already and overthrown the faith of some, nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure." (2 Tim. 2: 18, 19.) "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 52.

31. THE REIGN OF CHRIST ON THE RENOVATED EARTH.—This is another fundamental principle of our faith and hope. The Bible is explicit and abundant on this heart-cheering subject. The bright prospect of soon possessing the everlasting kingdom, inheriting, and reigning forever on the renovated earth with Christ and all who are joint heirs with him, should dissipate all our fears, arm us with courage to suffer with Christ here, and impart to us that joy that is inexpressible and full of glory.

The doctrine of the world's conversion, and spiritual reign of Christ before his second advent, you cannot believe; you are too well acquainted with your Bibles to entertain for a moment a sentiment so repugnant to the plain words of that inspired book. We will refresh your minds with a few passages which speak directly to the point.

Ps. 2: 9, "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

Dan. 2: 34, "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon the feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces."

Rev. 11: 18, "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them that destroy the earth."

The work named in these, and very many other similar texts is one of destruction, and not of conversion of the wicked nations of the earth, at the appearing of Christ.

Another class of texts clearly shows that wickedness will increase, and continue until Christ shall be revealed, "inflicting punishment with flaming fire on them who know not God, and on them who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Macknight's Trans., 2 Thess. 1: 7, 8. Only a few texts can be given.

Dan. 7: 21, 22, "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them [how long!] until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."

Matt. 13. The parable of the tares and wheat, and the Savior's exposition are familiar to the Bible student. Read it again that your mind may be refreshed, and your faith strengthened, that the righteous and wicked represented by the wheat and tares were to continue together from the time the parable was uttered until the coming of the Son of Man, at the end of the world.—Then the wicked are to be gathered out of the kingdom, or world, and the righteous shine therein as the stars forever and ever.

Matt. 24: 37—39. "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be; they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew it not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Luke 17: 28—30. "Likewise also, as it was in the days of Lot, they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all; even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." Hence, it is clear from the plain word of inspiration, that "evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse," or that wickedness will increase until the actual coming of the Lord of glory, to cleanse the earth from its corruption and sin, make it new and fill it with his glory.

Then, as it is said in Isa. 65: 17, will the Lord "create new heavens, and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind." And "the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me saith the Lord," as it is said in verse 22d of the next chapter.

Though Peter understood that the "heavens and earth which are now," would be dissolved, yet according to the sure promise of the Lord he looked for "new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." And it is evident he looked for the dissolution of the one and the creation of the other in the "day of the Lord," or at the coming of the Son of Man. See 2d Peter, 3d chapter.

John had a glimpse, in vision, of this new earth. He says, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. And He that sat upon the throne said, behold I make all things new. And he said unto me, write; for these words are true and faithful." Rev. 21: 1—5. "True and faithful." Precious words: true to the letter in point of the reality promised; and faithful, the reality will be given at the time appointed, God is faithful, and will not disappoint.

When these promises shall have their glorious fulfilment, those also will be fulfilled which speak of the meek inheriting the earth, the redeemed reigning on the earth; the kingdom being under the whole heaven, and filling the whole earth; the restitution of all things spoken of by the prophets; "the redemption of the purchased possession"—there being no more curse, and the glory of God filling the earth.

Who can doubt on a subject so clearly taught in the Word of inspiration, and which promises such rich blessings to those who truly believe?—We cannot; but with father Abraham, and all the worthies of the church, both ancient and modern, we find good reasons for being strong in the faith, looking for that better country, the new earth, and that city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

Another fundamental principle connected with our faith, which it seems necessary to notice in this address is,

THE TIME OF THE LORD'S SECOND COMING. On this point the faith of many has been shaken, and we fear some are yet wavering. In common with us all, they have once been confident on the precise time, but have been disappointed. Their disappointments have led them to question the whole theory on time; and to conclude, or think perhaps it is not a revealed truth of the Bible. But a thorough examination of that book on this point, will show that such conclusions are erroneous, and doubts groundless.

If the time, in some sense, is not revealed in the Bible, then how are we to account for the signs which were to precede the Savior's coming, who has told us, when they shall have been seen, to know that He is near, even at the door?—They are unmeaning on the supposition that we can know nothing about the time of his appearing. Read Matthew 24, and other corresponding predictions on the signs of the second advent of Christ, and compare those predictions with the astonishing signs which have appeared within "this generation," in the sun, moon, stars, heavens above and earth beneath; and in the moral, religious and political world; and as you read, let the power of prophetic truth, demonstrated by stubborn facts, bid your unbelief depart, and give place to that faith which will enable you with confidence to lift up your head and rejoice, knowing that your redemption is nigh.

If the Scriptures shed no light on the time of the appearing of Christ and his kingdom then historical prophecy which relates to this event, is unmeaning, and calculated to perplex if not mislead, instead of enlightening the Bible student.—We refer to those prophecies which describe the rise and fall of kingdoms, or earthly and anti-christian governments, from a given point down to the destruction of the last, and the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom. Such are the prophecies of a large portion of the entire book of Daniel, the second chapter of second Thessalonians, and the greater part of the book of Revelation. Let those prophecies be read with the eye on the time of the consummation of the wicked gentile rule of this fallen world, and the commencement of the glorious reign of Christ, and it does appear that the unprejudiced mind must necessarily and unavoidably be led to the conclusion that one very important and prominent design in giving them was, to reveal the time of the end of the former, and the beginning of the latter.

If this class of prophecies does not reveal the time for these grand events to take place, then it may reasonably be asked, why in Dan. 2, is such exactness observed in describing the order, character, and destruction of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome united, and Rome divided; and why is it said, "in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up his kingdom?"—Why in Dan. 7, are the same kingdoms again described, with the addition of the "little horn," its character identified to be the Papal power, the length of its oppressive and murderous reign given, which was to terminate with the coming of the Ancient of Days? Why in Dan. 8 are we led down through a long series of events until the "last end of indignation," and the cleansing of the sanctuary? Why that wonderful prophetic history in Dan. 11, describing with divine certainty, persons, events, and kingdoms, down the stream of time, until we are brought, in chapter twelfth, to the standing up of Michael, or Christ, the resurrection of those "written in the book," and all the righteous shining as the "firmament" and "stars, forever and ever" in the kingdom of God? Why Paul's description in 2 Thes. 2, of the falling away, taking out of the way "him who letteth," the revelation of the man of sin, and his destruction by the brightness of the Lord's coming? Why in Rev. 6 is the history of the church brought down through a series of events, until the heavens are "rolled together as a scroll?" Why, in the same book, under the trumpets, are national events detailed, until the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ?" Why, O tell why, if you can, doubting, unbelieving ones, all these historic prophecies, and more that might be named, if we can know nothing about the time of our Lord's coming. You can give no satisfactory answer. Then no longer doubt, but believe with all your heart, lest that great day, which this class of evidence clearly proves will soon dawn, come upon you as a thief.

Again: if the time of the Second Advent of Christ is not a doctrine of the Bible, then we can see no meaning in the chronological data, which mark events occurring near, and at the time of his coming. Such are the seven times, or 2520 years, in Lev. 26, the time of affliction of God's people. The "time and times and dividing of time," or 1260 years in Dan. 7: 25; 12: 7. The same number of years symbolically named in Rev. 11: 3; 12: 6, 14; 13: 5. The 2300 days or years in Dan. 8: 14, which were to reach to the "consummation" and cleansing of the sanctuary. And in Dan. 12: 11-13, the "thousand two hundred and ninety days," or 1290 years, and the 1335 days at the end of which Daniel will stand in his lot. These inspired numbers are unmeaning, and calculated to bewilder the mind, if we strike time out of the question, but they are full of meaning, and shed divine light upon our pathway, when we understand that they relate to the time of our Lord's coming.

Though we have met with repeated disappointments in endeavoring to determine the precise time of the termination of the prophetic numbers, our mistakes and mortifying disappointments should not be suffered to shake, in the least degree, our confidence in the Bible theory of time. The truth of every portion of the inspired volume should be most scrupulously maintained, though we fail in understanding it in a thousand instances. But it yet remains to be proved that we have been mistaken in understanding that Book except in one point on the theory of time, or the entire theory relative to the appearing of Christ and his kingdom. This one mistake, by our opponents, and not a few of our own brethren, has been multiplied into many, and has led them to reject every fundamental principle of our precious faith and blessed hope. Before this unfair, this hazardous step is taken, we should candidly enquire in what particular point of our faith the mistake has been made. Let this course be pursued understandingly, and the happy result will be, a full preparation to determine the nature of our error, and to what extent it affects the whole theory. Hoping to benefit some honest enquiring minds on this important point, we will now briefly enquire in what particular of our faith have we been MISTAKEN?

We have not been mistaken in our faith relative to the second personal advent of Christ.—The evidences that he will come again have not been in the least invalidated by any mistakes of ours.

We have not been mistaken in our faith in the pre-millennial advent of Christ. The evidences that his coming precedes the millennial glory, are conclusive.

Nor have we been mistaken in our views on the return of the Jews according to the flesh, to the land of Canaan; the more critically the question has been investigated, the more satisfactory have the evidences appeared, that he is not a Jew who is one outwardly, but inwardly, one who is Christ's, and that such only will be gathered into the land promised to their father Abraham, the heavenly country.

We have not been mistaken in our faith in the resurrection both of the just and of the unjust, and that of the just taking place at the coming of Christ.

We have not been mistaken in the solemn and fearful truth that at the coming of Christ he will destroy all earthly and anti-Christian governments, and them "who know not God, and obey not the gospel of Christ."

We have not been mistaken in our faith that at the Advent of Christ, the heavens and earth that now are, will be dissolved, and new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, will then be created.

We have not been mistaken in our precious faith that the new earth, under the whole heaven, will be the territory of the kingdom of Christ, and the everlasting inheritance of those who shall be counted worthy to live and reign with him.

In all these fundamental principles of our faith, no mistake has been detected: the foundation, thus far, on which our hopes rest, is immovable. Whatever errors may be detected in other points of our faith, these pillars in the fabric, should not be removed. Not a defect can be found in one of them. Wisdom hath hewed them out and erected them, therefore they are perfect. But there is another important subject connected with our faith, which should not be overlooked while enquiring for mistakes. It is in which we confidently believed the Savior would make his Second Advent. Well, here we cheerfully acknowledge we have been mistaken; but not in the general theory of time, but in a single particular, in which we were misled by standard chronologists, whose errors time has proved.

No mistake has been detected in our understanding of the signs which were to precede the Advent of Christ. Immutable facts justify us here, for the signs have become an undeniable matter of history: they have been seen by thousands of credible witnesses, hence, the evidence we derived from this source, is yet unimpeached, and clearly as ever shows that the coming of the Lord is at the door.

No mistake has been detected in our interpretation and application of historical prophecy.—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, Rome pagan, and the 1260 years of the bloody rule of Rome papal, are all well known matters of history, and according to the prophetic word, that which is to succeed them is God's everlasting kingdom.—Hence, the evidence on this point is unimpaired, and justifies our constantly looking for the glorious manifestation of the promised inheritance.

That we have not been mistaken in our manner of computing the prophetic periods a day for a year, is made nearly, if not quite absolutely certain, by well known facts in the history of the church and world. Facts have demonstrated that a day stands for a year in the prophecy of the seventy weeks of Dan. 9. Also the papal persecution, predicted in Dan. 7: 25; 12: 7, and corresponding texts in Rev. 11th, 12th, and 13th chapters, have been fulfilled in that manner. And nothing can be more clear than that a day is to be counted for a year, from the exact fulfilment of the predictions under the fifth and sixth trumpets. It is well known that Bro. Litch, years before the event, calculated the exact time of the sounding of the sixth trumpet, and the occurrence of the things predicted proves the correctness of this rule of interpreting symbolical chronology; and besides, the best expositors of the Bible of various sects have adopted this rule, and indeed it would throw confusion into the harmony of God's word, to follow any other.

Thus, dear brethren, this view of the subject makes it clear that we have not erred in any fundamental principle of our faith. The point, and only point of mistake, is the precise commencement and termination of the prophetic numbers. The glorious events to be witnessed at the termination of the greater numbers, we are still confident, we understand; but, as before said, the exact time of their termination, we have not fully understood. But our failure in this one point should not cause us to abandon the whole, especially as the disappointment can be satisfactorily explained. With your candid attention for a moment, we will in a word, endeavor to give an explanation of this,

OUR ONE MISTAKE.

1st. If it can be accounted for on no other principle than the discrepancies among approved chronologists, in settling the precise time of the commencement of the prophetic reckoning, we think a knowledge of this fact should be satisfactory. Our brethren, and many of our opponents very well know, that such a discrepancy exists; and that the difference in dispute, covers the ground of at least three or four years. Instead of claiming the entire ground in dispute for the commencement of the periods reaching to the end, we took the earliest dates, which of course brought the time of their supposed termination at the earliest period at which it could occur.—Time has proved the earlier dates incorrect, but the whole time in dispute has not expired; hence in fact, taking all the testimony into account, no material mistake has yet appeared: for the whole testimony gives sufficient latitude to the commencement of the prophetic numbers, to bring their termination any time between A. D. 1843, and 1847.

We speak to those who understand this subject, and know that the best chronologists will justify what we say. And we candidly ask if these facts do not satisfactorily explain the cause of our mistake on definite time. They most certainly do, at least until we have tested the very extreme dates in the time in dispute.

2d. The investigations on these unsettled points of chronology, since entering upon the ground in dispute, have very conclusively shown to many understanding minds, that the later dates have as strong, and to some, much stronger claims to correctness, than the first. Those investigations are before our brethren, as published in a recent work by Bro. Hale, entitled the "Harmony of the Prophetic Periods."

The limits of this address, preclude our giving even a synopsis of the recent investigations of this subject. And, indeed it seems unnecessary to do it, since the work referred to is placed within the reach of all who may wish to become thoroughly acquainted with the evidences in the case. Our object now is to impress upon the minds of our brethren the truth, that such evidences exist; and that so long as we know this to be the fact, our mistake in looking for the consummation of our hopes at the earliest dates in the prophetic reckoning, should be satisfactorily explained, at least until time shall have fully tested the correctness of the conclusion to which the late investigation brings us, viz: that we were not fully warranted in looking for the termination of the grand numbers, until about the present year.

3d. Another ground on which our mistake on definite time may be explained, we think is, in not understanding the plain instructions of our Savior on this very subject. The prophetic numbers in connection with the types of the law, when critically examined and explained, we thought necessarily led to very definite conclusions, relative to the time of their termination. And such was our confidence in the correctness of those conclusions, that we lost sight of the Savior's instructions on this point. We must admit, if he has spoken at all on this question, that he spoke understandingly, and that his counsel should be heeded. We find that he has discoursed at length on this very subject, and if we are willing to let the New Testament be an expositor of the Old, then the whole matter in question is made plain and easy to the comprehension of the most common capacity.

In Matthew 24, a question was asked our Lord on the time of his coming and end of the world. The conclusion or point of the whole lengthy, critical and definite answer is, "when ye shall see all these things, know that He is near, even at the door." This is as definite as our Lord warrants us in being on the time of his "coming and end of the world." And to guard against extremes, which he evidently saw would grow out of that class of testimony drawn from the prophetic numbers, if taken alone, he repeats the caution in the following and similar words. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man" &c. "Watch, for ye know neither the day nor hour when the Son of man cometh." We may take, then, this position, and safely plant our feet on the plain words of our Divine Lord, as the imperishable foundation of our hopes.

Nigh, at the Door, may be our position, and our mistakes on definite time are at once explained, and yet the evidences which we thought justified our view of definite time, have lost none of their force: but with those which appeared less definite, they all unite in proclaiming the coming of our Lord emphatically nigh at the door.

Take this position, and all the evidences in the case, definite and indefinite, which have been or may yet be presented, are made to harmonize in testifying to the truth uttered by the Savior, "when ye see all these things, know that he is nigh, even at the door."

In this position we can all unite in faith and works. Those who see, or think they see the time more definite than others, cannot object to that faith which looks for the Savior every moment, or at the door; while those who cannot see the time as definite as others, will not be tried with what some call the more definite view; which, in fact, is not more definite, for at the door, we consider is tantamount to now, this hour or moment, which is more definite than the month or year.

At the door, is a healthy, safe position, where we may stand and bid defiance to all the disasters which unhealthy excitements, caused by unwarranted views or disappointed hopes, might produce.

If this view of the subject will not cause the sinner to repent, and the christian to live in constant readiness to meet his Lord, no other position will do it.

To meet certain prejudices, and answer certain inquiries, it may be necessary here to say, that this view of the subject is not designed in the least, to oppose the investigation of definite time: we would encourage such an investigation, the more critical the better. But it is designed to bring our brethren on to the true, safe Bible position or foundation on this important subject. Let all the light which any one can shed, be given on definite time, but let it be given as evidence to prove the truth of the Savior's position, his divine comment, his perfect exposition on time, viz:—"NIGH AT THE DOOR." Let this stirring truth be the rallying point; enforce it, with the aid of all the testimony definite and indefinite, which is in your power to bring forward. Give this truth all the force and definiteness which the nature of the case and the meaning of the Word will warrant. Tell the people they have no divine warrant to put off the coming of the Lord a moment. Do this, and we confidently believe his blessing will attend you and your labors.

PRESENT DIFFICULTIES.

The embarrassments which now attend the Advent movement, arising from the erroneous sentiments and practices which some of its advocates have embraced, is no evidence that the cause is not of God. For 1st., similar evils have accompanied every united and energetic evangelical effort, from the first introduction of the Gospel, to the present day. In the purest age of the church there could be found a Peter to deny, and a Judas to betray his Lord—a Diotrefese to seek the preeminence—a "Demas to forsake" the service of God through "love of the present world," "an Alexander" to do "much evil,"—a "Hymeneus and a Philetus" to affirm that "the resurrection is past, and overthrow the faith of some."—"Some" were then found who were "turned aside after Satan," and "some who preached Christ of envy and strife." Nor has the opposition which the Advent message has encountered been more violent, or the domestic discord following it been more distracting than that predicted by the Savior, as the result of the Apostolic message. The glorious reformation of the 16th century, which all protestants regard as undoubtedly of Divine origin, was attended with fearful evils, and has been followed by the divisions of the protestant church into hundreds of militant sects.—These evils, and all others in similar cases, are to be ascribed, not to the truth preached, but to the ignorance and depravity of human nature, which it is the occasion of developing. The heart of fallen man like the world he inhabits, is full of corruption—hence, these penetrating truths which reach and reveal its utmost depths, set it all in commotion, and rife it up from the very bottom. Opposition is therefore always in proportion to the searching character of the truth proclaimed.

2d. As in the natural, so in the moral world; the rapid rise of a stream raises the flood-wood upon its banks, which is seen floating upon its surface for a while, then lodged upon rifts and sand bars, over which the waters sweep onward to their destined ocean. Considering the weakness of poor human nature, the excesses which have followed our message are indicative of the up-heaving power of the truth, not of the spuriousness of the doctrine which we have preached.

3d. The high and imperative claims of this heaven-sent message, which has been so generally neglected or opposed by the Ministry, has compelled many, (while those who should have spoken, have held their peace,) like stones of the street, to "cry out." Their intense application of the means of knowledge on this momentous subject, enabled them to labor as public speakers for a while with success—but when disappointment and trials came, not having a sufficient knowledge of the whole system of Bible doctrine to guide them through the dark and untried channel, the momentum they had acquired drove some of them on to the rocks and quicksands to which they were exposed. But we hope a large portion of this honest, but (perhaps) presumptuous class, will still be taken off by the gracious Captain's life boat, and conducted safely to their desired haven.

As to divisions among us, when it is remembered that we have been educated among so many different and differing denominations, whose prepossessions and sectarian prejudices are so strong, it is a marvel that the large body of discrete Adventists, are so harmonious. May not this cheering fact be justly attributed to the centripetal force of the truth we have embraced?

PRESENT DUTY.

1st. Personal holiness, and entire consecration are the legitimate fruits of the views which we entertain, and the glorious events we expect ere long to realize. Says the beloved apostle John, 1 Epistle, 2: 2, 3, "When he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is, and every one who hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Hear also the words of the apostle Peter. "Wherefore, beloved brethren, seeing ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." 2 Pet. 3: 14. Give heed likewise to the apostle Paul's exhortation to Timothy. "Keep thyself pure." 1 Tim. 3: 22, remembering our blessed Savior's assurance, that the pure in heart shall see God." Matt. 5: 8. Let these few (among so many) references to such high authority, stimulate you all, dear brethren, to "deny ungodliness and worldly lusts," and to "live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present evil world"—"looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat."

2d. However imperative the duty of striving to make the highest possible attainments in personal holiness, let us not be unmindful of the plain and solemn obligation that all whom God has been pleased to call to this work are under, to unite their counsels, their prayers and labors, to extend the benign influence of the doctrine of the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, throughout the church and the world.

3d. Let us show by christian meekness and holy charity, that it is no part of our business to produce disorder or disorganization in any evangelical body which is laboring with honest, (though in some respects, mistaken) views, to promote the sanctification of their brethren, and the salvation of souls. Let us not dare to forbid any man doing any good work, because he "follows not with us," while at the same time we are faithful to rebuke sin in high as well as low places, and are careful not to incur in the church as well as out of the church, guilt, by "suffering sin upon our brother." Nor let us be insensible to the claims of perishing sinners, upon our prayerful and affectionate efforts to recover them from the snare of the devil, and save them from endless perdition.

4th. Being willing, like the apostle of the Gentiles, "to spend and be spent" for them, and to "become all things to all men, that by all means we may save some." Be it ours to show a reverential regard for the order, ordinances, and Ministry of the gospel, as established by our Lord and his inspired apostles. While we commend our brethren in Christ to His word and Spirit to satisfy their own consciences whether they can best glorify God and do good, by remaining in their respective church relations which now exist, or by forming others, as liberty is granted or denied, and the door of usefulness is opened or shut in their present connections.

THE PROMISED REWARD.

Finally, beloved in the Lord, wherever and whoever you are, that we may be encouraged and strengthened in the humble, persevering, and faithful discharge of every duty enjoined in God's Holy Word, let us often contemplate the blessed and eternal reward promised to the righteous, at which we must be permitted just to glance, before we close this address. Hear the triumphant language of the Apostle. "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me in that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 3: 7, 8. Hear again the emphatic words of our adorable Lord. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. 2: 7, and 3: 21. What precious, what princely prerogatives are these? Again: "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. 5: 5. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. Dan. 7: 27. What a large inheritance—what an extensive possession! "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, unto an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." The righteous Judge "will render to them, who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Rom. 2: 7. The sons of pride enter the bloody arena of mortal strife, to obtain a corruptible crown and a perishable throne. We seek, in a bloodless conflict, an incorruptible crown and an imperishable throne. They fight for a portion of the earth—we for the whole. They seek to possess it for a season—we to inherit it forever. They would enjoy it in its polluted state—we in its purified and glorious state. Theirs is a fading, ours a fadeless glory. Theirs are the pleasures of a temporal—ours of an immortal life. Now brethren, "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."—let us double our diligence, to make our calling and election sure, that when the parting heavens reveal our coming Lord, then hailing him as "the God for whom we have waited, we may wave the palms of victory, and raise the shout of triumph over death and the grave, and ascend with the myriads of risen and rejoicing saints, to meet, to greet, and embrace the Lord and be forever with him, "beholding and sharing his glory."

Conference Address.

This document, which we publish in this week's paper, we trust will be read by our brethren in general with interest and profit. It should be extensively circulated, not only for the benefit of our brethren, but for the good of those who have a desire to know the present reasons of our blessed hope, or the position we occupy. Let us make one more united effort to enlighten our friends and neighbors on the highly important subjects of which the Address treats. It will be ready for distribution, in pamphlet form, next week, at a reduced price to those who may desire to purchase, or free to those who are unable to pay. Send your orders immediately for the number of copies you may want. What we do must be done quickly: for the judge standeth at the door.

The Cause.

As a people, we have had our trials, still have, and expect to have them, so long as we are the true people of God, or until the appearing of our King to give us the kingdom, or the rest promised to the saints. Though trials severe are our lot to suffer, yet we are not without our joys: we rejoice in "that blessed hope" of soon reaping the reward of all our sufferings for Christ, and besides we are cheered with brightening prospects of a better state of things in our own ranks, the little while longer we may have to remain in this world of affliction.

Our brethren east, west, north and south, are harmoniously (with a few exceptions) united in the faith and hope of the gospel, and well engaged in extending their benign influence and blessings to others.—They are making preparations for going to work the present season' understandingly, and effectually, for the salvation of perishing thousands around them. Two Camp-meetings and a number of Conferences are already appointed, and arrangements are under contemplation for bringing the "large tent" into the field again.

The cause is the Lord's, and, therefore, it will live and prosper until he shall come and call from labor to reward all who have done, or shall be found faithfully doing the work to which they were appointed. "Blessed are they who do his commandments."

Ministers in the Field.

We cannot speak of as many ministers, or proclaimers of the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand, being in the field now as there were before the day of our severe trials commenced. Some rest from their labors and their work will soon follow them; others have loved this present world, and are laboring to obtain its riches and honors; some have doubted, halted, and turned back to the ease and honors of a popular church; others have made shipwreck concerning the faith, and fallen into the gulf of fanaticism; a few have given up altogether their blessed hope, if they ever had such a hope, of the promised inheritance; others have finished their short mission and settled down in their duty as private members of the church,—while a fearless, faithful, understanding few are yet in the field, or at their post, faithfully giving meat in due season to the household, and never more grounded and settled in the truth than now.

We rejoice to be counted worthy to be associated with such brethren. May God preserve us from falling, as many others have done; and may the churches for whom these servants of Christ labor, see that they lack nothing of this world's goods, which may be needed for the wants of themselves and families. If ever, as Paul has said, "the laborer is worthy of his hire," these brethren are. Withhold it not from them, lest the Lord frown in displeasure upon you.

Painful, Yet True.

It is painful to record the downfall of our once faithful brethren; yet duty requires that we should do it. Not, however, to publish their faults, but to warn others to shun the pernicious way which leads to such fated results.

We see from recent numbers of the Day Star, that Mr. Jacobs has finally paused in his wild course, in the embraces of Shakerism. About thirty, according to his report, of his misguided followers, have joined that people. Mr. Jacobs is full of zeal in eulogizing their spirit, prophecies, hospitality and character as the true body of Christ; and doing what he can to gather his deceived associates to their fold! Mr. Pickands, if the "Cascade Roarer," may be relied upon for truth, has publicly renounced "Millerism as a humbug and a delusion."

These are the legitimate and pernicious fruits of a departure from the plain teachings of the word of the Lord. And in view of them we once more raise the warning voice; entreating our dear brethren, who have not yet fully gone into these wild extremes, to now pause in your course, and speedily return to the sure foundation, the word of the Lord, from which you have so fearfully departed: a few steps more and you will be beyond recovery. O listen to this counsel.

Bro. M. Chaudler.

It will be seen by his appointments published in this number, that this brother has made arrangements for visiting the churches on his way from Troy, N. Y. to Milwaukee, W. T., where he designs locating his family. His labors will prove a blessing wherever they may be bestowed. Many in this city will rejoice to hear him again, and we trust will aid him on his journey after a godly sort; and we doubt not that other churches will do the same. Your assistance will be needed to aid in the expenses of his journey, and thankfully received by him.

Bro. J. V. Himes.

Since our conference this brother has visited Le Roy, Buffalo, Lockport, and Attica. He brings a good report of his meetings, and the state of the cause in these places; especially at Attica a new interest appeared to be waked up among the people. He preached in our hall Tuesday evening of last week, and the next day left for Seneca Falls on his return home. His visit to Western New York, at this time, has been cordially received, and will doubtless prove a signal blessing to the good cause, in which we have never seen him more deeply engaged.

Bro. J. D. Johnson.

Through mistake we omitted noticing the attendance of this worthy brother from the east, at our late Conference. His return, after a lengthy absence to this his former field of labor, was hailed with joy by his warm hearted brethren. We believe he designs remaining in this western region for a while; how long we did not learn, neither where he wishes to be addressed, we presume, however, at Le Roy, N. Y. May he be fully restored to health, and again prove a blessing to the cause in western New York.

News of the Day.

Says the True Sun: "The comments of the English press on the refusal of the American government to arbitrate on the Oregon question looks warlike. The extraordinary activity which prevails in all the dock yards, in overhauling and bringing forward frigates of the heaviest class is very ominous, and these are precisely the vessels that will be required in the war with America."

POLAND.—An extensive revolution has broken out in this oppressed country. "The insurgents are said to amount to 40,000 men." It is said the Russians had assailed Cracow and reduced half of it to ashes, and driven out the Poles, who in their retreat, encountered a large body of Austrians and defeated them. "The whole of the country people are enraged because the Austrian government has offered a premium on every head of a land owner brought in, and which has encouraged the peasants to massacre 200 lords of manors. These same peasants are in the army of the insurgents. It is now certain beyond the possibility of a doubt that the present movement is, or will be, a general one throughout ancient Poland. The opposition Journals of Paris have already opened in aid of the Polish cause."

SPAIN, is threatened with serious difficulties, caused by the Queen refusing to sanction the doings of a large majority of her ministry. The affairs of Switzerland are said to be in a very critical state.—Mexico is yet broken into factions, and holds more than ever a warlike attitude toward the United States. And it is thought that actual hostilities may have already commenced.

In looking at the present warlike aspect of the nations of the globe, we are forcibly impressed with the following prophecy, which evidently refers to the momentous time just before us. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 18.

'Trump of Jubilee'

Bro. E. R. Pinney of Seneca Falls has issued another number of this sheet. It is filled with his promised Exposition of Matt. 24. Orders for it should be addressed to Bro. Pinney. The last part of the Exposition we give in this number. Read the article, and see that you are ready to meet the Son of Man, of whose glorious appearing it speaks.

Exposition of the 24th Chapter of Matthew. (Concluded.)

"WHAT SHALL BE THE SIGN OF THY COMING AND OF THE END OF THE WORLD?"

The Savior in answering this inquiry, gives us signs and nothing but signs until we are brought down to his coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, to gather all his elect. V. 29. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." After the tribulation of what days? Surely the 1260 days, (years) which commenced in 541 and would terminate in 1801. Mark, it does not say after those days, but after the tribulation of those days, which tribulation was to be ordered for the elect's sake. All church history concurs in placing the termination of the tribulation at about 1700. Mark 13: 24, reads, "In those days," (i. e. before 1801, the termination of those days) "after that tribulation the sun shall be darkened," &c. (i. e. after the year 1700.) Then it follows, the first sign of our Lord's coming, and of the end of the world, the darkening of the sun and moon, must fall between 1700 and 1800. In May 19th, 1780, there was a remarkable fulfillment thereof, and in reference to the facts and date there can be no place for doubts; for aside from historical accounts, in which there is found no discrepancy, there are thousands now living who can attest thereto. They say the darkness was supernatural from morning until night, and even during most of the night, and although the moon had fulfilled only the night previous, the Rev. Mr. Tenney of Exeter, N. H. says, "I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete." There are insuperable difficulties to the application of these signs to the destruction of Jerusalem. First, Josephus gives no account of such signs having been seen before the fall of that city. Secondly, if such scenes had transpired, they could be no fulfillment of the prophecy for Matthew and Mark expressly say the signs were to be after the tribulation. History does not show any fulfillment but that we will now present:

1. Of the Sun darkened, &c.—Dark day of May 19, 1780. "In the month of May, 1780, there was a very terrific dark day in New England, when 'all faces seemed to gather blackness,' and the people were filled with fear. There was great distress in the village where Edward Lee lived: 'men's hearts failing them for fear' that the judgment day was at hand, and the neighbors all fled around the holy man, for his lamp was trimmed and shining brighter than ever, amidst the unnatural darkness. Happy and joyful in God, he pointed them to their only refuge from the wrath to come, and spent the gloomy hours in earnest prayer for the distressed multitude. His nephew, who was then a little child, in after life retained a lively recollection of that scene, and his childish feelings are an interesting exhibition of the manner in which Mr. Lee was regarded, for he felt not the least alarm in his presence, thinking that he was perfectly safe where his good uncle was, even at the hour of judgment had come." Tract No. 379 of Am. Tract Society—Life of Rev. Lee, of Mass.

"The 12th of May, 1780, was a remarkable dark day. Clouds were lighted in many houses. The birds were silent and disappeared. The cows retired to rest. It was the general opinion that the day of judgment was at hand. The Legislature of Connecticut was in session, at Hartford, but being unable to transact business, adjourned. A motion for adjournment was before the council; but when the opinion of Col. Davenport, [of Stamford] was requested he replied, 'I can assent to the adjournment. The day of judgment is either at hand or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for the adjournment of me; I wish to be found in the line of my duty. I wish, therefore, that councils may be brought.'" President Dwight, in Ct. History & Collections.

"Dark day of May 19, 1780.—The sun rose clear, and shone for several hours; all night, the sky became overcast with clouds, and by ten o'clock, A. M. the darkness was such as to render the farmers to leave their work in the field, and retire to their dwellings; people went to their rooms, and before noon, lights became necessary to the transaction of business within doors. The darkness continued through the day, and the night till near morning, was as unusually dark as the day."—Gage's History of Roxley, Mass.

2. MOON DARKENED.—SIGNS IN THE MOON FULFILLED. "Night after the dark day of 1780. "The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light. I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes, was equally invisible in the blackest velvet."—Rec. Mr. Tenney of Exeter, N. H., quoted by Mr. Gage "to the Histor. Soc." "The next succeeding dark day, (May 9, 1780) was of such perfectly darkness, that, in some instances, horses could not be compelled to leave the stable when wanted for service. About a plough, the clouds were dispersed, and the moon and stars appeared with unimpeded brilliancy."—Portsmouth Journal, May 20, 1833. Extract from Stone's History of Newbury.

Where shall we look for a more literal and exact fulfillment than the above extracts exhibit of those remarkable signs?

The 3d sign is the falling of the stars, which was literally fulfilled in the night of Nov. 13, 1833. I am aware that some view that phenomena an exhibition of meteors and not of stars, and therefore no fulfillment of that sign. I ask what kind of a star piloted the wise men to the birth place of the Savior? Surely no planet or fixed star. How many planets could fall from heaven on to this earth without producing its destruction? The distinction between meteors and stars is of modern invention, the discovery of modern astronomers. It is well known the ancients understood by the Greek word aster, (here used) the smaller lights of heaven. It is therefore evident that this sign must have a shower of meteors, or small stars for its fulfillment; and that the phenomena of Nov. 1833, fully exhibit the sign the following extracts will show. The first, from Henry Dana Ward of New York, published in the Journal of Commerce, Nov. 15, 1833:

"At the cry, 'Look out of the window,' I sprang from a deep sleep, and with wonder saw the east lighted up with the dawn and METEORS. The zenith, the north, and the west, also showed the falling stars, in the very image of our thing, and of only one, I ever heard of. I called to my wife to behold; and while robing, she exclaimed, 'See how the stars fall!' I replied, 'that is the wonder;' and we felt in our hearts, that it was a sign of the last day. For truly, the stars of heaven fell into the earth, even as a fig tree sheds her timely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."—Rec. G. 13. This language of the prophet has always been received as metaphorical. Yesterday it was literally fulfilled. The ancients understood by aster in Greek, and stella in Latin, the smaller lights of heaven. The refinement of modern astronomy has made the distinction between stars of heaven and meteors of heaven. Therefore, the sign of the coming, as it is expressed in the original Greek, was literally fulfilled in the phenomenon of yesterday, so as no man before yesterday had conceived to be possible that it should be fulfilled. The immense size and distance of the planets and fixed stars forbid the idea of their falling into the earth. Larger bodies cannot fall in myriads into a smaller body; but most of the planets and all the fixed stars are many times larger than our earth. They cannot fall into the earth; but these fell toward it.

"And how the stars fell! Never myself nor any of the company, heard any report; and were I to hunt through nature for a simile, I could not find one so apt to illustrate the appearance of the heavens as that which St. John uses in the prophecy before quoted. 'It rained fire!' says one—'another, 'It was like a shower of fire!' Another, 'It was like the large flakes of falling snow, before a coming storm, or large drops of rain before a shower.'—I admit their fitness for common accuracy; but they come far short of the accuracy of the figure used by the prophet. 'The stars of heaven fell into the earth: they were not sheets, or flakes, or drops of fire; but they were what the world understands by 'falling stars,' and one speaking to his fellow, in the midst of the scene, would say, 'See how the stars fall!' And he who heard, would not pause to correct the astronomy of the speaker, any more than he would be so precise as to reply, 'the sun does not move,' to one who should tell him 'the sun is rising.' The stars fell, even as a fig tree casts her autumnal figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one: those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north; those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; and those which fell in the south (for I saw not one of the stars enter into the Park) fell toward the south. And they fell not as the ripe fruit falls. Far from it; but they flew, they were cast like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when under a violent pressure it does break its hold, it flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force, but each one falls on its own side of the road, in the line of its path. The appearance of the above phenomenon to the inmates of my house."

This was from an eye witness who penned it the day following, and years since avers it was not overdrawn. The second is from Prof. Olmstead of Yale College, a distinguished meteorologist:

"The extent of the shower of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the West; and from the northern coast of South America, to undefined regions among the British possessions, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented nearly the same appearance."

"In nearly all places, the meteors began to attract notice by their unusual frequency as early as eleven o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about four o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day.—The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but fell on the own side of the road, in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the head of the lion."

"This is important testimony, as to the vast extent of the exhibition of the phenomenon, and also of the falling stars all emanating from a single point in the heavens."

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness this exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest number of artificial fire works that has ever been seen since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."

"I feel assured that this is an atmospheric or terrestrial phenomenon, but that these fiery meteors come to us from the regions of space, and reveal to us the existence of worlds of a nebular or cometary nature, existing in the solar system, and forming constituent parts of the system. Nevertheless, these conclusions built on mere hypothesis, but are necessary, for these conclusions built on mere hypothesis. This is no longer to be regarded as a terrestrial, but as a celestial phenomenon; and falling stars are now to be no more viewed as casual productions of the upper regions of the atmosphere, but as visitants from OTHER WORLDS, or from the planetary voids."

"Subsequent inquiries have led me to the belief, that the body was so distant as to be hardly to exhibit any apparent parallax, but was projected on very nearly the same part of the sky, as seen by all observers. This fact at once shows that the source of the meteors was far beyond the atmosphere, and confirms the preceding conclusion that it was wholly independent of the earth."

The above extracts exhibit the greatest display of celestial fireworks recorded in the pages of history. It was no atmospheric, or terrestrial phenomenon common in the upper regions of the earth, but some visitant of other orbs, balling alike the science of man, and the understood laws of nature.

4th. "The powers of heaven shall be shaken." This is the last of a series of events which constitute the sign of the Son of Man, or of his coming in the clouds of heaven. The first was located in the sun; the second in the moon; the 3d in the stars; and the 4th we should naturally expect would be on the earth—a location I will now endeavor to prove. If this sign has not been exhibited, we can have no warrant for saying the coming of Christ is near, even at the door. Christ says, v. 33, "When ye shall see ALL these things, (signs) know that it (margin He) is near, even at the door. I apprehend the difficulty in the minds of many arises from not sufficiently distinguishing between the shaking of HEAVEN, and the shaking of the POWERS of heaven; two events entirely different in their nature and chronology. The one precedes the coming of Christ and is to be a sign of its near approach; the other accompanies or immediately follows the advent. See Heb. 12: 26, compared with 1 Thess. 4: 16. His voice shakes heaven and earth when he descends from heaven with the voice of the archangel, &c. See also Rev. 20: 11. 2 Pet. 3: 10, &c. The effect whereof will be the shaking down and removing of all things which can be shaken, that a kingdom may be prepared that can never be removed. We inquire what constitutes the sign, the shaking of the powers of heaven? The term heaven must be taken in its most literal and primary Bible signification, the earth's atmosphere. See Gen. 1: 8, 20. In this sense it is used in the 31st v., "And he shall send his angels, &c., to gather his elect from the four winds from one end of heaven to the other," according to Campb. translation, "from one extremity of the world to the other." The word in the original is the same in both instances: if proper to translate the latter world, so also the former. 1 Thess 4: 16, compared with verse 31st, clearly shows from whence Christ is to gather his elect at his coming. The Lord will descend with a shout into mid air—the dead in Christ first rise, and take their stand on the earth, the righteous living be changed, and then together be caught up by the angels in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. They are to be gathered from the earth's surface which is here called heaven. Man walks through the midst of heaven, as much as fowls fly through the midst of heaven. The shaking of the powers of heaven then, is the commotion of things on the earth's surface, "for the powers of the world shall be shaken." In the order of the signs as given by the evangelists, Math. 24: 29, Mark 13: 24, 25, and Luke 21: 25-27, this is named as the fourth. Luke names the three first signs, and then gives the events which constitute the fourth before naming it, thereby giving us the needed explanation. "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and [as that which constitutes the fourth] upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth;" then follows the reason for this state of things "For the powers of heaven (the world) shall be shaken." Thus by comparing scripture with scripture we get the Spirit's own explanation, which is more satisfactory to my own mind than all the theories of men.

Has this sign been exhibited? Who will, who can, for a moment doubt it? Commencing with the French Revolution in 1789, to the close of Bonaparte's career in 1815, was notoriously a time of trouble, in the four quarters of the globe, Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. The war which began in France, involved before its close nearly the whole civilized world, and almost every government in Christendom was shaken to its very base. Bonaparte himself declared at the time of the revolution in 1799, "that nothing in history resembled the close of the 18th century," and he might with propriety have added, that he was one of the prime causes of that state of things. Europe for 25 years was on a great battle field, deluged with the blood of the millions of her sons who strewed her plains. Nearly every sovereign of Europe, was obliged to purchase a dishonorable peace of Bonaparte, or be hurled from his throne. Sir Robert Peel remarked in the British Parliament that, "the period which has elapsed since the first outbreak of the French Revolution is one of the most memorable periods in the world's history." There was emphatically, "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity." The sea and the waves have roared mightily for the last ten years, in the destruction of life and property to an extent unparalleled in any two centuries of the world's history, if we except the Noatic flood. In one etorm, 351 vessels reported as lost, in another 238. After the storm in the winter of 1841 about 300 dead bodies were found on the coast of France.—From the small town of Truro on Cape Cod in one gale 9 vessels were lost and 56 seamen perished. The sudden rise of water among the islands of the Pacific Ocean in 1839, covering and almost desolating some of the islands in a perfect calm, is another instance of the waves roaring.

"Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." For a few years past there has been a general excitement among all classes on the state of the world and the prospects of the future, producing a general impression on all that some mighty revolution is at hand, yet differing greatly as to its nature. The traditions of many nations of the east, handed down for many generations, that the present is a fatal period to their several governments, are instances of this "fearful looking." Why the vast preparation for war now being made by every nation on the globe, although a time of almost universal peace? Is it not "the fearful looking for of things coming on the earth?" Said Canning, the prime minister of England, "no observer of the times can fail to perceive that a mighty revolution is about to come upon the earth that will shake it from pole to pole." The general interest excited for the last few years in every quarter of the globe on the subject of Christ's 2d advent has increased this "fearful looking." Finally, the same state of things exist as at Christ's first advent—the whole world are on tiptoe looking for something. Thus the powers of heaven are shaken. V. 30th. "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven." Many are looking as the fulfillment of this declaration, for a distinct sign in heaven—one that will be so visible to all, and convincing, as to be universally acknowledged the sure precursor of that great day. This is a very natural and easy belief, for the simple reason, that all [especially the wicked] desire it might be so. This view however would contradict many of the plainest teachings of the word; for instance—"As a snare shall it come,"—"as a thief in the night,"—"as he travailed upon a woman with child," &c. Has not God set the snare? Will he remove it? Shall the wicked understand? This cannot be. Let us consider the question of the disciples now under consideration. "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" Four events are given in the 29th verse, as the answer, which four constitute the sign of his coming. The expression, "then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven," is no part of the answer to the question "what shall be," but a simple statement that when the four events named shall have transpired, "then shall appear (or shall have been seen) the sign of the Son of Man, or of his coming. My reasons for this conclusion are, 1st, the question itself, which is not plural, what shall be the signs, but the sign. Mark, it does not say a sign but the sign; and inasmuch, as these four events have transpired, the sign or indication of the Son of Man being near even at the doors, stands out in such bold relief that if men will not believe now, they would not tho' one should rise from the dead.

2nd. If this event constitutes a part of the answer to the question, "what shall be the sign of thy coming," inasmuch as these events when fulfilled are to be positive evidence that his coming is near, even at the door, this event (being the last of the series) must be clearly explained in the word; otherwise, if fulfilled, it could be to us no evidence of the fact. This sign is not explained; therefore, is no part of the answer to the question, "what shall be the sign of thy coming."

3d. Mark and Luke after the expression "the powers of heaven shall be shaken," both give as the next event, "And then shall they see the Son of man come in the clouds with great power and glory." Therefore I cannot feel warranted in looking for another sign, and I awfully fear it is a device of the enemy to catch unwary souls, who in expectation of another sign may be neglecting a present preparation for His coming. To such I would lift my warning voice, and exhort them to make an immediate preparation for the coming of Christ as the next great event. The sign of the Son of Man has been seen and is now proclaiming Christ at the door; "watch therefore, and pray always, that ye may be counted worthy to stand before the Son of Man."

Verse 30th. "And then shall all the tribes of the earth (the wicked) mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." From this translation we are led to suppose the cause of the mourning to be the appearing of the sign of the Son of Man, but it is not so: the cause of the mourning is Christ's coming. As proof I will give Campbell's translation of this verse. "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and all the tribes of the land shall mourn, WHEN THEY SHALL SEE THE SON OF MAN COMING ON THE CLOUDS OF HEAVEN WITH GREAT MAJESTY AND POWER." This shows the cause of their mourning to be the coming of Christ, and that "the tribes" are the wicked. For that will be a joyful day to the saints, as Isa. 25:9 says: "It shall be said in that day, lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation;" but all the wicked will wail in that day because of Him. For the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, &c., when he shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all to them that believe. Yes, praise the Lord! "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1:11.

Verse 31. "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds from one end of heaven to the other." Thus we have the answer to the question, "what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" And we are brought down to his coming to gather all his saints to meet him in the air. The Savior now enforces his instructions by a parable.

Verse 32. "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves ye know that the summer is nigh." When in the spring we see the leaves putting forth on the trees, we are assured that summer is nigh, for it is according to the laws of order, by which God governs the natural world. What then are we to understand from this fact?

Verse 33d. "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, (the before described signs,) know that it (margin He) is near even at the doors." What is near? The coming of Christ, and the end of the world, for that is the question under consideration. And it is not a mere permission, but a command to know it as well as we know that summer is nigh, when in the spring we see the leaves putting forth.

Verse 34. "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." The last thing to be fulfilled is sending forth his angels to gather all his elect. The generation here spoken of evidently must be the last upon the earth, because that generation is to see the signs whereby it is to know His coming is near, even at the doors. A generation of man according to God's rule has ever been considered to be 70 years. Ps. 90:10. "The days of our years are three score years and ten." And no other period is given in the Word. Then we have the assurance that within 70 years from May 19th, 1780, (the date of the first sign) Christ will come in the clouds of heaven and close up the present dispensation; "For this generation shall not pass till all be fulfilled." Vs. 35. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Surely, my brethren, we have a sure word of prophecy, and how clear it shines upon our pathway, assuring us that before May 19th, 1850, the kingdom will come and the saints get home to glory.

Verse 36th. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels of heaven but my Father only." Mark adds "neither the Son." Now let us, divested of all prejudice, carefully inquire what this text teaches. It is certain the passage does not teach the day and hour will never be known, nor that we can never know anything about the matter: that would contradict His teachings in vs. 33d; besides, it would be saying the Lord Jesus can never know anything respecting it. A position I am sure no candid person will take. It is equally clear the passage does not teach us the day and hour will be known, and mark, whatever construction is put upon it applies equally to Christ and to angels as to man.—The question returns, what does it teach? I answer. The simple idea (as the passage is here rendered) that "of that day and hour knoweth (present tense) no man," &c. Surely there can be no obscurity in a passage so plain, only such as may arise from an undue desire to make it subserve a theory. Give up that desire and the darkness is gone. I am, however, satisfied the passage is not correctly rendered in our version; but should be "of that day and hour knoweth no man," &c., for which I have the authority of several critical scholars, among whom is Dr. Jarvis our opponent; who, in his article against Bro. Miller's views, thus renders it. This correction harmonizes it with all the scriptures on this point and removes all difficulties from my own mind. With this correction the text teaches us that no man, neither the angels, nor the Son, makes known the day and hour of his coming, but is the Father's sole prerogative. This accords with the Savior's teachings at his ascension, Acts 1:7. "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father has put in his own power. As though Jesus had said it constitutes no part of my official character as mediator, to make known the day and the hour, for the Father hath put them in his own power. Where? In Dan. 12:9, 10. From which we learn on examination that the time was sealed up unto the time of the end—about 1800. At which time the seal would be removed—knowledge be increased and the wise shall understand. This being the case how could Christ the Son (who always acted in unison with the Father) make known the day 1750 years before the time for which it was sealed up had expired. The vision is now unsealed and may be understood.—Let us seek the guidance of that Spirit, who will lead us into all truth.

Verses 37, 39. "But as the days of Noe were, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be," &c. What a dark picture of the close of this world's history. The same indifference, hardness of heart, blindness of mind, and unbelief that characterized the antediluvians, will be manifested by this generation at Christ's coming. They knew not until the day that Noah entered the ark and the floods came and took them all away. Why did they not know? Noah faithfully warned them. Ah, they would not believe, and perished. So at the coming of Christ the wicked will not know until the saints have entered the ark—gone up to meet Jesus on the sea of glass and the floods of God's wrath descend upon them. "For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Luke 21:35. Oh, sinner, reflect for a moment and prepare for the great burning day.

Verses 40, 41. "Then shall two be in the field: the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken and the other left." Here is the great separation of the righteous from the wicked, the final, eternal separation. The righteous taken to glory, the wicked left to be consumed as chaff by the fires of Jehovah's wrath. "For, behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

Verses 42—44, enforce the duties of watching, because we know not the hour. For if "thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee."—Rev. 3:3. But "know this." Know what? "that if the good man (i. e. the master, or, Camp, trane., householder) of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up." Will the Christian's house be broken up? Will the thief come upon him unawares? No! says Paul, 1 Thess 5:4. "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." His people will watch, and watching will understand and be ready. But the wicked will not watch, and lose the kingdom. Brethren, let us give heed to this admonition of the Savior and watch. "Therefore, be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." "What I say unto you," says Jesus, "I say unto all, watch." Watch the signs, guard every avenue of the soul, search to know what hour the thief will come, that your house may not be broken up. Do not lay down your watch a moment. Does not every thing tram, et-tongued proclaim Jesus near even at the door? How dare you then cease a moment to watch. "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Luke 21:36. God in mercy help you, dear reader, to watch: all depends upon it. I repeat it, watch! watch!

Verses 45—51. In these verses, the Savior institutes a comparison between two classes of servants. The servants personify the ministers of the gospel. One class is represented as giving the household (of faith) "meat in due season," and are termed the good servants. We learn what is the meat in due season, by observing the message of the evil servants, which is vs. 48th, "My Lord delayeth his coming." Can you conceive of any thing which should induce such a cry except another class should be saying the Lord is coming? Certainly not?—Well, Jesus calls that class the evil servants; they constitute the false teachers of these last days, who say my Lord delayeth his coming, and put far off that day; whether by preaching the temporal millennium, the return of the Jews to Palestine, or anything else of like character. "But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, (much more if he speaks it out) my Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall he be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Dear reader, let me ask you one question. While for a few years past a class have been proclaiming the Lord is coming, has there not been another class of ministers saying, my Lord delayeth his coming: and not satisfied with this, have they not smitten these their fellow servants, casting them out of their synagogues, denouncing them as heretics and fanatics, and then went to feasting in their churches and elsewhere with drunkards, infidels, and every other class of society except the poor? You know it is an indisputable fact. Can you not then perceive who are the false teachers, and what excuse will avail us at the Judgment if after this plain description of their character by the Savior, we suffer ourselves to be deceived by them? Take heed to yourselves that no man deceive you. And woe to that servant who ever thinks in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming, for Jesus says such he will cut asunder and appoint their portion with hypocrites. What encouragement have we, my brethren, to be faithful in giving the meat in due season, which is the Lord is coming. We know, inasmuch as the signs are all fulfilled, that he is at the door. Oh then lift up your voices like a trumpet, cry aloud and spare not, sound the alarm in all God's holy mountain, let its thunder tones go forth the Lord is coming! the Lord is coming, and quickly to judge the world in righteousness. And, poor sinner, you must perceive from this sure word of prophecy, your time is short. God help you to repent and prepare to meet your God, that with all the redeemed you may have a part in the first resurrection, and reign with Christ in the New Earth forever and ever—Amen.

The Cause in England.

LETTER FROM BRO. E. MICKLEWOOD.

Beloved Brethren:—The Lord is still with us here, and good is being done: the churches are being awakened, and many added to the faith of the Lord's personal coming, and the other prominent truths of the advent doctrine; and the unbelievers and scoffers are made manifest. Bro. R. Winter is in the south of England, laboring with good success. He baptized more than a hundred in three or four weeks. Brethren Dealtry and Burgess have been laboring in and about Plymouth, and a very great excitement has been made, and hundreds have been awakened and baptized. Bro. Burgess is still there, and Bro. Dealtry is here with me, intending to stay three or four weeks, after which we shall set out in a more extended sphere of action.

And now, dear brethren, permit us to plead with you for a little help in this great work.—There are but four laborers, that we know of, in Great Britain, holding fully, Second Advent views, and laboring earnestly therein, in humble dependence on divine aid. And what are these among so many? Notwithstanding the abuse of privilege with which England is chargeable, as you have many laborers in America, "come over and help us! come over and help us!" Come, for Christ's sake, and the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, according to his promise, shall protect, and feed, and bless you.

You will see, from the enclosed, something of the excitement which Br'n. Dealtry and Burgess have effected. The former, considering his trials, maintains his ground as a Christian. He improves in wisdom of the word of God, and in his address: and with a little more help, and a little more time to labor, we hope that England may yet be shaken, and Scotland also.

You will understand me in saying there are but four laborers on this subject, that we know of, in Great Britain. There are many more who look for the pre-millennial, personal advent; but the time is not realized, and the restoration of the Jews darkens the view.

Yours, dear brethren, in the hope of eternal life,
E. MICKLEWOOD.

OBITUARY.

Died, on the 13th March, Bro. Wilder B. Start. He had labored incessantly in preaching the Advent doctrine since the fall of 1842. It is supposed that the changes of weather and fatigue which he encountered in his journeyings, hastened his death. Bro. D. R. Mansfield, who gives the particulars, says:—"My dearly beloved companion in tribulation, and fellow-laborer in the gospel, is no more. About an hour before his death he prayed, and exhorted those around his bed to be faithful to the Lord, for they would soon be brought to judgment. He said he had finished his work, had kept the faith, and was ready to be offered. He continued exhorting and praying for the children of God until he fell asleep."

Bro. H. H. Gross, New York, March 16th, writes:

Bro. Marsh:—We had a solemn and interesting time yesterday; Bro. Jones buried his "dead [his wife] out of sight," but he sorrows in hope. Bro. Whiting preached on the funeral occasion, on the subject of the resurrection. He went beyond himself. Always powerful, he was much more so. He spoke "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," and the reward of the resurrection of the just, was vividly brought to our attention, and an immense audience were held in silence and suspense, and unconscious, wept, while their whole being was engaged, and enchained to a view of duty, truth, and the glorious hope.

Sister L. Carver, Boutetort Springs, Va., Mar. 30th, writes:

I have no news of importance to communicate to you, and have only to say as regards my own state of mind. I am happy to inform you that I feel firm in the faith that the Lord will soon appear on earth, and receive his people to himself. As I said to you in a former communication, I am as one alone in a waste, howling wilderness. I have desired very much, that some ministering brother would visit this region of country; to me it would, in truth, be most pleasing, indeed. I think much good might be done here by some of our brethren, and I still hope in the providence of God, it may be the lot of some one to visit us shortly, and in the mean time, I shall endeavor to do the will of the Lord, notwithstanding I feel the most unworthy of God's people, I endeavor to serve him with all the ability he has given me, that when he shall appear, I also may appear with him in glory. I ask the prayers of you and all the Lord's people, that I may abound in all godliness and holy conversation, giving praises and thanksgiving to him who hath redeemed us with his own precious blood. May the Lord bless you with all necessary good here, and eventually give you a crown of life,

Truth will make you free.

Bro. J. V. Himes, Buffalo April 9, writes,

Br. Marsh:—After leaving your residence on the 6th inst. Bro. Bywater and myself arrived at Leroy in season for evening service. We had a good attendance in the Round House, and a candid hearing on the subject of the Christian's hope. I trust good was done. After meeting we rode to Attica, 18 miles, in order to take the cars for Buffalo, the next morning at 5 o'clock, and arrived here in season for breakfast, much fatigued. But my health has been quite good, so that I have given three lectures in the Hall in this city to full congregations. I should think the cause was on the rise here. Bro. Porter has labored faithfully and successfully. I leave for Lockport this morning.

A UNION CAMP MEETING,

Will be held, the Lord willing, at Bangor, Franklin Co. N. Y., on the old ground near Fish's Tavern; commencing Tuesday 16th of June next, and continue a week or more. The design of this meeting is the benefit of all, of every name, sect and party; both saint and sinner. Those looking for the Lord, ministering brethren of all denominations, and private members, are respectfully invited to attend, and take part in the services of the meeting. Come, brethren and sisters, with tents and provision, and let us have a feast of tabernacles. Board at a reasonable expense, will be provided on or near the ground. Horse keeping near the ground free for ministers.

Bro. Marsh:—I send you the following beautiful stanzas taken from the "Hidden Life," by T. C. Upham, written by Madame Gayon, and translated into English by Cowper. The truth, which they so happily illustrate, to wit, entire and unconditional submission and faith, in the worst extremities, is peculiarly applicable to the exigencies of the present time. B. M.

THE TRIAL OF CHRISTIAN FAITH.

'Twas my purpose, on a day,
To embark and sail away;
As I climbed the vessel's side,
Love was sporting in the tide:
"Come," he said, "ascend—make haste, Launch into the boundless waste."

Many mariners were there,
Having each his separate care;
They that rowed us, held their eyes
Fixed upon the starry skies;
Others steer'd, or turned the sails
To receive the shifting gales.

Love, with power divine supplied,
Suddenly my courage tried;
In a moment it was night,
Ship and skies were out of sight;
On the briny wave I lay,
Floating rushes all my stay.

Did I with resentment burn
At this unexpected turn?
Did I wish myself on shore,
Never to forsake it more?
No—"my soul"—I cried, "be still;
If I must be lost, I will."

Next he hasten'd to convey
Both my frail support away;
Seized my rushes; bade the waves
Yawn into a thousand graves;
Down I went and sunk as lead,
Ocean closing o'er my head.

Still, however, life was safe;
And I saw him turn and laugh;
"Friend," cried he, "adieu! lie low,
While the wintry storms shall blow;
When the spring has calm'd the main,
You shall rise and float again."

Soon I saw him with dismay,
Spread his wings and soar away;
Now I mark his rapid flight;
Now he leaves my aching sight;
He is gone whom I adore;
'Tis in vain to seek him more.

How I trembled then, I fear'd,
When my Love had disappeared!
"Wilt thou leave me thus," I cried,
"Whelmed beneath the rolling tide?"
Vain attempt to reach his ear!
Love was gone, and would not hear.

"Ah! return and love me still;
See me subject to thy will;
Frown with wrath, or smile with grace,
Only let me see thy face!
Evil I have none to fear;
All is good, if thou art near."

Yet he leaves me—cruel fate!
Leaves me in my lost estate!
"Have I sinn'd? O, say wherein;
Tell me, and forgive my sin!
King, and Lord, whom I adore,
Shall I see thy face no more?"

Be not angry; I resign,
Henceforth, all my will to thine;
I consent that thou depart,
Though thine absence break my heart;
Go, then, and forever too,
All is right that thou wilt do."

This was just what love intended;
He was now no more offended;
Soon as I became a child,
Love return'd to me and smiled;
Never strife shall more betide,
'Twixt the Bridegroom and his bride.

For the Voice of Truth.

"The Wise Shall Understand."

Bro. Marsh:—The following lines were written in a leisure hour, by one who is a sincere lover of the truth, and who expects to be sanctified through a belief of the truth, and who anticipates on condition of keeping the truth, the joy of being numbered with the "righteous," and of entering in through the gates into the city. If you think them worthy of an insertion in your valuable paper, you are at liberty to publish them, if not, lay them aside.

Do the 2300 days of Dan. 8-14, symbolize an equal number of years? This question, all who believe in the speedy coming of Christ, will not hesitate to answer in the affirmative. But lest there should be some who are skeptical, and require more proof than a mere assertion, I will here, in a condensed form, present the evidence.

The events which were to transpire between the commencement and termination of those days, were given in symbols, and must be interpreted accordingly. Had they been literal days, (of 24 hours,) those events could not have been fulfilled, as it would have been a period of only about six or seven years. The vision was given in symbols; it was therefore necessary to symbolize the time, in order that the proportion and harmony of the vision might not be destroyed. These days have always been understood to be years, by all the standard Protestant commentators in the English and American churches. In chap. 8: 26, Daniel was told the vision was for many days.—Nineteen years after, (see chronology, Dan. 10: 14,) he was told that the vision was yet for many days. In chapter 11: 14, his heavenly Teacher, in foretelling events which were to occur many years after, spoke of the vision as then existing or continuing. The scriptural authority for using a day for a year, may be found in Num. 14: 34, and in Ezek. 4: 6. Thus we have the voice of the church, the authority of the scriptures, and our best reason for interpreting these days as years, and as such I shall call them. Reader, let that point be settled and fixed in the mind without doubting. Some tell us the number is not correct: it should be 2400 or 2200. This belief should not be indulged in for a moment, as it would give occasion to doubt the word of Jehovah, and convey the idea that he whose "name is holy," would deceive his people, and mock their expectations in suffering it to be thus translated. Impious thought! Be assured reader, whatever is to occur at its termination, will come to pass at the end of 2300 years.

Did the 2300 years commence with the going forth of the commandment, &c? If they do not, the location of their date is not found in the book of Daniel; and we are left entirely in the dark at what period during the past 6000 years, they commenced. It is therefore, an unmeaning, unintelligible passage. If they do not, Gabriel left undone the command, to make Daniel understand the entire vision; for he says he was astonished at the vision, and none understood it. Can any one read chap. 8: 16, 17 and 19 and allow this? If they do, the commencement and termination of the vision is sealed, or made sure by the cut-off (not cutting out,) of the 70 weeks. If they do, Gabriel performed the command recorded in chap. 8: 16, in his explanation of the 70 weeks in the 9th chapter. Evidences ten fold, might be produced here to support the argument that the 2300 years and 490 years, commence at one and the same time. No Adventist will require this evidence to be given here, for doubtless all are acquainted with it. It has been made plain a thousand times over.

Does the termination of the 2300 years bring us to the Judgment Day? If they do not, what events will mark their termination. If they do not, here too the harmony of the vision would be destroyed. The 490 years or lesser period, was cut off for the fulfillment of the most important events that ever transpired in the history of this world—the birth, life, crucifixion and resurrection of the Son of God. Will the larger period of 2300 years, lead to events of less importance? Be assured reader, that if the close of the 490 years were marked by events of no less importance than the first coming of Christ to redeem a lost world, the termination of the 2300 years will be marked by events of equal magnitude and sublimity: even the second coming of the Lord of glory.

The "sanctuary and host" is a dark phrase to many—it does not expressly say the Lord will come at the end of those days, therefore many doubt their leading to the advent. I think it has been often clearly shown, that the "sanctuary" has reference to the earth, and the "host," to God's people. The earth, or "kingdoms of this world, are our Lord's and his Christ's" by title and purchase. They will become his by actual possession, at the sounding of the seventh trumpet. We have no scripture to prove that the wicked will ever be "gathered" out of God's kingdom and "burned" until the "end of the world," and coming of Christ. Whatever power it is, therefore, which is to "tread under foot" the sanctuary, (earth) and host (God's people,) it is plain to every one who does not believe in a temporal millenium, that the same wicked power is to continue to do so until the "end of the world," "gathering out of the wicked," and sounding of the seventh trumpet: or unto 2300 years. It is a conceded point by Adventists, I think, that the little horn of Dan. 7th and 8th chapters, refer to one and the same power. If any one doubts this, let him but make a paralleled display of their names, persecutions, blasphemies, success, time of continuance and end, observing that one is to continue until the Ancient of Days comes, and the other unto 2300 days or years, and he will no longer doubt. Thus, the identity of the two will be clearly shown, and the time of their continuance. The 2300 years terminate with the coming of the Ancient of Days, and consequently, the resurrection and judgment. These three events are synchroal. Let him who thinks to separate them, look well to his authority before so doing. And if the coming of God, the establishment of his everlasting kingdom, and the judgment is not brought to view in the 9th-14th verses inclusive, of the 7th chapter of Daniel, I know of no language in the Bible which conveys an idea of those magnificent events. The language is awfully sublime, and fills the mind with awe and admiration!

ters, let us "watch and be sober," for who could bear the thought of not being numbered with the "saints of the Most High," when they "take the kingdom and possess it forever." As yet, how soundly sleeps the Nominal church on this thrilling and momentous question; aye, and she dreams too of millennial days of glory without her Lord. Deceived mortals! O let us not sleep as do others, but let us "watch and pray always," and be prophet like in searching what time the glory is to follow, and angel like, in desiring to look into these things.

Where is our beloved Bro. Miller? A word from him on the time, in these days of trial, would be encouraging. Does he not love time yet, well founded upon the word of God? The brethren in this vicinity, are rooted and grounded in the faith, but still there is much room for improvement with us all. I think the time will, upon a candid investigation, be generally embraced. We have excellent preaching from Br'n. Adrian, Dudley, and an occasional visit from Bro. Hutchinson. All three are faithful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. And now my brethren and sisters who are looking for Jesus, let us thoroughly arouse ourselves to our work—let us see to it that we have saving faith, and that we do all we can to persuade our fellow mortals to take heed to this third and last call to come to the supper.—Let us give one more loud, one united, one solemn cry, behold He cometh, until with immortal voices we shall be caught up to meet him in the air, and make the vaulted heavens ring with cries of Victory! Hosannah! "Blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord." "Lo this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us." Yours, in the blessed hope,

SOLENN APPEAL.

Bro. Marsh:—I have for several weeks felt so strong an impulse of duty to address my brethren and sisters, that I beg you to permit me to speak through your valuable paper, to all who are looking for the second coming of Jesus.

Though we have been disappointed several times in not seeing the Lord as we expected, yet by searching, we find the evidences so clear, that it seems absolutely certain that time cannot continue more than a year and a half at the longest, and the strong probability is that we shall see the Lord in about a year at the farthest. In view then of the kindness of God in giving us this light—in view of the tremendous scenes just before us—the fixedness of state of all terrestrial beings—in view of all our former consecrations to God, of our time, talents, property, and every thing—in view of the love of Jesus, in employing instrumentalities to pluck us as brands from the burning—in view of the worth of souls, that may, by our efforts, yet be saved, and swell the song of redeeming love, with us, through eternity; what vast responsibilities rest upon us—never was there a company of christians who occupied such vantage-ground—the prophets, the apostles, and martyrs, were destined to toil on, year after year, and year after year, through obloquy, contempt and shame, from this Satanic world, before they could be released; but we, in one short year, if faithful, will be where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are forever at rest—be crowned kings and priests to God. But if from such vantage-ground, by being recreant to our trust, we fall, how great must be that fall! how awful that doom! The question comes home with peculiar force, what am I doing, and what ought I to do in view of such considerations? We read, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come." "But how shall they call on him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?" We see then that there must be a reciprocity of operation in the work—some must go, others must aid by their prayers and alms. I must then, address three classes of individuals.

1st. Those whom God has called to preach the gospel.

2d, Those to whom God has entrusted property.

3d, Those who can only aid by their prayers.

1. Those whom God has called to preach the gospel. And you dear brethren, I must divide into two classes. 1. Those who are now traveling and laboring to save souls;—are you, dear brethren, as arduous in your labors, as earnest in your appeals to the unconverted where you preach, as agonizing at the throne of grace for Divine aid as you would be if you believed beyond a doubt, that in one short year the last great drama of earth would close—close with reward to the righteous, and destruction to the ungodly? Though we have done something, there may be need of being more abundant in our labors. Dear brethren, let us then awake to new engagedness. There is a glorious reward just ahead. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars, for ever and ever." 2d. Those who are traveling or preaching little or none. Dear brethren what shall I say? I know the feelings of some of you—you did run well for a time—God was with you—he blessed your own souls by the effusions of his Spirit, and your labors in the conversion of others. But the trial—the sifting-time came, and you began to shrink from duty, and so, yielding to the tempter, you entertained the idea that your work was done. But brethren, you believed that you received your commission to preach this everlasting gospel from the Great Head of the church. Has that commission been recalled? No, no! it runs thus: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations—and lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world." "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh, shall find so doing."

There has been no time in the history of this cause, when laborers were more needed than now. Souls may yet be saved, but it must be done through God's instrumentality—the foolishness of preaching. While you sleep, souls are not only perishing, but the enemy is sowing tares among the wheat. The Macedonian cry is wafted on almost every breeze—from the East, West, North and South—"Come over and help us," echoes from every mountain top and hill, and rolls along the plain. Hark! Heard you not that reverberation of voices of distress!—They were the mingled voices of the lost sinners, who begin to feel alarmed at the awful foreboding of the gathering storm—and he who having started in the straight and narrow way, turned off into a by-path, and is now bewildered in the forests of fanaticism—and she, who, having retired for safety within the walls of Babylon, finds that the whole city is tottering from its very foundations, and in the darkness of night, is seeking some one to guide her out. O brethren, hasten to the rescue! Lay not by your armor now—we soon shall come off conquerors, if we sound not a retreat—we soon shall reap a rich harvest if we faint not in the field. Do you shrink at the difficulties to encounter, and the hardships to endure? Remember that the King of kings and Lord of lords is your leader and your reward. We must continue to the end if we would be saved. We must go through evil as well as good report—must go forth without the camp bearing his reproach—must suffer with him, if we would reign with him. Dear Bro., let us look downwards to the hole in the pit from whence we were digged, and upward to our heavenly inheritance, and around us and see the perishing, and then, mustering all our energies, go forth in the name of the Lord of Hosts and pluck souls as brands from the burning. But some of you have families. You have been out several times and left your feeble companions and destitute little ones in the hands of God. The brethren were glad to see you, said they were profited and edified, and wanted you to come again. You went, God spoke through you and their souls were fed. In contrasting the plenty of these brethren with the destitution of your own home, as you went away with "be ye warmed and filled," you watered your homeward path with tears. Depressed and dejected you concluded to go no more, and have now settled down and think of little else but the support of your families. But, brethren, are you right? The Lord will soon take care of those covetous ones. And he may have permitted these things as a trial of your faith. He says, "trust in the Lord and do good and verily thou shalt be fed." Remember that the gold and silver and the cattle upon a thousand hills, belong to him who sent you out to preach this gospel of the kingdom. Remember the manna that fell for the murmuring, distrustful Israelites, but be not like them. Remember the barrel of meal that wasted not and the cruise of oil that failed not. Remember him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, him who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross and despised the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of God—of that God who watched those falling tears of yours. O stand no longer idle, but nerve yourselves once more for the work; soon he that is to come will come, and glorious will be the reward of the faithful then.

"Our troubles and our trials here,
Will only make us richer there,
When we arrive at home."

II. Those to whom God has entrusted property. And you, dear brethren, are you doing your duty? If so, why this vast destitution and cries for help? Some of you have hundreds, some thousands, and some tens of thousands of dollars at interest. But where in all the bible do you find any right to take the Lord's money and put it out for yourself? As soon as it came into your hands it was the Lord's money, and your inquiry should not have been where can I put this at interest secure, but, Lord where shall I spend it for thee and thy cause? Ho! you that are holding on upon your gold and silver and nothbare garments in these last moments of time. God's book of remembrance records the oft repeated consecrations you have made of all to him, especially that of the 10th day of the 7th month. Have you forgotten it? Or did you make it as the individual settled on his dying bed the feud he had had with his neighbour. You recollect as the witnesses were going out of his chamber, he cried "stop, remember, if I die, this affair is all settled, but if I live let it stand just as it did before." Did you on that solemn day, when you expected the Lord, say in your heart, "If the Lord comes let it be understood that I give up all to the Lord; if he does not come let me hold all as before." If not, then listen to me a moment, God has given overwhelming evidence that time cannot continue but about a year longer. In all the time we have for labor to save souls, those whom God has called to preach ought to be out continually. But instead of this, scores, if not hundreds, of those whom we think God has called to preach have retired from the field to labour with their hands to support their families, while souls are perishing all over New England, in the Middle, Western and Southern States; and hundreds of towns in the United States never heard a lecture. There are brethren whose hearts are burning to go; but how shall they go except they be sent? Access, too, might be had to many of the slaves at the south. And how their sable countenances would beam with delight and their hearts leap for joy at the good tidings of the kingdom—of Jesus coming. Then there is Texas. I was informed the other day by a Brother who visited there on business, that no lectures had been given in all the territory. In the West Indies, especially the British West Indies, free access might be had to all the colored population. And I know of an individual who has spent several years as a Missionary in the island of Jamaica, who longs to go to proclaim the glorious news of the coming Savior to the 400,000 population of that island. And I am satisfied, that with the great body of the colored population the intelligence would be more joyfully received than was the mandate which the broad-winged packet carried across the ocean from England's king, that slavery shall exist no more. Then there is England, Scotland, Ireland; and some of our brethren long to go there, but how can they go except they be sent? And we have those among us who understand the language and might go to France, Germany, Holland, &c. How the field widens, and how short the time to occupy it. Must all these souls perish in ignorance because covetousness so grasps the Lord's treasure? Dear brethren, let go! that dea'ly grasp, or I greatly fear you will be arraigned before the dread tribunal of God as thieves and robbers in a few short months. Then there is brother Lenfest, who has been waiting a long time for means to labor among his brother seamen, and who is eminently qualified for much good among them. Then if the conductors of our Advent papers had more means, how many of those swift-winged messengers might speed their way to the poor of the flock. How that poor old sister, in that miserable hut, would rejoice to receive from week to week, "The Glad Tidings of the Kingdom." Brother, stand with me by that cabin door as she receives her paper, see the tears of joy trickle down her furrowed cheeks: and as she kneels, hear her fervent thanksgiving to God that he opened your heart to pay for her paper. See that weak brother, too, surrounded by the mocking, scoffing world—see how he gathers strength, what boldness he assumes, how he lifts up his head with rejoicing. But why this great change? Ah! he has been feeding on manna. The paper you sent him, instrumentally, has carried him meat in due season from the great storehouse. O for the spirit that pervaded the hearts of the Israelites when the ark and the tabernacle were in building. See Ex. 36: 5.

Dear brethren, you remember Jesus said, "ye cannot serve God and Mammon." And "where your treasure is there will your heart be also." If you still continue to hold on to your treasure until the Lord comes, how can you be acquitted? Will it not show that you loved this present evil world, after all your professions to the contrary, better than you loved Jesus? Think of the young man who thought he was willing to do any thing to inherit eternal life, but went away sorrowful when Jesus told him to sell all he had to give to the poor. Think of the many consecrations of your all to God, and then turn your eyes and look upon the hundreds and thousands you still hold as your own. Think of the shortness of time, of the vast field for labor, and that you, by imparting of your substance to aid those whom God has called to preach, to go every where, may rejoice in being instrumental, through them, of turning many to righteousness—rejoice forever and ever. Think of him who was rich, yet for our sakes became poor that we through his poverty might become rich. If Christ had loved us with the same degree of love with which we love him and his cause, the angels would not have greeted the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem with "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace and good will to men." No song of redeeming love would have ever been heard around the throne of God. The earth would have rolled back to chaos, and man would have been reserved in chains under darkness until the judgment of the great day. But I hope these words from your unworthy brother, or some voice from God, will arouse you to this great work. We want, we need no organized Missionary Society, but let every one of you do your duty and the work will go on. Souls will be saved, God be honored, and you receive a rich reward at the resurrection of the just.

But some will say, "perhaps I shall aid an unworthy brother." Well, God has fixed his word just right to meet your fears. Jesus says, "if you give a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple you shall not lose your reward." So you will have the same reward if, after all your caution, you are sometimes mistaken.

There is treasure enough among the brethren and sisters to send this "gospel of the kingdom" thro' the Christian world in the few short months which we may have to labor; and O! that God would open their hearts to do it.

Letter from Bro. I. R. Gates.

I trust I am still in the narrow way, pressing towards the mark for the prize. I have passed through many afflictions and trials since I started in the cause of God, but none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I may finish my course with joy.

I am still contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and looking "for that city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

I have just arose from reading the obituary notice of Sister Jones in the Herald. With that dear family, I have enjoyed an agreeable and happy acquaintance, having spent several weeks at the commencement of my labor in Boston, with Elder Himes and Jones' families, and I need not say that my attachment to them was, and still is, great.

Sister Jones was truly a patient christian, and well worthy of the tribute that her afflicted husband has paid to her departed worth. She was too good for earth, and I pray God to keep my brother and his little ones from being "swallowed up of overmuch sorrow." O what a world of sorrow and distress we live in. And what cause we have to chime in with "groaning" creation for a deliverance. I see Bro. Marsh, that you and sister M. have also drank deep of the cup of sorrow. Truly, death is unmerciful and impartial in selecting its victims. Well, death may revel and glut itself, and sport with man's wo a few days longer, yet its death knell will soon be tolled, and its requiem sung by the redeemed hosts of the Lord.

Death has been on the track of the human family for 6000 years, and it has been successful in this phase. How many hearts have experienced or witnessed its desolating ravages, while it has made the eyes of millions to run down with tears of scalding sorrow. But, thank God, its dark and dismal wave will soon be staid, and man will be brought back to his pristine glory, in the antitypical Eden of God.

I am now confined at home with a sick family, and cannot travel as I once did. But, Bro. Marsh, I have not lost my interest in the blessed cause. No, no! I have seasons of praying for those of my brethren that are in the field, that they faint not. I look back to the 2 or 3 past years of my life with delight, and I thank God for what he enabled me to do in the cause. And now, I would say to all those where I have been preaching the kingdom of God, that in all probability you will see my face no more on earth, but I hope soon, and expect to meet all the good in God's everlasting kingdom for which we suffer, Amen.

I. R. GATES.

P. S. I ask an interest in the prayers of all my brethren and sisters, that I may be counted worthy to join them in the glorious reign of the endless kingdom of God.

I. R. G.

Letter from Bro. E. Miller.

Bro. Marsh:—I have, a few days since, returned from a tour of nearly two months, through Lorain, Huron, and Erie counties, of this State. It has been a season of much interest and profit to my own soul. At Bloomingville, we protracted a meeting nearly two weeks. Bro. Lorin appointed the meeting, and was with us, laboring for the Lord. It was a season of rich profit to the brethren—two backsliders confessed their wanderings, and professed to again rejoice in the Lord. At Bronson we had a two days meeting, (March 21st and 22d,) the influence of which we hope will be felt for good upon the hearts and lives of the brethren and sisters who enjoyed it, till our Lord comes. I was with the friends at Norwalk a week or more, and visited several other places, having one or two meetings in a neighborhood. I found with many, quite too much lukewarmness, with some, the fanciful belief that the Lord has come; but, notwithstanding, I found some faithfully laboring for the Lord, and confidently waiting his return: and in most places, something of a waking up—an effort to shake off lukewarmness. One young man in Bronson, professed conversion to God. The brethren are having many things to try them at this time, but 'the Lord knoweth them that are his,' and will deliver them. The delusive views advocated by the 'Day Star,' cause God's children to mourn.

At Norwalk and Oberlin, their influence is far greater than in any other place that I visited. We hope their spread is nearly done.

I would, however, express a fear and a word of caution. I fear lest in our zeal for the truth, we shall by an improper course in its defence, strengthen error. There are honest minds who know not whether to receive or reject these views; their sympathies are with those who advocate them, because they have heretofore esteemed many of them devoted children of God—'rich in good works,' hence any unkind treatment of them, or any want of a calm spirit or kind feeling toward them, will incline these halting ones to decide they are the children of God. Again: they are our brethren, many of them have, honestly, through fear of rejecting truth, step by step, got far from the truth; if we can do any thing for their good, it is through kind treatment, patient endurance of their wrongs, and fervent prayer for them. Do not too soon give them over; a pointed text of scripture occasionally, if suggested in a right spirit, may do much good. While then, we meet those advocating these errors with plain, decided rebuke—giving no countenance to them, let us be careful to do it with the kind, meek spirit of Jesus Christ, heeding the admonition of 1 Cor. 10: 12; "let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. Let us be careful that while some go astray by following their own fancies, thinking they are led by the spirit of God, we do not take the other side and sink as far into formalism, as they have into fanaticism. We have all drank deep of the Laodicean spirit, and God is rebuking and chastening us sorely, may we 'be zealous therefore and repent,' that is, turn again to the doing of the work that God has appointed us to do, enduring these trials, and soon we shall rest.

and consequently, the resurrection and judgment. These three events are synchronal. Let him who thinks to separate them, look well to his authority before so doing. And if the coming of God, the establishment of his everlasting kingdom, and the judgment is not brought to view in the 9th-14th verses inclusive, of the 7th chapter of Daniel, I know of no language in the Bible which conveys an idea of those magnificent events. The language is awfully sublime, and fills the mind with awe and admiration!

Do the 2300 years expire about this time? The answer to this will be found in the demonstration of the question; did they commence at the going forth of the commandment mentioned in Dan. 7: 25? 3d. Those who can only aid by their prayers.

1. Those whom God has called to preach the gospel. And you dear brethren, I must divide into two classes. 1. Those who are now traveling and laboring to save souls;—are you, dear brethren, as arduous in your labors, as earnest in your appeals to the unconverted where you preach, as agonizing at the throne of grace for Divine aid as you would be if you believed beyond a doubt, that in one short year the last great drama of earth would close—close with reward to the righteous, and destruction to the ungodly? Though we have done something, there may be need of being more abundant in our labors. Dear brethren, let us then awake to new engagement. There is a glorious reward just ahead. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars, for ever and ever." 2d. Those who are traveling or preaching little or none. Dear brethren what shall I say? I know the feelings of some of you—you did run well for a time—God was with you—he blessed your own souls by the effusions of his Spirit, and your labors in the conversion of others. But the trial—the sifting-time came, and you began to shrink from duty, and so, yielding to the tempter, you entertained the idea that your work was done. But brethren, you believed that you received your commission to preach this everlasting gospel from the Great Head of the church. Has that commission been recalled? No, no! it runs thus: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations—and lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world." "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh, shall find so doing."

There has been no time in the history of this cause, when laborers were more needed than now. Souls may yet be saved, but it must be done through God's instrumentality—the foolishness of preaching. While you sleep, souls are not only perishing, but the enemy is sowing tares among the wheat. The Macedonian cry is wafted on almost every breeze—from the East, West, North and South—"Come over and help us," echoes from every mountain top and hill, and rolls along the plain. Hark! Heard you not that reverberation of voices of distress?—They were the mingled voices of the lost sinners, who begin to feel alarmed at the awful foreboding of the gathering storm—and he who having started in the straight and narrow way, turned off into a by-path, and is now bewildered in the forests of fanaticism—and she, who, having retired for safety within the walls of Babylon, finds that the whole city is tottering from its very foundations, and in the darkness of night, is seeking some one to guide her out. O brethren, hasten to the rescue! Lay not by your armor now—we soon shall come off conquerors, if we sound not a retreat—we soon shall reap a rich harvest if we faint not in the field. Do you shrink at the difficulties to encounter, and the hardships to endure? Remember that the King of kings and Lord of lords is your leader and your reward. We must continue to the end if we would be saved. We must go through evil as well as good report—must go forth without the camp bearing his reproach—must suffer with him, if we would reign with him. Dear Bro., let us look downwards to the hole in the pit from whence we were digged, and upward to our heavenly inheritance, and around us and see the perishing, and then, mustering all our energies, go forth in the name of the Lord of Hosts and pluck souls as brands from the burning. But some of you have families. You have been out several times and left your feeble companions and destitute little ones in the hands of God. The brethren were glad to see you, said they were profited and edified, and wanted you to come again. You went, God spoke through you and their souls were fed. In contrasting the plenty of these brethren with the destitution of your own home, as you went away with "be ye warmed and filled," you watered your homeward path with tears. Depressed and dejected you concluded to go no more, and have now settled down and think of little else but the support of your families. But, brethren, are you right? The Lord will soon take care of these covetous ones. And he may have permitted these things as a trial of your faith. He says, "trust in the Lord and do good and verily thou shalt be fed." Remember that the gold and silver and the cattle upon a thousand hills, belong to him who sent you out to preach this gospel of the kingdom. Remember the manna that fell for the murmuring, distrustful Israelites, but be not like them. Remember the barrel of meal that wasted not and the cruise of oil that failed not. Remember him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, him who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross and despised the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of God—of that God who watched those falling tears of yours. O stand no longer idle, but nerve yourselves once more for the work; soon he that is to come will come, and glorious will be the reward of the faithful then.

Will only make us richer there,
When we arrive at home.”

II. Those to whom God has entrusted property. And you, dear brethren, are you doing your duty? If so, why this vast destitution and cries for help? Some of you have hundreds, some thousands, and some tens of thousands of dollars at interest. But where in all the bible do you find any right to take the Lord's money and put it out for yourself? As soon as it came into your hands it was the Lord's money, and your inquiry should not have been where can I put this at interest secure, but, Lord where shall I spend it for thee and thy cause? Ho! you that are holding on upon your gold and silver and mothbare garments in these last moments of time. God's book of remembrance records the oft repeated consecrations you have made of all to him, especially that of the 10th day of the 7th month. Have you forgotten it? Or did you make it as the individual settled on his dying bed the feud he had had with his neighbour. You recollect as the witnesses were going out of his chamber, he cried “stop, remember, if I die, this affair is all settled, but if I live let it stand just as it did before.” Did you on that solemn day, when you expected the Lord, say in your heart, “If the Lord comes let it be understood that I give up all to the Lord; if he does not come let me hold all as before.” If not, then listen to me a moment, God has given overwhelming evidence that time cannot continue but about a year longer. In all the time we have for labor to save souls, those whom God has called to preach ought to be out continually. But instead of this, scores, if not hundreds, of those whom we think God has called to preach have retired from the field to labour with their hands to support their families, while souls are perishing all over New England, in the Middle, Western and Southern States; and hundreds of towns in the United States never heard a lecture. There are brethren whose hearts are burning to go; but how shall they go except they be sent? Access, too, might be had to many of the slaves at the south. And how their sable countenances would beam with delight and their hearts leap for joy at the good tidings of the kingdom—of Jesus coming. Then there is Texas. I was informed the other day by a Brother who visited there on business, that no lectures had been given in all the territory. In the West Indies, especially the British West Indies, free access might be had to all the colored population. And I know of an individual who has spent several years as a Missionary in the island of Jamaica, who longs to go to proclaim the glorious news of the coming Savior to the 400,000 population of that island. And I am satisfied, that with the great body of the colored population the intelligence would be more joyfully received than was the inandate which the broad-winged packet carried across the ocean from England's king, that slavery shall exist no more. Then there is England, Scotland, Ireland; and some of our brethren long to go there, but how can they go except they be sent? And we have those among us who understand the language and might go to France, Germany, Holland, &c. How the field widens, and how short the time to occupy it. Must all these souls perish in ignorance because covetousness so grasps the Lord's treasure? Dear brethren, let go! let go! that deadly grasp, or I greatly fear you will be arraigned before the dread tribunal of God as thieves and robbers in a few short months. Then there is brother Lenfest, who has been waiting a long time for means to labor among his brother seamen, and who is eminently qualified for much good among them. Then if the conductors of our Advent papers had more means, how many of those swift-winged messengers might speed their way to the poor of the flock. How that poor old sister, in that miserable hut, would rejoice to receive from week to week, “The Glad Tidings of the Kingdom.” Brother, stand with me by that cabin door as she receives her paper, see the tears of joy trickle down her furrowed cheeks: and as she kneels, hear her fervent thanksgiving to God that he opened your

Dear brethren, you remember Jesus said, “ye cannot serve God and Mammon.” And “where your treasure is there will your heart be also.” If you still continue to hold on to your treasure until the Lord comes, how can you be acquitted? Will it not show that you loved this present evil world, after all your professions to the contrary, better than you loved Jesus? Think of the young man who thought he was willing to do any thing to inherit eternal life, but went away sorrowful when Jesus told him to sell all he had to give to the poor. Think of the many consecrations of your all to God, and then turn your eyes and look upon the hundreds and thousands you still hold as your own. Think of the shortness of time, of the vast field for labor, and that you, by imparting of your substance to aid those whom God has called to preach, to go every where, may rejoice in being instrumental, through them, of turning many to righteousness—rejoice forever and ever. Think of him who was rich, yet for our sakes became poor that we through his poverty might become rich. If Christ had loved us with the same degree of love with which we love him and his cause, the angels would not have greeted the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem with “Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace and good will to men.” No song of redeeming love would have ever been heard around the throne of God. The earth would have rolled back to chaos, and man would have been reserved in chains under darkness until the judgment of the great day. But I hope these words from your unworthy brother, or some voice from God, will arouse you to this great work. We want, we need no organized Missionary Society, but let every one of you do your duty and the work will go on. Souls will be saved, God be honored, and you receive a rich reward at the resurrection of the just.

But some will say, “perhaps I shall aid an unworthy brother.” Well, God has fixed his word just right to meet your fears. Jesus says, “if you give a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple you shall not lose your reward.” So you will have the same reward if, after all your caution, you are sometimes mistaken.

There is treasure enough among the brethren and sisters to send this “gospel of the kingdom” thro' the Christian world in the few short months which we may have to labor; and O! that God would open their hearts to do it.

Letter from Bro. I. R. Gates.

I trust I am still in the narrow way, pressing towards the mark for the prize. I have passed through many afflictions and trials since I started in the cause of God, but none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I may finish my course with joy.

I am still contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and looking “for that city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.”

I have just awoke from reading the obituary notice of Sister Jones in the Herald. With that dear family, I have enjoyed an agreeable and happy acquaintance, having spent several weeks at the commencement of my labor in Boston, with Elder Himes and Jones families, and I need not say that my attachment to them was, and still is, great.

Sister Jones was truly a patient christian, and well worthy of the tribute that her afflicted husband has paid to her departed worth. She was too good for earth, and I pray God to keep my brother and his little ones from being “swallowed up of overmuch sorrow.” O what a world of sorrow and distress we live in. And what cause we have to chime in with “groaning” creation for a deliverance. I see Bro. Marsh, that you and sister M. have also drank deep of the cup of sorrow. Truly, death is unmerciful and impartial in selecting its victims. Well, death may revel and glut itself, and sport with man's wo a few days longer, yet its death knell will soon be tolled, and its requiem sung by the redeemed hosts of the Lord.

Death has been on the track of the human family for 6000 years, and it has been successful in the chase. How many hearts have experienced or witnessed its desolating ravages, while it has made the eyes of millions to run down with tears of scalding sorrow. But, thank God, its dark and dismal wave will soon be staid, and man will be brought back to his pristine glory, in the antitipical Eden of God.

I am now confined at home with a sick family, and cannot travel as I once did. But, Bro. Marsh, I have not lost my interest in the blessed cause. No, no! I have seasons of praying for those of my brethren that are in the field, that they faint not. I look back to the 2 or 3 past years of my life with delight, and I thank God for what he enabled me to do in the cause. And now, I would say to all those where I have been preaching the kingdom of God, that in all probability you will see my face no more on earth, but I hope soon, and expect to meet all the good in God's everlasting kingdom for which we suffer, Amen.

I. R. GATES.

P. S. I ask an interest in the prayers of all my brethren and sisters, that I may be counted worthy to join them in the glorious reign of the endless kingdom of God.

Letter from Bro. E. Miller.

Bro. Marsh:—I have, a few days since, returned from a tour of nearly two months, through Lorain, Huron, and Erie counties, of this State. It has been a season of much interest and profit to my own soul. At Bloomingville, we protracted a meeting nearly two weeks. Bro. Lorin appointed the meeting, and was with us, laboring for the Lord. It was a season of rich profit to the brethren—two backsliders confessed their wanderings, and professed to again rejoice in the Lord. At Bronson we had a two days meeting, (March 21st and 22d,) the influence of which we hope will be felt for good upon the hearts and lives of the brethren and sisters who enjoyed it, till our Lord comes. I was with the friends at Norwalk a week or more, and visited several other places, having one or two meetings in a neighborhood. I found with many, quite too much lukewarmness, with some, the fanciful belief that the Lord has come; but, notwithstanding, I found some faithfully laboring for the Lord, and confidently waiting his return: and in most places, something of a waking up—an effort to shake off lukewarmness. One young man in Bronson, professed conversion to God. The brethren are having many things to try them at this time, but ‘the Lord knoweth them that are his,’ and will deliver them. The delusive views advocated by the ‘Day Star,’ cause God's children to mourn.

I would, however, express a fear and a word of caution. I fear lest in our zeal for the truth, we shall by an improper course in its defence, strengthen error. There are honest minds who know not whether to receive or reject these views; their sympathies are with those who advocate them, because they have heretofore esteemed many of them devoted children of God—‘rich in good works,’ hence any unkind treatment of them, or any want of a calm spirit or kind feeling toward them, will incline these halting ones to decide they are the children of God. Again: they are our brethren, many of them have, honestly, through fear of rejecting truth, step by step, got far from the truth; if we can do any thing for their good, it is through kind treatment, patient endurance of their wrongs, and fervent prayer for them. Do not too soon give them over; a pointed text of scripture occasionally, if suggested in a right spirit, may do much good. While then, we meet those advocating these errors with plain, decided rebuke—giving no countenance to them, let us be careful to do it with the kind, meek spirit of Jesus Christ, heeding the admonition of 1 Cor. 10: 12; “let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. Let us be careful that while some go astray by following their own fancies, thinking they are led by the spirit of God, we do not take the other side and sink as far into formalism, as they have into fanaticism. We have all drank deep of the Laodicean spirit, and God is rebuking and chastening us sorely, may we ‘be zealous therefore and repent,’ that is, turn again to the doing of the work that God has appointed us to do, enduring these trials, and soon we shall rest.

To the ministering brethren, especially those who are at their homes, saying 'we can have no more access to the world,' 'I know not what I can do,' &c., I wish to say there is a large field in southern New York; in Steuben, Chemung, Tompkins, and Tioga counties, where there is much to be done.—There are brethren scattered over that section, whose hearts would rejoice to have you visit them. The Lord employed me there for a time, but it appears not to be his will that I should return there. I trust he has some more efficient laborer to send that way. Brethren, who will go? It appears to be the will of the Lord that I should travel west, and perhaps south. What we do must be done quickly; let us have on the whole armor: there is no time to be idle now; the 'little while' must be nearly ended.

Yours, in hope of eternal life,

ROCHESTER, APRIL 29, 1846.

Our first Article

From Bro. Taylor, we commend to the careful examination of our readers. Will Bro. Taylor write often for our sheet?

Bro. H. H. Cross.

This brother is still confident that the prophetic periods will end in the Spring, and is quite certain that the Spring of A. D. 1847, will be the time in which they will close. He has sent us an article on this subject, repeating what we have given not long since from his pen, and showed at the time, as we thought, his mistake, in certain points of his theory. We think, to revive this question again, will be of no special service to our readers. If Bro. G. is correct, our brethren will, after the close of this year, be better prepared to appreciate his arguments, than now.

Bro. Pickands.

We have just received a lengthy communication from this mistaken brother, in which he acknowledges, and renounces all of his sad departures from the word of the Lord. He deeply regrets the delusion into which he had fallen, and from which, he now thanks God, he has escaped. We may give the letter, or parts of it, in our next. The Lord aid our brother in healing, as far as possible, the wound his mistaken course has inflicted in the precious cause of Christ, and save him from a departure from the truth again.

Progress of Delusion.

SECOND ADVENT PEOPLE.—We understand that many of the Second Advent People in this city have become utterly fanatical. They believe that the Lord has come—that there ought to be no longer any marrying or giving in marriage—that the elect should have none but spiritual wives, &c. Several respectable women have left their husbands, led away by these lying notions, and the peace of quiet, loving families has been broken up.—Watchman of the Valley.

The above is only a specimen of the accounts which reach us almost every week respecting this class of people. We understand that more than one attempt has been made at Akron to apply civil law for the correction of the monstrous evils growing out of this system of delusion.—In one instance the crime was what the people of the world would call adultery, but what is dignified in their dialect with the name of taking a "spiritual wife." The sanction of Scripture is claimed for this, and for leaving their own children motherless—for abandoning husbands, home, and every domestic vocation, and for entering into, so called, spiritual wedlock with other people's wives or husbands. Such are the privileges, as they are understood to claim, of a new and gloriously improved dispensation.

We know of some who maintain that themselves have entered upon the immortal state already; that they shall never die, or even be sick; and that they have the power of miraculously healing their sick friends by the prayer of faith, so that none need die for whom they choose to pray, and who will only believe.

We will not enter into all the details of their sad, pitiful folly, not to say immodesty and crime, which respectable Editors bring before our eye. We have sought to maintain our confidence and charity towards all these people as being in the main honest and sincere, and in life virtuous, despite of the counter evidence of many most suspicious practices; but some things are said which stagger our confidence on this point, and distress our hearts exceedingly. For example, in a recent case before the court in Akron, involving the charge of adulterous connection, some of the Second Advent leaders refused to testify. It is painful to think that for such a refusal, there must have been a reason of no favorable character;

The whole course of this delusion cannot be otherwise than bitterly afflictive to all those who love the purity of Zion and the honor of the Savior's name. Many of these people were once devoted, praying men and women in our churches. Where are they now? Alas, how perilous are the first steps in the pathway of delusion! For ourselves, we foresaw enough four years ago to make us fear, forebode, and withstand to the utmost of our power.—Consequently no developments of fanatical folly have surprised us. But God grant it may soon run its course out, and leave its lessons of wisdom engraven so deeply on the public mind that another demonstration of like sort may not be needed during the present generation.—Oberlin Evangelist.

Taking all the circumstances into account, this note from the Oberlin Evangelist is very unjust, and extremely aggravating in its character. It is not long since that the Oberlin School were justly charged with corruptions of the blackest dye, in the very heart of that institution. The present editor of the Evangelist, if we mistake not, was the man who then justly plead with an indignant public, not to criminate the whole body, nor charge the principles of its faith with leading to licentious practices, because one or more of its members had been found guilty of such sins. But now, when similar evils, which, in deception and corruption, can hardly be compared with those at Oberlin, appear among us, this same man has no excuse to offer in our favor, but sees sufficient cause to stamp the whole body with dishonesty and corruption, and to charge our faith with leading to such fruits, and all because a few misguided individuals who have gone out from us, and with whom we have no fellowship, have been found guilty of the things of which he complains.

Does the editor of the Evangelist, in this case, act upon the principle of doing to others as he would that they should do unto him? we think not. And will he, after knowing the facts in the case if he does not now know them, act upon that principle? He should and will, if he does not design to bear false witness against his neighbor.

We will give him the facts in the case. The cases of fanaticism and corruption to which the Evangelist alludes, we as a people have seen, deplored, and again and again discountenanced, rebuked, and from the pulpit, through the press, and in every proper way, declared our disfellowship for the misguided individuals who are guilty of such things. Also, those persons are not now identified with us, either by themselves or the great body: they have gone out from us and followed their own pernicious ways. Moreover, their numbers are few, compared with the number of the whole body. And we rejoice to learn that a number of this few misguided ones, have seen, and humbly confessed their errors, and have returned again to the fold of Christ, and are now walking in the truth; and we think we have just grounds for believing that others will soon follow in the same path to their Father's house. The principles of our precious faith and hope, instead of leading to licentiousness, as the editor of the Evangelist wrongly supposes, has a direct opposite tendency; for "he that hath this hope, purifyeth himself, even as he is pure."

Will the editor of the Evangelist set this matter in its true light before his readers? We are willing and anxious that they should know the whole truth of the case, and we can but indulge the hope that he desires the same. The manner in which the Evangelist shall treat this note, will tell whether we mis-judged or not, relative to the principles by which its editor means to be actuated.

The General Resurrection,

It may be, some will still question. As an important branch of our subject, we will then proceed to examine more fully, its foundation in the word of God. It would seem that proof sufficient had been adduced in the passages quoted in the preceding article, from John 5: 21-29, as the first resurrection, and the general resurrection from the graves, are there brought to view, according to the Savior's own definition of each. The one is passing from death unto life, denoting moral change: the other is, all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good to enjoy life, they that have done evil, to suffer punishment. But as this passage has been wrested to serve another theory, (the time having not come for it to be understood,) it may be well to give the subject a thorough investigation.

What then does the word of God further teach respecting the resurrection from the graves? Is it at the coming of Christ? is it general and final? Paul says, "the Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom." "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." This shows us precisely who are the quick and who the dead.—Spiritual life can be had only through Christ.—According to this, some of the quick are in the grave, and some of the dead not in the grave.—Do not these two classes comprehend the human race? How can he judge them if they are not all raised out of their graves at his coming?

The following is still more explicit. Matt. 25: 31-46. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." Shall we deny the Lord and affirm that all nations, all the wicked in the graves are not gathered before him? Nay verily, for he hath said, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be;" and "we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." This is all-sufficient, yet we proceed in adding proof to proof, showing the overwhelming evidence that bears upon this point.

THE PARABLE OF THE TARES

teaches a final work of executing judgment at the coming of the Lord, which would be impossible were there not a general resurrection at that time.

Explanation of the Parable. Matt. 13: 37-43. "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man. The field is the world: the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sowed them is the devil—the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire: so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; ["the lake of fire is the second death. The day cometh that shall burn as an oven, when the proud, yea, all that do wickedly shall be as stubble."] there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father; who hath ears to hear, let him hear." Let those that can, note the work to be done at Christ's coming. "And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away. [Rev. 6: 14-17,] and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell [or the grave,] delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man according to his works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 11-15.

Then comes a description of the kingdom, the new heavens and the new earth, in which the righteous shine as the sun; showing this passage parallel with the above quoted.

which symbolizes the kingdoms of this world, is represented as destroyed at once.

Dan. 2: 31. "This great image whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee, and the form thereof was terrible." 34, 35. "Thou sawest till that, a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Without a general resurrection when the Lord comes, how could the work of executing judgment on the several parts of the image, be accomplished at once? It could not be, hence we see the force of our Lord's declaration. "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27.

Again: at that time, when Michael shall stand up in the time of trouble, when the people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book, some shall awake to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. Both classes are represented as rising at one time. "At the time appointed the end shall be," and the angel in showing Daniel what shall be in the last end of the indignation in Dan. 12: 1-3, gives the standing up of Michael or coming of the Lord, the resurrection and the reward of the righteous and the wicked.

"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." This could not be, unless all that are in their graves hear his voice and come forth. In view of these overwhelming proofs of a general resurrection at the appearing of our Lord, will any one still contend that "the last end of the indignation" is not the utter end—that there is a resurrection of damnation beyond?

Let such an one read Nahum. 1: 5-10. "The mountains quake at him, [when the great day of his wrath is come. See Rev. 6: 14-17,] and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his presence, (Psa. 68: 1-3,) yea, the world and all that dwell therein. Who can stand before his indignation, (Mal. 3: 2,) and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? His fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him. The Lord is good—a strong hold in the day of trouble [of which this is plainly a description,] and he knoweth them that trust in him. But with an overflowing flood, he will make an utter end of the place thereof, and darkness shall pursue his enemies. What do ye imagine against the Lord? He will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time! For while they be folded together as thorns, (Matt. 13: 40-42,) and while they are drunken as drunkards, (Camp.

trans., Isa. 29: 9-14,) they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry." As we read in another prophet, "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. 4: 1.

Contradictory to all this, is the teaching of the two literal resurrections from the grave, separated by a thousand years. That theory "imagines against the Lord," by proclaiming that he will not make an "utter end,"—saying that "affliction" will "arise the second time." It denies that "he will finish the work [margin account,] and cut it short in righteousness, because a short work [account,] will the Lord make upon the earth." Let us then consign this false theory to its native darkness, and open our hearts to the bright sun light of truth, for we have abundant positive proof that the resurrection when Christ comes is general, and the work of executing judgment, is short.

But, says the objector, what is the proof that "the last end of the indignation" does not cover the space of the thousand years-day mentioned by Pet. 2 epistle 3d chap? We reply, this indignation is called the time of trouble, the day of trouble, day of vengeance, day of wrath, in prophecy, consequently it must be measured by the prophetic rule, viz: "a day for a year," and we have one literal year for its duration. Besides, this "day" is included in the space of time called "as it were, a little moment." Isa. 26: 19-21. "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust:—the earth shall cast out her dead. Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers—hide thyself as it were a little moment, until the indignation be overpast: for behold the Lord cometh out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth." Yet this day of vengeance is evidently the commencement of the great jubilee or Sabbath year—as he finished the work of creation on the seventh day, and rested, so will he finish the work, the gathering out of his kingdom all things that offend, and share the "rest that remaineth for the people of God," in the thousand years-day, its antitype. How strikingly Peter's illustration of the day of the Lord, harmonizes with this view,—opening with the day of trouble—the destruction—after which is the restoration, or the new heavens and the new earth. He states that this day comes as a thief—so Paul affirms, and designates the class whom it shall thus overtake; for when they [those in the darkness who have not the light of life,] shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh. 1 Thess. 5: 3, 4. "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power: when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day. 2 Thess. 1: 7-10.

But is farther proof needed respecting the length of the day of trouble? It is written, "Within a year, according to the years of an hireling, and all the glory of Kedar shall fail." Isa. 21: 16. Moreover, the old world "being overflowed with water, perished; the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store reserved unto fire." By the same [literal] word: are we not to infer from this explicit passage that the fire will prevail upon the earth for the same length of time that the waters held sway? This time was one year. Noah was obliged to remain in the ark a little more than one year, because of the waters. See Gen. 7: 11, and 8: 13. The day that shall burn as an oven—the last end of the indignation then, occupies one literal year.

We have dwelt thus expressly on the last end of the indignation, (and its duration,) from its intimate connection with the subject of the general resurrection. Prove that the "work of executing judgment" at the coming of the Lord is decisive and final, occupying the set "day which God hath appointed to judge the world in righteousness," and you prove that the "hour is coming in the which, all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good to enjoy life, they that have done evil, to suffer punishment." Say you, this needs no proof for it is the declaration of Jesus,—for the whole current of scripture runs in its favor. True, nevertheless some passages have been wrested to make a barrier, and it is fitting that the flood of evidence should sweep them down in the channel of truth.

Receive the fact of the general resurrection at Jesus' appearing and his kingdom, and you are prepared to see the earnest of it, which is the first resurrection. Admit the first resurrection—the passing from death unto life, and you cannot avoid acknowledging a general resurrection.—Thus inseparably are these things connected—and thus we have tried to present them—strong links in the bright chain of truth, that bind us to the unscen and eternal.

We have thus seen that the resurrection from the graves is at the appearing of Christ, and that it is general and final. Then "cometh the end." He will make an utter end, it is the last end of the indignation: "affliction shall not rise up the second time." "He will finish the account and cut it short in righteousness, because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth."

E. C. CLEMONS.

Remarks on the Above.

Since publishing Sister Clemons' article in the number of our paper for the first of the month, she has sent us a lengthy communication by way of explanation of some points of her faith which she thinks were not sufficiently explained in her communication. She prefers having the explanation published before giving the article which precedes these remarks. We think it not advisable to comply with her request on account of the length of the article, and besides, it appears to be a vindication rather than an explanation of what is already before the public. She had better follow, in as concise a manner as possible, her subject to the close; and when it, with our remarks are finished, then a short explanation, not a protracted defence, would be in place. We hope, however, instead of either a defence or explanation being necessary in the sequel of the correspondence, that Sister C. and others of her sentiments, will be enabled to see their mistake, cheerfully acknowledge it, and joyfully embrace the precious truths they now evidently oppose.

We rejoice to see some indications of this happy result in our sister's last communication. In her article already published, she says:

The "life, death, and resurrection presented in the text, relate to the soul and not the body." The first error in the theory lies in the distinction made between the soul or spirit, and body of man. We are glad that our sister sees her mistake in this one, if not the fundamental principle of her theory. In her letter of explanation as she calls it, she says, "Now if I am mistaken in viewing that it is the soul simply that passes from death unto life; if the body participates in the spiritual change, (and I am not positive but it does, for we read, 'And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly, and I pray God your whole soul, spirit, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ,' why this subject of a resurrection and life is all the more glorious! This passing from death unto life then, emphatically makes 'new creatures' of the subjects of it. 'Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away, all things are become new.' Nevertheless, those thus renewed groan, being burdened, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body."

Though this change of position on this one point, abandons one error, it runs in to another equally absurd. For if the first resurrection is spiritual, and relates to the whole man, then if he ever experiences a second resurrection it must be a spiritual one also; for the first and second resurrections must be alike in character. Or, if this order may be observed, and the two resurrections still sustain the character for which our sister contends, one spiritual and the other literal, then the righteous will not only have a part in two resurrections, but will come under the second death; for our Bible teaches us that the second death will have power over all who live, or are raised after the first resurrection has taken place.—We hope Sister C. and others who may have adopted it, will see and abandon this last error, that they may escape the fatal consequences of following it to its legitimate conclusions.

The painful history of the past should remind us of our human weaknesses, and teach us the important lesson to mature well a new sentiment before propagating it. If we "esteem others better than ourselves," and are willing to stand in the counsel of our brethren, we shall consult their better judgments, and as far as a good conscience will permit, cheerfully be guided in these things by their wise decision. But we are wandering from the object of these remarks, viz.; to show the mistake in to which our sister and others have fallen on

THE GENERAL RESURRECTION.

The point in debate is not whether there will be a resurrection of the just and of the unjust, but will both classes be raised at the same time, is the point at issue. Sister C. takes the affirmative of this question, and is very confident she has gained the point in dispute; which in fact is the case if inferential testimony, presented with confident affirmations is good evidence. It should be remembered that her proofs without a single exception are all inferential. She infers from 2 Tim. 4: 1, that all the dead will be raised at the same time, because it is said Christ will judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." We infer that he will judge these two classes then, and we not only infer, but think we have direct testimony in the case, that the decisions of that judgment will be the "dead in Christ," the "blessed and holy" will "have part in the first resurrection," that will then take place, while the "rest of the dead" will be left in their graves a thousand years longer, and then be raised to have part in the second death.

Our Sister infers from Matt. 25: 31-46, that all the dead will be raised at the coming of Christ, because all nations are said to be gathered before him then, and each receives his final doom. We do not infer, but know that this testimony says nothing about the resurrection of the righteous or unrighteous, directly, or indirectly; but it speaks of the nations of the earth living at the coming of Christ being gathered before him; and we infer that the design of it is to show the final doom of all the ungodly, and the glorious reward of the righteous of all ages, without naming the order of, or time that will intervene between the two resurrections.

It is inferred from Matt. 13: 37-43, that there will be but one general resurrection because Christ gathers and destroys out of his kingdom all things that offend and them which do iniquity, at his coming. We infer that this work can be done and the wicked which are in their graves not "live again until the thousand years are finished," as John says; and the living wicked be "gathered out of the kingdom," or destroyed, or become ashes under the feet of the righteous, as Malachi says.

Sister C. infers that the righteous and wicked will be raised at the same time, because the Bible says, "a short work will the Lord make upon the earth." Strange perversion of the truth! Read Romans 9: 27-29, and see how an inspired apostle applies this text.

"Esaias also crieth concerning Israel, though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved. For he will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness, because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth. And as Esaias said before, except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we had been as Sodom, and been made like unto Gomorrah."

What has this text to do in proving the resurrection of saint and sinner, and much less that of both at the same time? It is wholly irrelevant to the case. And we infer that the principles of exegesis that will lead one to make such applications of Scripture, would not be at a loss to find abundant proof (in the estimation of those who adopt such principles) to prove the correctness of any sentiment or theory, however absurd.

Finally, our sister infers from the destruction of the metallic image in Dan. 2; the standing up of Michael in Dan. 12: 1, 2, the resurrection there named; from what is said in Nahum 1: 5-10; the account given of the judgment in Rev. 20: 11-15, and a number of other passages which she quotes, that all the dead will be raised at the same time. How easily can any one take a position, and draw inferences from any amount of Scripture to prove it.—But after all the proof is not positive; the position may be erroneous, and the inferences unwarranted. This we think may justly be said of the position and inferences of Sister C.

Inferential testimony should always bow to that which is plain and positive. The doctrine of the resurrection of saint and sinner at the same time has no positive testimony to sustain it; it is solely dependent on inferences, while the opposite doctrine, viz.; the two resurrections, one of the righteous and the other of the wicked, is supported by the best inferential, and as plain positive testimony as the Bible affords on any subject; and besides, this was the faith of the early christians, as the best historians prove.

1st. Inferential testimony. By this kind of testimony we prove two resurrections from Dan. 12: 2, especially when we understand the true meaning of the text. Here it is as rendered by Prof. Whiting in the Morning Watch for July 17, 1845.

"EXPOSITION OF DAN. 12: 2.—'And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.'"

There is an obscurity in this passage, produced by an improper rendering of the Hebrew words, 'ailech—weailech.' They are translated in this instance, "some—and some." Now, the phrase, composed of the pronoun ailech, with the conjunction we (and) joined to ailech, is the proper expression for these and those. The idea of some, or a part of a thing, is usually expressed in Hebrew by the preposition min (or the consonant mem—alone,) from. Thus, to express, according to the idiom of that language, such an English phrase as 'He took some silver,' it would be, 'He took from silver.' This pronoun is plural. In a simpler form, only ail, it is found in the Pentateuch, and 1 Chron. 20: 8.

The words should be translated thus:—'And many from the sleepers of the dust of the ground shall awake, these to everlasting life, and those to reproaches and everlasting abhorrence.'"

We infer that the just will share in a resurrection, in which the wicked will have no part, because it is said in Luke 14: 14, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." The resurrection of the unjust, must, therefore, be at another time.

We infer that the righteous will be raised in a resurrection, in which the wicked will not be worthy to share a part, because it is said in Luke 20: 35, 36, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from [out from] the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection," doubtless the first resurrection is meant, in which the wicked will not be found worthy to have a part.

It may be inferred from John 5: 28, 29, that there will be two resurrections, because two are named; one is called "the resurrection of life," the other, "the resurrection of damnation."

The proof in this text amounts to nearly positive testimony in favor of two resurrections.

We infer that there will be two resurrections, because Paul said in Acts 24: 15, that he had hope in God—"that there shall be a resurrection of the dead," (here the sentence should close if there is to be but one resurrection, but if two are to be expected, then the closing words of the sentence have their meaning;) "both of the just and the unjust." The two resurrections are evidently implied.

We very confidently infer that the wicked will not be raised at the resurrection of the righteous, because it is said in 1 Cor. 15: 23, 24, "every man in his own order, [or proper band,] Christ the first fruits, then they that are Christ's at his coming, then cometh the end." Here is evidence that none will be raised at the coming of Christ but those who are his, and of course the wicked will not be raised then.

We infer that the wicked will not be raised at the time of the resurrection of the righteous, because it was necessary for Paul faithfully to labor to "attain unto the resurrection of (or properly, from, or out from among) the dead." Phil. 3: 11. The wicked will not labor for this object, therefore we infer that they will not be counted worthy to have part in that resurrection which will be out from the dead, but will be raised with all the wicked dead in the resurrection which will be "unto damnation."

Finally, we infer that the dead out of Christ will not be raised at the same time of the resurrection of the dead in Christ; for it is said, the latter will be raised at the coming of Christ; 1 Thes. 4: 16.—The wicked as a matter of course, will not be raised then.

Thus far, the testimony brought forward by our Sister to sustain the affirmative, and that presented by the negative, is alike in character, that is, all is inferential, with the exception of two or three texts which we have named, speak so clearly on the two resurrections, that they amount to nearly, if not quite, positive testimony in our favor. We choose, however, to class them with our inferential testimony, as we did not wish to force a single text, to utter a sentiment not designed to be taught by the Spirit which inspired him who penned it. Should we rest the case here, we think an impartial jury would give a decision in our favor, inasmuch as the inferences we have drawn from the texts cited, appear natural, easy, and conclusive, while those drawn by our Sister are unnatural, forced, and throw confusion into the harmony of the inspired Word.

2d. Positive Testimony. We now offer a kind of testimony which cannot be presented in favor of the righteous and wicked being raised at the same time; it is direct, positive testimony. Hear it. "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

"THIS IS THE FIRST RESURRECTION," and the blessed and holy have part in it, "but the rest of the [unholy] dead [who had once been alive,] will not live again, until the thousand years were finished."—Here the matter is all explained; which gives beauty and divine power to the inferential testimony we have offered, and which forever settles the question in dispute, in favor of two resurrections; the one of the righteous, and the other a thousand years after, of the unrighteous. This same truth is evidently alluded to in Isaiah, 24: 21, 22. "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."

Read the context, and you will see that the punishment and shutting up in the prison named by Isaiah, were to take place "when the earth shall reel to and fro like a drunken man," when it "is utterly broken down, is clean dissolved," at the coming of the Lord. After many days from this dread moment, shall they be visited. How long after? "and the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished;" we think this is the correct answer. It is the only one the Bible gives.

Here we might safely rest the case, feeling the fullest assurance that every unbiased mind, capable of judging between doubtful inferential testimony, and that which is positive and clearly inferred, will give a just decision on the point at issue. But as we have further proof, drawn from the faith of the primitive church, directly to the point, we will give it.

Gibbon in speaking on the faith of the "primitive church" says:—"The ancient and popular doctrine of the Millennium, was intimately connected with the second coming of Christ. As the works of creation had been finished in six days, their duration in their present state, according to a tradition which was attributed to the prophet Elijah, was fixed at six thousand years. By the same analogy, it was inferred that this long period of labor and contention, would be succeeded by a Sabbath of a thousand years, and that Christ, with a triumphant band of saints; and the elect who had escaped death or had been miraculously revived, [raised from the dead] would reign upon earth till the time appointed for the last and general resurrection."

According to this testimony, the early christians believed in the resurrection of the just at the coming of Christ, and in the resurrection of the unjust, after the saints had reigned with Christ on the earth a thousand years. Then, we have the best testimony, inferential and positive, and the faith of the primitive church to prove that there will be two resurrections, while Sister C. has only doubtful inferences on which to base her theory of but one resurrection. We leave the candid to decide which view of the question is correct, or sustained by good evidence.—We fear not the decision.

One passage of scripture which our sister seems to think strongly favors her theory, we will here notice. It is Neh. 1: 9. "Affliction shall not rise up the second time." This has reference to the righteous, not the wicked. When once the righteous are freed from affliction, of course it is ended, and will not rise up the second time. Blessed promise to the saints; yet it affords nothing towards proving or disproving the doctrine of one or two resurrections.

What Sister C. has said about the day of the Lord, its commencement, length, &c., we consider not important to notice now, if ever. Only we must say that she has presented not a shade of evidence to sustain her theory. It is true, she has made out a theory, and quoted a good many texts to prove its correctness, which have no more allusion to her notions, than the one in Na. 1: 9 proves, as she seems to think, the correctness of her views of the resurrection. Should this wrong application of the texts to which we refer still be insisted on, and should the error which such a perversion of God's word must necessarily produce, threaten to grow to any serious extent among us, then it may become our duty to give in detail, the true meaning of those passages. But, we hope and ardently pray, that what we have already said on this subject, may, with the blessing of God, stop, or so far check in its hurtful course, these mistaken views, it will not be necessary to notice them again.

We entertain none but the kindest feelings toward Sister Clemons and those who adopt her views. Still, as highly as we respect and love them, we cannot view these peculiar sentiments of theirs in any other light than being extremely erroneous. And we do kindly, and most urgently entreat them to pause in their zeal in endeavoring to make others believe their error. It does appear that the sad consequences of a departure from the plain word of the Lord, in many instances, are so visible around us, that no one who is sensible of those things, can be induced so soon, to try again for a moment, the path that leads to such results. The Lord save us from the rocks and quick sands, that threaten our destruction on every hand in this hour of storm, desertion, fear, doubt and peril, and soon bring us safely into the port of eternal rest.

For the Voice of Truth.

THE IMAGE BEAST,

Or the exalted and popular state of the Nominal Church in the Last Days.

Let us examine the order of the scarlet-colored or image beast. It is the eighth and last in order of time. Says the explaining angel to John, as he beheld the drunken woman riding the beast, and wondered with great admiration.—"Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman and the beast that carrieth her, which hath seven heads and ten horns. The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, &c. And the beast that was and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." Rev. 17: 7, 8, 11.

The common opinion is that the heads of the beast denote the seven forms of the secular government of Rome. Says Dr. Clarke,—"A head of the beast is a supreme, independent form of the Latin government." They are 1st, the Regal power; 2d, Dictatorship; 3d, Prætors; 4th, Consulate; 5th, Triumvirates; 6th Imperial power; 7, Patriciate." With due respect I must dissent from this opinion. Mr. Miller's 5th rule of interpretation displays great wisdom, and we cannot depart from it with safety. "Scripture is its own expositor, since it is a rule of itself." "Head;—The supreme power of an object." Dan. 2: 38. Eph. 1: 22. Rev. 19: 12. The bible explains clearly one of these heads. Concerning the papal beast of which this is the image, it is said, Rev. 13: 3.—"And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death, and his deadly wound was healed, and all the world wondered after the beast." This was evidently his pagan head. It received its death wound by force of arms; and this wound was healed by the rise of popery, which, as one writer justly observes, was paganism baptized. It took the power, seat and authority of the dragon (paganism.) So that those who worshipped the beast, worshipped also the dragon, and so healed his deadly wound, and legalized idolatry was perpetuated, only in a different form. Paganism is therefore symbolized by red dragon, and by one of the seven heads. The dragon symbolizes the character, and the head the supreme power of the Roman government.

Altogether the pen of inspiration has given us a description of the character and operations of the papal beast, it is said, "he must be killed with the sword," verse 10. Then arises the two-horned beast. And verse 12 affirms "he exerciseth all the power of the first (or papal) beast before him, and causes the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the image (or papal) beast whose deadly wound was healed."

As a beast is the symbol of a kingdom or earthly power; and a head of a kingdom, it is said by the expounding messenger, Rev. 17: 9; "These seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth." That is, seven seats of earthly governments which have a connection with the church. It is generally understood that no human government is noticed in prophecy unless it be immediately or remotely connected with the interests of the church and people of God. "And there are seven kings." That is, they will be independent supreme forms of government. The conclusion, to me, is plain, that the seven heads denote the seven supreme, independent forms of earthly dominion, which should hold a connection with the people and church of God from her very first captivity and bondage to the end of her earthly pilgrimage, closing however with the eighth, which is of the seven, being the image of the sixth, and therefore not denominated a distinct head, either in character or number. The seven heads are therefore, 1st, the beast "like a lion having eagle's wings;"—kingdom of Babylon; 2d, the beast like a bear;—kingdom of the Medes and Persians; 3d, the beast like a leopard;—Grecian kingdom; 4th, the beast dreadful and terrible;—Roman government; 5th, great red dragon;—Rome pagan; 6th, ten horned beast;—Rome papal; 7th, two horned beast;—French Empire under Napoleon Bonaparte.

As the number seven is used in scripture to denote fullness and perfection; the eighth is of the seven, so nearly resembling the sixth it is styled its image. As the papal beast resembled the Grecian leopard with feet like the Persian bear, and a mouth like the Chaldean lion; so the scarlet colored beast carries the seven persecuting powers. Of this eighth and last system of civil government, it is said, it "was and is not, and yet is," verse 8. By which I understand that this scarlet colored system existed in character and profession in the blasphemous pretensions of Popery. But "is not," papal supremacy having fallen; and "yet is," or exists virtually in this eighth beast which is its image. Though it (popery) had a wound by the sword under Bonaparte, who took away his civil dominion, it still lived or retained its ecclesiastical power. This last beast shall ascend out of the bottomless pit—have its origin in error like the false doctrine of Mohammed, represented in ch. 9, as smoke from the bottomless pit, darkening the gospel sun, and the wind of the Holy Spirit.

Says the angel, of the seven heads or kingdoms, "five are fallen and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space." In my opinion John was carried away in the spirit down the stream of time to about the close of the past century, saw the woman in the wilderness of the people, Ezek. 20: 35, "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." He then gives us his views from that period to the end. At that time five were fallen; viz: The Chaldean kingdoms, Medo Persian, Grecian, the civil power of the Roman kingdom, and Rome pagan, each in their turn fell from their supreme dominion. "One is," Popery existed, but was soon to be killed by the sword of Napoleon; but his administration was not yet come. And when he cometh he must continue a short space. Bonaparte's administration continued only about twelve or fifteen years, a short space indeed! but he came to his end and there was none to help him.

"And the ten horns which thou sawest are the ten kings which have received no kingdoms as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast," verse 12. As Europe is the principal theatre of prophecy we look to that country for the ten kings or kingdoms, represented by the ten horns of the beast. Some interpreters, who believe the beast carrying the woman to symbolize the Roman government and the Roman Catholic church, link the ten kings or kingdoms here spoken of represent the ten original divisions of western Europe by the Goths and Vandals, about the beginning of the sixth century. But this exposition has superable difficulties. "These have one mind, and give their power and strength to the beast. In the original division of western Rome it was not so. So far were they from having "one mind," that three of them could not be forced to submission, but as Daniel says, were "plucked up by the roots" by the "little horn," or entirely subverted. These were 1st, the Exarchate of Ravenna; 2d, the kingdom of the Lombards; 3d, the State of Rome, or 1st the Heruli; 2d, the Vandals; and 3d the Ostrogoths. Only seven supported the claims of Romanism. And of those who submitted there was no voluntary agreement, but a forced submission. But says 17th verse, "God hath put it into their hearts to fulfill his will and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast." These ten kings exist and are active at the end. When the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord at the battle of Armageddon, these kings make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them, for he is the Lord of lords and the King of kings; having assumed his last and regal office. This office he does not assume till he leaves the holy place where he now officiates as our great High Priest, and appears the second time without a sin offering unto the eternal salvation of all them that look for him. Then "they that are with him are called, and chosen and faithful."—They are doubtless the immortal, glorified saints. "Blessed are they that are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."—"Behold he cometh with ten thousand to execute judgment," &c. "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. "And the beast was taken and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." Rev. 19: 20. "Thus he goeth into perdition." The ten horns shall burn her with fire, verse 16; which denotes her end; when the words of God shall be fulfilled." It seems evident that the ten horns or kingdoms of this last system of government, are the ten last independent Christian kingdoms, linked together in their form of government by the Holy Alliance. These ten kings are symbolized also by the ten toes of the great metallic image, Dan. 2. The ten toes were the last form of the image, and consequently would reach to the end of all earthly things, and make war with the Lamb at the last day when "the kings of the earth and of the whole world are gathered to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. Verse 41. "And in the days of these kings (represented by the toes) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and this kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." These ten toes have not been forming ever since western Rome was divided into ten kingdoms 1300 years ago, as many tell us. This view would strangely disproportion the image; making the toes longer than the legs and whole body! The toes did not merge from the iron legs of papacy until the decline of the Roman Empire, and fall of popery; for his feet were "part of iron and part of clay," which is interpreted, "the kingdom shall be divided;" and as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken. Since the civil power of Rome has been broken, the ecclesiastical has been strong. One great hierarchy existed till about the close of the past century; and on its overthrow the French Empire arose and continued till near the death of Napoleon, when the toes or kingdoms assumed a more distinct and independent form, and therefore cannot be over 30 or 40 years in length at the present time. The stone "smote the image upon the feet that were of iron and of clay, and brake them to pieces: it (kingdom of God) shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms," in Daniel, are collateral with, "and the Lamb shall overcome them—that ye may eat the flesh of kings;—and the beast was taken;" Rev. 17: 14 and 19: 18, 20. "And it shall come to pass in that day (see context) that God shall punish the host of high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth." He is terrible to the kings of the earth. "The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath." Isa. 24: 21. Ps. 76: 12. 110: 5. I am satisfied that these kings who give their support to the eighth general system of earthly government, and retain power till the end; are, 1st, England; 2d, Russia; 3d, Austria; 4th, Prussia; 5th, Germany; 6th, France; 7th, Italy; 8th, Denmark; 9th, Spain; 10th, Portugal.

A coalition was formed after repeated attempts and failures between the four first and most prominent nations of Europe, for the suppression of Bonaparte; to strengthen their political and martial power; and to uphold and defend nominal Christianity. The other inferior European nations gradually fell in with their superior power and influence. This Holy Alliance which influences more or less all Christian nations could not be formed till God put in their hearts to agree, and give their power, strength and kingdom to a system of government which should tolerate, support and defend, some form of nominal Christianity. And the scarlet colored system of civil administration formed by so many human creeds and ordinances; embracing and combining the political views of diverse nations, now exists. It will give power, support and spread to corrupt and popular Christianity, till the words of God shall be fulfilled. Then will the last servant of God be sealed. The woman, that great city, will reign over the kings of the earth, and be supported by them, till she is utterly burned with fire.

This beast will soon go into perdition, and the true Israel take the kingdom, and possess it forever.

In my next I wish to notice the fall of Babylon. Yours waiting and looking for Jesus.

Bro. D. Barker, Lansingville N. Y., March 25 writes:—

Prominent and indisputable as this glorious doctrine stands out in the Bible, yet none of my neighbors could I persuade to believe it, or apparently take any interest in it. The Cry, the Watch, and the Herald, which I offered them to read, they had no relish for, until about 4 months ago, Bro. Pinney of Seneca Falls, came here and lectured; he came again and again. Now about 7 or 8 heard the Word, and with joy, received it. They believe the Bible means what it says—study it diligently—take its plain, obvious meaning—get all the truth they can, and try to live up to it.

Bro. E. W. Case, Bristol Vt. March 22, writes: Something like forty in number in this town, are professedly waiting for the redemption of Israel. We have very interesting meetings, especially our prayer meetings. May the Lord bless you in your arduous labors, until he shall call home his faithful stewards.

OBITUARY.

Dear Bro. Marsh,—Another herald of the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom has ceased from his labors. Elder John Mitchell, formerly Pastor of the Baptist Church at Clyde, now sleeps in the dust of the earth; one of that innumerable company who have died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, and who looked for a heavenly country and a city, whose builder and maker is God. His health had been declining for a few years past. He repaired to Brattleboro Vt. for medical aid, where he died on the 14th of March. His late residence was at Hoosic, in this State, where his remains were conveyed. He was zealous and self-sacrificing in his labors—preached the whole counsel of God, and was faithful in proclaiming the glorious truths of the Savior's speedy advent. About three years ago he buried myself and wife beneath the baptismal waters, and now he awaits "the morning which is to dawn on the night of the grave,"—when the reality which is shadowed forth in that ordinance, will appear in all its sublimity and glory. Conference Address.

The promised pamphlet, containing the address of our conference, recently held in this city, is now ready for distribution. It is a neatly executed pamphlet of 36 pages, and can be had by those who wish to purchase, at three cents single copy, or $2.00 per hundred copies, or free to those who are unable to pay. It has been printed at a cost of $60 00.—To meet this expense, we have received $26 79cts. This, with what is promised, and what will be received from those who have not yet sent their orders, will, we think, amply cover the cost of publishing the pamphlet. It should immediately be put into the hands of all who will give it a candid perusal. The sentiments it contains, so far as we have heard, meet with a general approbation.

The Extras

On the evidences of the time of the second advent of Christ, have necessarily been delayed a few weeks longer than we had designed, and it will be a week or more longer before we can obtain paper on which to print them. They shall be issued as soon as circumstances will admit; then, all orders which have been or may be received for them, shall be attended to faithfully.

THE OLD EARTH.

"The earth gives signs of age, disease and fickleness. It yields its increase grudgingly, and demands an exorbitant fee beforehand in toil and sweat from the husbandman. It has ill turns, or paroxysms, when it rouses the ocean into a tempest and makes sport of navies, strewn the shores with the wrecks and carcases of men. It rocks a continent or sinks an island; shaking massive cities into countless fragments, and burying its inhabitants in indiscriminate ruin, anon it writhes and groans in mortal agony, and finds relief only by disgorging its fiery bowels, burying cities and villages in burning graves. The earth is old and feeble, and must needs groan on until it renews its prime."

Old mother Earth is wan and pale,
Her face is wrinkled sore;
Her locks are blanched, her heart is cold,
Her garments stiff with gore;
With furrowed brow and dim sad eyes,
With trembling steps and slow,
She marks the course that first she trod,
Six thousand years ago!

The Earth is old, the Earth is cold,
She shivers and complains;
How many Winters fierce and chill,
Have racked her limbs with pains!
Drear tempests, lightning, flood and flame
Have scarred her visage so,
That scarce we think she shone so fair
Six thousand years ago!

Yet comely was the youthful Earth,
And lightly tripped along
To music from a starry choir,
Whose sweet celestial song
Through Nature's temple echoed wild,
And soft as streamlets flow,
While sister worlds rejoiced with her
Six thousand years ago!

And many happy children there
Upon her breast reclined,
The young Earth smiled with aspect fair,
The heavens were bright and kind;
The azure cope above her head
In love seemed bending low;
O happy was the youthful Earth
Six thousand years ago!

Alas! those children of the earth
With hate began to burn,
And Murder stained her beautiful robe,
And bade the young Earth mourn.
And ages, heavy ages still Have bowed with gathering wo
The form of her whose life was joy
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! drear Earth! thy tender heart
Bewails thy chosen ones;
Thou look'st upon the myriad graves
That hide their gathered bones;
For them, by day and night, thy tears
Unceasingly must flow;
Death chilled the fountain head of life
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! old Earth! above thy head
The heavens are dark and chill,
The sun looks coldly on thee now,
The stars shine pale and still;
No more the heavenly symphonies
Through listening ether flow,
Which swelled upon creation's ear
Six thousand years ago!

Weep not in bitter grief, O Earth!
Weep not in hopelessness!
From out the heavens a "still small voice"
Whispers returning peace!

Thy tears are precious in the sight
Of One who marks their flow,
Who purposes of mercy formed
Six thousand years ago!

Thy days of grief are numbered all,
Their sun will soon be told!
The joy of youth, the smile of Gen,
Shall bless thee as of old!
Shall shed a purer, holier light
Upon thy peaceful brow,
Than beamed upon thy morning hour
Six thousand years ago!

Thy chosen ones shall live again,
A countless, tearless throng,
To wake creation's voice anew,
And swell the choral song,
Go, Earth! go wipe thy falling tears,
Forget thy heavy woe;
Hope died not with thy first-born sons,
Six thousand years ago!

For the Voice of Truth.

SOLEMN APPEAL.

(Concluded.)

3. To those who can only aid by their prayers.
Many of you have oftentimes wished that you could do more to spread the news of the coming Savior. You can—you can pray more. Have you forgotten why Gabriel was commanded to fly swiftly to Babylon—to shushan the palace?—Daniel was there praying.

Why was it that the Spirit, like a mighty rushing wind, came upon the assembled disciples on the day of pentecost? Why three thousand converted by a single sermon? Was it not in answer to the agonizing prayers of the hundred and twenty in the eight preceding days?

In the primitive ages of christianity, success attended the Missionaries wherever they went—thousands of willing converts publicly professed their faith in Christ—church after church was gathered—converts were multiplied from all ranks and classes, and grades of men, from the king on his throne to the beggar in the streets—from the proud pharisee to the poor publican—from the strict moralist to the open libertine—from the Jew, instructed in the way of God from his youth, to the idolater, grown up in wickedness and superstition. But why was it that religion triumphed so gloriously over superstition and error, over philosophy and learning? How was it that twelve poor fishermen could so succeed with infidels and skeptics, and in so many instances change the religion of nations. Nay more, why did bolts, bars, and iron gates, cease to hold the disciples of Christ, and the keepers of prisons become as dead men? I answer, the church was then a praying church. I know not how many more souls might be saved, if there were more agonizing prayers like the Syrophenician woman's, and Jacob's at Penuel. You then, dear brethren and sisters, though poor in this world's goods, can be instrumental by your prayers, in opening the hearts of the rich, of waking up the drowsy watchmen, in reclaiming backsliders, and in bringing sinners to God.

He has committed this treasure to earthen vessels, and all of us who go forth to preach, feel the need of your prayers. God is pleased, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe—and faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But were it not for the mighty operation of the Holy Ghost to make an application to the heart and conscience, no more success would attend the preaching in a congregation of careless sinners, than would attend the same preaching among the mouldering tombs in yonder grave yard. We might go out by thousands, and carrying the word of life, offer it to all. With the tongue of an angel, we might proclaim, "The Lord is coming"—tell the glories of that coming kingdom, and describe the awful sublimity of the judgment scene—might portray the joys of the saints in glory, and the horror and despair of the lost sinner—might tell of the love of Jesus—and array in vivid reality, the scenes of Gethsemane and Calvary, but without God's Spirit, the careless would be careless still. We might enter every street and lane of every city on earth—pass through all the towns and villages, and in the hearing of every human being, preach with more than earthly eloquence, the evidence of the shortness of time, and the necessity of repentance—we might plead and entreat until worn out with fatigue, but unaccompanied by God's blessing, no soul would be saved. But brethren and sisters, we have a remedy; (though I am afraid you do not realize it,) God works in answer and in reference to the prayers of his children, and there is such a connection between causes and effects, between means and ends, that the salvation of thousands of souls may be dependant on your prayers. Then how the editors and correspondents of our advent papers, need your prayers. Now, we sometimes find articles stale and uninteresting—rather tending to weaken the faith and lull into a lethargic sleep, than arouse to vigorous action, watchfulness, and readiness for the coming of the Lord of glory. But O, if there were more fervent prayers for these editors and correspondents, how teeming with "meal in due season," would every paper come.

In conclusion, let me say to all the dear brethren and sisters—those whom God has called to preach—those who have the means to aid by their property, and those who can call down the blessing by prayer. Go with me prospectively to the coming of Christ—the change—and the gathering of the saints in the New Jerusalem. Hear those shouts of joy and peans of victory, as Jesus welcomes them home. But see you that company more amazed than any, and praying louder than all? "What are these, and whence came they?" Ah! they are those, who, like the thief on the cross, were redeemed in the last moments of time, through your instrumentality—there are those who had grown old in sin, and gray in iniquity—who had lived in pleasure and wantonness, and stifled every precious conviction, but that brother who had been sleeping at his post, awoke. He felt necessity laid upon him, and aided by the treasure of the rich, he went and proclaimed the gospel of the kingdom. In answer to the prayers of the poor, the Spirit came down, these aged sinners heard, believed, and were saved. There too stand a company, who, with every call from heaven, "come out of her my people," drew their sectarian bands the stronger.—But in the last moments of time they heard again, heard and obeyed—and washed clear from Babylonian pollution, came home to Zion with the blood-washed throng. There too stand a company of youth—buoyant with hope, they had spent their time in gaiety and mirth—put far away the evil day, under the preaching of "peace and safety," had counted on long life and pleasure here: but just before the archangel's trump reverberated through the vault of heaven, they heard that brother preach—the truth took effect—

—they repented, and gave up all for Jesus. See him too among that company, who was long a temporizing minister. He rejected and cavilled, and sneered through all the preaching of '43.—And the mighty movement of the 7th month was only idle tales to him. Time rolled on—he heard again, received the truth, and now he lives with Jesus. And there is a great assemblage of those who, never having received the truth, made shipwreck of it as we supposed, but by the means of God's appointment, the preaching of the word they were reclaimed. What a blessed company! what a glorious throng! All saved by the blood of Jesus, yet through the instrumentality of those preachers who were aroused from their slumbers and went out, aided by the munificence of the rich and the prayers of the poor, in these last moments of time; and who, but for these instrumentalities, might have sunk down to eternal death. Who that gazes on that happy band, and hears those sweeter strains of thanksgiving and praise to God and the Lamb, for opening the hearts of his people to employ such instrumentalities in the eleventh hour to bring them in, will regret their co-operation in the work? Who that will lament the sacrifices he made to go and preach? Who, that aided by their alms, will not say with Jesus, "It is more blessed to give than to receive?" Who that will regret the days and nights they spent in prayer to God that these might be saved? Dear brethren and sisters, this is no fancy sketch, though it comes far short of the reality. For no earthly language can tell or describe the reality—can tell the good that may be done—the number of souls that may be saved, if all would do their duty. O my God, help!—May every one whom thou hast called to preach this everlasting gospel, with uplifted eyes and consecrated hearts, say, "Here am I, send me." And those who hold their treasures of gold and silver, redeem their oft repented pledges of giving all to God, and prayers ascend, prevailing prayers, for the Holy Spirit. Then we can go every where preaching thy truth; then shall backsliders be reclaimed, and sinners converted. Amen, and Amen.

But from that holy, happy throng on Mount Zion, let us turn our eyes to the burning earth—see that company more deeply horror-stricken than the rest! Their flesh consuming away while they stand upon their feet—their eyes consuming away in their holes, and their tongues in their mouths. Look again—these were adventists.—There stand those who once felt that they were commissioned to preach the coming Savior.—God was with and blessed them, so long as they continued faithful. But their souls being discouraged because of the way, they resigned their commissions, and sold their birth-right for a mess of pottage. There too stands the careless adventist, with his bags of gold and silver, and notes, and deeds about him. He often told his God, and told his brethren, that all was consecrated to the cause, but he lied to God, and lied to man—and continued so until the archangel's peal broke his lying reverie. He well knew the appeals for aid—he knew that souls must perish in this and other countries, through his neglect, yet he held his treasures fast, for he loved them more than he loved Jesus; but in trying to gain the two, he loses both.

And now, dear brethren, I pray you to ponder over these remarks—and O that God would send conviction. If I have said any thing wrong, or unkind, I pray God to forgive me. I have spoken freely, for I have written from a full and burdened heart. Let us, one and all, make a renewed consecration of all we have and are, and begin anew the work assigned us. Our work will soon be finished, our prayers soon be turned to praise. Pray for your unworthy brother.

J. WESTON.

New Ipswich N. H., April 3, 1846.

Letter from J. D. Pickands.

Bro. Marsh:—The following letter has been sent to the Day Star. I submit a copy of it to you for publication in your paper, if you think it will be of any service. If your readers are not so directly concerned about my sentiments and conduct as the readers of the Day Star, still they have been formerly interested, and as my name has frequently appeared in your paper as connected with the "Spiritualizers," it may be due to my former friends and the cause of truth, to tell them of my renunciation of the errors they have mourned over. It is some weeks since the Lord mercifully opened my eyes, but I have not been sufficiently composed or collected, after the long and severe tempest of excitement I have been in, to make myself intelligible. You will probably think I am not sufficiently explicit to satisfy your readers. I do not expect or desire to satisfy any body, but to obey the Lord, and to the best of my present ability, if possible, interpose a barrier, however feeble, between my erring brethren, and the destruction which I fear awaits an obstinate perseverance in their course. The future I leave with the Lord, and shall endeavor by his grace, to ascertain and do his will.

Yours in hope,

J. D. PICKANDS.

J. D. Pickands to E. Jacobs.

Dear Bro. Jacobs:—Will you allow me to say a few words through your paper, to yourself, and to my brethren and sisters scattered abroad? It is the last time I shall probably ask the favor at your hands. For three months I have said nothing to your readers, but have been a most watchful and anxious observer of the party with which you and I have acted. I fear I have been in some measure, instrumental in leading you to open your paper to a flood of communications which I now believe are subversive of the word of God, and highly dangerous to the interests of souls.—I am very sorry I did any thing to induce you to change your purpose, to exclude the wild, unscriptural rapsodies of certain eastern brethren. I do not wish to overestimate the importance of my influence in this matter, and I do not accuse myself of any direct and successful agency in controlling your mind and purpose, but as one of your confidential friends, I fear I did my part in leading you away from the narrow path of truth and duty. I certainly had no idea you would rush on so rapidly and desperately in the reckless course you have pursued, nor do I believe you would have so widely departed from the right use of scripture and common sense, if you had not given heed to certain seducing spirits, who, after the Cleveland conference, went on to Cincinnati. I refer to Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Curtis. You now denounce and reject them, but they have only carried out your own principles of scripture interpretation, and are more consistent, though more wicked than yourself. Your doctrine of "forsaking all," naturally created and justified that cruel spirit of selfishness which led Mrs. Curtis to dispose of her child as she did; while her principle, "the end justifies the means," induced her to conceal the whole truth from those who were not able to bear it. The information received from those who have just returned from your late conference, leads me to fear that you would not have condemned Mrs. Curtis so promptly, if her conduct had not roused the public indignation. At any rate, your account of the conference abounds with the same doubtful caution. In words, you are non-committal; in actions, you will prove yourself, I fear, too decided. Any one can see how peevish, and irritable, and unhappy you are and have been, ever since you entertained the abominable blasphemies of these insane women. Your brethren and sisters of your faith here, utterly condemn your inconsistency and harshness in the case of Mrs. Curtis, and those who joined the Shakers, as you petulantly remark, to save their lives and their credit. I cannot help thinking they give evidence at least, of honesty and consistency, while I pity their delusion.

Yes, my beloved brother, while your own recognized, and fellowshiped brothers and sisters condemn you, and say you will have to take these censures back, I pity you—most sorrowfully and sincerely—and with bitter regret that I had any hand in leading you into such a questionable and unhappy condition. You do indeed, speak very confidently of your happiness and peace, and your wife's, "but actions speak louder than words." The wild and feverish delirium you mistake for happiness, does not prove you right. I can well understand how you feel, and how you look and act, for I have gone through this same process, and experienced the same fiery trials. I do most earnestly pray God to deliver you, as he has graciously delivered me from this fatal snare.

Your paper has, for weeks past, so abounded with gross and absurd misrepresentations of scripture—all growing out of the spiritualizing method of interpretation, which I deeply regret I ever listened to, that I am at a loss which to select as most alarming and pernicious. The long letter of Bro. Williamson, whom I love as an honest, laborious, and suffering brother, and who has honored me with his private communications, much the same in substance as published in your paper—I say his long letter you are enraptured with, and regret your inability to disseminate over the land. Now, that letter is full of gross misrepresentations of scripture, and the very worst sentiment in the whole, you openly adopt and parade ostentatiously, in an editorial, under the caption, "this same Jesus." You ask, was not his (Christ's) going away, then, a going from flesh to spirit, and is not his coming again "in like manner," a coming from spirit to flesh, be manifested or glorified in his saints?" Now, if you and Bro. Williamson mean anything, you must mean that "the word,"—God—the Father, was changed into flesh, viz: the son of Mary, Jesus. Afterwards, this flesh was changed back into spirit, word, or Father. I take this to be the only fair and intelligible meaning of his language and yours. Now observe; while the word God, was in the condition of flesh, there was no other God or Father in the universe; for he, Jesus, was "the everlasting Father." Then why did Jesus, at the grave of Lazarus, lift up his eyes and say, "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me?" Also Jno. 17: 1. These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, Father the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee. The whole prayer is apparently addressed by one person, to another, by Jesus Christ to his heavenly Father. And yet, according to your new theology, he was himself the Father in disguise, shrouded in "the veil, his flesh." Of course, he played his part wise, and completely deceived not only the spectators, but all christendom, in all ages since.—Moreover, if this same Jesus is to be changed again from spirit into flesh, even the flesh of his saints, do you not see it follows there will be as many Gods or Fathers as there are saints? Certainly, for that one, (Jesus,) into whom this change was first affected, was truly and properly, God, and we are to be "like him." Then we shall indeed be Gods, (not merely sons of God,) and if this change has already begun, it is absurd for us to pray to any God outside of ourselves, or our equally divine brethren. No wonder that prayer has so generally ceased among our bands, (for meditation, wishes, desires, not directed or expressed to some person, is not prayer,) and is even treated with contempt.

traditions of your defence of Shakerism, or your monstrous absurdities and misapplications of scripture. How can the Shakers be the anti-type of Joseph, and of the elder son, with the parable of the Prodigal? What possible likeness is there between the two? How can these Shakers be the carcass which the eagles are to be gathered to and devour?—for of course you know that is the object of the eagles in gathering around upon the carcass, unless you really mean that you and your fellow eagles are to take possession of and eat up the stores which these single saints have provided? But this will not do. It is not the stores, but the Shakers which are the carcass, and you must eat the Shakers themselves—a tough and indigestible meal, I fear. I do not wish to trifle on this subject, but I cannot help laughing at such nonsense. The main inducement you hold out why we should join the Shakers, is the ample provision they have laid up for our supply. But Paul said, “the kingdom of God is not meat and drink.” One brother just returned, says, they showed him a room nearly filled with carpeting, which they said they had made by divine direction, for the advent people who were coming to them; although the Shakers themselves do not use or allow any carpets on their own floors.—And he was simple enough to believe this story. The Shakers must have thought some of our people were little children indeed, ready to believe anything. Paul says, we should be children in malice, but in understanding, men. The rule is reversed now-a-days, in too many cases, even among us; for if you contradict, oppose, or question some of these little children, they show a very naughty temper, while you have hard work to keep from considering them actual fools, from the amount of nonsense they continually utter. I do not believe that you seriously intend to join this “dying body,” and you will wait long for the earthquake announcing the resurrection: but you are encouraging others to do what your own good sense and remaining fear of God may keep you back from doing.

A few weeks ago you believed and taught that three years and a half were to be fulfilled in the scattering of God's people, in their strict and literal conformity to Christ in all things, even in his suffering and death; like him, they should not see corruption. Now, you turn round and say, the gathering has commenced, the resurrection has come, you cannot join a dying body, &c., before the 3½ years are half out. Bro. George A. Sterling holds, that during this period we are to witness in sackcloth, and then be put to death.—Others say, (and we have some here,) that we were put to death, beheaded on the 10th of the 7th month, and have ever since been lying dead in the streets of the city. Now, I cannot reconcile or believe these contradictory theories, nor can I believe they are taught by the spirit of God. I know the bible teaches no such thing. One of the most delusive and mischievous of these errors, is the use made of Chronology. Some of our brethren really seem to think the whole history of man, from creation to the 10th day of the 7th month, was meant to be acted over now.—And the invariable answer to all attempts to show the absurdity of such scripture applications, is to “consider the chronology!” One brother told me the other day, we must not have any common sense in explaining scripture. He meant, I suppose, that we must not lean to our own understanding; but his words told too truly, the sad and shameful state of many minds. They have shut their eyes against reason and common sense, and resolved to swallow every thing, rather than “draw back unto perdition.” I know this dreadful threat is constantly held up before them. It had its effect on me for a while,—far too long; it has now no power to keep me from disowning all sympathy with, and partnership in such unscriptural doctrines and practices. The men I love still—their sentiments I condemn and deplore.—May the Lord speedily brake the snare and deliver the captives, Amen.

I am glad that Bro. Cook has been kept from running to the same excess with us; but he too is “in a conflict,” as he confesses. He will not cease to be in a conflict until he gives up his forced application of the great Bible doctrine of providence and guidance, to justify our mistakes. Brother Cook adheres most tenaciously to the Bridegroom come, and shut door positions, as sanctioned of heaven. Now I ask, are there 5 wise and 5 foolish? I do not say 2 wise and 8 foolish—where will you find half and half, or any thing like that proportion, of wise and foolish, among the virgins who arose and trimmed their lamps? Does the scattering of the advent hosts, which Bro. Cook speaks of as following the cry &c., answer the description of the parable? I once thought it did, but facts now abundantly prove it does not. Besides, in the parable, the wise entered by a door into some place, state or condition, with the Bridegroom, and the door (by which they entered,) was shut. Afterwards came the foolish virgins, and sought to enter by that same door into the same place, state or condition, where the wise ones were with the Bridegroom. Has any thing like that occurred? Certainly not. Whatever clamor there may have been about a shut door, nobody has knocked at our door, or sought to enter into our place.—Then from that parable, I cannot prove that you and I are wise virgins, and certain others foolish. Yet I have unmercifully judged and condemned and cast out the foolish, meaning the Millerites or nominal adventists. Now I am being judged with the same judgment wherewith I judged others. God is just! I kiss the rod! Can it be possible that many, or any of the wise who entered in and were shut in with the Lord, afterwards got out? Yet such has notoriously been the case among us, until our number has become exceedingly reduced. It will not do to bring in the case of the man without the wedding garment, that respects another affair. Then if no such door as described in the parable of the virgins has been shut, after the going in of half the virgins and the departure of the other half, the Bridegroom has not come! If you apply any of the particulars of this parable, you must apply them all. Besides, if, as you say, we have only the prologue to the third wo, and not the third wo itself, then we have not had the seventh trumpet, (for that trumpet introduces the third wo,) and of course the whole theory of the Lord come, and the kingdom set up, &c., falls to the ground. I say fearlessly, that you have, in your late editorials, rashly, desperately, but unconsciously, overthrown your whole system. Yes, Bro. Jacobs, I now confess in the presence of Almighty God, my deep and solemn conviction of the humiliating, shameful, sinful fact, that you and I, and all of us, were brought and kept under powerful human influence, which we mistook for divine guidance, and which we have been trying to justify, and glorify too! Some have seen and confessed their errors at an early day. You and I have put that day afar off; but it has come at last, and I have, with much trembling, taken this cup into my hands. I say, “not my will O Father, but thine be done!”

Bro. Snow has persisted in his self-justification, until he has been given up to strong delusion, to believe a most monstrous falsehood, as both you and I firmly believe. I thank God that at this late hour, and after so much mischief, I am fully awakened and delivered from the delusion.

I intend that my confessions shall be co-extensive with my errors. I leave the consequences of my present course, as I have heretofore done, with God. I am prepared to endure the burning judgments of my Father, and wait on God to pardon my faults and vindicate my cause. I do not go back to Millerism. The theory of father Miller, I cannot again adopt, for time and the Bible have convinced me it is not true. I have no theory to substitute in its place, but I have “turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, even Jesus whom he raised from the dead.” I cannot believe with Bro. Hotchkiss, Fish and Fenton, whom I love as dear, but mistaken brethren—that my mind is heaven, where the will of God has been done all along, and from which, the Lord descends into my body—the earth, to renew it. There is much ingenuity in their sophistry, and if you allow their starting point, it is difficult to deny their conclusions. But if, as I fully believe, their foundation is unsound, the superstructure, however imposing, cannot stand. I do not speak hastily or unadvisedly, for I have patiently followed out this plausible, but false system, to its legitimate results.

I have admired the tree as desirable to make one wise, and have coveted and eaten the fruit, and now I know what Christ meant when he said “The tree is known by its fruit!” This fruit is bitter and poisonous, if not in the mouth, certainly in the belly. I could tell you of some instances, where I fear the consequences will be far more fatal than they have been in my case, or I hope will be in yours. I lament my agency in this, and earnestly pray God to interpose some antidote, before it be too late.

But I have done teaching and preaching for the present. I have no longer any ambition to be great in the kingdom of heaven, or take a high seat at the supper table. When my brethren tell me by way of warning, that unless I go out according to their notion of the deliverance, I shall have my ears bored, and become a servant forever. I can only reply, “I had rather be a servant, a door keeper in the house of my God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness.”

The year of Jubilee is now just expiring, and where is our deliverance? Where? Echo answers where? It is now too late to deny that we were deceived in this expectation. Nothing at all answering to the just fulfilment of the type has occurred, and my conscience will not allow me to entertain any further modifications of these calculations. I cannot stretch the watches any further. All this shifting and postponing appears to me very much like downright dishonesty, and I have long been disgusted with it. I can no longer go with your party or any other party, as such. I can fellowship any and all; who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, without requiring of them a pass word or sign. God's word is true. His promises and prophecies will all be fulfilled. But I may have misunderstood them. “God is his own interpreter, and he will make it plain.”

I need scarcely add, that according to the best of my knowledge and belief, the charges and insinuations of immoral or corrupt conduct so often made respecting the brethren and sisters who obeyed the Lord in washing the saints' feet, and in the christian salutation, are wholly false, and without foundation. I have not seen or heard of the first instance of licentiousness among them all, and I know they all solemnly profess to hold every thing of the kind, in the utmost abhorrence. I have long since learned not to charge the influences or consequences of a man's theory upon him as part of his belief or practice, so long as he disavows them. I have borne such attacks in silence, and shall not now stoop to defend myself. The consciousness of innocence, may well sustain us against such feeble and foolish assaults. I only wish you and I were as clear of all other faults. We have honestly believed, and fearlessly proclaimed our belief. We have been mistaken. I do not plead our honesty in excuse for our errors; now when I see my mistakes, I frankly own them, as I have ever done. I hope to see you do the same. Perhaps we may yet lead some out of the labyrinth into which we have conducted them. Our enemies—the enemies of our Lord and his truth, we still leave in his hands, knowing that he will judge them righteously.

Farewell my Brother, for the present. I hope to meet you again on safer ground than we have lately occupied. May God guide you out of all your errors, and into the way of all truth, Amen.

Your brother in the love of Christ,

J. D. PICKANDS.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, MAY 6, 1846.

Our Receipts.

Our practice has been since publishing the Voice of Truth, to acknowledge all monies received for the paper and for books, in the same list of receipts.—Some weeks a large amount has been received for books. The books belong to Bro. Himes, and the avails of them, with the exception of a certain percentage, is sent to him. A few weeks past, a larger amount than usual of money was received for books, also considerable was received for Bro. Pearson, for his Diagram; this added and published with the money received for the paper, made some of those think who are unacquainted with the facts, that we were receiving large sums solely for the benefit of the paper. By the advice of some of our good friends, we give this explanation, that all may know how the case really is.

In future, we shall only publish the amount of money received for the paper. The acknowledgment of the letter containing money for other purposes, will be sufficient to inform the one who sent it, that it is received.

For several days past, our receipts have been very light. We do not complain however: our brethren will see that they are kept about right.

It Can Be Done.

What? The number of subscribers to the Voice of Truth, can be increased, and it should be done.—How can it be done? By those who now read it: each subscriber should try to obtain another one.—I will try, we think will respond many a warm heart. A word to the wise is sufficient, and we shall soon see whether we now speak to them understandingly or not.

Nigh, Even At The Door,

The more critically we examine the subject of the time of the Second advent of Christ, the better satisfied we are that the only Bible position we can take as to the definiteness of the time of that event is, "Nigh, even at the Door." This, we think, is the position which the Son of Man has authorized us to take, as is evident from the tri-fold testimony of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. To be either more or less definite than this definition will justify, is hazardous ground to occupy. Our history of the past, on definite time, has shown the sad consequences of being too definite; and the unbelief of thousands around us, should warn us against the too indefinite understanding of these important words. To be able to avoid these extremes, it is highly necessary to understand the true import of the words, "nigh, even at the door."

According to Webster, the preposition at, "in general, denotes nearness or presence; as at the ninth hour, at the house, but it is less definite than in or on; at the house, may be in or near the house. It denotes also, towards; versus: as to aim an arrow at a mark. From this original import, are derived all the various uses of at." Though this definition does not define the number of rods, feet and inches a person would be from the door, when at the door, yet it clearly conveys the idea that he would be very near it. This is the prime import of the word. Its secondary meaning, instead of conveying the idea that the person might be at a remote distance from the house, will admit of his being in it. The first use of the word is doubtless the meaning that should be given to it as used by the Savior in the case under consideration; and according to this import, he has revealed the time of his second advent sufficiently definite for his watching children to know when it is soon, very soon to take place.

That this is the meaning that should be given to this word seems clear, from the manner it is frequently used in the Bible. We will look at a few cases. Mark 1: 33. "And all the city was gathered together at the door, and he healed many that were sick." All will see that "at the door," in this case, means very near the door. John 18: 16. "But Peter stood at the door without." He was without the door, but near it. Acts 5: 9, 10. "Behold, the feet of them that buried thy husband, are at the door, and shall carry thee out. Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in and found her dead, and carrying her forth, buried her by her husband." There can be no doubt as to the import of "at the door," as used in this case: it means very near. Acts 12: 13. "And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda." In this case the import is, close to the door. In James 5: 9. "The Judge standeth before the door;" and Rev. 3: 20, "Behold I stand at the door and knock," have no connecting circumstance to define their meaning; the nature however of the subjects in which they are found, make it very evident that no other meaning than very near, can justly be given to the words "before," and "at the door."

Having given the New Testament meaning of the words under consideration, we will see how they are used in the Old Testament. Gen. 19: 9-11. Here it is said that the Sodomites "pressed sore upon Lot, and came near to break the door"—that the angels "pulled Lot into the house to them, and shut too the door, and they smote the men that were at the door of the house, with blindness." The meaning of "at the door" in this case, must be apparent to all.

Gen. 43: 19. "And they communed with him at the door of the house." These were the sons of Jacob who communed with the steward of Joseph, before they entered the house of their lost brother. They evidently were very near the door. The same idea is conveyed in Judges 19: 26, where it is said of a certain woman that she "fell down at the door till it was light." Also, 3 Sam. 11: 9, where it is said that "Uriah slept at the door of the king's house." Read the context, and it will be apparent that Uriah slept very near the door of the king's house.

That very near is the prime meaning of "at the door," is apparent from 2 Kings 5: 9. "Naaman came with his horses and his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha." Prov. 9: 14.—"She sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high places of the city." She was near her house designing to decoy the passers by into it.—Eze. 10: 19; 11: 1, also 46: 3. In these passages the cherubims are said to have stood "at the door of the east gate;" that five and twenty men were "at the door of the gate;" and that "the people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate." In each case, very near the gate is clearly implied, as every one will readily admit who will take pains to consult the context where these passages are found.

From this view of the subject, the phrase, "at the door," and more especially, "nigh, even at the door," must mean very near, so near that there is no intervening space for another step to be taken between the person and the door: the next step would bring him into the house. This we understand to be the meaning we should attach to the words under consideration. "When ye shall see all these things know that he is near, even at the door." That is, no other event named in prophecy, is to intervene between the time of seeing all these things, and the Lord's coming: his coming is the next event to be confidently looked for every moment.

Here, this part of this criticism might be dismissed, if all fully comprehended the difference between the literal import of the metaphor used in the case, and its design when used to represent the nearness of the stupendous event to which it relates. "Nigh even at the door," as used by the Savior, is a metaphor, taken from the well known acts of real life.—In the metaphor, the person in point of distance, is very near the house when said to be at the door.—But in the subject the metaphor is designed to illustrate, the coming of the Son of Man is very near, in point of time, when the evidences in the case prove he is "nigh, even at the door."

Again: the number of years, months, weeks, days, hours, or minutes, to intervene between the time that Christ is said to be at the door, and his actual coming, are not to be computed by the precise number of feet or inches between the door and the person in the metaphor. But as the person in the metaphor, in point of distance, is very near the door, so Christ in point of time, is very near his second appearing, when at the door.

Moreover, as the metaphor is infinitely inferior to the Savior's coming, to which it points, why should not the time for the occurrence of the acts in the metaphor be inferior also, or shorter than what would be required for the occurrence of the stupendous acts to which the metaphor relates? Most certainly this is a reasonable supposition. The time it would require for a person to step from the place called at the door, into the house, would be but a moment, whereas, taking into account the long period of time this world has existed, the long time the Savior has been absent, the magnitude of the work he is coming to accomplish, that in prophecy, a day is the length of a solar year, and that one day with the Lord, is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; we say, taking all these things into account, we are necessarily led to give a far more extended meaning to nigh, at the door, than when simply looking at the metaphor. In one case, the intervening time from "at the door," to the advent, would be but a moment, while in the other case it might be an indefinite period of some length of time. To make the matter more plain, we will say that a degree stretches over a wide territory of the earth's surface, but reaches but a very small distance on a map of the world. So with the facts in the metaphor: they could occur in a moment, while the stupendous things in the history of this world, which the figure is designed to represent, would necessarily occupy a much longer period of time.

These remarks will doubtless wake up the fears of some, that we are putting off the time of the Lord's coming. Not so. We are searching for the true meaning of our Lord's words, irrespective of where the truth will lead us. But to quiet those fears, we will just remark, that this investigation we think in the sequel, will clearly show that we have the strongest reasons to look for the revelation of the Son of God every moment. We have the best of proof to sustain this position, but it must be deferred until another week. Search with prayerful interest the inspired Volume, and you will be led into a true understanding of this important subject; and by believing and obeying what the Lord requires at your hand, joy and gladness will spring up in your soul, and the necessary preparation will be made to stand when the Son of Man shall appear.

Leaving the Church.

Two brethren, their names and address it is not necessary to give, write thus:—

"I read a good deal in your paper about coming out from the old churches, for they are Babylon, and if we do not, we shall fall with her. Now Brother, I believe it is true, but what shall we come out to? for there is none but Bro. W. and myself in all this region, who believe in the advent doctrine, and we are looked upon as fools. Now will you or some one else tell what we ought to do in such a case?—We have no advent meeting to go to if we quit the old mother church—we must stay at home and not go to any meeting. Now what is best in such a case? will you tell brother? and the good Lord give you wisdom."

Doubtless there are others of our dear brethren in circumstances similar to those named in these inquiries, and for the benefit of all we will say, that the first question for you to settle is, is the church with which you are connected, corrupt, so corrupt that you can neither impart to, or receive any spiritual benefit from her? If so, then, whether she is Babylon, or a part of that mystical city or not, it is your duty, as Paul says, 2 Cor. 6: 17, to "come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." To be connected with such a body, is putting the hand to all the corruptions of which it is guilty, and endangering your purity and eternal felicity. For, says Paul, "he that is joined to an harlot, is one body." "And be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God."

Is this the character of the church with which you stand connected, by all means come out from among them without a moment's delay, for God requires it at your hand. It is for you to decide whether this is the character of the body with which you are united. We know not of an ecclesiastical body organized on worldly principles, that does not sustain this character. And we repeat again, with earnest entreaty, if such is the character of the church with which you are associated, "come out from among them." But you ask, "what shall we come out to?" We answer, to God, and He will take care of you. For he says, "come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 14-18.

Believe and obey God, and nothing will harm you.

HULL BARTON.

Some months past, in noticing a certain delusion at Springwater, N. Y., we in substance stated that Hull Barton and his miss, had imposed themselves on a certain family there. We have just learned from a credible source, that we were misinformed relative to the woman referred to being his miss:—she was his lawful wife, and said to be a chaste woman and a worthy christian. Hence, in this case, nothing improper was done either by Hull Barton or his wife. We are happy to make this correction, for we do not wish the innocent or guilty wrongfully to suffer, on account of any words or acts of ours.

The True Inheritance.

Bro. Marsh:—I understand that Christ created this world, and every living creature that hath life; in the waters, and those that fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven; cattle, and creeping things, and beasts of the earth, and pronounced them all good. He created man in his own image, and placed him in this world as in the paradise of God, and gave him dominion over all of this part of his creation. And man talked with God, and walked in his presence, and breathed the pure atmosphere of heaven. And all was Christ's by creation. It was the field where the Son of man sowed the good seed, the children of the field or kingdom. But while men slept his enemy, [the devil] came and sowed tares [the seed of rebellion, the children of the wicked one] among the wheat and went his way." And by the rebellion and fall of man the right of creation was lost, and the devil became the Prince of this world; and the curse was not only pronounced upon man, but upon the whole creation. "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together." Christ then undertook the rescue of this sin-cursed creation, and the covenant was entered into between the Father and Son, and the promise made that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, that is, destroy his works in this creation. "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested that he might destroy [not his own works of creation which he pronounced good, but] the works of the devil. 1 John 3: 8. Compare Rom. 8: 22; Jno. 12: 31; 14: 30; 16, 11; Matt. 13: 24, 25, 38, 39, with the 1st, 2d, & 3d chapters of Genesis.—Now the right by creation being lost, how was it again obtained? I answer, by purchase. "Feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Acts 20: 28. And the same apostle says to his Ephesian brethren, "ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory." Eph. 1: 14. Now it is admitted by the christian world that the church was purchased by the blood of Christ, as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world, or from the covenant contract, and it is there left. But the apostle here includes their inheritance in the purchased possession. Jesus spake unto the multitude in parables, and uttered things which had been kept secret from the foundation of the world.

What were those things which he uttered in parables? Matt. 13: 24-30, "Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, the kingdom of heaven [Son of man] is likened unto a man who sowed good seed in his field; [this world] but while men slept, his [Christ's] enemy [the devil] came and sowed tares among the wheat and went his way; but when the blade was sprung up and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst thou not sow good seed in thy field? From whence then hath it tares? He said unto them an enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, nay, lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest; and in the time of harvest, I will say to the reapers gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn." Vs. 37-43 "He answered and said unto them, he that sowed the good seed is the Son of man, the field is the world, the good seed are the children of the kingdom; [this world restored to its Eden state] but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil, the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this [sin-cursed state of the] world. ["At the time of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3: 21.] "The Son of man shall send forth his angels and they shall gather out of his kingdom [this world] all things that offend, and them [the children of the wicked one] which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire, &c. Then shall the righteous [the good seed, the children of the everlasting kingdom] shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear let him hear."

Again, vs. 44, "The kingdom of heaven [the good seed, or true Israel] is like unto a treasure hid in a field, [hid in this world, growing together with the tares, or children of the devil] the which when a man [the Son of man] hath found he hideth, and for joy thereof, goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth [what, the treasure? no.] that field." [the world] Again, vs. 45, 46, "The kingdom of heaven [Christ] is like unto a merchantman seeking goodly pearls, who when he hath found one pearl, [or the treasure hid in the field, the good seed, the church] of great price went and sold all that he had, and went and bought it." There was an absolute purchase by the Son of man of the church, and the field, or world, or that which was lost by the fall. And He gives us the assurance that he will gather out of it every unholy thing, and that the true Israel shall shine forth in the new earth like "the sun in the kingdom of their Father." "For the earnest expectation of the creature [creation] waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him [God in vindication of his violated law] who hath subjected the same in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8: 19-21. This world then, is to receive the same freedom from the curse, as the children of God. "And there shall be no more curse—[where shall there be no more curse, in heaven where God now resides? Where are we told that there ever was, is now, or ever will be a curse there? No where; the curse is here, in this world. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake," Gen. 3: 17. But there shall be no more curse] but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him," Rev. 22: 3. "And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it." chap. 21: 24. The promise made to the first Adam that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, was renewed to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promised inheritance, the third world or the new earth; that he should be the father of the many nations of the third world; and that in his seed, which is Christ, all the nations of the new earth should be blessed.—"Whereby the world that then was, [before the flood] being overflowed with water, perished; but the heavens and the earth [the second world, says Jesus, "my kingdom is not of this world,"] which are now, [since the flood] by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," 2 Pe. 3: 6, 7, 13. The third world or new earth then, is the promised inheritance of the saints, where Christ will set up his everlasting kingdom under the whole heaven.

We now see what the faith is which was "once delivered to the saints." The hope of Israel, the promise made of God unto our fathers; for which hope Paul stood and was judged of the Jews, the typical church, who made void the faith, and the promise of none effect. Compare Rom. 4: 14, with 7: 32. But it was "begotten again by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead," 1 Pe. 1: 3; and was the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, upon which the anti-type church was built, and was to remain if she was made partaker of Christ. It was preached, and earnestly contended for by the apostles; and must be the preaching of the flying angel in the midst of heaven, the anti-type church for a test, to try the church, and see if she continues in the faith, grounded and settled, and is not moved away from the hope of the gospel. "For judgment must begin at the house of God," 1 Pe. 4: 17; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of our hope firm unto the end.

This hour of God's judgment, proclaimed by the flying angel, I firmly believe has come upon the anti-type church, the second house of Israel, and that in "one day death, and mourning, and famine" have come upon the great city. I believe the time has fully come, when the second advent of Christ must be proclaimed, believed, embraced, and lived for if we ever think of entering with Christ into his promised rest.

I send you two dollars as a donation to aid you in publishing the Voice of Truth, and sending it out into the highways and hedges that the poor may be bidden to the marriage.

Do not get your mind too much fixed on '46, for I think you will be disappointed.

Yours in full faith of seeing the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, to remove the curse and set up the tabernacle of God on the new earth.

Letter from Bro. Reeve.

Bro. Marsh:—I have long since wished to send you something to pay you for the trouble you take in scolding the Voice of Truth to me and many others, but I had not the means. I bless the Lord for the glad tidings it brings me of the great and terrible day of the Lord being near at hand, even at the door. I had not much faith in time, until within a few months past. I now firmly believe that in a few weeks or months, the Lord will be revealed from heaven in all his glory, and all those who love him and keep his commandments, will be made like him and remain with him forever.

During the dreadful storms that have swept over the advent band, and scattered so many of those who were once with us, the 110 Psalm has been my anchor. Glory be to God, on that I rest in safety and say, I know the Lord has not come, for, in the words of Bro. Miller, neither the Spirit nor the church are the Son of man.—No! blessed be his name, when he comes we shall certainly know it, for we shall see him as he is.

I believe the time is too short and valuable to be spent in controversy, but I hope you and the brethren will bear with me while I offer a few remarks on Dan. 7: 13, 14. These two verses seem to have formed the corner stone of the modern Babel, those who separated themselves from us, taking the ground that the Savior fulfilled the meaning they convey on the 10th day of the 7th month. So I cannot construe them, as I find no place in the word of God where the Savior leaves the right hand of the Father, till his enemies are made his footstool. It is said the judgment precedes these verses, as in verses 9-11—admitted. But does not Daniel in v. 13, begin a new, or another vision, and does he not in the 7th chapter, go twice down through the judgment? so it appears to me. If I am wrong, I hope the Lord and all the brethren will pardon me. Compare the 3d verse with the 17th, and the 7th with 10th.

Also 9 with 26, and 14 with 27. If verses 13 and 14 were not realized by the Savior till the 10th day of the 7th month, when our brethren contend the kingdom came, and the 27th verse was fulfilled, how long did the Savior have the dominion, &c., &c.?

Bro. Miller in his sermon March 4th, quotes the first part of verse 13: "one like the Son of man, came in the clouds of heaven," &c. And I believe the prophet saw him coming to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. Who were they, and where did they bring him from? I wrote these and other questions to Jacobs, but though he received my letter, he did not answer it. Was it not the Son of God?—Job 38: 7; and the heavenly host? Luke 2: 13-14. Was not Daniel like Paul, in vision, caught up to heaven, and saw the Savior ascending with the clouds of heaven, as described in Acts 1: 11? I think so. As without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins, so I cannot think the dominion &c., in verse 14, could have been given to him before he had purchased it with his blood. See Psa. 2: 8, and Isa. 53. Let us look at a few texts to see if it be according to the word. Mark 14: 62; Acts 7: 55, 56; Eph. 1: 20-22. and also 4: 7-16, and 10: 12-14; Acts 10: 38-43, and 2: 30-36; Titus 2: 14; Colo. 1: 13-20; 1 Pet. 3: 22; Rev. 1: 4, 5, 6, and 8. Many other passages might be given, but these, to the humble and child-like disciple of Christ, will be sufficient.

I have been much blessed in your exposition of the Parable of Matt. 25; the cause of so many evils. I believe the hand of the Lord has been in the advent movement from the first, most signally, and most gloriously, and I believe also the devil, knowing his time is short, has been unusually busy. I believe the parable as a parable, not as the judgment scene itself. I believe in the command of the Savior, John 13, and felt blessed in the performance, but I do not believe it my duty to wash the feet of another man's wife.—With many, I fear, it is any thing but a cross. I see no command to salute females, nor could it be any cross; hence, I cannot see what good could arise from it. Of what use is all this outward observance, if the heart be not right in the sight of God? With a kiss, Judas betrayed his Lord. O that men would lay aside these rudiments of religion, and go on to perfection. See Heb. 6: 1-6. It is well to receive the kingdom as a little child, but are we not taught to grow in grace and in knowledge? I fear from the manner of some, they are in the deplorable state described by 1 John 2: 9-11; for they show no sympathy for others. O that the Lord would open their eyes to see the truth as it is in Jesus. The same 1 John 2: 12-14. That there were young men and fathers, as well as little children. See Eph. 4: 14-16. I rejoice to see amongst many of the brethren and sisters, a waking up again, and that in some places, the people are still willing to hear the blessed word of the kingdom nigh at hand.—If I had strength, I feel that I would go to the highways and hedges, and proclaim the coming of the Lord. But so long have the people in Cleveland heard of these things, that their ears are entirely closed against them, and after pleading in vain with them to get ready, I am often tempted to say, let them alone. Fret not thyself because of evil doers—and hast thou faith—have it to thyself before God. The Lord knoweth those that are his, and he will soon return and discern between him who serveth him, and him who serveth him not. My soul cries out for the living God. Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

Yours in the blessed hope,

JOHN REEVE.

From the Advent Herald.

THE CAUSE IN ENGLAND.

We have received a letter from Bro. Stoodly, of England, which gives a most cheering account of the state of the Advent cause in that country. He says that Bro. Burgess baptized in Tiverton, Devonshire, during a space of two months, upwards of 150, and on a previous visit to the same place, 250. Bro. S. also states, that Bro. Winter baptized 200 within the last two or three months. Bro. W. is building a large chapel in Sussex, capable of holding 1000 persons.

On the whole, the cause in England is progressing wonderfully. Were there a few more laborers there, incalculable good would be accomplished. It is the expectation of the brethren there, that Bro. Litch and ourself will be in England by the last of May.

Bro. S. wishes us to insert the following in the "Herald:"—

Extract from the Baptist's Confession of Faith, presented by them to Charles II. March, 1660:

"For which (say they) we are not only resolved to suffer persecution to the loss of our goods, but also life itself, rather than decline from the same." (From Crosby's History of the Baptist's vol. 2, Appendix p. 85.)

"We believe that the same Lord Jesus who showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, (Acts 1: 3) which was taken up from his disciples and carried up into heaven, (Luke 24: 51,) shall so come in like manner as he was seen go into heaven. (Acts 1: 9-11.) 'And when Christ who is our life shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory.' (Col. 3: 4.) For then shall he be 'King of kings, and Lord of Lords.' (Rev. 19: 16.) 'For the kingdom is his, and he is the governor among the nations,' (Ps. 22: 28) and 'King over all the earth,' (Zech. 14: 9) 'and we shall reign with him on the earth.' (Rev. 5: 10.) The kingdoms of this world, which men so mightily strive after how to enjoy, shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. (Rev. 11: 15.) 'For all is yours, ye that overcome this world, for ye are Christ's and Christ is God's.' (1 Cor. 3: 22, 23.) For unto the saints shall be given the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom, under (mark that) the whole heaven, (Dan. 7: 27.) Though (alas) now many men be scarce content that the saints should have so much as a being among them; but when Christ shall appear, then shall be their day, then shall be given unto them power over the nations, to rule them with a rod of iron. (Rev. 2: 26, 27.) Then shall they receive a crown of life, which no man shall take from them, nor they by any means turned or overturned from it, for the oppressor shall be broken in pieces, (Psa. 72: 4,) and their vain rejoicings turned into mourning and bitter lamentations," as it is written. (Job 20: 5-7.)

This confession is "subscribed by certain elders, deacons, and brethren, met in London, in behalf of themselves and many others unto whom they belong, in London, and in several countries in this nation, who are of the same faith with us." Then follow forty-one names after which is written, "owned and approved by more than twenty thousand." Hence, it appears that the Dissenters had once the honor of contending for the personal reign of Christ on earth, and of suffering for the professing of the same.

Sister H. Wheeler, Mechanicsville, Vt. March 30, writes:

There is a small band of brethren and sisters in this place, numbering between 20 and 30, who are well united, and strong in the faith of soon seeing that same Jesus who was taken up to heaven, so come in like manner as they saw go into heaven.

Letter from Bro. Griggs.

Bro. Marsh:—"Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." Were it not so, I feel at times my heart would fail me. But I have strong confidence in God, that "yet a little while and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Now the just shall live by his faith, but if any man draw back, my soul hath no pleasure in him. Unbelief was the sin which kept the children of Israel from the promised land, and we read of those who will be shut up out of the kingdom when Jesus comes, by committing the same sins. Well might Jesus have said, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth, for surely there is but little now. It grows less and less every day. As time moves on, wickedness increases, and we see the busy world traveling on down to death and ruin, regardless of the impending storm that's so soon to burst upon their guilty heads. Often times the language of my heart is, Lord, what can be done for an unbelieving world and professedly christian church, whose eyes are closed, whose ears are stopped, and whose heart has been hardened through cruel unbelief and rejection of God's eternal truth; and while the inquiry is being made, the answer comes back as from the voice of God, "What more could I have done for my vineyard than that I've already done, and I can but say nothing, for all things are done well.—The sound verily, has gone throughout the universe of God, and the world must become guilty before him, when to judgment he shall come. I have felt, and still feel, that this soul stirring and Bible truth either proves a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death, to every soul that has the light or has the means of getting it, and refuses so to do. The Lord holds us responsible for what we might do, as well as what we do do. Therefore, the greater sin for refusing to investigate the truth when the ability is given and opportunity is presented.—The last of March, a laboring brother and myself visited what we called an "highway," in order to preach the coming of Jesus. The meetings were generally well attended, and some good done. We left a quantity of books for their perusal, and returned happy in the Lord, feeling that we had done our duty, and left the consequences with the good Lord.—This week I received a bundle from the post-office, containing the books I had left (gratis), for their good and the glory of God, with 70 cents postage. The following is a copy.

Mr. C. R. Griggs:

I take this method to return you the trash you left here, it being without any interest save to come-outers, and we have no such stuff in this place, nor do we want any. You will, therefore, with your accomplice, do well to leave your rubbish where it is wanted.

I give the above, to show the contempt and ridicule heaped upon the truth of God, and to show how little faith there is in the world in the Savior's speedy return to judgment. I have visited the brethren in Ware and Hardwick, also in New Salem and Northfield, during the last week.—Most of them are strong in the faith of soon seeing Jesus. The brethren at New Salem, meet at Bro. Macomber's house, and are well united, though but few in numbers. In Brimfield, the saints are looking for redemption this year.

In haste and much love,
C. R. RIGGS.
Brimfield, April 5th, 1846.

Bro. L. W. Hoyt, Griggsville, Ill., March 26, writes:—I send you the small sum enclosed—it is all I have at present. I could in much truth, be embraced in the compass of your charity list; but I have no desire so to be, so long as I can get a dollar, but would be glad to contribute to supply some half dozen of my neighbors with the Voice of truth. I think some might read if it was brought free to the door. These are such as, three years ago, were partly convinced of the truth, but their faith and '43 passed off together. They are connected with the churches and are likely to be there.

I have received the papers agreeable to request—they answer my expectations. I hope they will continue to be the "Voice of Truth," till it shall be lost in the more efficient voice of the Arch-angel's trump. I see some of our brethren are calling for instruction from the word of mouth. I can sympathise with such, and say that a lecture on the Advent doctrine I have never yet heard from the lips of any one. Six years ago, by the word and providence of God, I was led into the Advent faith. I travelled along in common faith of the churches 34 years to 1840; then I was taught a more excellent way, and I have no disposition to return to Egypt, or to Babylon, although I stand in this enlightened community as a witness to bear the stigma that must rest on uncompromising believers in the Advent faith.

Bro. D. Johnson, Collins, N. Y., March 30, writes:—As it respects the cause of the Lord in this place, I have nothing encouraging to say; however, there are some few still looking for the coming of the Lord. Because iniquity abounds the love of the greater number has grown cold. The different sects here have been making some efforts to arouse their respective denominations, but as yet to no purpose. The truth of the coming of the Lord has been scoffed out of their synagogues, but it still lives in the hearts of a humble few who are not ashamed of their hope.

Sister P. Blood, Manlius N. Y. March 25th, writes:—Sister Williams and myself are the only believers in the Advent theory about us, but we are firm in our views, and stand unmoved, although surrounded by formal religion and stupid churches. The cause is very dear to us, and every thing which relates to its prosperity, we grasp with avidity. It is a feast to hear weekly from the friends who are scattered up and down in the world. Sister Williams desired me to propose to you to publish a request in your paper from her to Bro. Johnson, with whom she became some acquainted, that he would, if possible, call on her on his way out west. She lives two miles south west of this village. We really need some one to wake us up in this village; I am sure that the present mode of preaching never will do it.

Bro. W. Bailey, Oxford Pa., Mar. 18, writes:

There was never a time that the second advent doctrine was fraught with such excellence and power as the present time. I often meet with the brethren at Morrisville, where they have powerful meetings. They are a strong band, and are determined to hold fast the beginning of their confidence, firm to the end.

Bro. Bachus and wife from N. Y. city, have been a great help to them, but expect to return in the spring. Their fruits prove them to be truly pilgrims for Jesus' sake.

The brethren are united, and have never experienced the unhappy effects of a division, as in other places. They humbly hope for an entrance to be ministered unto them abundantly into the everlasting kingdom, when the King of kings comes.

Bro. H. Case, Union District, Mich., writes:

I wish to say to all the brethren in Michigan, that I have located in Union District, town of Saline, Washtenaw Co., Mich., where I wish to be addressed. I should like to visit my brethren and speak to them the word of encouragement, as often as my circumstances will admit. Will Bro. G. Needham make us a visit? We wish to have a conference in some central place. I think that such a meeting would be a great benefit to the scattered few in this land. I want the brethren who desire help, to write to me, and give such directions as I shall need to find them. I have been here about four months, and have found one brother, Horace Kellogg, whose heart is warm in the good cause; he lives 7 miles from me. I have held some meetings in his place, and have another appointment on the 22d inst.

Bro. L. E. Bates, Pulaski N. Y., April 1st, writes:—

Bro. Marsh:—The Lord is at work in this northern part of the State: there is a vast field that has never been explored, and the cry comes, borne on every breeze, help, help, help; and could the tears and labors of one supply the demand, the calls should all be answered. But no! the field is too vast, the calls too numerous, and the laborers too few. Bro. Mansfield and myself are all there are at present in this part of the State, "but when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they faint-ed, and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd. Then saith he unto his disciples, the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few, pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." My heart bleeds as I turn to weep in secret places, in view of the present condition of our world, and I tremble for the fate of those servants who sees the gathering storm of God's wrath about to burst upon a devoted world, and are slumbering on their posts. "Who then is a faithful and wise servant whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season.—Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh, shall find so doing."

Letter from Bro. Collins.

Bro. Marsh:—Your paper is still read with much interest, and while you minister to us in spiritual things, we feel it our duty and privilege to minister to your wants in temporal things and so fulfil the law of Christ. I have nothing very cheering to communicate at present, unless it be that our hope in the promise of God made unto the fathers is unshaken, and we still rejoice in the evidences of the speedy consummation of that hope which shine from the word of God. The Advent cause remains about stationary in this vicinity. Our meetings have been more interesting and spiritual this winter than last fall or summer. It is as important now as it ever has been that the motive of the gospel (the coming of Christ and the resurrection) should be kept constantly before us in order to secure the required consecrations; or in other words "Every man that hath this hope in him, [of Christ's second appearing] purifieth himself even as he [Christ] is pure."

We are truly living in perilous times, and need much of the grace of God to enable us to endure to the end. While the claims of the world are pressing hard upon us, the influence of the world and professed church is certainly deleterious to the cause of God, and the spirituality of his children. Is it not our duty to stand aloof from every unhallowed influence, and strive to lead others to see and embrace the truth?

I would just say to Bro. Galusha, that the brethren in this vicinity would be glad to receive a visit from him; and if he can make arrangements to come to Vermont and spend a few weeks we think he might be instrumental in doing much good. Yours in hope of the promise made unto the Fathers,

A. COLLINS.

Westford, Vt., March 30, 1846.

A Rich Extract.

Instead of sending you naked paper, I will venture to copy a note from "Simpson's Plea for Religion, and the Sacred Writings," in answer to Thomas Paine, &c. Speaking of reducing the religious establishments of the country to primitive purity, &c., he says:—"There are many prophecies which declare the fall of the ecclesiastical powers of the christian world. And though each church seems to flatter itself with the hopes of being exempted, yet it is very plain that the prophetic characters belong to them all.—They have left the true, pure, simple religion, and teach for doctrines the commandments of men. They are all merchants of the earth, and have set up a kingdom of this world, abounding in riches, temporal power, and external pomp. They have all a dogmatizing spirit, persecuting such as do not receive their own mark, and worship the image which they have set up. It is very true that the church of Rome is Babylon the Great, and the Mother of Harlots, and Abominations of the Earth; but all the rest have copied her example."

Hartley's Observations on Man-

Be it observed that Hartley was no dissenter, but a most serious, learned, and candid Churchman, and wrote nearly fifty years ago.—Monthly Magazine for May, 1798.

J. REEVE.

Cleveland, O., March, 1846.

Bro. H. Campbell, New York, March 30th, writes:—

Bro. Marsh:—I feel to say with the Psalmist, "O that men would praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men." If we take a look into the past history of man's rebellion against God, we can mark his mercy in giving them timely warning to repent and turn to the Lord before the threatened wrath was poured out on them. Thus it was in the time of Noe and Lot, and Jonah and others, before Christ.—And as his mercy endureth forever, this generation has been effectually warned of their danger. But alas, how few have repented and believed the Gospel. We see such a disposition on the part of man to reject the plainest truth, that we feel at times almost discouraged from making any more attempt at saving them, but we remember that the Lord has borne long with us, therefore we will try again in the name of Israel's God, to save souls. My faith and hope are strong in the Lord. I feel that he is my Father, and I want to do his will, and not my own. I believe '46 or '47 will reveal our King, and that he will then give us the kingdom for which we pray and suffer.

Bro. H. Morgan, Rochester Vt. writes:—

Dear Brethren:—I assure you that your Macedonian cries are heard in this quarter, and a strong desire is felt to respond to them by some at least who would be efficient helpers to you, but alas! they are among the poor of the flock of this world's goods, and are unable to bear the expense of removing a family so far as to reach you. They have gone to the extent of their means in proclaiming the glad sound in this quarter, and in many cases, are under the imperious necessity of betaking themselves to manual labor in any way they can, for the sustenance of their families, till the dear Savior shall come. O could you see what I have seen, you would not censure our eastern brethren in the ministry. It is often the case, that after a hard weeks' work, they walk ten or fifteen miles to visit a humble few who are poor like themselves, and panting for the word of life. Sometimes they get a morsel to carry to their little ones, and sometimes none. They find a sweet repast and ample reward only at the feet of Jesus, in the glorious prospects just before them. I would say to you, if you are weak look to Jesus and be strong. If you are alone, look to Jesus and you will see a host. If you are in darkness, look to Jesus, and light will beam forth to your souls. If you are surrounded with a wicked world, it is just the place to let your light shine. The good Lord has not seen fit to set his lamps all in a cluster, but has distributed them so that each may do its utmost in dispelling darkness. I would say to you that you must win your crown by bearing the cross. Do all you can for Jesus and your neighbors.

Letter from Sister Griggs.

Bro. Marsh:—The weekly arrival of "The Voice of Truth," is hailed by us with joy, while it proclaims the glad news of Christ's kingdom at hand, and the speedy approach of that day, when the works of the enemy shall be destroyed, and "He whose right it is, shall reign in Mount Zion," and before his Ancients, gloriously; when those who sleep in Jesus will be raised, and all that are found abiding in Christ, "changed, and caught up to meet the Lord, and ever be with him." Seeing then that we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness; how diligent and watchful, lest we fail of the promised inheritance through unbelief.

Let us take to ourselves the whole armor that God has provided, that we may be able to stand, "girded about with truth, and our lamps trimmed and burning." Ye way-worn pilgrims, "cheer up," for "your redemption draweth nigh." Jesus will soon appear to the joy of his waiting people. Repine not at the toils of the path, or the unexpected length of the journey; but rejoice, if we may be accounted meet to suffer with Christ, that we may be "partakers of the glory that shall be revealed, and renouncing all other dependence, trust in the arm of Jehovah, for immutable as his throne, is the promise,—"I will come again."—John 14: 3. The signs have been given, whereby we know that his "kingdom is nigh, even at the door," and for this we will wait until faith is lost in sight, and we "behold the King in his beauty." Glory to God, that the promise made to Abraham, that he should be heir of the world, is so soon to be fulfilled. Rom. 4: 13, Gal. 3: 29. Then the meek shall inherit the earth. Matt. 5: 5; Ps. 37: 34. In its renovated state. 2 Pet. 3: 13; Isa. 65: 17-19; 66: 22, and Rev. 21: 1.

Your paper is read with interest by two or three of our neighbors, who are not able to become subscribers, and some other professing christians "have nothing against the "Millerites," only setting the time;" but I rejoice that time has been given, that all who love "Christ's appearing, (2 Tim. 4: 8,) may know when to look for him to come the second time, without a sin-offering unto salvation. Heb. 9: 28. It has been asserted from the desk here, that "Christ will not come yet, the end is not yet nigh." We have not had Advent preaching here, oftener than once in four or six months, since the spring of '44.

May the Lord sustain you in your arduous labors for the spread of the truth, till the work of faith is done.

Yours, in hope of speedy redemption,

SARAH GRIGGS.

EARTHQUAKE IN THE WEST INDIES.—By way of Havana we have received advices from the town of Cuba. On the 23d ultimo, and at half past seven o'clock in the morning, after a calm sultry night, low rumbling sounds were heard.—Suddenly the ground shook violently, causing the greatest consternation. The people rushed into the street for safety. The first shock lasted one or two minutes, and after a lapse of five minutes, the ground was again violently shaken. It was a solemn moment: in every direction the affrighted inhabitants might be seen on their knees, calling on God to save them, expecting every moment to be swallowed up. Several lighter shocks were felt during the forenoon, but it is believed no lives were lost. Several buildings were thrown down, and very many cracked. In the evening, mass was said in all the churches, for their deliverance from death.—Phil. Amer. Wednesday.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

We have nothing of special moment to the Bible student of the news of the day, to record this week. We see however from our exchanges, that the revolution in Poland is at an end, and the poor, oppressed, down trodden Poles, are suffering the vengeance of their oppressors, for the act of trying to be free. Also, that the war in India has terminated. Another bloody battle has been fought, in which the British were completely victorious. They suffered the loss of three or four hundred men, and the Sikhs, twelve thousand! In this human butchery, christian (?) England rejoices! yes, more than she would at the conversion of the same number of these heathens to pure christianity. Our temporal millennium advocates, we suppose, will also see cause for rejoicing in this case of wholesale murder: for, judging from past, similar cases, they will call this victory, the means in the hand of God! of opening an effectual door for their missionaries to gain free access to the heathen! The Mohammedans and Catholics, in the days of their blood and strength, had frequent cause for rejoicing, on the same hellish principle.

The Oregon and Mexican questions are still unsettled. We still think, however, that a war will not grow out of either.

As soon as we obtain the paper we have ordered, the long promised extras on the time of the Lord's coming, shall be issued. Let those who may want for distribution, send their orders, if they have not already done it.

The Conference Address is now ready for distribution. Who will aid in doing good by circulating them? Price only $2 per hundred, or free to those who are unable to pay.

[Selected.]

I AM WEARY.

I am weary of straying—oh fain would I rest
In the joy-promised land of the pure and the best,
Where Sin can no longer her Mandishments spread,
And tears and temptations forever are fled.

I am weary of hoping—where hope is untrue,
As fair, but as fleeting, as morning's bright dew;
I long for that land whose best promise alone,
Is changeless and sure as Eternity's throne.

I am weary of sighing o'er sorrows of earth,
O'er joys glowing visions that fade at their birth—
O'er the pangs of the loved, which we cannot assuage,
O'er the brightings of youth and the weakness of age.

I am weary of loving what passes away—
The sweetest, the dearest, alas, may not stay!
I long for that land where those partings are o'er,
And Death and the tomb can divide hearts no more.

I am weary, my Savior! of grieving thy love;
I sigh for that home where I never shall rove;—
I am weary—but oh never let me repine,
While thy word, and thy love, and thy promise are mine.

AN EXTRACT FROM DR. MATHER'S "FAMOUS LATIN PREFACE" TO HIS WORK ENTITLED "STUDENT AND PREACHER; OR DIRECTIONS FOR A CANDIDATE OF THE MINISTRY."

The second advent of the Lord Christ, which must be expected for the destruction of Antichrist, and perdition of that fourth empire, which he will abolish at his own illustrious coming, is next and immediately to be expected.

But it is not to be wondered at if there be very few who would believe such a preacher; and if a complaint should accompany the clangor and labor of the trumpeters—Lord, who believeth our report?

For when the Lord shall come, he will find the world almost void of true and lively faith, (especially of faith in his coming;) and when he shall descend with his heavenly banners and angels, what else will he find, almost, but the whole church as it were, a dead carcass, miserably putrefied with the spirit and manners and endearments of this world?

We are now in midnight darkness, wherein the church sleeping is to be roused at each ear with that outcry, than which nothing is more seasonable, "The Bridegroom cometh!" But that clamor, the Bridegroom cometh, repeated even a thousand times for the waking of but one soul among ten thousand, will effect hardly anything. The cry is made scarcely otherwise than as in the ears of the dead, after the most vehement repetitions of the same thing.

When I should wish to stir up my brethren who are in a deep sleep, with those messages and admonitions, to shake off this soft and indeed lethargic and deadly slumber, I know that I shall appear to my friends a vain dreamer, a sort of Lot, and that they will treat me as one in jest or sport, and as a man in the falling sickness, seized with I know not what enthusiasm; and that sleep may hold them in still more pleasing fetters, they will make use of, as it were, sleepy medicines, a diversity of commentaries on certain prophecies as not yet fulfilled.

But this word of God is in my mind like burning fire shut up in my bones: nor can I any longer forbear, but must again and again denounce this doom to the earth, sufficiently prepared for the fire, and a sorceress condemned to the flames.

Yea, though some Nero should command me to be burned in the flames, I will not cease to preach and foretell, with an earnest voice, the dissolution, renewal, and purification of the world by fire.

Speedily, with flaming fire; but who knows how soon? The Son of God, about to descend, will inflict vengeance on them who know not God and obey not his gospel; but he will manifest his kingdom of the saints in the earth, which is to be possessed by our second and heavenly Adam;—and this, we confess, is ascertained to us by promise, but in another state, as being after the resurrection.

They indulge themselves in a vain dream, not to say insane, who think, pray, and hope, contrary to the whole sacred Scripture and sound reason that the promised happiness of the church on earth will be before the Lord Jesus shall appear in his kingdom.

Without doubt the kingdoms of this world will not become the kingdoms of God and his Christ, before the pre-ordained time of the dead, in which the reward shall be given to the servants of God, and to those that fear his name.

The rest of the saints, and the promised sabbath, and the kingdom of God, in which his will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven, and those great things of which God hath spoken by the mouths of his prophets, all prophesying as with one voice; all shall be confirmed by their fulfilment in the new earth, not in our defiled and accursed earth.

Rightly, indeed, did those most renowned Fathers in the Nicene council declare, that our earth is no other than the earth of the dying, but that the new earth (with our sweet Psalmist) is the land of the living; adding these words, most worthy of such a council, and of being inscribed on marble for everlasting remembrance: "God foreknew that man would sin; therefore, we expect new heavens and a new earth, according to the sacred books, when the advent and kingdom of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ shall appear to us; and then the exalted saints shall receive the kingdom.

This was the opinion of the primitive church; this her piety, and the ancient faith.

O Justin! to thee I appeal as a witness: in this faith all the orthodox unanimously consented in the primitive church.

And, I pray, in what earth is their crown to be conferred, who have conquered the enemies of Christ and of themselves? In what earth, I pray, shall the conquerors, who share his triumph, enjoy the goodness of the Lord?

But O, ye sinners in Zion! let horror come upon you. O, ye hypocrites! let trembling seize you. Who of you shall be able, or who shall dare, to dwell in the burnings of that fire, in which God, the Judge and the Avenger, will purge indeed this our earth, and introduce that new earth?

In that day, how terrible! how dreadful! (ac-ording to the divine oracles, which are both more durable than the pillars of Seth, and never to be called in question,) the heavens shall pass away with a noise, the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth, and the works that are done on it, shall be burnt up. O, how terrible will be that great day of the Lord, of which not only predictions in the books inspired by God do everywhere sound and resound, but the rumor also hath penetrated to the Pagans and troubled the Stoics themselves; that there should be a time, when the sea, the earth, and the palace of heaven, seized by the flames, should burn, and the globe's prodigious mass be in strong convulsions! Nay, the terrors of that day have already had a kind of small shadow, and no more than truly very minute representation in the most threatening eruptions of Vessuvius, and cities of Sicily swallowed up and sunk into Gehenna.

Very many indeed own, that when the Roman beast, which now deceives and enslaves the nations, shall be slain, the body of that beast is to be delivered to the burning of fire, and therewith to be destroyed; and the daughter of a priest, who profaned herself by whoring, shall perish by burning alive. But they augur that this fire will be altogether metaphorical, and rave of painted fires only—a wonder if not feigned also. A most vain surmise this! What! and even the second coming of the Lord will become, by-and-by, metaphorical also, and must be resolved and vanish away into I know not what mystical dispensations! Away with such dotings of drivellers!

Noah of old, the preacher of righteousness, warned the wicked of his age of that deluge, concerning which, with what great commiseration could the venerable patriarch answer the unbelieving scornors! "Miserable men! know that not any metaphorical waters shall overwhelm you! At length, and presently, ye shall feel literal waters—fatal to you. Yet a little while, and your groans shall be heard from the waters that must be literally understood and inflicted." Nor will it be otherwise in these our last days. Good God, for what times hast thou reserved us!

Scoffers they are, who think that all things are forever to continue as they were from the beginning of the creation, and fancy that they can lurk under their metaphors and hide themselves in the obscurities of figures from the sight of Him who sitteth on the throne.

There are very many good men to be numbered, not indeed with scoffers, but yet with sleepers, and such as lull others to sleep, who, by improper and excessive allegorizing, darken and injure the truth. And I could wish most humbly to advise, or request, and solicit these dear beloved brethren in Christ, that, being taught by second thoughts, they would persist no further in bringing with their charms the spirit of slumber on those sitting weary on the grass. Would that some Nepos indeed might arise, to confute these allegorists, before the event does it for them!

But the event will perform this! Yea, a deluge of fire will do it. That day of the Lord is near and hastening apace: a day of fury, a day of anguish, a day of devastation, and the greatest devastation too; a day of the sounding of the trumpet. All this earth will be consumed in the fire of his zeal: for he is about to make a speedy conclusion with all the inhabitants of this earth.

All things being now accomplished that were to precede the destruction of Antichrist, and the thousand two hundred and sixty days being finished that were to be allowed that adversary, the end is at hand; lo! it is near: that period is nearly present; yea, and the age is already begun, in which the most importunate prophet will perceive the Redeemer granting his request, and shall arrive in his turn at those things for which blessed is he that waiteth. That term of days is almost present, and not to be deferred. The delay of the end is neither to be sought, nor wished for any longer in the prayers of the church. No: but come, Lord Jesus, come quickly! Why delayeth thy chariot its return? Why linger the drivings of the chariots?

Although forewarned by these prophecies, and others of the like kind, in the divine code of both Testaments, truly we are little forearmed, but rather buried in a profound sleep; and therefore that day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night. But where are those wakeful servants of God, whom it will not surprise, while they secure sing, "The Lord delayeth his coming!"

When the Son of God, who is also the Son of man, shall be seen as a sign in heaven, with what agonies and outcries will the earth, that is to be desolated by flames, be filled, as thunderstruck, it shall behold Jesus, from whom a river of fire shall go forth, rising on clouds, and sitting on the throne, and thousands of thousands of angels, even myriads of myriads, ministering unto him, and assisting! Then shall he send his angels, that they may rescue the elect, assembled from all parts of the earth, from these flames, so greatly to be dreaded. In a most corrupt state of the world, where now all flesh hath corrupted his way, they shall be found both obedient to Christ, and walking humbly with their God, and laying up for themselves treasures in the heavens, and sealed for redemption. That nation of the righteous shall possess the new earth, which will become a renovated Paradise, and there, the free being at last extinguished, righteousness shall dwell; and they, being freed from sin, the author of death, and changed into immortality, shall enjoy the Paradise regained.

Art thou a minister of the word? Attend thereto. Thy hearers are to be persuaded by thee; and O! thou thrice and four times blessed man, if thou shalt persuade them, so that, being drawn into serious and sincere piety, they may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, when that day, which shall burn as an oven, shall like a snare invade all the dwellers on the face of the earth, and they shall stand, exulting, in the presence of the incarnate and enthroned God. No business art thou charged with but this. This is the labor, this the work, in which thou must ever sweat.

Art thou a christian? Be on thy guard, by prayer and watchings, not of the eyes indeed, but by the faith of a foreseeing mind, (such as once flourished in the primitive church,) and by the moderate and temperate appetite and sober use of worldly things, lest the sudden and unexpected coming of the Lord unseasonably surprise thee.

Yes, O beloved! prepare; and in the exercise of hope, haste unto the coming of the Lord: and seeing that ye look for such things, study, that ye may be found of him without spot and blameless.

The church is shortly to be gathered.

Letter from Bro. Miller.

Dear Bro. Himes:—Your letter of the 8th inst. was received yesterday; and I am truly thankful that in the midst of our disappointments and confusion of tongues, under all the reproach and scandal of a worldly and popular church, and the derision and scorn of a time-serving and God-dishonouring ministry, you can yet retain so good spirits, and your faith in a speedy redemption. That God may bless and preserve you unto his coming and kingdom, has been, is, and will be my prayer while I retain consciousness and reason.

How it astonishes me to review the way in which God, by his word and providence, has led us for a few years past. If I could have foreseen every step which we have taken, I must have fainted by the way. Yet, blessed be God, I see now in every move we have made, the wisdom and work of God. "The Scriptures must be fulfilled." And I think I must and will be patient, and let God lead, and submissively follow him; "for it is not of man to order his steps."—If we had not made plain the visions of the prophets of God on tables, how would Hab. 2: 1-3 have been fulfilled? If we had not proclaimed '43 as the end of the vision, and that had not passed, how could the vision have tarried to us after the appointed time? See Hab. 2: 3; Heb. 10: 37. And I have often asked myself, What reason can I have to lose my spirits, or cast away my confidence in the glorious and heart-cheering doctrine of soon seeing the King of kings—the Lord of life and glory? None.—I have as much confidence in the manner of his coming, and the objects of, and the events connected with it as I ever had, and much more evidence. I also believe that the time is appointed, and at the end it will speak and will not lie. I believe, in order to fulfil the Scriptures, we were to anticipate the time a little while. "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry." And how our dear Bro. Cook can hold on so tenaciously to '43, and fellowship the spiritualizers, and all the fanatical nonsense of Jacobs, Pickands, and others, I cannot conceive.

And for him to exclude all who have lost no faith in the glorious appearing, resurrection, and kingdom of Christ, and who remain steadfast in the faith, as it was once delivered to the saints, and who also are with him in the providence of God, believing that He has led us in all the way we have travelled, changing no point of faith in doctrine or practice, is to me astonishing. For God has nowhere said in his word, that I can find, that those who look for the personal appearing of Jesus Christ from heaven would be wrong in their faith. On the contrary the word of God holds out encouragement, by saying, "He will come," and exhorts us to be steadfast, and endure unto the end. Can it be said of those brethren, who have changed their views monthly for more than a year past, that they are stable, and endure patiently unto the end? But may it not be said with propriety, "They are carried about by every wind of doctrine," and "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth?" I can be at no loss to know who these are. See 2 Tim. 3: 1-9. But it is not so concerning the time, for God has forewarned us—"If it tarry, wait for it;" yet he does not condemn us for anticipating the time a little while too soon, but exhorts us "to be patient for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." And yet our dear Bro. Cook, rather than give up the position on time, in which we have been deceived, he seems to choose the fellowship of those who, rather than give up '43 and the 7th month, are willing to give up the very crowning point of the Advent doctrine—the personal appearing of Christ. Why is our good brother so inconsistent? It is certain God has given us a remedy for the failure of chronology, but none for a change in manner or matter. Yet Bro. Cook rejects none, however inconsistent and wild may be their views on manner and matter; and at the same time endeavors, in every way that he can, to find fault with, and condemn those who remain steadfast in the doctrine, but who suppose they might have erred in the chronology. For my part, I would rather be sceptical on the time than on the doctrine; for the first depends, in some measure, on man's wisdom and calculation, but the last wholly on God. To doubt the first, would be but questioning the correctness of chronologists; but a rejection of the latter is unbelief in the word of God. While our Bro. Cook exhibits, in his writings, a sweet spirit and a good heart, he shows that his head is in the fog. I pray God to save him from a shipwrecked faith.

I remain looking for Jesus as usual, daily, until he comes,

W. M. MILLER.

Low Hampton, N. Y., April 15, 1846.

Letter from Sister Higgins.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—For some time I have wished to speak a cheering word through your paper to the dear brethren and sisters who have held up my hands, while in feebleness I have attempted to proclaim the good news of the kingdom, and warn a perishing world of the approaching judgment. And while pleading at a throne of grace, their forms one after another rise before me, and I am comforted by the assurance that I can (tho' absent in body) commend them to our merciful High-Priest, who has been tempted in all points like ourselves, and is able to succor us in our unprecedented trials. Yes, Jesus pities, and is touched with the feeling of our infirmities; he knows too how to deliver.

I do praise the Lord that some have been enabled to stand unmoved amid the whirlwind, and are now leading on the host of God's elect to the last moral battle before victory will be given, and Jesus crowned Prince of Peace and King of kings. To stand erect, independent of sect, party, or creed, with the unvarnished truth; to be a Bible Christian, to walk with God, to be an independent editor, to publish that and that only that will be for the glory of God, is required at your hands. "Who is sufficient for these things?"—May the Lord still continue to give you his grace, that your eye may be single, and your whole body may be full of light.

We hail your paper with joy, and are always cheered and refreshed with the glad tidings it brings us from the scattered Israel. I have been looking for some time for a word through this medium from our brother C. Morley. I trust he is strong in the blessed hope of seeing our King in all his beauty at the appointed time, now that he sees those prophecies fulfilled which prevented him from coming fully into the 10th day movement. I refer to the 1st and 2nd chaps. of Joel, and their fulfillment as recently spread before your readers. How beautifully has Wesley described it.

Whatever fills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good, we call;—
A Sign of Jesus near:
His chariot will not long delay,
We hear his rumbling wheels, and pray—
Triumphant Lord, appear!

Who, that believes the word of God, can look upon the present condition of the world, and be ignorant of its approaching doom?

I am grieved to see some shrinking back from time; some who have stood in the moral battle on this question, and nobly won the field, now tamely lay down the sword at the feet of our vanquished foe. The great question, Is time a matter of revelation, was the first point settled in my mind after seeing where in the world's history we lived. Secondly, that time has been fulfilled exactly. Thirdly, that God's people have always understood the time with sufficient exactness to answer the purpose for which it was given. The next question that presents itself is, for what purpose was time given relative to the day of judgment? (for none can I think evade the time given in the 12th of Dan. but the willingly ignorant.) Obviously, that the world might be warned, and that the people of God might not be overtaken as a thief. The present time seems to gather strength by the passing of other points of time, and I do not see any way to evade the conclusion that this present year will bring deliverance to all the waiting people of God; all who love the appearing of Jesus.

Patience, my soul, on God rely;
Deliverance soon will come.

I was exceedingly unwilling to look at the evidences of the present time on account of the manifest hand of God in the past; but I have learned to lay my opinion or experience down at the feet of Jesus, being confident that he will vindicate all that has been of himself after sifting it from human wisdom, and human frailty. One thing was certainly gained by the last movement, i. e., the world cannot now charge us with insincerity as formerly. They may brand us as fanatics, if they please, but they cannot now say, you do not believe it. In the sacrifices, were arguments that made the stoutest heart quail. But I am astonished at the presumption of some who, like rebellious Israel are determined to go into the land of Canaan whether the Lord goes with them or not. See Num. 14: 40.

As to our warfare against the sects, while I admit that much has been said and written that did not savor of the 'meekness of wisdom,' yet I think the picture has not been overdrawn. Any one can see that for a Protestant to join the Roman church, knowing her abominations; that she is drunk with the blood of martyrs; and that she endorses all her past acts by the claim of infallibility: to join her communion, would make us partakers of her sins, and liable to her plagues.—What better would be the case, to join a church whose members are like the following:—'Lovers of themselves, covetous, (which is idolatry) boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false-accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure, denying the power of God.' What! Paul, are these charges against the church of your day? No, verily; against the professors (having a form of godliness) of 'the last days.' Now we are either living in the last days, or we are not; if we are, such professors as the above abound, and it is the duty of all God's children to 'turn away' from such.—I do praise the Lord that I am free from the incubus of a dead church. It should now be our great concern—'Am I ready?'—ready now?—have I now the witness of the Spirit in myself? and have I tried that spirit by the infallible standard, the Word? Do I bring forth the lovely fruits of that Spirit? Dear brethren and sisters, be faithful a little longer, and the crown will soon be given. I can, by God's help, win that crown, and rest with my lovely Jesus.

Yours, waiting for the Consolation of Israel,
SARAH J. HIGGINS.

SUNDRY THOUGHTS.

Bro Marsh:—I am anxious to write on a number of points, but my present cares, and travels from place to place, prevent at present, yet I will offer a few remarks. First, on the commencement of Christ's ministry. It has been often said in the advent papers, that Christ began his ministry when he was 30 years old, and that he could not enter upon it before or after that age. The reason assigned for this statement is, that "the Jewish Priests began their work at 30 years old, hence, to fulfil the law, Jesus when 30, must begin to preach. The proof adduced by each, is Num. 4: 3; 8: 24, and 1 Chron. 23: 2-4. On examination of these texts, I find they prove that the Levites, and not the Priests, enter at 30, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation; a separate work from the Priest's office.—If there is other evidence that the Jewish Priests began their work when 30 years old, will some one give it? 2d. Will they then prove Christ must follow the custom of the Jewish Priests in this respect? and 3d. Show why he must not continue, and do other acts as the Priests did, and on the months and on the days that he performed acts under the law?

2d. Mistake in Chronology. I see it also stated, if the chronology was correct, Jesus would have come in "43," while others say it is correct, but He was cut off "in the midst of the week," which statement is true. It seems to me this question should occupy our present attention. It is a clear case that Christ could not begin to teach at 30—preach or confirm the covenant in person one week or seven years, and at the same time be put to death "in the midst of the week:" both are not true. Again, if the chronology is four years incorrect, so that A. D. 1 was the fourth of Christ's age, and A. D. 33 was the thirty-seventh of his age, and he began his ministry when he was 30, he must have preached seven years, and of course (this being true,) he could not be cut off in the centre of the week. In this article I have not time or space to present my convictions on this point.

3d. The Temple of God. I believe it is generally conceded, that this temple in 2 Thess. 2: 4, refers "to the church, or congregation of the saints." 2d. That "the man of sin," was to sit or be located in this temple—i. e., be the seat and field of his operations. If these positions are true, and who doubts them? I would ask 1st if "the man of sin" is to sit any where else, until destroyed by the brightness of the Lord's coming? 2d. If this is to be his place, must not God's people expect always to have in their midst, those who "worship the beast?" Rev. 13: 8, "make war with the saints," "and work with all power, and signs, and lying wonders?"

3d. If the advent people are God's people, must not this power be at work among them?

4th. Can any one show how the Catholic power is now fulfilling these marks among us?

Fourth. Does the world end at the close of the 1000 years of Rev. 20? Answer: I believe not, but that it will be melted prior to the one thousand years reign with Christ. I will now mention a few passages to prove my position. 1st., Job's words. "Man that lieth down, riseth not till the heavens be no more." Job 14: 12. Here he places the time of the resurrection (which is at Christ's coming,) aside of the time of the conflagration; Peter gives the detail thus: But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which, the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, (be no more,) and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. 2d.—Isaiah's words. This prophet in chapter 26: 19, speaks of the resurrection, and call of the saints out of this earth, for the good reason that the Lord cometh out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth, at which time Micah declares the mountains shall be molten under him, and not 1000 years after this. Mich. 1: 2-4. Hear all ye people, hearken O! earth, and all that therein is, and let the Lord God be a swift witness against you, (Mala 3: 5,) the Lord from his "holy temple;" For behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and the mountains shall be molten under him. David corroborates this view, in Psa. 50: 3-5; 97: 3-5. "The hills melted like wax at the presence (or appearing) of the Lord.

God first created the earth, and then planted a garden in it, as the Capitol of the world. So John in Rev. 21: 1, saw 1st, the new earth, and 2d, the New Jerusalem, the city of the second Adam, come from God out of Heaven upon that earth. As a final proof that the New Jerusalem comes before the millennium, let it be remembered that she (the mother of all the saints,) is a dressed, (Isa. 54: 15,) and told of the gathering of her enemies against her. "Behold all, they gather themselves together against thee, but not by me." That is, I will not be the agent who will gather this innumerable company of enemies against thee, but some other agent will. The devil, according to Rev. 20, is the agent; "Who-soever shall gather together against thee, shall fall for thy sake." Here is the same gathering of the enemies of Jerusalem, described in Rev. 20: 7-10. And the same defeat attends them in each instance. Destruction from the Almighty overwhelms them. Thus, the New Jerusalem must be on the earth before the close of the 1000 yrs., in order to fulfil this gathering of the wicked, at the end of the 1000 years. Who can suppose, the city "so holy and clean," will come on to this earth, which is nigh unto cursing, whose end is, to be burned? Heb. 6: 8.

T. F. BARRY.

Rochester, April 6, 1846.

RONGE.—We have repeatedly expressed our fears that the movement of Ronge in Germany was less Protestant in its character than some anticipate. It is well known that the advocates of a temporal millennium look to this movement with the greatest interest, as indicative of the dawning of that day. The indications are, however, beginning to thicken, which show that but little is to be hoped from Ronge in favor of pure and undefiled religion. The following from the "Christian Alliance" accords with our own opinion. The "Friends of Light" referred to, are not the most friendly to sound theology.—Advent Herald.

RONGE.—Some fears are entertained in regard to the true Protestant character of Ronge. If the movement of which he appears to be the master spirit, is a mere secular affair, having no higher ends than a change of civil administration, to be effected by worldly policy, we cannot augur much for its benefits to pure Christianity. While for the present we suspend judgment of the character and design of his movement, we are in duty bound to hope for the best. "But Ronge himself shows, in his last developments, a decided antipathy against the doctrines of the Reformation.—As the whole movement is received with such great and unexpected applause by the 'Friends of Light,' and, as his destitution of a belief in the Bible is more and more manifest, he has now openly declared against such churches as the Lutheran and the Reformed. He will join with the 'Friends of Light' in their scheme of bringing out the Reformation of our age."

Cause of Our Mistakes.

It has often occurred to my mind, that one reason why Adventists have not been able to define the exact termination of the 2300 days, is, the difficulty there is in fixing the exact point where any great national event is to be dated.—Suppose 300 years hence, a writer on prophecy should wish to determine the commencement of the independence of the United States, and should resort to books and papers to determine the precise date of that Independence, how very liable he would be to make a mistake, though furnished perhaps with an abundance of historical means. He would readily find, that on the 4th of July, 1776, a Declaration of Independence was signed and published by delegates from different portions of this nation, authorized by the people to do as they did, and that the 4th of July had been observed, perhaps down to his day, as the anniversary of that event, consequently it would seem clear, that the above day and year constitute the true date.

—But suppose a disappointment to occur, and a re-examination to take place, it would be found that this nation was not independent at, or immediately subsequent to the signing of the declaration; but the principal part of their hard struggle, was afterwards; and had they not had foreign assistance, must, in all probability, have failed.— Their declaration only set forth what they were determined to be, but to achieve that desirable object, was a work of the future. Inspiration embraces in prophecy the object, when it is achieved, and a nation, when it becomes a nation in fact.

The above hints may be of use to some minds who are tried on the account of mistakes as to time, as all know that great national events fix the commencement of the prophetic periods, named by Daniel and John; and great national events fix the termination of most of these numbers.

The restoration of the Jews, and building of Jerusalem, were great national events. The fall of Paganism, and ascendancy of papacy in the Roman empire, were also great national events. The fall of papacy was another event of like character. In relation to all these events, greater difficulties exist, in trying to fix the exact date of any of them, than can be supposed could exist 300 years hence, in trying to fix the exact date of the Independence of the United States.

It is clear that the time was given to Daniel, that should reach to the end of this world in its present order, and that God designed the time to be understood, for God would be guilty of foolishness, to give revelations that he did not design to be understood, and it seems clear to me, that the only reason why we have failed hitherto in fixing the time, is owing to the difficulties mentioned above. The Savior saw that these difficulties would exist, hence he did not give the time, for the same difficulties would attend any mode of time that might be given—but he gave us signs, which, together with what we should know of the time given, would enable us to know when his coming was at the door.

ROCHESTER, MAY 13, 1846.

Present Expenses.

The expense of publishing the five thousand copies of the Conference Address, has been considerable, not far from $600. Money for the Address to about half the amount of this sum has been received. We expect to have to pay soon between one and two hundred dollars for a lot of printing paper, which we have ordered for the weekly issue of the Voice of Truth, and the long promised extras on the time of the Second Advent of Christ. Besides this our other current expenses, have been considerable, just at this time. Therefore, our brethren who are indebted for their paper, and can do it without embarrassment to themselves, will much oblige by forwarding our dues as soon as convenient.

Our Editorial

Is quite stinted this week. Perhaps it is all for the best; for we have generally occupied quite a large space in our columns—possibly more than has been for the edification and spiritual good of our readers. This, however, is not our apology for the small space we fill this week. It has been 'moving week' with us, and we in common with many others who have no abiding home here, have been under the necessity of taking up our residence in another tenement. This has so engrossed our attention and occupied our time, that we have been unable to write much for this week's paper. We have, however, made a rich selection from the pens of others. Next week, the Lord willing, we will give our promised evidences that the coming of Christ is nigh, even at the door.

CONFERENCES.

We have not been able to comply with either of the recent requests of certain brethren for a Conference in their place. They had better, if they can obtain the assurance of one efficient Lecturer, that he will attend, to make their appointment, at a time when it will not interfere with appointments already made, and they will doubtless obtain all the help necessary. Two or three ministers are sufficient for such a meeting. Or, if this course should be thought not advisable, then we would propose that your request be made to our brethren, when convened, at some one of the conferences already appointed.

This is the best we can do, or rather say, for our brethren now. Were it in our power to do so, gladly would we run at all their urgent calls for help, but we cannot. Truly, the harvest is great, and laborers are few. O Lord, send out more faithful laborers into the field already ripe for the sickle!

Question and Answer.

"Were the types in the Law of Moses all fulfilled in Christ's first coming, and confirming the covenant with many for one week, (Dan. 9: 27) together with his apostles? (Heb. 2: 3.)—Or will the fulfilment of them only be accomplished at his second advent?"

To this brother's honest enquiry we will briefly answer in the words of Scripture—Christ was "the end of the law"—it was to "be abolished"—"it was abolished;"—at the crucifixion Christ "took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." It was a law of types and shadows; and if the types are yet to be fulfilled, the law, of which they are a part, is still in force, is not abrogated. If this is the case, the law is still our "schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ;" consequently he has not come the first time, and the sad conclusion is, Christianity is a delusion, and the Jew, tenacious for the law of Moses, is right. "The law was a shadow of good things to come," but the body, or substance to which that shadow pointed is Christ. Let us follow the substance and not the shadow, if we would walk in the true light, and not stumble in darkness.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Report says (and it is believed by many of the professed knowing ones to be true) that the difficulties between this country and England, growing out of the Oregon question, are all settled, or in a train of amicable adjustment. The attitude of Mexico and the United States toward each other is yet hostile; no rupture, however, has yet lit up the torch of war between these two republics. We are still of the opinion they will not fight: it however is only an opinion; founded upon those prophecies which seem to forbid the idea of a general war or wars existing at the time of the revelation of the Son of Man.—We are doubtless near that moment. And just before his appearing, instead of being engaged in war and the destruction of life and property, the great mass will be enjoying supposed peace, and safety from the approaching judgments which are coming upon the world. This is the condition of the world now, and we verily believe it will soon be aroused from its slumbers by the trump of God, and be called to take part, a fearful part, in the "battle of the Great Day of God Almighty." This is the next general war for which we are looking. God will fight in that day, and the slain of the Lord will be from one end of heaven to the other.

The news from other parts of the world is unimportant, only that the entire nations of the globe are approaching very near to a fearful crisis. Poor Ireland it seems is now suffering the horrors of a famine. Says the late news from Europe:

"The intelligence from Ireland is painfully distressing. In some parts of Tipperary, the peasantry, unable any longer to resist the cravings of hunger, have taken the case in their own hands, plundered the provision shops, broken into the flour mills and helped themselves. The town of Clonmell is in a state of siege. Troops are obliged to escort provisions as they pass through the streets, and the unfortunate creatures whose bones are described as protruding through their skins, are only kept down by the fear of the bayonet."

Bro. Weston's Letter.

Bro. Weston will pardon the liberties we have taken with his letter. The omissions we have made, though they contain conclusive arguments against the views entertained by Bro. Cook, yet we are confident they advocate a sentiment as void of Bible truth as those are which they oppose. The parable of the ten virgins is explained by the Savior. We cannot therefore suffer that explanation to be thrown into the shade, for the opinions of the best and most critical Bible students on earth. And besides, as we have repeatedly stated, scarcely two writers agree in their expositions of this parable. And no wonder they do not, for they follow their own fancy and wisdom in trying to give a meaning to it different from what the Savior has clearly taught us it was designed to convey.

That part of Bro. Weston's letter which we have given will be read with interest and we trust with profit by all our readers. The following is an extract of the letter to which we refer:

To Bro. J. B. Cook and Others of like Faith.

Dear Bro. Cook:—Immediately after reading your discourse in the "Day Star," on "The Doctrine of Providence," I set down to write you, and knew not how to address you but through the medium of the press. Before I had finished my article, a doubt arose as to what paper I should address it. Bro. Jacobs had had an article some weeks before from me on the same subject, in the main, which he promised to publish, but did not. I concluded, therefore, that it would be useless to send again to the "Day Star," and I knew not whether you would see the "Advent Herald," or "Voice of Truth." As Bro. Galusha has addressed you through both of these, and you seem not to take exceptions to it, I presume I shall be allowed the same privilege, especially as Bro. G. has not touched the point at issue; though he has written you an excellent letter with one or two exceptions. The question at issue seems to be this, Has the Advent movement—the preaching of '43—the tarrying time—the preaching of the 7th month, &c., been in fulfilment of prophecy, and consequently has God's agency been in all this, or has it not? I answer unhesitatingly in the affirmative, and I think it capable of the fullest proof. Your discourse on "The Doctrine of Divine Providence," I admire with the exception of a few sentences on the "Shut Door." &c. and I have wished that with these exceptions, it might find its way into the columns of the "Advent Herald" and "Voice of Truth." I believe it is meat in due season to the scattered flock, for the want of which many are weak and sickly among us, and many sleep.

Those of our brethren who believe the Bridegroom has come, and the door is shut, and those who reject the past movement as our errors, seem alike guilty with those mentioned in Josh. 9: 14. They decide without asking counsel of the Lord. Adventists generally have believed that Hab. 2: 2, referred to our time. That it does, seems evident from several considerations.

1st. Here is a vision spoken of as tarrying, and no vision can tarry without definite time being attached to it, and that time expiring before the realization of the events spoken of in the vision. But this vision is not in reality to tarry but seemingly so to us, because we should fix upon a time for its ending anterior to its real ending. At the end it should speak and not lie—it should not tarry. That this refers to Daniel's vision is evident because Daniel's is the only vision in all the Bible that has definite time attached to it, and consequently the only one that could seem to tarry.

2d. Another proof that Hab. 2 refers to our time is found in the fact that Paul in Heb. 10, quotes from Hab. and refers that tarrying to the time of Christ's second coming.

3d. Christ in Matt. 24 & 25, speaking of the events which would precede his coming, speaks of the same tarrying, and tells what would take place during that tarrying.

You say, "Now mark! somebody, or something did these things at the time specified in the vision written on tables. It was a freak of nature, chance, mesmerism, human influence, the Devil, or else in accordance with predictions of Jesus. If the last, then we had the right time, God put his seal upon it—we did understand the vision—the vision did speak and not lie." Stop brother—not so fast. Do not like the Israelites, (Josh. 9: 14) make the league before you ask counsel at the mouth of the Lord. If you will turn to Hab. 2, you will find that the vision was not to speak until the end, which end was not until after the tarrying time, when that time was finished. It appears plain, that God, to accomplish his purposes, intended to have us write out the tables, or charts, plain, and easy to be understood, and fix on a time for the ending of the vision anterior to the true ending.

But some will ask, "Did God mean to have you fix on a wrong time and preach a lie?" Nay O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it why hast thou made me thus?" You will see at once that if Hab. refers to our time, we did not, and could not hit upon the true ending of the 2300 days in writing our charts. The vision is yet for an appointed time, beyond what is written. It has been done as God commanded—the vision was written and made plain—our time run out, and the tarrying time came.

I must agree with you that "when a predicted event does occur, we may know that it is a fulfilment of the prediction, and that God's providence has interposed for its fulfilment. To such events there are no seconds any more than a second birth, or baptism, or burial of Messiah. The chariot of providence rolls by—the event looms up with God's seal impressed upon it—it never recurs." You say, "all attempts to re-adjust the propetic periods is labor worse than lost. The idea that chronologists have erred, and have caused us to err, looks like playing into the hands of infidels." But you can see from what is said above, that we could not have hit upon the true ending of the vision in writing our charts without frustrating God's plan. We could then no more see the true ending, than the vision could have been understood before the unsealing at the time of the end—no more than the disciples could discern who Jesus was when "their eyes were holden that they should not know him, Lu. 24: 16. But after the running out of our charts should we not search for the yet appointed time of Hab. 2? If we were ever right in preaching time, by a parity of reasoning we are now.

I can never give the infidel half the ground by talking about "doubtful chronology," but I can take my Bible and show the infidel that the Advent movement thus far, has been in exact fulfilment of prophecy, written hundreds and thousands of years ago, and many I have seen stand amazed at the exact fulfilment.

CHARACTER OF THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES.

I wish to make a remark on some words of Father or Bro. Miller, published recently, in which many of the adventists are represented as having made an unholy attack upon the churches, if I can do it in a proper manner and with a right spirit. It is a time of extreme trial; minds, the best fortified, have all they can do to resist temptation: those less established, are more liable to be overcome. The adventists generally, have separated from the churches, if not formally, they have in spirit and doctrine—they could not do their duty and enjoy religion, without doing this. Within the circle of my acquaintance, there is not one of the very many who believed the advent doctrine in '43, that has remained in fellowship with the churches, who now openly profess to believe that doctrine, or to all appearance enjoys religion, except where the principal influence of the church is on the side of the advent.

The churches generally, are using all means to discourage those whom they can influence, and induce them to join in with the church again; in some cases holding out worldly inducements.—Under all these circumstances, a very little said by Father-Miller, will go very far to encourage some to go back to their former church relations, and consequently, to their former spirit. Some painful occurrences have come under my observation, which have occasioned these remarks.

I venerate Father Miller, as one whom God in his providence has raised up for a great work, and from some acquaintance with him in Dresden, in the State of New York, perhaps 20 years ago, I conceived that he possessed an unusual share of those qualities that constitute the gentleman and christian, though at that time an opposer of some of the sentiments that I preached—yet, after all, I look on Bro. Miller as a man, as liable to err as any other man under similar circumstances.

As it respects myself, I was led to the views I now have respecting the churches, about fifteen years ago. I then commenced preaching what I now preach; the developements that time has made, have only strengthened my views beyond the possibility of doubt, that the Protestant church as a body, is awfully corrupt, and that the way is fast preparing for as dark, general, and deep infidelity, as ever engulfed France. At different times for months, my spirit has been weighed to the earth, by a sense of what was coming. In '42, I got hold of Father Miller's views, and a ray of hope and glory beamed on my soul. But why is it that such a fuss should be made by the church about what adventists have said? a large portion of their own preachers, say as many, and as hard things, as adventists can say, and it makes no disturbance. The fact is, it is not so much the truth that has been preached which has aroused the indignation of the church, but adventists have practised what they preached, if they have not been hypocrites. I mean by this, that Adventists have meant what they said, and when they have seen there was no hope of reform, have withdrawn, as God's word requires of them to do. The other class proclaim the evils, but with the next breath, extoll and praise the church; proclaim its virtues, and point to its certain triumph! Such preachers either do not believe what they say, or are so dead as not to realize the evil, or they consider the interest of the party paramount to all other considerations. If a man stays in the church, he may preach almost any thing he pleases, but let it be rumored that he intends to leave, and the cry is immediately raised against him.

I will conclude the article with a brief reference to the 17th chap. of Rev., and 5th verse.—If the expression, "Mother of Harlots," implies daughters, we are certainly authorized to look for these daughters somewhere. Now, if this mother is an ecclesiastical establishment, as is generally admitted, the daughters must also be religious bodies, not of the same name of the mother, nor of the same age or strength, and they may not possess all the peculiarities of the mother's dress or outward show, but they possess the essential elements of the mother's nature and character.—I think it has been clearly proved by Bro. Marsh and others, that the Roman Catholic church is this mother. The essential elements of her character were, and are yet, unbelief, pride, ambition, avarice, and the love of pleasure; all the history of that church shows that a combination of these principles have led to all the abominations that constitute that church such a horrid monster.—Let us now look for the daughters, or other religious bodies possessing the same essential element of character. I look to the great body of the protestant churches, and first, is there no unbelief? need I answer? I am constrained to believe that a large portion of the church members of our day, have no living confidence in God's word as to pride: can any one show a distinguishing line between the great body of the church and the world? In this particular sin, is not the church up even with the world in fine or costly buildings, fine furniture, fine dress, and vain show? How does the world expend so much for ornament as is expended by the churches in their meeting-houses, and on their pulpits? They are also proud of their numbers, their learning, their popularity, and their wealth. Take the clergy, and there is no class of men of any profession, who appear more foppish, and act out the dandy than many of these same professed servants of Jesus do. A proud and foppish minister, is the most loathsome sight I ever beheld.

Ambition—Preachers striving for popularity and greatness, churches laboring for respectability in the world, to be more numerous than others around them, laboring to bring all others to their faith.

Avarice.—Are not the members of the church as anxious to accumulate property as the world? Do they not enter into all the speculations of the world, holy or unholy—from the neighborhood deal, up to the selling the souls and bodies of men.

Lovers of pleasure.—What pleasures do the world pursue, that the majority of the church members do not participate in?

I have pursued this subject to a sufficient length to show that there is a fearful resemblance in the particulars mentioned between Protestants and Catholics, and should we go into a minute detail of the blasphemies, abominations, and cruelties, that grew out of the elements of the character of the old Mother, we might also find corresponding fruits, though different in degree, and in a somewhat different dress, among Protestants.

From all this, and much more which might be added, it seems to me that a fearful relation exists between the popular churches and the old mother, so that I cannot censure Bro. Marsh for his cry, "Come out of Babylon."

The Happy Man.

A pious divine had prayed earnestly many years, that God would be pleased to send him a man to teach him the perfect way of truth. One morning he was told in a dream, to go to the church, where he would find an instructor in the way of truth and holiness. When he came to the church door, he found a man in rags, to whom he wished a good morning. I never had a bad morning, replied the poor man. That is very singular, I wish you always fortunate. I never was unfortunate, said he. I wish you always happy, said the divine. I was never unhappy, said the poor man. I wish, said the divine, you would explain your meaning. That I will cheerfully do, said he. I said that I never had a bad morning, for every morning, if I am pinched with hunger, I praise God. If it is rain, or snow, or hail, whether the day is serene or tempestuous, I praise God, and therefore never had a joyless morning. If I am miserable in outward circumstances, and despised, I still praise God. You wished me to be always fortunate; but I cannot be unfortunate, because nothing befalls me but according to the will of God; and I believe his will is always good, in whatever he does, or promises to be done. You wished me always happy; but I cannot be unhappy, because my will is always resigned to the will of God. But what would you say if God would thrust you down to hell? I have two arms, humility and love, with which I would hold fast my incarnate God and Savior, and not let them go; and I would rather be in hell with God, than in heaven without him. The divine, astonished at the poor man's answers, asked whence he came? I came from God.—Where did you find him? Where I left the world. Where did you leave him? With the pure in heart. What are you? I am a king. Where is your kingdom? In my own heart. I have learned to rule my appetites and passions, and that is better than to rule any kingdom in this world. How were you brought into this happy condition? By silence, spiritual meditation, and union with God. Nothing below God could satisfy my desires. I have now found him, and in him, found peace and rest.

Bro. A. L. Kingsley, Bangor N. Y., April 7, writes:—In respect to the cause in this place, it is very low, but there are a few of us that meet together for prayer and conference. Our meetings are from six to eight miles apart: we expect however soon to meet where parting will be no more.

I am of the opinion that we have not had the true "midnight cry," for the following reasons. First, there will be no tarrying after that cry is made. 2d. No slumbering and sleeping. 3d. There will be no more conversions, because, "while they (the foolish,) went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Afterwards came also those other virgins." I have many other reasons for this view of the subject, but perhaps it is not best for me to give them.

Yours, expecting the Nobleman's return this year.

Letter from Bro. Roney.

Bro. Marsh:—I for the first time, take my pen to communicate to the dear saints a few words of exhortation (if you think them fit for publication) to those 'who are of like precious faith' with us, in "looking for, and hastening unto the coming of the day of God." What should our duty be in reference to this fact? Why, we should not forget the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." I believe good, warm, spiritual exhortations are much needed in these 'last days' of 'perilous times,' when the adversary of all righteousness, and the opposers of our hope, are striving in all the ways imaginable, to rob us of it.—"Why don't you give it up," say they, as a great many honest men have, and believe in a temporal millennium. Give up what I ask.—"Why, your hope of soon seeing Jesus, as you call it." What, give that up? No, never will any true saint of God, who has that hope in their souls, fixed, grounded, and settled, as long as they live at the feet of the blessed Jesus, and are looking and waiting for the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom, you need not expect that they will give up the truth for error, for that which God no where teaches in his word. "But, says one, do you call the preaching of the Lord's coming, at hand, truth?" I do, and one of the most prominent truths of the Bible: personal and visible as he went up into heaven, even so he will come again. Search and see. But what do you call error? Those doctrines that contradict the plain teachings of the Bible: such as "the return of the carnal Jews, to the land of Palestine," and a 'millennium' this side of the coming of Christ, and that the "Bridegroom has come, the door is shut," &c. All of which are calculated by the adversary, to lead souls from the right path, and blind them in delusion, spiritualism, mysticism, and Judaism: the fog of which, darken the counsels of the Lord, blind the understanding of men, and keep them groping in the dark, and slumbering upon the brink of eternal wo: and I fear they never will be awakened until Gabriel's shrill clarion rends the vaulted skies, and the Lord of glory, with all his shining hosts, descending upon his azure throne, bursts upon their astonished vision. Then they will be awakened, but ah! too late. Then they will be convinced of the truth of the Lord's coming, but their hope will be gone forever. Then they will be disappointed, for while they are crying 'peace and safety, sudden destruction cometh;' and while looking for peace, 'behold no good came, and for a time of health, and behold trouble!' A greater disappointment than ever those that are looking for the Lord have met with, because he did not come when they expected him.

But as I said before, exhortations are needed on patience, holiness, meekness, watchfulness, faithfulness, charity, union, &c. 'Let patience have its perfect work,' James 1: 4; and 5: 7. 'Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord.' It is by patience that men possess their souls. Luke 21: 19. "For ye have need of much patience; that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." Heb. 10: 36. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." "Be ye holy, for I am holy." "The meek shall inherit the earth." "He will beautify the meek with salvation." "The meek shall increase their joy." "Seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." "Walk with all holiness and meekness." "Watch and be sober." "Watch and pray." "Watch thou in all things." "What I say unto you I say unto all, watch." "The Lord preserveth the faithful." It will not be said to them that are not faithful, 'well done.' God help us to be 'faithful stewards of the manifold grace of God.' 'Charity rejoiceth in the truth, thinking no evil, is not puffed up, charity never faileth. Unity is the bond of peace.' "Behold how good it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

There are a few in Massena who are still holding on, and "looking for that blessed hope."—They have had to contend with spiritual wickedness in almost every form. But glory to God we shall soon be delivered. Shall we turn back?—If we do, we shall not be fit for the kingdom.—Let us press forward, the king will soon come.

Yours, in hope of soon seeing Jesus,

S. J. RONEY.

Rich Extract.

Bro. Marsh:—I yesterday by chance, or rather by providence, took up Simpson's Plea for Religion, 1814. He has selected 109 prophecies and I think it may encourage and comfort some of the good brethren and sisters, by copying a page from his work.

Page 144, Prophecy 93. "When Messiah should arise from the dead, he was to bring some token with him, of his victory over the infernal powers. When Jesus Christ entered the state of the dead, he led captivity captive, loosed the bands of death, and raised many bodies of the saints, who were confined under his dominion. Compare Psa. 68: 18, with Math. 27: 52.

Prophecy 94. Messiah was to ascend up into heaven, and reign there at his Father's right hand, invested with universal dominion. Jesus Christ did ascend up into heaven, in the sight of many witnesses, and took his place at the right hand of power, invested with universal dominion. Compare Psa. 16: 11; 68: 18; Isa. 9: 6, 7; Luke 24: 50, 51; Acts 1: 9; and Math. 28: 18.

The excellent Tillotson observes, that "all things which the Prophets had foretold concerning the Messiah, were punctually made good in the person, and actions, and sufferings of our Savior." Ser. 103.

Pro. 95. When Messiah ascended into heaven, his ascension was to be attended with the ministers of heaven, to usher him into his Father's presence. When Jesus Christ ascended up into heaven, two men stood by the apostles in white apparel, and addressed them on the joyful occasion. Compare Daniel 7: 13, 14, with Acts 1: 10: 11.

Pro. 96. Messiah was to send down from heaven, the gift of the Holy Ghost, as a token and pledge that he was exalted, and that his Father was pleased with what he had done upon earth, for the redemption of his people. Jesus Christ sent down the gift of the Holy Ghost, in the most conspicuous and miraculous manner. Compare Psa. 68: 18; Joel 2: 28-32, with Acts 2: 1-4, & Eph. 4: 8-12.

Want of room prevents me adding but one more, the last.

Pro. 109. Messiah was to destroy death itself, triumph over the grave, and create new heavens and a new earth, wherein should dwell universal righteousness. Jesus Christ is he who alone is equal to the mighty undertaking, and is divinely appointed to that office. Hosea 13: 14; Isa 65: 17, and 66: 22; 1 Cor. 15: 54, 55; Rev. 20: 14, and 21: 4.

Take courage, brother. He who so faithfully fulfilled all that the ancient prophets foretold of him in 96 instances, can you dare doubt that he will not as strictly fulfill the other 13, making 109? Glory to God, he hath declared, and it shall be done. Sinner, are you ready? If not, fly to Jesus, who alone can save you in the day of his power. He that shall come, will come at the time appointed.

Even so, come Lord Jesus, Amen.

Letter from Bro. Burnham.

Bro. Marsh:—I embrace a few moments to inform you of the comfort and strength it gave me to read of your harmonious Conference, the spirituality, love and faith, with a firm and joyful hope of speedy redemption that the meeting seemed blessed with, is news, reviving to my soul.—The address breathes the healing holy spirit of truth, it cheers the heavenward pilgrim on these dreary shores, and brightens his prospects of soon sitting down with all of our Father's children in the new kingdom! Glory to God for such a prospect. We sometimes long to see each other face to face here, and be strengthened in our most holy faith, but O, when we meet on the blissful heights of Zion in the presence of the Lamb, to partake of the feast promised to those who overcome this world—all that we hoped and sought for in this gloomy vale, will be obtained.

"Vanish then this world of sadness,
Pass the former things away,
Lord appear, appear to glad us,
Bring the dawn of endless day."

O that perishing millions could behold what is but a sten before them—but they will not. I rejoice in hearing of a few, and feel renewedly engaged to labor in the ripening harvest of the Lord. Pray for unworthy me. I think of visiting some of the destitute places soon, as the Lord may open my way, and lift one feeble note of warning at least, through grace to those whom I may meet.
GEO. W. BURNHAM.
Greenville, April 26, 1846.

Bro. G. A. Lapham, Adams Mass., April 10, writes:—The Voice of Truth is a welcome messenger to a few in this place; the truth it contains, founded upon the sure word of prophecy, and the immutable word of God, is to me increasingly interesting. I like time as revealed in the Bible, yes, and plain, simple, Bible truth, in all its harmony. May the Lord sustain you in this hour of conflict and trial, and preserve all his waiting children from the contaminating influence of this ungodly world, so that when he who is our life shall appear, we also, with all his saints of every age and clime, may appear with him in glory. For it is written, "Many shall come from the east and west, from the north and south, and set down in the kingdom of God. Glorious promise. Yours in hope.

Letter from Bro. Cunningham.

Bro. Marsh:—In reading Bro. Pinney's article on the time, the thought struck me that there might be danger in placing the time for Christ to come, in the fall. For supposing the vision ends there, we read, "unto 2300 days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Now, if the sanctuary is cleansed at the expiration of the 2300 days, is it not a natural and just inference to expect the deliverance of the people of God before the expiration of the 2300 days? The argument for the termination of the vision this year, is very conclusive to my mind, and I think there is strong reasons to expect the Lord the coming passover. Jesus said, Luke 22: 16, 18, "He would no more eat until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.—And would not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God should come." The nature of the evidence is such, it is not safe to put off the end a single hour, but to be constantly on the watch tower, with our loins girded about, and our lights burning. And may the Lord enable you, Bro. Marsh, to continue to give the household their portion of meat in due season, and soon you will reap your reward if you faint not. And O, my brethren and sisters, die, die unto the world, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.

Yours, in expectation of speedy deliverance,
Newton, Upper Falls, Mass., Mar. 28, '46.

Bro. W. F. Seward, Lowell Mass, April 6th, writes:—I send you a little money to pay for the valuable paper (The Voice of Truth,) you send us weekly. We love to hear from our brethren in different parts of the country, to know how they are prospering on their pilgrimage journey, and to hear their thrilling exhortations. They cheer the pilgrim on his journey to the land of canaan, through this wilderness world. My prayer is, that the paper may be sustained, as it is a medium through which we can hear from each other. Go on my brother in your work until our King comes; then we shall no longer need it, for we shall meet to part no more. The church here have been rather low for some time, and have been passing through severe trials, but I think the prospect looks a little better than it has, praise God. Bro. E. Burnham preaches to us a part of the time. I hope we all shall be enabled to endure to the end, that we may be saved.

"Let no man deceive you"

Letter from Bro. Proctor.

Bro Marsh:—Under embarrassing and trying circumstances, I attempt to address you once more. About the first of February, my wife was attacked Inflammatory Rheumatism, and from the severity of the disease, we despaired of her recovery for a time, but through the mercy of our Heavenly Father, the violent symptoms of the disease have abated, and we hope she will again be restored to health. At the time of her sickness, we had like to have lost our little Joseph Marsh. During this time, of course I was kept at home, but in the midst of all, I was comforted by the weekly visits of your richly laden sheet, the Voice of truth; and if I could afford you the right kind of assistance, my comfort would increase, as it is more blessed to give than to receive.

I am pleased with your views of the Cause of Evils. I just received 13th No. Vol. 9, to-day, and was sorry to find you had concluded, as I think you have only excited attention to the subject. I had concluded at one time, and actually commenced to give you an account of the treatment I have received from the brethren with whom I stand in connection, but a brother arriving from Virginia at the time, prevailed on me to postpone it for a time, but I have been tried for Heresy, and the committee before whom I appeared, have a report of condemnation to present to Conference at its next annual session, a copy of which, I have in my possession. The President of the board, however, before he left, wrote upon it his recantation, stating that the decision he gave was reluctantly done, and has since written me a letter, in which he says he has examined the subject by the light of God's word, and is satisfied that the doctrine for which I was tried, is the truth.

I expect my enemies will not stop till they destroy the happy association in which we were joined together, in what we called the "Valley Christian Conference of Virginia," which was "only an advisory meeting," in which we professed to guard and protect the rights and liberties of all the brotherhood. Preparations are now being made to organize a conference in this county, to take place the third week in May, which will amount to a withdrawal from the association formed some years ago. They intend, as I am informed, to lay down a platform, the length and breadth of their own views, to exclude what they are pleased to call "No Soul doctrine," "burnt up system," and "Campbellism;" and as they begin to fear the Virginia brethren, with many others here, will show themselves possessors of the christian spirit, in protecting me in the right of my own judgment in matters of faith, they are hasting to establish another conference on the principles above stated, as they are determined to have me separated from them some how, but my comfort is in Luke 6: 22, 23. All this disturbance which they themselves produce, they are pleased to attribute to the '43 doctrine, and still there is no repentance in me, for I rejoice that my mind was awakened to the subject of Christ's second coming, as I can look to nothing else as the consummation of the christian's hope—and the burden of my prayer is, that I may gird up my loins, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ, which I believe to be nigh; therefore, I am determined, the Lord being my helper, to preach Jesus and the resurrection, with which I am bound to connect the second coming of our King, (or have a broken chain,) and thus present the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Farewell, and believe me to be your brother in hope of the coming and kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,
Wm. G. PROCTOR.

Painful Delusions.

I have recently had a visit from two men who adopt the sentiments of Bro. Pickands and others. They suppose the Savior has come, and is coming in great power and glory. All this is only manifested through his saints. The fire that is to burn the earth and its works, has commenced burning at Cleveland and Akron, and some other places. The judgment is now going on, and the saints were to commence destroying the wicked in this month, April, by executing the judgment written in the Bible, not with carnal weapons, but by the power of faith or Christ in them. Being in the immortal state, they set aside the marriage relation, and lay aside all care of their families, are not tempted with evil, and cannot have a wicked thought or desire. Christ has no material body, hence, is never to come personally—the earth is never to experience any physical change, but the saints are to be placed above the reach of natural evil.

These two men were out to enlighten advert believers, and perhaps it is just, to say they did so, for if there were any in this vicinity favorable to the spiritualizing system, they were perfectly cured by the visit of these men. Their absurdities were many, and so manifest, that it would seem impossible for a sane man to receive them as truth. To see immortal men in their glorified state, wearied with labor, having to sleep for rest, eating to sustain nature, protecting themselves from cold, and complaining of sore feet by traveling, is revolting to one who is looking for a country where the inhabitants shall not say I am sick, for they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. God shall wipe all tears from their eyes, &c.

I forbear noticing other absurdities, for it is a matter of deep humiliation, that any of those who were looking for the coming of Christ, should have fallen into such dangerous errors. I sincerely hope they may be reclaimed and prevented from falling into still deeper ones. The dissolution of the marriage relation, has a tendency to induce unlawful affections, and when a man cannot have a wicked thought, but supposes Christ dictates all the emotions of the mind, he is in a condition to be led into any absurdity. I pray they may be prevented from a resort to carnal weapons, when they find their faith does not destroy the wicked, as they are destined to execute judgment. I think all might be deeply humbled and pray much for these brethren, and that others may be saved from the delusion.

Yours looking for the Sovereign,
THOMAS J. CARLETON.
York O., April 16th, 1846.

Bro. J. Phillips, Belisle N. Y., April 27, writes:—We are in need of some one to preach among us. We can do well by him. Some have said they would pay ten dollars, some five, and some three, and so on. Now if you will send a lecturer to preach at Amboy, Camillus, Liverpool, and Syracuse, we can do well by him.

Who can, and will hear and obey this call from Bro. Phillips for the word? Let him who hath the word, speak it—the children are crying for bread, the bread of life, all through the land. Who will feed them? Blessed are those who will do it, but woe unto those shepherds who love to slumber, and those watchmen who are at ease in Zion.

Bro. D. Davis, Spring Mills Pa., April 13th, writes:—

I have recently searched the scriptures with deep interest, increasing light and much profit. The evidence that the day of the Lord is at hand, is accumulating continually before, and rolling with irresistible force upon my mind. This truth is like a fire shut up in my bones, and I cannot forbear; but according to the ability that God has given, I have for a little time past, been endeavoring to place this glorious subject in a clear and proper light before the minds of the people in this place, also in Bingham, Potter Co., Pa. I think that some of the people are more disposed to listen, and more anxious to know the truth, than they have formerly been. Myself, together with many others, would be very much pleased, and I should hope, benefitted, by a conference in this place this spring.

I would say, for the information of my friends, that my health is very poor, yet I am able to proclaim the gospel of God's dear Son, every Sabbath, and hope that I shall be able to do so, unto the end. Dear brethren and sisters, let your whole confidence be in God; let not your faith waver—confess Christ before this wicked and adulterous generation, and you shall be owned and blessed by him at his appearing and kingdom. My soul longeth after that glorious day, when the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High.

Sister B. Newton, Holden Mass., March 5th, writes:—We have from 20 to 30 advent believers in this town, who meet regular every Lord's day, in private houses, "for this gospel of the kingdom" is driven from the meeting-houses here, as in almost all other places: but I bless God, we can meet in our own houses unmolested, and this is good enough. We had a blessed meeting this day, were quickened by the Spirit of the living God, and very much cheered by the presence of two persons who have lately been converted to the faith of the speedy coming of the Lord. One of them said she found herself in a lost condition, and was afraid she never should be forgiven, because she had lived such a wicked life. She was a member of the church, and thought she was safe, before this truth brought her to see her lost condition. I hope we shall be encouraged to greater diligence and faithfulness, in laboring for souls. What an account will these blind leaders have to give when Jesus comes, who have been leading souls down to destruction, saying, my Lord delayeth his coming! they will neither enter themselves, nor suffer those who would enter to go into the kingdom of Heaven. We love to hear from the children of God scattered abroad, through the medium of your paper. We love all who truly love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. These are truly perilous times, such as I never saw before; we have to wrestle with principalities and powers, and wicked spirits in the heavenly regions; therefore we need on the whole armor of God, and to fight manfully the good fight of faith, being assured that the conflict is almost over.

That you may be kept in this hour of trial and temptation, (and I have thought that you are in some danger from the flattery of some of the brethren who write,) is the sincere desire and prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ.

Bro. S. Sherwin, Grafton Vt. Apr. 13, writes: The little church in this place numbers about 15, and are looking for the return of their Lord about this time, believing this is the year of their redemption. We are united in all the fundamental principles of the advent faith, and striving to live by faith on the Son of God: and may we search and see that we have all on the altar, wholly consecrated soul body, spirit, and property, waiting patiently for that blessed hope. May God nerve you my brother, for the work of giving the saints meat in due season, and stimulate the brethren to stay up your hand in this hour of trial. O, glory be to God that we are so soon to meet in that happy land. May we continue faithful, that when he who is our life shall appear, we may appear with him in glory.

Bro. L. Mills, Halfmoon N. Y., April 11th, writes:—There are a few in this place who are "looking for that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the Great God, and our Savior, Jesus Christ." Although our numbers have decreased somewhat within the past year, some having given up the faith, and some are digging for the golden ore, &c., yet we can say with the apostle Peter, "We think it not strange concerning the fiery trial," &c., but we rejoice in hope of the glory of God. We believe that our Savior will appear to the rejoicing of our hearts, in a few more days or months, at least.

Bro. O. Liscomb, Queechee village Vt., April 4, writes:—I have to go about ten miles to meeting, at South Woodstock, where there is a united company looking for the speedy coming of the Lord. Yours and Bro. Hale's views on time, I think are plain, from the sure word of prophecy. "The wise shall understand." I love to hear from brethren and sisters scattered abroad;—it gladdens my heart to learn that they are strong in the faith, giving glory to God.

Bro. J. M. Gove, Whitefield N. H., April 27, writes:—Dear Brother, I am glad to see you take that plain, simple, scriptural course, which the gospel demands, and as taught by our Lord and his apostles. I was much pleased with your notes on Sister Clemons' article. I think they will give general satisfaction among the brethren, for they are so conclusive that all may understand the truth as illustrated and presented in your arguments.

I am sorry to say it, but it is true, that there has been quite a falling away from the Advent faith in this place, since the tenth of the seventh month. Some run into the Bridegroom come, the door shut, and some have lost their faith in consequence of disappointment, "nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure," and there is yet a few here who are anxiously waiting for the return of our blessed Lord.

Yours, in expectation of seeing the Lord this year.

Br. L. C. Thomas, Whitby, C. W., writes:—We are striving to live according to the "teachings" of the gospel, by denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, living soberly, righteously and godly, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Savior.

Having such a hope we are trying to purify ourselves "in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren." We feel the earnest of our inheritance, the spirit of God through the agency of which we are the begotten of God being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible; and we are anticipating that day when we shall be born into the kingdom, to live "eternal life," when the principal of eternal life will not be subject to corruption as is the principle of natural life which we have by the birth of the flesh. Glory to God that will be a day of rejoicing to those that are waiting.

Br. G. Emerson, Barry, Ill., writes:—I wish I could do more toward helping the Advent publications, and spread of the gospel of the kingdom at hand, but the means is not in my power, I am very poor as to this world's goods.

"No foot of land do I possess, Or cottage in this wilderness," but praised be the name of God, I expect, yea, believe that I, with all the rest of the saints of God, will soon be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, when we shall possess the kingdom—receive our crown—eat of the fruit of the Tree of Life—put on immortality—be partakers of his glory—enter the blessed inheritance which is incorruptible undefiled and that shall never pass away. Amen. Lord Jesus hasten thine appearing.

Obituary.

DIED—in Litchfield Ct., on the 12th inst., MINERVA C. youngest child of LOYAL R. and LUCRETIA BARBER, aged 10 months and 13 days.

Those only who have felt similar bereavements can fully sympathize with brother and sister B. in their affliction, but even now, though—

'Nature's sweetest ties are severed,' they can rejoice, expecting soon to meet their babe on that shore where sickness and sorrow never come.

Cease, fond parent, cease thy weeping—

Let not sighing swell thy breast;

Thy lovely babe, now gently sleeping,

Shall wake in Eden beauty dressed.

On that bright shore—

Thy sorrows o'er,

Thou'lt meet thy babe to part no more.

Though the mouldering earth lies o'er her,

Still let not thine heart be sad:

He who took will soon restore her.

Soon her smiles thine eyes shall glad.

Again shall rest

Upon thy breast—

Thy babe, of endless life possessed. c. w. c.

DO YOU LOVE CHRIST?

Do you love Christ? I ask not if you feel
The warm excitement of that party zeal
Which follows on while others lead the way,
And makes His cause the fashion of the day.
But do you love Him when His garb is mean?
Nor shrink to let His fellowship be seen?
Do you love Jesus, blind, and halt, and maimed?
In prison succor Him, nor feel ashamed
To own him, though His injured name may be
A mark for some dark slanderous olloquy.
Do you love Jesus in the orphan's claim?
And bid the widow welcome in His name?
Say not, "When saw we Him?"—each member dear,
Poor and afflicted, bears His image here;
And if unvalued or unknown by thee,
Where can the union with the body be?
And if thou thus art to the body dead,
Where is thy life with Christ, thy living head?
And if discovered from the living Vine,
How canst thou dream, that thou hast life divine?
Sweet is the union true believers feel,
Into the Spirit they have drunk the seal
Of God is on their hearts, and thus they see
In each, the features of one family.
If one is suffering, all the rest are sad,
If but the least is honored, all are glad;
The grace of Jesus, which they all partake,
Flows out in mutual kindness for His sake;
Where He has left them for awhile to wait
And represent Him in his suffering state;
While He though glorified as yet alone,
Bears the whole Church before the Father's throne.

Bro. CHANDLER.—This worthy brother and faithful minister, agreeable to previous notice, spent Sabbath before the last in this city. His three discourses were meat in due season. He left in good health to fill his appointments in Lockport, Buffalo, Cleveland, and Milwaukee. In the latter place he designs locating his family. His efficient labors in that new field are much needed, and will doubtless prove a blessing to many where they may be devoted.

Bro. J. D. Johnson wishes us to say that his health is rather improving, and that his address is Le Roy, Genesee Co. N. Y.

"Breast the Wave, Christian!"

Breast the wave, Christian, when it is strongest;
Watch for day, Christian, when the night's longest Onward, and onward still, be thine endeavor;
The rest that remaineth will be forever.
Fight the fight, Christian, Jesus is o'er thee;
Run the race, Christian, heaven is before thee;
He who hath promised, fulfillerth never;
The love of eternity flows on forever.
Lift the eye, Christian, just as it closeth;
Raise the heart, Christian, ere it repositeth;
Thee from the love of Christ nothing shall sever;
Mount, when the work is done; praise him forever.

Evidences that the Second Advent of Christ IS NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOOR.

Soon after the time expired in the spring of A. D. 1845, at which time we confidently expected the Lord, our mind was strongly impressed with the conviction that the true light on this important subject might be obtained from the instructions given to Daniel relative to the seventy weeks in the ninth chapter of that book. We are still of this opinion. Because the angel Gabriel appeared unto Daniel for the express purpose of giving him "skill and understanding," that he might "understand the matter and consider the vision." And in his explanation he tells Daniel to "know and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times. And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off - - - And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." See chapter nine, from verse 21 to the close of the chapter.

The prime object of this instruction was not to benefit Daniel, but to instruct the people of God under the gospel dispensation, as Peter says, "unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things which are now reported unto you," 1 Peter 1: 13. The facts then to which the seventy weeks refer, were to be understood. It is absolutely necessary that they should be understood, in order to establish the claims of Christ to the true Messiah, and prove true the word of revelation. For instance, if it cannot be accurately determined that "Messiah the Prince" came at the end of the sixty-nine weeks, that he caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the midst of the week, and that he confirmed the covenant with many for one week, or that one week confirmed the covenant, then so far as this prophecy is concerned, we have no proof that Jesus of Nazareth was the true Messiah. But we believe he did come at the very time this prophecy predicted he would; that he fully answered the prophecy in all its minute parts, and that all may be understood by his children. And the conclusion is, that if the several points in the seventy weeks, or even one of the last named, may be accurately determined, then the termination of the 2300 days in Dan. 8, from which the seventy weeks were cut off, may be settled.—With this view of the subject, we will inquire for some of which were to mark the fulfilment of this prophecy. The time of the fulfilment of certain points in this prophecy, will be separately considered, after we have pointed out the facts to which they refer.

The first point to which we will turn our attention is that which refers to "Messiah the Prince." From the going forth of the commandment, &c., unto Messiah the Prince, it was to be "seven weeks, and three score and two weeks," or sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years. Was this part, "Messiah the Prince," fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth? To the very letter. But how? By his being anointed, which constituted him the Messiah. For Messiah signifies anointed. Says Cruden on the word Messiah, it "signifies anointed. It is applied principally, and by way of eminence, to that Sovereign Deliverer, who was expected by the Jews. They used to anoint kings, high priests, and sometimes prophets. Saul, David, Solomon, and Josiah, received the royal unction; Aaron and his sons received the sacerdotal; and Elisha, the disciple of Elijah, received the prophetic unction, at least, God ordered Elijah to give it, 1 Kings 19: 16; and therefore the name Messiah or Anointed, is given to the kings; 1 Sam. 12: 3, 5, and also to the patriarchs or prophets, 1 Chron. 16: 22; Psa. 105: 15." John 1: 41 gives the definition, "we have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ, or the anointed," as the margin reads.

According to this testimony, any one was anointed, or a Messiah who was anointed; but not "the Messiah." To be a Messiah, or Anointed, it was only necessary to be anointed by man with the oil prepared for that purpose. But to be the Messiah, or the Anointed, God must anoint with his Spirit. Hence, if Jesus of Nazareth was only anointed by man, it no more proves him the true Messiah, than the anointing which others received proves them to be the true Messiah.—But if Jesus was anointed by God, with the Spirit, at the end of the sixty-nine weeks, then the evidence is clear that he was the true Messiah—then he not only answers the prophecy under consideration, but fulfils the following ones.—"Thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness; therefore God, even thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows, Ps. 45: 7. "With my holy oil have I anointed him," Ps. 89: 20. Paul, in Heb. 1: 8, 9, applies this first prediction to Christ. "But unto the Son he saith, thy throne O God, is forever and ever, a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness, above thy fellows." God has done the work—Christ has been anointed in a manner different from others, "above his fellows."

The testimony of Peter is conclusive on this point, he says, Acts 4: 27, "For of a truth, against the Holy Child, Jesus whom thou hast anointed." In chapter 10: 37, 38, he tells who anointed him, how, and when. "That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached." What word? The first Peter names, is the anointing; for the next verse says, "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power."

Now if the facts in the case agree with this overwhelming testimony, then the point is settled beyond all successful contradiction, that Jesus of Nazareth was the "Messiah the Prince," according to the prophecy under consideration. Well, what are the facts? Look at the account given by the different Evangelists of the baptism of Christ. Matt. 3: 16, 17, says, "And Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water, and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him, and lo, a voice from heaven, saying, this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Luke, in chap 3: 21, 22, records the same event, and in nearly the same words of Matthew. Then in chap. 4: 16-21, says: "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath-day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Isaiah. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, the Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him. And he began to say unto them, this day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." This testimony is conclusive. "HE HATH anointed me."—When? At his baptism, when the Spirit of the Lord fell on him, as Luke in the preceding chapter says.

Here we have the fact, where the sixty nine weeks, unto Messiah the Prince, ended. Here, before an assembled multitude, God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power. God marks the event, the exact fulfilment of the prophecy by the descent of the Spirit, or pouring out the holy oil, and by his own voice, "this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Here then, we plant our argument for the termination of the sixty-nine weeks, unto Messiah the Prince, at his baptism; neither before nor after that event. And we believe the plain, invulnerable truths uttered by prophets, apostles, and Christ himself—confirmed by facts, the descent of the Spirit, and the voice of God, immutable as the throne of Jehovah, justify this conclusion.

The next point to be considered in this prophecy, is

when he was to cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, or be cut off after three score and two weeks (from the close of the seven.) There can be no dispute about the meaning of the sacrifice and oblation, and cutting off Messiah. All agree, we believe, that one refers to the Jewish sacrifices, and the other to the death of Christ. No other scriptural or reasonable interpretation can be given. Well, did Messiah the Prince fulfil this part of the prophecy? He did. And, as in the case of his anointing, God marked the event by causing darkness to be over all the land from the sixth to the ninth hour, rending the veil from the top to the bottom, causing the earth to quake, and the rocks to rend. "And the graves were opened, and many of the saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graves after the resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Matt. 27: 45-53.

We say, and it should not be forgotten, that by these wonderful and astounding supernatural occurrences, God marked the termination of "the midst of the week." Here Messiah was cut off, and here the Jewish sacrifice and oblation ceased, neither before nor after this time. The Levitical law was in full force certainly up to the night before his crucifixion—for on that very night Christ ate the Jewish passover with his disciples—and we believe it was not abrogated, done away, or the sacrifice and oblation did not cease until Christ, the "end of the law," and anti-type of all the Jewish sacrifices, was hung upon the cross, and cried, "IT IS FINISHED," bowed his head and yielded up his Spirit. That the apostles understood the subject in this light, is evident, from numerous expressions in their writings, similar to the following. "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that were against us which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross," Col. 2: 14. The cross then, the crucifixion, or cutting off Messiah the Prince, witnessed by the darkness over the earth—rending of the temple's veil—quaking of the earth—rending of rocks, and the resurrection of the saints, is the point, the exact point, where the midst of the week terminated, and the sacrifice and oblation ceased, or the levitical law of sacrifices was taken out of the way, ended, or ceased.

The next point in this prophecy to be considered, is the event which marks the

or the one week. The termination could not have been at the crucifixion, for the obvious reason, as we have just shown, that another specific point in the prophecy, cutting off Messiah, and ceasing of the sacrifice and oblation, terminated there. And besides, it is folly to talk of a week terminating in the midst of it. No criticism which we have read on this point, (and we have read a number, which have labored to prove that the seventy weeks ended at the crucifixion,) has pretended that midst means end; but it may in a secondary sense, signify within, half part, or last half of the week. It must mean the END of the week, in order to sustain the argument that the week ended in the midst of it, the point of time when Messiah was cut off.

The plain, common, sound sense meaning of the prophecy is, that Messiah would be cut off in the MIDDLE of the week, during which he would confirm, or the covenant would be confirmed with many of Daniel's people, the Jews. And the facts in the case fully justify this understanding in the matter.

Well, is there any fact in the early history of the gospel, the "covenant," which marks the termination of the one week in which the covenant was confirmed with many of the Jews? It could not be the descent of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost; for nothing was done by way of confirming the covenant from the resurrection of Christ up to that time. And besides, instead of its being half of the week, or three years and a half, it was only about fifty days from the midst of the week. And more, the gospel was exclusively confined to Daniel's people, the Jews, for several years after the day of Pentecost. This fact is unaccountable on any other principle than that the covenant was being confirmed agreeably to the prophecy under consideration. To suppose that the apostles, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost did not understand their mission, but for several years violated the command of the Lord, to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, is an impeachment of the divinity of their work. This, however, they did, and stranger to say, God did not correct nor rebuke them, if the one week ended either at the crucifixion or at the Pentecost.

It could not have been the conversion of Paul, because the vision which he saw at his conversion, was given for his individual benefit, and not as an evidence that the door was then opened to preach the gospel to the gentiles. Paul's conversion was a work preparatory to sending the gospel to the gentile world. Hence, at his conversion, the Lord said unto Ananias, "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the gentiles, and kings and the children of Israel," Acts 9: 15, also 22; 14. His first work was to preach to the "children of Israel;" for immediately after his conversion, "straightway he preached Christ in the Synagogues, that he is the Son of God,"—Acts 9: 20. We have no account that he preached to the gentiles until he went up to Jerusalem, and the Lord commissioned him for this work.—Hence he says, after his conversion, "when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance, and saw the Lord saying unto me, make haste and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem, for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me—for I will send thee far hence unto the gentiles," Acts 22: 17-21.—He then "spoke boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the GREEKANS; but they went about to kill him, which, when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cesarea (where the gentile Cornelius resided, who had before this, been converted) and sent him forth to Tarsus," Acts 9: 28, 29. At Jerusalem then, was the place where Paul received his commission to preach to the gentiles; and that it was as many as three years from his conversion, is evident from his own testimony. He says, "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood; neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me, but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus; then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days," Gal. 1: 15-18.

The conclusion drawn from this testimony is, that Paul after his conversion, confined his labors for three years to the Jews, before he went up to Jerusalem where he received his commission to preach unto the Gentiles, and first commenced disputing with the Grecians; consequently his conversion could not have marked the termination of confirming the covenant with many for one week—or the close of the seventy weeks—or opening the door of the gospel to the gentiles.

Well, if the one week of confirming the covenant with many did not end either at the crucifixion, the Pentecost, nor the conversion of Paul, when did it terminate? When Peter preached to the household of Cornelius, as narrated in the 10th chapter of acts. That the preaching of the gospel had been exclusively confined to the Jews until this time, must be apparent to every one who carefully examines this chapter, and a portion of the following one. Let us look at it for a moment.

It commences with a vision of an angel which Cornelius saw about the ninth hour, who told Cornelius to send to Joppa for Peter, who would tell him what to do. Messengers are sent to Joppa, and as they draw nigh unto that city, Peter has the vision in which he "saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth,—wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts and creeping things, and fowls of the air." Peter is told to "kill and eat"—he says, "not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean."—He had not associated with, nor preached to the Gentiles. But the "voice spake unto him the second time, what God has cleansed, that call not thou common."—The door of salvation was now to be opened to the gentiles.

Peter doubted about the meaning of the vision; but is told to go with the messengers that were then inquiring for him, "doubting nothing, for I have sent them." He reaches the house of Cornelius, "and found many that were come together, and he said unto them, 'ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean.' Then, up to this time, Peter and the apostles, as may be seen in verses 1, 2, 3, of the next chapter, considered it "unlawful" to preach to the gentiles. But to pursue the narrative.

Cornelius rehearses the vision he saw, &c.—Then Peter opened his mouth and said, of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. He then spake of the "word which God sent unto the children of Israel by Jesus Christ." Says it "was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached." He then gives an account of the anointing, ministry, and death of Christ; and of the apostles being witnesses of these things, and being "commanded to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he that was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."—While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost; for they heard them speak with other tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we."

From this testimony it is evident that the gospel was not preached to the gentiles, neither did they receive the gift of the Spirit until this time. Put let us pursue the narrative as continued in the next chapter. "And the apostles and brethren that were in Judea, heard that the gentiles had also received the word of the Lord" [then they had not received it before,] they contended with Peter, "saying, thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them." And in order to convince them that he had not transgressed the will of God, Peter had to rehearse in order, the whole matter, and asks, "what was I that I could withstand God? When they heard these things, they held their peace, saying, then hath God also to the gentiles granted repentance unto life."—From the foregoing testimony there can be no doubt about the gospel being confined exclusively to the Jews until the conversion of Cornelius; and that the apostles and the saints in all Judea understood that God then granted unto the gentiles, repentance unto life. God marked this event with the vision of an angel to Cornelius, of the sheet, and his voice to Peter, and visible descent of the Spirit on the household of Cornelius and endowing them with the gift of tongues.—And here is the only point which can be settled by the plain word of the Lord, for the termination of the one week, in which the gospel or covenant, was to be confirmed with many of Daniel's people, the Jews.

That the Lord did confirm the covenant or word by the apostles, is evident from the following testimony. "And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following," Mark 16: 20. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Heb. 2: 3.

John the Baptist took no part in confirming the covenant. His was another work, clearly predicted by another prophet than Daniel, & fully explained by John himself. He said of himself, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias," John 1: 23. He could not confirm the covenant before it was given, neither did he work a miracle in confirmation of any thing he did.—But Christ, the anointed, at the close of the sixty-nine weeks, commenced his ministry, confirming his work by signs, and mighty wonders, or miracles. In the midst of the week, or three years and a half from his anointing, he was cut off, or crucified—rises from the dead, and ascends to his Father and God; and the very nature of the case made it necessary that certain ones should confirm that part of the covenant which Christ could not do himself before his crucifixion; viz: the resurrection and ascension. Those were the apostles who were chosen and qualified for this purpose; and their work they faithfully accomplished. And when the week of confirmation ended, God marked its termination with the evidences above named, and opened wide the door of salvation to the gentile world.

This we believe is the true light of the subject, so far as the facts are concerned, which mark the termination of the several points in the seventy weeks which we have noticed.

Having given the facts which mark the termination of certain points in this prophecy, we are prepared now to examine the

CHRONOLOGY OF THOSE EVENTS.

We wish those arguments in the first place to be well understood and thoroughly tested by the word of the Lord. We think we have clearly proved from the above testimony.

1st. That the event predicted to take place at the end of the sixty-nine weeks, did have its literal accomplishment, in the anointing of Jesus of Nazareth, at his baptism.

2. That the events predicted to take place in the midst of the week, were strictly fulfilled at his crucifixion, when he said "It is finished."—And

3d. That the one week of confirming the covenant, or seventy weeks, terminated at the conversion of Cornelius.

Our object now is to learn from the BIBLE ALONE, the chronology of these events, according to the true christian era. The true christian era must commence with the birth of Christ, hence, if we can learn from the bible the age of Christ when he was anointed, then we can determine with positive certainty, in what year of the true christian era the sixty-nine weeks ended;—for they were to reach unto the Messiah the Prince, or the Anointed. Well, does the Bible give us the age of Christ at his anointing? It does. Luke says, "Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased. And Jesus himself began to be about THIRTY YEARS OF AGE," Luke 3: 21-23.

According to this inspired testimony, the sixty nine weeks, or 483 years of this prophecy ended in the true A. D. 30. The only dispute there can be on this being the true date is, Luke says, "about thirty." It may mean, as some suppose, either under or over that age, as the case may require. To this we seriously object, because the principles of exegesis that would make the age of Christ at this time more or less than thirty, would deprive us of all knowledge of his age; he might have been twenty, twenty-five, thirty-five, or even forty, as the case might require. It will never do to take such liberties with the word of the Lord. When Luke says "about thirty," he evidently means just thirty; as he means just forty, when he says, "about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness," Acts 13: 18. All know that it was just forty years in this case. We should therefore, understand in the other case, that "about thirty," means just thirty.

That Christ was thirty years old at his anointing, is further evident from the fact that the sons of Levi were not permitted, under the Levitical law, to enter upon the service of the tabernacle until they were thirty years old.

"Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, after their families, by the house of their fathers, from thirty years old and upward, even until fifty years old, all that enter into the host, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation," Num. 4: 2, 3.

Paul says, "Christ was made under the law"—and Christ says of the law, that he "came not to destroy, but to fulfil." Hence, had he commenced his public ministry before thirty years old, he would have been a transgressor of the law. But he magnified the law, and made it honorable in all its requirements; and to do this, he must have been thirty years old when he entered upon his public ministry; which was at his baptism, when anointed, when the 69 weeks ended, being the true A. D. 30.

Christ saying, a few days after his baptism, "the time is fulfilled," cannot effect the argument for his being thirty years old at his baptism, or the 69 weeks ending there; for he speaks of something that was already accomplished, and not of that which was then being done. "The time is fulfilled," evidently refers to the termination of the 69 weeks, a short time previous, when he was about thirty years old, as Luke says, and when Christ was publicly anointed for the work of his ministry.

Having shown from the foregoing testimony that the prediction, "unto Messiah the Prince," had its exact fulfillment in the true A. D. 30, our next inquiry will be, at what date of the same era did the midst of the week end? The testimony on which we rely for settling the date of this event, is not as direct as in the preceding case; yet it is very conclusive. We will give it.

If, as the evidence in the case seems clearly to prove, the 60 weeks ended in the true A. D. 30, and "midst of the week," means middle, then this point of the termination must necessarily have been in the middle of the true A. D. 34, or three and a half years from A. D. 30, the time when the one week commenced. That "midst of the week" does mean middle, or three and a half years, is as evident to me as that one week means seven years—or seven weeks forty-nine years—or sixty-two weeks four hundred and thirty-four years—or seventy weeks, four hundred and ninety years—or 2300 days as many years. All admit that definite time is meant in all these divisions, with the exception of "midst of the week;" and by what principles of just interpretation they make this mean end of the week, we know not. Unless it means middle, it is superfluous: for instead of saying the sacrifice would cease in the midst of the week, it would have been better to have said, at the end of the week. But it says midst, and means neither beginning nor end, but middle of the week, which must have terminated three and a half years from the close of the 69 weeks, or in the true A. D. 34.

This conclusion is strengthened from the narration the Evangelists have given of Christ's public ministry. They do not account for over four, and we think not more than three and a half years from Christ's baptism to his crucifixion. He attended not over four passovers. The first he attended is named in John 2: 13. "A feast of the Jews," which was probably a passover, [see John 6: 4] which he next attends, is named in John 5: 1. The next is named in John 6: 4. And the last in John 11: 55, also 12: 1. Admitting that it was six months from his baptism to the first passover which Christ attended, then if he attended three more, one at the close of each succeeding year, and the last one being at the time of his crucifixion, it would make just half of the week, or three years and a half. Between the two points in prophecy, viz: "unto Messiah the Prince," and the cessation of the "sacrifice and oblation," or from the baptism to the death of Christ. This would bring the crucifixion in the middle of the 34th year of the true christian era.

That this was the very year, according to the prophecy under consideration, in which Messiah was to be cut off, is further evident from the understanding the Jewish High Priest had on this subject, just before the death of Christ. The resurrection of Lazarus caused very many to believe on Christ, and when the Pharisees heard of it, "then gathered the chief priests and Pharisees a council, and said, what do we? for this man doeth many miracles. If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans will come and take away both our place and nation. And one of them, Caiaphas, being high Priest that same year, said unto them, ye know nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not. And this spake he not of himself, but being high Priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for the nation; and not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one, the children of God that were scattered abroad. Then from that day forth they took counsel together to put him to death." John 11: 47-53. From what follows, it will be seen that Christ soon attends the passover, at which time he was crucified.

The high Priest understood that Christ must die that very year—he prophesied or taught this to the council. How did he understand this?—Doubtless from a knowledge he had of the seventy weeks of Daniel's prophecy—he knew that the midst of the week ended that year. And his knowledge cannot be reasonably accounted for on any other principle. We conclude therefore, that 33½ is the date according to the true christian era, when Messiah was cut off, and the Jewish sacrifices and oblations ceased.

Our next inquiry will be on the time of the termination of the one week or seventy weeks. And first, we will give on this point, the arguments of Mr. R. C. Shimeon, a Presbyter of the Prot. Epis. Church, in the Diocese of New York. In his work on the prophecies, pages 238-241, he says:

"In reference to the conversion of Cornelius, A. D. 37, it is objected, that it does not agree with the marginal chronology of that event in the New Testament. But to this we reply that 'tho' it may not be in our power to fix with precision the time of the conversion of Cornelius from the narrative of the Acts, yet it is easy to show that the date given to it in the margin of our Bible, which is wholly arbitrary and unsupported, must be too late: and that the year 37 agrees much better with the facts that are known. The stoning of Stephen took place in 34, or early in 35, and the conversion of Paul in the course of 35, to a low time for his two visits to Jerusalem mentioned in Galatians, with an interval of three years, and fourteen years between them: all occurring before the council, in Acts 15: the dissensions leading to which, are referred to in Gal. 2: 11; and which council could not be later than 52. Paul's first visit to Jerusalem was therefore in 38, and Peter was at Jerusalem, Gal. 1: 18; and the persecution raised about Stephen, had ceased. Acts 9: 31; 11: 17. But at this visit to Jerusalem, Paul received his commission to go to the Gentiles. Acts 22: 21; and began to dispute with the Grecians, Acts 9: 29, at the time when the disciples at Antioch did the same;—Acts 11: 20; all of which proves that the door had then been opened to the Gentiles by the conversion of Cornelius, as otherwise these proceedings could not have been sanctioned by the church in sending forth Barnabas, Acts 11: 22, and their even sending Paul to Cesarea, the abode of Cornelius, Acts 9: 30, indicates the same thing; and Barnabas sought his help as the chosen vessel to the Gentiles, Acts 11: 25, 9: 30.

The conversion of Cornelius, therefore, must have taken place before 38. We should recollect that the transactions in the Acts, are not given in the regular sequence of time, but one narrative is followed out to its close, and then another taken up, though it should require going back in order of time: as is evidently the case, chap. 11: 19, which returns to chap. 8: 1.

The conclusion therefore is, that the 70 weeks, or 490 years of Daniel, ending at the conversion of Cornelius, A. D. 37, together with the 2300 years are to be dated from the command to restore and build Jerusalem, as given to Ezra in the 7th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus.

We proceed, therefore, to observe, that the death of the Savior at the termination of his three and a half years' ministry on the one hand, and the conversion of Cornelius, ~~after the three and a half years of the apostolic ministry among the Jews on the other, together make up the "one,"~~ or last of the 70 prophetic weeks; and, added to the 30 years of Christ's age when he commenced his ministry, it demonstrates that the 70 weeks closed A. D. 37. Now, carry back the 70 weeks or 490 years from A. D. 37, to the era B. C., and you have the date of "the command to restore and build Jerusalem," B. C. 453, or A. M. 3690. Then the 2300 years beginning at the same time, we ascertain their termination merely by deducting the years before the incarnation, which brings us down to A. D. 1847.

But by what event is the close of the 2300 yrs. to be signalized? Answer: the cleansing of the sanctuary, the accomplishment of the vision—the last end of the indignation. Dan. 8: 14-18; 23-27. In other words, that in A. D. 1847 the Lord Jehovah will appear for the restoration and re-establishment in Palestine of the seed of Abraham, which he swore unto their fathers."

Though Mr. Shimeall is a believer in the literal return of the Jews to the land of Palestine, as will be seen by the conclusion of this extract, his evidences on the point at issue are none the less valid; being drawn from the plain word of the Lord. In addition to what he has said, we offer in proof that the conversion of Cornelius, which marks the termination of the 70 weeks, must have been in the true A. D. 37.

1st. The necessary conclusion which is drawn from the dates of the points of termination of the preceding divisions of the 70 weeks, especially the 60 weeks. If the 69 weeks terminated A. D. 34, the one week, must of course close in A. D. 37. This all must admit who acknowledge that the covenant was confirmed with many for one week, ~~from the baptism of Christ; and that it was, we think has been already shown.~~ counted for more than three and a half years, from the death of Christ to the conversion of Cornelius, we believe cannot be shown. We will look at his narrative for a moment.

The first two chapters narrate the events from the ascension to the day of Pentecost, a period of only about ten days. The occurrences named in the next two chapters, could have occupied but a very few days, immediately after the day of Pentecost. Chapter five also gives an account of events which can reasonably be placed but a few weeks from the day of Pentecost. The excitement was great—the work spread rapidly—the priests were highly incensed, and lost no time in trying to check the growing influence of the new heresy, as they called it. In chapter four we see their first opposition was in the character of imprisonment and threats—but in chapter five, their rage leads them to imprisonment and beating the apostles.

Chapter six, 7th and 14th verses, shows that the work it names was still confined to Jerusalem.—Chapter 7 closes the subject commenced in the 6th, and the events it names are all confined to the city of Jerusalem, as verse 58 shows. It closes with an account of the stoning of Stephen, which could have been but a few months, at most, from the day of Pentecost.

The first verse of chapter 8 says, "and at that time, was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem, and they were scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. Verse 3 speaks of the burial of Stephen, and verse 4 of "Saul making havoc of the church, entering into every house, and hailing men and women, committed them to prison." This sore persecution, as verse 4 says, was the means of the saints being "scattered abroad, who went every where preaching the word." Up to this time the entire narrative is confined to what took place in Jerusalem, immediately after the day of Pentecost; and the most reasonable supposition is, that the whole could have occupied but a few months at most.

In chapter 8: 14, the first account of any of the apostles leaving Jerusalem is given. Philip went down to Samaria, the people heard the word gladly, and "when the apostles which were at Jerusalem, heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John," verse 14. "And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem," verse 25. The chapter closes with an account of the conversion of the Eunuch.

Chapter 9 commences back, and resumes the history of Saul, where verse 3 of the 8th leaves him, making "havoc of the church." Chapter 9: 1, 2, finds him in Jerusalem, "yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, he went unto the high Priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem." Then up to this time the connected history of events is all confined to Jerusalem, and no one, we think, can reasonably suppose that it required but a few months to accomplish them. The next event in the detail, which immediately follows, as chapter 9 will show, was the conversion of Saul on his way to Damascus.

The point we wish here to impress upon the mind is, the most probable time of Saul's conversion. And the facts in the case we think justify the conclusion that it could not have been later than the early part of A. D. 35. My polyglot bible places it in 34, vulgar era. This is correct; for the last of the year of that era, would be the first of the year of the true A. D. Seven months from the "midst," or middle of the true A. D. 34, when Christ was cut off, would reach to the first of the same era A. D. 35, and to near the close of the vulgar era 34. Hence, we are no-alone in our conclusions: but have the best chronologists to justify the date we give to the conversion of Saul, viz: the early part of 35. It was three years after his conversion, before Paul went up to Jerusalem, and abode with Peter fifteen days, as he says in Gal. 1: 18. Add the three years to the early part of 35, and it brings his visit in the early part of A. D. 38.

Now, if this visit was after the conversion of Cornelius, then we have very conclusive evidence that his conversion took place at the close of A. D. 37, the necessary point of time for the termination of the one week, or seventy weeks of Daniel's prophecy. Well, what are the facts in the case? We will see.

At this visit, in consequence of persecution, Paul is brought down to Cesarea," the abode of Cornelius. Cornelius must have been converted, if Paul called upon him. "And then sent him to Tarsus," Acts 9: 30. We will leave Paul in Tarsus for a moment, and see what was being done in Antioch, where he first preached in the synagogue to the Jews. Chapter eleven will give us the account. Verse 19 goes back to chapter 8: 4, and resumes the history of the persecution which arose at the death of Stephen. The account says, "now they that were scattered abroad upon the persecution which arose about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but the Jews. And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus." Many of the Grecians believed. And what did the apostles and brethren at Jerusalem do, when they heard that the gentiles at Antioch had received the word? Did they have a trial about it, as when Peter went to the house of Cornelius? No. Why not? No other reason can be assigned than that the work at Antioch was after that at the house of Cornelius.

But what did the church do in the case of Antioch? "Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem, and they sent forth Barnabas that he should go as far as Antioch," verse 22. They had sent Paul to Tarsus, where we told you we would leave him a short time. He is now wanted at Antioch to preach, not only in the synagogues, but to the Grecians also. Verses 25, 26, "Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, to seek Saul, and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch.—And it came to pass that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people."

Observe, Paul engages in this work among the Grecians at Antioch, soon after his visit to Jerusalem; it is his first labor after that visit. The church at Jerusalem approved of the work at Antioch, which they would not have done before the conversion of Cornelius, Acts 11: 1-18. Hence, the conclusion is unavoidable, that the conversion of Cornelius was a short time before Paul's visit, and we think at the close of A. D. 37, or a few days or weeks before Paul's visit, which was in the early part of 38.

Here, then, at the close of the true A. D. 37, the 70 weeks ended. The 69 weeks terminated at the close of A. D. 30, for Christ was then 30 years old. The midst of the week ended at the crucifixion, A. D. 33—~~for it was three years and a half from the baptism to the death of Christ.~~ And, as we have before said, the 70 weeks closed at the end of A. D. 37; for it is evident that it was three and a half years from the cross to the conversion of Cornelius.

Thus far we have confined our investigations to the bible; and from this infallible book, it appears clear to us that the 70 weeks, or 490 years, cut off of the 2300 days or years, terminated in the true year of our Lord 37, and the remainder, 1810, which completes the 2300, at the end of which, the sanctuary will be cleansed, will terminate in the true year of our Lord 1847. Whatever disputes may arise on human chronology, will not affect this question so far as the true era is concerned; 1847 is the true bible date for the termination of the vision of the 2300 days. On what year of the vulgar, or common received era the true 1847 will fall, is another question which we will now examine.

There is but one way, that we can see, to settle this intricate question, with any degree of certainty; and that is, by the aid of the Julian Period. If it can be determined in what year of the Julian Period, either, or all of the events which mark the fulfilment of the seventy weeks took place, then it can be determined when in that period, and also in the vulgar era, the 2300 days will end. Well, have we any testimony which defines the year of the Julian Period, in which either of those events occurred? We will see. We will take the crucifixion of Christ, as it was marked by certain phenomenon, by which the time of its occurrence might afterwards be determined.

The events which marked the termination of the 69 weeks, and also of the one week, or seventy weeks, though of the most convincing character to the immediate beholder, were local; hence not calculated to attract the notice of the profane historian. But the crucifixion, the termination of the "midst of the week," was marked with the supernatural darkening of the sun from the "sixth to the ninth hour," quaking of the earth, and rending of rocks. There is wisdom and design in all the works of God. And we cannot see why He marked this event with these occurrences, unless it was, at least in part, to attract the notice of the profane historian, that he might record the same, that the time of the crucifixion might be known. It would be very singular indeed to suppose, aside from the interposition of God, that such events as the supernatural darkening of the sun, from the sixth to the ninth hour, the quaking of the earth at the same time, and the rending of the rocks, the evidence of which is seen in all parts of the globe to this day; should all take place no longer than about 1800 years since, and no record be found as to the time of their occurrence. Our settled conviction is, that the time of these events has been correctly kept, and may now be known. Not positively, but sufficiently so to settle the matter in the believing mind with very strong assurance, that he has a correct understanding of it. We will give the testimony.

In speaking of the death of Christ, in his comments on Matt. 27, Dr. Clark says:

"Phlegon and Thallus, who flourished about the beginning of the second century, are supposed to speak of this. The former says, 'In the 4th year of the 202d Olympiad, there was an extraordinary eclipse of the sun; at the sixth hour, the day was turned into dark night, so that the stars of heaven were seen; and there was an earthquake in Bithynia which overthrew many of the houses in the city of Nice.' Thallus speaks of a darkness over all of the earth, and an earthquake which threw down many houses in Judea, and in other parts of the earth." "Dionysius, the Areopogite, is supposed to have mentioned this event in the most decided manner; for being at Heliopolis in Egypt, with his friend Apollonophanes when our Savior suffered, they there saw a wonderful eclipse of the sun, whereupon Dionysius said to his friend, 'either God himself suffers, or sympathizes with the sufferer.'"

The first two testimonies Dr. Clark doubts, but offers no real valid objections against them. The last he rejects as being altogether spurious. But Dr. Hales admits the genuineness of the last, though he uses the evidence to prove the crucifixion occurred in A. D. 21. Time has proved this date incorrect, for had the midst of the week ended in the true A. D. 31, the 2300 days would have terminated in A. D. 1844. We will give the testimony of Dionysius as given by Dr. Hales, and published in the Signs of the Times for Dec. 5, 1843. He says:

"This obscuration of the sun must have been preternatural in its extent, duration, and opposition of the moon, at full, to the sun. It was observed at Heliopolis in Egypt, by Dionysius, the Areopogite, afterwards the illustrious convert of Paul, at Athens, Acts 17: 34; who, in a letter to the martyr Polycarp, describes his own and his companion, the sophist Apollonophanes' astonishment at the phenomenon, when they saw the darkness commence at the eastern limb of the sun, and proceed to the western, till the whole was eclipsed; and then regrade backwards, from the western to the eastern, till his light was fully restored; which they attributed to the miraculous passage of the moon across the sun's disk. Apollonophanes exclaimed, as if divining the cause;—'These, O good Dionysius, are the vicissitudes of divine events!' Dionysius answered, 'Either the Deity suffers, or He sympathizes with the sufferer.' And that sufferer, according to tradition recorded by Michael Syncellus of Jerusalem, he declared to be the unknowable God, for whose sufferings all nature was darkened and convulsed."—Dr. Hales's New Anal. Chron. vol. 2, p. 897.

Speaking on this subject, Ferguson says:

"The 4746th year of the Julian Period, which we have astronomically proved to be the year of the crucifixion, was the 4th of the 202d Olympiad; in which year, Phlegon, a heathen writer, tells us there was the most extraordinary eclipse of the sun that ever was seen. But I find by calculation, that there could be no total eclipse of the sun at Jerusalem, in a natural way in that year. So that what Phlegon here calls an eclipse of the sun, seems to have been the great darkness for three hours at the time of our Savior's crucifixion, as mentioned by the Evangelist; a darkness altogether supernatural, as the moon was then in the side of the heavens opposite to the sun; and therefore could not possibly darken the sun to any part of the earth." See Miller's Life and Views, page 248.

Though the testimony conflicts relative to its validity and the time of the events named; yet taken as a whole, and viewed in the light of reason, it conclusively proves that the sun was darkened, and that the earth did quake, as the evangelists testify, at the crucifixion of Christ; and that these events were witnessed, and noticed by heathen writers; and become matters of record on the pages of the earliest histories of those times. Admitting these facts, which cannot reasonably be denied, we are prepared to inquire for the time of their occurrence.

The nature of the case leads to the unavoidable conclusion, that the time of the crucifixion, and second coming of Christ, were designed not to be known; or that God has been his own time-keeper, or caused it to be kept in such a manner, that the time of these events might be determined. Believing the latter to be the case, whether we have now the correct understanding of the case or not, we will proceed to present the evidence which to us defines the time of the crucifixion, and consequently the coming of the Lord. And

1st. Phlegon, according to the foregoing testimony of Dr. Clark and Ferguson, says that "the sun, at the sixth hour," was darkened so that the "day was turned into dark night," and that it happened in the 4th year of the 202d Olympiad." And Ferguson tells us that the 4th year of the 202d Olympiad, fell on "the 4746th year of the Julian Period, and which he had astronomically proved to be the year of the crucifixion." Ac-ording to this testimony the sun was darkened, the earth did quake, and the rocks were rent at the crucifixion, in the 4746th year of the Julian Period.

2d. Dr. Clark, in his comments on Dan. 9: 25, says: "Most learned men agree that the death of Christ happened at the Passover, in the month Nisan, in the four thousand seven hundred and forty sixth year of the Julian Period." Prideaux says the same of his day, whose language Dr. Clark has borrowed.—Prideaux, Con. vol. 1, p. 228.

If the Dr., and as he says, Lardner doubted the testimony of Phlegon, Thallus, and entirely rejected that of Dionysius, how could he and "most learned men agree that the death of Christ happened in the 4746th year of the Julian Period?" The very testimony which is said to be doubted is the main evidence that has brought "most learned men" to this conclusion. It is a matter not easily reconciled with reason, to suppose they have generally come to this conclusion, without the evidence in the case appearing to them clear and weighty.

3d. We find in Prideaux's connexion, the crucifixion is placed in the 4746th year of the Julian Period. This critical and learned writer says: "Christ was crucified, rose again from the dead, and ascended up into heaven" 4746, Julian Period. See Chron. Tab. vol. 2, p. 439.

We are aware that Prideaux, and almost, if not every eminent chronologist, has made the anointing and birth of Christ, and the going forth of the commandment, coincide with certain dates in the Julian Period, which do not harmonize with the view we take, and which we think the scriptures fully justify, viz: the termination of the seventy weeks, three and a half years after the crucifixion. They all give to John the Baptist three or four years, and thereby make the 70 weeks terminate at the death of Christ, consequently, they have been under the necessity of placing the events which took place prior to the crucifixion in wrong years of the Julian Period. It has thrown those events back on this infallible line of reckoning three or four years each. Let the mistake about John be corrected, and those events will then all tally with the Julian Period in perfect harmony, and justify our view of the subject.

The three or four years given to John, if we mistake not, equally effect all the prophetic numbers which have their beginning before the christian era. The 70 weeks, beginning at the "going forth of the commandment," and ending, as has been wrongly supposed, at the crucifixion, have constituted the divine arch, or line of 490 years of chronological reckoning by which the age of the world, the seven times, the Jubilees, and the 2300 days, &c., have been computed.—All chronology has been made to harmonize with this beginning and supposed ending of the 70 weeks. Consequently a mistake of three or four years, (the time allowed to John) has been made. But it is not our object to investigate these points now; but to settle the time of the crucifixion; and from the testimony adduced, it seems clear that it took place in the 4746th year of the Julian Period.

The next point of inquiry is, what year of the vulgar era coincides with the 4746th year of the Julian Period? Testimony is abundant on this point. Ferguson, speaking of the death of Christ, says: "It was the 33d year of his age, reckoning from the vulgar era of his birth." (Miller's Life and Views, p. 248.) Dr. Clark makes it the same. Prideaux says, "Christ was crucified, rose again from the dead, and ascended up into heaven, the Christian era 33, Julian Period 4746." (Connexion, vol. 2, p. 439.) Most if not all of our chronological tables in our large bibles, as well as the dates in our Polyglott bibles, place the death of Christ in the spring of A. D. 33 vulgar

35, to allow time for his two visits to Jerusalem mentioned in Galatians, with an interval of three years, and fourteen years between them: all occurring before the council, in Acts 15: the dissensions leading to which, are referred to in Gal. 2: 11; and which council could not be later than 52. Paul's first visit to Jerusalem was therefore in 38, and Peter was at Jerusalem, Gal. 1: 18; and the persecution raised about Stephen, had ceased. Acts 9: 31; 11: 17. But at this visit to Jerusalem, Paul received his commission to go to the Gentiles. Acts 22: 21; and began to dispute with the Grecians, Acts 9: 29, at the time when the disciples at Antioch did the same:—Acts 11: 20; all of which proves that the door had then been opened to the Gentiles by the conversion of Cornelius, as otherwise these proceedings could not have been sanctioned by the church in sending forth Barnabas, Acts 11: 22, and their even sending Paul to Cesarea, the abode of Cornelius, Acts 9: 30, indicates the same thing; and Barnabas sought his help as the chosen vessel to the Gentiles, Acts 11: 25, 9: 30.

The conversion of Cornelius, therefore, must have taken place before 38. We should recollect that the transactions in the Acts, are not given in the regular sequence of time, but one narrative is followed out to its close, and then another taken up, though it should require going back in order of time: as is evidently the case, chap. 11: 19, which returns to chap. 8: 1.

The conclusion therefore is, that the 70 weeks, or 490 years of Daniel, ending at the conversion of Cornelius, A. D. 37, together with the 2300 years are to be dated from the command to restore and build Jerusalem, as given to Ezra in the 7th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus.

We proceed, therefore, to observe, that the death of the Savior at the termination of his three and a half years' ministry on the one hand, and the conversion of Cornelius, after the three and a half years of the apostolic ministry among the Jews on the other, together make up the "one," or last of the 70 prophetic weeks; and, added to the 30 years of Christ's age when he commenced his ministry, it demonstrates that the 70 weeks closed A. D. 37. Now, carry back the 70 weeks or 490 years from A. D. 37, to the era B. C., and you have the date of "the command to restore and build Jerusalem," B. C. 453, or A. M. 3690. Then the 2300 years beginning at the same time, we ascertain their termination merely by deducting the years before the incarnation, which brings us down to A. D. 1847.

But by what event is the close of the 2300 yrs. to be signalized? Answer: the cleansing of the sanctuary, the accomplishment of the vision—the last end of the indignation. Dan. 8: 14–18; 23–27. In other words, that in A. D. 1847 the Lord Jehovah will appear for the restoration and re-establishment in Palestine of the seed of Abraham, which he swore unto their fathers."

Though Mr. Shimoall is a believer in the literal return of the Jews to the land of Palestine, as will be seen by the conclusion of this extract, his evidences on the point at issue are none the less valid; being drawn from the plain word of the Lord. In addition to what he has said, we offer in proof that the conversion of Cornelius, which marks the termination of the 70 weeks, must have been in the true A. D. 37.

1st. The necessary conclusion which is drawn from the dates of the points of termination of the preceding divisions of the 70 weeks, especially the 69 weeks. If the 69 weeks terminated A. D. 334, the one week, must of course close in A. D. 37. This all must admit who acknowledge that the covenant was confirmed with many for one week, from the baptism of Christ; and that it was, we think has been already shown.

2d. Our second proof is the facts in the case. That Luke, in the Acts of the apostles, has accounted for more than three and a half years, from the death of Christ to the conversion of Cornelius, we believe cannot be shown. We will look at his narrative for a moment.

The first two chapters narrate the events from the ascension to the day of Pentecost, a period of only about ten days. The occurrences named in the next two chapters, could have occupied but a very few days, immediately after the day of Pentecost. Chapter five also gives an account of events which can reasonably be placed but a few weeks from the day of Pentecost. The excitement was great—the work spread rapidly—the priests were highly incensed, and lost no time in trying to check the growing influence of the new heresy, as they called it. In chapter four we see their first opposition was in the character of imprisonment and threats—but in chapter five, their rage leads them to imprisonment and beating the apostles.

Chapter six, 7th and 14th verses, shows that the work it names was still confined to Jerusalem.—Chapter 7 closes the subject commenced in the 6th, and the events it names are all confined to the city of Jerusalem, as verse 58 shows. It closes with an account of the stoning of Stephen, which could have been but a few months, at most, from the day of Pentecost.

The first verse of chapter 8 says, "and at that time, was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem, and they were scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles." Verse 3 speaks of the burial of Stephen, and verse 4 of "Saul making havoc of the church, entering into every house, and hailing men and women, committed them to prison." This sore persecution, as verse 4 says, was the means of the saints being "scattered abroad, who went every where preaching the word." Up to this time the entire narrative is confined to what took place in Jerusalem, immediately after the day of Pentecost; and the most reasonable supposition is, that the whole could have occupied but a few months at most.

In chapter 8: 14, the first account of any of the apostles leaving Jerusalem is given. Philip went down to Samaria, the people heard the word gladly, and "when the apostles which were at Jerusalem, heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John," verse 14. "And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem," verse 25. The chapter closes with an account of the conversion of the Eunuch.

Chapter 9 commences back, and resumes the history of Saul, where verse 3 of the 8th leaves him, making "havoc of the church." Chapter 9: 1, 2, finds him in Jerusalem, "yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, he went unto the high Priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem." Then up to this time the connected history of events is all confined to Jerusalem, and no one, we think, can reasonably suppose that it required but a few months to accomplish them. The next event in the detail, which immediately follows, as chapter 9 will show, was the conversion of Saul on his way to Damascus.

The point we wish here to impress upon the mind is, the most probable time of Saul's conversion. And the facts in the case we think justify the conclusion that it could not have been later than the early part of A. D. 35. My polyglot bible places it in 34, vulgar era. This is correct; for the last of the year of that era, would be the first of the year of the true A. D. Seven months from the "midst," or middle of the true A. D. 34, when Christ was cut off, would reach to the first of the same era A. D. 35, and to near the close of the vulgar era 34. Hence, we are not alone in our conclusions: but have the best chronologists to justify the date we give to the conversion of Saul, viz: the early part of 35. It was three years after his conversion, before Paul went up to Jerusalem, and abode with Peter fifteen days, as he says in Gal. 1: 18. Add the three years to the early part of 35, and it brings his visit in the early part of A. D. 38.

Now, if this visit was after the conversion of Cornelius, then we have very conclusive evidence that his conversion took place at the close of A. D. 37, the necessary point of time for the termination of the one week, or seventy weeks of Daniel's prophecy. Well, what are the facts in the case? We will see.

At this visit, in consequence of persecution, Paul is brought down to Cesarea, the abode of Cornelius. Cornelius must have been converted, if Paul called upon him. "And then sent him to Tarsus," Acts 9: 30. We will leave Paul in Tarsus for a moment, and see what was being done in Antioch, where he first preached in the synagogue to the Jews. Chapter eleven will give us the account. Verse 19 goes back to chapter 8: 4, and resumes the history of the persecution which arose at the death of Stephen. The account says, "now they that were scattered abroad upon the persecution which arose about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but the Jews. And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus." Many of the Grecians believed. And what did the apostles and brethren at Jerusalem do, when they heard that the gentiles at Antioch had received the word? Did they have a trial about it, as when Peter went to the house of Cornelius? No. Why not? No other reason can be assigned than that the work at Antioch was after that at the house of Cornelius.

But what did the church do in the case of Antioch? "Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem, and they sent forth Barnabas that he should go as far as Antioch," verse 22. They had sent Paul to Tarsus, where we told you we would leave him a short time. He is now wanted at Antioch to preach, not only in the synagogues, but to the Grecians also. Verses 25, 26, "Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, to seek Saul, and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch.—And it came to pass that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people."

Observe, Paul engages in this work among the Grecians at Antioch, soon after his visit to Jerusalem; it is his first labor after that visit. The church at Jerusalem approved of the work at Antioch, which they would not have done before the conversion of Cornelius, Acts 11: 1–18. Hence, the conclusion is unavoidable, that the conversion of Cornelius was a short time before Paul's visit, and we think at the close of A. D. 37, or a few days or weeks before Paul's visit, which was in the early part of 38.

Here, then, at the close of the true A. D. 37, the 70 weeks ended. The 69 weeks terminated at the close of A. D. 30, for Christ was then 30 years old. The midst of the week ended at the crucifixion, A. D. 334—for it was three years and a half from the baptism to the death of Christ. And, as we have before said, the 70 weeks closed at the end of A. D. 37; for it is evident that it was three and a half years from the cross to the conversion of Cornelius.

Thus far we have confined our investigations to the bible; and from this infallible book, it appears clear to us that the 70 weeks, or 490 years, cut off of the 2300 days or years, terminated in the true year of our Lord 37, and the remainder, 1810, which completes the 2300, at the end of which, the sanctuary will be cleansed, will terminate in the true year of our Lord 1847. Whatever disputes may arise on human chronology, will not affect this question so far as the true era is concerned; 1847 is the true bible date for the termination of the vision of the 2300 days. On what year of the vulgar, or common received era the true 1847 will fall, is another question which we will now examine.

There is but one way, that we can see, to settle this intricate question, with any degree of certainty; and that is, by the aid of the Julian Period. If it can be determined in what year of the Julian Period, either, or all of the events which mark the fulfilment of the seventy weeks took place, then it can be determined when in that period, and also in the vulgar era, the 2300 days will end. Well, have we any testimony which defines the year of the Julian Period, in which either of those events occurred? We will see. We will take the crucifixion of Christ, as it was marked by certain phenomenon, by which the time of its occurrence might afterwards be determined.

The events which marked the termination of the 69 weeks, and also of the one week, or seventy weeks, though of the most convincing character to the immediate beholder, were local; hence not calculated to attract the notice of the profane historian. But the crucifixion, the termination of the "midst of the week," was marked with the supernatural darkening of the sun from the "sixth to the ninth hour," quaking of the earth, and rending of rocks. There is wisdom and design in all the works of God. And we cannot see why He marked this event with these occurrences, unless it was, at least in part, to attract the notice of the profane historian, that he might record the same, that the time of the crucifixion might be known. It would be very singular indeed to suppose, aside from the interposition of God, that such events as the supernatural darkening of the sun, from the sixth to the ninth hour, the quaking of the earth at the same time, and the rending of the rocks, the evidence of which is seen in all parts of the globe to this day; should all take place no longer than about 1800 years since, and no record be found as to the time of their occurrence. Our settled conviction is, that the time of these events has been correctly kept, and may now be known. Not positively, but sufficiently so to settle the matter in the believing mind with very strong assurance, that he has a correct understanding of it. We will give the testimony.

In speaking of the death of Christ, in his comments on Matt. 27, Dr. Clark says:

"Phlegon and Thallus, who flourished about the beginning of the second century, are supposed to speak of this. The former says, "In the 4th year of the 202d Olympiad, there was an extraordinary eclipse of the sun; at the sixth hour, the day was turned into dark night, so that the stars of heaven were seen; and there was an earthquake in Bithynia which overthrew many of the houses in the city of Nice." Thallus speaks of a darkness over all of the earth, and an earthquake which threw down many houses in Judea, and in other parts of the earth." "Dyonisius, the Areopogite, is supposed to have mentioned this event in the most decided manner; for being at Heliopolis in Egypt, with his friend Apollophanes when our Savior suffered, they there saw a wonderful eclipse of the sun, whereupon Dyonisius said to his friend, 'either God himself suffers, or sympathizes with the sufferer.'"

The first two testimonies Dr. Clark doubts, but offers no real valid objections against them. The last he rejects as being altogether spurious. But Dr. Hales admits the genuineness of the last, though he uses the evidence to prove the crucifixion occurred in A. D. 31. Time has proved this date incorrect, for had the midst of the week ended in the true A. D. 31, the 2300 days would have terminated in A. D. 1844. We will give the testimony of Dyonisius as given by Dr. Hales, and published in the Sigis of the Times for Dec. 5, 1843. He says:

"This obscuration of the sun must have been preternatural in its extent, duration, and opposition of the moon, at full, to the sun. It was observed at Heliopolis in Egypt, by Dyonisius, the Areopogite, afterwards the illustrious convert of Paul, at Athens, Acts 17: 34; who, in a letter to the martyr Polycarp, describes his own and his companion, the sophist Apollophanes' astonishment at the phenomenon, when they saw the darkness commence at the eastern limb of the sun, and proceed to the western, till the whole was eclipsed; and then regrade backwards, from the western to the eastern, till his light was fully restored; which they attributed to the miraculous passage of the moon across the sun's disk. Apollophanes exclaimed, as if divining the cause;—'These, O good Dyonisius, are the vicissitudes of divine events!' Dyonisius answered, 'Either the Deity suffers, or He sympathizes with the sufferer!' And that sufferer, according to tradition recorded by Michael Syncellus of Jerusalem, he declared to be the unknowable God, for whose sufferings all nature was darkened and convulsed."—Dr. Hales's New Anal. Chro. vol. 2, p. 897.

Speaking on this subject, Ferguson says:

"The 4746th year of the Julian Period, which we have astronomically proved to be the year of the crucifixion, was the 4th of the 202d Olympiad; in which year, Phlegon, a heathen writer, tells us there was the most extraordinary eclipse of the sun that ever was seen. But I find by calculation, that there could be no total eclipse of the sun at Jerusalem, in a natural way in that year. So that what Phlegon here calls an eclipse of the sun, seems to have been the great darkness for three hours at the time of our Savior's crucifixion, as mentioned by the Evangelist; a darkness altogether supernatural, as the moon was then in the side of the heavens opposite to the sun; and therefore could not possibly darken the sun to any part of the earth." See Miller's Life and Views, page 248.

Though the testimony conflicts relative to its validity and the time of the events named; yet taken as a whole, and viewed in the light of reason, it conclusively proves that the sun was darkened, and that the earth did quake, as the evangelists testify, at the crucifixion of Christ: and that these events were witnessed, and noticed by heathen writers; and become matters of record on the pages of the earliest histories of those times. Admitting these facts, which cannot reasonably be denied, we are prepared to inquire for the time of their occurrence.

The nature of the case leads to the unavoidable conclusion, that the time of the crucifixion, and second coming of Christ, were designed not to be known; or that God has been his own time-keeper, or caused it to be kept in such a manner, that the time of these events might be determined. Believing the latter to be the case, whether we have now the correct understanding of the case or not, we will proceed to present the evidence which to us defines the time of the crucifixion, and consequently the coming of the Lord. And ording to this testimony the sun was darkened, the earth did quake, and the rocks were rent at the crucifixion, in the 4746th year of the Julian Period.

1st. Phlegon, according to the foregoing testimony of Dr. Clark and Ferguson, says that "the sun, at the sixth hour," was darkened so that the "day was turned into dark night," and that it happened in the 4th year of the 202d Olympiad." And Ferguson tells us that the 4th year of the 202d Olympiad, fell on "the 4746th year of the Julian Period, and which he had astronomically proved to be the year of the crucifixion." Ac-

2d. Dr. Clark, in his comments on Dan. 9: 25, says: "Most learned men agree that the death of Christ happened at the Passover, in the month Nisan, in the four thousand seven hundred and forty sixth year of the Julian Period." Prideaux says the same of his day, whose language Dr. Clark has borrowed.—Prideaux, Con. vol. 1, p. 228.

If the Dr., and as he says, Lardner doubted the testimony of Phlegon, Thallus, and entirely rejected that of Dyonisius, how could he and "most learned men agree that the death of Christ happened in the 4746th year of the Julian Period!" The very testimony which is said to be doubted is the main evidence that has brought "most learned men" to this conclusion. It is a matter not easily reconciled with reason, to suppose they have generally come to this conclusion, without the evidence in the case appearing to them clear and weighty.

3d. We find in Prideaux's connexion, the crucifixion is placed in the 4746th year of the Julian Period. This critical and learned writer says: "Christ was crucified, rose again from the dead, and ascended up into heaven" 4746, Julian Period. See Chron. Tab. vol. 2, p. 439.

We are aware that Prideaux, and almost, if not every eminent chronologist, has made the anointing and birth of Christ, and the going forth of the commandment, coincide with certain dates in the Julian Period, which do not harmonize with the view we take, and which we think the scriptures fully justify, viz: the termination of the seventy weeks, three and a half years after the crucifixion. They all give to John the Baptist three or four years, and thereby make the 70 weeks terminate at the death of Christ, consequently, they have been under the necessity of placing the events which took place prior to the crucifixion in wrong years of the Julian Period. It has thrown those events back on this infallible line of reckoning three or four years each. Let the mistake about John be corrected, and those events will then all tally with the Julian Period in perfect harmony, and justify our view of the subject.

The three or four years given to John, if we mistake not, equally effect all the prophetic numbers which have their beginning before the christian era. The 70 weeks, beginning at the "going forth of the commandment," and ending, as has been wrongly supposed, at the crucifixion, have constituted the divine arch, or line of 490 years of chronological reckoning by which the age of the world, the seven times, the Jubilees, and the 2300 days, &c., have been computed.—All chronology has been made to harmonize with this beginning and supposed ending of the 70 weeks. Consequently a mistake of three or four years, (the time allowed to John) has been made. But it is not our object to investigate these points now; but to settle the time of the crucifixion; and from the testimony adduced, it seems clear that it took place in the 4746th year of the Julian Period.

The next point of inquiry is, what year of the vulgar era coincides with the 4746th year of the Julian Period? Testimony is abundant on this point. Ferguson, speaking of the death of Christ, says: "It was the 33d year of his age, reckoning from the vulgar era of his birth." (Miller's Life and Views, p. 248.) Dr. Clark makes it the same. Prideaux says, "Christ was crucified, rose again from the dead, and ascended up into heaven, the Christian era 33, Julian Period 4746." (Connexion, vol. 2, p. 439.) Most if not all of our chronologies, tables in our large bibles, as well as the dates in our Polyglott bibles, place the death of Christ in the spring of A. D. 33 vulgar era, which would be 32½ of that era. This in fact would be only A. D. 32½ vulgar era. Now according to our understanding of the Bible testimony about his being cut off in the midst of the week, the crucifixion of Christ must have been in A. D. 33½ true era, which places that event one year later than what it is computed by the vulgar era. Hence, the 33d year of the vulgar era, or A. D. 32½, falls in with the 4746th year of the Julian Period, or agrees with the year of that period, 4745½. But the true A. D. 33½ agrees with the year of the Julian Period 4746½. With this view of the subject we come to the following

CONCLUSIONS.

1st. Placing the crucifixion in A. D. 32½ vulgar era, and Julian Period 4745½; add to these numbers the half week, or three and a half years, and it brings the termination of the seventy weeks, or 490 years at the close of A. D. 36, vulgar era, and Julian Period 4749. Add to these numbers 1510, the number required to complete the vision of 2300 days, and it brings us near the close of A. D. 1846 vulgar era, and Julian Period 6559, the time for the termination of the 2300 days, at the end of which the Sanctuary will be cleansed.

2d. As the true era makes the death of Christ one year later than what the vulgar era places it, of course the termination of the seventy weeks, and of the 2300 days must necessarily fall a year later in the true era than in the vulgar. It would bring the close of the seventy weeks at the termination of A. D. 37 true era, and the close of the vision of the 2300 days at the end of the same era, A. D. 1847.

3d. According to this view, and we think it is substantially correct, the true era A. D. 1847, falls in with the vulgar era A. D. 1846.

Hence, the conclusion of the whole matter embraced in the preceding arguments, is, that the 2300 days of Daniel's vision have not yet expired; but are near, very near their close. And the most probable time for their termination is not far from the close of this present year.

ASTRONOMICAL EVIDENCE.

To strengthen the foregoing view of the subject we will now present certain evidence given by Bro. A. Hale in a pamphlet recently published on "The Harmony of prophetic Chronology." Our circumscribed limits will admit of our giving only a few extracts from this valuable work. In reference to the evidence on which we relied to prove the coming of the Lord would take place in 1843, Bro. Hale remarks:

"There is a data, however, of an entirely different character from that on which we have relied, though it harmonizes with it in the main; it is derived from the word and works of God, i. e. from the connection of the facts of the gospel history with facts of astronomy.

It is well known that the practical astronomer can calculate the time of an eclipse, whether past or future, with the utmost precision, so that if any event in the past has been connected with an eclipse, the circumstances of which will enable an astronomer to calculate the time at which it occurred, the date of that event may be determined with equal precision. And though we may be dependent upon the testimony of historians for the knowledge of an eclipse, it must be seen at once, that on such a fact they would be the least likely to prevaricate; and a falsehood in the case of an eclipse would be as easily detected almost as if we were living at the time the event may be said to have occurred. It may, for instance, be proved to be an impossibility that the supernatural darkness at the time of the crucifixion, could have been occasioned by an eclipse. So, also, in the case of the crucifixion, of Thales; different dates have been supposed by historians as the time of that eclipse, ranging from B. C. 607, to B. C.

585. Put it has been settled by Maher, Costard, and Stukely, that it could have been no other than the solar eclipse of B. C. 603. (Dr. Hales' Chron. B. I. pp. 12, 182, 181.)

Have we then, any facts of this kind—any eclipses—to enable us to determine the date of any of the events on which the calculation of the prophetic periods depend? I think it will be seen that the date of the fulfilment of the 2300 days and the seventy weeks of Daniel eighth and ninth, may be determined by such facts. It must be seen that we only have to fix the date of any one of the events which marks the fulfilment of any one of the divisions of the longer period, in order to settle the date of the fulfilment of any other division, and of course of the end itself.

Sixty-nine weeks of the 70 were to extend 'unto Messiah the Prince.' This must apply to the time when his Messiahship should be publicly made known and duly authenticated. His public manifestation as the Messiah, took place at his baptism; for he was not known as the Messiah, to the people generally, (Luke 3: 15) or even by John the Baptist, his natural cousin, as men count relationship, until his baptism. John came especially for the purpose of preparing the Jewish nation to receive him; he was to point him out to them; and it was by the miraculous descent and appearance of the Holy Ghost that the Messiahship of Jesus was to be attested to John, and this took place at his baptism. These facts are fully stated by the evangelists: John 1: 19-34; Luke 3: 21, 22.

The public manifestation of the Messiah at his baptism marked the termination of the 69th week, and the beginning of the 70th. It is the date of this event, within a certain boundary, that we are able to determine by the facts of astronomy. Luke testifies (3: 1-3, 21, 23) that the ministry of John the Baptist began 'in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar;' and that the baptism of Christ by John took place when he was 'about thirty years of age.'

And here it shall be shown, that our 'mistake,' about which so much is said, originated in a false criticism upon this testimony of Luke. Some of the commentators and chronologists, in order to establish the chronology of the gospel history by the doubtful catalogue of the Greek Olympiads and Roman consulships, make this testimony of Luke refer to the associate reign of Tiberius with Augustus, which commenced a few years before the death of the latter. But there certainly is no authority for this in the original, as Hengstenberg and others have already shown; and it was so obviously the design of Luke to give the chronological clue to the ministry of John, and the baptism of Christ, that if he had meant the associated reign of Tiberius, he must have expressed himself in language that could not be misunderstood. He gives 'the year of the reign,' or government of the emperor, the name of the governor, the tetrarchs of the different parts of Palestine, and the high priests; and the same word is used in the original to express the character of the official relation of Pontius Pilate to Judea, that is used to express that of Tiberius to the state with which he was connected; the same that is used to express that of Cyrenius to Syria, Luke 2: 2; there is, therefore, no more reason to suppose an associated relation to the office is intended in one case than in the other. We therefore receive the testimony of Luke in its plain and obvious meaning; and refer it to the sole reign of Tiberius.—As to the Olympic and Consular Tables extant, as they are made up of shreds and patches, the original records or inscriptions being lost, no reliance can be placed upon the date of an event connected with them, as to a definite year, which is abundantly evident from the discordant tables of different chronologists.

The commencement of the reign of Tiberius

Cæsar's is determined by an eclipse of the moon to have been in Aug. A. D. 14. The circumstances of the case were these. At the death of Augustus Cæsar, the predecessor of Tiberius, a part of the imperial army, called the Pannonian Legions, refused to acknowledge the authority of the latter, and were in a state of revolt from the time they heard of the death of Augustus, till the eclipse, which was the means of quelling the sedition. (See Jarvis' Int. to Hist. of the Church, p. 251.)

Here, then, the place where the eclipse was seen is stated; and the month and day on which Augustus died being known, as the mutiny and eclipse followed that event immediately, the time of the year in which it must have happened is easily determined. The only eclipse marked in the astronomical tables, as the one here referred to, took place Sept. 26th, A. D. 14. (See Fer. Astron. Dr. Hales' Chron. &c.)

Another and still more remarkable eclipse enables us also to fix the true date of the reign of Tiberius: it is the 'great eclipse' of the sun which took place at the time of the battle of Actium.—A few days before the battle in which Antony and Cæsar fought for the supremacy of the world, and while the armies were marshalled on the plains of Actium, the sun set in an eclipse; (probably the most remarkable that ever occurred) so that there can be no difficulty in ascertaining when it took place. By this eclipse it is known that the battle of Actium was fought Sept. 2. B. C. 31.—As Cæsar was triumphant, the battle of Actium was made one of the epochs from which his reign was computed. He reigned within a few days of 44 years after the battle. And forty-four full years, beginning Sept. 2, B. C. 31, extend to Sept. 2, A. D. 14. The death of Augustus Cæsar took place Aug. 19, A. D. 14. (Memoirs of the Court of Augustus, vol. 3, p. 550. Lon. 1763. Gillie's Hist. of the World, vol. 3, p. 474, 475.)

By this data, then, the sole reign of Tiberius must have been Aug. 19, A. D. 14. His fifteenth year must have extended from Aug. A. D. 28, to Aug. 29, and some time during that year, "the word of God came unto John the son of Zecharias in the wilderness, and he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." The baptism of Christ must have taken place, therefore, after August 19th A. D. 28, and thus we have the earliest boundary fixed for the period in which the last week of the 70 began.

The other boundary is marked by the connection of the birth of Christ with the death of Herod, which is also designated by an eclipse. Matthew informs us, (2: 1, 13-20) that Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king; that the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into the land of Egypt, and be thou there till I bring the word; for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him; that when he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt, and was there until the death of Herod; that when Herod saw that he was mocked of the wise men, he was exceeding wroth, and sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men; that when Herod was dead, an angel of the Lord appeared in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, saying, arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel; for they are dead which sought the young child's life.

Now it is well known that Josephus, who gives the details of the history of Herod's life and reign states that some of the transactions in his last sickness were marked by an eclipse of the moon. And there are no other eclipses but these of two years, concerning which there can be any dispute as to that referred to by Josephus. One of these took place March 11, B. C. 4; the others, January 8th, and December 28th B. C. 1,—the one in January a total eclipse. Between these there was none visible in Judea, nor was there a total eclipse for more than two years after.

But if the eclipse which marked the death of Herod took place B. C. 4, and Christ had been born at the very time of the eclipse, he must have been full thirty in A. D. 27, March 11th, more than a year before the 15th of Tiberius began; the last week of the 70 must have begun in that year, and ended A. D. 34, and of course the whole period must have ended in 1844. Time has proved that that cannot be the eclipse of which Josephus speaks.

But the eclipse which determines the date of the battle of Actium, enables us also to determine the latest possible date for the death of Herod.—Josephus tells us that Herod reigned thirty-seven years from the time he was made king at Rome; and that the battle of Actium took place in the seventh year of his reign. Supposing a half of his seventh year to have passed at the time of the battle, which is the most that can be supposed, as it was after a most dangerous winter voyage, with the hazard of his life, and loss of his baggage, he arrived early in the spring at Rome; and tarried there only seven days at the time he was made king—there would remain thirty and a half years of the thirty-seven after the battle of Actium.—That took place Sept. 2, B. C. 31, thirty years beginning at that date would extend to Sept. 2, B. C. 1. The remaining half year would extend to March of the next year, A. D. 1. The eclipse that marked the death of Herod, could not, therefore, be earlier or later than B. C. 1. As there were two eclipses in that year, one in January, the other in December; and as we wish to obtain the latest boundary for the period in which the date of the baptism of Christ could fall, we will suppose the last eclipse of that year to be the one mentioned by Josephus, which marked the death of Herod.

By referring to the above testimony of Matthew, it will be seen that two important facts are settled.

1. That Herod was living when Christ was born.
2. That the hasty flight into Egypt to elude the malice of Herod, and the return to the land of Israel after his death were while the Savior was a young child; and therefore Herod could not have lived a great while after the birth of Christ.

And now, to put the matter in the worst light possible, if Christ had been born at the time of this last eclipse, and had been full thirty at the time of his baptism, he could not have been baptized later than December A. D. 30. We are therefore brought, by this most decisive view of the question, to a period of about two years and four months, within which Christ must have been baptized, and the last week of the seventy begun; and according to this view, the latest point to which the seventy weeks could extend is December, A. D. 37; and the latest point to which the whole period could extend is December 1847—a point not two years in the future. The whole period which extends to

From this deduct 69 weeks, or 483 “
And there remain 1817 “

As this remaining part of the whole period, beginning with the last week of the seventy, at the baptism of Christ, must have begun between August, A. D. 28, and December, A. D. 30, so it must end between August, A. D. 1845, and December, 1847.

Added to A. D.	1817	28	1817
Extend to	1845	Extend to	1847

But all the time the birth of Christ preceded the eclipse, and all the time that Christ was short of 30 at his baptism, must bring the termination of the 70 weeks, and of the whole period so much earlier. If Christ was baptized any time in A. D. 29, the whole period must terminate in 1846. And the most natural view we can take of all the facts stated by the evangelists, make it very probable that the termination falls more than a year before the latest point here referred to. The decree of Herod by which he intended to secure the Savior as his victim, was framed according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men what time the star appeared—and as the decree provided for the slaughter of all the children in the coasts of Bethlehem, from two years old and under, since Herod must have been living at the time he ‘sent forth’ the decree, it is reasonable to suppose that Christ was born not less than one year, nor more than two, before the issuing of the decree. But if Christ was born only one year before the eclipse, and was less than thirty at his baptism, the end must come more than a year before December 1847. And when we remember that the eclipse of January, as it was a total eclipse, is quite as likely to be the one which marked the death of Herod, the end is crowded so much nearer. It hardly seems possible that it can pass beyond 1846. Indeed we have already passed so far into the period, within the limits of which the end must fall, according to the data here given, we should not put off the end a single hour.

With this termination of the 70 weeks, and of course of the longer period of which they are a part, agrees the opinion of one of the most profound Biblical critics of the age, Hengstenberg. Without any reference to the question in which we are so deeply interested, but to vindicate the faithfulness of God against the objections and cavils of neologists, in reference to the fulfilment of the 70 weeks, he uses this very proper though strong language:—‘The prophecy itself bears all the marks of chronological definiteness. The commencement and termination are not fluctuating, but designated by strictly limited events. The whole period of 70 weeks is not only divided into three parts of 7, 62, and 1 week, but also this latter into two halves. How could this happen, if no regard was paid to half a hundred years more or less? God himself would have given occasion to doubt his word, if a prophecy bearing all the marks of chronological definiteness, were proved by the fulfilment to be indefinite.’ (Christology, vol. 2, p. 380, Wash. 1839.) He dates the commencement of the 70 weeks ‘in the third month of the civil year,’ a part of our November and December, ‘455 before Christ.’ lb. p. 357, 389, 391. This would bring us to the same point in the year 1846 for the termination of the 2300 days.’

In speaking of the termination of the 1290 and 1335 days in Dan. 12: 11–13, and in reference to certain historical testimony, Bro. Hale says:—

“By this general testimony of history we are brought within a century of the event referred to in the text, as the point at which these periods begin. Can we get at that event with sufficient precision to ascertain by what agents it was affected? What is the testimony of the Pope himself? Among the so called ‘Christian Majesties’ of Europe, there is one to whom the Pope applies the titles, ‘Most Christian Majesty!’ and ‘Eld-est Son of the Church!’ It is the king of France. Now the Pope does not confer such titles without a cause; and ‘the church’ could have no sons before her ‘eldest son’ was born. The origin of these titles will throw much light upon the question before us. Mosheim speaks of their origin as follows:—‘It is said that the conversion of Clovis gave rise to the custom of addressing the French monarch with the titles of Most Christian Majesty, and Eld-est Son of the Church, for the kings of the other barbarous nations which occupied the Roman provinces, were still addicted to idolatry or involved in the errors of Arianism.’ Vol. 1, p. 315.

The history of Clovis is briefly this, as attested by papal, protestant, and infidel historians. In 493 Clovis was a pagan ‘conquerer, whose arms were every where victorious;’ his conversion took place in 496; he fought the battles of the catholic faction till 503; he devoted himself to the founding of churches and monasteries till the year of his death, 511. See Gifford’s Hist. of France, pp. 32–39. Howell’s Int. to Gen. Hist. vol. 3 pp. 342–347. Paroni, Tom. 6. Vœtus. Du Pin, Gibbon, Mosheim, Hallam.)

That popery was not in the ascendancy at the time of the conversion of Clovis, is sufficiently evident from the testimony of Gifford, who speaks of him while yet a pagan, as ‘a young prince whose arms were every where victorious.’ Gibbon testifies to the same effect: ‘On the memorable day when Clovis ascended from the baptismal font, he alone in the Christian world deserved the name and prerogatives of a Catholic king.—The emperor Anastasius entertained some dangerous errors concerning the Divine incarnation, and the barbarians of Italy, Africa, Spain, and Gaul were involved in the Arian heresy.—The eldest, or rather the only son of the church, was acknowledged by the clergy as their lawful Sovereign or Glorious Deliverer, and the arms of Clovis were strenuously supported by the zeal and favor of the Catholic faction.’ (M’s Gib. vol. 2, p. 412.)

Could anything be more striking than this testimony of the skeptical Gibbon upon the fulfilment of the prophecy:—‘Arms shall place the abomination that maketh desolate?’ Dan. 11: 31. Baronius, the standard papal historian, in giving the details of these wars of Clovis, speaks of him as a model for the encouragement of princes, and ascribes the expenditures and toils of the war to his piety, and his success to the favor of God. (Tom. 6, p. 696.) According to Gifford, Gibbon and many other historians, Clovis ‘received the title and insignia of patrician and consul,’ at the hands of the ambassadors of Anastasius, emperor of the East, at the city of Tours, on his return from his last expedition, in 503.—The consular office conferred on him supreme magisterial authority in Western Rome; and Hallam admits that ‘the connection between Clovis and the empire, and the emblems of Roman magistracy which he bore, reconciled the conquered to their new masters.’ (Mid. Ages, p. 18.)

The investment of Clovis with the powers of the consular office, has an important connection with the placing, or setting up of Popery in Western Rome; for in the council which he held at Orleans just before his death, the using of heathen temples for the papal worship, and the manner of treating pagans and heretics, then in office, were some of the most important questions settled by its authority. Its enactments of course would be considered as law to the extent of his jurisdiction. Mezary informs us that this council was held ‘in July, A. D. 511;’ and that it was the ‘first ecclesiastical council celebrated under a French king.’ (Hist. of France, p. 19.) Gifford tells us it consisted of ‘thirty-three bishops;’ that it was assembled by the order of Clovis, and that ‘he fixed on the topics of discussion.’ This, he says, ‘was the last remarkable event in the life of Clovis.’ He died in November of 511. (Mezary, p. 17.)

The author of the Decline and Fall of Rome states the fact, that the successors of Clovis inflicted ‘one hundred lashes on the peasants who refused to destroy their idols.’ (M’s Gib. vol. 2, p. 406.)

From all these facts it must be evident that the scale preponderated in favor of popery by the agency of Clovis. So far as paganism was concerned, popery had no serious dangers to encounter after his triumphs; and whenever it had a battle to fight with some fresh horde of barbarians from the north, as in the case of the Lombards, it fought to defend, not to obtain its position. Its future battles were with rebellious emperors and kings, or with other Christians, whom the Church of Rome has always considered 'heretics.' Somewhere in the career of Clovis, it would seem, then the event referred to in the text must be found.

In our former calculation, we supposed the setting up of the Papacy was effected by the success of its arms, and as he fought the last battle of his 'religious wars' in 508, that was made the date at which the periods now under consideration were supposed to begin. In the present calculation, however, we refer to the latest date possible; and as the establishing of popery by law seems more like the event specified in the prophecy—that of placing, or setting up; and as it could not take place later than 511, if it took place in the lifetime of Clovis, we begin the 1290 and 1335 days or years at that point.

Added to A. D. - - 511

Extend to - - - 1846

We have already seen that the earliest and latest boundaries for the period in which the 2300 years must terminate, according to the data used, are Aug. of 1845, and Dec. of 1847; and that the most natural view we can take of all the facts stated by the evangelists, brings the termination at least one year earlier than that latest point. It must be seen, therefore, that the harmony in the termination of these two periods is as exact as in our former calculation.

Let us now consider the other period—the 1290 days or years. The first question usually asked in reference to that period is this. With what event does it terminate? No event is stated in the text; but as it evidently relates to 'the abomination that maketh desolate'—Popery, we must apply it to some noted period in its history. The text says: 'From the time that the daily shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, (margin, to set up the abomination that maketh desolate,) shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.' By referring to other parts of this prophecy, as well as other prophecies, we find that two grand epochs mark the early and latter history of the Papacy. In its early history it was, first, to take the place of Paganism. Second, The saints were to be given into his hand. In its decline, it was first to have its dominion taken away. Second, To be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. The 1290 and 1335 days, or years, begin at the point where the Papacy takes the place of Paganism; but as Popery is to be 'destroyed at the end,' where the 1335 days also terminate, the 1290 must terminate at the taking away of its dominion. Has that event taken place? Yes. That is as evident as that Popery exists. The whole Papal communion are sighing over the loss of its former authority and power, promising that if they can but enjoy their 'liberty'—(liberty to lord it over the world as they please) they will regain everything; and because they cannot have their 'liberty,' they raise the cry of persecution.—They ought to thank heaven and earth that they have not long since been exterminated; but they must do their work, and their day of visitation is at hand.

The ancient Papal dominion has been taken away. When was it done? That act is fresh in the minds of thousands now living. It was done by the arms of the same nation that set it up in the place of Paganism, and by one whose will, like that of Clovis, was law in Western Rome, Napoleon. The act of Napoleon, by which the Pope was divested of his ancient prerogatives, is spoken of by Sir Walter Scott in these terms:—

'This important treaty was managed by Joseph Bonaparte, who, with three colleagues, held conferences for that purpose, with the plenipotentiaries of the Pope. The ratifications were exchanged on the 18th of September, 1801, and when they were published, it was singular to behold how submissive the once proud See of Rome lay prostrate before the power of Bonaparte, and how absolutely he must have dictated all the terms of the treaty. Every article innovated on some of those rights and claims which the church of Rome had for ages asserted as the inalienable privileges of her infallible head.' 'Such was the celebrated compact, by which Pius VII. surrendered to a soldier, whose name was five or six years before unheard of in Europe, those high claims to supremacy in spiritual affairs, which his predecessors had maintained for so many ages against the whole potentates of Europe. A puritan might have said of the power seated on the Seven Hills, 'Babylon is fallen, it is fallen, that great city!' The more rigid Catholics were of the same opinion. The Concordat, they alleged, showed rather the abasement of the Roman Hierarchy than the re-erection of the Gallic Church.' Life of Napoleon, vol. 1, p. 502. Philadelphia, 1827.—(See also Rotteck's History of the World, vol. 4, p. 148. Thiers' Consulate and Empire, pp. 326—339.)

'This important treaty' was signed at Paris, by Joseph Bonaparte and 'the Plenipotentiaries of the Pope,' as Thiers tells us, in 'July, 1801,' just 1290 years after the Council of Orleans was held by Clovis. Its ratification at Rome took place in September of the same year.

Added to - - - 511

Extend to - - - 1801

Here also the harmony is very exact.

In our former calculation, it will be remembered, this taking away of the dominion of popery was supposed to have been effected at the conquest of Rome by the French, in 1798, as these periods also were supposed to commence with the conquests of Clovis in 508. But we now take the latest date to which we can reasonably refer for their termination, as we have done for their commencement. And if the Pope was ever humbled by Napoleon; if he has ever been divested of those high claims to supremacy in spiritual affairs, which his predecessors had maintained for ages against the whole potentates of Europe, it was done by the voluntary, though constrained ratification of the Concordat in 1801.

And here it should be remarked, that in the restoration effected by the 'Holy Alliance' in 1815, the supremacy of the Pope was not recognized; but it was distinctly rejected, as the following statement of 'the principle of all the conduct of the allied,' by Rotteck, shows: 'They—the allied—guarantee an indissoluble fraternity and mutual assistance in all cases, and acknowledge all of the christian name as one nation united under the only supreme sovereign Jesus Christ.'—'Of this,' he says, 'the history of the world offers no example.' Vol. 4, pp. 255—6. It is also well known that the provisions of the Concordat have been the basis of some of the most important negotiations between the nations of Europe and the Pope down to the present time.

There is also one other period intimately connected with those now under consideration, though not brought to view in the text, on which a few remarks should be made. It is the period of 'a time, times and half a time' or 1260 days or years, during which 'the saints' were to 'be given into the hand of popery,' as predicted in the seventh of Daniel. The giving the saints in the hands of popery must, in the nature of the case, follow its triumph over paganism in Western Rome; and that the period, during which they were to be in this subjection, has expired, is as evident as that the Pope has surrendered his high claims to supremacy over them. The 1260 days or years must have ended with the 1290 in 1801. With what event then did they begin?

To give a clear idea of the course of events in the early history of popery, that we may see the development of its true character, and by what agencies it attained the position assigned to it in the prophecies, we call the attention to a few well authenticated facts. The conversion of Clovis, as we have seen, turned the triumphant arms of the West in favor of popery. This was immediately followed by the excommunication of Anastasius, emperor of the East. And there is very good evidence to believe, what has been asserted of Clovis, that he formed a conspiracy with the 'Catholic' bishops for the overthrow of all the Arian kingdoms within the limits of the fallen empire. Mezary says of his wars, 'they were waged under the specious pretence of religion;' and ascribes to him the vilest character for treachery and cruelty. (Hist. of France, p. 16.) Du Pin, a papal historian, in his account of a visit of Avitus, bishop of Vienna, to Gondebald, king of Burgundy, for the purpose of holding a conference with that king, and to convert him to the faith, says, 'Gondebald, perceiving them, came to meet them, and spoke reproachfully of the king of the French, Clovis.' The amount of the reproach was a remark of the king to this effect, if your religion is so much better than ours, why does Clovis continue to make war on me without any provocation? 'The bishop answered him, That the way to make peace was to agree about the faith.' (Hist. of Eccles. writers, vol. 1, p. 530.) To the same effect is the testimony of Baronius, before stated; and Gibbon gives us these words of Clovis, as an expression of his motives in entering upon the Gothic war:

'It grieves me to see the Arians still possess the fairest portion of Gaul. Let us march against them with the aid of God, and having vanquished the heretics, we will possess and divide their fertile provinces.' M.'s Gib. vol. 2, p. 416.

The success of this conspiracy in placing popery in the ascendancy in Western Rome, we have already seen. By the strength thus secured to the 'Catholic faction' in the West the same faction were placed in a position to commence open hostilities in the capital of the Eastern Empire, Constantinople. In 508 the whirlwind of fanaticism swept in fire and blood through the streets of the city. Gibbon thus speaks of this first outbreak of the abomination that maketh desolate in that quarter. 'The streets were instantly crowded with innumerable swarms of men, women and children; the legions of monks in regular array, marched and shouted, and fought at their head. 'Christians! this is the day of martyrdom; let us not desert our spiritual father; anathema to the Manichean tyrant! he is unworthy to reign.' Such was the Catholic cry; and the galleys of Anastasius lay upon their oars before the palace, till the (Catholic) patriarch had pardoned his penitent, (the emperor) and hushed the waves of the troubled multitude. - - Day and night they were incessantly busied either in singing hymns to the honor of their God, or in pillaging and murdering the servants of their prince. The head of his favorite monk was borne aloft on a spear; and the fire-brands which had been darted against heretical structures, diffused the undistinguishing flames over the most orthodox buildings. The statues of the emperor were broken, and his person was concealed in a suburb, till at the end of three days he dared to implore the mercy of his subjects. And they accepted the blood of two unpopular ministers, whom their master without hesitation condemned to the lions.—Ib. vol. 3, p. 262.

This exhibition of the Man of Sin was followed in 514, by a still more important 'rebellion' in the east, in which Vitalian, whom Gibbon styles 'The Champion of the Catholic faith,' depopulated Thrace, and exterminated sixty-five thousands of his fellow Christians. Du Pin says, in speaking of this movement of Vitalian, 'The Emperor was forced to make peace with him upon condition that a council should be called to regulate the affairs of the church, by the advice of the Bishop of Rome. This obliged the Emperor to write to Hormisdas, successor of Symmachus, to pray him that he would be mediator for pacifying these commotions, and that he would labor to restore the unity of the church.' In this manner was accomplished what the historian calls, 'the triumph of Roman pertinacity.'

These illustrations of the character of Romanism, during the reign of Anastasius, had their desired effect upon his nephew and successor, Justinian, who ascended the throne of the Eastern Empire in 528, though he had controlled its decisions to a great extent, for some time before.—Justinian did even more, as an ally of the Pope, than Clovis had done. In the first great transaction of his reign—the revision of the laws of the Empire, which produced the celebrated Justinian Code—'the supremacy of the pontificate' was declared to belong to 'the elder Rome;' and the 131st of the 'Novellæ,' on the ecclesiastical titles and privileges, chapter II reads:—

'We therefore decree that the most holy Pope of the elder Rome is the first of all the priesthood.' Justinian was a most furious persecutor. By a single edict designed to 'unite all men in one faith,' the whole band of mercenary papists were let loose to plunder and murder those who did not 'in the space of three months, embrace the Catholic faith.' The 'heretics' of different religions, who were slaughtered by his orders, must be estimated by hundreds of thousands. And this was only the introduction of a scene of carnage which has been continued and sustained, in the christian world, by the authority of the 'seat of the beast' for more than twelve hundred years.

The laws of Justinian, in behalf of Popery, were followed by the appropriation of his choicest armies for the destruction of its enemies. In our former calculation it was supposed that the 1260 years began with the conquest of Rome by the armies of Justinian, in 538, and that they terminated with its conquest by the French in 1798. Is there any later event in the series of events which marked the rise of Popery which would more properly constitute the giving of the saints into the hands of the Pope? There is but one form of power, recognized at Rome, which could be supposed to stand in the way of the legal or actual supremacy of the Pope at the time the city was conquered in 538—that was the consular power. And Gibbon testifies that in '541,' thirty years after the death of Clovis, 'the succession of consuls finally ceased, in the thirteenth year of Justinian, whose despotic temper might be gratified by the silent extinction of a title which admonished the Romans of their ancient freedom.' (M.'s Gib. vol. 3, p. 55.) So that there was never afterwards any power resident at Rome, acknowledged as supreme, excepting that of the Pope, till after its conquest by the French in 1798. 1260 years, the period during which the saints were to be subject to the Papacy, beginning in 541, extend to 1801. 1290 years, beginning in 511, terminate at the same point, and 1801 is the latest date that can be assigned for the humiliation of the Pope by Napoleon.

Then the 'Justinian Code,' as far as the Pope was concerned, was to give place to the 'Code Napoleon.' And accordingly, 1846 is the latest point to which the 1335 days or years can extend, when Daniel shall stand up to receive his lot in the everlasting inheritance. 'Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh unto the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days: thou shalt stand up to receive thy lot, thy portion, thy immortal inheritance, at the end of the days. Amen.'

NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOOR.

Should we dismiss the subject here, the fair conclusion that would naturally be drawn from the foregoing arguments would be, that Christ will come the second time, near the close of this present year. There seems to be a perfect harmony in the testimony in pointing to that time for his appearing. And were there no other testimony to be brought into the account, which has the highest claims to infallibility, and which is less definite, then we should be warranted in proclaiming, with the strongest assurance, the coming of the Son of man at the specified time, to which the testimony already given seems clearly to point.

By these remarks we wish not to be understood that we have just cause to doubt the veracity of any of the testimony in the case; no, no, tho' some of it is uninspired, yet stubborn facts prove beyond all successful contradiction, that it utters the truth; and is just such testimony as God has seen fit to give us, to aid in producing the most unwavering faith in the coming of the Son of man nigh, even at the door. The point on which we should not be too confident is, the definite year, month, and day, to which the uninspired testimony seems clearly to point for the revelation of the Son of man. We have inspired and uninspired testimony to guide us in this highly important investigation. All will admit that the most perfect agreement must exist in the testimony, inspired and uninspired. If an apparent disagreement is seen, the seeming discrepancy must be attributed to our imperfect understanding of the precise meaning of certain words of the witnesses. And in trying to harmonize their testimony, the inspired testimony should invariably be suffered to explain and define the meaning of the uninspired.

Shall we follow these safe principles in defining the precise time of our Lord's coming? If not, then by what principles shall we be guided? There are none on which we may safely rely to infallibly guide us into a perfect understanding of the case. Pledging ourselves, then, to be guided in our decisions by the principles here laid down, we will look at the case as it is.

The uninspired witnesses in the case, according to our understanding of the definiteness of their testimony, point to A. D. 1846 as the year for the appearing of the Son of man: they have not, however, named that or any other specific year. But inspired testimony has positively said that from a certain event it would be so many days or years to the grand event. Uninspired testimony tells us, as we think, when to commence these days, and of course we can count the number of years to the one in which we suppose they will end. In this way we obtain all the knowledge we have of the definite year, month, or day, for the consummation of the grand prophetic numbers. Take the uninspired testimony alone, and it would justify this definiteness, but when we take into the account the testimony of him who spake as never man spake, and are willing to let Him explain the meaning of the uninspired testimony, the most definite meaning we are justified in giving to the most definite words of any part of the testimony, inspired and uninspired, is, "Nigh, even at the door."

We all believe that these words, 'nigh, even at the door,' were uttered by our Savior in reference to the definite time of his Second coming; and we must also admit that they were spoken with a special design to be understood by his children who would be living at the time of his appearing. Well, did our Lord speak understandingly on this point? No Christian will say he did not: he perfectly understood all about the subject on which he so freely discoursed. And it will be wisdom in us, poor erring mortals, to pay implicit obedience to His divine instruction. His words should be as confidently believed, and cheerfully obeyed, as though he were personally here, speaking to us. He understood all about the evidences, definite and indefinite, which would be presented at this very time, to prove his second coming, and in view of the whole, especially the signs, he said, "When ye shall see all these things, know that he is nigh, even at the doors." He says nothing about our knowing (for he is talking to us) the year, month, or day; only, 'of that day and hour knoweth no man.' &c.

The prime meaning of the words 'at the door,' and especially, 'nigh, even at the door,' is, very near the door, the next step would bring the person into the door or house. That this is the sense in which Christ uses the words in Matthew 24: and the corresponding texts in Mark and Luke, is very evident from the use he makes of the parable of the fig-tree. He says, 'Now learn a parable of the fig-tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that he is near, even at the doors.' The meaning is, when the fig-tree buds, it is a sure evidence that summer will soon come, will be the next season in the annual revolution of the earth; no other season can intervene between the leafing out of the fig-tree and summer. And as summer is nigh when the fig-tree begins to leaf, so the coming of the Lord will be near, when the signs he names shall all be seen. We are not to understand that his coming will be just as nigh when the signs are seen which he names, as summer is when the fig-tree buds, but as summer is nigh at the leafing of the trees, so Christ's coming will be near at the appearing of the signs; it will most assuredly be the next event marked in prophecy; none other worthy of prophetic note can intervene between the signs and His appearing. Hence the meaning of 'nigh, even at the door,' is, the next event, very near, which may take place, and should be confidently looked for, not on any specific day or hour, but NOW, EVERY MOMENT.

"NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOOR," is the position we take on definite time; and to show that we are now occupying this fearful point in prophetic history, has been our object in sending out this sheet. We think we have the strongest assurance from the signs, the historical and chronological prophecies to justify this conclusion. The signs in the natural, political, moral and religious world, which have become undeniable matters of history, to the watchful observer, clearly proclaim the coming of the Son of man nigh, even at the door.

Historic prophecy, which predicts the rise and fall of empires and kingdoms, down to the destruction of all earthly governments, and the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom under the whole heavens, on the new earth, heralds to the Bible student, in trumpet tones, the Kingdom of God nigh, even at the door.

Chronological Prophecy, though more difficult to be understood than other prophecies, yet it fills an important rank with the other witnesses, and positively and most solemnly lifts its hands to heaven, and swears by him that liveth for ever and ever, "that when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." (Dan. 12) and from the evidences presented in this sheet, on the termination of those numbers, the matter seems placed beyond a doubt, to the understanding of the wise, that the time for gathering God's scattered people into the everlasting kingdom, is now "nigh, even at the door."

It seems that the period covered by the expression, "nigh, even at the door," cannot extend much farther into the future; the strong probability is, that this year, or not far from its close, will be the extreme point, beyond which it cannot pass. But if in this we misjudge, and time should continue much longer than we now desire or expect, the position, "nigh, even at the door," will not, in the least, be impaired. On this imperishable rock we may stand secure, fearing no evil from any foe, but rejoicing in that blessed hope of the glorious appearing of our long absent Lord being "nigh, even at the door."

But we do not like to talk about what we shall or may do in the future: not on our own account, but on the account of certain unbelieving ones, who, to justify their love of this present world, eagerly grasp every word, however cautiously spoken, which seems to put the Lord's coming far in the future. To such ones, we will here plainly say, that no such meaning can be placed upon any thing we have said in this sheet. And we warn you, in the fear of the Lord, not to deceive yourselves with the delusive hope, that the "Lord delayeth his coming," or that it may not be witnessed for an indefinite number of years. There is not one valid evidence which you can present, that he may not come at any moment, while no truth is more clearly and strongly demonstrated than this: that his coming is "nigh, even at the door," may take place at any moment—no warrant of a day or an hour more, before he will say, "Time shall be no longer!" Do not, therefore, deceive yourself, nor suffer any one to deceive you at this perilous hour; at this time of moral apathy, unbelief, and backsliding from God—in this day of pleasure, vain show, and love of the fashions—maxims, and things of the world—and at this time, when the church and world walk hand in hand in the sins of this degenerate age. O, follow not with them, for their ways take hold on death. But hear and obey your coming Lord—follow him wherever he shall call you to go, and great will be your peace here, and reward in the world to come.

Your pilgrimage here will soon end; the next moment the glory of that long looked for city may appear to your enraptured vision; it cannot be long—a few days, months, or even years, and what are they? how soon they are gone.—But we cannot count on years for you to labor in this world of pain and sore trial. No, no, your last work is being done up—your last hours of suffering are swiftly passing away. Spend the few fleeting moments in faithful obedience to the commandments of your God, and soon it will be said to you, "come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world"—"enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

MISTAKES EXPLAINED.

We have not been mistaken in our faith relative to the second personal advent of Christ.—The evidences that he will come again have not been in the least invalidated by any mistakes of ours.

We have not been mistaken in our faith in the pro-millennial advent of Christ. The evidences that his coming precedes the millennial glory are conclusive.

Nor have we been mistaken in our views on the return of the Jews according to the flesh, to the land of Canaan; the more critically the question has been investigated, the more satisfactory have the evidences appeared, that he is not a Jew who is one outwardly, but inwardly, one who is Christ's, and that such only will be gathered into the land promised to their father Abraham, the heavenly country.

We have not been mistaken in our faith in the resurrection both of the just and of the unjust, and that of the just taking place at the coming of Christ.

We have not been mistaken in the solemn and fearful truth that at the coming of Christ he will destroy all earthly and anti-Christian governments, and them who know not God, and obey not the gospel of Christ.

We have not been mistaken in our faith that at the advent of Christ, the heavens and earth that now are, will be dissolved, and new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, will then be created.

We have not been mistaken in our precious faith that the new earth, under the whole heaven, will be the territory of the kingdom of Christ, and the everlasting inheritance of those who shall be counted worthy to live and reign with him.

In all these fundamental principles of our faith no mistake has been detected; the foundation, thus far, on which our hopes rest, is immovable. Whatever errors may be detected in other points of our faith, these pillars in the fabric should not be removed. Not a defect can be found in one of them. Wisdom hath hewed them out, and erected them, therefore they are perfect. But there is another important subject connected with our faith, which should not be overlooked while inquiring for mistakes. It is the definite time in which we confidently believed the Savior would make his Second Advent. Well, here we cheerfully acknowledge we have been mistaken; but not in the general theory of time, but in a single particular, in which we were misled by standard chronologists, whose error time has proved.

No mistake has been detected in our understanding of the signs which were to precede the Advent of Christ. Immutable facts justify us here, for the signs have become an undeniable matter of history; they have been seen by thousands of credible witnesses, hence, the evidence we derived from this source, is yet unimpeached, and clearly as ever shows that the coming of the Lord is at the door.

No mistake has been detected in our interpretation and application of historical prophecy.—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, Rome pagan, and the 1260 years of the bloody rule of Rome papal, are all well known matters of history, and according to the prophetic word, that which is to succeed them is God's everlasting kingdom.—Hence, the evidence on this point is unimpaired, and justifies our constantly looking for the glorious manifestation of the promised inheritance.

That we have not been mistaken in our manner of computing the prophetic periods, a day for a year, is made nearly, if not absolutely certain, by well known facts in the history of the church and the world. Facts have demonstrated that a day stands for a year in the prophecy of the seventy weeks of Daniel 9. Also the papal persecution, predicted in Dan. 7: 25; 12: 7, and corresponding texts in Rev. 11th, 12th, and 13th chapters, have been fulfilled in that manner.—And nothing can be more clear than that a day is to be counted for a year, from the exact fulfilment of the predictions under the fifth and sixth trumpets. It is well known that Bro. Litch, years before the event, calculated the exact time of the sounding of the sixth trumpet, and the occurrence of the things predicted proves the correctness of this principle of interpreting symbolical chronology; and besides, the best expositors of the Bible of various sects have adopted this principle and indeed would throw confusion into the harmony of God's word, to follow any other.

Thus, dear brethren, this view of the subject makes it clear that we have not erred in any fundamental principle of our faith. The point, and only point of mistake, is the precise commencement and termination of the prophetic numbers.

The glorious events to be witnessed at the termination of the greater numbers, we are still confident we understand; but as before said, the exact time of their termination, we have not fully understood. But our failure in this one point, should not cause us to abandon the whole, especially as the disappointment can be satisfactorily explained. With your candid attention for a moment, we will in a word, endeavor to give an explanation of this,

OUR ONE MISTAKE.

1st. If it can be accounted for on no other principle than the discrepancies among approved chronologists, in settling the precise time of the commencement of the prophetic reckoning, we think a knowledge of this fact should be satisfactory. Our brethren, and many of our opponents very well know, that such a discrepancy exists; and that the difference in dispute, covers the ground of at least three or four years. Instead of claiming the entire ground of dispute for the commencement of the periods reaching to the end, we took the earliest dates, which of course brought the time of their supposed termination at the earliest point at which it could occur.—Time has proved the earlier dates incorrect; but the whole time in dispute has not expired; hence in fact, taking all the testimony into account, no material mistake has yet appeared; for the whole testimony gives sufficient latitude to the commencement of the prophetic numbers, to bring their termination any time between A. D. 1843, and 1847.

We speak to those who understand this subject, and know that the best chronologists will justify what we say. And we candidly ask if these facts do not satisfactorily explain the cause of our mistake on definite time. They most certainly do, at least until we have tested the very extreme dates in the time in dispute.

2d. The investigations on these unsettled points of chronology, since entering upon the ground in dispute, have very conclusively shown to many understanding minds, that the later dates have as strong, and to some, much stronger claims to correctness than the first. Our object now is to impress this upon the minds of our brethren, and that so long as we know this to be the fact, our mistake in looking for the consummation of our hopes at the earliest dates in the prophetic reckoning, should be satisfactorily explained on this principle, that we were not fully warranted in looking for the termination of the grand numbers, until about the present year.

3d. Another ground on which our mistake on definite time may be explained, we think is, in not understanding the plain instructions of our Savior on this very subject. The prophetic numbers in connection with the types of the law when critically examined and explained, we thought necessarily led to very definite conclusions, relative to the time of their termination. And such was our confidence in the correctness of those conclusions, that we lost sight of the Savior's instructions on this point. We must admit, if he has spoken at all on this question, that he spoke understandingly, and that his counsel should be heeded. We find that he has discoursed at length on this very subject, and if we are willing to let the New Testament be an expositor of the Old, then the whole matter in question is made plain and easy to the comprehension of the most common capacity.

In Matthew 24, a question was asked our Lord on the time of his coming and end of the world. The conclusion or point of the whole lengthy, critical and definite answer is, "when ye shall see all these things, know that He is near, even at the door." This is as definite as our Lord warrants us in being on the time of his coming and end of the world. And to guard against extremes, which he evidently saw would grow out of that class of testimony drawn from the prophetic numbers, if taken alone, he repeats the caution in the following and similar words. 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man, &c. Watch, for ye know neither the day nor hour when the Son of Man cometh.' We may take, then, this position, 'nigh, even at the door, and safely plant our feet on the plain words of our Divine Lord, as the imperishable foundation of our hopes, and our mistakes on definite time are at once explained, and the evidences on definite and indefinite time have lost none of their force; but they all unite in proclaiming the coming of our Lord emphatically nigh at the door.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, MAY 27, 1846.

Removal of Office.

This Number.

It will be perceived that we print on this sheet two numbers of our paper. This has been necessary in order to give at once our long promised evidences on the time of the Lord's coming. Read the arguments we now lay before you with prayerful interest, and doubtless you will be greatly strengthened in the faith of the near coming of Christ. We were sorry to withhold from our anxious readers their paper for one week without first giving them notice that we designed to do so; but we hope they will find sufficient truth, present truth, or 'meat in due season,' in this number to amply compensate them for their disappointment.

The price of the promised extra was named at $2 per hundred copies. We found that the sheet which we could afford for that price was too small to contain all the matter which we wished to lay before our readers, consequently we have been under the necessity of doubling our sheet; and as a matter of course, its price; so that now we shall have to put it at $1 per hundred.

Those who desire to aid in this one more effort to enlighten our fellow beings on the time of the revelation of the Son of Man, by circulating this sheet, can have it at the price named, or free to those who will candidly read, and are unable to pay.

It is high time to wake up ourselves, and go to work with fresh zeal in trying to engage others in making full preparation to meet our Lord and King. Let us not be weary in well doing—Occupy, said Christ, till I come; and blessed will be those servants, who, at the return of their Lord will be found so doing, or giving meat, or imparting the present truth to the household of faith. It will be said to such, 'Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'

Meat in Due Season.

"Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing."—Matt. 24: 44-46.

The leading sentiment of this text is, that at the time of the Second Advent of Christ, he will have some ministers, or servants, who will be found faithfully proclaiming the glad tidings of his coming, and for doing which they will receive the approbation, or blessing of their Lord. That a proclamation of this truth, at that time, will be the 'meat in due season' referred to in the text, is evident.

1st, From the fact that the appearing of the Son of man, was the theme, and nearly the entire burden of the conversation at that time; and it would be unnatural and unreasonable to suppose that he made one subject the topic of conversation, but referred to another, and that too, without naming it. We have no right to take such liberties as this with the plain instructions of our Lord and Master. Proclaiming the great truths he was then uttering, doubtless, is the 'meat in due season,' to which he refers.

2d. The work of the 'unwise servants,' named in the following verses, at that time, will be 'Saying in their heart, 'My Lord delayeth his coming,' smiting their fellow servants, &c. They will be found doing this at the very time of the appearing of their offended Lord! and must, in consequence of their unfaithfulness, be forever banished from his presence! They give, of course, that which is not meat in due season, the opposite of the true meat.—If then, the work of the unwise servant is, to 'say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming,' the opposite work of the wise servant is, to proclaim—My Lord is coming, and instead of smiting his fellow servants, and eating with the drunken, he will be found comforting the saints with the glad tidings of the coming of their Lord, and warning the unprepared to make full preparation to meet Him in peace. This is the 'meat in due season,' referred to in the text. Or, in other words, a faithful presentation of the evidences which prove the coming of the Son of man nigh, even at the door, is the meat in due season, which to give to the household, will be the prominent work of the faithful servants of Christ, near the time of his coming.

Who of the servants of Christ, or professedly so, are now dealing out this meat to the perishing thousands around them? Comparatively none. The great multitude of ministers and people are saying, 'My Lord delayeth his coming,' or that there is no evidence of his coming being nearer now than a thousand years ago; he may never come in any other than a spiritual sense, but if he does come personally, it will be thousands of years in the future. Who among the advent ranks is as faithfully and bountifully dealing out this meat, as they once did, or as the nature of the momentous question requires at their hand? Should our Lord appear to day, while I write, or while you read this sheet, we ask, who among us would be found giving meat in due season to the famishing household? Judging from the communications, oral and written, which we hear and read, but few even in our own small body would be recognized as faithful servants in this respect.

We have not kept the time of our Lord's coming as constantly before the people as we should have done. It was once the burden of all our communications. We doubtless dwelt on it too much, or not on other subjects as much as was necessary. Many have now run into the opposite extreme; time is entirely left out of the question; or it is seldom named in their prayers, verbal and written communications, whereas it should seldom be omitted in either. And what have been the sad consequences of this course?—'Meat in due season' has not been given, or the 'present truth,' the doctrine of the coming of the Son of man 'nigh, even at the door,' has not been kept before the people as constantly as it should have been, and, to an alarming degree, the Bible, especially the prophetic part, is seldom read, even by many of those who once made it their meditation by day and by night! The prayer-meeting is thinly attended, and a death-like coldness now infrequently seems to chill the atmosphere of our once heavenly meetings. A disinclination to hear more on the time of our Lord's return, is evidently on the rapid increase among us! In short, all of our efforts to keep the people awake, and from starving, without the aid of the time have proved fruitless. A cold apathy has imperceptibly stolen over them, until not a few have become in fact as indifferent on this important subject as the unbelieving world and lifeless churches around them. And why should it be otherwise with them, if they eat of the same meat or hear the same or similar preaching that is listened to by the church or world? The effect must be the same on each.

The Lord knew best what kind of food would keep his children alive, healthy, strong and vigorous, in these last days, these perilous times; and has promised a blessing on those servants who will faithfully deal it out to the people whether they will receive it or not. It is the time and the glorious truths connected with the time of the Second coming of Christ, which should be made the burthen of our message now. Yes, the evidences on the time of the appearing of Christ and his kingdom must be revived again in the minds of our doubting brethren, or they will not hold fast their confidence, firm unto the end: they will, many of them, draw back, and we fear unto perdition.

We do not think that the faithful and wise servant is required to define the time of the second advent of Christ, any differently from what Christ himself has defined it. He has told us to 'know that he is near, even at the door.' Let his servants follow the instruction of their Lord in this respect, and you will have nothing to fear about being too definite, or not sufficiently so, nor of producing another unhealthy excitement, or of meeting another mortifying disappointment in consequence of the passing by of the time. All these evils will be avoided if you proclaim the coming of the Lord, 'nigh, even at the door'; and there leave the matter in the hands of Him who has told you to give this 'meat in due season' to the household, and has promised to reward you for your faithfulness, with his richest blessings, at his coming.

When we say you are not required to define the time of the second advent of Christ any differently from what he has defined it, we do not mean that you are not to use the prophetic numbers to aid in arriving at a knowledge of the time of that event.—We should use and give to them all the definiteness that the circumstances with which they are surrounded, will justify. If we think they clearly point to '46, or '47, or any other specific year, as the time for the appearing of our Lord, then tell the people your honest convictions, and give them the reasons of your faith. Tell them also, that you do not know that you are correct in this precise calculation, but you think you are. At any rate you can most confidently say that the evidence in the case, if it does not positively define the day, month, or even the year, makes the matter absolutely certain that the coming of the Lord is nigh, even at the door, which means very near, the next event, which may take place, and should be looked for, every moment. Let all the evidences you can gather, definite and indefinite, inspired and uninspired, be brought to bear upon this one point, this immutable truth of the Son of God,—NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOOR.—Give the people this truth, and you will feel them with 'meat, in due season,' and thereby use a means to save yourself and those to whom you minister, in the day of the Lord Jesus.

The Man on the Cross.

In endeavoring, said a brother not long since, to prove that Christ would come in '43, I used to call the people that when 490 years of the vision of 23,) days had expired, or when we had travelled on the prophetic road 490 years, we came to the Man on the Cross, which made the matter so certain, that a mistake about our correctness relative to the final consummation, seemed nearly impossible. But after all we were mistaken: for instead of the 490 years reaching to the Man on the Cross, they extend 3½ years beyond that tragical scene. Consequently our reckoning run out 3½ years too soon.

Our brother is not alone in this mistake: we all, or nearly all, supposed Christ was crucified at the 'end' of the seventy weeks, of Dan. 9, whereas that prophecy teaches us that it was in the 'midst' of the last week of the seventy that he was to be cut off. Add the half week, and it carries forward the termination of the 70 weeks or 490 years 3½ years later than where our former calculation placed it; consequently the termination of the 2300 days would be placed the same length of time further in the future than we at first calculated. It would make them end in A. D. 1846 vulgar era, or 1847 true era.

That this view is correct, any one will readily see, by examining the subject a little. He will find that our former calculations were made on the supposition that John the Baptist preached 3½ years, when in fact he preached only six months. This of course would make our calculations run out at least three years too early. A few months more, at longest, and the correctness of this view of the subject will be tested. Let us constantly be ready for the dread crisis. We certainly have the fullest assurance from every consideration to look for the Son of man every moment. "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

Mission to England.

We see by the 'Advent Herald,' that Br'n. Himes and Hutchinson expect to start the first of June on a mission to England. The Lord bless them in proclaiming the everlasting gospel in proud Victoria's realm. These brethren will need considerable funds to meet the expenses of their voyage, and those who wish to aid in defraying those expenses can send their free-will offerings to J. V. Himes, Boston, Mass.

This subject reminds us of another which it seems to be duty to name. In noticing our receipts recently, we said that a part which had been acknowledged in our published list was for books, and belonged to Bro. Himes, &c. This might convey the idea that Bro. Himes was receiving large profits from this office. It is true we have sent him considerable money arising from the sale of books, but so far as dollars and cents are concerned, we should think the book business connected with this office, had not been a very profitable affair. For Bro. Himes has always paid all the freight for transportation of his books, has given a fair per centage on all sold, has always given to those who were unable to purchase, and at different times when here, he has gratuitously distributed some hundreds of dollars worth of his books; this was the case at his recent visit to this city. We want, so far as the good of the cause demands, that the simple facts in the case should be known to our friends and brethren.

"Children's Advent Herald."

This is the title of a sheet half the size of the 'Advent Herald,' the first number of which has just been issued from the Office of the 'Herald' in Boston, Mass. It is proposed to print it monthly at the price of twenty-five cents per volume, or $2 per hundred copies of one number. It is designed especially for the benefit of Sabbath Schools, or for the instruction in the ways of righteousness of our children who cannot grasp in their infant minds, that kind of teaching suited to the capacity of riper years. We hope Bro. Himes, the publisher of this paper, will not only receive sufficient encouragement to warrant the continuation of it, but that it will prove a lasting blessing to many of the little children who may read it. Orders for the paper should be sent to J. V. Himes, Boston, Mass.

Matter of This Number.

Considerable of the matter which fills this sheet has been published in previous numbers of our paper. Many of our brethren have advised us to re-publish the whole on one sheet, that all the argument on the most probable time for the advent of Christ, might be presented in a connected form, to those who will read. This we have done; and besides, have given additional new evidences that we have not followed cunningly devised fables in making known our faith in the speedy coming of the Lord.

Bro. Pearson's article will be read by all who love the appearing of Christ, with interest and profit, as will the other matter presented in this sheet. Give the whole a candid examination; receive the truth, and rejoice in it—it alone can make you free, pure and happy.

Conference Address.

This work has been highly spoken of by a number of our understanding brethren, and against it we have heard no complaint. Several hundred copies are now on hand, and should be circulated immediately. Who will aid in doing the work! They can be had at $2 per hundred, or free to those who are unable to pay.

To Correspondents.

Some of your communications are deferred in order to give the promised evidences on the time of the advent of Christ. We thank you for your favors; hope you will continue to write, and solicit certain other ones to resume their pens again in defence of the good cause in which we are engaged.

News of the Day.

The all-absorbing news of the day is the existing war between this country and Mexico. Actual hostilities have commenced, and some scores of our fellow beings have been butchered in this unholy strife about this accursed earth which is soon to be wrested from under the wicked tread and usurpation of every despotic and oppressive aspirant. War has been officially declared, and the wisdom, wealth, and physical energies of the two Republics, especially those of our own christian land (!) are being brought into requisition with all the zeal of the inhabitants of the pit to conquer the belligerent foe.

When this bloody strife will end we do not pretend to predict, but we give it as our decided opinion that it will be of short duration. If the "four winds," named in Rev. 7, are yet held, that they shall not hurt the earth, then this war, like many other recent out-breaks among the different nations of the globe; will have a speedy termination, and peace will be restored. But if those winds are loosed, then the sealing time is over, and the coming of the King of kings to fight the great battle of God Almighty will soon be witnessed. Hence, according to either view here presented, war will be of short continuance. Let christians stand aloof from its wicked spirit and work of death; keep yourselves in the love of the peaceful Jesus, and be constantly ready to meet him at his coming, and all will be well. Come, Lord Jesus, and reign in righteousness.

WAR AND RUM.—Our government have recently ordered sixty thousand gallons of rum for the use of the Navy!—Norway Advertiser.

Yes, and they have supplied the navy with chaplains to ask blessings on the rum, and pray for the success of their arms in butchering their enemies. —Pleasure Boat.

Definite Time.

Is the time of the Second Advent revealed?—the connection between the seventy weeks and twenty-three hundred days.

That there are many chronological difficulties to contend with, in attempting to fix upon a definite termination for the prophetic periods should not be denied. But if we take a correct view of this question, these obstacles will not have the effect to lessen our interest in, nor serve to discourage our desires and diligent efforts to understand more perfectly, this interesting subject. And, therefore, whilst the consideration, that learned chronologists are not agreed in the fixing of the most important dates upon which we depend, should influence us not to assume a dogmatical, overbearing spirit of dictation, requiring all to entertain our opinions as to the precise ending of these times, we should also be careful that we treat with becoming reverence, those portions of God's word which not only foretell future events, but likewise determine the time when they shall come to pass. While we thus frankly admit that there is much trouble in finding the commencement of the prophetic numbers, we at the same time contend, that there is a sufficient measure of certainty or definiteness to these dates, to demonstrate the truth, that we are living very near their termination, and the second advent of our Savior.

One objection urged against our arriving with any degree of accuracy, at the beginning of the longer periods is, "that points so remote as two thousand years in the past, there must, of necessity, be obstacles, which we should not encounter if we were called on to fix the era of some event which had occurred since the birth of the Savior." As we before said, we are willing to admit the truth of this sentiment. But notwithstanding all these difficulties stand in the path of the humble seeker after truth, we may be emboldened to persevere in this investigation, by the opinions of not only good and learned men, but we may rely with confidence upon the promise of God, that "the wise shall understand," referring, undoubtedly, to these long prophetic times.

Arch Bishop Usher says, "if any one, well seen in the knowledge, not only of sacred and exotic (foreign) history, but of astronomical calculations, and the old Hebrew calendar, shall apply himself to these studies, I judge it indeed difficult, but not impossible, for such an one to attain, not only the number of years, but even of the days, from the creation of the world." If this opinion be correct, (and we ask, who is better able to give judgment concerning these matters, than Usher?) that it is not an impossibility to attain to the day of the creation, an era six thousand years in the past, may we not determine the era of an important event within a year, which is only about one third the distance, with much less trouble?

Again, "There must, of necessity, be obstacles which we should not encounter (in fixing eras B. C.) if we were called upon to fix the era of some event which had occurred since the birth of the Savior."—True, and at the first glance, this may appear to be good and sound logic against any attempt to fix within quite a number of years, the commencement, and consequently, the termination of either of the prophetic times that extend many years before the christian era: but it will be seen that such kind of objections are not valid, and are of no force when applied to the 2300 years of Daniel 8. We hold it to be a fundamental point, that the 70 weeks of chap 9: 24, and the 2300 years of the previous chapter are connected, and bear the same date, (upon this we shall offer a few reasons in their proper place,) and, altho' obstacles insurmountable, stood in the way of ascertaining the event which marked their beginning, yet this truth, (the connection of the 70 weeks and 2300 years,) furnishes a number of the most prominent events in this world's history, this side of our Anno Domini, which stand forth as chronological beacon lights, from which we can, by a retrograde computation, define their commencement, and by adding, learn the time of their closing up.

DEFINITE TIME,

is Bible ground. The prophetic periods were given for our learning, and especial benefit, who live in these last days, that we may the more perfectly understand how rapidly we are approximating on the current of time, (on whose bosom millions of our race have been borne,) to the ocean of eternity.

We are aware that there have been two extremes on this question: the one, casting away with scorn and ridicule all scripture that relates to definite time, and the other, fixing on the very hour and even minute, for the termination of the prophetic numbers.—Now, whilst we would shun both of these extremes as unscriptural, we also would cherish and maintain all that significance God intended should be conveyed through these periods to us. Here is another extreme which many who once loved and defended these points with much power and effect, are in danger:—they still admit the bearing of these numbers, but their confidence in chronology is shaken by disappointment, and with them, the evidence of the speedy coming of Christ through this channel, has lost all its force on their hearts, and there is with them much apathy and indifference, respecting this question. The point of their faith is blunted, and they say it may come this year, and it may come next, we can't tell any thing about the time, and it may not come for years in the future. We have been disappointed twice, and the fact is, we can't put much dependence on the prophetic periods, and I hope and pray that we may never have another excitement on this question. It is not uncharitable to say, that such kind of reasoning is sinking this portion of God's prophetic word on a level with the ambiguous, equivocal, and uncertain nature of the pagan oracles, and that they have no determined meaning.

I will here give an extract from a short article written some time since to the "Morning Watch," by our beloved brother J. Litch. It expresses my mind better than I can do it for myself. It is as follows:

"PROPHETIC TIMES."

"Does the Bible reveal the time of the Advent?—If the 12th chapter of Daniel does not reveal the time of the advent, provided the resurrection of the just, the glorification of the saints and reign of Christ are its accompaniments, then I confess I cannot understand the import of the plainest words in the English language. "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" If that question is answered (and it is,) we certainly have the time revealed.

Will that revelation be understood? If it is never to be understood, then it is not a revelation, but a concealment. That it was concealed or shut up for a season, the passage positively declares. But, does not that very fact imply, that when the given time of concealment is passed, then it will be opened? So it seems to me. Continue to read on, and the testimony is positive—"the wise shall understand." But it is objected, we must necessarily depend on human chronology for our dates, and they are fallible. As to the fallibility of human chronology, I am as well aware of it as the objector. But still, I have so much confidence in the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, that I believe he can and will render available, the entire revelation of his will. Because I have been presumptuous and run to an extreme, and fixed with positiveness, the day when these times will end—and the time has proved me wrong, is it any reason why I should run off to an opposite extreme, and say I was wrong once, hence, neither I nor any body else can ever get right? Would not such a course be most unwise? If I have been rash, let me learn wisdom, prudence, and moderation: and with the preparatives, return again to the search. The Bible, and the whole Bible! is my motto—I cannot spare any part of it—let me have times and all: and while searching it, my constant prayer shall be, "O Lord, what I know not, teach thou to me."

I wish also to give a short extract from the writings of Wm. W. Pym, A. M. vicar of William Hurts, on the same subject. He says: (after speaking of the exact fulfilment of the seventy years captivity,) "and why are we to suppose it should be otherwise? Is God's word then only to be inaccurate when the Ancient of Days condescends to stoop to the measures of time? Why are we to suppose that the mind of him who has calculated the courses of this world long before—who has given an instinctive accuracy to the stork in the heavens, that she should know her appointed times, and to the turtle, the crane, and the swallow, that they should observe the time of their coming: (Jer. 8: 7,) who hath appointed the moon for certain seasons, and made the sun to know his going down: (Psa. 101: 19,) who brings forth the twelve signs in their season, and guides Arcturus with her sons: (Job 38: 32,) why, I ask, are we to conclude that the mind of the mighty Numberer should only fail when he stoops from his exaltation, from the length, and breadth, and height and depth of the calculations of eternity, to the puny measures of man's arithmetic? But, if it be conceded, that the divine chronology must be correct, if only we are sure that it is what God has revealed: then, I ask, why are we to suppose that God will permit his purpose, in bestowing it, to be disappointed by the carelessness or cunning craftiness of man or of the sons of men? Why are we to suppose that he who "frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad," will not frustrate, by some overruling manifestation of his manifold wisdom, the designs of those who would, in this case, corrupt the word of God? If, therefore, but one only of these revealed numbers can be shewn to be what God has given, then I ask of every believer, whether it be not our bounden duty thankfully to receive it: to bring to it as to a standard, other numbers: to make it, as it were, a scriptural chronometer, by which, so far as possible, to measure the times and the seasons, which God has thus given us to know: instead of rejecting one and all as unworthy of any heed, because some have been corrupted by man's device!"

Bro. Litch commenced his article with the remark, "If the 12th chapter of Daniel does not reveal the time of the advent, provided the resurrection of the just, the glorification of the saints, and the reign of Christ, are accompaniments, then I confess I cannot understand the import of the plainest words in the English language."

The brother does not thus speak because he has a question in his mind: that the commencement of this chapter does refer to the resurrection of the saints, but, as a strong assertion, that the periods in this chapter do refer to the second advent of the Savior. And this is a point to which I desire to call the candid attention of the reader, who professes to believe in the second, personal, literal coming of Christ, to raise the saints, change the living, and destroy the wicked. These are fundamental points in your faith, but you do not believe with us, that the time when these great events shall transpire, is revealed.—Well, are you prepared to deny that the strong and vivid language at the beginning of this chapter, point to the resurrection and rewarding of the saints?—Look at this scripture carefully, and without prejudice, "and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book, and many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars, for ever and ever."

Look close, remember this is God's word, and not poor, frail, erring mortals. Let us examine this with parallel passages. "And at that time thy people shall be delivered, [who? and how many?] every one that shall be found written in the book." [what book?] Ex. 32: 32. "Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin;—and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou [God] hast written." Mat. 3: 16, 17. "Then they that feared the Lord, [his children,] spake often, one to another: and the Lord hearkened and heard it: and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his name, and they, [every one written in the book, Dan. 12: 1,] shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day [of deliverance,] when I make up my jewels." Luke 10: 20. "Rejoice, because your names are written in heaven." Phil. 4: 3.—Whose names are written in the book of life. Rev. 3: 5 "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment: and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels." 21: 27. "And there shall in no wise enter into it (the new Jerusalem,) any thing that defileth, neither what-soever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Dan. 12: 2. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Isa. 26: 19–21. "Thy dead shall live, with my dead body shall they arise; awake and sing, ye that dwell [or sleep] in dust." John 5: 28. "All that are in the graves shall come forth." 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. "We shall not all sleep." v. 52. "And the dead shall be raised [from their sleep,] incorruptible." Dan. 12: 3. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament." Mat. thew 13: 43. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." "As the stars for ever and ever." Eternally!

Say, dear reader, how shall we dispose of such a glorious description of the standing up of Michael,

[who is like God, the archangel,] the time of deliverance—the opening of the book of life—the awakening of those who sleep in the dust, to everlasting life—the wise shineth forth as the sun, for ever and ever. Will you, can you deny the clear & self-evident proof here contained, that this language points directly to those great and momentous events yet to transpire? Can you upon the principles which you profess, do as others have done, and must do, (in order to avoid the conclusions,) content that this is a description of the times of Antiochus?

Scott, in commenting upon the first three verses of this chapter, says: "The language so accords with that of the New Testament respecting the general resurrection, that it must be expounded of it as the closing event of all, when that which is determined, shall be done." Bishop Newton says, respecting the latter part of the prophecy of Daniel, "What an amazing prophecy is this, comprehending so many various events, and extending through so many successive ages; from the first establishment of the Persian empire, to the general resurrection! How much nobler and more exalted the sense, more important and more worthy to be known by men, and to be revealed by God, when taken in this extended view, and applied to this long, and yet regular series of affairs, by the most easy and natural construction, than when confined and limited to the times and actions of Antiochus, [mark!] to whom yet it cannot be reconciled by the most strained and unnatural interpretation!"

It does seem to me that the larger portion of those who profess faith in the coming of Christ again, do not realize the nature of the controversy which has been progressing for the past few years, on the question of definite time. The host of opponents who have arrayed themselves against the speedy coming of the Son of man, have been obliged not only to assume a position which Bishop Newton says, "cannot be reconciled by the most strained and unnatural interpretation," but, also by denying that the 12th of Daniel has its application to the closing scenes of probation and the resurrection; have become completely powerless in the hands of Universalists, and Swedenborgians, and this is one reason of their so rapidly increasing the past year. Rather than be stigmatized with the odious [become so by contending for the faith once delivered to the saints,] name of "Millerite," they are willing to yield up the vantage-ground to those who spiritualize away the Christians' hope: the resurrection and the second personal advent of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But we will now leave this part of our argument with the reader to settle in his mind, whether "thy people" were "delivered" in the days of Antiochus, every one found written in the book, and many that slept in the dust was awakened to everlasting life, and shone as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars for ever and ever: or decide that this glorious scene is yet to come, and believe that God will make good his promise, that "the wise shall understand," "how long it shall be to the end of these wonders." We will now offer some remarks on the

At the commencement of this article, we freely admitted the fact, that there were perplexing difficulties and embarrassments to meet, in searching after the dates of the prophetic numbers, and it is my object to lay before the reader, (who may never have examined this subject,) a few of those troubles, that he may be better able to appreciate the position the adventists now occupy, judge of the character of our past disappointments, and the strong evidence we now possess, to justify us in looking for the realizing of our fond hopes within a few months.

These 2300 years measure the length of the prophets' vision recorded in the 8th chapter. The vision commences with a symbolical representation of the Medo Persian kingdom, when a universal ruler, Dan. 8: 4. "I saw the ram pushing westward and northward, and southward, so that no beasts [or kingdoms,] might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand:—and extends down through the Grecian and Roman empires, until the last power "shall be broken without hand." 8: 25. This is parallel with 2: 34. "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image [representing the universal kingdoms of the world,] upon his feet, and break them to pieces."

In this chapter alone, we have sufficient evidence to enable us to determine within the circle of a few years, when this long period of 2300 years will terminate. As we have seen, the vision, and of course these years, are dated when the Medo-Persian empire was universal conqueror. According to history, it cannot now be far from 2300 years since that time; so that the time attached to this vision, gives a degree of definiteness to this prophecy, which it would not otherwise have.

But God has been pleased to give us a much greater amount of proof where to fix the date of this period, than contained in this chapter, by connecting the 70 weeks of chapter 9: 24, with the 2300 years of the 8th. This removes many obstacles, and furnishes us with adequate means, by which we can calculate with considerable accuracy, from events this side of the Christian era. Before offering any further annotations relating to the determining of these numbers, perhaps it would not be improper to offer some reasons why we believe the 70 weeks are given as a key, to understand, more perfectly, the 2300 years.

Very much has been written and said, to prove the relation of these two prophetic times, by a criticism on the word "determined" (9: 24,) showing that it should have been rendered, cut off, and this passage would then read, "seventy weeks a cut off (from the 2300 years,) upon thy people;" i. e., 490 of the 2300 years, are deducted from the 2300, as a season of mercy to the Jews as a nation, in which they would reject and crucify the Messiah, and thus fill up the measure of their iniquity, and the remainder given for the fulfilling of the gospel message throughout the world. A collateral matter on this point would be superfluous, but I wish to present other testimony, which, to my mind, is conclusive evidence that the 9th chapter is an explanation of the 8th, even if the word determined is a correct translation as it now stands.

At the time the angel was interpreting the vision, Daniel says, 8: 27, "And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up and did the king's business: & I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." The question that would naturally arise in the mind after reading this verse would be, what was there in the explanations of the angel, that should produce such a debilitating effect upon the prophet's mind as to cause him to faint, and be "sick certain days?" It must have been some truth connected with his vision, of which, previous to this, he was unaware, because he is completely "lost in amazement, and breaks out with the exclamation, "And I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." It could not have been because he now learned for the first time, that there were yet three universal kingdoms in the future, for the dream of Nebuchadnezzar in the 2d chapter, and his own in the 7th, had already taught him this truth. Neither could it be the long time of 2300 years, that measured these governments: for in the 7th chapter were given him 1260 years, as the length of time; the saints should be given into the hands of a power that should arise after the fourth universal empire should have been divided into ten parts. Neither could it be because there would be such a long interval before the everlasting kingdom of God would be set up, for of this he was well aware. The question is, what truth was communicated by the explanation of the angel to Daniel, that should cause such astonishment? It seems to me that a correct understanding of this will prove, 1st, That the 9th chapter is given for the especial purpose as an exposition of the 8th containing the vision. 2d, That the 2300 years extend to the second advent of Christ, and the resurrection. 3d, That the Jews can never, by the decree of Jehovah, be a distinct people again.

There was evidently a misunderstanding among the prophets, who lived in the days of the Babylonian captivity, respecting the designs of God toward this people. They supposed the 70 years captivity would end their punishment, and they consequently believed the promises of God to be fulfilled at the end of those years, as to mean not only that they should be permitted to return to their own land again, and build up the waste places, erect the temple, establish their worship, but that they should also at that time be freed from the oppressor's arm, and once more become an independent nation, and have restored to them all their former glory and happiness. This was their strong hope and desire, and these fond anticipations buoyed them up amid their afflictions, as captives in a foreign land. Their prophets so taught them, and thus they believed. They did not know that that captivity was only a small part of an irrovable punishment which would continue to the end of the world—that the indignation of God was upon them, and would cease only in their final destruction, with all who disobey his command—that they had already commenced drinking from the cup of God's displeasure, a mixture which would "make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse," until the Lord shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation, against all the inhabitants of the earth. I say the prophets were ignorant of this fact, until God, by repeated and particular instructions, gave to them a just view of his purposes towards that rebellious people.

The prophet Jeremiah exhibited the same astonishment that Daniel did when this truth first faintly broke into his mind, and he even charged God with deception, before he comprehended the extent of these promises made through him to that nation.—See Jer. 4: 5-28. "Declare ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, blow ye the trumpet in the land; cry, gather together, and say, assemble yourselves, and let us go to the defence of cities. Set up the standard toward Zion; retire, stay not; for I will bring evil from the north, and great destruction. The lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the gentiles is on his way: he is gone forth from his place to make the land desolate; and thy cities shall be laid waste without an inhabitant. For this, shall ye with sackcloth, lament and howl; for the fierce anger of the Lord is not turned back from us." Now mark the astonishment of the prophet: Verse 10. "Then said I, ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem," [how?] saying, ye shall have peace, [he says God promised them peace,] whereas the sword reacheth to the soul." Jeremiah also betrays the same anguish that Daniel did in v. 19. He says, "My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at the very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me: I cannot hold my peace, [why?] because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war. Destruction upon destruction is cried, for the whole land is spoiled." The next verse is a question, to know how long the standard shall be towards Zion. "How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet?" Verse 25 tells, "I beheld the earth, and lo, it was without form, and void; [unfitted] and the heavens, and they had no light. I beheld the mountains, and lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. I beheld, and lo, there was no man, [the wicked destroyed, the righteous caught up,] and all the birds of the heavens are fled. I beheld, and lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down by the presence of the Lord, and by his fierce anger. [8th v.] For thus hath the Lord said, "The whole land shall be desolate, [7th v.] yet will I not make a full end; [renew it.] For this shall ye even mourn, and the heavens above be black; because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it."

Thus the reader will perceive that the prophet was under a mistaken view of God's promises to the Jews. He had confidently and rashly charged God with deceiving his people with promises of peace, but he is now informed that their punishment would continue until the destruction of the world. Read also from the 7th verse of the 14th chapter, to the 8th verse of the 15th. The Lord tells the prophet not even to pray for his people, for he says, "when they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them; but I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence." Like Daniel, after he learnt in part, the sentence of God on them, the prophet still pleads for a mitigation of the judgment: 19-22. Had the Lord uttered, rejected, or cast off Judah. Did he loathe Zion? Is there no healing for us? Are our glorious expectations to be frustrated? Are these enemies continually to oppress the people? He then acknowledges their sins but still pleads that God would not "disgrace the vine of Jerusalem." The Lord, in order to convince Jeremiah of the hopelessness of his request, declares, "though Moses and Samuel stood before him," [they who had repeatedly prevailed with him to pardon this people in past years,] to intercede for ever their four kindred, [margin, families,] and cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth.

We will briefly notice the prophecy of Zech. on this point, and then return to the argument in Daniel. Zech. 1: 12. The question is asked, "O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerualem, and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation, [mark the word,] these three score and ten years?" i. e., will the "indignation" cease when the 70 years captivity is accomplished? The Lord will explain to this prophet also the amount of the mercies to be extended toward Jerusalem at the end of the 70 years, but that the indignation is to continue through four universal kingdoms, until the Lord shall rise up out of "the habitation of his holiness." 13 v. "And the Lord answered the angel that talked with me, with good words, and comfortable words." 16 v. "Therefore thus saith the Lord, I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: [will he give them their independence again?] my house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem." This is the amount of the mercies to that people. Another message is given to Zerubbabab in the 17th verse: "And the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem." When? at the end of the three score and ten years? No; as we shall see. The prophet saw in vision next, four horns, which represent four kingdoms, and are taught that these are the kingdoms which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. Thus, he instructs Zechariah that his people are to be oppressed and scattered by four monarchies, and the "indignation" will not end at the termination of the seventy years captivity. But, says the objector, the Lord said he would yet comfort Zion, and choose Jerusalem.—Read from the 10th verse of the 2d chapter, to the close, and the time when he will comfort Zion, and choose Jerusalem, is made known. "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for lo I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations" ["out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation,"] shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee," [and I heard a voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and they shall be his people,] and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah, his portion in the holy land, and choose Jerusalem again. [When?] Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation."

Daniel labored under the same false notion of God's determined purpose respecting that people but the interpretation of this vision, spread out before his prophetic eye, the fearful history of the future, and at once dashed to the ground all his pleasing hopes and anticipations, and so overwhelmed his mind as to cause him to faint, and after recovering, to utter the exclamation, "And I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it."

A query may arise in the mind of the reader, like this: you say Daniel did understand the import of the vision, and he says, "but none understood it." True, and so I say, he did understand, and did not understand! and both assertions can be easily maintained. Here the reader will not fail to see the uncontestable evidence of the connection between this chapter and the following, and of course, the connection of the 70 weeks in the 9th chapter, with the 2300 years of the 8th.

As soon as Daniel recovers from sickness, he seeks instruction from the prophecy of Jeremiah, touching this subject, [9: 2.] and says, "I, Daniel, understood by books, the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years [not 2300,] in the desolations of Jerusalem." Now, permit me to return a question to the same enquirer. Is here not proof positive that Daniel did understand the angel to say that there would be 2300 years in the desolations of Jerusalem? if not, why does the prophet bring forth this prophecy, and declare it is only 70 years? It was this prophecy of Jeremiah that led the prophet to believe the Babylonian oppression would end their punishment, fulfill all God's threatenings against them, and that produced such astonishment in his mind when informed that there were 2300 years yet in the future, and caused him to say, "none understood it."—i. e., he could not reconcile the promises made by the Lord through the prophet Jeremiah, how 70 years would accomplish the desolation of Jerusalem, and yet 2300 years of desolation remain to be accomplished.

In this perplexity of mind, he seeks, by prayer and supplications, with fastings, and sackcloth and ashes, with confessions of the sins and iniquities of his people, a pardon, in the most touching language. "O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city, Jerusalem, thy holy mountain." O Lord, hear; O Lord forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not, for thine own sake, O my God; for thy city and thy people, are called by thy name." And while the prophet is thus engaged in prayer, the angel Gabriel, the same whom he had seen in the vision "at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly," touches him, and informs him that he is now come again according "to the commandment," to make him skillful of understanding in the pre-determined decree of God, respecting Jerusalem, and that people.

The reader will now perceive at once by examining the remainder of this chapter, that the only, and express object of this second visit of the angel is, to reconcile the dilemma of Daniel, and show him that the import which he received from the interpretation of the vision, was correct, and also that the prophecy of Jeremiah will be fulfilled agreeably to its predictions. Says the angel, "therefore understand the matter and consider the vision. Seventy weeks [490 years.] are determined [cut off the 2300.] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." He is called on also to understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore Jerusalem, unto the Messiah, would be seven weeks, and sixty-two weeks; during the seven weeks, the street and walls of the city would be rebuilt, amid much opposition; and after the sixty-two weeks [making sixty-nine.] in the seventieth week, the Messiah would be cut off, but the whole would be devoted to confirming the new covenant.

The sacrifice of Messiah in the midst of the last week, would terminate the Mosaic dispensation, make void the ceremonial law, do away with all sacrifices and oblations, and end the designs of God for preserving them a distinct and separate people. The Jewish nation would reject with scorn, this great sacrifice, the Lamb of God, to which all their sacrifices pointed, by continuing to adhere to the sacrificing of beasts, and in consequence of thus refusing to receive the Messiah, they would fill up the measure of their iniquity, and [as the margin reads.] "they shall be no more his people," but God would permit Jerusalem again to be "compassed with armies;" [the abomination of desolation," Math. 24: 15.] and "destroy the city and the sanctuary," "and for the over-spreading of abominations, he shall make it [Jerusalem] desolate, even until the consummation, [the end of the 2300 years and vision,] and that determined, shall be poured upon the desolate." ["broken without hand."]

The people here described that will desolate the city, is portrayed in the vision as "a little horn," that shall arise after the Grecian kingdom shall be divided into four parts, and wax exceeding great [conquer,] towards "the pleasant land," and explained by the angel, as a "kind of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," that "shall stand up," and "written in the law of Moses." Deut. 28: 48-57.

These definite instructions reconciles the vision with the promise made to this people at the end of the seventy years captivity; that they should return and build the city—the number of years in building—the length of time to the long promised Messiah—that his nation would refuse to receive him, and that in consequence of their great wickedness in so doing, the city should be again desolated; he saw the perfect justice and harmony of God's designs, and we hear him next declare, [10: 1.] "a thing was revealed unto Daniel, whose name was called Belteshezzar; and the thing was true, but the time appointed [2300 years.] was long; and he understood the thing, and had understanding of THE VISION."

Tell me, reader, what would Daniel have done for understanding in the word of God as declared by Jeremiah, and as interpreted to him by the angel in the vision, were it not for the definite instructions contained in this 9th chapter? Take notice, also, that the understanding of the vision continued his feelings of dejection; for, in this sad picture, he could see nothing but unceasing wickedness in the people he loved, and that their persevering stubbornness would bring down upon them dreadful judgments from God. He says, "In those days, I, Daniel, was mourning three full weeks. [Margin, of days.] I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled." It appears that when this time of fasting and mourning was ended, another heavenly messenger comes to him and speaks words of comfort in his affliction, and assures him that he is "a man greatly beloved," and tells Daniel to "fear not," "for thy words are heard, and I am come for thy words."—Then the angel introduces the subject of this third visit; "Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days." [2300.] At the allusion that the angel is again to open before Daniel a resuscitation of events to come, he says, "and when he had spoken such words unto me, I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb," and gave vent to the anguish of his heart, thus: "O my Lord, by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength." Again the prophet is comforted by the words of "one like the sons of men." "O man, greatly beloved, fear not; peace be unto thee; be strong, yea, be strong."

The angel next proceeds to give the prophet a very particular and minute historical detail. He commences again at the Medo Persian kingdom, passes down through the Grecian, its division into four parts—then the Roman, describing some of the Caesars—the destruction of great multitudes of the Jews—the taking away of "the daily," [Pagan religion] placing "the abomination that maketh desolate,"—[Papacy,] the falling of "many by the sword, and by the flame, by captivity, and by spoil, [given into his hand until a time, and times, and the dividing of time,] 1260 years,] the conquering of the papal dominion by the French Government, the stretching forth of his hand upon the land of Egypt, [the French armies under Napoleon, but a few years in the past,] then describes the standing up of the King of the next universal kingdom, Michael in the beautiful and sublime language which we have quoted, of the resurrection and rewarding of the saints.

I wish the reader would notice an expression in this verse. [12: 1.] which will show an unbroken chain of interpretation of the 8th chapter, to the end of this prophecy. Daniel could see no hope and comfort in futurity by the exposition of his vision, but we now see God has been leading his mind down the stream of time step by step, until he arrives at the close of this long dreary period, and then opens before him, the glorious and eternal deliverance that shall mark the closing up of his vision, and the 2300 years. "At that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince [what will he stand up for?] which standeth for the children of thy people; and then shall be a time of trouble, [as described by the different prophets at the end of the indignation:] such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time: and at that time, [when Michael shall stand up, and the time of trouble, the end of the vision, and 2300 years, and consummation,] thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Then the question was asked, how long? and the answer is, "and when he shall have ACCOMPLISHED to scatter the power of the holy people, [Daniel thought at first, that 70 years would accomplish the desolations, but the angel convinced him that it would be 2300 years,] all these things shall be finished."

To my mind, this view of the subject conclusively shows us, that the 70 weeks are a part of the 2300 years, and that this long period does extend to the resurrection of all that are found written in the Lamb's book of life.

The seventy weeks being connected with the 2300 years, furnish us with evidence where we can fix the date of this long period with more precision than is contained in the 8th chapter. The angel said, "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem."—But, with this additional light, we find much difficulty in determining, within quite a number of years, where to date the "going forth of the commandment." The majority of learned men, place it in the seventh year of Artaxerxes' reign; while others, in the first year of Cyrus, the second of Darius, and the twentieth of Artaxerxes. Then again, there is a wide dispute on the number of years B. C., when Artaxerxes commenced his reign: thus, chronologists cover a ground of dispute of at least one hundred years in length! What a fine opportunity here for unbelief! Definite time! "The wise shall understand!" And one hundred years of dispute to range over!—But stop, dear reader, God has not thus indefinitely left this matter. According to the prediction, the era of the "going forth of the commandment" must be only seven weeks [49 years,] before completing the city, and from the time Darius in his second year, made a renewal of the order given by Cyrus, to the twentieth of Artaxerxes, when it was told him that the wall was broken down, and the gates burnt with fire, it was at least eighty years, and with the angel's authority, we will then deduct about eighty years from the one hundred, which will leave only about twenty years of dispute to contend with, because, the only points of contention is on what is termed the different decrees. All the trouble lays between the seventh of Artaxerxes and his twentieth. Bro. Miller, it is well known, chose the seventh of Artaxerxes' reign for the commencement of the 2300 years, and in fixing upon this with the date B. C. 457, he followed the opinion of the greatest number of learned men: and those who least understand the many perplexities with which he labored as a pioneer in this cause, will, as a matter of course, be the less qualified to appreciate the position he assumed. Perhaps I am digressing from my argument, but if I am, it arises from a desire to do justice to him who receives but a scanty measure from those for whose spiritual good he has so arduously toiled for the past few years. When the Lord comes, "then shall every man have praise of God."

A writer in the "Morning Watch," of Feb. 27, 1845, has given us perhaps, the most discouraging view in attempting to fix the era of the commencement with any accuracy. He says, H. Brown, A. M., Principal of the Diocesan College, Chichester, England, supposes the commandment was issued B. C., 449. According to this, the 2300 years would have terminated in 1842, A. D.

JANX, author of the "Hebrew commonwealth," supposes the seventh year of Artaxerxes, to be in the fall of 457 B. C., [and so do the great majority.] This would also have ended the 2300 years in the fall of 1844 A. D.

Prideaux, in the fall of B. C., 456. This would extend the 2300 years to the fall of 1845, According to USHER, the seventh of Artaxerxes, falls in B. C. 465; agreeably to this, the 2300 years would have ended A. D. 1836.

HENGSTENBERG fixes on the 20th year of Artaxerxes as the era of the commandment, which falls B. C. 455. In accordance with this, the 2300 years will end this year 1846 A. D.

T. R. BIRKS, in his translation of Ptolmey's "Canon," marks the year of Artaxerxes' accession, correspond with the year B. C., 424. His seventh year, therefore, corresponds to B. C. 417. This calculation will extend the 2300 years to 1844, A. D.

The reader will take notice that this last testimony is given by the translator of Ptolmey's "Canon," and this opinion is given in that translation; but in the "Canon" of Ptolmey itself, the first year of Artaxerxes, is "pinned down" to the year 4250 of the Julian Period, or B. C. 464, which would make his seventh year correspond to B. C. 457.

Thus, we see that time, the great truth-teller in these matters, has already proved the most of these opinions to be incorrect, and removed very many embarrassing perplexities from our way, in prosecuting this investigation.

As we previously stated, the connection and division of the seventy weeks, removes the necessity of going so far in the past to get the ending of this important measure, and is also a "binder" on any calculation far in the future.

The second division of the seventy weeks, [unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks.] is universally admitted to reach and point to the commencement of Christ's ministry. Bring the opinions of such as Bruk to the test of the sixty-nine weeks. Suppose we fix the seventh year of Artaxerxes' reign to correspond to B. C. 417, and there date these weeks, when would it bring the commencement of Christ's ministry? Within about three years of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman army, and the crucifixion after the city was destroyed! Has God thus indefinitely left the fulfilment of his word? If so, well may the Jews class Daniel among the Hagiographi, and no prophet. Nay, let us, while endeavoring to guard against too much definiteness on the one side, be equally vigilant to contend and enforce all the significance God purposed they should have.

The third part, and last week, is allotted to the confirming the [new] covenant; by himself the first half of the week, and by his disciples the latter half; for "he should to cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease" in the midst or middle of the week. Thus 433 years [69 weeks.] of the 2300 years, were fulfilled at the commencement of the Savior's ministry—484 at the crucifixion—190 when the disciples finished their exclusive work in behalf of the Jews, and turned to offer the "glad tidings" of the gospel to the gentile nations.

These are prominent way marks in our Anno Domini, by which the whole circle of chronological dispute is limited to the small extent of only about six years. But in the last few years, time, with his sharp scythe, has been rapidly cutting off, and diminishing even these few years, and we now stand in the small compass of only two short years of remaining chronological controversy. For example: at our Savior's crucifixion, 4864 years of the 2300, were fulfilled, which will leave 18134 years of the 2500. Some place the crucifixion in the year A. D. 29. 18134 added to 29 A. D., extend into the year 1843, A. D. Time has proved this incorrect. Usher, Scaliger, Prideaux, Ferguson, Bacon, and others, fix this era in A. D. 33. In accordance with this, the 2300 years will end some time in the fall of THIS YEAR. Time will soon test this strong testimony. Isaac Newton supposes that Christ was crucified in A. D. 33. If this be correct, time will extend to the fall of 1847, A. D.

Permit me to close these lengthy remarks, by saying, that in conformity with the best light that can be gathered from God's word, we are reduced to the unavoidable necessity of believing that the time of the Second Advent of the Savior is a matter of revelation—that God has plainly promised that "the wise shall understand," "how long to the end of these wonders," embracing the resurrection—that the 2300 yrs. extend from the time the Medo-Persian kingdom was a universal ruler, to the consummation—that the seventy weeks are a part of this long period, and given for the more definite understanding of the vision of the 6th chapter, both historically and chronologically—that from this relation, it amounts to a complete demonstration, that the Savior will make his second advent into this world ere two years more shall close—that this short space of time covers all remaining controversial ground on which learned men disagree in fixing the important event, upon which we depend. And do we, in a sufficient degree, realize that we are thus rapidly approximating to the closing scenes of this world's history, and to the time when we shall be placed before the great tribunal, to be judged and rewarded according to our works? Ho who will dash the kingdoms of the world to pieces as a potter's vessel, is most emphatically "near, even at the door!" The individual who is described in the 12th of Daniel, as lifting "up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, swearing by him that liveth forever," how long it should be, is the same who uttered these words. Then let not unbelief take unauthorized liberty with this expression. One is given to guard the other. The worldly minded adventist may exclaim, "near, even at the door!" while getting "overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life," laying plans for years in the future; but the prophetic periods cry in his dull ear, "NEAR, EVEN AT THE DOOR!" with the outside limit of only a few months time. Oh let us take earnest heed to the things which we have heard! Let not a species of semi-infidelity enter your hearts respecting the prophetic periods; they are a part of God's word, and given for our especial benefit, that the day may not overtake us as a thief in the night. Beware how you tread;—"for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."

Sister R. F. C. Bailey, Lowell Mass. April 29, writes:

It seems as though we might hope and pray with faith for good results from the Address, to those who cannot be reached in other ways. Bro. Hale gave us his views upon time last Sabbath. The arguments seem very plain and conclusive, and I believe we are living in the time when we may expect all the realities of eternity to burst upon us without any further warning. That we may be found ready and waiting for the redemption of Israel, is the state of mind for which, I trust we are all striving, who have not attained it. We still love your paper, and may the Lord reward you with a crown at His coming, for all your faithfulness. Yours, believing the Lord is at hand.

Conference at Jackson, Mich.

Bro. Marsh:—We received the 4th No. of the Voice of Truth before we did the 3d, consequently we did not know whether any of the brethren at the east would attend the Conference in Michign. It rejoices our hearts to hear that they are coming, or intending to come; the Lord grant that we may not be disappointed. The brethren here are able to do something towards defraying the expenses, and are willing to do all they can. If you should conclude to have the Conference here, please give a timely notice that all the brethren throughout the state may hear of it in time. We give them all a cordial invitation to attend.

THE SONG OF THE PILGRIM.

My rest is not here, my rest is above;
Then why should I fear, borne by Jesus' love;
My dark spirit be calm! the worst that can come,
But shortens the journey, and hastens their home.

It is not for me to be looking for ease,
And seeking for pleasure in regions like these;
I look for a 'mansion' which Christ has prepared—
I seek for a place which no sinner hath shared.

The thorn and the briar may trouble me here,
The darts of the enemy cause me to fear;
But come! joy, or sorrow—whatever may befall,
The love of my Jesus will make up for all.

Afflictions may damp me, but cannot destroy
The love of my God which turns all to joy,
And the bitterest tears, if He smile but on them,
Like dew in the sunshine grow diamond and gem.

Let doubt, then, and danger before me arise,
By the grace of my Jesus I'll win the high prize;
Then away I will fly on the wings of a dove,
And back in the sunlight of Jesus' love.

Moral Condition of the Church.

The following remarks on the moral wretchedness of the church, we extract from a sermon by E. N. Bartlett, recently published in the Oberlin Evangelist. If Mr. Bartlett (and many others belonging to the different churches who have recently written on the same subject,) has told the truth, (and facts say he has,) deplorable indeed is the condition of the once holy and triumphant church of Christ. Truly, the mighty have fallen—the most fine gold has become dim—the people have backslidden with a perpetual backsliding—truth has fallen in our streets, and those who have rejected and trodden it under foot, are turned unto fables—the blind are leading the blind, and leaders and the led have already reached the very verge of destruction! Yet peace, peace, when the Lord has not said peace, is the syren song which charms the fears of the deceived throng. And in view of the end, the dreadful end of this fatal delusion, this infatuated folly and madness, the child of God, whose soul is overflowing with the love of the benevolent Jesus, involuntarily cries out, "Oh that my head were waters, and my eyes a fountain of tears that I might weep day and night, for the slain of the daughter of thy people." And oh! that they had known, in this their day of merciful visitation, the things which belong to their peace, but now they are hid from their eyes!

If such men as Mr. Bartlett, whose sympathies and dearest interests are with the church, see and expose its corruptions, what should we do, who understand that this state of things is a prominent subject of prophecy, which was to be witnessed just before the second advent of Christ? Shall we be silent? we should not. But we should lift up our voices like a trumpet, cry aloud and spare not, and show the house of Israel their sins, and approaching doom, that if by any means, some may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Mr. Bartlett says:

"The deepest, and soundest, and hottest theologians have never by their orthodoxy, nor their theological zeal established a rightful claim to a reputation for active, deep-toned piety.

"The distinction now made is important in enabling us to decide whether the church at the present time, is or is not in a state of spiritual slumber. It is manifest that mind, both in the church and out, is awake; that there is an abundance of zeal and of controversy; but is there spiritual life and energy? Is Zion awake? To determine this, let us inquire, what are the characteristics, respectively, of a waking and of a slumbering church? The following are some of them:

"A church awake enjoys a heart-felt interest in the spiritual duties of religion; a church slumbering relies on the form without the spirit. A church awake is quick to descry the approach of danger, either from false teachers or demoralizing principles; a church slumbering is insensible to danger and blind to corrupting influences. The former will watch the signs of the times, and wisely improve every favorable indication; the latter will show neither wisdom nor foresight in discerning the indications of providence, nor skill in improving them; God may indeed be 'in the place' and they 'know it not.' The one is jealous for the honor of God, and grieved at every occasion for reproach; the other may witness the reproach, but will not lay it to heart. The members of the one will deeply sympathize with their fellow-members, and watch over each other with a godly jealousy, warning, reproving and exhorting with all long suffering; those of the other are indifferent to each other's spiritual welfare, and lax in the discharge of their covenant vows. The one contends for the inward and spiritual form of religion; the other for the outward and ritual form. The one feeds on the kernel; the other on the shell.

"But it is needless to enumerate. The difference between a waking and a slumbering church is as obvious as that between a living, waking, energetic man, and a pale, ghastly corpse. Let me ask, then, in what condition is the church at the present time? If awake, where is its vigilance, its promptness, its wisdom, its energy?—Where is its spirit of self-denial and self-sacrifice?—the jealousy for God and his cause?—the faithful admonition of brethren and friendly solicitude for their reputation and spiritual welfare?—the deep-toned piety—the effectual, fervent prayer—and the panting after the fullness of gospel grace? That these fruits of the spirit are found to some extent, is admitted, but alas! that the drought of apathy, and pinching frosts of unbelief should have rendered them so rare!

"The second characteristic of Zion's condition which the prophets exhort her to rectify, is that of depression, weakness and irresolution.—There were many causes operating in the time of the prophet to dishearten the people of God.—The energies of Zion had become paralyzed, and hence, instead of making conquests, and going on from victory to victory, spreading the knowledge of the true God, and gaining converts to the true religion, she had become faithless and powerless, a reproach and a derision to all the nations round about.

"Thus it has been in modern days. Where now is the strength of Zion? Where is that mighty moral influence which once the christian church possessed? Where is the buoyant hope—the daring courage—the unconquerable resolution, and the overcoming faith, which marked her progress in the first century? Painfully evident is the fact that she does not now, as then, prevail against her enemies. The Man of sin, and the kingdoms of hell and darkness have repeatedly laughed her efforts to scorn. And now can she expect to prevail against the marshaled hosts of the enemy, while distracted with internal division, and rent, torn and chagled by her own suicidal hand? One cannot 'mangle a thousand,' nor two 'put ten thousand to flight,' while thus weakened by division and faint through unbelief.

"But a still further reason why the church does not now as in primitive times, prevail against her enemies, is found in the next characteristic which I am to notice, viz:

"She is in captivity, and spoiled of her beauty, and glory. The beautiful garments are the emblems of righteousness. The priests were clothed with fine linen; hence the Psalmist prays—'Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness.' And the 'bride, the Lamb's wife,' was seen by John in his vision, 'arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.'—Rev. xix. 8. When therefore Zion is exhorted to put on her 'beautiful garments,' it is an exhortation to put away her sins and be arrayed in robes of righteousness. The ancient church had, in the days of the prophet, become grievously corrupt. Many had apostatized from God, and the uncircumcised and the unclean had entered and polluted the holy courts. The distinction was scarcely discernible 'between him that served God, and him that served Him not.' A mere rituary, a ceremonial form, which left the heart full of iniquity, and free to go after its covetousness, had been substituted for the pure worship of the heart and a godly life. Hence the strength and glory of Zion were departed;—her garments were defiled, and all the nations discovered her nakedness and laughed her to scorn.

"To what a lamentable extent are these things true of the church at the present day! How difficult to discern between the righteous and the wicked! The conformity to the world in respect to fashion, the adoption of selfish maxims in business, the sectarian prejudice, the frequent derelictions in virtue among the members of the various churches, the tenacity for creeds and the forms of worship with but little attention to the spirit, and the difficulty of maintaining even the form, where self-interest or indulgence at all intervene—these things, and the like of these, so frequently witnessed in the churches, show a great departure from God, and despoil Zion of her beauty and her glory. Surely there is need of the prophet's exhortation, 'Put on thy beautiful garments.'"

Speaking of the standard of piety which should be raised in the Church, Mr. Bartlett says:

"To preach as many ministers preach, and believe as most of the church believe—to hold up a standard to be looked at and admired but not followed—to be aimed at but not attained—to be acknowledged as duty, but by no means to be deemed practicable under the pains and penalties of ecclesiastical proscription—this will never renovate the church or the world. For ages the church has been listening to such teaching, and she has drunk it in, till it has become incorporated into her very being, and flows through all her veins. She is horrified at the very names by which the Holy Ghost has designated her duty. She dares not ask to be cleansed from all sin, lest she should not be kept sufficiently humble; or if she asks, she dares not expect what she asks lest she be found departing from the 'Fathers,' and be chargeable with 'dangerous error.' Thus, by false teaching, her energies have been paralyzed, the subtle poison thus infused has coursed through her veins, and drunk up her spirits, and darkened her vision. She has seated herself but a little above the foot of the ascent of holiness, and with the summit but dimly discerned, has been casting towards it an occasional, wishful look and giving utterance to faint desires; but with energies crushed, and vision obscured, and faith drooping, and apparent obstacles to impede her course, and calculating her future progress in the light of past failures, she still sits and bemoans her condition, and cherishes her guilty fears, and refuses to ascend.

"Is not this the true picture? Where is the church? The religion of the apostolic churches was living, peace-giving, energetic, triumphant. It was life, and soul, and spirit, and power. But what is it now? With unfeigned pleasure we hail the indications of an awakening interest in spiritual religion—the religion of faith and of love. We freely admit that individuals, and sometimes clusters of individuals have been found, whose religion has partaken of the same energetic character as that of the apostolic churches. But these exceptions being made, how is it with the mass! What has their religion been but a mere skeleton a body without a soul, bare bones without nerve or sinew, scattered and bleached in the broad valley of darkness and unbelief? Such language may seem severe, but what are the facts in the case? What proportion of the so-called evangelical churches are actually living above the world, and giving any decisive evidence that they hold as a practical truth the Savior's declaration, 'Except a man forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple'? How much of the time, thought and energy of the churches is expended in direct and earnest efforts to advance the kingdom of Christ, and the salvation of the world? In their actual and practical estimation, are these objects their business, and all other things incidental, or is it the reverse? How many live above the world? How many have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts? How many can withstand the temptations of life, so as not to be overcome with worldly cares and brought into condemnation? How many have sufficient vitality to live and breathe from week to week in the absence of external means and agencies to keep up an excitement? How many have daily communion with God? How many have joy unspeakable, and peace like a river, and love like an overflowing stream? Indeed I might ask, how many seek for or expect any such things in their experience? And how much self-denial is actually practised in churches? Who thinks of making sacrifices for the cause of Christ? Who enjoys any less ease, allows himself any the less luxuries, or dispenses with any more superfluities, because a world is perishing without the gospel? That some do, is admitted; but if 'out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh,' and if faith is made manifest by works, and 'the tree is known by its fruit,' what judgment shall be pronounced upon the religion that has hitherto prevailed among the mass of church-members? Is it not manifest that it is neither patterned after the gospel, nor fit for the world?

"There must then, be a different aspect entirely to the religion of the church, a different standard elevated and actually attained, before Zion will wear her 'beautiful garments,' and possess moral power sufficient to go forth to conquest.—She must first be saved herself, before she can be blessed of God in saving the world. She must have a religion that elevates above the world, or she will never attract the world from its present position.

"Not only must there be a different standard of individual or personal piety, but in order that Zion may be perfected in beauty and strength, she must separate herself from every class of evil doers, neither receiving them into her communion nor admitting their claims to discipleship.—The 'uncircumcised and the unclean' must not be suffered to enter and remain within her courts. In other words, consistent christian character and conduct must be made the basis, and the only basis of christian fellowship. It is not sufficient that a person thinks he once experienced religion—that he has once had joys and ecstasies—that he is only negatively a christian, being free from gross immoralities, but possessing none of the positive graces of religion, in order to a just claim to christian fellowship. We must be estimated by the gospel criterion, 'Except a man forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple;' and unless he give evidence by his daily life and spirit that he is consecrated to God, and is no longer living for himself, what right has he to a place in the church of Christ? Still less has he a right to such a place, or the church any right to allow it to him, if any of his practices are manifestly in violation of the precepts or spirit of the gospel. If the hand of fellowship be given to those who disregard the principles of justice, or the interests and claims of humanity—to the covetous, the extortioner, or the oppressor—the church by such acts proclaims to the world, either that such practices are not sinful, or that 'righteousness' can have 'fellowship with unrighteousness,' and Christ have 'concord with Belial.' Will it be plead in justification of continued fellowship with such persons that, 'we cannot judge the heart! that many good men have at different times been engaged in unlawful practices; and that we must exercise charity toward all who profess to be christians?' I reply, we are not to extend our charity beyond the limitations of the gospel, nor beyond that of Christ himself. 'If any man love me,' says the Savior 'he will keep my words.' Shall we fellowship those in our charity who keep not his words?—The divine word declares, 'If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him,' 'If any man will be a friend of the world, he is the enemy of God.' Shall our charity extend over the enemies of God? And again, 'They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts.' Shall we fellowship the slave of lust, and prejudice, and passion? And again, 'A good tree bringeth forth not evil fruit.' Shall we admit the tree laden with evil fruit to the table of the Lord? Such charity will not find favor with God. Its broad folds have already been enwrapped at different periods around almost every species of evil doers, and introduced confusion upon the order of Christ's house. It has baptised iniquity in the name of the Lord, and put evil for good and good for evil. It has annulled the plainest declarations of God's word, lowering the conditions of discipleship to suit the worldliness and sensuality of the depraved heart. And what mischief and corruption have not been the result—and when will Zion put on her beautiful garments if such sentiments and practices be suffered to continue? So long as worldlings, and covetous, and rum-sellers, and slave-holders, are baptized with holy hands and received into the fraternal embrace of Christians, and men are even ushered into holy orders and received as ministers of Christ with handcuffs in their pockets, and their fingers stained with blood from the gory backs of slaves; and so long as good and regular standing is allowed to those who refuse to open their mouths for the dumb, and who denounce the benevolent operations of the day;—who would exclude the cause of humanity from the pulpit and the prayer meeting—who 'admit the claims of rectitude in the abstract and neglect them in practice—who serve their Creator on the Sabbath and themselves during the week—who worship God in the sanctuary, and mammon in the market-place, and Satan at the polls'—who are opposed to slavery in the abstract and justify it in the concrete—who pray for good rulers and vote for wicked ones—who denounce oppression and vote the oppressor into power—while these and such like inconsistencies continue, when will the distinction between the church and the world become manifest, and Zion be clothed with her primitive strength and beauty?"

Pray without ceasing, and in all things give thanks.

Bro. Marsh:—I have been thinking for some time, that I would make some extracts from the writings of Charlotte Elizabeth for your paper, which might be interesting and instructive to your readers, which, if you think proper, you may give them. But as some of your readers may wish to know who Charlotte Elizabeth is, I will first answer their inquiries. She is a very popular writer in England, who considers herself called to work in the Lord's vineyard, in the capacity of a writer for the religious instruction and improvement of her fellow beings. Her father was an Episcopal clergyman. She was entirely deaf until she was ten years old, and though brought up in the forms of the church, she knew nothing of vital godliness, until she had acquired the strength of womanhood. The bible alone was her guide then, for she, at that time, was mostly isolated from society, and entirely from religious instruction, except the Holy Spirit, which brought the truth to remembrance, and took of the things of God and showed them unto her, and thus she was soundly converted after a fortnight's deep depression, on account of sin.—Now, her buoyant spirit, which in her youth had loved romance and fictitious writings, was now delighted with the Bible; and the various doctrines, theories, &c., presented to her, were tested by that book, and thus she has been kept from many errors.

Within 23 years, since her conversion, she has written many tracts which have been published by the Dublin Tract Society, and beside several other works, she has written and published 18 volumes, containing about 3650 pages, re-published in New York. She has been the means of converting many of the poor Irish Catholics to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; in short, she seems to have been a christian, whose "faith works by love." I would write of these things, and more of her personal efforts, for the good of her fellow beings, to stimulate if possible, others, to efforts to do good to our dying fellow mortals.

I will now give her experience on the second advent, as she related it in her "Personal Recollections," p. 301.

"I have noticed that I did not go with Mr. Howells, (her minister,) on the subject of the second Advent: I could not. In fact, I was a millennarian against my will. The three particulars on which I did not believe myself to be convinced, were the vengeful dispensation against the Lord's enemies, preparatory to the thousand years of blessedness; the literal nature of the first, premillennial resurrection, and the personal reign. With regard to the first, I wished to believe that the gospel would be victorious, universally subduing every heart, and bringing the whole world into peaceful submission to acknowledge the Lord as King. I had once as before stated, been startled, by a reference to the sixty-third chapter of Isaiah, and lulled to sleep again by the far fetched comments of good Matthew Henry: and I confessed I had taken up the missionary cause on the gratuitous assumption that we were to convert every body, could not agree upon a less extensive triumph. Well, I did not choose to bring this to the test of scripture, because I did not wish to be undeceived; but just after the Irish meeting, the one which was held with reference to the Jews, at which I was present; and forth stepped my valued friend M'Neil, whom I had not seen for a year, and with his little bible in his hand, preached the obnoxious doctrine to my infinite annoyance and conviction!—He took up my precise objection without knowing it; he spoke of those who could not see that part of God's mercy was his judgment; [this is the objection of many in this country. O that they might see with interest, this answer,] with that glowing ardor tempered with deep solemnity, hat always gives him so much of prophetic, characteristic, if I must so speak, he read from 16th Psa. "To Him that smote Egypt in their first-born; for his mercy endureth forever." "To Him which smote great kings, for his mercy endureth forever; and slow famous kings, for his mercy endureth forever." This was the key-note of my strain that I deeply felt resounded through the whole scripture, though I had refused to heed it; and then he turned to the 61st chapter of Isaiah, and read the first and part of the second verse, as quoted by our blessed Lord, 4th of St. Luke, to where he shut the book, saying, "this day is this cripture fulfilled in your ears." But did the cripture end here? No: the first advent fulfilled so much of it; and he who then proclaimed "the acceptable year of the Lord," should, at his second coming, proceed with that unfulfilled cripture, "The day of vengeance of our God." And go on thence, "To comfort all that mourn: to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion,"—and so on the whole beautiful picture of millennial gladness and glory on which Isaiah expatiates, close before me, as consequent upon that "day of vengeance which Christ has not yet in person, proclaimed. How angry I felt with that dauntless champion of God's whole truth, for trampling on my darling prejudices! nevertheless he had done it; and thenceforth I opened my mind to drink in the pure simple meaning of the literal promise.

The first resurrection I considered to be a resurrection of the souls of the martyrs, whose spirits were to animate the happy face of believers during a thousand years. I confess some things puzzled me sorely in this interpretation: for instance, how could a soul be buried; and if not buried, how could it rise? again, those souls were under an altar in heaven, waiting for the completion of their company by means of a new persecution on earth, and it seemed rather a heathenish doctrine to transmigrate them into other bodies; more especially as their own bodies would read them again. Besides, they were with Christ personally in heaven; and to be without Christ personally on earth, was by no means an additional privilege. I found the thing untenable, and resolved to consider it as wholly figurative; but if so, then the final judgment described in that chapter, might be figurative too. I could not look my own inferences in the face; so I wished to let the subject alone; but then a blessing was distinctly pronounced on such as should read and hear the words of that prophecy; and I did not like to lose the blessing.

Thus the matter stood: I had rigidly foreborne to read any book, pro or con, or to be talked to about it. One day, when the subject found itself on me, I resolved to strengthen myself against the modern view, (as I wisely supposed it,) by prayerfully reading again what I already so well knew—the 15th chapter of 1st Cor. I did so;—and was suddenly struck by a recollection of the passage where the saying is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory." I turned to Isaiah 25, read it, and found it unequivocally a description of the church's blessedness on earth—the millennium—at the outset of which the saying is written, which "shall come to pass," when Christ's people rise from the dead. But will not all rise then? I went over the apostle's description once more, and found no word of the resurrection to condemnation. The corruptible then raised, will all put on incorruption; the weakness, power; the mortal, immortality; having borne the image of the earthly, they were to bear the image of the heavenly. I was quite overpowered: could I reply against God? The passage that I thought so formidable on my side, failed me. "Afterwards, they that are his at his coming, then cometh the end." But an interval of a thousand years might surely precede that, "Then," since more than eighteen hundred have already intervened since the acceptable year of the Lord, and we have not seen the day of vengeance of our God," though only a comma separates them in the Bible. From this starting point, I explored the scripture in reference to a literal resurrection of Christ's people, at a literal coming previous to the thousand years of satan's binding, and the peace of the church. I saw it clearly: I received it fully; and I hold it firmly unto this day.

It was written in 1840, and she is here speaking of her experience in 1834.

Yours in haste,
JONAS D. JOHNSON.

Simpson's Plea.

I will avail myself of this opportunity of again copying from Simpson's Plea. I wish the work was more generally known.

Simpson is writing of the "Bishoprics, Prebendaries, Deaneries, &c., &c., one of whom has 20,000 pounds yearly, another 15,000, another 10,000, another 5,000, another 3,000, another 2,000, and another 1,000. One shall heap living upon living, preferment upon preferment to a vast amount, merely because he has got access, too often by mean compliances, to some great man, while his more worthy brother is almost in want of bread for his children. He says: "Would there be any thing inconsistent in the character of a minister of the Gospel of Christ, if the poor Rectors, Vicars, and Curates of the coventry, should make a common cause, and associate together in one body against their unfeeling oppressors? In a peaceful address to the king, (not by violence.)

"Every man is an oppressor who holds that, which ought to be in the hands of another. It does not appear to me that we can justly blame any man for being a Deist, while the great body of us, the Bishops and clergy conduct ourselves in the manner we usually do. The spirit of our hierarchy seems, in various respects, in direct opposition to the spirit of the gospel. A conscientious Deist, if such can be found, who worships God in spirit and in truth, is infinitely preferable to a proud, haughty, pompous Bishop, or dignified Clergyman, who trades in living and souls, and his condemnation will be far less severe. Whatever Bishops and Clergymen of this description may profess, they are infidels at bottom. They believe nothing of the spirit of christianity. Religion is their trade, and gain with them is godliness. They live in the spirit of the ancient Scribes and Pharisees," and they may expect to share in their fate.—Comp. Isa. 56: 9-12.

Let the clerical reader return to the conclusion of Bishop Burnet's History of his own times, and he will find the negligent Bishops of the land very justly and smartly reprehended for their improper conduct. Mr. Ostervald, in his ext. treatise concerning the causes of the present corruption of christians, attributes that corruption chiefly to the Clergy. His words are these:—"The cause of corruptions of Christians, is chiefly to be found in the Clergy. I do not mean to speak here of all churchmen, indifferently. We must do right to some, who distinguish themselves by their talents, their zeal, and the holiness of their lives. But the number of these is not considerable enough to stop the course of those disorders which are occasioned in the church by the vast multitude of remiss and corrupt pastors.—These pull down what the others endeavor to build up. p. 2, cause 3.

After going on to enumerate other abuses, &c. &c., he says: we Clergymen should do well frequently to study the 34th chap. of Ezek. It might do us much good. The following address of Cowper, is also worthy of our attention:

"Ye Clergy, while your orbit is your place,
Lights of the world, and stars of human race;
But if eccentric, you forsake your sphere,

Prodigious, ominous, and viewed with fear;
The comet's baneful influence is a dream,
Yours real and pernicious in the extreme.
Oh laugh, or mourn with me, the rueful jest,
A caesop'd huntsman, and a fiddling priest,
Set Paul to music, he shall quote him too.
He takes the field; master of the pack,
Cries, well done, saint!—and claps him on the back.
Is this the path of sanctify? Is this
To stand a way-mark in the road to bliss?
Himself a wanderer from the narrow way,
His silly sheep, what wonder if they stray?
The sacred function, in your hands is made
Sad sacrifice! no function but a trade."

It is supposed the corruptions of the French clergy, hastened on the Revolutions.

"The church of France before the revolution, consisted of 18 Archbishops, 118 Bishops, 366,264 Clergy, regular and secular, who, together, enjoyed a revenue of about five millions sterling. The kingdom was divided into 34,498 parishes, besides 4,644 annexed parishes; in all 39,142 parishes."

Bishop Burnet says, "I have lamented, during my whole life, that I saw so little true zeal among our clergy. I saw much of it in the clergy of the church of Rome, though it is both ill-directed and ill-conducted. I saw much zeal likewise throughout the foreign churches. The Dissenters have a great deal among them: but I must own that the main body of our Clergy has always appeared dead and lifeless to me; and, instead of animating one another, they seem rather to lay one another to sleep."—Conclusion of the History of his own Times.

"It holds equally true, that all through the kingdom, wherever there is a cathedral, and a greater number of Parsons than ordinary, there is usually the least appearance of real religion among the people. The general lukewarmness of the Clergy, is a curse to every neighborhood where they abound! It is the same in Catholic countries, and must be so, in the nature of things, through every country, unless we live in the spirit of the Gospel."

Sir Isaac Newton is reported to have said, that Infidelity will overrun Europe, before the millennial reign of Christ commences. The corruption of religion in all the christian establishments, cannot easily be purged away in any other manner. They must be subverted by violence and blood. There is much reason to fear it will be impossible to remove them in any other way.—Whiston's Essay on the Revelation of St. John, p. 321. Dr. Hartley was of the same opinion. Observations on Man. Part 2d.

We cannot fully appreciate the infinite goodness of God, in preserving us till these latter days of gospel light, and the near approach of immortal glory. Blessed be his name for the call, 'come out of her; my people, lest ye be partakers of her plagues.'

May the Lord preserve and bless you and all his children scattered abroad, until he shall come, whose right it is to reign.

Yours, in the love of Jesus,
JOHN REEVE.

Bro. E. Miller, Bloomingville, May 4, writes:—My soul rejoices in God—never did I labor in the vineyard of the Lord with more delight than now—never did the truths of the bible appear so clear, so sweet and precious to me as at the present—and never did I look for the immediate coming of the Lord with such confidence and joy as now. We trust that the hardest trial from those who are saying "the Lord has come," is past in this vicinity: but we feel most deeply, the reproach that is brought upon the cause by their conduct. They have indeed caused "the way of truth to be evil spoken of." May God reclaim them from their errors, and keep us all in the way of truth, till "he who is our life shall appear."

We kindly request those who are indebted for the Voice of Truth, to pay all they can on these dues without delay. Our receipts for a few weeks past have not met our current expenses. If we do not misjudge, our brethren and sisters will see to this matter in a proper manner, and in due time.

Perils of the Last Days.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." 2 Tim. 3: 1.

This text speaks prophetically of the "last days," and tells us to "know" that in those days perilous times shall come. Similar language is used by the Savior in reference to the last days. In speaking of the signs of his coming, he says, "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21: 30. Peter says, in reference to the last days, "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days, scoffers, walking after their own lusts, saying where is the promise of his coming?" 2 Pe. 3: 1, 2. Jude uses very similar words when speaking on the same subject. "Beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, how that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who shall walk after their own ungodly lusts." Jude 17, 18.

From these and similar declarations of the prophetic word, it appears very clear that certain signs of the coming of Christ were to be given in the "last days," or shortly before his advent would be witnessed. It is also apparent that those signs might and should be understood by the watchful christian; he is commanded to understand or know them; and if it is a matter of no consequence whether he complies with this requirement or not, then that portion of the inspired word which foretells the signs, describes their character, and commands us to know them, and when they appear, is altogether superfluous. That word means what it says, and is imperative in all its requirements.

But what does this text require us to know shall come in the "last days?" That "perilous times" would come then. But how are we to decide when those perils come? We are to determine this point

1st. By the origin of the perils named. Paul said that there would be perils in the last days, and has so fully described their origin and character, that it is a very easy matter to know them when they come. The perils of the last days were to have their origin among, not a few, but the great mass of the professed children of God. Hence, Paul gives as a prominent trait in the character of those who would cause those perils, "a form of godliness, but denying the power." That it is a professedly religious people that will cause these perils, is evident from the description Paul further gives of them. He says, "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." 2 Tim. 4: 3, 4. These are church-going people, for "they shall heap to themselves teachers," which is a work of the church. "Shall turn away their ears from the truth;" had once heard and loved it, but now love fables more than the truth. This too, can only be applicable to the church. In the church then, according to the testimony of Paul, are the perils of the last days to arise.

Peter strengthens this view of the subject. In connection with what he has said of the last day scoffers in chapter 3 of his second epistle, in the preceding chapter, in reference to the same characters he says, "There shall be false teachers among you, who shall bring in damnable heresies"—"and many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of, and through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you"—"Spots they are and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings, while they feast with you; having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls; an heart they have, exercised with covetous practices; cursed children." That this strong language belongs to the church is clearly evident from the expressions that immediately follow. "Which have forsaken the right way"—"while they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption"—"for if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse than the beginning." This description certainly can fit none but the professed people of God.

Chapter 3 continues the subject, and says, "knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Jude freely discourses on this same subject. He speaks of certain men having "crept in unawares"—"ungodly men, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness"—"filthy dreamers"—who "speak evil of those things which they know not"—"these are spots in your feasts of charity." That Jude was describing the character of the church in the last days is evident from the following declarations; "And Enoch the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all," &c. "These are mourners, complainers, walking after their own lusts"—"But beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, how that they told you that there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. These are they who separate themselves [from the truth, and of course were once in it] sensual, having not the Spirit."

Nothing is more evident than that Jude, Peter, and Paul, in the words we have given from their writings, were speaking of the professed church of the last days. And according to these predictions it was to become worldly-minded, and deeply fallen in moral corruption. This would be her character, yet she would keep up the "form of godliness." In this body would be found the "mockers in the last times"—"the last day scoffers," and by which the spiritual life of the true child of God would be placed in the most dangerous perils of the last days.—Therefore, we conclude that among the professed people of God, in the church, we are to look for the origin of the perils of the last days. If we find perils coming from any other quarter, be assured they are not those pointed out by Paul, which were to come in the last days.

2d. We may know the perils of the last days by the character they sustain. If they are to partake of war and persecution, then we must look for this state of things before the coming of Christ, or before it can be said we are in the "last days;" for the perils under consideration were to come in the last days. We think they will not partake of the nature of blood-shed or persecution, because those cruel acts, instead of putting in peril the spiritual life of the christian, have, when directed against the church ever caused the child of God to cleave nearer and nearer to Christ, our life and only rock of safety.—But this question may be settled at once without multiplying words. Paul plainly gives the character of the perils of the last days.

By consulting the first five verses of the chapter in which our text is found, you will fully learn the character of these perils. They were to consist of selfishness, or self-love, covetousness, boasting, pride, blasphemy, disobedience to parents, ingratitude, unholiness, alienation of christian, and even natural affection; finally, in Paul's own words, there is to be found in the church "truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof—from such turn away."

When we find perils of this kind existing in the church, then we may be assured that we have reached the last days. Well, do these sins exist in the church now? Every one of them not only exist there, but they form the most prominent trait of her character. No understanding person will deny this; for the oft repeated acknowledgments of understanding members of the church, of her coldness, moral corruption, wretchedness and death, abundantly justify what we say concerning her. But you ask, supposing these evils do exist in the church, how can they be considered perilous to the true christian? Because these sins are tolerated by the church in opposition to express commands of the gospel of Christ, which judges those who commit them unworthy of the kingdom of God.

But it may be asked, how can moral evils, admitting they do exist in the church, be reasonably viewed in the light of perils? Have not such evils always existed to a greater or less degree in and out of the church? Most certainly they have. Why then are they perils now any more than in any other age of the world? Because they are more generally committed by the church now than at any former period, and besides, by a majority of the church these crying sins are winked at now, if not looked upon as no sins. Hence, a person may make the highest profession of godliness, but daily practice all these sins, and still be held in good fellowship by the church. This is true of the large majority of the nominal church in these last days. According to Macknight's translation of 2 Tim. the church is now filled up with "self-lovers, money-lovers, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, without natural affection, covenant-breakers, slanderers, incontinent, fierce, without any love to good men, betrayers, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power." And the peril consists in these things being considered by the church not sufficiently sinful to exclude from its fellowship those who practice them; when at the same time they are sins which will exclude all who commit them from the kingdom of God.

It is highly important that the true child of God rightly understands this subject, or knows that by the church his eternal life is put in jeopardy every moment. The church could never boast of more numbers, wealth, science and popularity than now. The offence of the cross with her has ceased; she is at peace, if not joined hand in hand with the world—the world speaks well of her—she has lowered the standard of her piety so as to admit to her communion men of worldly principles, whose chief rule of action is self-gratification. She has become the school of fashion and pride, and the fruitful nursery of pleasure and worldly extravagance. She lauds the religion of the spotless Jesus with her tongue, and inscribes it upon her temples, but offers upon her altars sacrifices to the god of this world, and daily tramples under her polluted feet the most sacred principles of the law of truth and righteousness.

Within the pale of this church the great mass of this age are taught, and made to believe, there is safety and no where else. When in fact the spirit and practice of the general body puts the salvation of the humble child of God in fearful jeopardy every hour. And O that we could make the pure, yet unsuspecting ones see, and flee from these deceptive dangers, these perils to which they are fearfully exposed so long as they stand identified with a body that is the cause of them.

We are aware of the existence of strong prejudices against exposing the sins of the church; but shall we for this hold our peace? we cannot, we dare not do it. We are told to "know that in the last days perilous times shall come." We are sure that those days have come, and know that those perils exist; and as a watchman, true to our trust, we must proclaim the actual existence of these painful facts, whether men will hear or not. We do it for the salvation of those who are in danger of losing their eternal all, by the deceptive snares which surround them, and to confirm them in the faith of the near coming of Christ; for the perils of the last days constitute a sure evidence that the Lord will soon appear, and give a crown of righteousness to all who love his appearing. Lift up your heads, therefore, ye disciples of Jesus, for your redemption draweth nigh. Wash your hands from every sin whether committed by the world, or legalized and practiced by the church; and keep your hearts and lives pure before God, for none but the pure in heart have the promise of seeing, and reigning with him in that world wherein dwelleth righteousness.

In looking not long since, at one of the many letters we received when in the Palladium office, we were peculiarly struck with the following expression. We will give it.

"Elder G. W. Burnham is coming here to lecture on '43 advent, the second Sabbath in this month, and hold a protracted meeting. I hope the result will be favorable. I should think the more thinking part of community regard it as rather fanatical, yet to me it is a solemn subject, and I preach to my hearers to be also ready. Christ may come in a time when they think not. Whether those who think he will come in '43 will be disappointed or not, time will disclose. As ever, yours, Freehold N. Y., Dec. 9, '42. JOHN SPOON.

This is only a specimen of hundreds of letters we received before '43. Ministers and people thought that the doctrine of the second advent of Christ was "a solemn subject;" it carried conviction of its truth to their very souls, and at first hearing it, like Felix, they were convicted, believed, and trembled; but had not moral honesty and courage sufficient to cause them fully and fearlessly to make the good confession before the world. They chose to stand non-committal until '43 passed. Then, instead of frankly acknowledging that they had virtually been in the faith of '43, they backed out of the matter like cowards, and from that time, many of them have been our most violent opposers. They have acted well the part of saying in heart and with the tongue, "my Lord delayeth his coming," and in smiting their fellow servants. Instead of thinking it "a solemn subject," they now ridicule it—and instead of preaching that "Christ may come in a time when they think not"—they warrant the people that he cannot come until after the return of the Jews, the millennium of glory on this earth. O that they would see their folly, and once more receive and rejoice in the truth. But alas! they will not; for the god of this world, of sect and party, has blinded their eyes! so that there is no light in them!

Declined.

We chose not to publish the brother's article, who commences it with the notice that he is going to "let the Lord speak," and then directly speaks very imprudently himself. In reference to Rev. 20, he says, "can you believe the chain to be of real iron links? that old satan, the real devil, is to be chained by that iron chain a thousand years, in a great hole underground, or any where until destroyed? If so, there being no bottom to the pit, of what use would it be to seal the top?" and so on to the end of the long catalogue of similar questions, the object of which is to gain his point, that the first resurrection is a spiritual one, is passed, as are also the thousand years in Rev. 20, the dragon there named has been bound a thousand years and loosed again, and the kindred dogmas of these absurdities. Self, is clearly developed in the communication, and besides, the above questions partake more of the character of skeptical caviling on God's word, than a disposition to understand it. We hope our brother will profit from this friendly, yet severe rebuke. It is no trifling matter to deal lightly with the word of the Lord.

Also, the lengthy article advocating the setting up of God's kingdom in the days of Christ's ministry, lacks, in our judgment, sound argument and Bible testimony, to sustain the position it assumes. It is a labored and fruitless effort to prove true a doctrine which has repeatedly been shown not to be taught in the Word of inspiration; and we think it would be unprofitable to our tried brethren, at this time, to call up a controversy on this subject. That the kingdom of God is not yet set up, is incontrovertibly evident, from the fact that Christ does not reign over one foot of this earth; it is under gentile rule yet, and from the plain testimony of the Bible, we are taught, on seeing certain signs, to "know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

News of the Day.

The all-absorbing topic of conversation, is still the Mexican war. A number of bloody battles have already been fought, in which, according to report, between one and two thousand Mexicans, and several hundred Americans have been killed. Large recruits on both sides are hastening to the field of blood. To all human appearances some hard fighting will soon be reported from the seat of hostilities. A few weeks, in all probability, will give a character to this carnal strife, by which we may better determine whether it has any thing directly to do in fulfilling any portion of the prophetic Word. One thing, however, seems certain, taking into consideration the war-like attitude, out-breaks, seditions, revolutions, and the restless and convulsed state of all the nations of the earth, that they are becoming angry, and rapidly fitting themselves for the day of God's wrath, or battle of the great day.—It is a fearful moment which we occupy! O let us keep our garments unspotted, that we may be found worthy to stand when the Son of man appeareth.

Fulfillment of Prophecy.

First, permit me to notice some prophecies respecting Christ's first advent, the exact fulfillment, of which, among the Jews, plainly identified him to be the true "Messiah the Prince," heir of David's throne.

2d. Their unbelief, ignorance and blindness, compared with characters of the present day.

3d. The severity or wrath of God, which come upon them as a consequence of their willing ignorance and unbelief, an example of that last fiery "indignation," which shall be poured out upon all who are found pursuing the same manner of unbelief.

1st. The holy prophets had spoken hundreds of years ere their words were fulfilled, of the child that should be born and "son given,"—of a "virgin,"—his name—birth place, and lineage—of his flight into Egypt—being "called a Nazarene"—the 69 weeks of Daniel reaching to his Messiahship—that one should be sent before him to "prepare his way"—that he appointed one should "preach the gospel to the poor—deliverance to captives,"—"take the sicknesses, and bare the sorrows of the people,"—be retiring in his manners—should not "strive nor cry, neither should any man hear his voice in the streets"—that he should "open his mouth in parables"—that the light and power of his words and works should be great in the "land of Zebulon, and Nephthaliim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, galilee of the gentiles,"—He should be filled with "wisdom and knowledge," the "spirit of counsel and might"—be of a "quick understanding in the fear of the Lord"—"not reprove after the hearing of his ears, nor judge after the sight of his eyes"—that he should enter Jerusalem, "riding upon an ass," and be hailed as David's son, and Israel's King—but notwithstanding this, his character as a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," as testified amidst the thronging hosts who lauded his name over Jerusalem, was unchanged. He was to be "despised and rejected of men,"—"the Shepherd be smitten and the flock scattered"—should be betrayed by "one of his friends who partook of his bread"—the price for betraying him, "30 pieces of silver,"—with this "reward of iniquity," the "potter's field" should be "bought for the burial of strangers"—that he should be as one dumb before his accusers—"no fault should be found in him,"—yet, he should be "esteemed as one smitten of God and afflicted"—his enemies should "mock him, spit upon him, and smite him,"—he should be "led as a lamb to the slaughter,"—be "hung on a tree" as one "cursed,"—"numbered with transgressors,"—his "hands, feet, and side," should be "pierced"—while enduring these sufferings his enemies should taunt—he should "thirst"—the kind of drink which should be offered—he should "utter a loud voice" to his God—"why hast thou forsaken me,"—should die—his "garments should be divided," but they should "cast lots for his vesture"—a bone of him should not be broken,"—he "should make his grave with the rich,"—"rise the third day," not having "seen corruption." I forbear to speak of the signs and wonders done by the hands of his chosen witnesses, who said, he was alive—declaring to Israel that he was at God's right hand, there to remain till he should come to sit on David's throne, when his enemies would be made his footstool. All these things and more were "written in the law of Moses, in the Psalms and prophecies, concerning Jesus of Nazareth," and were read over in the synagogues, fulfilled in their ears, and before their eyes, by their own lips and wicked hands, and yet they "knew not what they did."

2d. Their unbelief, ignorance, &c., compared. Although they heard the words of the prophets read every Sabbath by their priests, yet they saw not, neither priest or people. So it is now with both the nominal and gentile church and ministry. They know not that the day of God is at hand, yet it is as plain from the words of the prophets, now being and having been for years fulfilled, as that Jesus was proved to be Christ.—They "sought honor one of another, loved the praise of men more than the praise of God," therefore "could not believe." So in these last days ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," having a form of godliness, but denying the power—proud, heady, high minded, &c., is their character.

The word of God was made void through their traditions, the realities of truth, together with spiritual worship, was lost sight of through their teachings; and is it not so now with the people, and their teachers generally? The coming of Jesus the second time—resurrection from the dead, inheritance of Abraham and his seed on the new earth forever, even for ever and ever, is hardly spoken of by them, but in exchange for these thrilling motives of the gospel of Christ, they preach death as the final lot of all. A heaven somewhere in which the saints, when they die, go, some hold to a resurrection of the body, others do not. Thus, like the sects of the Pharisees and Sadducees, there is a division. It was said to them, "ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God." in their unbelief they said, "show us a sign from heaven—if thou be the Christ, tell us plainly—what sign shewest thou then, that we may see and believe thee? what dost thou work?" It was not enough, all the mighty works which he wrought in their midst, going step by step as "it was written of him." No, they entirely overlooked these small things, as they practically called them, and sought after a sign from heaven, some grand exhibition, that every one would be satisfied with.

Now, candid reader, I ask you if we have, and do not witness such skeptical, scoffing demands, by those who are called learned and great upon the advent believers? Have we not been assailed with, "what evidence do you have to look for the world to end, or Christ to come? I see nothing unusual, all things remain as they were from the creation, such and such things, have always been. The darkness of May 19th, 1780, of the sun and moon—the falling of the little meteors in November of 1833, could not have been signs—there was natural causes for all these things.—It seems to us, that if that day is so near, there would be signs we could all understand. Why cannot our wise men see as well as these poor, illiterate ones? They see no cause for alarm, and I will rest quiet about the matter."

Yes, the closing days of time, are come! The scoffer is here! saying just what the word of God declared they would say—"where is the promise of his coming." &c.

3d. Unbelief in God's prophetic word led the Jews to reject their Messiah, and scatter them to the four winds of heaven. So, unbelief now will ruin millions of the earth, and when he who will soon come, and will not tarry, a sleeping, dreaming world, will be destroyed!

Says Paul, (Rom. 11: 22,) Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God, on them which fell, severity, but towards thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness, otherwise thou also shall be cut off; also in the 20th verse, "Because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith; be not high-minded, but fear." Heb. 3: 12. Take heed, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. 4: 11. Let us labor to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief.

Although our profession, like apostate Judah, be as high as heaven, and our boast echo through the earth, yet if we have in our hearts something we love more than we do God, and his suffering cause, we shall reap his severity, with the mourning Jew, when we shall "see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God, and we thrust out! Dreadful word—LEFT! "Depart ye cursed!" O, may we be wise.

Let us awake! for soon! soon!! the Master will be here. GEO. W. BURNHAM.

Sister M. A. Seymour, Youngsville Pa., Apr. 19, writes:—For three months past we have been laboring in the mountainous regions of Pennsylvania, where the evidences of a coming Savior never have been set forth for their consideration. When we came to this region, we found professing christians in a deplorable condition, being without the power of godliness, and immersed in prejudice by false representations. But we have been enabled by the word of the Lord and his Spirit, to remove this deep rooted prejudice from the minds of many, and now they tell us they are rationally convinced of the near approach of the Judge of nations: not because we have said so, but because they have found by reading their bibles, that this is what it teaches.

Letter from Bro. Everett.

Bro. Marsh:—I have been much interested in the meetings being held by the brethren this spring. I hope the brethren will hold fast the beginning of their confidence steadfast to the end and "exhort one another, and so much the more as they see the day approaching." The second coming of Christ is a heavenly doctrine, and its nearness points us directly to the heavenly kingdom, as our "blessed hope." We cannot have fellowship with those who oppose it, and the sectarian churches are generally in that position.—There are exceptions, but most of our brethren stand in a dangerous position in those bodies. I think the address to the brethren scattered abroad, is in the main, excellent, but on this point I wish they had spoken more decidedly. I know your position, and those agreeing with you. I must say candidly, I think your position is the right one. The sectarian churches have not reformed since our brethren "came out from among them." Of course, instead of returning to them, I must still say to the brethren who remain in fellowship with them, "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you; and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."—2 Cor. 6: 17, 18, & 7: 1.

God is a good Father, and let us be obedient children, whatever it may cost us. Do not let your reputation among your neighbors, nor inconveniences, nor any other worldly consideration, hinder you from meeting and laboring with the Lord. The children of God have, in all ages, been called to pass through trials, and to suffer "the loss of all things" for Christ. The primitive Baptists and Methodists travelled in many instances, many miles to meet together in private houses and in remote neighborhoods, and they were thankful to meet in little flocks, relying on the promise. Math. 18: 20. "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of you." Living as we do, in the immediate prospect of the coming of the Lord, shall we shrink from any trials or withhold any sacrifice for Christ? Let us bear the cross, and expect the crown of life. Having "come out," let us "keep out" of a worldly spirit and a worldly church. Soon it will be proclaimed, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." "Blessed are they who are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." When will follow the alarm cry; "Babylon is fallen, is fallen." Let us be ready, Amen S. EVERETT.

Bro. J. V. Himes, Boston, May 23d, writes: We had a good meeting at New York. Bro. Galusha will be with us to-morrow, and on Tuesday the conference will meet. We hope to have a refreshing time. I leave for England, one week from Monday next. Bro. F. G. Brown will also go with us.

Extract of a Letter from Bro. Moffatt.

The brethren and sisters who write for the paper seem to possess the right kind of spirit; a so to feel the constraining influence of divine love urging them to labor for the good of souls, and patiently to endure, that God may be glorified in all things, through Jesus Christ. Forever blessed be his name, who enabled you to lift up your voice, against the hideous sins and abominations committed by the adulterous brood of the "woman," which reigneth over the kings of the earth.—Rev. 17, 18. I never could see the correctness of the opinion, that the work of calling—"come out of her, my people," devolved on the angel which John saw—Rev. 18, 1—"come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lighted with his glory." Hence I did not think of waiting for this glorious event, but rather thought it to be duty to "come out," in order to be prepared to meet the glorious coming One, in peace.

Moreover is not the passage, 2 Cor. 6: 14—17, strictly applicable to christians of this time, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." Now mark the terms of having God to be our Father, and promise of enjoying his favor, which is better than ten thousand worlds like this. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord; and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. The light I had, thirty years ago, led me to join the dissenters from the "Kirk of Scotland," commonly known as the "Relief denomination." After coming to America I followed the Lord in the ordinance of baptism in 1835, and united with the body called "Disciples," where I remained till '43. At that period, I discovered that their faith and practice bore no resemblance to the requirements of the gospel, nor to the example of Jesus, the author and finisher of the faith, and this induced me at once to dissolve the previous connection. I never have regretted taking this step. On the contrary, I have enjoyed more of the presence of God in my soul since, than through all the former period of my christian profession.

Does any think that the sects, as such, can be reformed or converted? Such a notion is just as repugnant to scripture and right reason, as is the theory of the world's conversion. The days of Luther, Knox and Calvin are past and gone, and these great reformers are among the "blessed dead, who rest from their labors."—Rev. 14: 13. The church has come up out of the wilderness, but now, she leans not on the arm of the Lord.—Prosperity intoxicated her, and in this state, she made a sad "mistake" about the direction and dimensions of the road that leads to the celestial city, and obstinately refuses to "confess," or correct the error. At the present time her right hand grasps the flaming torch of war, whilst her left awkwardly holds the "olive branch;" but ah! her skirts are deeply tinged with the blood of souls. Thus, instead of being separated from evil, her iniquities have led her away from God, and from the hope of the gospel, "which is Christ in you the hope of glory. Within her pale she embraces those. Abundant evidence to substantiate this and much more has already met the public eye, in the monthly, semi-monthly and weekly publications of the various sects and parties.—Truly the "perilous times" (2 Tim. 3:), have come, when men are "lovers of their own selves, covetuous, boasters, proud blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away."

Some have ceased to lift up the voice like a trumpet, against the enormities of the nominal church, because they opine, that there are yet many of God's dear people in her communion. Well, it is such that the apostle warns to flee from corruption.

Letter from Bro. Huntington.

DEAR BRO. MARSH:—

When yourself, or any of the dear Brethren have called upon the scattered flock for help, I have almost envied those who had the ability to respond to the call, the pleasure I felt that they must enjoy, in putting forth the helping hand.—Amongst those who have appealed in your behalf I know of none whose call has so often been recalled to my mind and so deeply effected my heart as that of dear Bro. Benedict. It was so much like the warm gushings of his loving heart, that it touched a chord that has not yet ceased to vibrate; and while I have been unable to yield you the aid I would gladly have done, it has prompted me to commend you, and your wants to God, and the word of his grace which has declared that "as your day is, so shall your strength be." I have never had any fears that the Voice of Truth would not be sustained, or that you would be left to suffer want, because of any sacrifice you might have made for the cause of truth: my only fears for you, have been, that you should become overburdened with care, and faint (not fall,) under your trials.

"The Voice of Truth," is a welcome weekly messenger, as it comes to hand, freighted with the "glad tidings of the kingdom at hand;" and bringing us intelligence from the tempted and tried ones, who are so soon expecting deliverance at the hands of the great Captain of their salvation. We have long since felt the blessedness of bearing one another's burthens, of rejoicing with those who rejoice: and weeping with those who weep. Our warmest sympathies are excited for those who have once known the way of life and truth, and have fallen away through the error of the wicked;—some of them we have known as efficient laborers in the vineyard of the Lord; and now to see what shipwrecks they have made concerning the faith, causes our hearts to bleed, and our souls to go out in fervent desires, that God's renovating and restoring grace might be bestowed upon them, and that they might be found enquiring for the old paths, and walking in the good way, that they may find rest to their souls.

The church here, as a general thing, are standing well. God is with us in power. "The faith of some is growing exceedingly," as did that of the church in Thessalonica—(2 Thess. 1: 3,)—for which I feel bound to thank God. For one, I believe unhesitatingly, that this is the year of our release, and my heart has been pained at the seeming indifference of many, as it regards time.

In Dan. 12:, the wonderful numberer has sworn to time; and with reference to that time, I believe, he has said, "the wise shall understand;"—nor does this (as I view it), conflict with the declaration of the Savior in Math. 24, so often quoted by our opposers, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man." I believe it is universally believed by Adventists, that the speaker in both chapters, was the same individual; and I am confident that his teaching in the chapter last mentioned, will not conflict with that in Dan. But, says one, "How will you reconcile it?" I apprehend he was speaking of two different events;—in Dan. the time appointed for the treading down of the sanctuary and host, was 2300 days; this was the time Jesus swore to, and which, I believe, without one doubt, ends this fall. The other event alluded to, was the coming of the Son of man; which, it seems to me, takes place this side of the termination of the 2300 days, and is not known; hence the importance of watching every moment, with our loins girded, and our lamps burning.

If the 70 weeks are a part of the 2300 years—(and who can doubt it?), and Christ was cut off in the middle of the 70th, leaving the last half to be filled up by the disciples, (and with our experience, I do not see how we can help believing this), I see no way that we can prolong the time beyond this fall. It has been settled by astronomy, to my satisfaction, that Christ was crucified in the spring of 33, half a week more, or 3½ yrs. carries to the fall of 36 where the 70 weeks or 490 years terminate, leaving 1810 more to the ending of the 2300;—add 1810 to the fall of A. D. 36, and it brings us to the fall of A. D. 1846, for the termination of the vision. And is it so? Are we so near the eternal inheritance? And shall we falter now? God forbid!! let us gird up once more, for the conflict; and feel that in the strength of the Captain of our salvation, we are well able to go up and possess the goodly land.

HARTFORD, Ct., May 16, 1846.

DRESS.—An Extract.

This subject is not so trifling as many imagine. God has been pleased by the mouth of his inspired servants, to express his disapprobation of extravagant dress, and the holy apostles have not thought it irrelevant to their design, to forbid the use of gold, pearls, and costly array, in which may be included every article of dress, which is not necessary to comfort, convenience, and propriety. It is a lamentable truth, that some, who profess to be followers of him whose garment was without a seam, are yet aping the fashions of the world. In what sense have such obeyed the injunction, be not conformed to the world? How does it appear that such have come out from among them whose livery they still wear? Plainness and simplicity of apparel, are the uniform of the christian. By this, he manifests to the world, at the first view, that he has voluntarily renounced the fascinating pleasures of time and sense, and is seeking sublimer enjoyments and more permanent felicities in the favor of God, and the anticipation of immortal blessedness.

"Be not conformed to this world," is the injunction of an inspired writer. Christians, do you believe that all scripture is given by the inspiration of God? then no longer lend your influence to the fashions of the world, by wearing its livery. If God has bestowed on you an abundant portion of the riches which perish in the using, let your persons be adorned with simplicity, and your fund of charity be proportionably increased;—so shall the widow and the orphan repeat with gratitude, the story of your benevolence, and the dignity of virtue impart a more attractive charm to your persons, than all the decorations of fashion have power to bestow.—Above all things, consider that all superfluity is incompatible with the strictness that the gospel enjoins, and a fashionable, expensive dress, indicates a conformity to the world, utterly inconsistent with the profession of godliness. Experience, happy experience dictates, that to advance in grace, is to advance in happiness; and the work of grace progresses in the soul in proportion as the world is subdued.

O, may the followers of him who is meek and lowly in heart, be induced to lay aside those badges of vanity and weakness which mark the costume of the age, and devote the time which has been occupied in unnecessary attention to dress, to a vigorous preparation to wear the robe that has been washed, and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

W.—Vt., April, 1846.

Bro. George Hill, Guilford Ct., April 20th, writes:—The "Voice of Truth is a welcome messenger to me. My soul is often fed with the heart cheering letters which it contains from brethren and sisters, speaking the same things, rejoicing in the same hope, looking for the blessed inheritance promised to our Father Abraham;—for, says Paul, if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Yes, heirs, not to a corruptible, but to an incorruptible crown. Seeing then we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness.

Brethren and sisters awake, the Lord is coming. Why should we sleep as do others? Seeing we are the children of the light, let us walk in the light; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. We have not followed a cunningly devised fable, no; it is the immutable truth of God, will you faint in sight of the prize? I know that trials surround you of no common nature, but the Lord Jehovah is your strength: lean upon his arm, his promises are sure, he is mighty to save. O tear away from every unholy influence that surrounds you, yield not to influences that would defile your conscience, or diminish your love to the Savior; for it is better to enter into life halt or maimed, than having two hands or two feet to be cast into hell. O cling close to the word of God, and it will be a lamp to your feet, and a light to guide your footsteps amid the moral darkness that now covers the earth, and soon you will enter that bright world of glory, where sin never will be known; then press forward, and we soon shall gain the prize!

I feel that the evidence for the coming of the Lord is strong on '46. I can see no argument against it. I am strong in the faith that Christ is at the door, and my soul is cheered with the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ. I have no desire to be any thing but just what the Lord would have me be. My desire is to do his will, and through his grace helping me. I mean to hold on to the end, and I trust then to meet my dear brethren in our Father's kingdom.

Letter from Sister Kenny.

Bro. Marsh:—There is a church of believers in this place. When I say believers, I mean not those that are believers in fables, and the traditions of the Elders; if so, I fear that it would include nearly the whole mass of people. But I mean those who have faith in the sacred writ, which is truth, and is to judge us in the last day, or by which we are to be judged. Paul tells us that "every man's work shall be tried with fire," so we see that nothing but the truth will do—this will stand, though heaven and earth pass away.

The brethren are well united in love, earnestly desiring and patiently waiting for the "redemption of the purchased people, unto the praise of his glory." We have been enabled thus far to keep our confidence in the Lord, knowing that he has been with us, and has promised to be with us even to the end of the world. And likewise, we have kept out from this church all strange and delusive doctrines, and are enabled to stand on the foundation, which is Christ Jesus. We are looking according to the Word, for that same Jesus to come in like manner as he went into heaven; to come in the glory of his Father with all his holy angels with him. And we also are looking for the literal resurrection of the dead. This is the faith that was once delivered to the saints. I praise God that the gospel is shining in its purity, knowledge is increasing, the wise are understanding more and more, while on the other hand, the wicked are doing wickedly, and do not understand. Darkness is covering the land, and gross darkness, the people. They are going on in their blindness, and know it not; neither will they know or believe, and ere they are aware, they will be cut down like the grass, and wither like the green herb! O, lamentable thought!—But alas, true.

Brethren, trust in the Lord and do good, and thou shalt dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy heart. Praised be God for this promise. One desire of Paul was, that Israel might be saved; this is also our desire, yea, we even groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our bodies. Well, we will take courage, for the word of truth says, the desires of our heart shall be given us. Commit thyself unto the Lord, trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass.—Cense from anger and forsake wrath, fret not thyself in any wise, to do evil; for evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait on the Lord, they shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The promises of God are good, and let us live so that we may claim them as ours. Toil on, strive on a little longer, and he that is to come will come and will not tarry. Even so, come Lord Jesus. The grace of God be with all, Amen.

Your sister in tribulation and in the hope of the gospel,
HANNAH E. KENNEY.

Letter from Bro. Baker.

Bro. Marsh:—Having to write on business, I would just say I am "looking for and hasting (earnestly desiring,) unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.

All the evidence we had to induce us to look for the Lord in '43, holds good for expecting him the present year. Hence, the appropriateness of the admonition, "Watch therefore, for ye know not the day or hour wherein the Son of man cometh—lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

The times are perilous and full of interest, and we are safe only in adhering to the sure word of prophecy, and abiding in Christ by faith, having our fruit unto holiness, and the end, everlasting life. While many tests are being given at the present, I think the 13th of 1st Cor., presents an excellent test by which we shall all do well to try ourselves. Also 1 John, 4: 7, 8, & 11; Col. 3: 12-14. "And that knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—Rom. 13: 11. See to the end.

Soon the heavens and the earth will shake, but the Lord will be the strength of his people, and the hope of the children of Israel. "Soon the ransomed hosts will shout, we are come, we are come!"

In this region we have our trials in common with the brethren elsewhere, yet we find that

"Trials make the promise sweet—Trials give new life to prayer."

"The God of all grace who hath called us unto his kingdom and glory by Christ Jesus, after that we have suffered awhile," will we trust, "make us perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle us." 1 Pet. 5: 10. "The last lovely morning all blooming and fair," will soon come, and shine with undiminished splendor—and the inheritance of unfading beauty, and of undying glory, shall be possessed by the saints forever, even forever and ever. With what fidelity ought we to serve our Lord in doing good to our fellow men—in view of such infinite kindness and love. The Lord strengthen us to do his will, and preserve us unto his heavenly kingdom, and soon clothe us with our house, which is from heaven.

Yours in hope,

GEORGE C. BAKER.

DROUGHT AND FAMINE IN NORTHERN BRAZIL.—A letter received by a gentleman in this city, dated Aracaty, Feb. 20, gives a heart rending description of the sufferings of the inhabitants of portions of Northern Brazil. At Aracaty, in consequence of the protracted drought, the trees were withering, and the people were famishing for want of food. The writer says:—"Should the drought continue till May or June, we shall have few persons left here. They have already begun to flock to Pernambuco, the capital; and if opportunity offers, all that remain will immediately follow." The writer was at Ico, Feb. 9, and he there saw families, who a short time since enjoyed abundance, begging from door to door. "They appeared," he remarks, "more like skeletons than any thing else. Many were dying in the streets, of want, daily; and the deaths were so numerous that the amount of mortality could not be estimated." Articles of first necessity had risen to an exorbitant price.—A quarter of flour (half a bushel) could not be obtained for less than 24 millreas, or $12; and biscuits, weighing half an ounce, sold for 30 reas, or one cent and a half each. Salt, which a short time previous was selling at 8 millreas, was held at 16 millreas. In the districts of Inhamum, Crato, the province of Parahyba, and the neighboring country, except the sea coast, the distress was great beyond description, and the inhabitants were perishing of hunger in all directions.
Baltimore American.

Bro. J. Weston, New Ipswich N. H., May 4, writes:—The brethren in Sutton region, have all believed that the bridegroom had come, but I appointed a meeting at Bro. Hazen's house, and it was in a neighborhood where the people had had much light, yet some 15 or 20 of those who had heretofore rejected the truth, came in and quite a number sat by the door. I showed from my bible that God had been with us in the past, and that we had a yet appointed time from the word. I never felt more like addressing the impenitent, and God was with his truth, so that many tears were shed, and some present who had believed that the "door was shut," in seeing the work of God, got their eyes open, and mouths too, and warned their neighbors to flee from the wrath to come.

Bro. C. E. Gillett, East Springwater N. Y., April 20, writes:—Since I left Rochester, I have continued my labors in Springwater and its vicinity, with the blessing of God to my own soul and to others, and parents and children, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, are now rejoicing in the salvation of God, and the fact clearly demonstrated that Christ has yet power on earth to forgive sins. Lord's day, April 18th, I gave a discourse to a crowded, solemn audience, at "Faber's corners," from 1 Pet. 1: 25. "The word of the Lord endureth forever." The word was indeed like the "fire and the hammer, to break the flinty heart in pieces." After meeting we retired to the water side, and the multitude followed to see, and the oldest christians remarked they never saw happier converts, or a more solemn occasion than this. The weather was pleasant, the place of baptism convenient, christians shouted, converts rejoiced, and some sinners did weep. These converts are all believers in Christ's speedy coming, and in baptizing them, (7 in number,) in the likeness of the Savior's death and resurrection, my faith was greatly strengthened in hope of a speedy resurrection of the saints; as Paul says, "If the dead rise not at all, what shall they do who are baptized for the dead, or in likeness of the dead?" Rom. 6: 31, Cor. 15th chap. Glory be to God, I believe without a doubt, the saints will soon see Jesus in glorious immortality. I do not think the work of revival is yet closed in this place. How long I may tarry here, I do not know. I hope no longer than God wants me to, yet many are quite anxious to hear the word, and some have already confessed it. I intend by the grace of God, to be a servant to the church, the truth, and to God, while life lasts, or time continues.

Bro. R. T. Haskins, South Watford, Maine, May 3, writes:—

Bro. Marsh:—We receive the Lord's weekly messenger, with joyful hearts, and may God expand our souls into more love and gratitude, that we are permitted, in these perilous times, to hear from our dear brethren abroad, who are struggling against so many opposing influences. But praised be the name of the Lord, that he has indeed, a few valiant soldiers of the cross, in nothing terrified by adversaries, will continue to feed the flock of God. Yes, just as long as they continue in that lovely spirit of Christ, remembering their strength is in Jehovah alone; such servants will be "apt to teach, patient unto all men, instructing those that oppose themselves."—May God put meekness into the hearts of all that write in opposition to error—among ourselves or to those who come out wholly opposed to the Adventists, that they may show to all around that it is the sword of the spirit, by which we are enabled to gain victory over all opposing spirits.

How ill it becomes any one professing to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, to enter into a sarcastic controversy with those who oppose us in our blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. If we are met by a Goliath, let us be a little David, for the good Lord will fight his own battles in his own way.

Removal of Our Office.

We have removed our Office into Simpson's new block on 17 Works Street, just back of the Arcade. We occupy the second floor in the west end of the building; entrance from 17 Works St.

Let the evidences on the time of our Lord's coming, published in our last week's sheet, be freely and speedily placed before the people. We have several hundred copies on hand, which can be had at $4 per hundred, or free to those who will read and are unable to pay. Don't be tardy nor covetous in doing good.

Bro. D. Cray will act as agent for the Voice of Truth in Hartford Ct. Our subscribers there, who may not wish to transmit their own subscription, will pay to Bro. Cray.

We have on hand a supply of Harps, Question Books, Campbell and Macknight's translation of the New Testament, Concordances &c.

We've No Abiding City Here.

I've no abiding city here, no pleasant lovely spot.

Where roses bloom without a thorn, where sorrows are forgot;
No place where happiness is found, without a fear the morrow
Will overturn my cup of bliss and fill my heart with sorrow.

No place where love fills every heart, nor hate nor envy come Within that sacred casket, where they ne'er should have a home;
No dear Elysian fields are here, where rest and pleasure reign,
And disappointment ne'er can come to blast our hopes again.

No place is found this world around, where friends all faithful prove,

Where no harsh word is ever heard, but ever thought is love,
Where joys distil and ever will, from every passing shower,
And pride spreads not o'er every spot, its soul destroying power.

Ah no! for I had planned my schemes, with purest pleasure fraught,

'Romantic schemes' they might have been, but O the bliss they brought,

When fondly I believed them true: I thought not that the morrow

Would blast my fondly cherished hopes, and fill my heart with sorrow.

But hopes and schemes are blasted, and my spirit turns away
And seeks beyond this 'vale of tears' a brighter, better day;
Where night and sorrow never come, where joys and light are given,

Where Christ has promised me a home, a 'rest' with him in heaven.

There disappointment never spreads her dark and heavy wing;
There life, and love, and peace shall reign, there saints and angels sing;

There, robed in light and glory, I shall dwell forever more,
And sorrow ne'er will reach me on that happy happy shore.

THE NOMINAL CHURCH.

Her exalted and popular state in the last days.—
Her fall.

Having shown, I think conclusively, in my preceding communications on this subject, that "mystery Babylon that great city, reigning over the kings of the earth, applies to the present nominal christian sects, I proceed to inquire into the nature and time of her FALL.

Says John, "And after these things, I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth have waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies."—Rev. 18: 1-3.

The fall of Babylon must precede her final end at the coming of Christ. At her end she is to be utterly burned with fire. Like a great mill stone, cast into the sea, shall Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. See verse 8, 21. But at her fall she becomes "a habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. At her fall, her plagues come in one day, death and mourning, and famine. Verse 2, 8.

It is evident, therefore, that her fall, producing death, mourning and famine will precede the end, and continue till she is burned with fire. The specific time for her plagues to come upon her at her fall, is "one day." (Year.) But her riches are to be brought to naught, desolation, and final judgment, are to come in "one hour."—See chap. 18: 8.

The proclamation of the fall of Babylon, is to follow the preaching of the hour of his judgment, (definite time.) The order is given in Rev. 14th chapter. In this chapter is given a view first, of the 144,000 virgins sealed in their forehead under the sixth seal. 2d. The instrumentalities by which they are sealed. 3d. Their gathering by the sickle of the Son of Man, to stand "with him on Mount Zion, and the destruction of the wicked.

The first agency employed in sealing the wise and guileless virgins, was "an angel flying thro' the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth."—It is admitted that this prophecy has its fulfillment in an order of ministers, passing rapidly through the heavenly places, exhorting men to fear God proclaiming the time of his general judgment, as a motive. Mr. Miller and many others of different denominations in the four quarters of the earth, were sent at "supper time" to say "come, for all things are now ready."

Then, for the first time in the history of man, was the hour or period of his judgment generally proclaimed to man. The first angel has been faithfully proclaiming his message to sinful man for twelve or fifteen years past.

"And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city," &c.—V. 8. This second angel is doubtless the same as the one that comes "down from heaven, having great power," lightening the earth with his glory.—They declare the same important truths to God's people. Now I ask, what reason can be assigned why the first angel should be a class of ministers, and the second, that follows, be our Lord Jesus Christ personally from heaven? I can see none. Was the first a class of the angels of the church? so also is the second and third. The second angel follows the first, and the third angel, the first and second.—See 14th chap.

The word follow, refers evidently, to both time and place. For, one angel or person to follow another, implies that the one that follows takes the same direction, and passes through the same places. Did the first fly through the midst of the church? so also does the second that follows.—The first class of messengers preach with a "loud voice," fear God, &c. Those that follow, preach "mightily with a strong voice," "Babylon is fallen," &c. Does the first preach "to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, that dwell on the earth;" so the one that follows, preaches the fall of "Mystery Babylon" to the nations that dwell on the earth. This prophecy was not fulfilled in my opinion, till A. D. 1844, when it was confessed, discovered and generally proclaimed, that Babylon or the nominal churches, were in a fallen and lifeless condition. But what is the true nature of her fall, and what are the evidences of the time of that event?

In answer to the first question, let it be observed, as we have seen that it must take place before her utter destruction at the end of the world, when she shall be "thrown down with violence, and be found no more at all;" her fall does not, therefore, denote her final burning and end. As she becomes at her fall, "a habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird," she evidently exists after her fall, in a very strong, close, and organized form. Also the sound, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins," is heard and obeyed after her fall. She must therefore exist in her fallen state, with God's people in her.

Nor does the apostacy of the church from Christ and holiness, signify the fall of Babylon, but is the cause of her fall, and by it her apostacy is perpetuated. Her moral and spiritual corruptions having become general and of long standing, were called fornication, was the fatal cause, but not the fall itself. Babylon is fallen, says the angel, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Rev. 14: 8th ch. 17: 2. In showing to John the judgment of the woman sitting upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, it is said, "with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication." And chap. 18, 3. After crying, "Babylon is fallen," it is added as the true cause or reason for it, "For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth have waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies." It is clear as a sunbeam, that the unholy commerce between the church and the nations, kings and merchants of the earth constitute her Babylon or a harlot daughter and member of the Babylonish family, that great spiritual city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth. A sect may therefore become Babylon by apostacy, long before her fall, and continuing in her, is sure to share her fate. When this unholy mixture and confusion of worldly and spiritual interests become general and confirmed, and every remedy and warning resisted and neglected, then will her final separation from grace and pardon come.

The fall of Babylon is the act of giving the nominal church as a body, a bill of divorcement for her sins, and leaving her. This is done by Christ, the Bridegroom, to his professed church, the bride, in consequence of her unlawful connection to this ungodly world, as the supreme object of her love.

Let us illustrate. The saints heavenly calling, and fellowship with Christ in this state of trial, and their final glorification with him in their resurrection state, is very frequently compared in the scriptures, to the formation and consummation of the marriage contract between the man and his wife. This is certainly the most important and sacred of all human obligations. Christ is called the Man, the Bridegroom, and the husband. The church is termed the woman, the bride, and the Lamb's wife. A connection is constantly forming between Christ and his church, the most sacred and endearing in this life, and will be completed at his second coming, when they "that are ready will go in with him to the marriage, and the door is shut." Here the church is most solemnly pledged and espoused to Christ. She has professedly given up all for his sake, and chosen him for her portion, and the object of her love; and promised to be ready in perfect holiness, for the marriage supper of the Lamb. Now, when her affections become alienated, and that without cause, and she pays her respect and love to another, the honors, riches, pleasures, and pride of this vain world, she becomes Babylon; a harlot, or mother of harlots; forsakes her Savior, breaks her vows to be true to him, and commits fornication with the kings and merchants of the earth. Christ bears with her profligacy, visits her, warns, commands, threatens, promises, entreats, but all to little or no purpose; she grows more cold in her affections to him, and strongly attached to her new lover. Unwilling however, to give her up to perish, at last, in infinite kindness, he reminds her of the approaching marriage at the resurrection, speaks of the judgment and the joys of meeting in the New Jerusalem, never to part where there are joys and pleasures forevermore. He also warns her of the nearness of the time.—He sends his servants at supper time, saying, "Come, for all things are now ready." The hour of his judgment is come. He now graciously offers pardon, if she will repent and turn to him, and be ready for the marriage. This must be, in the very nature of the case, the last offer. And how was this infinite condescension and loving kindness, to a corrupt, proud, worldly minded, apostate church received? Did the church as a body, hear, believe, and get ready for the happy union which she was admonished would soon take place. Alas! Alas! No. They made light of it. And they all, with one consent, began to make excuse. They generally treated the subject and the messengers, with indifference, lightness, or contempt; made their excuses, and went their way. Not only the time, but almost every single point of scripture doctrine connected with, and clustering around the coming of the glorious Bridegroom, resurrection, and marriage of the Lamb, was either altered or denied altogether by some one branch of the nominal church. Thus, was the literal interpretation of the Bible, concerning the second Advent, resurrection, conflagration, new creation, millennial reign, knowledge of the time, nearness of the time, utterly rejected. The blessed hope of the righteous, in all ages, the mark and prize of our great high calling, the great motives to a life of holiness and preparation for the world to come, were so mystified as to lose their influence upon our conduct, or they were utterly cut off. The great redeeming truths of the church were denied or mystified, and their redeeming influence consequently lost. This constituted the crowning sin of Babylon. The rejection of the premillennial advent of Christ, and the nearness of the time. This was the topstone of the multitude of her sins which "reached to heaven," and for which, God "remembered her iniquities," and she fell.

Christ loved the church as a body, and did not leave them in their apostacy, till they had rejected the messengers preaching, "fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." This being done, there followed another angel, crying, Babylon is fallen, &c. Christ saw there was no hope for her as a body, divorced her, and withdrew his Spirit from her, as a body, and gave her up to her own delusions. This is the true fall of Babylon. Christ leaves her; she falls from his favor as a body, without recovery. The fall of Babylon is a judicial act of God, on remembering her iniquities; and is a part of her judgment. By this act he takes his Spirit from her, and reprobates her forever. Luke, the Evangelist, says: The Master of the house being angry, said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither, the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind.—When the bidden guests excused themselves, they were as a body, left, and should not taste of the supper, so the insulted and angry Jesus commanded others to be called from the streets and lanes of the city. (Babylon.) This is evidently fulfilled just after the fall of Babylon. Says Isaiah, 2d chap., after prophecy of pride, and abominable idolatry of the church in the last days,—"therefore, forgive them not." "Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah is fallen; because their tongue and their doings, are against the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his glory." 3d ch., 2. The corruptions of the church are increased however, by her fall. She becomes a habitation of devils, &c. All restraining and sanctifying grace having been withdrawn by her fall from the favor of heaven. "Her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine." This is the immediate consequence of her fall; then at her end, "she shall be utterly burned with fire." This death, mourning, and famine, must be spiritually understood; otherwise, she could not be called a "cage of unclean and hateful birds;"—a "hold of foul spirits." This clearly teaches the nature of her dreadful fall. "These two things shall come to thee in a moment, in one day, the loss of children and widowhood; they shall come upon thee in their perfection, for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments." Isa. 47: 9. The death then referred to, is the loss of her husband, leaving Babylon a widow. When Christ the Bridegroom, leaves the church, it is spiritual death indeed. The mourning is occasioned by loss of children, and her widowed and solitary state.—God calls—"Come out of her my people;" and she mourns their loss. Christ says, "I am the bread of life." When, therefore, he withdraws himself, there is a famine in the church. The word and ordinances are no longer meat in due season. All is cold formality. The soul is hungry, and remains dissatisfied under this famine of the spirit.

If the church is compared to "a city that is set on a hill, which cannot be hid," in its pure and primitive state, and in its corrupt and unholy intercourse with the world, to a "great city reigning over the kings of the earth," of which, ancient Babylon could be the true type, we arrive to the same conclusion respecting its fall.—As this city become more and more corrupt under Belshazzar, its last monarch, till it lost its power and independence, and fell, in its fancied security, an easy prey to its enemies, before the people of God left it, and returned from their seventy years captivity and bondage, and also before its end, so, when Christ deserts that great city, Mystery Babylon, the nominal church, she, by this act falls from her spiritual independence and power, and is taken by the strong man, armed. And as God provided a way for the escape of his people in the type, by overcoming and inclining the will of the Prince of Persia, to let his people go; though he withstood Gabriel one and twenty days; so he has, and will interfere in some way, for the deliverance of all his dear people from mystic Babylon.

But in what prophetic day did her fall take place, and the prophecies concerning it, have their fulfillment? In my opinion, in the year A. D., 1844, near the termination of the Jewish year 1843. It was then and there that Christ deserted her as a body; and I will not withhold this, my solemn conviction, from the world. It was on this prophetic day, so noted in the history of man, that she completed her rejection of the time of the coming of her Lord, and the consequent preparation, which she could not disprove, and yet she refused to go out to meet him. Thus was her gross unbelief and attachment to the present world, fully brought to light. It was also at this period, that her plagues came upon her;—death, mourning, and famine. This is evident from her convictions of her most spiritual members, and ministers, her lamentable confessions, subsequently, of the famine of the Spirit; uncommon death and barrenness—the failure of revival efforts, except in some instances, in her suburbs, or less sectarian places and denominations, where the most life existed. Her worldly mindedness, pride, hatred to vital godliness, immortality and crime, have, since that time, rapidly increased.

A state of stupidity, darkness and death exists, so deep and fearful in its character, that it is easily discerned by the slightest observer. I do not say that there are none of God's dear people within the pale of the various sects. I believe there are some, or they could not be called out by the commanding voice of God. These, in my opinion, are a small minority, which did not partake sufficiently of her haughty, unbelieving spirit, and practice her abominations as to be involved in her general fall and ruin. But were her expectations and hopes at this period, such as correspond with the spirit of prophecy? She was saying in heart, "I sit a queen." We shall have a millennium previous to the day of judgment—all will be converted, and the church bear rule over all the earth. "And am no widow,"—Christ is with us, and the world, with its riches, greatness, and learning, courts my favor. "And shall see no sorrow." My prospects are brightening. Learning, talent, riches, honor, missionary funds, stations, and numbers, are increasing. She was actually singing this song with all self-confidence, when lo! from different sections, and almost universally, was heard the cry, the Spirit has left us; what shall be done? fast and pray.—Death, mourning, and famine, have come. These solemn facts are stubborn proof, of which we are witnesses. Many ministers, who were preaching definite time as '43 passed, had their minds particularly interested and impressed with the fallen, death like condition of the sects; saw the application and fulfilment of prophecy—felt internally moved on the subject, and began to cry, "Babylon is fallen."—"Come out of her my people." There seemed to be a new impulse given to this cry, at the rise of the seventh month movement; when this cry was coupled with the phrase, "Go ye out to meet him." At this, they rushed out of the nominal sects in all directions. This was, indeed, like "another voice from heaven." The three angels of Rev. 14, have, therefore, successfully commenced their respective messages of solemn truth, and are laboring together for the sanctification of the virgins, and the ripening of the world, for the great harvest. These great truths will be published to the end, proving a savor of life unto life to some, and of death unto death to others. D. B. W.

VALUABLE EXTRACT

On the First Resurrection, by T. R. Birks, Cambridge, England.

Let us consider for a few moments the tendency of this doctrine to quicken the zeal, and enlarge the hopes, of the servants of God.

It is true that an opposite assertion has been often made. Hope, it is said, is the parent of activity. But this doctrine destroys all hope of full success in missionary labors, and, therefore, must paralyze the zeal of the church, and damp all efforts for the conversion and salvation of the world. The more we expect Divine miracles, the less strenuous shall we be, it is thought, in the use of present means: we shall rather wait with folded arms, in lazy apathy, for signs and wonders from heaven. A closer inquiry, however, will prove to us that these assertions are groundless, and that no doctrine yields more powerful motives for devoted labor and Christian zeal.

And, first, let us view it solely in its personal aspect. The gospel has, in every age, been exposed to that licentious abuse—"Let us continue in sin, that grace may abound." The freeness of the offered salvation may not only be perverted by the unbelievers to their ruin, but by true christians themselves to their grievous loss.—They may pride themselves on the fancied clearness of their views of the gospel, till the severest warnings, and the most earnest exhortations of God's word fail to impress them, and are passed by as legal statements, with which they have nothing to do.

Now, one most powerful antidote to this deadly evil, this palsy of the soul, is the hope of the first resurrection. Each doctrine of God's word is shielded from abuse by some truth which is its contrast. And such is the judgment of believers, according to their works, at the coming of Christ. To remove this into the far distance, is to destroy the main-spring of christian diligence; to bring it near, is to present to the conscience the most stirring motive of devotedness and zeal. It is not merely that it tells us of a solemn separation near at hand, when one shall be taken and another left, and none but the true followers of Christ can stand in his presence. This doctrine goes farther still. It tells us plainly, that in the resurrection, one star differeth from another star in glory. It shows us the martyrs, and those who have suffered in the cause of Christ, standing foremost in the blessed company of his followers. The words of our Lord, it reminds us, apply to the holy and the righteous, no less than to the filthy and the unjust: "My reward is with me, to render to every man according as his work shall be." His righteousness as the Judge is not set aside by his grace as the Savior, but it is joined with it in the closet harmony; while he assigns to the thousands of his saints, according to their several faithfulness, the various degrees of recompense and of glory.

And say, my brethren, is not the near prospect of this judgment a powerful call to entire devotedness and unreserved obedience? Next to the dying love of Christ, what truth can be so fitted to quicken the faith and animate the zeal of God's servants? And although pure gratitude and zeal for the divine glory, of all motives are doubtless the highest, and ought to be supreme in the heart; yet, in times of backsliding and lukewarmness, this truth is the most suited of all to rouse the christian from this trance, and to awaken him to renewed energy and laborious zeal. Yes, on that day, every one shall receive as his work hath been. Each star shall shine with its own separate brilliance. Those who have suffered or labored much for Christ shall have the foremost seats in his kingdom.

Here, then, is a scope for the noblest ambition,—an ambition free from all stain of sin; for its prizes are all forfeited by selfishness and vain glory; humility and love can alone attain them.—Here, a cup of cold water given to a disciple, shall be recompensed with draughts of living joy. Here, riches consecrated to Christ's service, shall be replaced by durable riches, the treasures of eternity. Each offering laid at the feet of Christ, shall in no wise lose its reward. Each various grace of the christian believer in this life, shall be reflected in corresponding hues of light and glory in that kingdom of the Lord. And surely this truth, in near prospect, cannot fail to be a motive for redoubled zeal and devotedness. Surely it must teach the christian to covet earnestly the best gifts; and to be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, when he sees that the blessed recompense is so near at hand.

But this direct tendency of the doctrine, it will perhaps be rejoined, is more than balanced by its deadening effects on the collective hopes and missionary prospects of the church. This prejudice is rooted so deeply in the minds of many christians, that I must endeavor, though hastening to a close, to remove this stumbling-block out of their way.

Now, doubtless, if the word of God has revealed to us that the whole world will be converted by the preaching of the gospel and the missionary labors of the church, a denial of the promise must be injurious. Error cannot have the effects of truth. And, in this case, the church would be deprived of one important element in the real and lawful springs of missionary zeal. But if the word of God has never sanctioned this expectation, then to indulge a false and unscriptural hope, must be equally injurious. Our first inquiry must be simply, what is the revealed truth of God? The most animating hopes without this Divine warrant, will prove only a vain and perilous delusion.

But we may consent to abandon this high ground of Scripture testimony, and compare these two expectations, simply in themselves. The doctrine of the first resurrection, when seen in its true light, will be found the most animating, quickening, and glorious.

For wherein lies the real contrast? We believe alike, that God's work of redemption shall yet be complete, and the earth be filled with the knowledge of the Lord. We are alike persuaded that there is a large blessing promised, even now, to the preaching of the gospel, and to every effort of Christian love. We are further led to expect, that at the time of the end, such labors will be signally prospered; that the latter rain of the Spirit shall begin to descend, and a vast number of converts be prepared for that great harvest at the coming of our Lord. Here only is the point of divergence. While many think that the means now in use will of themselves, complete the world's redemption, we believe that the ministers of Christ are only the heralds to prepare his way, and that the full triumph of Divine grace over man's rebellion, will be in that great day when the Lord himself shall appear.

Now what will be the practical tendency of this difference? The immediate duty of christian labor and missionary exertion continues the same. The motive in the assurance of present success, is the same also. The blessed privilege of turning sinners from the error of their ways, and saving many souls from death, is open to our prayers and labors on either view. Here only the practical contrast begins. The prospect of the first resurrection forbids the church to rest on her own efforts, or to trust in the outward instruments she employs. It commands her not to sacrifice to her own net, nor to burn incense to her own drags, but to centre all her hopes around the person of the Savior. No present success can now elate her with pride; she knows that the full triumph must visibly belong to the Lord alone. No seeming want of success can now discourage her; she sees behind her a mighty reverse of supernatural agency in the counsels of heaven, which shall vanquish every enemy, and complete her triumph. She will not now be tempted, in a mechanical age, and amidst the bustle of her own labors, to turn the gospel itself into a system of machinery, and to forget the mystery and the grandeur of things unseen and eternal. All the present stimulants to action and diligence, she still retains. But there is infused into them a deeper feeling of majesty and holiness; there is thrown around them a sacred mantle of Divine glory. The meanest labors of her children in the service of Christ, are now seen to be linked, in close and immediate union, with all the unutterable solemnity of that great day of the Lord's appearing.

And if we look beyond the present labors of the church to the future season of her triumph, the practical excellence of this truth will still more plainly appear. No other view tends so powerfully to enlarge and ennoble the hopes of the christian in the near prospect of the Millennial glory.

Letter from Bro. Deverell.

Dear Brother:—I am very much pleased with the course you pursue in your editorial department, and I pray God that he would give you wisdom, still to pursue the same course. Your paper is read with pleasure by all those who can appreciate the truth. I am still endeavoring to blow the trump of Jubilee. A few of late have believed to the saving of their souls, if they continue faithful to the end. The evidences are very clear that we shall soon be delivered. I hope we shall be found doing our Master's will, O when I look back, say two or three years, what, ah, what have not some of the faithful watchmen had to pass through. But, blessed be God, me thinks I hear them all say, "none of these things move me."

I was glad to hear from my Bro. Gates, thro' the medium of the Voice of Truth, with whom I formed a short acquaintance in the memorable year of 1843. Never shall we forget the scenes that we then passed through. While penning this, it seems to stir all within me with feelings of pleasure. I find that some of the brethren hardly know what to do at this interval. I would say to all, keep before you next October. Time is short. If ever it was duty to preach, it is much more so now. If ever it was duty to give to the support of the gospel, it is now. I hope that the dear brethren and sisters that have abundance of this world's goods, will not let there be any lack or want of money to continue the publication of the glad tidings of the coming kingdom, till the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our God. I would say to all my fellow laborers in the vineyard of my Master, be encouraged and go forward, for we shall soon reap if we faint not. I do intend, if it should please the good Lord, in a short time, to pay a visit to some of those places where I first proclaimed the truth in the years '42 and '43. I hope to pay you a short visit at Rochester, if the Lord will. Amen.

W. DEVERELL.

Bro. A. Benedict, West Bloomfield N. Y., June 1, writes:—I send you four dollars for the extras which we received a few days since. They are just what we need, "meat in due season," to the household—and calculated to convince every candid mind, that the coming of Christ is at the door.

I bless the Lord that they have been published, and that now, especially, all who love the Savior may engage anew in purchasing and scattering these evidences on the time of the Lord's coming. Let us all engage in this delightful employment. O, Bro. Marsh, what a feast this truth is to my soul. The Lord is coming and that quickly. Amen—my heart responds, and so does yours, and a multitude of others who are waiting for the Lord.

Oh how I love the dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad over the land, how comforting and cheering their epistles, amid the trials and hardships of the way. O what a meeting when we all get home.

Bro. E. R. Pinney, Seneca Falls N. Y., May 27, writes:—My health is such I shall not be able to attend the Conferences in Canada, &c. My health is quite poor, and improves very slowly, if at all. I had desired very much to attend those Conferences, but the Lord has seen fit to disappoint me. The brethren from Toronto were very anxious to have me bring with me a lot of my exposition of the 24th chapter of Matthew, as they wished for some; but as I am unable to go, I shall have to send them by mail.

Faith on the Earth.

'Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?'—Luke 18: 8.

But few understand the true meaning of this question: for it is a question. They are at a loss whether to give it a negative or an affirmative answer. The context, and other plain Bible truths which relate to the same subject, must decide its true meaning.

Chapter 17th from verse 20th to the close of the chapter, clearly speaks of the second advent of Christ. The state of the world at the time is predicted to be 'as it was in the days of Noe and Lot.' Then the great mass of mankind 'were eating and drinking, and knew it not' until the flood and the fire came and 'destroyed them all,' with the solitary exceptions of the families of Noe and Lot. Will there be any faith in the coming of the Lord in a community like this? No,—is the ready answer of every understanding mind. But does it necessarily imply that no one will have faith? We think not: any more than it is implied that Noah and Lot did not believe, because it is said of the great mass, that the flood and the fire 'destroyed them all.'—The destruction was so general that the few who were saved barely made an exception, when speaking of the general destruction. So we think in reference to the unbelief of the great mass of the human family at the time of the Lord's coming: it will be so general, that the few genuine believers are barely made an exception, when speaking of the unbelief and corruption of those times. Hence, comparatively, when the Son of man cometh there will be no faith on the earth. No faith in his second personal coming, to destroy his enemies and reward his children; for this is clearly the subject matter of discourse in the context.

That this is a correct view of the subject is very evident from the import of the parable of the unjust judge, which immediately precedes the text. The leading point in the parable is, the vengeance on her adversaries, which the widow obtained at the hand of the unjust judge. And the application the Savior makes of it is—'And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?' Faith in what? In the coming of the Son of man, to destroy an unbelieving world. There will be, comparatively, no faith on the earth in the coming of the Son of man, and, if possible, less in his coming to 'avenge his elect,' in destroying their enemies, and rewarding the righteous with everlasting life. Instead of having faith in these momentous truths, a surfeited ministry will be crying and a deluded church and a deceived world will be believing, that the 'Lord delayeth his coming,' and that universal peace, instead of destruction, is soon to be the happy portion of the world. Campbell sheds some light on this subject. We will give the parable and its application, as rendered in his translation of the Gospels.

"He also showed them, by a parable, that they ought to persist in prayer without growing weary.

In a certain city, said he, there was a judge, who neither feared God, nor regarded man. And there was a widow in that city who came to him, saying, 'Do me justice on my adversary.' For some time he refused: but afterwards he argued thus with himself, 'Although I neither fear God, nor regard man; yet because this widow importuneth me, I will judge her cause, lest she come perpetually and plague me.'

Mark, said the Lord, what the unjust judge determined. And will not God avenge his elect, who cry to Him day and night?—Will he linger in their cause? I assure you, he will suddenly avenge them. Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, will he find this belief in the land?"

'This belief in the land,' evidently refers to the vengeance which will be poured out on the ungodly, at the coming of the Son of Man. This belief, or faith, will not be found in the land. Comparatively, the entire religious and irreligious world will be unbelieving in these momentous truths. The ministry of the church will be worldly minded, 'reprobate concerning the faith,' preaching 'Peace and safety,' a temporal millenium, and its kindred errors. As in the days of Jeremiah, the prophets will prophecy falsely, the priests will bear rule by their means, and the people will love to have it so. Having itching ears, they will heap to themselves teachers, will turn their ears away from the truth, and be turned unto fables. In this condition, without faith, unprepared for the dread crisis, will the great mass of the church and world be found, when the Son of Man shall come to execute vengeance upon them.

That this is the present character of the church and the world, no one can understandingly deny. Should the Son of Man come to day, would he find faith on the earth? or 'this belief in the land'?—Certainly he would not find it in the nominal church, or the world: and these two classes embrace the whole human family, with the exception of a few scattered believers in his coming. The influence of their faith, comparatively, is nothing, is like a drop to the ocean. Hence, with the strictest propriety can it now be said that 'this belief is not in the land.' And the painful fact furnishes conclusive evidence that the coming of the Son of Man, to avenge his elect, who cry day and night unto him, is at the door. Beware, lest we be found among the unbelieving in that dread hour. Never were we in more imminent danger of falling through unbelief than now.

Western Conferences.

We are much disappointed in being denied the privilege of attending the contemplated Conferences, soon to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, and Jackson, Michigan. Poor health for several weeks past, has rendered us nearly incompetent for the duties of our station; it has been with great effort that they have been discharged in an imperfect manner; consequently we have not been able to prepare in advance, the matter necessary for our paper the length of time. Our attendance of those Conferences would necessarily call us from home: hence, duty detains us at our post, especially at this time.

Bro's. Galusha, Pearson, Porter, Bywater, and Morley, are in the field, and some of them will attend these meetings, which we ardently pray and fondly hope may result in the glory of God.

Brethren attending either of these meetings, wishing to transact any business with this office, will do it with Bro. Pearson: it will be a favorable opportunity to transmit our dues by him.

Bro. T. F. Barry brings an encouraging report of the state of the cause at Oswego, where he has recently been laboring, and where the deleterious fruits of G. W. Peavy's wild and licentious fanaticism, but a short time since, threatened the ruin of some of the precious lambs of the flock. We rejoice that we may indulge the fond hope that they will be fully delivered from this snare of the devil and, saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Genius of the Gospel.

How widely different is the nature of the gospel of Christ from every other law, or system of ethics, ever presented for the observance of man. One point of difference particularly now strikes our mind: it is the manner of raising pecuniary aid to further the objects desired to be accomplished. Every theory, cause, work, or enterprise, must, in some way, receive pecuniary aid to carry it forward. To obtain this object, different plans by different bodies have been adopted. One leading principle, however, is seen in all the human organizations of this and past ages, viz; a distrust in God. They must first be assured of the means before going to work, hence the first object is, to create a permanent fund, adequate to all the demands that may be necessary to be met in carrying out the objects of the enterprise.

In this case, the company, firm, compact, government, civil or ecclesiastical, count the cost of the undertaking in the first place, raise their funds, and commence operations on a good capital. In this way they run no risk, in a well managed business, of incurring loss, or meeting with bankruptcy. They have got their machinery in operation, and if it is only worked with skillful hands, it is sure to give a good living, if not a handsome profit, to those who work it. This, in fact, if not in detail, is true of all the religious enterprises of the worldly sects of these last days. They have, or are trying to have, a monied capital, as the basis of all their operations. If a minister, an agent, or a missionary, is sent out, the price of his labor is first agreed upon, and ultimately his services are paid for in dollars and cents, out of the permanent fund, agreeably to the contract made. In this way each laborer knows beforehand what his work is, how much he will have for doing it, and when to expect the pay for his services.

Well, says one, this seems to be doing up things in order, with understanding; and for my part I admire consistency and order in all branches of business, especially in the house of God, for we read somewhere in the Bible, that his house is a house of order. We admit the correctness of your remarks when applied to every organization or principle of action but one,—that one is not of this world, and though it makes the treasures of this earth to a certain extent subservient to its calls, yet it does not, before entering upon its work, first secure from the world a pledge that a stipulated sum shall be paid for its services. That theory, system, or economy of salvation is, the Gospel of Christ.

Other systems say to their advocates, we will pay you so much for a certain amount of your labor. But the gospel says, 'Take no thought for the morrow,'—and provide neither scrip nor purse; for the laborer is worthy of his hire; that is, if he is sent of God, and does the work of his calling, those for whom he labors will supply all his wants. There will be no necessity of first obtaining a pledge, in dollars and cents, of a living, before entering upon his work. It is a work of pure, disinterested benevolence, and unwavering faith, confidence, or trust in Him, whose work it is to provide for all our wants.

On this principle the apostles and the primitive ministry acted. They did not, before carrying the gospel to the heathen, or any of the Jewish communities, first organize a missionary society to raise funds to warrant a living to those who might engage in the undertaking. No such human machinery as this was needed by the church so long as she trusted in God to guide his own cause. His ministers then went out by his direction, and on being interrogated, 'Lacked ye anything?' they could cheerfully answer, 'We lacked nothing.'

The same in truth may be said of us as a people. Our ministers have gone out in the apostolical faith, in this respect, and an apostle's blessing has been their bountiful portion, as very many can testify : they have lacked nothing.

The genius of the Gospel is the same in these degenerate times as when it fell from the lips of Christ and his apostles. The same means which were then used to raise funds for the support of those who preached, should be adopted now : God will bless no other. Let us not depart from the simplicity of the gospel in this respect. We had far better suffer a little deprivation and want, for the cause of Christ, than to show our distrust in his faithfulness in providing for all our needs, by attempting to make that provision for ourselves, on principles of worldly policy. A departure of a religious body from the pure principles of the gospel, like the backslidings of an individual, is an almost imperceptible work, yet sure in its course, when once begun, unless speedily checked.

Let us profit by the numerous examples of apostasy in this respect, in the surrounding sects. They have leaned to their own wisdom and strength, and the sad tale they all tell is, God has departed from them. He has no respect to persons or bodies as such.— And though his face has once graciously shone upon us, he will, nevertheless, frown upon us in anger, if we depart from him. Oh, the perils which surround the Christian in these last days ! The Lord give us wisdom to understand them, and save us from their fatal influences.

REVERENCE.

This word, says a certain writer, denotes,— “to honor, respect, or esteem. To regard any person according to what his station in life requires. God is to be revered, to be respected and honored, as our Creator and Preserver. Heb. 12: 28. His name is Holy, and Reverend ; (Psa. 111: 9) and He is the only being called Reverend in the Scriptures. To call men Reverend, is to pay them an idolatrous compliment. The Pope and the Clergy have taken the whole name of God to themselves,— Holy Pope and Reverend Clergy. They as God sit in the temple of God showing that they are God. 2 Thess. 2: 7. Wives are required to reverence their husbands ; to consider them as their head, and the image and glory of God, and to be in subjection to them according to the law of Christ, even as Sarah obeyed her husband, calling him Lord. Eph. 5: 33. 1 Pet. 3: 1, 6. Obedient children reverence their parents, by respecting and honoring them, even when they are chastised for their profit. Heb. 12: 9.— We hope the day is near when men will see the folly of pronouncing a poor mortal the Reverend ; which is taking the name of God in vain, and the Lord will not hold such guiltless.”

The Scribes and Pharisees loved greetings in the markets, or most public places in the city, and to be called Rabbi, or Master, titles of honor tantamount to Reverend in these last days. The thing is the same ; the only difference lies in the name. Rabbi, in the days of Christ, was assumed by a class of proud and corrupt ministers, who had taken from the people the key of knowledge, would not enter the kingdom themselves, nor suffer others to go in.— Yet they loved to be called Rabbi, Master, teacher of the law of God. The Reverends of these days are a class of teachers who are ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, have assumed the prerogative of taking their seat in the temple of God, making high pretensions to holiness, wisdom, and power over the church, and love to bear a title suited to the high character of their presumptuous stations ; hence, they have assumed one which belongs alone to the Infinite Jehovah. Presumptuous mortals ! soon their folly will be made manifest to all.

Dear brethren, let us shun these things, and carefully adhere to the instructions of the Savior on this subject. He says, ‘Call no man Master,’ &c., ‘for Ono is your Master, even Christ.’ Nearly if not every evangelical sect, in the days of their childhood, humility, purity, and dependance on God, have stood aloof from these anti-christian things ; but, alas, their ministers have loved to be called of men, Rabbi, or Reverend. Pride has crept into their ranks, and the sad consequence has been, they have fallen. Shall we fall after the same example of pride ?— God forbid ! But we shall, if we follow their ways.

Conferences in New York and Boston.

The Advent Herald gives a favorable report of the recent Conferences of our brethren held in New York and Boston. Union of spirit, steadfastness in the faith, and a commendable zeal for the advancement of the Redeemer’s cause, were prominent characteristics of those meetings. We shall commence the publication of the addresses of the Conference next week. That part which we have seen, is valuable truth, which will be meat in due season at this trying moment.

Not far from three hundred dollars had been contributed, at the close of the Boston Conference, by certain benevolent individuals to aid in the English Mission. This is commendable, and speaks well for the enterprize, and the good cause for which it has been undertaken. And this way, (by voluntary contributions when wanted,) of raising funds, to meet the demands of God’s cause, we believe is the right way, according to apostolical usages. We need no organization for this express object. All that is necessary in the case is, when money is wanted, to submit the case to God and his people, and the amount needed will readily be contributed.

Bro’s. Himes, Hutchinson, and Brown, go to England ; the Lord protect, and make them a rich blessing to the people where they may labor.

☞ We want those who have a talent to write, to resume their pens again, on subjects suited to these last days of perils to men’s souls. We love to fill our sheet with a rich variety of good original matter, fresh from the warm hearts of those who believe that the day of redemption is nigh. We need the constant co-operation of such writers to make the Voice of Truth what it should be to meet the wants of the household of faith.

News of the Day.

The war with Mexico, is still prosecuted with vigor and success by the United States, and, according to present appearances, it will speedily have a termination in the unconditional subjection of Mexico to the terms of this government. The news from other parts of the world is unimportant to the Bible student, with the exception that it goes greatly to strengthen his faith that the harvest of this world is nearly ripe. Crime, of every description is rapidly on the increase ; pestilence and famine are destroying thousands in some parts of the old world. In short, God is evidently holding his last controversy with the world—is giving his last admonitions for the sin into which it has deeply fallen ; and if these calls of mercy are not heeded, he will soon come out in sore and everlasting judgments against incorrigible mortals ! O, be wise—hear his voice and repent now, to-morrow may be too late.

☞ The extra on time, Conference Address, Hale’s Pamphlet, Hymn Books, Concordances, Testaments, and a variety of works on the Coming of Christ and his Kingdom, may be had at this office.

☞ We thank the friend who occasionally sends us the Oberlin Evangelist : the conductors of that paper choose not to exchange with us.

Family Government.

Our good brother’s article on this highly important subject is so incorrectly written, that we deem it advisable to give with corrections, only an extract now. We should be glad to publish a well written article, or more, on this subject. Our brother, in speaking of instructing children, says :

“The mind, will, and manners must be corrected by the parents. God says to parents, ‘train up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord,’ Eph. 6: 4. ‘And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.’ How strict is the command : thou shalt do it regularly, night and morning. ‘Chasten thy son while there is yet hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying,’ Prov. 19: 8. ‘Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child, but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him,’ Prov. 22: 15. ‘The rod and reproof give wisdom, but a child left to himself, bringeth his mother to shame,’ Prov. 29: 15, also the 17th verse, ‘correct thy son and he shall give thee rest, yea, he shall give delight unto thy soul.’ Eli, the priest, neglected to train his children ; they made themselves vile, and he restrained them not, wherefore, God cut them off, 1st Sam. 4: 11. There is much good instruction to be received from Samuel’s history of Eli, and the manner God dealt with those wicked, disobedient children. Eli merely told them of what he had heard they had done, but God says by the mouth of Samuel, that he judged them because of the iniquity they were guilty of—that is, he judged Eli’s house by sending great affliction upon him. The Lord says, ‘For I have told him (1st Sam. 3: 13) that I will judge his house forever, for the iniquity which he knoweth, because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not.’ So we see plainly from this scripture, that God holds parents responsible for the conduct of their children, while they are under their influence and control, and have to maintain them. God said of Abraham, (Gen. 18: 19,) ‘For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him.’ Joshua said, ‘as for me, and my house, we will serve the Lord.’ The language of David was, ‘as for me, I will walk in mine house with a perfect heart.’

Let parents and children duly examine this subject, and act in the fear of the Lord in reference to his requirements.

A Word of Exhortation.

Dear brethren and sisters—As time rolls on, and we approximate the end, I feel more deeply the importance of being faithful, and see more clearly my duty of admonishing my fellow travelers to eternity, to seek entire consecration to God, make a whole sacrifice, and stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. And as saith the apostle, ‘Be not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is. Be not conformed to the world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect will of God.’ As a sister remarks in her communication, I can see no ‘middle foundation’ authorize I by the word of God. That requires a full surrender, a giving up of all we have ; and shall we who are not our own, but are bought with a price, dare or desire to withhold any thing, or take back any part of the sacrifice we have made to the Lord ? If we consider the infinite price paid for our ransom, surely we cannot. Let us realize that nothing less than the suffering and blood of the immaculate Son of God, has purchased redemption for us. ‘Neither is there sal- vation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." But if we walk not in the light, as He is in the light, even now that Christ the passover is sacrificed for us, we shall fail of salvation.

I see no place for halting; for according to the word of inspiration, the Christian's course must be progressive as long as the day of probation continues. We must continually grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and by beholding him with the eye of faith, must be changed into the same image, from glory to glory, until he shall come, and fashion our vile bodies like unto His glorious body, and translate us into His glorious kingdom. O, let us take heed, lest at any time our hearts be overcharged with the cares of this life, and so that day come upon us unawares. Inconceivably more intense must be the mental suffering of those who have once rejoiced in the sublime prospect of the speedy coming of the Lord, if they be found wanting in that day, than of the sufferer, who has never felt the sweet influences of the love of God shed abroad in the heart.— Let us be diligent in the work of preparation.— Let us not only search the Scriptures to see what truths they contain, but let us read them in such a manner that their truths shall be brought in contact with the heart, or else how shall the truth sanctify? Should not the reading of the word of God be as much an act of devotion as prayer?— Would we not listen with awe should the Lord speak to us in an audible voice from heaven?— And does he not speak to us through the inspired word? and yet some read and hear read the sacred oracles with indifference and inattention.— O, let us, with all care dismissed, all vagrant thoughts dispelled, and our souls fixed in a frame of communion with God, read with deep seriousness and solemnity, that precious word which is able to make us wise unto salvation. Then let us "meditate upon these things." Although our hands are necessarily employed in the vocations of life, yet let us keep our minds fixed in deep thought upon eternal things. And may our "meditation be sweet," our "hearts be made better," we grow up into Him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ, and all be one, ready to be translated when He shall come in power and great glory, is the fervent prayer of

Time of the Second Advent.

BY WM. FYN, M. A., VICAR OF WILLIAN, HERTS, ENG.

I Thess. 5: 1-4: "But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: ye are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober."

II. That God has revealed to his Church the times of those operations, in which he has been chiefly interested, before their arrival Here permit me to remind you of some few of the more prominent instances, recorded in the Scriptures, in order to prove our doctrine.

I first turn to the history of the old world in the days of Noah. What was the condition of the church at that time? It was brought very low: confined to one family; "all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth," and "Noah alone walked with God." (Gen. 6: 9, 12.) The universal wickedness called for universal judgment. "It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart," wherefore he came to this conclusion, that the end of all flesh was come, and that he would destroy them with the earth. But did the judgment come suddenly, without one note of warning to the Church, or to the world? He revealed his purpose to Noah and granted a respite of one hundred and twenty years. (Gen. 6: 3.) Now Noah was a "preacher of righteousness;" by him, therefore, the world was warned, and during that season called to repentance. Here we find a confirmation of our doctrine. Here a specific period was revealed to the Church of the coming judgment, that Noah might prepare an ark for the saving of himself and house.

I turn next to the Egyptian bondage and deliverance. When the Lord covenanted with Abraham, we find that he revealed to him many particulars respecting his posterity. Thus, in Gen. 15: 13, 14, "he said unto Abraham, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge: and afterward shall they come out with great substance."

Here, again, were circumstances in which the church was deeply interested. Here was a time of suffering, and of deliverance, and how did God deal with her? He revealed both. And the revelation is made with distinctness as to time, that when Moses is recording under the influence of Divine inspiration, the accomplishment of the promised deliverance, he tells us that on "the self-same day," it was fulfilled. "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty yrs. And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day, it came to pass that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt. It is a night to be much observed unto the Lord bringing them out from the land of Egypt; this is that night of the Lord to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations." (Exodus 20: 40-42.)

Let us look forward now, in the church's history, to the seventy years' captivity and return.— The long-suffering Jehovah had been wearied out, and, by the mouth of Jeremiah, he foretold that judgment was at the door. But observe how, in the midst of judgment he remembered mercy, and how accurately he defined the period of the endurance of one, and the return of the other. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Because ye have not heard my words, behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations. Moreover I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle. And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations." (Jer. 25: 8-12.) Here was the revelation of a specific time. We find, accordingly, that Daniel was occupied with this very revelation of Jeremiah, in order to ascertain where he stood, as to time, in respect to the promised deliverance; (Dan. 9: 2) and thus we also find another confirmation of the truth which is contained in our second head.

We will next attend to the first advent of Christ. This was a subject of lively interest to each branch of the ransomed church of God, to each in heaven as well as to things in earth; for the decease, which he was to accomplish in Jerusalem, was the act upon which the standing of the spirits of just men, made perfect in heavenly places, was depending, as well as the hope of the militant branch here on earth. This was the event which many prophets and righteous men desired to see, but had not seen. What now, in a way of time, had God revealed concerning this? Daniel will inform us. "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy. Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war, desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate." (Dan. 9: 24-27.) Here, once more, we discover peculiar accuracy respecting this then coming event. Here we perceive, that God informed the church so clearly when she was to expect Messiah's appearing, that when John the Baptist began his ministry, "the people were in expectation, and all men mused in their hearts of John, whether he was the Christ, or not." (Luke 3: 15.) * * *

* * * * And is the time of the second advent an exception to this rule? This, need I say it, is the great event towards which the eye of faith has been turned from the very first. To this, as to a centre, every thought, and word, and work of every intelligent creature, has been proceeding. Toward this the whole current of time has been flowing, and all the concerns of men shall be found to have brought in their tributary streams, when "in the dispensation of the fullness of the times God will gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth: even in him." (Eph. 1: 10.)— And has God hung clouds and darkness around it?—Has he shrouded it with a mystery which no wisdom can pierce? Has he placed cherubim, and a flaming sword, which turns every way, to prevent access to this tree of knowledge? God has done none of these things; it is man's unbelief that has thrown obscurity around it: it is man's unbelief that has hung the veil before it: it is man's unbelief that hinders our access to it. What, therefore, is to be done? Stretch forth the hand of faith, and rend that veil in twain, from the top even to the bottom, and be not faithless but believing.

Letter from Sister Sears.

Bro. Marsh.—I think you requested us, as we passed through Rochester last winter, on our way to Illinois, to write you, and also our dear brethren and sisters with whom we were associated at the east, expressed a desire to hear from us through the medium of your paper. We arrived here the latter part of January, having completed our long journey of 909 miles, from Newfield, Tompkins Co., N. Y. Our way was more prosperous and pleasant, than we anticipated it could be in the winter season, and we desire to express unfeigned gratitude to those kind friends who "used hospitality toward us," and were "not forgetful to entertain strangers," and may they richly experience the disciple's reward. But especially would we record the goodness and mercy of our covenant God, who is faithful to all who put their trust in him. "They shall not fear for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flyeth by day." "No evil shall befall them, nor any plague come nigh their dwelling."

It seemed our duty, in the providence of God, to remove to this far distant land, and occupy, while time continues, a home which we had provided for our families some years ago. But time is short. Our residence here will be but transient, and it is our earnest prayer that we may be in some way, the means of diffusing light on the path way of some who profess the religion of Jesus, with regard to his speedy, personal, and glorious coming; to put an end to the wickedness of the wicked, and establish the just in their promised inheritance in the new earth. Mr. Sears has some calls to preach this "gospel of the kingdom," in different settlements around us, where we find a few of the scattered flock; one stated appointment at Fort Hill, where we find our dear Sister Neal strong in the faith, and a few others who were somewhat shaken in the passing of the time, in which they expected their coming King.

The chronological dates, in connection with the signs of the times, certainly indicate the event "nigh, even at the door." I do not see how a slumbering world could have been effectually warned, unless the time as well as the event, had been proclaimed; and I bless the Lord that his faithful and wise servants have persevered in "teaching what, and what manner of time," till the most conclusive evidence seems to encourage us to look 'this year,' for the glorious consummation, the promised restitution of all things, when there will be "no more curse,"—the saints of God will "obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing will flee away." Who, in view of all the fulness of joy, and rivers of pleasure forevermore, in the presence of our glorious Redeemer, will not fervently pray with the beloved disciple, "Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly." We are continually rejoicing in this "blessed hope," and may it lead us to purify ourselves, even as he is pure, whom we so soon expect to see; and be 'dead' to the world, having our "life hid with Christ in God, that when he who is our life, shall appear, we may appear with him in glory."

Deprived as we now are of speaking often to those of like precious faith, and exhorting them so much the more as we see the day approaching, to esteem the communications of brethren and sisters in the "Voice of Truth," and "Advent Herald," more than words can express, and hope to receive them regularly, as we have done, till time shall end. And to those dear saints with whom we were associated at the east, having labored and suffered with them in the cause of truth, we would say, you still share our sympathies and prayers; though absent in body, I trust at times present in spirit, joying, and rejoicing to see your steadfastness in the faith.

Though you may be called to pass through the deep waters of affliction, remember they are light and but for a moment, working out for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, when our blessed Lord shall come; our separation from each other, and all the ransomed host, will be short, and till our deliverance comes, we will cherish a remembrance of the precious seasons we enjoyed together, with Jesus in our midst—and also when the faithful watchmen brought to us in Ithaca and Newfield, these glad tidings of the kingdom at hand. May they receive for their "labor of love," a rich reward in this present time, and in the "world to come," life everlasting. Our hearts are united in love to you, and to all those who love the appearing of the Lord, the "scattered remnant," many of whom have been called to suffer the loss of all things, despised and rejected of men, but heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that can never fade away. In view of such a crown of glory, just ahead, may we not shrink from any service or any sacrifice which the cause of God and of truth may require of us, but patiently bear the cross from day to day, and watch and pray always, that we may be accounted worthy to escape those things which are coming to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.

Your sister in the hope and fellowship of the gospel,

Letter from Bro. Barry.

Bro. Marsh:—In my late visits among the brethren, I have been at Canandaigua. Here, the most of the flock still believe in the "Bridegroom views," but hold to the second personal advent of Christ, and disfellowship the views and practices of the "Springwater brethren." Some may ask who are they? I answer, a class who disown "the existence of the Lord in body,"—who are led by visions, and private revelations, and are living in one house, to the number of 20 or 30, and call it "the House of Judgment." With such, the brethren of Canandaigua, do not believe.—Still, they entertain what seems to me an error, namely: that "the work of God's people for the Gentiles, is done." For Simeon hath declared how God at the first, (i. e., before Jesus shall return from heaven to earth,) did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name, and to this (sentiment,) agree the words of the prophets, as it is written. (Amos, 9: 11, 12.) After this, (work among the Gentiles,) I WILL RETURN, and build again the tabernacle (Isa. 16: 5,) of David, which is fallen down, (Ezek. 21: 25-27,) and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up. Acts 15: 13-16. Now, as Christ has not returned to restore the kingdom to Israel, (which will be when God shall send Jesus Christ. Acts 1: 6-8; 3: 20, 21.) here is one argument to prove the work is not yet done, but that we should persuade the wicked to repent—believe, and be baptized; that when he does come they may shout hosannah, with the heirs of the kingdom.

Some tell me that this present confusion in the advent ranks, "is of God"—"that it is to scatter their power;" but I read that God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, in all the churches of the saints. (1 Cor. 14: 33.) Then let not the work of an enemy any more be charged to our Father in heaven, the author of good.

At Le Roy, the brethren and sisters are steadfast in the cause—have recently hired a large hall, and request the Lecturers to visit them, and proclaim the glad news of the coming reign of Christ.

At Victor, where I spent the first Sabbath in May, the believers in the "blessed hope," are growing stronger both in love and unity, while some around them, like Diotrephes, speak of them with malicious words. John 3: 10.

At South Pultney, I spent the second Sabbath. Here Bro. Drew has made sacrifices in providing a house of worship, and obtaining various gifts or lecturers, to arouse, bless, and save his neighbors. We had a precious meeting with the believers there.

At Seneca Falls, I spent three days, found Bro. Pinney no better in health, but rather worse—so that he is unable to go out and preach, yet he is strong in the faith, and with the church of God there, are expecting deliverance this year. I am surprised to find so many harshly and positively deciding, "who are wise and who are foolish," in the face of such texts as "the Lord knoweth them that are his." Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more. Rom. 14: 12.—"And whosoever shall say (to his brother) thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire." Matt. 5: 22. I fear many, without a cause, have called God's humble, obedient ones, foolish virgins, and that such persons will meet with God's displeasure, unless they repent of their hard speeches.

While the Bible teaches us to lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting, a person this week told me he had felt to pray for the sinners destruction, and could do so cheerfully; with a sword, mow his enemies down as grass. Jesus said, (Matt. 5: 44,) love your enemies, bless them, do good to them, and also pray for them, that ye may be the children of your Father in heaven. Yes, this Spirit of Jesus must be and abide in us, and we must exhibit its fruits, if our mortal bodies are ever quickened into immortality, at which moment we shall be made equal to angels—and share with Jesus in the kingdom.—As the heart panteth after the water brook so do I do pant after the living God, and I hope soon to appear before him, (Psa. 42: 1-5,) and be made like him, because I shall see him as he is. In heaven, our angels always behold the face of our Father, (Matt. 18: 10,) and when born from the dead, made equal to angels, shall we not enjoy the same favor? Matt. 5: 8; Rev. 22: 4.—Without the possession of holiness, no man can see the Lord, (Heb. 12: 5-15,) and we are commanded to be holy, because he is holy. How careful we should now be, that we are filled with "the spirit of holiness," and thus ensure a lot among the blessed and holy. Rev. 20: 6.

THOS. F. BARRY.

Oswego, May, 1846.

Bro. J. Wilson, Granville O., May 8, writes:—We should be happy to have a call from some of our lecturing brethren as they are passing to and from Cincinnati, or to other places. We have a little church here of about ten, and we meet regularly every Lord's day. There are some in adjoining towns that meet with us occasionally. We are all strong in the belief that the time is not far off, when the Savior will come and set up his everlasting kingdom.

It is not by the mere number of our words and actions, that we can the most effectually serve the cause of God, and glorify his name. It is the temper in which they are done, rather than the mere multiplication of them, which gives them power. It was the remark of a good man, that "we mar the work of God, by doing it in our own spirit."
T. C. UPHAM.

Bro. P. Alling, Norwalk O., May 8, writes:—On Saturday and Sunday last, the brethren of this place and adjoining towns, held a conference meeting some one and a half miles from our village, when, on Lord's day were assembled, as I am informed, some 70 or more who were strong in the faith of speedy redemption. Bro. E. Miller was present at the meeting, and labored much to the edification of the brethren. The meeting was one of deep interest, and I think a new impulse was given to the good cause. I was present on Saturday, and think there was altogether a better spirit manifested, and more engagedness, than I have witnessed before at any time, since the autumn of '44. And I am informed there was still a better state on Lord's day. I feel to praise the Lord for the manifestations of his goodness: to him be all the glory. I feel to rejoice to see that Bro. Pickands has come out, and renounced spiritualism. I trust his letter published in your paper, may prove a blessing to some who are yet entangled with that strange delusion. May the Lord bless you in your labors of love, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Letter from D. I. Robinson.

Bro. Marsh:—I had a good time in my tour to the west. At Detroit, Milwaukee, and Jackson, found a good company of brethren and sisters at each place, and lectured 21 times, baptized two, and saw two or three cut down by the truth, to seek God for salvation. We hope to meet them in the kingdom of God. There is prospect of good at Milwaukee and Jackson, (by the Conference,) and at Plymouth, where Bro. Needham wrote for the Conference to be held; the brethren must visit that place on their return from Jackson, and give a course of lectures. They may feel disappointed by not having it there, but I think it best to let it stand at Jackson.

Let the brethren in Michigan all come who can, and if any cannot, let them make known their condition and wants, by letter, to the conference. Will our brethren also in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, come to the Cleveland or Cincinnati conferences? But if they cannot come, will they write us how it is with them, that we may know their wants and where to visit them, as the Lord may open the way before us.

We hope the brethren from the east, who are at liberty, and feel called of God to feed his sheep, will "take heed to their ministry," "to fulfill it," and come out this way, instead of laying by or turning to business—trust God and be faithful—be willing to labor and suffer for God and the flock, and he will feed and clothe you; and therefore, let us be content. If any wise and faithful brother will take my place, I will travel and visit the scattered flock gladly. Several single persons, or those who could leave their families, deny self, and labor for the good cause, would find employ and a support.

Yours in haste and love,

D. I. ROBINSON.

Cleveland O., May 28, 1846.

P. S. Bro. Marsh, you know we want the conference in Michigan and Cincinnati, to be Thursday, 18th, instead of Tuesday, 16th. Do as you think best about altering now. D. I. R.

☞ We had not observed the mistake. Let the appointment stand according to the correction, the 18th inst.

Letter from Bro. Gates.

Bro. Marsh:—Very unexpectedly to me, God has opened my way once more, and I have just commenced my labors as a missionary or an evangelist, in the great second advent field. The prospects are quite encouraging. New interest is being infused into the minds of the disconsolate and disappointed lovers of Jesus.

At Newburyport, where I recently spent a Sabbath, the brethren have got a good, large house to hold their meetings in, and are making (I trust,) successful efforts to keep the light blazing in that village, until the Master appears.—Br'n. L. Osler and E. Burnham, have recently made me a visit, to their comfort and joy.

Portsmouth,—here I spent the last Lord's day, much to the satisfaction of my soul, and the comfort of the brethren, and I am happy to say that the prospects there are brightening. They have now got a commodious place to worship in, and there are quite a number who are waking up, and rallying to the support of the cause. I was kindly entertained by my very dear Bro. Tullock, who is favorably known to the readers of the Midnight Cry. He, like many of us, has been much tried of late, but is still contending for the Faith. In Portsmouth I found a few brethren who held to the shut door views. Now I am at a great loss to know how good brethren can hold on to them. Now, time has proved them wrong. The Parable in Matt. 25 has also done it; for "five were wise as well as five foolish." And they are not a thousandth part of the Adventists.

Now I would not feel so grieved at these brethren, if it were not for the paralyzing effects that their views have.

1. Our Lord commands us to pray the Lord of the vineyard, to raise up more faithful laborers, for the fields are all ripe and ready to be harvested, but these brethren refuse to labor themselves, neither will they pray for others to be sent forth.

2. It denies the visible and personal coming of my Savior; thus, some have gone into spiritualizing, and some to Shakerism.

3. Truth is always in this age, found in the medium of extremes: that Jesus came, over one year ago, and that all the good went into the marriage and the door was shut, &c. &c., is a tremendous tax on man's credulity, it is the ultimatum of extreme. And yet to come out as many have done, and say that there has been no superintending providence, manifested during these past few years, that the Devil and mesmerism have been the ground of it all, and consequently that Jesus is not nigh, even at the very door. I regard the extreme the other way.

And finally brethren, I go into the field with new zeal and energy, thoroughly convinced that this is the truth of the last time. The meat in due season. The cause to which God has set his broad seal of approval.

Yours hoping and waiting.

I. R. GATES.

P. S. I Sincerely hope, and pray, that we all shall keep from the spirit, of War. To all human appearance, the "Gentile" nations are preparing for War, and God is waking up the mighty men. Joel, 3: 17. I am now free, free. The old church is not so good as I thought it was.—When I had joined, almost the first discourse on the speedy coming of my Lord, produced feelings of revolt. I choose to suffer for Christ's sake, and so I took a letter, and I am now going it again in the blessed old way.

Bro. N. Jones, Northfield Vt., May 4, writes: In truth, I never felt stronger in the fulfilment of the promise made to Abraham, and all his true seed by faith, than I do at present, and I find it good both to hope and quietly to wait for the salvation of the Lord. And let all the saints know that "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." And so, "I am a companion of the saints, and of all them that fear God and keep his precepts."

Bro. Hastings, Newton, Upper Falls, Mass., May 10, writes:—I do not rejoice over a fallen church because they are fallen, but I rejoice when I see that any of their influence over the minds of the people is destroyed, which has been so mighty a barrier to their receiving the light of the blessed word. I am perfectly satisfied that the great day of God will tell a sadder tale of the sects than any of the crusades against them have yet told. I cannot express the joy I have felt in reading the Voice of Truth of late, and if the cost was $1 per week, I should not do without it if I had the means. There are a few of us here who meet as often as convenient, to wait upon the Lord, firm in the faith that we shall soon renew our strength, and "mount upon wings as eagles, run and not be weary, walk, and not faint."

Bro. Everett, North Leverett Mass., April 6, writes:—I am doing good. We must do our own duty, and clear our skirts, so that we can say, "I am pure from the blood of all men." We shall, by all means, save some, and like Noah, condemn the world, and be "heirs of the righteousness which is by faith." The plea when any good is proposed, which some make, "it will do no good," is dangerous, and fear it will be an excuse for sloth and idleness. The time is short. Let us do it with our might.

Bro. E. A. Haskall, Westboro Mass., May 15, writes:—The brethren in this place, though few in number, are united and happy, waiting and hoping for deliverance. Spiritualism, with its blighting influence, has no place with us. We hold meetings regularly every Sabbath, and once in four weeks. The few brethren in Northboro' Southboro', and this place, unite, and endeavor to show forth our Lord's death, which we hope to do until he comes; for we expect that the "same literal Jesus that ascended up into heaven, will so come in like manner as he went up into heaven. O, the coming of Jesus! that same Jesus! What a glorious subject! how delightful to contemplate, and how worthy of reflection; take this away, and where's our hope? it is no longer the lively hope that Peter talks about, nor the blessed hope of Paul. But, praise God, it can't be spiritualized away; Jesus will come, and "when he who is the believers life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory;" then don't let us "slumber in sight of the prize," but "take heed lest we be overcharged with the cares of this life, and that day overtake us unawares."

If we wish to rise high in God, we must be willing to sink low in ourselves. It may seem like a contradiction in terms, but it is nevertheless true, that there is no elevation in true religion, higher than that of profound humility. He that would be the greatest, must become the least. He who is equal with God, condescended to be; come man. And it was the beloved Son of the Most High, that washed the feet of the disciples.

Camp Meeting in Canada.

Providence permitting, there will be a camp-meeting in Sidney, near the Trent, on the premises of Bro. White, or vicinity, commencing on Wednesday, July 1st, and continuing over the Sabbath. The brethren and friends of the Advent cause in Canada are invited to attend, as far as possible, and come with preparations to encamp on the ground. The brethren from a distance can be provided with tents, by previously informing Bro. James Marsh, Trent P. O., and paying the expense of their construction. Several ministering brethren from the U. States and the Province are expected to be present. It is hoped that Bro. Miller or Bro. Galusha may be present. Of this, however, notice will be given, as soon as information is obtained.

D. Campbell, } in behalf of
G. Henly. } the Church.

Toronto, C. W., June 1, 1846.

Appointments.

By the advice of Bro D. I. Robinson, and G. Needham, we give notice that a conference will be held at Northville, west part of Wayne Co., Mich., to commence June 25th. Brethren who attend at Jackson the week previous, will, we trust, try to be at the meeting at Northville.

☞ Bro. G. Needham has removed from Troy, Mich., to Perrysburg, O. Friends will address him at the latter place, ☞ Advent Herald is requested to give the notice.

Letters and Receipts for week, ending May 27, '46.

without being wise above what is written ?

The only event to which these portions can be applied with any propriety, (excepting the texts before referred to, and the prophecy of the transfiguration. Matt. 16: 28, which was an exhibition of "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" in his majesty and glory, 2 Pet. 1: 16-18.) is the coming of the same Jesus who was taken up into heaven in like manner as he was seen go into heaven. While the disciples beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight, Acts 1: 9; behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him. Rev. 1: 7.

FATAL ERRORS ON THE GENERAL PERIOD OF THE ADVENT.

All who express any view of the advent prophecies, point to some period in the past or future for their fulfilment. Those who apply them to the destruction of Jerusalem, point to the past; those who apply them to the manifestations of the Spirit, point to the past, to the day of Pentecost, or the future, to the introduction of the millennium; and those who apply them to the Spirit, and also, the true personal advent, point us to the introduction and close of the millennium, as the periods of their fulfilment. It must be seen at once, that if the theories are not true which place the great events brought to view in these prophecies in the past, or so far distant in the future, they must be productive of the most fatal results. According to one of them we have a wide and boundless sea before us, and the course of the world is never to be interrupted by any of these events; according to the other, generation after generation may yet pass away, without any apprehension of danger from this source: all is past, or too far distant in the future, to cause any alarm! We hardly need to add, that the larger part of professed christians are willing to run the fearful hazard of receiving these theories as the truth, ~~which is not~~ only without foundation, but makes the prophecy on which it claims to be based, a contradiction, by assuming it to predict, that the coming of Christ was not to take place till "after" the event which his coming denoted, it deserves no farther consideration. A more fatal absurdity could not be conjured into existence by any effort of stupid or ingenious depravity. The other theories, though not less fatal, we may consider more at length, as the error involved in them has become more prevalent by the sanction of great and worthy names, and is well nigh consecrated by many of the truly devout, who have been seduced to "fall down and worship" according to "another Gospel," the device of satan transformed into an angel of light.

It is assumed by each division of the "spiritual" class—those who believe "the advent of the Spirit," only to be brought to view in the advent prophecies, and those who believe also in the advent of the Lord Jesus—that certain portions which speak of the coming of the Lord, are to be understood to point out a special and glorious outpouring of the Spirit, which will secure the triumph of the gospel generally; and so the nations of the earth are to be subdued to Christ, in which state they are to be continued for a thousand yrs. at least, before the Lord shall come to judge the world, or to judge men without coming, and fix their destinies for eternity. So Paul is to be understood, it is contended, when he unfolds the fate of the Papacy—"the Man of Sin"—whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." (2 Thess. 2: 8.)

Without dwelling upon the reckless absurdity of this unwarranted assumption, the principle of which would lead to the most criminal and fatal perversion of the word of God, it must be seen, by a careful reference to those portions of prophesy which all admit present to us the history of the church and the world down to the end, that such a state of triumph of the gospel, for any length of time, is absolutely precluded. Daniel, Christ, Paul, and John the Revelator, all distinctly announce the state of things in this respect, till the end comes. (Great persecuting and blasphemous organizations of worldly power, called beasts, and horns of beasts, tread down, make war, and prevail against, the saints until the Ancient of days comes, and judgment is given to the saints of the Most High, and the time comes that they possess the kingdom. Dan. 7th and 8th. The wheat and the tares—representing the righteous and the wicked—grow together till the harvest, and the harvest is the end of the world, or age. Matt. 13th.)

That Man of Sin, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped: that wicked, or lawless one, whose coming is after the working of satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, was to be revealed, and sit in the temple of God, showing himself to be God, until the Lord should consume him with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy him by the brightness of his coming. 2d Thess. 2d.

We should remark on this text, that it was the avowed design of Paul to "comfort" and "stablish" the Thessalonians, who had become "shaken" and "troubled," by supposing that the day of Christ was, enesteken, immediately at hand. As it could not have been "the advent of the Spirit" about which they were troubled; and as Paul does not tell them that such an advent was to take place, before that about which they were troubled, should occur, they certainly are wise above what is written who assume that he speaks of any other event than "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together with him." enesteken simply argues to show that the day of the Lord, to be ushered in by his coming, and about which they were troubled, should not come immediately—not till certain well-known prophetic events had taken place. And one cannot help asking, if Paul had believed in this triumph of the gospel, and in this modern millennium, to succeed the apostacy, and all to transpire before the coming of the Lord, could he have failed to speak of it, in such a case? If he had been like the popular apostles of our times, it is certain he could not. The strongest argument possible would have been given against the approach of that event; and how much more effectually would he have quieted all the trouble, by adding the millennium to the apostacy, before the advent. A millennium without Christ may be acceptable to modern Christians, but it would not do for Paul and his brethren. They must be sustained from heaven in patiently waiting for Christ.

The views in the revelation of John are equally decisive. Like Daniel, he sees the cruel and blasphemous powers of this world, symbolized by dragons and beasts, who make war with the saints and overcome them, until the final catastrophe, when they take the field against the King of kings and Lord of lords; and it is not till these enemies of the Lord are cast into the lake of fire, and judgment is given to the righteous, which we know cannot be till this mortal state is ended, that the triumphant reign of the wicked terminates. How then is it possible that the gospel and the Church can triumph at the same time their enemies are in a state of triumph? It is a moral, a philosophical impossibility. Such a condition for the two parties at the same time, in this mortal state, is as impracticable as that two bodies should occupy, at the same time, a space which one of them would fill.

Again. This apostle shows, that the world is to be the subject of "woes," that end only with the destruction of those who destroy the earth, when the time of the dead, that they should be judged, comes, and the servants of God, his prophets, and saints, and them that fear his name, small and great, receive their reward. Rev. 11: 14-15. The world is also visited with "plagues," which it is said, "fill up the wrath of God" against their evil deeds; and in the midst of them we hear this declaration, "Behold, I come as a thief!—Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." Rev. 16: 15. Again we ask, can it be possible that God should pour out these "woes" and "plagues" upon a converted world? If not, it is impossible that the world can ever be converted, for these cover the whole period till the judgment of the dead, and the coming of the Lord.

We are aware that certain phrases and fragments of texts, are often repeated, which, it appears to be confidently thought, sustain the error in question. The following portion of the second Psalm is familiar to all: "He shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—And this portion of Revelation also, both of which are often repeated incorrectly: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." Rev. 11: 15. But the slightest reference to the context, in each case, will show that these texts refer to a state that is anything but that to which they are misapplied. If to be broken with a rod of iron, and dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel—if a woe—if the coming of the wrath of God—if these terms express the conversion of the world, the texts just now repeated, and others as little understood, prove that the world will be converted. Any theory, however, which requires such an unauthorized interpretation of the word of God, and such a positive contradiction of its plainest statements, must be from the father of lies.

GENERAL PERIOD OF THE ADVENT ARRIVED.

Since it is impossible that the advent prophecies can have been fulfilled in the past, and as it is the highest absurdity to apply them to "the advent of the Spirit," or to expect the triumph of the gospel prior to the coming of our Lord to judge the world and to reign for ever, no other event of prophecy is to be looked for but his glorious appearing. The succession of empires, which were to have supreme authority over the world, before the setting up of the universal and eternal kingdom of God, have all risen, and the last has passed through its predicted changes, preparatory to its being dashed to pieces, as also what remains of other kingdoms, to give place to that eternal kingdom.

The papacy, that direst scourge of the saints of God, has passed through the period of its appointed dominion over them; and although still making war and prevailing against them, is laboring—sometimes as a suppliant, sometimes with its characteristic arrogance and impudence—to recover its lost position of supremacy; and it is evidently preparing, though unconsciously, for the last struggle, in which it will receive the predicted doom of this Babylon of the Christian age from the hand of the Lord God that judgeth her.

Mohammedanism with its scorpion army from the bottomless pit, and of horsemen breathing fire and smoke and brimstone, has inflicted its woes upon the inhabitants of the earth; it has filled up the period assigned by Providence for its triumph, and now exists as a body politic only by sufferance, giving us an assurance that the second woe is past, and that the third woe cometh quickly, when, with the beast and false prophet, it shall be cast into the lake of fire.

The more specific indications made known in the prophecies—the signs by which the coming of the Son of Man should be known to be near, even at the door—speak as impressively of our relation to that event as the more general prophetic views of imperial revolutions and anti-christian misrule. Whether the signs stated by our Lord as recorded by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, are understood literally or symbolically the result is the same. The state of things in the religious, political, and moral world, are also painfully true to the picture given of the last days: the love of christians has waxed cold—politicians are filled with perplexity—iniquity abounds.

In the church, there are more by far to scoff at the promise of the Lord's coming than to believe it, so that it is pre-eminently true of this time, there is but little faith in the earth. In the State, the obligations of those in authority, to God and to his truth, appear to be forgotten, especially by the most distinguished christian rulers; and a sordid, grasping, worldly policy, which disregards the claims of the Great Ruler of the universe upon earthly rulers, as "sent by Him" to be "His ministers;" which leads them to temporize and join hands with the emissaries of those errors which have always been visited with the curse of heaven upon the nations where they have been cherished; and impels them to crush with unsparing cruelty, the rising of opposition, on the part of those whom these rulers should have elevated and blest, against the wrongs and injustice which they have inflicted:—this practical atheism and base worldly mindedness in the State, has already called forth the remonstrances of the righteous and humane, the turbulent murmurs of the less submissive multitudes, and the violent opposition of its maddened victims; and has involved those, whom Providence has raised to power, in such perplexity, that even ordinary human foresight unconsciously anticipates, as already impending, what the prophets of God have proclaimed as the fate of the kings of the earth, in the final catastrophe: "Stay yourselves, and wonder; they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink; for the Lord hath poured out upon them the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed their eyes: the prophets, your rulers and seers hath he covered!" "The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind. . . . This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us." Isa. 17: 13, 14.

This state of things in the ecclesiastical and political world, is accompanied with equally ominous developments in the moral and social world. As it was in the days of Noah and of Lot, the earth is filled with violence; and the most perishable interests of this life, eating and drinking, planting and building, buying and selling—in the midst of luxury and pride, the most offensive, and of debasement and destitution the most painful—have become the engrossing questions of the age. With the prophetic history of the world, in its general outline, and the more specific signs spoken of by our Lord and the apostles, the prophetic periods harmonize, in their bearing upon the present, as the period of the second advent of our Lord. The most reasonable calculation of the periods which have uniformly been understood to indicate the time of his coming, assure us that the period in which their termination must fall, has arrived. Although we have not yet reached the ultimate point to which they can extend, according to most authentic dates for the events with which these periods begin, we have no authority, from any intelligent calculation of them, to put the coming of our Lord a moment in the future. With such positive evidence from the word of God that no such period of peace and triumph to the church, as many expect, can be enjoyed before the advent; with so many portions of prophecy to fix upon the present as the period of that event, how can we remain silent? In duty to our fellow-men, with whom we must soon appear before God, and bound by our most sacred obligations to him, we must be faithful, we must speak!

"Behold, the judge standeth at the door."—"The end of all things is at hand!"

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD ON EARTH.

The phrases "kingdom of heaven," "kingdom of God," &c., so frequently used in the Bible, refer—1. To the whole universe over which God reigns. Ps. 103: 19; Isa. 37: 16; Dan. 4: 3, 34, 35; Matt. 6: 13. 2. To the inheritance which the people of God are to possess in the immortal state. 1 Cor. 15: 50—53. Matt. 5: 3, 10, 19, 20; Luke 13: 28, 29; John 3: 3, 5; Acts 14: 22. And 3. To some part or feature of the great redeeming arrangement which contemplates the restoration of man, and the world he inhabits, to their primitive state of purity, happiness, and glory. Matt. 13: 11—52. Whenever the kingdom of God is spoken of as the subject of promise to the righteous, it brings to view the immortal inheritance.

To constitute a kingdom, there must be a territory, kings, and subjects. The territory of the future and immortal kingdom of God is to consist of the world we now inhabit regenerated or restored to its primitive state: "The stone which smote the image," denoting that "the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom," "filled the whole earth." Dan. 2: 35, 44. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom shall not be destroyed, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7: 27. Now, as there cannot be such a kingdom before the judgment and end of the world, as it now is; and as there can be but one eternal and universal kingdom in existence on earth at the same time, the kingdom of God must begin, in its perfect form, in the eternal state; and, embracing the whole earth in its territory, its existence must be coeval with the eternity which remains. And that such a kingdom may exist on earth, the earth must be restored to its immortal state.

The visible head and Governor of the kingdom of God is to be the Lord Jesus Christ: "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one." Zech. 14: 9. "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree; the Lord hath said unto me, 'Thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.'" Ps. 2: 6—8. The subjects or heirs of this kingdom are to be the righteous of all ages and of all nations: When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations: then shall the King say to them on his right hand, (the righteous,) Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Matt. 25: 31, 34.—That this kingdom is to be set up, i. e., the King to appear, the territory to be claimed, and the subjects to be gathered to him, while earthly kingdoms are in existence, is plainly stated in these texts: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." Dan. 2: 44.—"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth." Isa. 24: 21. But that the kingdom will not be fully established until all earthly kingdoms are destroyed, and the earth restored to its primitive state, is made very evident: "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Matt. 13: 41—43.

In the great succession of earthly kingdoms, brought to view in the second chapter of Daniel, which is the only case in which the phrase, "setting up" kings or kingdoms, is used, we know that it means, the bringing a kingdom into existence, and the establishment of its independence, in spite of all opposing difficulties—even to the displacing of other kingdoms to make room for the one set up. So that of Media and Persia was set up in place of Babylon; Greece in place of Persia; Rome in place of Greece. As the Lord Jesus Christ is to be the head of the kingdom of God, and the earth is to constitute its territory, we must understand by the setting up of his kingdom, that Christ is to be put in actual possession of the earth as its King, and that the inhabitants of the earth are to be put in subjection to his authority and power, to be disposed of as may be right in his sight: "All things are put in subjection under him." "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. 2: 9—11. "The Lord saith unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool." The everlasting kingdom will be set up during the existence of earthly kingdoms;—and in the process of establishing that kingdom, all earthly kingdoms are to be destroyed.

We know it is often asserted, that Christ says, "My kingdom is not of this world," and "The kingdom of God is within us." But he explains himself in the one instance, by saying, "Now is my kingdom not from hence;" and as he is speaking "to the Pharisees," in the other case, we suppose he meant to say, not that the kingdom was within them, but as the margin reads "among," or "in the midst" of them. As these Pharisees were looking for a kingdom with outward show, he evidently meant to reprove them, by giving them to understand, that in the only form in which the kingdom could appear, while its king was suffering, it was then among them; and that if they would partake of its blessings when it did "appear" in its perfection, they must be willing to suffer with its King during his humiliation.—As flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, we know that the possession of that kingdom cannot be obtained in this mortal state. Indeed, it is plainly stated, in a great variety of forms, that the possession of the kingdom is to be realized in connection with the coming of Christ. Paul says, "We see not yet all things put under him," and that this is to be done "at his coming." "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up [brought back or restored] the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he [the Father] shall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power. For he [the Father] must reign till he [the Father] hath put all enemies under his [the Son's] feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed, is death. For he hath put all things under his feet." 1 Cor. 15: 23—27. AT THE COMING OF CHRIST, then, when death "is swallowed up in victory," all things are put under the feet of the Son of God; and then this delivering up, or restoring of the kingdom to God—that is, to the state in which it was "prepared from the foundation of the world," takes place.

At the coming of Christ, all who are his are to be glorified, by being made equal to the angels, when they are to be gathered together unto him; the execution of judgment upon the wicked speedily follows, in which all the forms and agencies of suffering, written in the word of God, will be employed in their punishment; the scene of judgment is to be consummated by the passing away of the heavens with a great noise, and the melting of the earth with fervent heat; and then, according to his promise, we look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, or the righteous.

THE TRANSITION STATE—A PERIOD OF JUDGMENT.

Those prophecies foretelling a transition from the present, to the everlasting state, have been so construed by many, as to give rise to a belief of a period of probation after the second advent of our Savior; and that it will be chiefly beneficial to those heathen who never heard the gospel, and to those of Jewish descent, of all the twelve tribes, living at that time.

While we freely accord to those holding such a view, that they have many, and strong passages of scripture which seem at first, if isolated, to teach such a doctrine; yet we are constrained to believe that the doctrine can never be harmonized with the plain teachings of the word of God respecting the end of probation at the second appearing of the Lord Jesus, as stated in the New Testament; while we find a perfect harmony of those texts, with the New Testament teachings, by understanding them to predict a period for the administration of Judgment.

The obvious import of our Lord's teaching, is that at his second and glorious advent, he will reward EVERY MAN according to his work.—(Matt. 16: 27; Rev. 22: 12.) Does the faithful and true witness make any exception, and say, notwithstanding I will give a part of my reward to a period of trial?

Equally decisive is his language, Matt. 25: 31. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall divide them one from the other, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." What! is the Jewish nation here expected? Certainly not. For the Lord himself has declared, that they "shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and they themselves, be thrust out." And there shall be weeping, and gnashing of teeth, when they see it. (Luke 13: 28.) Paul, (Rom. 2: 9, 16,) has also assured us that God will render "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon EVERY SOUL OF MAN that doeth evil, to the JEW FIRST, and then also to the gentile." And this is to be "in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ." He also makes it equally certain in verse 12th, that the heathen will share the same fate with the Jews. "As many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law."

It follows, therefore, that "all nations" include the human race. And if so, the eternal destiny of the race will be fixed at that time. How long a period is to elapse after the sentence is pronounced, before it is fully executed, is a question which we do not now discuss.

The Bible is equally pointed in its declaration of a period after the end of probation, at Christ's coming in glory, when men will most importunately seek mercy, and the privilege of entering into the kingdom of God, but without success.

"Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name have done many wonderful works? And thou wilt I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7: 22, 53.)

"Strive to enter in at the straight gate, for many, I say to you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able. When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut the door, then shall ye begin to stand without, and knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are." (Luke 13: 24, 25.)

Again. "The bridegroom came, and they which were ready, went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not." (Matt. 25: 11, 12.)

Paul also, quoting from Isa. 25, teaches us that in that day, "Every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess to God." (Rom. 14: 11.)

These, and many other portions of scripture of the same class, render it impossible for us to believe any part of the Bible can rightfully be interpreted to mean that "all nations" will not be separated; that some will find the door again opened; and that some will obtain mercy after the coming of our Lord.

Whoever, therefore, shall be "sent to the nations" after the great victory of "him that sitteth on the horse," we are persuaded it will not be with the design of converting them, but to declare the manifestation of God's "fame and glory," as seen on Mount Zion. And that the nations hearing it, instead of being converted, will only bow down and beg for mercy; present their offerings—and assign their reasons why mercy should be shown, but without success.

"They shall call," says Jehovah, "but I will not answer; they shall seek me early but shall not find me." "I will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh." Whether the day of Judgment, in which this subjection, constrained worship, and obedience, will continue, is to be seven years, as in Ezek. 39: 9; a jubilee, or forty-nine years; or, as Mr. Miller in his lecture on "The Day of the Lord," supposes it may be, a thousand years, we shall not now attempt to determine.

THE JEWS.

A question of deep interest, and one which lies at the foundation of a correct understanding of future events, is the relation of the Jews to the coming dispensation. On this subject we have felt ourselves constrained to dissent widely from most others who look for the speedy coming of Christ. While they look for a yet future return of the Jews, in flesh and blood, in their national capacity, to the land of Palestine, either before, at, or after the second advent of the Savior, we have been under the necessity of looking only for a return of all the believing Jews of the twelve tribes, and of all ages, together with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to the land which God promised them for an everlasting possession. And this can only be accomplished at the resurrection of the just.

We say, "under the necessity of looking only" for such a return; because such the apostles constantly affirmed to be "the hope of Israel." They never taught, or even intimated, that the Jewish nation looked or hoped to be restored and enjoy the fulfilment of the promises to Abraham their father, previous to the resurrection of the just.

That there are portions of prophecy which at first appear to favor the idea of a national return of the Jews, is freely granted. But these we find more easily harmonized with the doctrine of the return of all believing Jews after the resurrection, according to the New Testament, than with the doctrine of a national return in flesh and blood.

For instance, when the prophet Ezekiel teaches us that "all the house of Israel, even all of it," will be gathered into their own land, and be established there forever, as taught in the 36th chapter, although it might at first appear to foretell the gathering of the nation in the flesh, yet it is rendered perfectly clear, by the 37th chapter, that God will raise "the whole house of Israel" out of their graves, put his spirit into them, i. e., quicken them by the Spirit, and then bring them into their own land:—the "fathers, their children, and their children's children." The believing of each generation from Abraham, to the time of the accomplishment of the prediction, will inherit the promised possession under David their king, eternally.

That "the whole house of Israel," comprehends only those Jews who are of Abraham's faith, both Ezekiel and St. Paul have distinctly informed us. Ezek. 11: 15-21. "Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord: unto us is this land given in possession. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.

Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel. And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof, and all the abominations thereof from thence. And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh: that they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God. But as for them whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord God."

Here, "the house of Israel wholly," are distinguished from "the inhabitants of Jerusalem," in their character, in the regard of God for them while "scattered," and in their future prospects. They were Abraham's seed of that generation, and to them the covenant was "established," by the ministry of Ezekiel; God pledges himself to "be a God unto them, and to give them the land of Canaan."

Rom. 9: 6-8. "They are not all Israel (or Israelites) who are of Israel: neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children; but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed."

If these illustrations are any guide as to the import of God's promises to "Israel," "the whole house of Israel," "all Israel, even all of it," &c, then the case is settled, that only those Jews who are of the faith of Abraham, are heirs of the promises of return. With this view of the matter, we have a satisfactory solution of the fact, that the promises were as truly made to Abraham, and his seed in their generations, as to those who will live in the age of their final accomplishment.

Perhaps the whole subject with respect to the return of the Jews, may be summed up thus:—

1. The land of Canaan was promised to Abraham and his seed for an everlasting possession.—Gen. 17: 8.

2. Abraham's personal title being eternal, and the title of his seed of equal duration, and neither he nor they having enjoyed it "yet, in peace and perpetuity, it follows, that all who are the true seed of Abraham, together with their father, to whom the promise was made, must possess the land in the resurrection state; because in that state only, where they cannot die any more, can they enjoy an everlasting possession.

3. The apostle Paul, Gal. 3: 16, 29, expressly restricts the promise to the believing seed of Abraham. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds as of many, but as of one: and to thy seed, which is Christ." "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

4. If Christ is the seed of Abraham, and has been raised from the dead, the pledge of the future resurrection and inheritance of all who are his, when he comes to reign, he is to establish the kingdom of God in Jerusalem, on Mount Zion. And if so, Jews in flesh and blood, cannot inherit the land; for flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 15: 50.

5. The Jews are not to be exclusive heirs.—For, although the promises to "Israel and Judah," are distinct, that they shall be gathered there;—and we are willing to allow the full benefit of those terms to those saints who are of Jewish birth according to the flesh; yet there are promises to the Gentiles which render their title to the inheritance, as strong as is that of the Jews.

First,—ABRAHAM is the father of many nations.

Secondly,—In him all the families of the earth are blessed.

Thirdly,—When the Lord, Jeremiah 3d, promises to restore "Israel and Judah," by taking them one of a city, and two of a family, and bring them to Zion; he also promises in v. 17, that Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord, and "ALL NATIONS shall be gathered unto it," &c., in a state of perpetual and perfect holiness.

Fourthly,—Our Savior declares to the Jews, "they shall come from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down" with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, "in the kingdom of God." Luke 13th.

And finally,—"There is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3: 28, 29.

Thus, he will "set up a standard for the Gentiles," as well as "gather together the dispersed of Judah."

EVENTS TO ACCOMPANY THE ADVENT.

"We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty . . . when we were with him in the holy mount." Thus wrote the apostle Peter. And what a scene of glory was that which he and his companions witnessed!—Jesus had, about six or eight days previously, promised his disciples, saying, "There are some standing here who shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." This promise he fulfilled when "he took Peter, John and James" into a mountain, and was transfigured before them. Then they saw the kingdom of God, and the Son of man in it. 1. Christ in the brightness of his glory. 2. Moses, the representative of the righteous dead; and Elijah, the representative of the living changed, and glorified saints; and the bright cloud of excellent glory from heaven, with the Father's voice proceeding from that glory, acknowledging Christ as his Son. Such, then, is what will be again displayed in its fulness at the appearing of Christ. After they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and gather together his elect from the four winds. Matt. 24th. From what condition are they to be gathered? Both from death and life.

Thus the apostle Paul, 1 Thess. 4: 14–17, says, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Let us examine this a little more closely.—1. "The Lord himself." Not an angel deputed by him,—not his Spirit,—not the Lord, silently and invisibly, but the Lord who died and rose again,—himself—from heaven. That Lord will descend with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God. And this is not a third coming, of which some speak, when he will come to "stand on the mount of Olives;" but his second and glorious appearing, to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day. 2. "The dead in Christ shall rise." We who live till the event shall gain nothing in point of time, beholding at an earlier period this glorious scene. The souls under the altar, and all who sleep in Jesus. God will bring with him, to take possession of their bodies, and animate them, "in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible."

3. The dead saints being raised, incorruptible, the living saints are to "be changed," and thus be fitted to be fellow-heirs with those who are raised. For without such a change to incorruption, how can they be companions of those who are thus pure and perfect? How clear, then, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. 1 Cor. 15. The first Adam was made a living soul; the blood flowing in his veins is the principle of vitality, or the vital medium. When this blood became corrupt, and subject to decay and death, God sent the second man, the Lord from heaven, a quickening spirit. It is as necessary for us to be born of that Spirit, in order to our resurrection to eternal life, as of the blood of Adam, in order to present life. And by the indwelling and quickening energy of that Spirit, we shall be as truly the children of God in the resurrection, as we are the children of Adam in the present state. Thus the apostle: "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal body by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. 8: 11.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure." 1 John 3: 2, 3.

OUR RELATION TO EXISTING ORGANIZATIONS.

These who look for the coming of the Lord, have received their doctrinal and ecclesiastical training in the various evangelical churches with which they were severally connected, including nearly all the different departments of the Christian church; and hence have associated together under a novel, but most interesting relation.—While none have been required to relinquish anything peculiar in their faith and ecclesiastical usages, as a condition of Christian fellowship, all have seemed to vie in provoking one another to love and good works.

From the beginning, it has never been the wish of those who were the instruments of Providence to commence the pronulgation of the great truth of the Lord's speedy appearing, that any who embraced it should change their ecclesiastical relations, or that another should be added to the already numerous sects which have divided Christendom. With existing churches we had no controversy, and ardently hoped to live in peace with them to the end; only feeling moved by our convictions of truth on this subject to sound the alarm, we were constrained to speak. The result has been, strong opposition on the part of most churches to such preaching, so that in many instances they have cast us out, and in others have placed us in circumstances where, for peace and conscience's sake, we were forced to withdraw our relation.

Under these circumstances, we have been driven into a more separate and distinct body than we ever anticipated, and against our wishes. In associating, our institution is the most simple of which we can conceive; and as nearly as we can, we endeavor in our fellowship to copy the example of the primitive saints, following according to our best judgment the New Testament rules and examples. On doctrines, we endeavor to speak as the oracles of God, by using the language which the Holy Ghost used; thus, by holding fast the form of sound words, avoiding all cause of party strife or bickerings. And if there are any among us, who, forsaking this wholesome practice, endeavor to sow discord among us, instead of being under the necessity of exercising a rigorous censorship, and excommunicating authority, they soon go out from us because they are not of us.

We have one great mission of love to all men; it is paramount to all others;—"The Lord is at hand;"—"the Judge stands before the door."—And knowing the terrors of the Lord we persuade men. Instances of undue severity on the part of some who have identified themselves with us, toward existing churches, there have been. But such is not our work. With churches we have no contention: we love all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and evince that love by a holy life. We feel bound, however, to reprove and expose sin and error, whether in our own ranks, or others, whether in churches, or individuals; and thus, like the apostles, in our measure, we would warn every man, and teach every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus.

These are some of the great questions to which we would call the attention of our fellow men. And in pursuance of this work, we are happy to commend to you our beloved brethren, J. V. Himes R. Hutchinson, and F. G. Brown, the bearers of this Address, as men worthy your fullest confidence, as able ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ, who will, by word and otherwise bring more fully before you the great truths so dear to our hearts.

In behalf of the Conference,
ELON GALUSHA, President.
O. R. FASSET, Secretary.

From the Advent Herald.

FAREWELL.

In a few hours I expect, in company with Bro. F. G. Brown and R. Hutchinson, to take our farewell of friends and native shores. We have time only to say a word to our brethren abroad before leaving. We tender our thanks to them for their liberal support and co-operation in our mission. And we crave their prayers, that our visit to England may be profitable to the cause of God, and that we may fulfil it to Divine acceptance. If Providence permit, our brethren will hear from us by the return of the steamer.—Farewell. Yours J. V. HIMES.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JUNE 17, 1816.

Removal of our Office.

We have removed our Office into Simpson's new block on Works Street just back of the Arcade. We occupy the second floor in the west end of the building; entrance from Works Street.

Address of the Boston Conference.

We give the Address of this Conference entire, in this number. It is a valuable document, which will be read with deep interest by all who love and appreciate the precious truths it advocates. We shall print a few extra copies of this week's paper, that those who may wish a few numbers for the benefit of their friends may be accommodated.

Buffalo Conference.

Indisposition, and the pressing cares of our office, prevented our attending only a part of two days, the recent conference of our brethren in Buffalo. Br'n Robinson, Pearson, Morley, Bywater, Hoyt, Mansfield and Porter, were in attendance, and many of the brethren from the surrounding country. Ministers and brethren were grounded and settled in the faith of the immediate coming of the Son of man; and well engaged in the good work of strengthening and comforting one another, and faithfully warning a stupid church and perishing world to prepare for the approaching crisis.

The congregation, especially on the Sabbath, was large and attentive: yet no special move or conviction was apparent among the unconverted and unbelieving portion of the assembly. They seemed perfectly shielded by unbelief, against the truth: it no more arouses their fears, nor moves them to repentance. If this could only be said, in truth, of the doctrine of the immediate coming of Christ and his kingdom, we might justly suspect that it is affected with some radical error; but the same may be said of those truths long preached by the different sects, and on which there is no disagreement, but a general admission of their divine authenticity. The fact is, and it is most painful to contemplate, that the most earnest entreaties, the most precious promises of present blessings and future rewards, and the most dreadful threatenings against the finally impenitent, which the servants of God can present from the word of inspiration, no more move the sinner to repentance. He closes his eyes and ears, and steels his heart, against the truth, and, Gallo like, cares for none of these things; but presses his way with sure and rapid strides down to destruction! The highest motive which a merciful and allwise God can present, seems to fail of arresting the thoughtless throng; and what will be the end thereof? They must inevitably perish in their folly and madness.

Though this sad state of things is greatly discouraging to the christian, the true philanthropist, and naturally serves to enervate his efforts to save his fellow men, yet if he rightly understand the subject, he sees in the case a striking fulfilment of the prophetic word, which points out the moral condition of the world, at the coming of the Son of man. Hence, while these things on the one hand cause the believer to mourn over the multitude around him, on the other hand, he is made to rejoice, inasmuch as a most convincing evidence is furnished to confirm his faith that the day of final and eternal redemption to all the pure in heart, is nigh, even at the door.

This indifference, this hardness of heart, and unyielding obduracy, on the part of the world; and this apathy and moral death, in the church, cannot long exist as it now is: a change, some how, must, in the very nature of the case, soon take place.—And what will that change be? Will it be for the better? or rather, will the church arise, purge away her deep corruption, shake off her apathy, put away her unbelief, put on the holy and beautiful garments of the Lord, and once more to the hosts of the enemy of souls, become 'terrible as an army with banners'?—and will the world turn again in hundreds and thousands, all through the land, as they once did, to Him who alone is able to save? We have no assurance, from any consideration whatever, to hope for these things. The church has rejected the truth, and fallen, beyond the reach of recovery, and the world is blinded by her false light, and the most potent truths of heaven have long since failed to break the fatal charm. Hence the cure of both is hopeless.

What then may we reasonably expect? Judging from the unprecedented increase of crime in the world, and unparalleled growth of infidelity (or German Neology) in the church, for a few years past, or since revival influence has ceased to be felt in our land, should time continue a few years longer, our chapels would be converted into temples where, as in infidel France, the god, or goddess of depraved reason would only be worshipp'd, and our world become a literal Sodom. How much nearer this state of things the church and the world will approach, before the deep tide of iniquity shall be stopped in its deadly course, we cannot say. But that it will continue to flow, deepening and widening, as it rolls on, is a clearly revealed truth of the Bible: for 'evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived,' until the revelation of the Son of man, to destroy all the workers of iniquity; and the most conclusive evidence clearly proves that that day is soon to dawn upon our guilty and dark world. Hence the change, and the only change, of the present sad condition of the church and world, for which we should hourly look, is that which will be effected by the devouring fire of the great day of final retribution.

We speak of things in general, of the great mass, and not of individuals. Although we confidently believe the world and church have virtually sealed their own destruction, yet we doubt not that salvation is yet freely offered to all who will concede to its easy requirements, and accept its gracious offers. We pray that many may yet be saved. And while there is a bare possibility of saving a few, or even one precious mortal, no pains on our part should be spared to effect the great work. Would the kind parent, after having rescued all but one of his large family from the devouring flames of his burning dwelling, feel less concern about the rescue of that one?—No; but his desire and efforts for his salvation would be increased as the situation of his child become more perilous. So we should feel and act in view of the perilous condition of the remaining few of our fellow beings, who may yet be saved, or 'snatched as brands from the burning.' O let us do what we can in these closing up moments of the economy of grace, to induce others to become sharers in its rich and eternal rewards; and be sure that we take heed unto ourselves, lest we lose the promised crown of life.

But we have wandered from the object of this designed short note; which was to speak of the Buffalo Conference. It was a precious season to the saints in attendance, who have become grounded and settled in the faith. They love the truth and simplicity of the gospel in all things, and will not be easily led away from either to pattern after any of the anti-christian bodies around them, nor to adopt a policy of their own devising, to accomplish the work of their Lord and Master.

Br'n Robinson, Pearson, Mansfield and Porter, and sisters Seymour and Parks, we believe have all gone up the lake to attend the Conference now in session and to be held in Ohio and Michigan, and others who were at the Conference have returned to the former field of their labors. May the blessing of Him whom we serve crown the labors of each and all, and when the scattered flock shall be gathered into the eternal fold of the Great Shepherd, may they be counted worthy to be found among the happy number.

China Mission.

Mr Dean, a Baptist missionary, recently from China, and who is about leaving for that field again, as we are informed, in his farewell discourse in this city, a few days since, in substance remarked, that the friends of missions in America were constantly calling on the missionaries to give them facts of the wretched condition of the heathen and of their conversion to Christianity, &c., that a proper interest might be waked up among the friends of the cause, to contribute for its support, and that their faith might be strengthened in its final triumph in the conversion of the world. This, Mr. Dean thought was unnecessary, inasmuch as the Bible positively declares, the heathen shall be given to Christ for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. This was considered sufficient to produce all the faith and wake up all the zeal necessary to labor for the conversion of the world.

What blindness! Teachers and people seem to be willingly ignorant of the fundamental truths of the Bible. They put darkness for light, and stumble as men who grope in thick darkness. For, instead of the evidence which Mr. Dean supposed proves the conversion of the world, it predicts its destruction. It reads,—'Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost part of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel.' Psa. 2: 8, 9. Hence, instead of the heathen being converted, they are to be 'BROKEN WITH A ROD OF IRON,' and 'DASHED IN PIECES AS A POTTER'S VESSEL.' Oh, how vain is the hope of the church at the present day, and how sad must be her disappointment, when the appearing of the Son of man shall remove the veil from her now blinded eyes.

SUNDRY THOUGHTS.

Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also, that love his appearing. 2 Tim. 4: 8.

On the above text, I wish to offer a few thoughts, hoping that it may do some good to a few at least among the many who treat the subject of the Lord's appearing, and especially the time, with seeming indifference. And first, I ask, will not a person who loves the Lord, indeed love his appearing? most certainly. Then would he not manifest in some way by which himself and others (at least those of like faith,) would know it? To illustrate. I profess to love Bro. Marsh, am constantly telling my neighbors that Bro. Marsh has done more for me than any other man, consequently I esteem him my best friend. Well, says my neighbor, would you like to see him? I would. Well, here is a letter from him, and he writes that he is coming to see you, when he will do more than he has ever yet done for you. I should naturally inquire when will he come?—let me see the letter. I read it, but find, in consequence of Bro. Marsh's superior wisdom, that there are some things hard for me to understand, and which, if I am not careful, I shall wrest to my own hurt. I carefully read the letter over and over, give every word its due weight, let one part explain another, and soon I get an understanding of its meaning, and it becomes as plain as the noon day sun. I rejoice in the prospect of the visit.

The application is easy: if any one loves the Lord who has done so much for him, and has assured us that he will do more than he has ever done for us at his appearing, most certainly we should love his appearing. And those who do not love to see their Lord, they love the world, and the love of the Father is not in them.

It is said to us, your times have all failed, and it plainly proves that you know nothing about it. I acknowledge that we have fairly got the 4th Time, 43, tenth day, passover, and the fall of '46. The nominal church and world have withstood these things three times, so did Jannes and Jambres withstand Moses three times, but the fourth time they acknowledged the hand of God in the matter. Ex. 7th & 8th chapters. In reference to men of the last days, Paul says, "They shall proceed no farther, for their folly shall be manifested unto all men, as theirs also was." 2 Tim. 3: 8. Now I ask, how could it be said of any that they were waiting, if they had never come up to definite time and been disappointed? how could they exclaim, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him. Isa. 25: 9. "If the vision tarry, wait for it." "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days." "And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord." This evidence goes to prove that there will be a class found waiting, and consequently watching, when the Lord appears.

That the wise will understand the time, (not know,) I doubt no more than I do my own existence, and who the wise are, is as plainly revealed in the Bible, as any other one truth. Jesus says, "Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock, &c. Matt. 7: 24. Although our opposers think it is just as dark with us as with themselves, yet, we have reason to thank God that we are not in darkness, so that day will overtake us as a thief, for the path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Prov. 4: 18.

I have strong confidence that the Lord will come the coming fall. I will give one reason among many that I might give, that if '46 passes, some other instrument other than Clovis must be found, who set up the "abomination that maketh desolate," for no history that I have ever seen or heard of gives a later date for his death than A. D. 511, consequently, if the 1335 years do not end this year, then Clovis has nothing to do in settling their commencement. But this I cannot doubt: it would be distrusting God and his word.

Where, O where are my brethren? are you at your posts, where the Word declares you must be or miss of the kingdom? Many, in the strength of the Lord, feel able to, and will possess the goodly land, while I fear some are looking back, when the command is, "look not behind you, nor tarry in all the plain." I would say to the waiting ones, "up, get you out of this place, for the Lord will destroy this city."

He that leaves the plain word of the Lord now, and turns to fables, does it at the peril of his eternal all. O my God, rescue my erring brethren from the grasp of the devil. O, how surprising it is that men of common sense can be led to deny the Bible, and virtually say that this same Jesus will not come in like manner as he was seen to go up. O consistency, where hast thou fled?

J. C. BOWLES.

Spring Arbor Mich., April 20, '46.

Bro. W. Mosher, Gloversville N. Y., May 17, writes:—I am alone here: there is no one who can fully sympathise with me in my views. Suffer me to say to these lonely pilgrims, be not discouraged, hold fast the profession of your faith without wavering, for yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry, and will bring his reward with him to give to every man according as his works shall be. I feel fully settled in my own mind that the Lord is at the door. This verily, is a solemn thought, when we take into account the state of our world—the so-called church, and perhaps our friends, and members of our own family who will not believe the end is nigh. This should urge us to faithfulness in the discharge of every duty, in prayer, exhortation, warning, letting our light shine, and holy living. Yet, who that loves the appearing of Christ, would wish the hours more slow, to keep us from our love. Come Lord!

A Word of Exhortation.

Let us labor therefore, to enter into that rest.—Heb. 4: 11.

As for God, his way is perfect, the word of the Lord is tried. He is a buckler to all those that trust in him. How often have we found by experience, the words of the Psalmist true. Although we have been brought up by a way we knew not, we have found that the way of God is perfect, while we have searched. His word we have found that it is tried, and while the storms and winds of this world have been howling around us, we have found that he is a buckler to all that trust in him—and we have been ready to say with the Psalmist, "For who is God save the Lord, or who is a rock save our God?" "Nevertheless (says Jesus,) when I come shall I find faith on the earth?" "If I go away, I will come again, and when I come shall I find faith on the earth?" O my brethren and sisters, let us labor to enter into that rest, holding fast the profession of our faith; for faithful is he that has called us. The signs which Jesus said should precede his coming, have all, or nearly all, been seen. The next great event will be the glorious appearing of Jesus. Yes, that same Jesus that bled and died for us, is coming in all the glory of his Father, with all his holy angels, to take his waiting children home. O what a moment we live in.—Within a few days, or perhaps hours of the Judgment! And are we truly ready? can we say with all our hearts, Come Lord Jesus, come quickly?

Take heed unto yourselves, (says Jesus,) lest at any time your hearts be overcharged so that that day come upon you unawares. O, let us keep ourselves unspotted from the world, be ready and waiting, so that when Jesus comes we can say, "Lo this is our God, we have waited for him." Let us ask ourselves if we have done all we could to persuade sinners to become reconciled to God. Is all our influence cast on the side of Jesus? Have we mourned over the desolations of Zion? have we felt to say with the prophet Jeremiah, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." O, my brothers and sisters, let us follow more closely in the path of the just, which groweth brighter and brighter, unto the perfect day—adhering more closely to that word which is a guide to our feet, and a lamp to our path; praying one for another, that our faith fail not;—and soon the rugged path, (which seems now to be lit up with the dawn of perfect day,) will lead us from this vale of tears to the Elysian fields of pleasure, where we shall not need the light of the sun or moon, but Jesus our Redeemer will be our light, and his praise our glorious theme.

Yes, our Redeemer soon will come,
And take us to our heavenly home,—

The city of our God.

Then our reproach he'll take away,
To reign with him in endless day,
According to his word.

ANN ELIZA.

Letter from Bro. B. Morley.

Bro. Marsh:—During most of the month of April, I labored, "working with my own hands;" I then visited my brother in West Almond, and preached on Sunday to very attentive congregations, who had never before heard advent preaching. I observed a number of glistening eyes and cheerful countenances among my hearers, and afterwards heard some cry, "that's the truth," "that's Bible," &c. My brother and his wife, read your paper with interest.

At Friendship, there are a few who have not denied the Savior's name, or doctrine. Bro. Robbins is able to labor, but is very soon prostrated if he attempts to preach.

In Cuba and vicinity we number about 25.—The brethren feel that it is a time of great trial. Although spiritualism has not showed its deceitful and ever avenging form among them; yet the snares and false charms of earth are as dangerous as ever. Last Sunday, and Sunday before the last, I preached at Arcade. We were favored with the Presbyterian house, (their minister being absent.) and generally, good congregations. Some I believe heard for the first time, but it remains to be seen whether it will be mixed with faith in those who heard.

A considerable part of the congregational church, seem to be quite awake to the evils of sectarianism. I told them all that they had better burn up their creeds, and let christians or those who believe, be together, as they were in primitive times. Several of the Baptist church were in, together with their minister, who, of course, would not approve of such a measure on their own part. I fear that they, as well as other sects, would miss their creed more than they would their Bibles. I don't know of any thing in the wide world, that looks more hateful and cruel to me, than these mighty instruments of spiritual death.

I am sure I would rather deliver up my body to the chains and whips of perpetual slavery, than go back again to the state of a bigoted sectarian, of any name or order. The former could result only in that death from which the righteous will have a glorious resurrection: but the latter, (with the light I have,) would ruin my soul.

O sectarianism, thou vile monster! seated in the hearts of the Jewish rulers and people, thou didst urge them on to crucify the Prince of life: also, under the pretence of infallibility, thou hast glutted thyself with innocent blood. Thou hast racked, tortured, and burnt alive, the meek of the earth. And vain wouldst thou again betray and murder the Just one at his second coming, and reign thyself forever. But nay; he is stronger than thou; his thunderbolt shall soon shiver thine adamantine walls; the fire of his jealousy will prevail against thee. Amen.

There are a few in Lodi and Collins, who, having received help from God, continue to the present time waiting for his Son from heaven, even Jesus.

Yours in hope,

BUTLER MORLEY.

Shumly, Chataque Co. N. Y., May 29, '46.

P. S. On Tuesday, June 2d, I held a meeting at Lodi. The Lord manifested his presence, and we felt that it was good to be there. The brethren in Lodi, as also in Laona, and the region around, seem unwilling to give up the blessed hope.

I send you a short extract of a letter written by a baptist minister in Michigan, to an advent brother in western New York, who requested me so to do. After saying that he had not seen an advent paper for more than a year, and that he was unable to learn where any were printed, he says:—"Throughout all this country, no minister can be respectable, or receive honor from men, if he says a word in favor of Christ's coming quickly. In fact, it is very difficult to present any of the leading points of doctrine or practice contained in the Bible, without greatly offending a large majority of professed saints and sinners.

I care not whether people call themselves Baptists, or any thing else: I know the time has come when they will not endure sound doctrine. It is about three years since I filled a large box with old musty books, and put them under the bed, and from that time to the present have read the bible almost exclusively. And I hope you will request the preachers in your community, to do the same. Now I know that such a preacher will meet with success, when all others fail."

Letter from Bro. M. M. Mumford.

Bro. Marsh:—It gives me pleasure, after an absence of two months, to communicate a few words to you. I no longer enjoy the privilege of meeting with the dear friends in Rochester, but find myself in a distant land, among those, very few of whom, love the views we cherish. I met with the brethren in New York, Providence, and Boston, on my journey to these parts. In all these places, the friends are strong in the faith, looking for "the glorious appearing of the great God."—they seem to have settled down on a sure foundation, the truth of God. The storm of fanaticism has passed by, and there are many yet who remain unscathed by its withering influence. I find in this place a few who love the advent hope.—There are also others in the neighboring towns still holding on and exhorting one another. I attended last Lord's day a meeting of the brethren in Lee. The brethren and sisters I should judge by their testimonies, are immovably fixed in the hope of the gospel. If there is no truth in the doctrine of the advent near, how can sober, intelligent, reasonable beings cling to it, especially when trials and disappointments have been their portion? If there is no truth in it, how can they abide the opposition that has been, and is still fiercely waged against it? This very fact demonstrates the truth of their position. God will have a people to serve him and proclaim his truth. Though men may oppose, "the reign of God" is specially near and will soon commence. Unwelcome though it be to the hosts of darkness, he whose right it is, will soon commence his reign in all the glory of the mighty God. Then let us walk in his truth, that we may rejoice at his coming.

Your brother waiting for the Prince of peace,
M. M. MUMFORD.

New Market N. H., May 14, 1846.

Letter from Sister Hollister.

Bro. Marsh:—The Voice of Truth is glad tidings to the child of God who is traveling through this wilderness world, watching, waiting, and looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior, Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile bodies, that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. For when Christ who is our life, shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And to those that look for him, he shall (will) appear the second time, without sin unto salvation.

It rejoices my heart to hear that some are steadfast in the faith, looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus in the clouds of heaven, and in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his work.

I have for two years past, been steadfast in the faith, that the second advent of Christ was near, when he shall come to reign forever and ever, and his kingdom shall destroy every other kingdom. "And the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

Has not the time arrived that the man, clothed with linen, with a writer's ink-horn by his side, is commanded to go and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst of the earth? And for the four angels to be loosed, to whom it was said, "hurt not the earth, neither the sea nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads? And will not the Lord soon command the destroying angel to go forth, saying, let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity, slay utterly, old and young; but come not near any man upon whom is the mark; but only those men which have the seal in their foreheads? This dread hour is doubtless very near. But it is said, "to him that overcometh, will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name."

O, Lamb of God, fulfill these blessed promises. Mark me thine in the day of redemption.—Seal me as a signet with thine image—give me that new name which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it! Then, amid burning worlds, I shall stand secure, being justified in thy righteousness, and made white with thy blood. Then I shall hear, with holy joy, that glorious, but awful voice, "Come not near any man, upon whom is the mark."

BELINDA HOLLISTER.

Ballston N. Y., May 16, 1846.

Bro. L. Dudley, Perry's Mills N. Y., May 14, writes:—The brethren in this section generally, are strong in the Lord, looking for the coming kingdom of God. There are none in this region who believe they are in the kingdom, or that the kingdom is in them. We are still hoping for that we see not: that is, the personal coming of Jesus, the resurrection of the dead saints—the changing of the living—the renovating and cleansing of the earth, and the restoration of the kingdom to Israel. The cause is gaining ground in the field where I have been laboring the year past. On Caldwell's Manor, there have been a number of sound conversions, and Oct. 18, followed their Savior into the water; they are still serving the Lord. In April, in other places, I baptized 12 followers of Jesus. May all endure unto the end.

Bro. B. F. Streeter, Brattleboro Vt., May 20, writes:—This is a trying time indeed; but I trust God has got a few children left that are determined to see the end of the race. "Because thou hast kept the words of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold I come quickly, hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

Bro. W. G. Osobeck, Auburn N. Y., writes: A few brethren meet at my house for prayer and Bible class, or in other words, we let the bible interpret itself, for we believe God is his own interpreter. We have had no preaching for over a year, on the great truths of the kingdom at hand. We should be glad if some of our ministering brethren, as they pass east and west, would call on us, and administer to us the symbols of the broken body, and shed blood of our Lord. We are looking for redemption—we know not what a day may bring forth. My prayer is, that the Lord would give you and the preachers of Christ, grace and wisdom, to rightly divide the word of truth. May the Lord save us all in his kingdom through Christ Jesus our Lord, Amen.

Letter from Bro J. Pearson, Jr.

Bro. Marsh:—It is with great satisfaction, that I send you a brief account of the Conference held in this city. It is speaking within bounds to say that I have never attended a meeting more harmonious, loving, and characterized by better gospel faith, than this has been from beginning to end.

The brethren here, and region about, have passed through severe trials from various causes, but like the pure gold, they are coming forth, being purified by their afflictions and better fitted to labor in this blessed cause until the Master shall come to give them a better reward.

The preaching brethren present, were Br'n. Peter and Philip Hough, Porter, Mansfield, Pettet, Grant, Bywater, Campbell, and Pierce. The brethren and sisters separated much encouraged and strengthened in the very soon coming of Christ, and with renewed energy in the service of our Lord.

Please notice that Sister Parks is on her way to Milwaukee. J. PEARSON, Jr.

Grove Meeting.

Manlius Village, June 9, '46.

The brethren here would thank Bro. Marsh to publish in the Voice of Truth, a Grove Meeting; to be held one mile south of Manlius Village; to commence, the Lord will, Friday June 26, to continue over the Sabbath. If the weather should be unfavorable, a large barn will be fitted up for the occasion. Brethren, and all who are favorable to the speedy coming of Jesus, are invited to attend.

Will Brn. Bywater and J. D. Johnson attend?—The friends here particularly wish Bro. Pinney to come to Bro. Carpenter's and stay a little while for the improvement of his health. We hope Bro. Barry will come without fail.

Brethren, come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, strong in the faith of the speedy coming of our King.

The brethren and their teams will be provided for. Teams also will meet the Packets at Hull's Landing on Friday morning to conduct the friends to the Grove.

Yours in the blessed hope,

WM. ONGLEY.

Appointments.

The Darlington Campmeeting is appointed to commence the 25th inst. Bro. Deverell is earnestly requested to attend. A general attendance of ministers is also urgently solicited.

The Campmeeting at Sidney, near the Trent, C. W., is appointed to commence July 1st. Bro. William Miller is urgently solicited to attend. The friends will see that his expenses are borne. He is also requested to say, through the Herald or Voice of Truth, whether he can attend or not.

The requests of our brethren for conferences to be held at Cuba and Spring Mills, are not forgotten. As soon as a sufficient number of ministers will agree to attend, the appointments shall be given. Who will volunteer? and when?

Jesus Lives.

My Savior yet lives,
Why should I complain—Tho' a pilgrim and stranger
On earth, I remain!

My Jesus yet lives,
His name I adore;
He is faithful and true,
And he lives evermore.

The Lord is my portion,
I will not repine;
Tho' friends have deserted,
Yet Jesus is mine.

I live on his smiles,
And trust in his word,
And soon I shall reap
The promised reward.

A home free from sorrow
I hope to obtain,
And with kindred spirits
Forever remain.

Then haste, ye bright Angels,
And bear me away;
The cold winds are piercing—
No longer delay.

My warm heart is beating,
My work nearly done;
King Jesus is coming!—
I long to be gone.

Holy Love.

There cannot be a greater perversion of language than to call that rational religion in which the affections have no share. Cold systematic notions which reside in the head, but never touch or engage the heart, may make a curious speculatist, or subtle disputant, but cannot make a true Christian. To suppose that the richest store of knowledge, unaccompanied with the warmth of holy love, is sufficient to constitute the character of a Christian, is an error almost equal to that of taking a statue for a man. The sculptor may, indeed, give to a rude block the form and proportion of the human body; but, wanting life and motion, it can only be mistaken for it when viewed from a distance, or in the dusk of twilight.— Yet, have we not greater reason to fear that many deceive themselves by having a form of godliness, while destitute of its power? They come forth from the mould of education with a creditable stamp of character, and a certain train of decent habits, but are without spiritual life and energy. They are like artificial flowers, which wear a glossy bloom, but have neither growth nor fragrance. It is clear, from the Scriptures, that the heart is the seat of true religion. The sincere Christian is animated and distinguished by the grace of holy love—that charity or love so fully and beautifully delineated in Paul's letter to the believers in Corinth, chap. xiii., which see. To this we wish more particularly to direct attention; by showing the objects, properties, and origin of this love.

1. The objects of this love. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself—on these two commands hang all the law and the prophets." God, as the source of all being, and the centre of all perfection and excellency, claims the chief place in our affection. Now, to deny his claim, or prefer another, is to pervert the law of universal order, and to open a door for the entrance of confusion and every evil work. If a Being of infinite majesty, unspotted holiness, and unbounded goodness, is not to be devoutly adored, and supremely beloved, there is not a single principle in religion or morals on which we can rely, but all is involved in darkness and uncertainty. But there are few to be found who will not readily own, at least in words, that God ought to be loved above all things. The footsteps of his wisdom and power, goodness and glory, may be traced in the works of creation. Everything lovely and useful, from the creeping hyssop on the wall, to the stately cedar of Lebanon; every creature in which is life, sense, or understanding, from the insects on a particle of dust, to the angels before his throne, exhibit the perfections of their glorious Maker.

But though the earth is full of his riches, and the heavens sparkle with his glory, it is in his divine word, chiefly, that his attributes appear in their most attractive and delightful manifestations. Here we have marvellous light, to give us those spiritual discoveries which are adapted to fill our hearts with seraphic love. Here we behold "God in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, and not imputing their trespasses unto them." Here "mercy and truth meet together, righteousness and peace embrace each other." In "the only begotten Son, who is the brightness of his Father's glory, and the exact representation of his character," we find every thing great and good, to interest and engage the heart. The affections of worldly men are not deficient in strength, but they have a wrong direction—improper objects. Paul describes these accurately in a few words: "They mind earthly things." The current of their thoughts, muddy and turbid, may have many windings, but always flows in the same channel. The fire of their passions, covered with a mass of gross fuel, may burn with different degrees of heat, but never rises heavenward in a pure and holy flame. The Christian, being renewed in the spirit of his mind, feels his heart pant after God. He views the Lord as his portion, and sets his affections on things above.

As God is the Supreme object on which holy love fixes, so creatures ought to have a subordinate measure of love, according to the degree in which they bear his image. A Christian cannot but regard those who exhibit the humble, holy, forgiving temper of Jesus. "We know that we are passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." This is the mark of heaven, the royal signature of Emmanuel. It was a common observation of the heathen in the first age of the gospel, "See how these Christians love one another!" Tender, cordial, and mutual affection, springing from the grace of Christ, was a new thing in earth, which could scarcely fail to excite wonder. Hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, and such like works of the flesh, had so long filled and deformed the world, that men gazed with astonishment on the salutary fruits of the spirit, growing out of love as their root. Gentile philosophy had never produced a single cluster of such fruit as every vineyard of the Lord's planting, every separate church of Christ, yielded in abundance.

There will appear, on examination, a clear distinction between a love of complacency and a love of benevolence. By the former, we delight in God and what resembles him; by the latter, we show a regard for the welfare of bad men, though we detest their ways. In this sense, the worst enemies must not be shut out of our affections. The benevolent love of a Christian should reach beyond the narrow circle of his personal acquaintance, or the bounds of his native land, expanding itself so as to encompass the whole globe, and include every nation and tribe of the human family.

II. We proceed to point out the leading properties of this love. It is a principle that never lies dormant or inactive. It warms the heart, invigorates the soul, and impels the man in whom it reigns to perform every duty with cheerfulness, and endure every trial with firmness. It has been justly observed by one, that "if religion is the life of the soul, charity or love is the life of religion." This is the purest, strongest, and most permanent principle of obedience. The testimony of our own experience will furnish most of us with the fullest proofs of the truth of this remark.

Love is the purest principle of obedience.— Many seem to be influenced in all their religious duties by terror: startled with the thunder of divine threatenings, and the gloom of impending judgments, they resemble the children of Israel at the foot of Mount Sinai, who promised to do all God's commands, but forgot their word when the alarm was over, see Psalm cvii. &c.— Slavish terror drives its votaries to labors which they sustain as an intolerable task. Love draws its subjects to willing obedience with the strongest and softest bands. The yoke which superstition wreaths is heavy with care, and sharp with thorns; but the yoke that love wears is light and easy.— Slavish fear overclouds the mind with melancholy, and sours the temper with acrimony. Love is the sunshine of the soul, and the all-powerful, efficacious ingredient which sweetens the wormwood and the gall. It is manifest, that many are influenced in their obedience by mean selfishness.— They are willing to take pains when they have a prospect of mercenary gain. They act as if heaven were the reward, not of grace, but of debt. Putting their virtues into a deceitful balance, they are foolish enough to imagine a seat in paradise may be purchased by them. But the principle of Christian charity has in it something so refined, so noble, and so disinterested, that it rises as far above every motive of base selfishness as gold is superior to dress—

"One action which from genuine love proceeds, Excels ten thousand mercenary deeds."

How many appear actuated in all they do by the hateful principle of pride. No set of men ever seemed more mortified to the world, and more attached to religion than the ancient Pharisees.— Their devotion was very exactly cut into parcels; some for the temple, some for the synagogue, and some for the streets; but not a particle was left for the closet. Their alms were not confined to the next door neighbors; but a trumpet was sounded on the day of giving, that the whole town might know it, and no poor needy creature have to complain that he was neglected. Their zeal carried them over mountains of difficulty, and deeps of danger; for they were willing to compass sea and land to make a single proselyte. But all their ceremonies, alms, and labors, were nothing more than a showy, ostentatious display. Their vices were concealed, and their virtue blazoned and magnified. Their whole religion was a machine, constructed on the model of Satanic devices, in which pride was the main-spring, and policy the great wheel. They could do nothing without the eyes of men to behold them, and the chief seats at feasts as their well-merited distinction.

Happy would it be for the Christian world (a rather anomalous phrase to be sure,) could it plead an exemption from many of the charges we have just enumerated, as attaching to the popular religionists of that period. J. S.

Romanism already in the Episcopal Church of America.

The "Protestant Churchman," of New York city, speaks out in tones of solemn warning, and by the showing of startling facts on this subject. This paper says:

"The withering influence of the Tractarian theology, is not only doing its work among us, but seems to have cast a spell upon the intellect and heart of the Church. Churchmen sleep while Romanizers are bold, active and successful, advancing from one position to another in their attempts to sap the foundations and to overthrow the bulwarks laid and erected by our martyred Reformers, against the Roman apostasy. The prophetic wind that precedes the tempest of ruin and havoc, moans through our courts, and sighs around our altars, but it evokes no united, earnest, vigorous action to resist and avert the storm. Evidences of danger press upon us from every side, and here and there a solitary finger is uplifted to point them out, but the champions of truth see not eye to eye, stand not shoulder to shoulder, labor not heart with heart. The voice of warning comes to us with a distinctness and solemnity, sufficient to arouse the attention of the most thoughtless, but where are the devoted hearts and the strong hands which it should summon to the ramparts of the city of God?"

"The apostasy has begun—the 'falling away,' we say it with tears, is here, in our very midst, in our churches, in our households. Hundreds of souls have been seduced from the Anglican Church into the deadly embrace of Rome. What avails it that the secessions from the American Church have as yet been few: when Roman corruptions of doctrine are inculcated in our pulpits, and disseminated through the press? When the doctrines of the "Church Union" and the principle of Tract X C. are endorsed alike by the Rev. Charles Constantine Pise, in the pulpit of St. Peter's. Barclay street, and by the editor of the New York Churchman, and sent abroad by the Freeman's Journal and the Churchman, as the doctrine of PROTESTANT EPISCOPALIANS?"

The Protestant Churchman then exposes the Romanism of Rev. Evan M. Johnson, of Brooklyn, and of the "Churchman" newspaper, which is Mr. Johnson's apologist and herald, both of whom do not hesitate to reject the doctrine of justification by faith as a Lutheran heresy, and then it affirms the following as FACTS.

"Some of our clergy do not scruple to adapt their performances of the services of the church, as closely as possible to the Romish type. Prayers for the dead are taught, in connection with the expiatory sacrifice (so-called in the Eucharist,) Romish hymns to the Virgin are said to be sung in private meetings by students in theology. Sermons are preached and statements of doctrine are made, the utterance and publication of which, a few years since, would have brought down the rebuke of the church upon the offenders, and called forth an honest and emphatic protest from clergy and laity."

In our view there is no remedy for such apos-tacies—certainly none of any value, except in a thoroughly spiritual religion. If we are to have a religion of mere formalism, we may as well have it in the form of Romanism, as in the form of formal and soulless Episcopacy. Catholic formality is no worse than Protestant formality—so far forth as their respective bearings upon the salvation of the soul are concerned. We have no occasion now to speak of the political or social bearings of the two systems.

There is a heaven-wide difference between a religion of mere ceremony, and a religion of the heart. If the latter might only prevail in every Protestant communion, there would be small danger of apostasy to Romanism. Men who know any thing of real prayer to Jesus will have no occasion to offer prayers to the virgin Mary. Those who being justified by faith have found peace with God, will not be seduced to deny the doctrine of justification.

Prayer.

When ye pray, say, Our Father, &c.—Luke xi. 2.

Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss.—James iv. 3.

Many say the Lord's prayer who do not pray it; they (like Austin before his conversion, when he prayed for charity) are afraid lest God should hear them; they do not care that God should say amen, or so be it, though they themselves will say so. They say "Our Father," but if he be their Father, where is his honor? They say, "Which art in Heaven;" but did they believe it, how durst they sin as they do upon earth? They say, "Hallowed be thy name;" yet take God's name in vain. They say "Thy kingdom come;" yet oppose the coming of his kingdom. They say "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;" yet will not stand to their words, for this is the will of God, their sanctification; but they want none of that. They say "Give us this day our daily bread;" yet mind not the feeding of their souls with "the bread (Christ Jesus) which came down from heaven." They say, "Forgive us, as we forgive others;" but, alas! if God should take them at their word, how undone were they whose hearts burn with malice and revenge!—They say, "Lead us not into temptation;" and yet run into it, and tempt Satan himself to tempt them. They say, "Deliver us from evil;" and yet deliver themselves to evil, and give up themselves to "fulfil the lust of the flesh," &c.; yea, it hath been observed, that they sin most against this prayer who stickle most for the saying of it.

Reader, how often hast thou been guilty of such vain petitions and repetitions? Wonder not, if thou prayest in such a manner as this, that thou receivest nothing. Labor to get a deep sense of the majesty of God, and of his mercy, upon thy mind, that thy prayers may be fervent and earnest, and God will bless thee.

Assist and teach me how to pray,
Incline my nature to obey;
What thou allowest let me flee,
And only love what pleases thee.

Faith on Earth.

"Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18: 8.

What is faith? This question may be easily answered by taking the Word of God for our teacher. Paul says (Heb. 11: 1.), "Now faith is the substance [or confidence,—Macknight's Translation,] of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Here, then, we are told what faith is; which I understand to be confidence in something promised. For example, Christ has promised to 'come again.' Now, we have confidence in that promise, and are hoping for the fulfillment of it, and ("hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for?") when Jesus comes then our confidence or faith will be swallowed up in sight, and our hope will then be seen and realized, and will cease to be a hope any longer. Therefore, we learn, that faith is a belief [or confidence] in God and his Word. Which we find substantiated in Heb. 11: 7. In this passage we learn that Noah condemned the world. How did he do it? By his faith, or belief, or confidence which he had in God's word. God warned him of things not seen as yet, commanded him to prepare an ark to the saving of his own house. Did Noah believe God and do it? He did, most certainly. To be sure Noah must have been a gazing stock and a by-word for the wicked while he was building the ark on dry land, and getting ready for the great deluge which was coming on the earth. But Noah made his faith perfect by works; and became heir of that righteousness which is by faith.

If faith, then, is a belief in God and his word, how shall the inquiry of the blessed Jesus be answered? Shall he find faith [or this belief in the land,—Campbell's Translation,] on the earth?—I answer, I believe there will be but little. What, says one, but little faith on the earth, when there are so many professors in the world? You must be mistaken, say they. Well, I will give you my reasons. 1st. The text implies that there will be but little. 2nd. It is to be as it was in the days of Noah, when the Son of Man is revealed. How was it then? Were there multitudes that believed God then? Oh! no. Likewise, as it was in the days of Lot. Were there a great many believers then? I should judge that they were not very plenty, for there could not be found in all the cities of the plain ten righteous. 3rd. There is to be a departing from the faith in the last days, 1 Tim. 4: 1, 4. Read 2 Tim. 3: 1, 9. We have here a catalogue of sins of professors in the last days. Professors, did you say, sir? I did. Mark! they have a form of godliness but deny the power. This is not all. They are "men of corrupt minds, reprobates concerning the faith." Many other reasons might be produced, but these are sufficient.

If there is to be but little faith when Jesus comes, then, Oh! my brethren and sisters, let us "examine ourselves and see whether we be in the faith." Let us see to it that we have a saving faith, a perfect faith (made perfect by works). Oh! let us contend earnestly for the faith that was once delivered to the saints. My brethren, shall we cease to importune, when Jesus is about to avenge his elect speedily. Shall we cease to contend and lay down our armor and yield, when the victory is about to be given. Shall we shrink back, when we are about to enter the portals of eternal glory? Shall we give up our faith when it is about to be swallowed up in sight? This would suit many. But what say you, my brethren? Methinks I hear every true servant of God say, We will importune till we are avenged. We will contend for the faith, keep on the armor, and not yield. We will press forward toward the mark for the prize, and hold on to our faith without wavering. My soul responds Amen.

S. I. RONEY.

Dear Bro. Marsh,—The "Voice of Truth" is a welcome messenger to all our hungry souls in these trying times. The heaven-like spirit it breathes, the wholesome doctrines it advocates is food to my soul. I have recently visited the dear saints, in company with Bro. Dudley, in Burlington, Vt.; Essex, Jericho, Westford, Cambridge, and Champlain, N. Y. We found the little few that are scattered abroad generally strong in the faith of seeing Jesus this fall. I am now at Chateaugay. The little flock here are strong, praise God.

I remain your unworthy youthful brother in hope,

S. I. RONEY.

Termination of the 69 Weeks of Daniel.

Bro. Marsh:—I never like to differ from any of my brethren, especially from those who appear to have more of the teachings of the Spirit than I fear I have, yet, with your permission, I will say a few words to the scattered flock.

Bro. Hale has, I think, fixed by indisputable evidence, the eclipse which happened just before the death of Herod. This he shows, could not be earlier or later than B. C. 1. But I think we have the means of determining the time, when the 70th week began a little nearer than he has, and

1st. Jesus could not have been one year old when Herod sent forth his decree to slay the children in Bethlehem. Camp. trans. reads, "Then Herod, finding that he had been deceived by the magicians, was highly incensed, and dispatched emissaries, who slew, by his order, all the male children in Bethlehem, and in all the territory, from those entering the second year, down to the time he had procured exact information from the magicians. Matt. 2: 16.

2d. Jesus could not have been many days from 40 days old, when Herod issued his decree. For we read in Luke 2: 22, "And when the time of their purification was expired, they carried him to Jerusalem, as the law of Moses appointed," &c. We find by Lev. 12: 2-4, that this was 40 days. And we learn by Luke 2: 39, that they never returned to Bethlehem to live. They probably returned from Jerusalem to Bethlehem, to get what household goods they had, designing to remove immediately to their own city, Nazareth, but being warned of God, they fled into Egypt. But they were in Bethlehem when Herod sent forth his murderous decree; and he must have sent it forth not many days after the same the wise men mentioned in Matt. 2. Therefore the wise men must have visited the Saviour not many days from the time he was 40 days old.

The commencement of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, is so fixed by an eclipse, to Aug., A. D. 14; that I see no possibility of a mistake here. John began to preach in the 15th year of Tiberius. Luke 3: 1. This must have been somewhere between Aug. A. D. 28, and Aug. A. D. 29. In all probability, John began to preach when he was about 30, according to the law of Moses. If Christ had been born in Dec. B. C. 2, John would not have been 30 until the latter part of the 15th of Tiberius, the summer of A. D. 29, for John was about six months older than Christ. Luke 1: 29. It seems to me more probable that Christ was born about the time of the autumnal equinox, B. C. 2. He was baptized when he was about 30 years old. Luke 3: 23. Camp. trans. reads, "Now Jesus was himself about 30 years in subjection," &c. Admitting then that he was born in the autumn of B. C. 2, which is the farthest back we can put his birth, he could not have been baptized earlier than the autumn of A. D. 29, and been about 30 at his baptism. But we are told that after his baptism and before he preached, "The time is fulfilled." He attended a passover, which must have been in the spring of A. D. 30. John 1: 33, 34. Camp's trans. reads, "For my part I should not have known him, had not he who sent me to baptize in water, 'Upon whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining, the same is he that baptiseth in the Holy Ghost.'" Having therefore seen this, I testify that this is the Son of God." This language shows plainly that the Saviour had been baptized before this. A few days after this testimony from John, we find Jesus at Capernaum; but he staid there not many days, for the passover being nigh, he went up to Jerusalem.—John 2: 12, 13. We find in John 3: 23, 24, that John was not yet cast into prison. In Mark 1: 15, we read, "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee saying, 'the time is fulfilled,"—that is, the 69 weeks end, and the 70th begins. It seems plain then, to a demonstration, that the 70th week did not begin until after the passover of A. D. 37, and the 2300 days cannot end until the spring of 1847.

How long it was after the passover, before Christ preached "the time is fulfilled," I find nothing positive, but I think it could not have been long.

I thank the Lord for this light, and I think that Bro. Gross has shown conclusively in No. 6, "Sure Word of Prophecy," that the 1335 days do not end until April, 1847. I should rejoice to see the Lord sooner, but brethren and sisters, if we are to have one more year in which to labor to save souls, let us double our diligence;—be instant in season and out of season, remembering, that in due time, we shall reap if we faint not. The husbandman waiteth and hath long patience, until he receive the early and latter rain. Let us therefore in patience, possess our souls.—In a little while, he that is to come will come, and will not tarry. Yours, waiting,

J. WESTON.

New Ipswich N. H., March 16, 1846.

Bro. Z. Baker, to J. Pearson Jr.

Bro. Marsh:—For several months past I have had an increasing desire to write to my much esteemed brother, J. Pearson, Jr., but not fully knowing until recently, where to direct a letter so as to go directly to him, I have delayed writing, and now, wishing to have brother I. Howell share in the letter also—and not wishing any brother or sister to be deprived of the privilege or gratification (if such it be,) of knowing my present position, (especially yourself,) I have concluded that it is my duty to write to Br'n. P. and H., through the columns of your interesting weekly visitor, the Voice of Truth.

You will probably recollect that I was a subscriber for your paper, and encouraged others to become such, until the hope of Israel was in successful operation; at which time I embraced the views advocated in that paper, and then requested you to discontinue the Voice of Truth, which was promptly done. But I have again, and for the last six months, had the pleasure of perusing its pages (and I hope with profit,) through the agency of Bro. Wm. Gifford, and I am prepared to say that the paper has to me, much increased in value.

Permit me to say to brother Pearson, that when his renunciation first appeared, I was afraid he had renounced too much; but at the same time I could say, truly too, that I believed him strictly honest as before, nor have I ever doubted it since. In fact, his entire article breathed forth so much candor, meekness, humility, and love for the Bible, for the God of the Bible, for the gospel of the kingdom, and for the whole brotherhood, that I was able to say emphatically, that my love to him was not in the least impaired. And now Brother Pearson, let me emphatically say, that time, circumstances, and last, but not least, a careful, candid, prayerful, and persevering search of the Word of the Lord, comparing scripture with scripture, believing that the Spirit and Word agreed, (perfectly harmonized,) that I have come to similar conclusions with yourself. Let it be remembered that it is not hastily done. Praise our good God for the book of books—the Bible; the only document under the whole heaven, that can teach us the perfect way. I doubt not that you and Bro. H. (with whom I have had many precious seasons,) will thank God in my behalf. I have not any guilt to confess, for I embraced those views, viz: the Bridegroom come, and the shut door, the judgment past, the servants sealed, &c., honestly, and advocated them boldly, because I was not inclined to confer with flesh and blood; but since I have, by searching God's Book, seen they are errors, as an honest child, I must let go of them, and for the honor of the cause and comfort of the disciples of Jesus, make the facts in the case as publicly known, as I have advocated these errors. I think I have learned the procuring cause of those erroneous views. A portion of the humble, devoted, consecrated disciples of Jesus, were determined to prove true to their King, were willing to forego anything, whatever the case might require, or God's word demand at their hand. In the heat of their zeal they honestly believed that those promises which Jesus made to his apostles for their special encouragement, in view of the great work before them, were made to all believers. That is, they imagined that when Jesus promised his apostles that the Spirit should lead them into all truth; call to their remembrance all he had said to them—teach them things to come, and also, that whatever they should ask in his name, he would do for them—were made to believers of 1846. But this is a sad mistake, as will be seen by a careful and critical examination of the Word. Let those who still hold on to those errors above named, candidly and carefully search the Word as recorded in John 13th to 16th, and onward; and also other corresponding portions of scripture, and ask themselves the question, "did the Master promise un-inspired men who were liable to err and ask amiss, that whatever they should ask, (mark the expression, no reserve made,) the Father in the name of Christ, he would do it? Have any (since the apostles,) been able without the Word, to tell what would be on the morrow. I think not—certainly none in this our day, are able to tell what will be in the future without the aid of the prophetic word. But the Lord did promise his apostles, that the spirit of truth should bring to all their remembrance all that he had said while with them, and teach them things to come. In a word, lead them "into all truth." Therefore they could write out the past, present and future, down to the coming of Christ. He also appointed the time when it (the promise) should be fulfilled—which was at the coming of the Spirit, and not eighteen hundred years after, in this degenerate age.

Those honest, devoted, zealous souls, thought that the above promises were made to them and would be fulfilled to them, in answer to the prayer of faith. They also concluded that their feelings or impressions, were nothing less than the teachings of the Spirit, an infallible guide. Here we erred: and as an error in faith must lead to an error in practice, it is just what might be expected, that we should fall in error, as many have done.

But, you may enquire, why this change in my faith? I answer—some of the good brethren embraced and advocated feet washing, and denounced those who could not believe the Bible taught them to do the like. This caused me to see that the spirit that prompted this denouncement was of the enemy, and lead me to search the Word relative to the whole theory: feet washing, saluting with a kiss, the 7th day sabbath &c., and the result has been, I am satisfied all are unscriptural. To denounce honest souls because they cannot embrace and practice all these things, is wrong; is of the enemy, is not in harmony with the teachings of the inspired Word. I rejoice that I have seen and forsaken these errors—I have confessed to God, and found favor, because what I did, was done ignorantly; praise his Holy name. It is now idle for any one to tell me about the Lord having come in such a secret manner, that not one of his disciples knew anything about it until three months after! No,—no, this will not do: his coming will not be a matter of dispute: all will know it. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." Z. BAKER.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JUNE 24, 1846.

Removal of our Office.

We have removed our Office into Simpson's new block, on Works Street, just back of the Arcade. We occupy the second floor, in the west end of the building: entrance from Works St.

This Number.

We have now reached the close of Vol. X of our paper. We thank the Lord for enabling us, with the assistance of kind friends, to sustain it thus far. We hope another volume will be all we shall be called upon to publish. But should we meet with another disappointment, relative to the time of the coming of our Lord, and duty should seem to demand it, the paper will be continued. At any rate, it seems to be duty now to continue its publication.

To make the paper what it should be, our correspondents must again aid in furnishing good original matter for its columns. Some have been rather stinted of late in their contributions in this respect. We hope they will again bring things new and old, and often, out of the rich treasury of the Lord, for the edification, strength, and comfort of the household of faith.

Our receipts of late have been rather light. We now want all of our subscribers, who are indebted for their paper, to make payment immediately; or just as soon as your circumstances will admit. If any, to whom the paper has not been sent free, cannot pay, we wish them to say so, by letter, and we will square their accounts, and continue their paper if they desire it. These requests are fair, and should and will be attended to by every honest person. All can either pay what they owe for the paper, or inform us that they cannot do it. We wish no one to embarrass or distress himself and family on our account; neither do we wish any one to wrong his own conscience and the cause of God, by withholding our just dues when he has the means to pay.

A number of new subscribers have recently been added to our list; we thank our friends who have been active in obtaining them. And we think, with a united effort on the part of our readers, many more might be induced to take our paper. Will each one see what can be done in this good work?

Finally, brethren, pray for us; that the word of truth may be sounded out, thro' the medium of the 'Voice of Truth,' to the awakening of the sinner, and comfort of the saints, until our Lord shall come and reward every man as his work shall be. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly,—is the prayer of every one who loves his appearing.

The Powers of Heaven.

Says a correspondent, 'I would like to have you give your opinion upon the shaking of the powers of heaven—whether past or not.'

'My opinion,' in arriving at the true meaning of this or of any other Bible doctrine, is no better than that of any other man. Opinion is the decision of a speculative mind, without any certainty of the correctness of the conclusion to which he comes: it has no positive evidence to sustain it. Much, very much of what is called faith in the different sects of the day, is mere matter of opinion. The Christian world has been divided more on speculative opinions than plain truths of the gospel. The litigations that have distracted our ranks for a year or more past, have been about mere matters of opinion. Misguided ones have introduced their opinions, as texts of faith and practice, and contended for them with the zeal of a Jehu, rather than that which is according to knowledge.

We should be very cautious about giving our opinions on the doctrines of divine revelation. That plain and perfect Book was not given for the fruitful imagination of imperfect mortals to speculate upon, but to read and believe what it clearly teaches. Giving our opinions on this or that plain text of the Bible, has done incalculable mischief in the church and world. It has filled many an honest enquiring mind with distrust relative to the true meaning of the simplest portions of the word of God. It has thrown a dark veil of mysticism and unmeaning spiritualism over the true common sense meaning of that very easily to be understood book. Take away this veil, brush away this mystical darkness, and look for the meaning of the inspired word, guided by disinterested motives, and good common sense, and its meaning will readily be understood. If it is difficult at first to understand any part of it, compare scripture with scripture, and the difficulty will soon vanish. It is one perfect system of faith and practice, and needs to be generally understood, to comprehend the true import of its many parts.

We make these remarks, not for the purpose of rebuking our good brother for asking our opinion on the shaking of the powers of heaven, we thank him for the inquiry; but to prepare the mind of the reader to hear and believe what the Bible says on this highly important question.

In Heb. 12:26-29, it is said, 'Whose voice then [at the giving of the law on Sinai] shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven; and this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing those things that are [margin, may be] shaken, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore, we receiving a kingdom that cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire.'

This testimony shows that the earth before Paul's day had once been shaken, but shaking the heavens and earth were yet future: this, we are assured, God had promised to do, not spiritually, ecclesiastically, nor politically; neither a number of times, but 'yet ONCE MORE' he has promised to do it.—And the testimony clearly shows that when this once more shaking of heaven and earth takes place, those who have served God 'with reverence and godly fear' will receive the kingdom which never will be shaken. Hence the shaking to which my brother refers must be in the future, for the saints have not yet received the kingdom.

That this view is correct, is evident from the promise to which Paul refers. It is in Haggai 2: 6, 7, and reads, 'For thus saith the Lord of hosts, yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land, and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord.' No spiritual interpretation can be given to this text, without darkening counsel by words without knowledge. Indeed it is offering an insult to him who inspired it, to attempt to give a meaning to this testimony different from what the literal import implies. It says that God will, YET ONCE shake the heavens, earth, sea, dry land, AND all nations; and that the desire of all nations shall come. No such shaking as this has ever taken place, consequently, it must be yet in the future.

Joh. 14:12. 'So men lie down, and riseth not: until the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep.' When will the heavens be no more? They will be no more when the following texts have their fulfilment. Rev. 20: 11. 'And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.' Rev. 21: 1. 'And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea.' At this stupendous change, the predicted shaking of the heavens and earth, will be witnessed. Well, as the old heavens, earth and sea yet exist, we conclude their shaking is yet future.

In view of this shaking, and glorious change which will follow, we think the Psalmist speaks prophetically thus, 'The earth shook and trembled; the foundation also of the hills moved, and were shaken, because he was wroth. He bowed the heavens also, and came down; and darkness was under his feet. The Lord also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice: hail-stones and coals of fire.' Psa. 18: 7, 9, 13. 'Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, (that he may judge his people.) Gather ye my saints unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. Psa. 50: 3-5.—'Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down: touch the mountains, and they shall smoke. Cast forth lightnings, and scatter them: shoot out thine arrows and destroy them.' Psa. 144: 5, 6. Who can for a moment suppose the scenes here described are in the past, or any part of them? Doubtless they are in the future, but not far distant. The reality will far exceed in awful grandeur, the most vivid description which the word of inspiration can convey to our imperfect understandings.

Isa. 3: 19-21. 'And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.' Isa. 13: 6-13. 'Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.—Therefore shall all hands be faint, and every man's heart shall melt: and they shall be afraid: pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth; they shall be amazed one at another; their faces shall be as flames. Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. For the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible. I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir. Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger.'—Isa. 24: 17-23. 'Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth. And it shall come to pass that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake. The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it: and it shall fall, and not rise again. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.—And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited. Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.' Isa. 84: 1-5. 'Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people; let the earth hear, and all that is therein: the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter. Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood.—And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree.'

In these predictions the eye of the prophet was evidently on the terrific scenes of the great and terrible day of the Lord, when, as it is said (2Pet. 3:10 12) 'The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.—The heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved,' &c. At this time the 'powers of heaven will be shaken,' or, as it is said in Rev. 6, 14-17, 'And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together, and every mountain and island were moved out of their place. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men and every bond man, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?'

Jer. 4: 23-28. 'I beheld the earth, and lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light. I beheld the mountains, and lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. I beheld, and lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled. I beheld, and lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by his fierce anger. For thus hath the Lord said,—The whole land shall be desolate: yet will I not make a full end. For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it.' When will the heavens have no light, and the hills move lightly, as here predicted? At the coming of the Lord to 'make' all things new, when the old earth and heavens will be terribly shaken, and forever pass away, so that no more place will be found for them. This is the grand event to which the Savior alludes in his discourse as recorded in Matt. 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21, when he says, as Matthew has it, 'And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken.' Mark, 'And the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.' And as Luke says, 'For the powers of heaven shall be shaken.'—In each account, the appearing of the Son of man is intimately connected with the shaking of the powers of heaven, which is in perfect harmony with the numerous other prophecies of the events of that great day. They all, without one exception, make the dissolving, rolling together, bowing, passing away with a great noise, and the shaking of the heavens, literal, and intimately connected with the visible personal appearing of the Son of man. At his rising up to reign, to make all things new, is when the terrible shaking will commence. None of these things have yet been witnessed, but doubtless the dread day is very near when all will take place.

It should not be forgotten that but one shaking of the heavens, earth, sea, dry land, and all nations, is predicted in the Bible, and as no events in the past justify the description given of that shaking, we confidently say that it is yet in the future. And we fully believe that when it does take place, or even that terrible shaking commences, all will know it: there will be no difference of opinion about its character then, terrific facts will then forever settle this controversy. The righteous will understand the case to their everlasting joy, and lift up their now bowed down heads, and exclaim, 'Lo, this our God; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.' Isa. 25: 9. But the sinner and graceless religionist shall 'wail because of him;' or, as Campbell renders Luke 21: 26, they will then be 'expiring with the fear and apprehension of those things which are coming upon the world; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.' This shaking, this universal convulsion of nature, is what will produce this dying fear among the wicked. Then fearfulness will surprise the heart of the hypocrite; and the hands of the sinner will be faint, and his heart melt. This is the time of trouble spoken of in Dan. 12, when Michael shall stand up. Then all who are written in the book shall be delivered, and shine as the brightness of the firmament forever and ever, in the kingdom of God. The great day of these events may soon dawn upon us. Are we ready to meet it with joy? Answer to Him before whom you must soon appear.

Bro. Weston's Article.

The point of difference between us and Bro. Weston, we consider of minor importance. One believes that the 69 weeks terminated at the baptism of Christ, while the other thinks they ended about six months later; consequently making a difference in the two calculations, in the termination of the 2300 days, of only six months. This mere fraction of time, in computing the long period with which it is connected, we think should never be made matter of dispute. Hence we have felt no promptings to have much said in our columns on the subject; but being willing to let others speak their candid and honest convictions, to a certain extent, on this subject, we give Bro. Weston's article on another page.

The point, we think, may be easily settled. All that is necessary to do this, is, to understand the nature of, and give due weight to the testimony presented on each side of the question at issue. We will try to state the case as it is.

Bro. Weston thinks the 69 weeks did not end at the Baptism of Christ, but some time after, when Christ said, 'The time is fulfilled.' The evidence he presents is all inferential. Because it is said, 'the time is fulfilled,'—he infers that the 69 weeks then expired. Now we infer that Christ, when he said, 'the time is fulfilled,' referred to the past, as in another expression he evidently does: 'he hath anointed me' &c. Both expressions allude to the same event, the termination of the 69 weeks; for they were to end at the Anointed, or the anointing of Christ. We leave the reader to judge which inference is most probably correct.

But wishing to use no unfairness in the case, we will admit that the inferences of my brother are entitled to equal weight with those we have drawn. But we do not think either of us are entitled to the case if we have nothing more weighty to offer than inferential testimony. We have offered, in some former numbers of our paper, and now refer to it again, positive testimony, to prove that the 69 weeks extend to the 'Messiah the Prince,' or the Anointed, and that he was anointed at his baptism. There is not a declaration or fact recorded to prove directly or indirectly that Jesus was anointed at any other time than at his baptism. But stubborn facts do forever make it certain that he was anointed at that time. Hence, the case is to us clear as the unclouded sun that the 69 weeks ended at the baptism of Christ. To sustain his case, my brother must prove, by positive testimony that Jesus was anointed about six months after his baptism; this cannot be done from that book which alone should be our guide in all matters of this kind.

Our good brother's pamphlets on the locality of the New Jerusalem, were duly received, at a cost to us of 75 cents. We would be glad to aid him in selling them, but we think, to say nothing about the correctness of his position, that his evidences are all inferential, and such kind of testimony can never, by Bible students, be made the foundation of gospel faith. The Word, the plain word of the Lord, will only do us good now, in this time of trial, and alone enable us to abide the day of his coming.

Mr. Campbell before '43.

The following extract from Mr. Campbell's debate with Robert Owen, not only shows his position then on symbolic chronology, but strengthens the views we now entertain relative to the time of the coming of our Lord. The argument which Mr. C. gives is clear and weighty, and is one which he (Mr. Owen) or any other man cannot overthrow: nothing but the passing by of '47 can prove it unsound. What, then, should be our faith? we do not say opinion, but faith, UNWAVERING FAITH. If there is evidence that Christ will appear in '46, or the extreme point of '47, we should believe it with all our hearts, and show our faith by corresponding works. Not a valid reason can be offered why we should do differently.

This case is an important one, and fearing it will not be fully understood, we repeat, that if the evidence to us is conclusive, we can see no defect in it—it seems clearly to prove that Christ will come in '46 or '47, we are duty bound to believe it. Faith depends on testimony—the testimony is before us, and well understood—it is definite, clearly points to '46, or '47 the extreme, for the advent of Christ; and to be unbelieving, is rejecting testimony we cannot gainsay. Lord help our unbelief. Mr. Campbell says:—

"The prophecy of Daniel more circumstantially describes the time in the wonderful vision which he explained for Nebuchadnezzar. In this vision there was a prospective view of the history of the world from the time of the Chaldean or Assyrian monarchy, down to the end of time. Two incidents in this prophecy are worthy of notice.—First, the time fixed for the commencement of the new kingdom of God in the world: and second, that the Roman empire once subdued, there should never again be a universal empire upon the earth, save that of the crucified King.

"Now we do know what efforts have been made to build up great empires, and how abortive they have proved. The most successful effort ever made since the downfall of the Romans, was that made by Napoleon. In the year 1813, he controlled the temporal destinies of sixty-four millions of human beings: but what was this number to the whole population of Europe, to say nothing, of the other three quarters of the globe? Nothing like a universal empire has ever been established, since the division of the Roman into ten comparatively petty sovereignties.

"But Gabriel informs Daniel more definitely of the date of the Messiah's birth, and of the commencement of the last great empire. He says, seventy weeks are determined upon the people. And so on through all the rest of the chapter.

"When I have made another extract from Daniel, we have all the data before us. 'How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.' Now, as the Lord said to Ezekiel,

I have appointed one day for a year, we are at no loss in coming to the following conclusions. From the time of the going forth of the decree to rebuild Jerusalem, until the death of the Messiah, would be three-score and nine and a half weeks; that is, a period of four hundred and eighty-five or eighty-six years. Seven weeks make forty-nine years, sixty-two weeks make four hundred and thirty-four years, and in the middle of the week he was to establish the New Institution; that is, three and a half or four years more. From the going forth of the decree to rebuild Jerusalem, to the baptism of Jesus, was four hundred and eighty-three years—his ministry was three and a half years, or the middle of one week; then he was cut off. And in half a week, that is, three and a half years more, Christianity was sent to all nations. This completes the seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety years of Daniel.

"Now from the birth of Jesus till the general proclamation of the Gospel, was about thirty-seven years, which, subtracted from four hundred and ninety, makes the nativity of Jesus four hundred and fifty-three years from the commencement of the rebuilding of Jerusalem, which occupied seven weeks, that is, forty-nine years. Daniel then fixes the time of the nativity; the commencement of the kingdom, or confirmation of the covenant; and the ultimate cleansing of the sanctuary, or purgation of the Christian church from anti-Christian abominations. This last event was to be two thousand three hundred years from the aforesaid date. That is, from the birth of Jesus about eighteen hundred and forty-seven years. Now from these premises, it is clearly established that the Messiah should be born while the second temple was standing; before the sceptre and a lawgiver finally departed from Judah; in the reign of the Roman Casars; and four hundred and fifty-three years from the commencement of the rebuilding of Jerusalem. And does not the event exactly correspond with the predictions?" (p. 84.)

CHRISTIAN LIKE.

"The following frank explanation of the 'Oberlin Evangelist,' is Christian-like, and honorable to the conductors of that paper. It fully atones for the wrong impression made, a few weeks since, by the Evangelist, in noticing the delusions of certain misguided ones, who have gone out from among us, to their own disgrace, and we fear ruin.

We see, however, that the Evangelist is still laboring under a mistake, relative to the doctrine of "impulses" being "somewhat prevalent among second advent believers." We readily admit that this statement is true of certain individuals among us; but their small number is, we believe, on the rapid decrease. The doctrine prevalent among us, on this point, is to be led by no other guide than the plain word of the Lord, the Bible. The doctrine of impulses we consider the foundation of all delusion, and grossest licentiousness.

The following is the Evangelist's

"EXPLANATION."

"We learn from 'The Voice of Truth and Glad Tidings'—that our recent article on 'Second Advent People,' is understood to imply that all or at least most of those who have been called 'Second Advent people' have run into the fanaticism there alluded to. We intended to make no such implication. We only said—'we know of some' who hold or act thus and thus;—we hear of such and such things at particular localities, &c. We knew and meant to leave the impression that all had not embraced these new forms of delusion. It would have been well if we had made this point more distinct and specific. Far be it from us to do injustice to those who are exempt from the fanaticism in question.

"In our view the doctrine, somewhat prevalent among Second Advent believers—that the Spirit leads by mere impulses—is the legitimate parent of all these worst forms of fanaticism.

"As to the extent of this fanaticism and its relation to the Adventists as a body, the Voice of Truth states the facts thus:—

"The cases of fanaticism and corruption to which the Evangelist alludes, we as a people have seen, deplored, and again and again discountenanced, rebuked, and from the pulpit, through the press, and in every proper way, declared our dis-fellowship for the misguided individuals who are guilty of such things. Also, those persons are not now identified with us, either by themselves or the great body; they have gone out from us and followed their own pernicious ways. Moreover, their numbers are few, compared with the number of the whole body. And we rejoice to learn that a number of these few misguided ones, have seen and humbly confessed their errors, and have returned again to the fold of Christ, and are now walking in the truth; and we think we have just grounds for believing that others will soon follow in the same path to their Father's house."

Letter from Bro R. Hutchinson.

TO THE ADVENT BELIEVERS IN CANADA EAST.

Beloved Brethren:—I cannot leave the shores of America, without addressing a few words to you, as I feel a deep and continued interest in your spiritual welfare. I need not enter into any labored explanation of our "precious faith," as I have done this while present with you. Most of the light which I have received, I have communicated to you. And I have every reason to believe that you have treasured it up in your minds and hearts. But "suffer the word of exhortation." Let me say then, keep your eye fixed on the coming of the Lord from heaven. This is the hope of the Church,—the source of her comfort, and the great motive to Christian action.

And this long-looked for and long desired event must be nigh at hand, even at the door. Yes, the fulfilment of the prophecies,—the harmonious termination of sacred chronology about now, and the signs of the times,—all admonish us that the end of all things is just upon us. The safe position seems to be—the event may come to day, it will come soon. This is the ground on which I stand. And here I find firm footing. It is easy for persons of the humblest capacities to give a substantial reason for such a hope. However, we are warranted in looking with special interest for the realization of our hopes, before eighteen hundred and forty-seven shall have passed away. You are acquainted with the argument on which the expectation is based.

I would say, above all, live in a state of complete and habitual readiness for a participation in the glory and blessedness which are coming.—Carry out the holy principles of the Gospel in your entire deportment. Be unlike this world—be like the world to come; that is as it regards your moral spirit and practice. In a word, be Christians in the sense of the Sacred Scriptures.

Dear Brethren, love one another with a pure heart fervently. Hold the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Keep up your meetings. "Consider one another to provoke (induce) to love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Encourage those ministering Brethren who are of good report, and who may come among you with enlightened and affectionate presentations of Divine truth.

Also cultivate a love of holy compassion toward those who are in darkness and sin. Our advent history, and the treatment we have received from all classes, are liable to gender in us a hard, censorious spirit. But we must rise above this, brethren. While God is long-suffering, we must, in this respect, "be followers of God as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us."

Beloved in the Lord, I may never see you again during the present state of things; but I hope to meet you all on the "Continent of glory."

Live till the Lord in glory come,

And wait his heaven to share;

He now is fitting up your home,

Go on! I'll meet you there.

By the grace of God I will. So help me heavenly Father. Such a meeting will be an ample remuneration for all our trials, cares, sufferings, and partings, in the cause of Jesus. However, should a wise and gracious Providence permit me to return, I trust that I shall find you all walking in the truth,—presenting a Christian front to those by whom ye are surrounded,—practically bearing in mind that you are connected with the greatest development of Biblical truth which has distinguished the Church since the Apostolical age. Had you been at the late Conference of Adventists in Boston, you would not have thought that what our opponents are pleased to call "Millerism," is dead. The Advent movement is destined to progress till the Son of Man shall come in his glory.

In conclusion, I would remind you, that I unceasingly remember you in my prayers. I shall continue to do so. Let me often meet you at the throne of grace. Give me and the mission with which I am associated, a share in your sympathies and prayers. In a few hours I sail for England in company with my esteemed fellow laborers, Brn. Himes and Brown. I feel that I am leaving home. The Lord bless you.

Yours in the most endearing bonds,

R. HUTCHINSON.

Boston, June 1, 1846.

Letter from Bro. D. I. Robinson.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—We have just closed our conference at Cleveland, O. It was upon the whole better than I expected ever to see here again. The attendance at the first was not so large as we wanted, but at the last was larger than we looked for; and better attention, feeling and effect than any, perhaps, anticipated. One was baptised. Some came to hear for the first time in their lives. Those converted at your meeting last winter came 25 miles (mostly on foot I heard) to attend—warm in faith and love—a good example to older believers, and just as they used to do. Bro. Porter and Pearson go to Cincinnati. Bro. Mansfield, and Bro. Seymour and wife, to Michigan, and Bro. Needham,—our hearts were gladdened with a good letter from him, in which we hear, that though his health was poor from labors and trials, his soul was strong in faith and joy at the coming Lord, and his wife is entirely recovered from her severe affliction, which for a few weeks was severe. The calls for lectures are many and urgent, and we have seen the lowest ebb of the cause, we think; it is now rising and will live till the Lord comes, for it is his cause and truth. There is also a call to go to Jamaica, and the West Indies. Ohio and Indiana, both need a good travelling lecturer; and Akron, Ohio, one who all the time can be a wise and faithful shepherd.

I close my labors here next sabbath, and go to Akron the sabbath following; beyond which, I do not know whether I stay west, go east, or to the West Indies. But God, who has thus far led, will direct us and provide for us still.

Now cannot some of the poor, humble, faithful laborers come out and feed God's hungry sheep, and they will feed him. Bro. Mansfield will take my place here in three weeks, God bless him, and make him a blessing.

D. I. ROBINSON.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 15th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. Mitchell.

Bro. Marsh:—Although a stranger in body, I take the privilege of addressing you as brother; one of the most tender relations on earth, and I humbly trust I may merit it. I am with you, a looker for that blessed hope—yea, the consummation of all hope, the appearing to view of our now absent, elder Brother.

I have been a believer in this soul-reviving doctrine for several years, and with you, have met with several disappointments; but, bless the Lord, if cast down, I have not fallen—and tho' fallen, the Lord would raise me up.

I had several of your valuable papers sent me by some brother, and am very much pleased with them. I think they breathe a liberal spirit. I desire to get all the information on the great subject I can; I therefore wish you to send me one copy. There is none taken by any of the brethren in this city, at least that I know of.—There is a united little band of about 50, who meet regularly three times on Sabbath, and twice during the week, to exhort one another—and the best of all, the Lord is among them. The wild Fanaticisms of the North, East, and West, have not disturbed us any, (thanks to God.) No Millennialism, no Judaism, no Spiritualisms of the feeling kind—abstract from the good Word, has scattered our ranks nor weakened our faith: we stand on the old platform; believing that that same Jesus who has ascended, shall in like manner descend, and that speedily—many of us look with interest to this fall, or the spring of '47.—One thing we feel assured of: it will not tarry long. O, that we all may be ready to hail that glad day, and meet each other whom now we love, though far parted in person.

We see the perils that surround us. Men are traitors, high minded, lovers of pleasure more than of God, though they have forms of their own, of godliness. O how ominous are all external things, that soon, very soon, God will assemble the kingdoms, that he may pour all his fierce indignation upon them who have slighted his holy word. What manner of persons ought we to be then, who look for such things. O how humble! O how holy. Our lives should be perfect indexes to the truth of Revelation. But I am running from what I intended writing. I did not intend saying anything of this kind when I commenced. I merely desired a paper, and to let you know that there a few, even in this land of bondage, who love liberty, and who desire the year of release to come, that all shackles may be loosed and the prisoners let go free. O, how long shall tyranny, death and hell, reign. May it be swallowed up of victory.

Believe me to be your brother in the patient faith of Christ.

JOS. B. MITCHELL.

Baltimore Md., May 27, 1846.

Letter from C. R. Griggs.

Bro. Marsh:—The wise man says, "Buy the truth and sell it not"; also, "wisdom, and instruction, and understanding." And while I write I pray God to give me wisdom and instruct me into a right understanding of his truth as it is in his blessed word. I feel that some of our brethren are selling God's truth. Some are selling it for the honours of the world, and some for the sake of "filthy lucre;" but in either case, God is not well pleased. But how do they sell it for the honours of the world? By being ashamed to confess God and his truth, before the world, lest they be reproached for the worthy name by the which they are called. Of such, Jesus will be ashamed when he comes in his kingdom. We read that the friendship of the world is enmity against God, and who would be a friend of the world is an enemy of God. Then let us see to it, that we own this Jesus, defend his noble cause, and keep out of the snares of the devil.

Some refuse to speak the truth lest they should displease their brethren; especially those that have much of this world's goods. This is very wrong, and God will send leanness to that soul who thus shuns to declare his counsels for fear of feeble man. What matters it to you, whether they love your preaching or not? God bids you speak out, and how dare you refuse to obey the mandate? If it offends, it shows at once, that God is not there; "for great peace have they that love thy law and nothing shall offend them."

I am aware that many of our brethren when they preach to those that are rich among us, do not speak out the truth upon this subject as they ought, and it is through slavish fear that it is so. I have been there, but, by the grace of God, I am out of that place, and now, fearless of what the consequences may be, I preach the whole truth, leaving the event with the Lord. I have felt as many of my brothers do, that if I spoke out the plain truth, as it is in God's Book, relative to the rich man, his duty, and his doom, he would think I cared more for the "loaves and fishes" than the souls of men. But I have, in the strength of God, resolved, knowing that he knows my heart, that whatever may be the feeling of those toward me, or treatment to me, God's truth, as far as I know it, SHALL BE SPOKEN. Glory to God I feel happy in rehearsing the resolution. I feel this is scriptural ground; for, says the Word, "How can ye be my disciples while ye seek honour one of another?" We should have no respect to persons in this respect. What says God of the rich man? His language is, They shall hardly enter his kingdom. Then, shall we not tell the awful doom of him who grasps the golden treasure? "Go now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you; your riches are corrupted, your garments are moth eaten, your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you and shall eat your flesh as it were fire." Oh! my God, and is it true that those who have their thousands must soon be engulfed in the fires of the last great day? They now might give much to God's suffering poor, and for the spread of his blessed cause, but they will not do it. Say, is it true that such can refuse to devote their substance to the Lord? Yes, it's true, and among those who are professing to look for the Lord; but what is their hope? It is like the spider's web, and the giving up of the ghost.

"But," says he whom it may concern, and the money-loving Judas, "I know not where, nor how much to give." God tells you, if you see your brother have need, and shut up your bowels of compassion from him, the love of God does not dwell in you. But, say you, I don't see any thing have need? I ask you in the name of my God whom I serve, to look at the receipt for the last few weeks of the "Glad tidings of the Kingdom at Hand," and then say if you have nowhere to give. Look at the suffering cause of God, at your own condition, as it will be when you stand in the judgment and decide whether you have done your duty as a faithful servant,

Ye heralds of the cross, speak out the truth. No more regard the persons of men. No more "sell" or swerve from the truth for fear of him who brings a snare; regard no more the shining dust. He who clothes the lillies of the field, remembers you, and will supply your need. That God who feeds the ravens when they cry, if no other way, will by ravens feed his children when they pray. Have faith in God; retire not from the field; the harvest is great, the labourers few. Upon every breeze is walled to our ears, in tones of thrilling character, "Help! help!" brothers! Have you left the field? For what? The echo from heaven comes back, For what? Enter it again in the name and strength of the God of Gods, trusting alone in Him for support; He will take care of you. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and ALL these things (food and raiment) shall be added unto you." The Lord is soon coming to reward the faithful soul with life eternal in his everlasting kingdom.—Then, with St. Paul's salary, go on your way rejoicing, and whether you receive Forty dollars or "Forty stripes," thank God and leave the consequences with him. Oh! for more ardent love to Jesus and his blessed cause, and stronger faith in God. Let us suffer on our few more days and home to a better land we'll go. I feel to cry, "This world is not my home," I seek a home in Heaven. A few more conflicts here below and the mortal strife is ended, and the weary "Pilgrim" is at rest in the Paradise of God. Brethren be faithful; toil and labour; weep, watch, pray, and suffer on till our Jesus comes, and "crowns of Glory you shall wear, with our God eternally."

Your brother for the truth, and in hope of the Glory of God,

C. R. GRIGGS.

Brimfield, Mass., June 4, 1846.

Bro. W. Ongley, Manlius, N. Y., June 9, writes:—I am happy to inform you and the brethren scattered abroad, that my wife is lecturing in different school houses to attentive congregations, in several towns. There is a greater desire to hear on the speedy coming of Jesus, than there was; praise the Lord. I am with my wife doing all I can in singing, praying, telling the people the Lord is coming: the evidence is clear to us; we believe He will come this fall; and our prayer is, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, Amen.

We had the privilege of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which my wife gave 3 lectures; but I fear that the seed that is sown in weakness falls too much by the way side and stony places. The true advent believers are glad we have visited them, have been encouraged and strengthened in the speedy coming of our blessed Lord. In the town of Vanburen a few honest souls have been converted unto the faith. While we are made to rejoice in this glorious doctrine we are led to weep and cry out, where are those brethren and sisters who were so active in this glorious truth? Some of the mighty are fallen; but, nevertheless, the Word of the Lord standeth sure. Thank God, some have again turned from their idols to serve the living and true God.

Bro. N. D. Smith, Orland, Ia., May 31, writes:—It has been, and is now, a great satisfaction to me to have the privilege of perusing your worthy paper, the "Voice of Truth," setting forth the very near approach of our great benefactor. I feel that this faith cannot be gainsayed. Notwithstanding, many who heard Bro. E. Miller in this town, say he preached Bible, yet they do not believe his word; and I think the time is come that judgment must begin at the House of God, and if it first begin with us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God! When I view the end so nigh as it appears to be, and looking around upon the professed part of the community, preachers and people, I am astonished at the insensibility and stupidity of what is called the Christian Church. Blindness is come upon them and they will not open their eyes that they might see. O, that the awakening angel, commissioned from the court of Heaven, would proclaim in tones of thunder in the ears of those that stand as spiritual watchmen, that they might give the trumpet a certain sound. But instead of being awake in the good cause of God, they say, by their acts, a little more sleep, a little more slumber, and it is to be feared that, preachers and people, will slumber on till Jesus comes! O, then, with deep remorse, will they call for the rocks and mountains in vain to fall on them.

Sister O. Smith, Orland, Ia., May 31, writes:— Since I last wrote you I have had the privilege of hearing two lectures from Bro. Ephraim Miller, on the second coming of Christ, for which I feel truly thankful; may the Lord sustain him and all others who are spreading the glad tidings, and provide for them fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters in this world, and in the world to come life everlasting. Oh! how I should love to aid in spreading this glorious gospel of the kingdom. It is with the greatest delight that I peruse your worthy paper: it is meat and drink indeed to my soul. How lonely should I be without it!

This is an interesting day in which we live. The hope of deliverance to the captives just before us, is soul-cheering; and who can bear to be idle when we can see the day-star just beginning to appear in sight. A few more days, at most, will usher us into the blissful presence of God and the Lamb, and all that blood-washed throng that have gone before, to sing the praises of God forever without the dimming veil of sin between us and our Saviour, where separations from those whom we love will never come. Oh! happy, happy company! Is it possible that an unworthy creature like me, will ever realize those joys? Oh! if I am deceiving myself, how great that disappointment will be! but I am determined to trust in God, the never-failing fountain that never will run dry; there may I

"Bathe my weary soul
In seas of heavenly rest,
And not a wave of trouble
Roll across my peaceful breast."

Bro. S. Gears, North Scituate, R. I., June 1, writes:—I praise the Lord that he has a few servants upon the walls of Zion, who are able to tell the time of night, in the midst of so much moral darkness. I feel like a pilgrim and a stranger in this world of sin and wickedness, but I have a blessed hope of soon being delivered from this world for ever, to dwell in the new earth. The solemn appeal from Bro. Weston, in Nos. 5 & 6, was a rich feast to my soul: it led me to a deep searching of my heart to see if I was doing all in my power for the blessed cause in which we are engaged. My prayer is, that God bless the appeal to the good of all the brethren.

The Church of God in this place are endeavoring to hold fast the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end. We believe God has been leading the advent people the few years past; that he is still leading them, and that he will be with them to the end. Our faith is, that '46 or '47 will bring all that we have looked for. Brothers, be strong: you shall have my prayers that God would grant unto you all that wisdom, strength, and power that you need. If ever I felt like praying for God's servants it is now.

We meet every sabbath for worship, and have prayer and conference meetings 3 times a week. We mean to let the heathen know that God is yet with his people. We are often visited by the faithful servants of God who preach the gospel, with the Holy Ghost, sent down from Heaven.— Besides Bro. Bellou, a humble servant of God, who resides with us and whom we highly esteem in love for his work, preaches to us the Word. We are richly blest, for which I feel to live humble.

Bro. W. M. Ingham, Boston, Mass., June 2, writes:—We had a very good conference in Boston; I believe time is short, and what is done must be done quickly. I think we are giving the last invitation to the supper; soon our work will cease, and Jesus will come and call all the children to the supper of the Lamb. Lord help us to be ready, that we may be presented to him without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, holy and without blame.

Bro. G. W. Burnham, Little Falls N. Y., May 26, writes:—Last Sunday I attended meeting at Ingham's mills,—heard Elder Beach of Oppenheim in the forenoon, preach the simple truth as it is in Jesus. My soul was comforted. He appears yet strong in the faith of the speedy consummation of God's promises, and is waiting for the Lord from heaven. There are a few precious souls in the circle of his labors, who are in love with the appearing of Jesus, expecting the crown of life at that day! O, blessed hope of eternal life! how many are despising the priceless treasure, the eternal reality of perfect bliss with the saints robed in white, redeemed from all tribulation, of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people under heaven—blest with the great company of angels, and with the Lamb! My soul cries out at times, "O earth, earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord!" "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people."

In the neighborhood of Brockett's Bridge, I have to inform you with grief, Brother Marsh, the "gold has truly become dim, and the most fine gold is changed." The scene is painful.— It was told me by a broker in the place with whom I conversed yesterday, and who sighs and cries over the desolation, that the moral state of the people is worse, if possible, than before the revival some few years ago. I think it is far more deplorable, and fast tending to destruction. But, glory to God's name, a few live by faith, and wait for their glorious change. This state of things universally existing,—so clearly a fulfilment of the words which the holy ghost inspired ages ago, cannot continue long—a dreadful retribution is hastening! O my God, prepare us to meet the Judge with joy.

COUNTLESS MILLIONS of Locusts have made their appearance in various parts of Tennessee, making a tremendous noise, like the continuous rolling of a thousand drums. The upper counties of Mississippi are also infested with them. They are from one to two inches in length, about the size and shape of the largest meadow bees in New England, of a brown or snuff color, with red, porcelain-like prominent eyes. They have done no damage to the foliage of the trees; they live on song, and as their mission of procreation finishes itself, they drop dead from the trees, the ground being already covered with their dead. The letter W is plainly marked on their wings. They have not appeared before since 1833, at which time the cholera was pervading this Mississippi country; and then they were marked with the letter C.—True Sun.

FROM THE COAST OF AFRICA.—Capt. Yarrington, of the Brig Pauline, at Boston, reports that on the 18th of March, at Roavista, Cape Verde Islands, the Yellow Fever and Black Vomitus were raging. Since October last, it was stated, that between 4000 and 5000 had died, and all the principal inhabitants had left the Island.—A British steamer (supposed a man of war) which had stopped there, had lost 70 or 80 men. The English colonies had sent three vessels with provisions to the poor; and at the Island 2000 bushels of corn had been collected and sent to St. Nicholas.

At Goree, 25th ult. the small pox was raging. Two hundred of the inhabitants had died in about 20 days. Nearly every family had three or four sick. The hospital was full. It was carried there by a French steamer from the river Gaboon, which had lost nearly all hands. There were at Goree 20 men of war, six steamers, three large ships from 5 to 700 tons, with coal, and two iron brigs for water boats. The Island is about one mile long and three fourths of a mile broad, and contains from 6 to 7000 inhabitants.

AWFUL CALAMITY.—It is reported that 43 persons were recently burnt to death in Quebec, in a Theatre which took fire by the explosion of a lamp. Husbands and wives, and their children, perished together by the devouring flames in this sink of iniquity, the Theatre.

Appointments.

Our paper is always printed on Saturday, previous to our publishing day. Friends should remember this, who wish an early insertion of their appointments.

A two days meeting is appointed in Bristol, Addison Co., Vt., to commence June 27. Brethren from abroad, especially those who can give meat in due season, are requested to attend.

W. WHITFORD.

Adison, Vt., June 13, '46.

Bro. T. F. BARRY has recently spent a few weeks with his old friends in this city, and preached the word of life and comfort to the congregation of his former charge. He is now located at Oswego, Oswego Co. N. Y., were he wishes his friends to address him.

News of The Day.

The difficulties between this country and Great Britain, about the Oregon territory, are in a fair way of amicable settlement, if not now settled. But little news of much interest is now heard from the seat of war in Mexico. We shall be disappointed if peace is not soon restored between the two Republics. This is our opinion. The "four winds," evidently, are yet held—such small outbreaks, and their being quickly restrained, or settled, only confirm us in the settled belief that a general war will not be witnessed, until the battle of the Great day of God Almighty takes place. This will be a war of the kings of the earth with the Lamb, not with each other. Thank the Lord, the Lamb will overcome them.

OBITUARY.

Sister — Thompson, wife of Bro. Isaac Thompson, died in Broadalbin, Fulton Co. N. Y., May 25th, 1846, aged 59 years, 10 months, and 17 days. She was a wife, a mother, a neighbour, and christian, greatly beloved in her life, and deeply lamented in her death. And, of her, it may truly be said, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Bro. Marsh:—It becomes my painful duty to inform you of the demise of our dear Brother, SALMON H. JONES. He fell asleep in Jesus, as we humbly trust, on the 10th inst. He had long lingered with consumption, yet, until the last six months, used to meet with us often, exhort us to be "diligent," to "hold fast the profession of our faith, believing that the great Shepherd would soon come and gather his scattered flock, when the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess it forever and ever." His funeral was attended on the 13th by a large audience, when a very appropriate discourse was given by Bro. J. P. Teats, founded on Rev. 14: 13.

"The Time is Short."

1 Cor. vii. 29.

Tune—Zion.

Yes, the golden moments hasten,
Swift they bear us to the end;
Dwellers of probation, listen,—
To the warning voice attend!
Heaven is watching
How the fleeting time you spend.

Are you surfeiting in riches,
Overwhelmed with earthly care?
Then 'tis true you'll not gain heaven;
For the Scriptures oft declare That the Judgment
Shall fall on you as a snare.

Art thou looking for a chaplet
From the hand of earthly Fame?
Is it day and night thine effort
On her scroll to have a name?
Oh how sudden
Will thine honor turn to shame!

Can it be the cup of Pleasure
That allures thee thus away,
From a bright and heavenly treasure
Glistening in eternal day?
Spurn—oh spurn it,
God's own mandate now obey.

Time is passing—Time is passing,
Grasp the moments as they fly;
And ensure your soul's salvation,
Now the God of mercy's sigh.
Turn ye—turn ye,
Child of earth, why will ye die?

See—the Angel is approaching,
Standing on the sea and shore,
He will lift his hand to heaven,
Swearing, 'Time shall be no more!'—
When forever
Will be closed bright mercy's door.

Remarks on the Impotency of the Present Christianity on Earth, to Evangelize the World.

BY S. M. M'CORKLE.

A pious, humble, dovotional life, acting out the precepts of the gospel, affords the best argument in favor of the christian religion. When this is wanting, other arguments avail but little. "'Tis in the deed, the authentic, the unequivocal deed, we read the man." The christian world, thus read, brings a sad report. The heart sickens with every days report of murders, thefts, robberies, and outrages on civil or religious restraints. Moral restraints are fast leaving the world, and civil restraints must follow. Mingle with the every day communications of professed christians; the fireside chit-chat of those who look for glory, immortality and eternal life; and what is heard or what is seen on the busy theatre of human existence? Was there ever such a time for schemes, plans, efforts and enterprise; all stimulated with some inflated hope of gain.

Speculation is rolling from east to west, with the width of an ocean and the strength of a torrent; enlisting almost the whole community into some mania for growing rich. But few, either in the church or out of it, who remain unaffected by the prevalent contagion: Now, if the love of money be the "root of all evil," what may we expect, when it is spreading like a pestilence, and enlisting all classes of mankind into the madning pursuit. If the spirit of speculation, the love of money which now exists, can pass off and leave the world unhurt, leave no baneful influence on society, we may have some room for questioning the Apostle's assertions. But the assertion of the Apostle is amply sustained in the abounding corruption of the christian world; in the terrible increase of crime, and thirst for filthy lucre. Money seems to be the propelling principle of all human action, of almost the whole machinery in the civil or religious world. Has not this corrupting principle wormed itself into every branch of the church, shedding a mildew on vital piety? We have made a very incorrect observation on the christian world, if there is half the piety among professors that was manifest in the holy living, pious devotion, unaffected humility, of by gone days. Christian piety is evidently on the wane, taking the churches in the aggregate. The spirit of Christ is leaving the world, and the spirit of the world gaining ground daily. A terrible increase of crime obvious to all, and the energies of the Pulpit abating in a fearful ratio to the increase of vice. The Pulpit has become contaminated with prevalent corruption; the pathetic eloquence it once wielded against sin, is exchanged for a senseless vociferation, supplying a lack of devotion, or such ideas and motives as should operate on intelligent beings.

Now, is this Pulpit shorn of its strength, paralyzed in all its powers to perform miracles without the aid of miracles—evangelize the world by unworthy means—beat the sword into a ploughshare, and the spear into a pruning hook—bid the jarring interest, the warring elements of the human family cease, and fill the earth with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea—bid the fierce Arabs to cease their hostilities to christians, and abandon their religion for another, which they have been taught to despise from their birth. Is the Pulpit to conquer by impotent argument, the fearless sons of Ishmael, whose religion, manners, customs, interest, and sword, has been at war with all the human family for near 4000 years? Can the ruthless savages of America be brought to gospel obedience in ten thousand years, by such means as those by which they have been assailed in the present generation. Means must be equivalent to the purposed ends; and must be congenial with those ends. Corrupting means commonly produce corrupt ends. Now, what are the means brought into requisition by the Pulpit or the churches for the purpose of evangelizing the world? See the ceaseless appeals made by the Pulpit, on a credulous world, for filthy lucre, to convert the Hindoos with the "thousand and one" societies for spreading the gospel in heathen lands. We have nothing to the disparagement of these societies to advance: the mania is probably on the wane. Like man's doings in common, they were big with preparation and promise, but sad delinquents in point of fact. They were to usher in millennial glories, and by the potency of filthy lucre, were to carry the glad tidings of salvation round the world. This demoralizing principle—the mammon of unrighteousness, the Sampson that has plucked the pillars from thrones and empires—the power that paralyzed the right hand of christianity; by the magic potency of plenty, is to be transformed into an angel of light, and plant the ensigns of the cross in every land and nation under heaven—The bubble may have burst, we pretend not to say. But one thing is certain: the facts which present themselves at home, stand in dark contrast with the inflated promises and visionary schemes. At home, where we can appeal to facts, and see the demoralizing influence of filthy lucre, our senses are shocked by horrid reports by every post, of licentious men outraging all restraints of God or man.

Instead of an increase of heavenly devotion, we have an awful increase of crime—mobs and riots the order of the day, and robberies which sometimes occurred in remote highways, are of common occurrence at noon day in the most populous cities: and when a misguided church was looking for the reign of universal peace, a reign of terror seems to be springing up: and when the anxious anticipation of hope was expecting the sword to be beaten into the implements of husbandry, what see we, but the hostile array of nations putting on the most formidable feature of universal warfare?

We are not palming the increase of crime on the Pulpit directly, nor on the thousand societies which the pulpit has gotten up, but we are showing the impotency of the means brought into requisition, and the delusive hope they are inspiring. They had better evangelize polluted christendom before they commence operations on so wide a field as heathen lands present. By the exertions of fanatics, and immense sums of filthy lucre, a few unconverted converts are made to the christian faith, and if reports be true, these proselytes are but little better than those made by the Jewish church in the days of her Pharisaeic devotion and misguided zeal. Men are always mistaking their powers, or the field of labor in which they might be useful—must heave at things impossible—do more than God requires—must go missionaries to the antipodes, when thousands are dying for the want of knowledge at home.

Money is never to be the means of evangelizing the world. Is it to supply the place of miracles? In the uncorrupt age of christianity, miracles accompanied the propositions of the gospel. At this time the heathen lands are to be converted by foul hands, bad faith, and filthy lucre. Place all the filthy lucre on earth in the hands of the church or its officers, and it will make them ten fold more corrupt than they now are. No doubt but heathen lands are to be visited with the light of salvation, but not with the polluted hands that have divided and scattered the fold of Christ, and turned his house into a scene of confusion. The church, decrepit with age and infirmity, paralyzed with incurable leprosy, goes forth to heal heathen lands of vice! When we see christendom evangelized—see Missions begin the mighty work at home, we will have more faith in the schemes, and more hope of their success abroad.

It seems that the Gentile churches have copied all the errors of the Jewish, who were charged with compassing sea and land to make proselytes, and when made, they were unfit for the kingdom of heaven. Suppose we admit, that at the expense of immense funds, there are a thousand proselytes yearly made in Pagan lands:

the leaven of the churches is taken along, rendering the gospel as powerless in Pagan lands, as it is made at home by a divided testimony, and ceaseless broils. But what is a thousand proselytes, compared with the vast population of the heathen world? We suppose a half million of souls are born into the world, for one that is brought into the church. Probably 500,000 yrs. would be requisite for the conversion of Pagan lands, with the present progress and means, and then like the home population, a tythe of them would not be fit for the kingdom of ultimate glory. What can be done abroad more than is doing at home, but fitting the world for the vials of the wrath of Almighty God. We speak of christendom in the aggregate. In some sections, partial ingatherings to the fold of Christ are taking place, or we would have the vials poured. Some gleanings of the vintage before the Master rises to close the dispensation in Gentile hands. The sealing is not yet finished, some are still coming under the impress made by the divine seal; who are to escape the hand of the destroying angels, amidst the ravages of pestilence and war; when the four winds are to be let loose to hurt the earth.

But a small part of the world bears the christian name: the balance of the human family sunk into heathen superstition and darkness. According to the immutable promise of an unchanging God, the knowledge of the Lord is to cover the earth as the waters do the sea; and the sword beaten into an instrument of husbandry.—How is this to be done under the present administration; with its means and powers. An impossibility presents itself at once. Demonstration, not argument, has produced all the changes in religion for the better, which have ever taken place on earth. The Apostles, and probably their successors for ages, were clothed with miraculous powers, and carried demonstration with them.—Heaven knew too well, that long standing opinions, deep rooted error, or an established religion, was not to be overcome by argument:—therefore the only successful Missionaries that ever preached on earth, were clothed with supernatural powers. To succeed in converting the nations without the aid of miracles, would, in itself be one of the greatest miracles on earth;—and more than the Master expected. Where the gospel has been long planted—where people grow up in the belief of its facts, the christian religion may progress and keep a seed of grace alive without the aid of miracles. But in heathen lands, the case is entirely different. To overthrow a religion guarded by law and long established custom—a religion made sacred by time and education—handed down from age to age, since the days of Nimrod, is not the work of argument. To expect such a religion as this to be supplanted by the pigmy Apostles of the age, or exchanged for a religion, which, to the conception of an untutored heathen, presents no visible superiority to that of his fathers', is the very climax of clerical folly. Such a Missionary as Paul, placed upon the theatre, would make more converts in ten days, than all that Missionary labors have made in the last thousand years, or since the coronation of the man of sin. Since this fact took place, a hand breadth of territory has not been gained to the christian empire. If an inch has been gained, it has cost more filthy lucre than was expended in the first 300 years of purity, success, glory, and martyrdoms of christianity. The first Missionaries went penniless to their graves, crowned with success and immortality. The success of those now in the field, would have made fishermen again of the Apostles.

We firmly believe, and stand in the most unshaken hope, that the era of universal peace and piety, is not far distant; but strong as our faith may be on this subject, we have not the most distant expectation that this long hoped for, wished for consummation, can ever arise out of the present dispensation. For ages past, the christian religion has been warring on the vices and errors of mankind; yet in the very face of truth, and all the efforts that christians are making, vice and skepticism are on an alarming increase.—What is to check the mighty tide of crime? Does corruption heal itself, or has it any ebblings unsmitten by the rod of infinite power? What says the history of nations, of all government that has existed on earth? If truth has been too weak to prevent the state of things which we see, how will it heal moral malady in the midst of its gigantic strength? What new impetus is to be given or expected? From whence can any new energy arise equivalent to the exigency? Without some new impetus, heathen lands will remain under the deepest shades of moral darkness, for ten thousand ages to come; and christendom must be overrun with incurable vice. We judge correctly, when judging the future by the past. The past success of the church in spreading the gospel in heathen lands, offers but poor encouragement to any thing but blind infatuation.

But we will take up another subject, and examine facts which cannot be perverted. Now, if the occupants of the present dispensation, or those who are managing the concerns and administration of the christian religion, are to evangelize the world, contrary to facts which exist, and contrary to all human appearance, they are also to beat the sword into a ploughshare, bring about the era of universal peace, when men shall learn war no more. This has been promised, and must take place; for the mouth of the Lord of the whole earth has said it. See Isaiah 2.—“And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be established above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it,”—“and he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.” See Micah 4, a prediction almost verbatim with Isa. “And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off;—and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his figtree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.”

With such data, we may confidently expect a universal reign of peace; which, according to John in the Apocalypse, is to continue a thousand years. Now, what has the church accomplished in 1800 years past, toward bringing about such a state of things? Surely, in the 1800 past years, we have a fair specimen of her power toward bringing in the reign of peace. What can we expect in 1800 more years to come; or eighteen thousand? The spirit of war is as unsubdued now, as it was 1800 years ago; and to all human appearance, it seems to be putting on an array more formidable; more to be dreaded than it has ever done on earth.

Instead of universal peace, we have the harbingers of universal war, the dread array of hostile kingdoms against kingdoms. War is studied as a science, and ten thousand hands are forging weapons of human slaughter. Can the united efforts of all the pious on earth, tame the demon of discord? What zeal-smitten devotees can propose a plan that will be adopted? Impossibilities present themselves. We will have an era of peace, after earth's madmen have drenched the world in blood. No doubt but peace is soon to be taken from the earth, no more to be restored till heaven sounds an armistice, placing earth's belligerents before a tribunal, interdicting all future appeals to the sword. Since the Son of Perdition came to the clerical throne, till the reformation under Luther, instead of subduing the spirit of war, the church was the most choice agent in the hands of the devil, in taking peace from the earth.

The idea of the present christian religion, as it presents itself to the human view, or has been presented in ages past, or from any thing that the most sanguine enthusiast can expect, becoming the agent in the hands of heaven, in the mighty changes which are to take place on earth, is preposterous in the extreme. A new state of things is necessary—a new order—a new administration, and new administrators. The mighty work of cleansing the sanctuary—of placing the human family under the reign of peace, is reserved, to be performed by a potency unknown on earth.

There is but one expedient left for blind infatuation—the aid of Omnipotence, the outpourings of the Spirit. Now, does God pour out his Spirit in proportion to human crime, or in proportion to piety? If in proportion to crime, it will shock all sense of right and wrong—if in proportion to piety, the world is undone. If the piety of the world depends on the operation of God's Spirit, then has light and motive but little to do in the Salvation of the world—all depends on an agency, which, if withheld, it is fatal to the world—if afforded, it is its salvation. Under this state of facts, whose fault is it if men are eternally lost? But, suppose we admit the position that the church is to put on her beautiful garments, and go forth with renovated strength for the conversion of the world; and that the means in progress is to introduce by gradual steps, the universal reign of Christ; and that piety is on the increase; Millennial perfection dawning on the benighted world—when there shall be nothing to hurt or offend in all the holy mountain.

Now, serious reader, if this be a fact, as is believed, as is taught, on whom are the vials of wrath to be poured, recorded in the Apocalypse, that register of terrible events? Are they to be poured upon the world clothed with salvation, lifting up holy hands? There is no room for the vials, or for the renovation of the church. Is there any repentance or reformation associated with any judgment proposed in the Apocalypse? By what means is the world to be evangelized or the church renovated, on moral or physical principles? Surely none will say upon physical principles. If from motive, from whence is the motive to arise? Under the influence of the light and motive afforded in the gospel, the world is growing worse, crime increasing, and christian piety waning. Without some new impetus be afforded the gospel, the world is undone.

Some may say, the time for the outpouring of the Spirit is not come. Whose fault is it that the Spirit is not poured? Surely it cannot be in man, has he any control over God's Spirit?—Men must wait God's time or convenience, if the Spirit is withheld or afforded at the will of the sovereign, without respect to the agency, character, inclinations, or wish of man! Corruption is on a terrible increase, because the Spirit is not poured out—the Spirit is not poured out because corruption abounds. This is about the circle of half the reasonings of the christian world at this important time—this time of tremendous peril.

Long abused mercies, have always been followed by a mighty outpouring of vengeance;—

this we all can understand;—and has been the uniform dealings of heaven towards a rebellious world. Yet, in spite of past example, contrary to former dealings of an unchanging God, mankind are standing in high anticipation of a wished for Millennium—dreaming about evangelizing the world—expecting to see the tide of vice cease unchecked, and self-rebuked, put on the ensigns of the meek and lowly Savior; instead of which, we are to have the Lord's sword bathed in heaven.

The delusive hope which contributed so much towards the overthrow and ruin of the Jewish church, forms a conspicuous feature in the character of the present dispensation. The Jews with Moses, and the Prophets in their hand, crucified the looked for Messiah. The zeal for the tradition of the elders, led them to acts of persecution, violence and death, for the glory of God. After crucifying the Lord of glory, and persecuting his followers, they presumptuously looked for and expected the special interposition of heaven for their rescue and salvation to the very last extremity; nor despaired of this until their city was in ruins, and their temple enveloped in flames. Thus it is respecting the false expectation of the christian world. They are deceiving themselves with hopes which are never to be realized—hoping for that which they are never to witness, and are to be found unprepared for events, coming as a thief in the night.

This day of the Lord, coming as a thief, will find the world en masse, crying, "peace and safety." The christian world is looking for restorations, Millenniums, revivals, outpourings of the Spirit, but are to awake from this deceptive hope, by sudden destruction. This is to precede the universal reign of Christ; for the sudden destruction foretold, will not apply to any part of the thousand years of prosperity which is to overspread the world during the reign of peace, when the knowledge of the Lord is to cover the earth, as the waters do the sea; and it is equally preposterous to transfer it over to Gog and Magog, at the expiration of thousand years. We believe no period since the creation, more eventful than the days immediately preceding the introduction of Christ's universal reign, the time in which the Son of Perdition is to be destroyed, and the thrones cast down; the Lord only knows what will be left.

The moral world at this time presents an unfavorable prospect: little else to be seen but strife and turmoil. In the political horizon we see fearful indications of a storm—a lowering cloud of war hangs over every land, almost ready to burst. Iniquity abounding, and the love of many waxing cold.

The Jewish people had more right to expect that their religion would be perpetuated down to the end of time, and that the moral government in their hands was never to be dissolved, than the Gentiles have: for a covenant was made with Abraham, for him and his posterity; and the covenant was renewed and ratified in the days of Moses, with the whole nation. Now, was there ever a covenant made with the Gentiles? As individuals, God takes the Gentiles into the purview of his covenant made with Abraham.

If the Messiah had flattered the faults and prejudice of the Jewish church, he would not have been crucified. The Jews revolted at the idea of a change in their religion; a religion which had existed almost 2000 years, and had been established by the God of the whole earth; proclaimed by the voice of the eternal majesty. With them this religion could not be changed or dissolved; but was to be perpetuated down to the end of time. Thus this deep rooted prejudice precluded the possibility of conviction, and laid the foundation for their ruin. The Jews were highly displeased at the Lord, when he declared the kingdom should be taken from them and given to another people. The idea of a change in religion at this time; a dissolution of the dispensation—the administration, with its administrators, will be rejected by most of the christian world, with the same displeasure, and in the same Spirit. On a reed of hope, on a bare perhaps, hangs all the bright anticipations of the Gentile church—the hope that God will not do as he has formerly done with corruption—that he will renovate the church, contrary to all former precedent. In all past ages, the spiritual guides of the human family, have been the sure guides to ruin. This is the history of the past—in the past we read the history of the future; and if our views relative to the meaning of prophecy be true, the fatal analogy between the present and the past, is to be consummated in irreparable ruin. In perfect justice to spiritual guides of the day, we admit that they have been the means of doing much good; but in the name of common sense, how much harm have they done?

If these supervisors of God's moral government had been left without any infallible guide to faith and practice, some excuse might be made for the havoc they have uniformly made in God's heritage. Until they nested themselves down as sovereigns of the church, they were the means of doing God service by serving his people;—but since they have arrogated to themselves the keys of the kingdom of heaven, they have destroyed the peace of the Master's house. These keys, in their dissimilar construction, are claimed by all, and transmitted down to posterity like Papal relics, and are an appendage of the man of sin, instead of an apostolic boon. The Jewish is called a typical gospel, or dispensation, and no doubt but this is the fact. Now, how far is the type and anti-type to agree? We suppose till it comes to the terrible fact of involving the church in interminable ruin, and the Priests in the fatal agency. The alarming parallel is to be admitted until the last fatal catastrophe begins to be seen, standing in bold relief above the destinies of the latter, the eyes are then closed upon the terrible parallel—the facts which stand prominent in each dispensation, proving in arguments the most substantial, that the faults and fate of the one, are the faults, and finally will be the fate of the other.

Each dispensation had, or has its zeal, but not according to knowledge—its mistakes relative to its perpetuation—a tenacious observation of that which they impose on themselves—feasts, festivals, long prayers, clamorous approaches towards heaven, pompous oblations of words, instead of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, the widow or fatherless in their afflictions, &c., giving alms at the sound of the trumpet, or publishing round the world their pious donations, &c.

Now, just so sure as the Jewish church was a type of the present, the present is to close as did the Jewish. There is no avoiding the conclusion; nor can an argument be drawn from the scriptures to do away its force. If the Jewish church understood the prophecies relative to the first advent of Christ, the nature of his kingdom and government, so will the Gentile church, those relative to his second coming and universal reign. And if the Jews were in a state of preparation for the Messiah, searching the scripture for correct information on the important subject, standing in readiness for the reception of their King, so will the present church be found, standing with its leaders, in perfect gospel order, waiting the Bridegroom's coming. The Jewish Priests and people, in the general, mistook the prophets to their ruin. The Gentile church in the aggregate, leaders and people, are to mistake the meaning of the sacred oracles, and follow in the same fatal step to the gates of perdition.

The Clergy, if they be the pious followers of the Master, will forgive our severity. Censure and severity are inseparably associated with our system of expounding prophecy, and of drawing contrasts. Most of them will dispose of the subject in a summary way, without investigation.

We have shown that the present christianity of the world, is never to evangelize the world—that there is no warrant for the idea, neither in the Bible nor in facts—nor is there a warrant within the lids of Bible, for the prevalent idea, that the church is ever to come up out of the wilderness. We probably may touch this subject again.

Before taking up the great subject to which our arguments are concentrating, to wit: the dissolution of the present christian dispensation, we will make a few remarks relative to the population of the world associated with a Millennium.

We have seen no system or theory about the Millennium, which will not destroy itself.

According to the system of expounding prophecy which we plead for, the world is to be visited with war, pestilence and fire, which, in all probability, will thin the world of its population before the Millennium. Introduce the Millennium with the present population, and give the health, peace and competence, which the scriptures warrant us to expect, and before half the term of years allotted to this reign of peace expires, unavoidable famine and starvation must ensue. Every foot of land on earth, put under the best cultivation, would not support its population. With health, peace, and competence, the human family will double every fifteen or twenty years; doubling the population every thirty years; in a few centuries all power of arithmetic fails: the product amounts to a prodigy in numbers, bidding defiance to figures.

By some, the present population of the world is supposed to be something above eight hundred millions. The checks to population at this time, from want and its train of evils, is operating powerfully upon some nations.

In some countries, parents are allowed to destroy their offspring. This horrid practice is tolerated by law, for the sake of avoiding nakedness and starvation.

In most countries of the old world, population is nearly upon a stand, from want, scanty and bad provisions, with the train of evils, associated with poverty and the lack of room.

War has contributed no little towards checking an increase of the human family—this check is no more to operate after the introduction of Christ's universal reign. It is a folly to talk about a millennium with the present population of the world; before it is half out, we will have want, famine, nakedness, and all that can distress a starving world; and a war for existence will ensue. Human misery, poverty, degradation and vice are inseparable companions; and as unfavorable to piety as bloated opulence.

The world is to be depopulated, and sectarianism exterminated before there can be room for a Millennium. A Millennium such as the scriptures warrant, cannot exist with the war of christian elements. It will be exterminated, or it will exterminate the factions which exist in christendom. Not a party on earth, that will not war on a Millennium, as an innovation on their rights or jurisdiction, if they are not previously smitten by the hand of an avenging God.

If heaven were to crown one of the sects, to the disparagement of the others, which of them would submit to the orders? Which of them would not go to the stake for their bonds or creeds? Which of them, without their organs, their presses, and champions, building up their Zions?—Striking deeper their vile roots! There is no alternative, the Millennium or the sects cannot exist.

This is not spoken out of envy or malice to wards any sect on earth; but from a conviction, rising out of facts; from observation, and from an acquaintance with God's word. The perfection which is to exist during the universal reign of Christ, when there shall be nothing to hurt or offend in all the holy government, cannot arise out of the warring elements of the christian world. Peace cannot grow out of war—love out of hatred—nor order out of confusion. We judge correctly when judging the future by the past; thus judging, we have nothing more to expect, from conflicting names, feelings and interest, than we have witnessed in the past. Where time, and the mighty revolutions in sublimity things, have consigned one sect or name to oblivion, scores have risen in its stead; and so we may expect, if heaven allows the madness of partyism to go unchecked till the end of time. How often do we hear it asserted, and how do the credulous believe that the "church is to come up out of the wilderness, leaning on her beloved."

Now, this assertion is a pulpit fabrication, without a solitary text within the lids of the Bible, which will warrant the opinion, that the church which fled into the wilderness, according to John's Patmos visions, is never to return: and we will give speculation a very wide range, for even a plausible conjecture on the subject. A lost step is never regained—apostate churches, never put on their original purity and simplicity—we have no precedent in facts, in scripture, nor in the former dealings of God with past dispensations.—They are always dissolved instead of being renovated. You might as well talk about renovating an old garment, or an old man, worn down with age and incurable disease, as to hope, or expect the church renovations, which the Pulpit is dreaming about.

Where is the nation that has been twice great? Nothing but the elements maintain their sublimity amidst the mighty ravages of time. Disease and death is the unavoidable destiny of all that comes into existence, and corruption the sure consequence of all that man presides over. Kingdoms and empires which once awed the world into obedience, have mouldered down into insignificance and ruin, or stand like blighted monuments; giving sad proof of the hand of time, and corruption—time's mighty competitor in the work of ruin.

The history of moral government gives ample proof of man's incapacity to govern himself in moral matters, and that he is rarely content with precepts or government furnished him from his God. Moral matters are entirely dependent on revelation; as they are predicated on things invisible and future responsibility. If this be the fact, the precepts, worship, sacrifice, obedience and government, are alike, matters of revelation.—Moral government becomes impotent relative to its great design, in proportion to the amount of human appendages, with which it is trammelled. God, as a sovereign, has changed the government of his kingdom, and may do so again, without consulting man's agency or inclination. This change in his moral government is needed, is called for. The present administration is never to subdue the spirit of war, but individuals and nations will war on each other ten thousand years to come, or eternally, without a check, which human wisdom can neither devise nor enforce. The change in administration is of necessity to take place, or the Lord is never to be "King over all the earth." While a vestige of human government exists, he cannot be King.

The reign of universal peace can never commence, nor be perfected, under a human government. Human government is a necessary evil, and cannot be dispensed with until it is put down by divine authority.

The legitimate effect of human governments is to alienate the human family, in church or state, and cannot exist in the universal reign of peace. When the kingdoms of the world "become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ"—when "the Lord shall be King over all the earth"—"one Lord and his name one;" there can be but one government.

ROCHESTER, JULY 1, 1846.

REMOVAL OF OUR OFFICE.

We have removed our Office into Simpson's new block, on Works Street, just back of the Arcade. We occupy the second floor, in the west end of the building: entrance from Works St.

This Number.

We have now entered upon the commencement of Vol. XI of our paper. Our trust is in him whom we serve to sustain and guide it in future. Thanks to his name for past blessings in conducting this work.

Though our trust is in God, still we expect to be blessed only in the use of his appointed means. We must occupy until our Lord come. We therefore call upon our brethren and sisters, one and all, to lend us your united co-operation and aid, in accomplishing the work before us. We want you to continue your subscription, obtain as many more new subscribers as you can, and make payment for what is our due just as soon as your circumstances will admit. We want our dues now, or shall in a few weeks, at farthest, as we expect then, if time continue, to have to meet some heavy bills for paper, rent, &c. We hope the promptness of our subscribers will make it unnecessary for us to speak again on this subject.

We also want those who have a talent to write, to continue their contributions for our paper. Now is a time when we should speak often to each other in words of comfort, exhortation, doctrine, admonition and promise. Never has the stirring appeal to duty been more needed than now. Slacken not therefore, your hand in any good work. Occupy faithfully a few days longer, and you will receive a rich reward, even eternal life.

The lengthy article commencing on our first page, we take from a work written a few years since, or the Second Coming of Christ, by S. M. Mc Corkle, Springfield, Missouri. The author is looking for the advent of Christ about this time. The article which we give from his spirited work will, we trust, be found worthy of a careful perusal by all who may read it.

We see from a communication in the last Herald from Br'n Himes Hutchinson and Brown, dated Halifax, N. S., June 3, that they had reached that place on their voyage to England. They were well and in good spirits. We shall lay all the important facts of their mission before our readers at the earliest dates possible.

DARLINGTON CAMPMEETING.

We had anticipated much enjoyment with the saints, in attending this meeting, and did not fully relinquish the hope of being there, until last Wednesday; when we became fully satisfied that such was the state of our health it would not be prudent to attend. We hope the blessing of the Lord attended this meeting. Will some one who was present give us an account of it for publication.

Through the abundant mercy of God, we hope soon to be in that country, where the inhabitants will never have cause to say, I am sick. Blessed thought! it prompts us to faithfulness here under all the trials and afflictions of the way.

Warring against the Church.

In the communications of some of our brethren, we meet with expressions similar to the following:—We have no war with the church.—It is not our work to oppose the different church organizations.—We regret that any of our brethren have waged an indiscriminate war against the sects.—Our work has been, and still is, to advocate the great truths relative to the immediate appearing of Christ and his kingdom. It is true, we feel it our duty to expose and rebuke sin in high and low places, within and out of the church, when and wherever an opportunity presents; but, to oppose the present church organizations, or to wage an uncompromising war against them, we discountenance.

Now we readily admit there may have been some misguided ones, who, in their inexperience and zeal for the cause of truth, have gone to extremes in exposing the corruptions of the nominal church. But the imprudence of a few does not necessarily prove that the cause in which they have been engaged is not a good one; neither that the church is not fallen into deep corruption. The best of causes has always had its unwise advocates.

The church, as a body, not in a few minor particulars, but as a body, in the fundamentals of her faith and practice, has or has not become corrupt. If not, then we would kindly thank any, friend or foe, to point out any one of her fundamental principles which the word of God justifies. We know not of one but that is plainly condemned by that perfect book. If we cry against all the sins of the nominal church we shall cry against her existence; for the very elements of her being are contrary to the nature and requirements of the gospel.

It is as clear as that two and two are four, that the churches have sinned in the conflicting principles of their organizations; in their anti-christian names; human and oppressive laws; unscriptural doctrines and practices: worldly and proud spirit, in the violation of every principle of the gospel; and now last, though not least, they have effectually rejected the glad tidings of the immediate appearing of Christ and his glorious kingdom. With these facts before us, shall we say that the churches are not corrupt? that we should not wage an uncompromising war against them? but only cry against particular sins in those bodies? God forbid that we should do any such thing. If there is any one sin more aggravated than others, it is found in the church. The deepest corruption rolls in her dark channels of vice; the most settled and strong opposition to the truth is there; ignorance, superstition, bigotry, pride, sin, crime, and every evil work, have their abode in the church, and find protection there under a false garb of the pure religion of Jesus. We mean the fallen sectarian churches of the entire globe. And if we cry against the sins of those bodies, we cry against their existence. For the very principles which have given them being and perpetuation, had their origin and perfection in rebellion against the law of high heaven.

The very nature of the case unavoidably brings us to one of two conclusions, viz: that the church, as well as the world, in all its parts and departments, is grossly corrupt, fallen, and rejected of God; or the end of all things, or the coming of the Son of man to destroy the man of sin, and a wicked world, cannot be nigh, even at the door. For, the Scriptures clearly teach that when he comes the church and world both will be fitted for destruction. But we do not prove the corruption of either on this principle: out from well known and acknowledged facts which exist in both. The case of each is hopeless. And to justify either, wholly or in part, directly or indirectly, is only rocking their fearful plumes; and, if possible, making their destruction more sure.

Doubtless, there are individuals in the church and world who may yet be saved, and we ardently pray and labor for their salvation. But we can have no hope of this desirable work being accomplished on any other principle than showing them their present danger, and pointing them to Christ, their only safety. But if I tell them that I have no war with the church, they will feel perfectly secure to remain within her polluted walls, enchanted her siren song of peace and safety, until sudden destruction comes upon them.

We are not insensible of the apparent severity of these remarks. But to whom will they appear severe? Not to him who fully believes the great mass of the religious and irreligious world are nearly ripe for destruction, at the revelation of the Lord of Glory.—But those who are apologetists for the church may think us severe. To meet all such objections, we will say, though we use strong language, with much assurance, yet we have none other than the kindest feelings towards those whose errors and sins we feel it our duty faithfully to expose. We are often led to weep over their fallen condition, and fervently pray for their salvation. Though we use great plainness of speech, yet what we have said has been prompted by no other principle than love. We see our brethren, our fellow beings, exposed to imminent danger; we love them, and raise our warning voice to arouse them to a state of sensibility of their perilous condition. And oh that they would heed the warning. Now they may escape the threatened ruin but must before them, and find a safe refuge under the protecting care of Him who will soon judge the world in righteousness.

Why is it so?

Why is it so about what?—is the ready enquiry of many an anxious mind. Why, we answer, is there so little active faith in the time of the appearing of Christ? We all admit that the evidence in the case is conclusive, that his coming cannot be delayed beyond '47; and many are, or profess to be, very confident that it will be witnessed near the close of the present year, '46; yet there appears to be not that faith, active, living, strong faith, among us which should exist, provided the evidence in the case actually proves what all seem to admit it does. If there is good evidence that the Lord will come in this or next year we should believe it with all our hearts, make the good confession before friends and foes, fearless of the consequences that might follow; and see that our faith is made perfect by such works as its nature demands at our hand.

But, says many a cautious one. I cannot believe with that confidence or assurance I did before meeting with the '43 and 10th day disappointments.—Why not? Can you assign one good reason why it is so, or why you should not now believe with all your heart? You cannot: unless you can show some defect in the evidence which points to '46 or '47 for the time of the advent of Christ, you should, in every sense of the word, fully believe that he will come then. No such defect can be shown: the evidence stands unimpeached. Hence we see no other reason why we are unbelieving, than because we will not give credit to testimony which we acknowledge cannot be, or has not yet been, impeached.—Or, in plainer words, the cause of unbelief lies in—YE WILL NOT BELIEVE.

But, says the objecter and self justifier, the evidence may not prove to be as conclusive and infallible as it now appears to be. What it may prove to be is no concern of ours, but what does it now prove, is our business to know. If it proves that the Lord will come in '46 or '47, and we cannot detect the least flaw in the testimony, we are laid under the most weighty obligation to believe it. We cannot do otherwise and have a good conscience before God, and a lively, active and joyful faith.

We doubt not that one, if not the chief cause of the apathy among us, is unbelief. But few preach, exhort, pray, and live as though they really believed the Lord will come in '46 or '47. Doubt, fear, and unbelief, are visibly seen in their entire profession. The condition is a sad one, and will prove fatal to the eternal happiness of many, we fear, unless this apathy, this criminal unbelief, are thrown off; and faith, uncovering faith, is put on, and daily worn as our shield and sure defence in this hour of peril.—Shall we, my brethren, fall at last, through unbelief? God forbid.—and increase our faith. The Lord is at the door.

Humble Yourself.

Many persons, professing Christianity, are constantly complaining of the pride of their hearts, and of their great lack of humility. 'I am so proud,' say they, 'I cannot do what I am sensible is my duty; I take no real comfort in things of religion on account of the pride of my heart; I am greatly troubled at my condition; and Oh that I were more humble.' Well, if you have a proud heart, and still profess to be a Christian, no wonder that you are troubled about yourself. It is high time for you not only to be troubled, but to make diligent search into the cause of this great sin. Have you ever prayed for humility? 'O yes, my prayer has been, when I have ventured to pray at all, for humility. I have asked God, most sincerely, to give me humility, to make me humble, but he has not answered my petition.'—What, have you been praying for God to make you humble? and you acknowledge at the same time that you have a proud heart? Presumptuous petition! It is well that God has not heard your request: for when he humbles the pride of stubborn mortals, it is to their sorrow, disgrace, and sometimes ruin.

'But, sir, you astonish me! shall I not pray for God to make me humble? Never; if you wish to obtain the humility you say you desire. But if you desire to be humbled by the hand of affliction, he may do it, whether you pray for it or not. The proud and stubborn hearted Jews were repeatedly humbled by the hand of their insulted Creator; but it was to their own confusion. You have been praying for God to do that which he has commanded you to perform. He says—'Humble yourself,' but you have been unwilling to submit to his will.—Christ 'humbled himself,' even unto the death of the cross. If you would possess the same mind, imitate him. The uniform testimony of Scripture on this point is,—in order to obtain humility, you must labor for it, with diligence. And the desired blessing will most surely be your reward: for he that humbleth himself shall be exalted, and that in due time.

'If, then, the duty of humbling myself devolves on me, will you, sir, tell me what particular duty I am required to perform? Most cheerfully. And will you in return listen to the counsel we shall give?—There is no one duty which alone will effect the work: a faithful compliance with all the requirements of God, is necessary. Every Christian duty you perform will serve to humble the pride of your heart. Hence the most faithful Christian is always the most humble in spirit.

Try, with perseverance, the duties of secret devotion, of family worship, of prayer and exhortation in the house of God; confess your faults and backslidings to your family, the church, and the world.—Spend your leisure moments in reading and meditation, and holy conversation; be just in your deal with all men; go to the habitation of the needy and distressed, and of moral wretchedness—and there, like an angel of mercy, do your duty. Continue to observe these and all the commandments, and you will not only be blessed with humility of soul, but joy unspeakable will be the constant portion of your cup.

On the Principle of Inward Quietude or Stillness.

We proceed in this chapter to lay down and explain a principle which is more or less distinctly recognized by writers on Christian Experience; and which, by the common consent of those who have examined it, is very intimately connected with the progress and perfection of the interior Christian life. The principle is that of inward quietude or stillness; in other words, a true and practical ceasing from self.

1st. This principle involves, in the first place, a cessation from all inordinate and selfish outward activity. It does not, it will be remembered, exclude an outward activity of the right kind. To entertain any idea of this kind, would be a great error. But it disproves and condemns that spirit of worldly movement and progress, that calculating and self-interested activity, that running to and fro without seriously looking to God and without a quiet confidence in Him, which has been in all ages of the world, the dishonor and the bane of true christianity. How much of what may be called secular scheming and planning, there is in the church at the present time! How much of action, prosecuted on principles which certainly cannot be acceptable to a truly holy heart! While it exhibits much of true piety and of the right kind of action, is it not evident that the church exhibits a great deal also, both in its plans of personal and public activity, of that restless, unsanctified, and grasping eagerness, which characterizes, and may be expected to characterize those who live and act as if there was no God in the world! The principle of quietude or stillness decidedly condemns this injurious and evil course.

[I think this article was first written nearly ten years ago; since that time has not the "secular scheming and planning" the "acting as if there were no God in the world" greatly increased, and frozen out much of the "true piety and right kind of action" which then existed? May the Lord deliver his own children entirely from "that spirit of worldly movement and progress," and prevent those who may now be free, from being entangled again with the yoke of bondage.]

B. M.

2d. But this principle has, inwardly, still more important results. The true state of internal quietude or stillness, implies three things. 1. That true quietness of soul involves a cessation from unnecessary wandering, and discursive thoughts and imaginations. If we indulge an unnatural, and inordinate curiosity—if we crowd the intellect, not only with useful knowledge, but with all the vague and unprofitable rumors and news of the day, it is hardly possible, on the principles of mental philosophy, that the mind should be at rest. The doctrine of religious quietude, conveys the notion of a state of intellect so free from all unnecessary intruders, that God can take up his abode there as the one great idea, which shall either exclusively occupy the mind, or shall so far occupy it, as to bring all other thoughts and reflections into entire harmony with itself. This is, philosophically, one of the first conditions of union with God. It seems to be naturally impossible, that we should realize an entire harmony or oneness with the divine mind, while the soul is so occupied with worldly thoughts flowing into it, as almost to shut out the very idea of God. A state of religious or spiritual quietude is, in other words, a state of rest in God. The idea of God, therefore, that magnificent and glorious idea, must so occupy the intellect, must be so interwoven with all its operations and modes of thinking, that the thoughts of other things which so often agitate and afflict the religious mind, may be easily shut out. And in order to do this, they, who would be perfect in Christ Jesus, must not mingle too much in the concerns of the world. Little have they to do with the unprofitable frivolities and pleasures of secular society; with idle village [or city] gossiping; with the trades and adventures, and speculations of those who hasten to be rich; with the heat and recriminations of party politics, and many other things which it would be easy to mention. No reading, also, should be indulged in, which tends to separate between the soul and God. Knowledge is profitable, it is true, but not all kinds of knowledge.—Hence, we should lay it down as an important rule, to chasten the principle of curiosity, and to know nothing which cannot be made, either directly or indirectly, religiously profitable. Such knowledge, and such only, will harmonize with the presence of the great idea of God. All other knowledge tends to exclude it. Perhaps, in order to prevent mistakes, it should be added, that when the mind is thus in a state of quietness and repose from worldly and errant imaginations, it does not by any means follow, as some may suppose, that it is, therefore, in a state of sluggish and insentient idleness. Not at all. No sooner has it reached the state of true stillness, by ceasing from its own imaginative vanities, and thus giving entrance to the purifying and absorbing conception of the great Divinity, than it becomes silently, but actively meditative on the great idea. Not, indeed, in a discursive and examinative way; not in a way of curious inquiry and of minute analysis; but still active and meditative.—Much in the manner perhaps, that an affectionate child silently and delightfully meditates on the idea of an absent parent, and analytically and curiously, but with that high and beautiful meditation, which exists in connection with the purest love. Or much as any persons, who sustain to each other the relation of clear and intimate friendship, when, in the providence of God, they are separated at a distance, often repose in mental stillness from all other thoughts inconsistent with the one loved idea; and thus reciprocally the mind, active in respect to the object before it, though still and quiet in respect to every thing else, centre and dwell with each others image.

(2) Again, the state of internal quietude implies a cessation or rest from unrestrained and inordinate desires and affections; such a cessation becomes comparatively easy, when God has become the ruling idea in their thoughts; and when other ideas, which are vain, wandering, and in other ways inconsistent with it, are excluded.—This rest, or stillness of the affections, when it exists in the highest degree, is secured by perfect faith in God, necessarily resulting in perfect love. How can we possibly have perfect faith in God, perfect confidence that he will do all things right and well, when at the same time, we are wanting in love to him?

From perfect faith, therefore, perfect love necessarily flows out, baptising, as it were, and purifying all the subordinate powers of the soul.—In other words, under the influence of this predominating principle, the perfect love of God resting upon perfect faith in God, the harmony of the soul becomes restored, the various appetites, propensities and affections act each in their place and all concurrently; there are no disturbing and jarring influences, and the beautiful result is, that quietness of spirit, which is declared to be “in the sight of God, of great price.” [Here I omit two paragraphs, for want of time and space. In one of them, the author remarks that “the doctrine of stillness or quietude of the desires and passions, does not necessarily exclude an occasional agitation, arising from the instinctive part of our nature. The instincts are so constituted, that they act, not by cool reason and reflection, but by an inexpressibly quick and agitated movement. Such is their nature. Such agitation is entirely consistent with holiness.” Involuntary acts, or those acts over which the will has no immediate control, have no moral character. As, for instance, the falling to the ground through fear, of John the Revelator, does not betray any want of confidence in God.]

(3.) We proceed now to the third characteristic. The true state of internal quietude, implies a cessation not only from unnecessary wandering and discursive thoughts and imaginations, not only a rest from irregular desires and affections, but implies a perfect submission of the will; in other words, a perfect renunciation of our own purposes and plans, and a cheerful and perfect acquiescence in the holy will of God. Such a renunciation of the will, is indispensably requisite. It is not to be understood that we have no will of our own in a literal sense. This would be inconsistent with moral agency. But that in its action, under all circumstances, however adverse and trying, our will is cheerfully and wholly accordant with God's will. A mind in such a state, must necessarily be at rest. It realizes that God is at the helm of affairs; and that necessarily, all the plans of his wise and great administration, shall come to pass. Why then should it be troubled? “What a blessed thing it is,” says Dr. Payson, “to lose one's will. Since I have lost my will, I have found happiness. There can be no such thing as disappointment; for I have no desire but that God's will may be accomplished.” The blessedness of such a soul is indeed indescribable. It is an inward death, out of which springs inward and eternal life; a self annihilation, out of which rises immortal power. The man who has the true gratitude, is like a large ship firmly at anchor in a storm. The clouds gather around, the winds blow, the heavy waves dash against her, but she rides safe in her position, in conscious dignity and power. Or perhaps his situation is more nearly expressed by the memorable and sublime simile of Goldsmith.

“As some tall cliff that rears its awful form,
Swell from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head.”

But some will say, is there to be no action, and are we to do nothing? A person in this state of mind, being at rest in the will of God, and never out of that divine will, is operative precisely as God would have him go; moving as God moves, stopping where God stops. He is at rest, but never idle. His God forbids idleness. Therefore he keeps in the line of divine cooperation, and works with God. There may be less of vain and noisy pretension, and sometimes less of outward and visible activity, but there is far more wisdom and far more actual efficiency, for God is with him.

T. C. UPHAM.

Bro. Marsh, I wish to recommend the work from which the above is taken, to all your readers. It is designed particularly for the consideration of those who are seeking assurance of faith and perfect love.

Entitled “Principles of the Interior or Hidden Life.” By Thomas C. Upham. I have never read a book that I prize more highly; with me it stands next to the Bible. It contains 520 pages, 12 mo.—price $1. Published in Boston.

Bro. A. Coy, Jordan, N. Y. June 1, writes:—I do not know a believer in the second advent in these parts; and I believe the sectarians have all barred their doors against such. Should any brother travel this way I wish he would call on me. I live 3 miles west of Jordan, and half a mile south of the canal.

A WORD OF EXHORTATION

TO ALL THOSE WHO HAVE LEFT THEIR FIRST LOVE.

Jesus Christ, the faithful and true Witness, has somewhat against you—remember therefore, from whence thou art fallen; and repent and do thy first works. No matter how various the stumbling blocks may have been over which you have stumbled away from your first love, the way of return is the same to all, which is repentance. You may go to meeting, you may read your Bible, you may pray, but if you do not repent, your “first works” will remain still undone. And how can you live another hour so near the eternal reward? so near that event which will unite and mingle the joys of all the faithful with the joy of their Lord, with even your “first works” undone! Jesus says, if a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. John 14: 23. Among his words or commands, we have the following:—But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. Math. 6: 6.

Those who live destitute of their first love, are also destitute of love for the place and duty of secret prayer. Deprived of the open reward which is sure to follow the right performance of the duty of secret prayer, they seem, at home and abroad, like the barren fig tree, without spiritual life, having no fruit unto holiness. But the Lord is merciful, he is long suffering, he awaits your return. If you have departed, do not say “Wherein shall we return?”—do not mistake the form for the power, especially in your own case. Be sure to get humble: rejoice in whatever will bring down the pride of your own heart. Do not despair, but remember the gracious words of inspiration—If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous.

In bonds of love and peace,

Letter from Bro. J. Bower.

Bro. Marsh:—In this township, the cause is moving forward. There is a considerable waking up on time, and in the adjacent townships, there are new places opened, and calls for lecturers, where, heretofore there have been none.—Truly, the harvest is great, (and almost ripe,) and laborers are few. The Lord send more laborers into this part of his vineyard, in this last hour, while the gleanings are being gathered.—The state of the nominal church is painful. How true is the word of the Lord, “Babylon is fallen, is fallen: and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.” And how forcible is the call from the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts, “Come out of her my people, and deliver every man his own soul from the fierce anger of the Lord.” O, the bitter cries of that precious soul, who is found disobedient to the call of the Lord, when he shall come in flaming fire, “taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.” Truly we are in perilous times, when professors of religion are lovers of themselves, covetous, proud, boasters, &c. Now, as “Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobative concerning the faith; but they shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was.” I believe that soon, yes, this year, every man's work shall be manifest. O, let us be ready to hail the glad day.

Yours, waiting and looking for that same Jesus,

JOHN BOWER.

Darlington, C. W., June 8th, 1846.

Letter from Sister C. A. Day.

Bro. Marsh:—I am looking, watching, and waiting for the coming of the Lord. I praise God that I am permitted to live in this time when I can, with the rest of God's people, lift up my head and rejoice, knowing that my redemption draweth nigh. Every thing indicates the coming of the blessed Savior. The angel has flown through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach, "Saying with a loud voice, fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." And another angel has followed, saying, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, &c." And every thing mentioned by the Savior that was to precede his coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, has transpired; and he has told us, "When ye see these things," to be as sure that his coming is 'at the door,' as that summer is nigh when we see the trees putting forth leaves. It is therefore a matter of certainty, as absolute and as unchanging as the truth of him who cannot lie; that the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, is 'nigh even at the door.' And blessed be the name of the Lord, I can now lift up my head and rejoice, knowing that my redemption draweth nigh when the full, glorious, and eternal redemption of all God's people from all their enemies, will take place.

O, my brethren and sisters, remember the injunction of the apostle, to 'watch and be sober,' for 'the end of all things is at hand.' 'Seeing then that all these things will be dissolved,' and we are looking for such things, 'what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?' Let our conversation be in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, 'who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working, whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself.'" O stand fast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

Your Sister, looking and waiting for the coming of Jesus, CELINDA A. DAY.
Chateaugay, June 13, 1846.

Bro. T. F. Barry, Attica, April 22, writes:—In my recent travels I have visited Scottsville, Dansville, Springwater, Conesus, Victor, Warsaw, and Attica. I am now in Attica, where there is more interest and a better attendance, than for two years past. Moreover I can say for the comfort of "the household of faith," that in each of the above places there are a few believers in the second advent who hold on their way—yea, they grow stronger and stronger. There is also an increasing interest to know our present hope, and the reasons for it among some, while others are more hostile or else indifferent, to hear more on the subject; these two extremes of character existed also in Paul's day. (Acts 13: 42-48.) While holding forth the reasons for our "blessed hope," many have and do confess it "meat in due season," and wish their ministers would preach on the prophecies.

I am much pleased with the sentiments and spirit of the "Conference Address." I hope it will do much good. I doubt not it will do some. We must give another note of warning to all within our reach, or to whom we can gain access—and I know our labors cannot be in vain—God will give the increase—if we cannot have one hundred or sixty fold, let us thank God and take courage for even thirty fold; by all means let us be found in the vineyard, and doing with our might for God's glory and man's good, until our Lord returns, discharges us from toil, rewards, and permits us to slumber with him in 'the throne.' (Rev. 3: 21; 22: 12.) Finally, brethren, let us look to ourselves—take heed individually, that we lose not those things which we have gained, (margin,) but that we receive a full reward.—2d John, 8th verse. How important that we now hold fast the truth—the love of God—the spirituality, and self-consecration we have exhibited to the admiration of angels, to the terror of evil doers, and approval of our Father in heaven.

Bro. A. Gage, Northfield Mass., May 24th, writes:—The blessed news of the kingdom at hand, is still full of joy and glory to me. I feel that our journey's end is near, when we, if faithful a little longer, shall see Him whom our souls love. Yes, we shall see the King in his beauty, with all the redeemed of the Lord. The Church is in a divided state: some say they have done looking up into the clouds for Jesus, and some I fear, are loving this present world; but our blessed Lord told us it would be so. But few I fear will be saved. Beware of covetousness, which is idolatry. Are we doing all that we can for the cause of God and perishing souls? Let each one answer before God. I fear that many of us will be weighed in the balance and found wanting. My prayer is, God save us. May God direct you in all things, that you may be able through grace rightly to divide the Word, that all may have their portion of meat in due season.—My soul is full. Yours looking and waiting and believing that we shall soon see Jesus. Let us not be weary in well doing, for we shall reap in due time if we faint not.

Bro. J. A. Winchester, East Moreland N. H., May 9, writes:—There are but 5 or 6 in this town who are professed adventists, although a few years since there was a large company, together with the pastor of one of the churches; but on the passing of '43, they relinquished their faith, pastor and all; consequently there is a great prejudice in this place against the doctrine of Christ's speedy coming, and a great declension of religion. I believe there will never be another revival of religion here, unless the speedy coming of our Lord is again preached in its purity. We believe, if some efficient lecturer could come and give the reason of our hope, that it would be the means of removing the prejudice in a great measure, from the minds of the people, and strengthening the faith of believers.

I have felt for some time that I would, with your permission, give an invitation through the "Voice of Truth," to the watchmen, to make us a visit, hoping that it may induce some one to feel the weight of the cause and the worth of souls that are perishing with the lack of knowledge, to come to our help. Should any of our ministering brethren visit us, we cannot promise them much of this world's goods as a compensation for their labors, for we are poor: but we will do what we can for them.

TROUBLE.

This is a world of labor and trouble. The heavens, the earth, and the mighty deep, the civil and religious worlds are restless and constantly troubled, and in trouble. It is an inmate of the kitchen and a guest in the parlor; takes up its abode in the cottage of the poor, and reigns in the splendid palace; enters the shop of the mechanic, and takes its seat in the chair of the banker; plants its foot in the fertile field, and walks at large in the city tull. Finally, our way from the cradle to the grave, is marked with trouble: some of which is unavoidable, while much may be prevented. Unavoidable troubles should be borne with Christian resignation, and suffered to pass and be forgotten as soon as possible; then, they will work for our good. But when we bring upon ourselves real or imaginary troubles, we must suffer the unhappy consequences that follow.

Some persons mould themselves into the very image of trouble. They are not only constantly telling their tales of sorrow to others, but are all the while worrying about what is to come. As though they had not enough of that which is real, they become inventors and borrowers of imaginary trouble. That which is real they hold with an unyielding grasp, and make it the subject of their thoughts, and the theme of their conversation. They dig it from the graves of past events, give it new life, and make it a companion in their toils by day, and of their pillows by night. Such individuals are their own tormentors. But still they will tell you they are tired of their troubles, and long to be freed from them. Why then do they not cease to trouble themselves? Why do they not let the future alone—further than to hope for the best, and prepare for the worst? Why are they so unwilling to let their troubles pass? and when past, why do they recall them to life so frequently?

If you would make yourself and others happy, never reach for troubles which are ahead. Let them alone, they will come fast enough of themselves, and perhaps will not come at all. Those which are real, dismiss from your conversation and thoughts as soon as possible, and they will soon leave you. Let those which are past remain undisturbed in the grave of forgetfulness, and they will never arise to disturb your peace.—Strictly observe these rules, fear God, and work righteousness, and you may set at defiance all the troubles of this world of wo: they cannot destroy your happiness.

Letter from Bro. F. Chandler.

Bro. Marsh:—I have arrived at my field of labor. I had a pleasant voyage on my way here. I visited the churches at the following places:—Seneca Falls, Rochester, Lockport, and Buffalo, N. Y., and Cleveland and Akron O. In the most of these places, we had a refreshing time. I found the brethren strong in the faith once delivered to the saints.

At Cleveland and Akron, they have been much distracted by seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, but I think some have been saved from the snare, and are once more walking in the true light. Others, I think, begin to see men as trees walking. I hope they will soon receive more of the holy anointing, that they may see things clearly. Some, it is to be feared, the devil has led captive at his will. But the cause is rising in Ohio, and I think demands more laborers: the calls are pressing. I hope some from the East will catch the missionary spirit, and come this way. I think the time has come when we ought to make an extra effort to save souls: the fields are wide and ready to harvest.

I preached once on the Steamboat, to an attentive congregation. I trust some good was done. I arrived here Saturday, May 30. I found the brethren here few in number, but strong in the faith of soon seeing the Lord. Bro. Robinson from Cleveland, has just visited them, and they were much strengthened under his labors. I preached last Sunday in the Court House: our congregation was small, but few knew of the meeting. I think good may be done here.

I expect to visit other places, as the way opens. The brethren who are scattered through this Western region, will write and let me know where they live. I shall supply all the calls for preaching, as far as I can. I think our time for labor is most over. The Lord help us to work while it is called to-day. I think we have never had greater reasons for looking for the Lord than now.—We will watch and wait a little longer, and we shall see Him whom our souls love. The Lord hasten the time.

Your brother in tribulation, waiting for Jesus,
MOSES CHANDLER.

To whom shall I go?

JOHN VI. 68.

[Selected by I. P.]

To whom, my Savior, shall I go,
If I abandon thee,
My guide thro' all this vale of wo,
And more than all to me?

The world reject thy gentle reign,
And pay thy death with scorn;
Ah! they would plait thy crown again,
And sharpen every thorn.

But I have felt thy dying love
Breathe sweetly thro' my heart;
To whisper hope of joys above,
— And can we ever part?

Ah, no! with thee I'll walk below
My journey to the end:—
To whom, my Savior, shall I go,
But thee, the sinner's Friend.

Letter from Bro. P. A. Smith.

Bro. Marsh:—I have just noticed a letter in the last Herald, from A. A. Sawin, dated Kingsbury Vt., May 12, 1846, which speaks of his pain of heart for not hearing the second coming of the Savior noticed in a discourse delivered by Mr. Abbot on a certain occasion. Now, if A. A. Sawin is so strong in the faith of the speedy coming of the Savior, as to be pained on the account of not hearing the subject mentioned by a man that does not profess to be a believer in the doctrine, what can he expect will be the feelings of advent brethren in Burlington, to have him forsake them in their time of trouble and persecution, to preach for the Baptist denomination? If his views on the image Beast, in Rev. 13, are now as when he was in Rochester, how can he unite with the Baptists, and forsake the advent people in time of trial?

I visited Burlington a few weeks ago, and found a very few advent people there strong in the faith of soon seeing the Savior in all his beauty. They are despised and forsaken by the popular and proud part of community. And the Word tells us, "if you live godly in Christ, you shall suffer persecution." I am more and more convinced that the advent people are called of God to hold up to a perishing world the truths of the Bible, and to be living epistles of its truth, known and read of all men. I feel strong in the Lord, and the power of his might. P. A. SMITH.

Rochester, June 14, 1846.

Letter from Bro. H. Pratt.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I am fully persuaded that the wise shall understand. Your article on perilous times is indeed a light to my path; coming as I now see, from those who profess to have light, yet walk in darkness.

It is indeed perilous at sea, when the pilot knows not where he is, but how much more perilous for the Christian when his teachers or pilots become so drunken with the cares and fashions of this world, that they are willingly ignorant of our distance from shore, from home, and from the glorious appearing of our Heavenly Pilot to take us into rest. In reading the 7th of 2 Cor., I find that to be unequally yoked together, can be no other than sectarian bondage, for no one pretends that the Christian yokes himself with the world, or even with those who are pulling in an oblique direction, but with those who profess to draw the same way. Paul calls those true yoke fellows who labored with him in the gospel; hence, when one begins to say, 'I am of Paul,' &c., he begins to draw in a selfish way, and to such as are honest, and have become yoked with a sect that has fallen into unbelief, from popularity or worldly mindedness, the declaration from Jehovah is, 'Ye are the temple of the living God,' 'Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, and I will receive you.' Those only can appreciate the promise who have obeyed the command.

A little more light from Stephen. Acts 7th.—After saying, as we have, that father Abraham has not got the inheritance, he shows how they rejected Moses, for they knew not what had become of him. Therefore they wanted something else to worship, because he was gone so long.—How striking the comparison between the present condition of the world and the condition then. Moses was their deliverer from Egyptian bondage, Christ ours from sin. Moses was rejected when he went to intercede for them, and they turned away from God to worship a calf. Our intercessor has been gone so long they know not what has become of him, therefore they reject the idea of his coming, and receive honor one of another, and covet the goodly Babylonish garment, and the golden wedge. Ye stiff-necked, and uncircumcised in heart and ears, (they will not humble themselves, nor hear) 'Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye. Which of the Prophets have not your fathers persecuted? And they have slain them that shewed before of the coming of the Just One.'

How striking the similarity. When we have endeavored to show before, the coming of the Just One, what have they not done that they could do? But may we like Stephen cry, 'Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.'

A few of us in this section of the world are rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, and in the liberty of the gospel, knowing by experience that it is more blessed to give than receive, glory be to God. And we are not unmindful of Bro Marsh in his weakness of body: we pray God that when he is weak then he may be strong.

Yours, in the patience of hope.

Wales, Mass., June '46.

Bro. E. R. Pinney, Seneca Falls, June 24th writes:—My health is somewhat improved, and I trust I shall soon be able to get into the field again. With the blessing of my Lord, I purpose attending the grove meeting at Manlius next Friday, as I can go all the way by water, except 4 miles. I do not know what the effect will be upon me, I hope not injurious. I have been so long confined here, I feel that I must get out and meet once more with the brethren, and if the Lord gives me strength, I will try and speak a word by way of encouragement. During the meeting at Rochester, I walked so much, that when I got home and the excitement passed off, I was much fatigued. But I rejoice I went. Br'n. Bywater and Johnson are expected to be with us this evening on their way to Manlius.

Bro. J. R. Mitchell, Baltimore Md., June 10, writes:—Your valuable messengers of "truth" have been received and read with much interest. I find in your paper much to comfort and strengthen me in this time of trial and peril, and feel it due you to say, it is just what every lover of Jesus and his appearing needs,—breathing as it does the free, pure air of gospel truth. The man who will dare to stand erect and proclaim publicly any doctrine, (however true,) in the face of all orthodoxy, should be encouraged. May my God give you more abundantly his meek spirit of wisdom, that you may continue in his goodness, distributing to the household of faith, until your full reward comes.

The letters of the various brethren scattered abroad, also give much comfort to those of like faith. I always feel lifted up in reading the accounts from them of their trials, tribulations and persecutions, but much more of their faith and constancy. O, that all who have started for the heavenly country might hold fast their confidence a little longer; for surely we must be near, very near the harbor. Every thing declares the Lord will most certainly very soon appear. We have no need to despond, but to rejoice. Our former errors on time prove nothing against us, but for us. Yet a little while and he will come; not metaphorically, but personally, and then we shall be freed, forever freed.

When I commenced writing I simply wanted to let you know that I received the papers, and read and circulated them, and send you a few subscribers; but whenever I get on the blessed subject of a speedy deliverance, I cannot be short. My soul loves the doctrine. I was born into it, it is indoctrinated and interwoven in my very nature. May my Lord keep me with you and all his poor ones, until he comes.

Bro. B. Carter, Woodstock, Ill., June 15th, writes:—If time would permit, I should be glad to say something to the dear brethren scattered abroad, but I can only say,—hold on, bear the cross a little longer, the crown will soon be given, and all the bright glories of the new earth will burst upon your enraptured vision. My faith is yet as strong as ever, that the end of the days given to Daniel will usher in the great events for which we have looked with such intense interest, and that it is just before us.

Bro. J. C. Bywater, Attica N. Y., June 12th, writes:—I would say that to me the signs of the times are very ominous, and there is good reason why we should look for and expect the King of glory this year. I am satisfied that should time continue longer than the present year, we shall know the reason: the Lord will not long leave his faithful, confiding children in the dark. No, No. We have got too near the dawn of day to see no signs of its approach. Soon, very soon, the great light-house will appear in full view. O my brethren, let us heed the Savior's caution, for it was written for us, "Take heed, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, or (excessive eating and drinking) and drunkenness;" not so much with alcohol, as the combined influences of the world which appear so rife among us at the present time, "and cares of this life, and so that day come upon us unawares. May the Lord sustain you in your labors and responsibilities, and open the hearts and hands of his people to supply your necessities, that the truth may not be muzzled in these last expiring moments.

Bro. T. L. Hawkins, Lower Sandusky Ohio, June 8, writes:—You receive this communication from an old man who experienced the forgiving grace of God at the end of the 1260 years of Papal tyranny, or in the year 1801. Twenty years of the latter part of my life have I been an acceptable Methodist local Preacher. Until within twelve months past, I have held an unbroken permission from that body, to cry, "behold the Lamb of God,"—but in consequence of my proclaiming that this is the year in which the Lamb will fulfill the last sentence of that portion of scripture, they have for this reason only, withheld my license. Nevertheless, I am nailed to this truth, that the good Lord is at hand.

Appointments.

I will hold meetings, the Lord willing, at the following places: West Middlebury, 1th of July, at 6 o'clock P. M. Bro. Hemingway will please give the notice, and make arrangements. Attica, in the Advent Hall, Sunday 5th of July, all day. H. F. HULL.

HEBER'S 'PALESTINE.'

And who is He? the vast, the awful form
Girt with the whirlwind, sandal'd with the storm?
A western cloud around his limbs is spread,
His crown a rainbow, and a sun his head:
To highest heaven he lifts his kingly hand,
And treads at once the ocean and the land:
And hark! his voice amid the thunders roar,
His dreadful voice, that time shall be no more!
—Lo! cherub hands the golden courts prepare,
Lo! thrones are set, and every saint is there!
Earth's utmost bounds confess his awful sway,
The mountains worship, and the isles obey;
Nor sun nor moon they need,—nor day nor night;
God is their temple, and the Lamb their light:
And shall not Israel's sons exulting come,
Hail the glad beam, and claim their ancient home!
On David's throne shall David's offspring reign,
And the dry bones be warm with life again.
Hark! white-robed crowds their deep hosannas raise,
And the hoarse flood repeats the sound of praise:
Ten thousand harps attune the mystic song,
Ten thousand thousand saints the strain prolong—
"Worthy the Lamb! omnipotent to save,
"Who died, who lives, triumphant o'er the grave!"

Arouse Thee!

Arouse thee, arouse! awake from thy sadness,
The star of our hope will soon, soon appear;
The day long foretold by Apostles and Prophets,
The Pilgrim's redemption is near, it is near.
Why should we sorrow, or why be dismayed?
Our Father in heaven his cause will defend,
His little flock guard thro' the vale of oppression,
The 'form of the fourth' his own will attend.
Still rest on the promise—it cannot be broken,
The vision fails not, it surely will come;
Our hope standeth firm, unmoved and unshaken,
The breezes are wafting us home, sweetly home.
Arouse thee! arouse! awake from thy sadness,
Thy trial is short—thy labor soon o'er;
Soon on the plains of Canaan, fair Canaan,
We shall meet, where sorrows and sighs are no more.

ANN ELIZA.

Colchester, Vt.

TYRE.

Tyre was the most celebrated city of Phoenicia, and the ancient emporium of the world. Its colonies were numerous and extensive. "It was the theatre of an immense commerce and navigation—the nursery of arts and science, and the city of perhaps the most industrious and active people ever known." The kingdom of Carthage, the rival of Rome, was one of the colonies of Tyre. While this mart of nations was in the height of its populenc and power, and at least one hundred and twenty-five years before the destruction of old Tyre, Isaiah pronounced its irrevocable fall. Tyre on the island succeeded to the more ancient city on the continent; and, being inhabited by the same people, retaining the same name, being removed but a little space, and perhaps, occupying in part the same ground—the fate of both is included in the prophecy.—The pride and the wickedness of the Tyrians, their exultation over the calamities of the Israelites, and their cruelty in selling them to slavery, are assigned as the reasons of the judgments that were to overtake them, or as the causes of the revelation of the destiny of their city. And the whole fate of Tyre was foretold.

Bishop Newton shows at length, how the following prophecies were all exactly fulfilled, as well as clearly foretold, viz: that Tyre was to be taken and destroyed by the Chaldeans, who were, at the time of the delivery of the prophecy, an inconsiderable people, and particularly by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon;—that the inhabitants should fly over the Mediterranean into the islands and countries adjoining, and even then should not find a quiet settlement;—that the city should be restored after seventy years, and return to her gain and merchandise;—that the people should, in time, forsake their idolatry, and become converts to the true religion and worship of God;—and, finally, that the city should be totally destroyed, and become a place only for fishers to spread their nets upon.

But, instead of reviewing the whole of these, a few of the most striking predictions which were accomplished after the era of the last of the Old Testament prophets, and the fulfilment of which, rests on the most unexceptionable testimony, shall be selected.

One of the most singular events in history was the manner in which the siege of Tyre was conducted by Alexander the Great. Irritated that a single city should alone oppose his victorious arms, and fearful for his fame,—even his army's despairing of success, could not deter him from the siege. And Tyre was taken in a manner, the success of which was more wonderful than the design was daring; for it was surrounded by a wall one hundred and fifty feet in height, and situated on an island half a mile distant from the shore. A mound was formed from the continent to the island, and the ruins of old Tyre, two hundred and forty years after its demolition, afforded ready materials for the purpose. Such was the work, that the attempts at first, defeated the power of an Alexander. The enemy consumed and the storm destroyed it. But its remains, buried beneath the water, formed a barrier, which rendered successful his renewed efforts. A vast mass of additional matter was requisite. The soil and the very rubbish were gathered and heaped. And the mighty conqueror, who afterward failed in raising again any of the ruins of Babylon, cast those of Tyre into the sea, and took her very dust from off her. He left not the remnant of a ruin—and the site of ancient Tyre is not unknown. Who then taught the prophets to say of Tyre,— "They shall lay thy stones and thy timber, and thy dust, in the midst of the water—I will also scrape her dust from her. I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more. Thou shalt be sought for, yet thou shalt never be found again?" Ezek. 24: 4, 12, 21.

After the capture of Tyre, the conqueror ordered it to be set on fire. Fifteen thousand of the Tyrians escaped in ships. And, exclusive of multitudes that were cruelly slain, thirty thousand were sold into slavery. Each of these facts had been announced for centuries:—"Behold the Lord will cast her out—he will smite her power in the sea, and he shall be devoured with fire—I will bring forth a fire from the midst of thee—I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth. Pass ye over to Tarshish—pass over to Chittim. The isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.—Thou shalt die the death of them that are slain in the midst of the sea. The children of Israel also, and the children of Judah, have ye sold. I will return the recompense upon your own head."

But it was also prophecied of the greatest commercial city of the world, whose merchants were princes,—whose traffickers were the honorable of the earth,—"I will make thee like the top of a rock. Thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon."—Ezek. 26: 14, 15. The same prediction is repeated with an assurance of its truth:—"I will make her like the top of a rock; it shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea, for I have spoken it."

Tyre, though deprived of its former inhabitants, soon revived as a city, and greatly regained its commerce. It was populous and flourishing at the beginning of the Christian era. It contained many disciples of Jesus, in the days of the apostles. An elegant temple and many churches were afterward built there. It was the see of the first archbishop under the patriarch of Jerusalem. Her merchandise and her hire, according to the prophecy, were holiness to the Lord. In the seventh century, Tyre was taken by the Saracens. In the twelfth by the crusaders—at which period it was a great commercial city. The Mamelukes succeeded as its masters: and it has now remained for three hundred years, in the possession of the multitude of cities and of countries whose ruin and devastation, as accomplished by the cruelties and ravages of Turkish barbarity and despotism, were foretold nearly two thousand years before the existence of that nation of plunderers. And although it has more lately, by a brief respite from the greatest oppression, risen somewhat from its ruins, the last of the predictions respecting it has been literally fulfilled, according to the testimony of many witnesses. But that of Maundrell, Shaw, Volney, and Bruce, may suffice:—"You find here no similitude of that glory for which it was so renowned in ancient times. You see nothing here but a mere Babel of broken walls, pillars, vaults, &c. Its present inhabitants are only a few poor wretches, harboring themselves in the vaults, and subsisting chiefly upon fishing, who seem to be preserved in this place by Divine Providence, as a visible argument how God hath fulfilled his word concerning Tyre."

"The port of Tyre, small as it is at present, is choked up to that degree with sand and rubbish, that the boats of those fishermen who now and then visit this once renowned emporium, and dry their nets upon its rocks and ruins, can, with great difficulty only, be admitted. And even Volney, after quoting the description of the greatness of Tyre, and the general description of the destruction of the city, and the annihilation of its commerce, acknowledges that "the vicissitudes of time, or rather the barbarism of the Greeks of the Lower Empire, and the Mahometans, have accomplished this prediction. Instead of that ancient commerce, so active and extensive, Sour (Tyre,) reduced to a miserable village, has no other trade than the exportation of a few sacks of corn and raw cotton; nor any merchant but a single Greek factor, in the service of the French of Saide, who scarcely makes sufficient profit to maintain his family. But though he overlooks the fulfilment of minuter prophecies, he relates facts more valuable than any opinion, and more corroborative of their truth:—"The whole village of Tyre contains only fifty or sixty poor families, who live obscurely on the produce of their little ground and a trifling fishery. The houses they occupy are no longer, as in the time of Strabo, edifices of three or four stories high—but wretched huts, ready to crumble into ruins." Bruce describes Tyre as a rock whereon fishers dry their nets.

It matters not by what means these prophecies have been verified; for the means were as inscrutable, and as impossible to have been foreseen by man, as the event. The fact is beyond a doubt that they have been literally fulfilled—and therefore the prophecies are true. They may be overlooked, but no ingenuity can pervert them. No facts could have been more unlikely or striking—and no predictions respecting them, could have been more clear. KEITH.

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

BY S. M. M'CORCKLE.

The lack of system will be pardoned by those who take any interest in our propositions. Perhaps this fact should be reserved for discussion after we have disposed of and settled the question of the personal advent of Messiah. But this is a matter of minor importance. We have some doubts about the time that the NEW JERUSALEM is to come "down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride for her husband." It probably will be introduced after the great battle of Armageddon—after thrones and diadems have mingled with the dust—after the deluge of fire—after the once crucified Son of man, by the most imposing facts, is coronated King of kings and Lord of lords, over the whole earth.

Closely connected with the new Jerusalem, and the latter we consider a literal City! as literal as Boston or Paris. "And I, John, saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." Where is the new heaven, represented as descending? And I heard a voice out of heaven saying, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes;—and there shall be no more death." Others beside the present writer, have been in error, by not discriminating between a city and a government: they have supposed there would be no death during the millennium, or in the new heavens and earth. The city is no doubt to be the residence of immortality—the Emporium of the new heavens.

Our reasons for considering this City to be literal are, first, it is represented as "coming down from God out of heaven." Secondly, the specifications connected with the City. If we may transfer this City, as is done by the commentators and clergy, into the world above, we may also change every word or phrase in the lids of the Bible, and call up down, or down up—light darkness, and darkness light, to suit the whims of those who may choose to transpose the propositions of heaven, without clue or precedent from inspiration. The sing song of the day is—"we are going home to the new Jerusalem!" But inspiration says, in words as plain as words can be: the new Jerusalem is to come "down from God out of heaven"—and, "the tabernacle of God is to be with men." Who are we to believe—God's word in its positive propositions, or Pulpit perversions? A second argument in favor of a literal City, is this: the cardinal points are called for—East, West, North, and South. If it be a figurative city, how are we to dispose of these things? If it be a figure, what is it a figure of? The church will be placed for the fact. Has the church three gates on the East, three on the West, North and South? "The City lieth four square." To what will we apply this in the church? Or is the church ever so definitely described in its dimensions, so as to suit the measurement given by the apostle, of this City—"twelve thousand furlongs."* Also, the very thickness of the wall is given: "an hundred and forty and four cubits." Who will spiritualize this proposition into anything about the church, but the most unsummately ignorant? But we have other reasons more insuperable. The City under consideration, "had no need of the light of the sun."—When was it, or when will it be, that the church is not to need the light of the sun? Make it a spiritual sun, and the matter is made worse.—Will it ever be, that the church is not to need the sun of righteousness? It will apply neither to the church militant, nor the church triumphant. Another object than the church, for this City must be found. Transfer it to the worlds above, and you contradict the express declaration of Holy Writ—place it on earth, and what else than a City can be made out of it. Now, when is this city to come "down from God out of heaven?"—If before the millennium, what is to be its design but the residence of the great King? If after the millennium, what is to be its fate in the great conflagration of worlds and rolling spheres, proposed by the Pulpit at the judgment.

The clergy and commentators have to face some monstrous absurdities, beside that of contradicting God's word. The 22d chapter of the Apocalypse, is but a continuation of the narrative respecting the City and its inhabitants, with a few other items. Its propositions are manifestly associated with this world and its inhabitants. "And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bear twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.—And there shall be no more curse." Here are months called for. Are there months in the heavens above? Out of this City, day and night, months and years will succeed each other. Within the City, "the Lord God giveth them light:—and they shall reign for ever and ever." Also, the "leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations." Is there healing needed in heaven? or are there nations there also?—"And the nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the Kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it." Here is progress, and Kings of the earth called for, associated with this city. "And there shall be no more curse." This has an allusion to a curse which has been inflicted on all the living. Men are not removed from the region where the curse existed, but the curse is removed from them—from the world.—To say there shall be no more curse in heaven, would be a great impropriety of speech indeed: but to say there shall be no more curse on earth, is intelligible, and agrees with facts on which the senses can act.

This City with all its glory and grandeur, with all the facts connected with it, and connecting it with this world; its streets of transparent gold—its foundations glowing with sapphires, or blushing with rubies—its waters of life, and trees of life, with leaves of healing virtue—in spite of God's word about its descent to the world; it is turned into a figure, of that on which the senses cannot act, or laid in some remote region, beyond the limits of our rolling spheres, by the dumb divines of the day.

This City, glorious as the morning, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun," lucid as light, and radiant as the bow of Jehovah, excites no enquiry, no investigation, no interest, relative to the time or place of descent—no concern amidst the turmoil of discordant factions, polemical jargon, war about words, creeds, altars, formularies—with the "thousand and one" associations for promoting religion, without making men better. God's messages are treated with contempt, and heaven's majesty is advertised from one end of christendom to the other, by clerical expositions on his word, that he does not mean what he says!—and that a God of truth is to be taken diametrically contrary to his propositions—taking men up to the new Jerusalem.

We have shown that this City is not a figure of the church militant, nor of the church triumphant: and that it is a literal superstructure;—worthy of the purpose designed by the great architect—the residence of the once crucified Christ—who, in his first advent on earth, had not where to lay his head. Whose second coming will be with the thousands of his saints and angels—for whose residence this stupendous fabric is prepared by creative power; placing at once, all terrestrial glory in the shade. It is foreign from our purpose, to indulge the fancy in an attempt to sketch the beautiful and rich variety of colors arranged in the foundation of this fabric, whose "maker and builder is God,"—as brilliant as the rainbow, and as durable as adamant. Enthusiastic flights, or draughts on the imagination beyond what the Lord has said, is almost as censurable in these matters, as the cold prosing process of mystifying this gift of Omnipotence into a nonentity. If this be a literal City, it proves the literal return of the Son of man. If the Messiah is to make his literal advent to this world, and reign with his saints a thousand years; the use and design of the City is explained. The two facts, like chemical affinities, harmonize, and form an unbroken chain of wonderful propositions and stupendous events.

Fulfillment of Prophecy.

1st. I will notice some passages which speak of the abundant treasures of gold and silver, in "the last days." Isa. 2: 7, 8. "Their land is full of gold and silver—horses, and chariots, and idols." James 5: 3, tells us that the "rich men" should have their "treasures heaped together for the last days." Great Babylon as presented in the 18th of Rev., at her destruction, is to be full of the "merchandise of gold and silver," &c.—It is said that her "costliness" enriches "all that have ships in the sea," and "the merchants of the earth shall mourn" at her destruction, for "no man buyeth her merchandise any more." Says Jeremiah 51: 13, "O, thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasure, thine end is come," &c. How plainly these testimonies teach that the speedy coming of the judgment will be seen in the fulfilment of these prophecies,—and I ask, do we not live in the very time predicted by the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah; spoken of by James, and seen in vision by John? have not the rich capitalists of earth literally "heaped their treasures together" within a short time? Look at the vast stocks existing in railroad, steamboat, telegraph, printing, theatrical, banking, and a great variety of marine companies, together with the almost innumerable manufacturing establishments of every variety, and say, have not the rich men of the earth gathered up its riches in heaps? Is not the "land now full of gold and silver?" Does not every article comprised in the merchandise of Babylon, as named in Rev. 18, with which she would be filled just before her final and fiery doom, exist to almost any extent as articles of merchandise at this very day? Is not the "land full of horses," and every variety of chariots and "idols" when was the goddess of fashion ever so idolized?

also names of individuals and bodies of men: as ministers and their sectarian churches, meeting-houses, singing choirs, fine, smooth preaching, and finally, every thing which reveres and honors the god of riches? This sign is strikingly fulfilled by our rich southern planters—and with them we might name the aristocratical lords of Europe, who have heaped together treasures for the last days, out of the unrequited toils of their "labors, whose hire they have kept back by fraud." Finally, take what view we may, the solemn truth meets us in living reality—"the Judge standeth at the door!" Think not reader, that the day may not come for some years yet—believe God, and be ready every moment for the event.

2d. In connection with "abundance of treasures," the world, just before God arises to judgment, is to be filled with great oppression. Let us look at some prophecies on this point. James says, speaking of "the last days," that the rich will keep back by fraud, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down their fields, and the cries of them which reaped will enter into the ears of the Lord. Mal. 3: 5. "I will come near to you in judgment, and be a swift witness against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right," &c. Ps. 12: 5. "For the oppression of the poor for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord." Isa. 3: 23. "They judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them"—"therefore, says the next verse, "I will ease me of mine adversaries, and revenge me of mine enemies." 3: 14. "The Lord will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people, and the princes thereof: for ye have eaten up the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses," &c. Rev. 18: 13, tells the same in substance, when speaking of Babylon's merchandise. It says, "and slaves, (bodies—margin) and souls of men."

Other testimonies might be cited, descriptive of this painful state of things in "the last days," but these are to the point, and sufficient. The question now comes up, do we live in a period of general oppression, when these heaven-inspired sentences are receiving an exact fulfilment in every particular? The groans and sighs of millions say we do. 1st. We will cast an eye to the poor of different nations—what has been the state of Ireland's thousands, within a few years? subject to the most cruel oppression, and miseries of extreme want. How has the extensive and groaning manufacturing districts of England witnessed to the truth of these prophecies of late? Thousands of youthful females there are doomed to labor like slaves, till the bloom of health is wasted, and their strength gone, for a few pence per day to support themselves, and perhaps a widowed mother and some fatherless children!—Mothers fall in the streets of London through starvation and despair; their little ones pining away for lack of nourishment, even unto death in many instances! and finally, all classes of the laboring poor in England, both male and female, have been represented on good authority, according to the picture presented by the prophets.—Notwithstanding the immense treasures of that proud realm, the "fulness of bread" for the higher classes, and the facilities for the alleviation of the oppressed poor, yet their burthened cry is ascending to the ear of heaven, louder and louder!

Reports in the papers have presented and are still bringing us weekly tidings of great oppression and suffering, in different parts of Russia, among millions of her poor—commotions and open revolts are daily being witnessed among the injured mass of beings in that vast empire—also the sufferings of the Polish inhabitants are represented as being exceedingly great;—and are on-listing the sympathies of other nations. Accounts from other portions of the globe exhibit more or less, the same state of things.

This country is said to be the brightest and happiest among nations, but how does the prophecy relative to the rich "grinding the face of the poor" in the latter days, stand here? Look at slavery's lengthening and widening dominion at the South—see millions scattered over those free boasted shores, reaping down, unrewarded, the fields of the rich oppressor—bought and sold like the brute—family ties rent asunder—blood, and tears, and groans, commingling in rain! What does all this say? but to utter in the language of James, "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh!"

In addition to this we might remark, that the poor in general of this country, have suffered from various causes, within 4 or six years past—but mostly from those who have combined to "heap treasure together for the last days," and to oppress the hireling in his wages," &c. So far, therefore, as the nations of the world are concerned, we have the word of God fulfilled to the letter in this particular.

Again, do we find a fulfilment of these prophecies, or portions of them, in the nominal church? have not the rich of the church "despised the poor," and oppressed them? When there have "come into these assemblies a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there came in also a poor man in vile raiment," have they "respected him who wore the gay clothing, and appointed him an honored seat—but said to the poor, "stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool."—have they not drawn their poor brethren in multitudes of instances, before both civil and ecclesiastical judgment seats, and oppressed them? The influence of the poor in the different sects, is but little regarded by the wealthy—a few exceptions to this painful view, is all we can tell—generally speaking, it is the same of the nominal church, to the separation of many of the believers in the speedy advent of Christ, from the different sects, they experienced the truth of God's word relative to this kind of oppression, in a peculiar manner. The history of these things is fresh in our recollection. Others there are yet with those bodies we trust, who cannot, will not much longer endure to see the little ones of Christ "cast out as evil for His name sake," and trodden under foot by the proud and scornful—without "coming from among those" who do such things. The bloody stain of slavery also, is upon the nominal church, in at least the United States. Several hundred thousands of human beings are held as goods and chattles by the principal denomination at the South. O, the scene of tribulation and anguish which is about to burst over these characters. Is not this just the time when the Lord may be looked for to "arise out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity?" If not, how can his word ever be fulfilled as it regards heaps of treasure, and general oppression? Let us not "seek after a sign from heaven," and reject the simple testimony of the prophets. These things were written for us, and we are exhorted by James, while in this state of things, to "be patient, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" Be patient unto the coming of the Lord," &c. O come ye friends of Jesus, and go forth unto him without the camp bearing his reproach—a "little while" of labor, a "little while" of sorrow and tribulation, and the crown of endless glory will be obtained! Let us give earnest heed now, in this dark, sin covered world, to the sure word of prophecy, till the glorious day shall dawn, Amen.

Yours in the hope of eternal life,

The righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth.—Prov.

Charlotte Elizabeth on Evil Spirits and Holy Angels.

She says, "We are now writing of Satanic wrath, as his permitted day shortens, and his wrath does not always vent itself in explosions of rage. It works sometimes in secrecy and darkness,—fierce, indeed, and cruel always, but never devoid of skillful cunning to direct it. There is as much of his wrath in the speaking of smooth things, and the prophesying of peace to those with whom the Lord has a controversy, as in the greatest tumult of violence. Who shall tell the extent of that wrathful hatred against God and his fair creation, which prompted the bland, insinuating lie, you shall not surely die. O, that minister and congregations would bear in mind, equally bear in mind, how great a stake the enemy has in drawing away their minds from the unadorned simplicity that is in the doctrines of the cross.—But the doctrine of the crown is another which he now struggles, with all his infernal might, to suppress. A crucified Savior, a mediating High Priest in heaven, an anointing sacrifice—he loathes to think on or suffer his bond slaves to hear of; but a reigning King, about to rescue the earth from all his usurpations, to plant his throne in righteousness in the midst of his people, to send forth his word from Zion and his law from Jerusalem his is the very knell of Satan's departure, and to stifle the sound, he will foster humility itself, or any grace, by the perversion of which he may hope to seal the preachers lips on that fearful topic. For eighteen centuries, he has heard the petition resounding on all sides, "Thy kingdom come," and he cares not how often it is reiterated, (as witness the papacy with its everlasting repetitions of Pater noster,) so long as men do not inquire into the nature of that coming kingdom, or watch for its approach. An imperfect gospel he can tolerate, and in our day that is an imperfect gospel which omits the great truth of the coming kingdom. The sound of his conquerors chariot wheels is a fearful sound to Satan; and knowing that nothing will so effectually turn the attention of the church upon himself as the heralding of Christ's approach, he will strike almost any bargain of which a condition is the silencing of that ominous voice."

I fear many of our ministers of America would not patiently hear such preaching as this.

"In connection with this part of the subject, we may call to mind the parable of our Lord, where he describes the proceedings of the unclean spirit, who has left for a time his habitation, as distinguished from that effectual expulsion which God only can accomplish. "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest but finding none—he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out, and when he cometh he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he and taketh to himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: the last state of that man is worse than the first." Luke 11: 24-26. We may be assured that attempts at such re-entrance under aggravated forms, into every person who may appear to have been delivered from the power of Satan, will be made, as the time shortens and the enemy's rage increases; and hence the cruel treachery that Christ's people must look for at the hands of their nearest connexions and dearest companions. Many an Ahithophel will be found; many a Judas to revolt from his friend, and to betray his master; and many an unsuspecting christian will have to take up the prophetic complaint,—"It was thou, mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance; we took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company." Psa. 55: 13, 14.

Could words have ever a more complete fulfilment than those have in this country within a few years.

Voices of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JULY 8, 1846.

REMOVAL OF OUR OFFICE.

We have removed our Office into Simpson's new block, on Works Street, just back of the Arcade. We occupy the second floor, in the west end of the building: entrance from Works St.

I am Sick.

Such is the state of my health that I am unable to attend to the duties of the Office. It is somewhat doubtful how the case will turn with me, but by the faithful use of proper means, with the blessing of God, I hope soon to be restored to my usual health. The will of the Lord be done.

It would greatly aid me, at this time, for those who can write correctly, or so that their communications would not need much correction, to furnish matter for our columns. Our receipts also are very light. Why is it so? Can these things be remedied?

The Sower of Discord.

It is not only the duty of Christians to watch and pray, to attend on public worship, to pay their preacher, to give good weight and good measure, and to be benevolent to the poor; but there is one thing, not unfrequently among their own number, against which they should be most cautiously guarded. It is a talé bearing, detracting and calumniating spirit.

The fiery darts of slander, are the chief weapons used in the unholy wars of sectarian strife of the present age. And, strange to tell, the man who is most skilled in hurling his arrows of calumny against his opponent, in the estimation of thousands, is acknowledged the soundest logician, the most orthodox in sentiment, and the purest Christian! Beware of such men, and the sect or church which countenances truth, calumny would not be the chief weapon of their defence. Shun them, and cautiously guard against their infectious spirit: for the poison of asps is under their tongues, and their ways take hold on death.

There are few, if any, greater evils or pests in the church of God, than members who are addicted to the practice of tale-bearing: to telling their grievances to every one who has the folly to hear them, before taking gospel steps to have their trials amicably settled. But as great an evil as it is, this cowardly and reprehensible practice is too much tolerated in many churches; and in not a few instances has been the means of rending asunder the holy bonds of Christian union, with which its members were once united. 'Go to thy brother and tell him his faults between him and thee ALONE,' is the rule that Jesus gave. But if they persist in their course, beware of such busy and discordant spirits. Shun them and partake not of their ways. Listen not to their insidious pratings, unless it is to give them a Christian rebuke, to point them to their duty, and to warn them of the pernicious consequences of persisting in their wickedness. The sooner the church is freed from such infectious bodies, the better: for their 'tongue will set on fire the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell.'

Some men, though liberal in sentiment, make their own opinions the rigid and infallible rule for others; and if those opinions are not scrupulously followed, their dissenting brethren must be made to feel the cruel rod of their vengeance. If difficulties arise, their honor is at stake. That perfect law which says, 'Speak not evil one of another,' is too tardy for their case. Hence they must take the matter into their own hands; and under the excitement of their corroded feelings, let loose the tongue of slander, and dip their pen in the cup of bitter acrimony, and publish their brothers faults to saint and sinner. Alas! what presumption to thus take the seat of judgment. What folly! to judge a matter before the time. How unlike that spirit which inspires us to 'suffer wrong rather than do wrong'; and that principle which teaches us to 'do to others as we would that they should do to us.'

Mark the man who is the sower of discord among brethren: who will send abroad his public or private communications to the injury of a brother's character; for he is a dangerous member of community.—Beware of his friendship, lest he betray your confidence; listen not to his counsel, lest you imbibe his spirit; shun his example, for he scatters fire-brands and death wherever the baneful influence of his tongue or pen is felt.

If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His. What is our zeal, our eloquence, our erudition, and our honor, as a defender of the truth, worth, without the possession of that spirit which will prompt us to 'speak evil of no man'—to suffer wrong rather than do wrong—to bear with, and hide from the gaze of the world, the faults of an honest dissenting, and perhaps erring brother. We are as a 'sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal'—'we are nothing'—and shall, in the great day, be 'weighed in the balance and found wanting.' Therefore, while we as members or ministers of the church of God, shall endeavor to propagate the holy truths of the gospel, let us at the same time possess, and be guided by, the spirit of its divine author, who could both love and pray for his enemies.

Experimental Religion.

There are many cold calculating theorists in our world. Their religion consists, simply, in a theoretical knowledge of God, and his economy of saving sinners. Practical and experimental godliness, with nothing, is all that is based upon this superficial foundation. But alas! their hopes will fail them when every false foundation shall melt away, at the coming of the Searcher of all hearts. For what is a theory without the practice and experience? It is useless. A practical and experimental, as well as a theoretical, knowledge of God's word must be possessed in order to secure eternal life.

The husbandman must till his ground, if he would reap an abundant harvest. He may understand the science of agriculture, but this knowledge will not fence his fields, till his soil, sow his seed, nor gather his harvest: his theory must be reduced to practice, in order to fill his garner with plenty. It is so with the sinner; he must reduce to practice the commandments of God; must labor for the bread of life, or he will perish. It is the practice of the physician that secures to himself honor and profit. His theory, alone, will never carry relief to the sick around him. It is so with the Christian; practical godliness carries the bread of life to perishing sinners, and is a mean of securing to its possessor incorruptible riches and honor. It is the practice of the mechanic that makes him skilled in his profession. He cannot trace the line with his broadaxe, nor smoothe the board with his plane and straighten it with his jointer, without practice. Neither can the Christian become skilled in his profession, without a daily practice of the precepts of the gospel. We must not only understand but do the commandments, to have right to the Tree of Life.

But a theoretical and practical knowledge of the gospel will not save the sinner; he must have an experimental knowledge, or perish. The sick physician must experience the cleansing and healing efficacy of his medicine before he can be made whole. The most correct theory in his head, and the most faithful practice bestowed upon others, will not mitigate his pain, nor save him from death; he must take the medicine himself, or die. It is so with the nominal professor of religion; his theory and practice will do him no good, however much good he may have done for others. Unless he experience the purifying and saving influence of God's grace in his heart, he will most assuredly perish in his sins. The theoretical and practical husbandman, will die, surrounded by plenty, unless he experience the nutritious qualities of the food which is spread before him: he must eat or perish. So must the sinner not only know and do the commandments of God; but he must eat the bread and drink the water of life, if he would live: he must taste and see how good the Lord is. Finally, religion without experience, is like salt which has lost its savor, or a body without a soul.

Powers of Heaven.

Our much beloved brother who thinks we were not clear in our recent article on the powers of heaven, is informed that the design of that article was not to enter into an abstract criticism on the simple expression, 'the powers of heaven,' but to show from the abundant testimony of the Bible what the shaking of the heavens, earth, sea, dry land, all nations, and powers of heaven, mean. And we think we clearly showed from the plain reading of that book, that they will be shaken at the visible appearing of Christ, or when 'the Lord rises up to shake terribly the earth.'

The difficulty about not knowing that Christ is nigh at the door, until the powers of heaven are shaken, we think will all vanish, when we understand that it is not a sign of his coming, but what takes place at his coming, or when he rises up, &c. John in Rev. 6, gives the order of the signs, viz: the darkening of the sun, the moon being as blood, and the falling of the stars. Then the rolling together of the heavens, or, as we think, the shaking of the powers of heaven, at the coming of Christ.

But we are admonished by our bodily weakness to say no more on this highly interesting subject now; the Lord willing, we may take it up again critically, in all its parts. The Lord keep us in peace, unblamable before him in love, that we may be hid in his pavillion, when his indignation shall be poured upon the wicked.

Bro. Preble, from Albany, spake the word of comfort to the brethren in this city, last Tuesday evening. He left the next day to attend the Camp-meeting at the Trent, C. W. He has an appointment in this city for next Sabbath.

The Poor have the Gospel.

The blessed Savior preached the gospel to the poor, and it is our pleasure to do the same, as far as we are able. Our brother, who wrote the following letter, whose name we are not at liberty to give, shall have the Voice of Truth, so long as he may wish to read it, and our heavenly Father gives us the means and ability to publish it.

Let others of the poor saints, in similar circumstances, be free in their communications to us on the subject; we wish to hear from you. In the mean time, we hope and feel assured that those who have this world's goods committed to their charge, will not be backward in writing, and remitting at this time. The following is the brother's letter:

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Your request to hear from your subscribers reminds me of what I have designed to do for some time back, but to see and talk with you face to face would be much more satisfactory to me. You have in much Christian kindness sent to me your valuable paper for some time, without receiving from me that assistance in return that was your due; and it has pained me much that I have not been able to meet your dues. I have watched your receipts with interest, and hoped to be able to send you money before this time. In the providence of God, the past six years, by the management of wicked men, I have lost quite a handsome property, and it has thrown me out into the world with a family of five children, all too young to help me, and to be supported by the daily labors of my hands, without the benefit of a trade, among the scornors of our hope. My worldly goods would not suffer by a comparison with Bro. Hale's. The actual necessities of my family have demanded all my energies of mind and body of late, and all that gives me submission is, that God rules and notices the falling of a sparrow. I hope to be able the coming harvest to spare from my little means some money for you. If it was so that I could get to you something for your family, I could help you many times when I can't get money. The Voice of Truth and Herald seem to be the true medium through which the true light that belongs to this generation shines. I rejoice that by the grace of God you have been kept to pursue a steady course and rightly divide the word of truth, to feed the household with the bread of eternal life, the meat in due season. And may God still give you grace and means to proclaim the things that are speedily coming on the earth until the opening heavens shall reveal that same Jesus, and the voice of the archangel shall awake a thoughtless Noahitic like world to the dread realities of what has been loudly proclaimed in their ears. Their unbelief will not make the truth of God of none effect.

The opposition from the people and 'their leaders' is the same here as elsewhere. We are few here, and have not the benefit of the living preacher; all we have to light us and enable us to withstand the wiles of the devil, spiritual wickedness in high places, and the strong and high-walled infidelity in the midst of which we live, is, the Bible, the grace of God, and the two papers. Please act your pleasure in regard to sending me your paper until arrears are paid. I remain, yours, most affectionately, in the glorious hope soon to be realized.

The Cross.

Bearing, taking, and enduring the cross, are terms of common and frequent use. Yet many who profess to be cross-bearing children, imperfectly understand their import. It is not unfrequently the case that we hear the young and happy convert, and the old and experienced Christian, when they rise in the congregation of the rejoicing saints, to tell of the love of the Savior, preface their heavenly story with a painful description of the cross. They have trembled under the enormous cross; the cross has been intolerably great—too heavy to be borne. They seem to have worked themselves into a belief that Christian duties, are all a task, are servile acts; which, if discharged at all, are performed with great reluctance and complaining. Still they will tell how good the Savior is; how easy is his yoke; how they delight to do his will; and with much solicitude invite others to bear the cross with them.

Now, there is a manifest inconsistency in such kind of testimonies, as they are called. They contain palpable contradictions. They represent the cross as being both heavy and light; a grievous burden and a pleasant duty; and to bear it, the greatest sorrow and highest joy. These things are not, neither can they be true; and the weakest capacity can but see the absurdity of bearing such contradictory reports of the paths of pleasantness.

Such testimonies have a pernicious influence over the unbelieving portion of community: they cause the sinner to form an unfavorable opinion of religion. Hence, thousands before seeking the Lord, are led to look upon religion as a most gloomy pursuit. And why should they think differently, if they believe the testimonies of those who are its professors? The backwardness in duty, and doleful tales about the heavy cross of the young convert and old professor, have spread a thick gloom over the ways of godliness. The writer of this article well remembers when he was in his sins, that he looked upon religion as a gloomy theme. And when he was induced to seek its blessings, he did not expect it would afford any real enjoyment in this life; but thought it would only fit him for the enjoyment of eternal life beyond the grave. Under this mistaken view of the subject, he sought the Lord and found him precious in the redemption of his soul, and is now fully prepared to say, that the service of his God has afforded him joys, in this life, unspeakable and full of glory. The cross, instead of being heavy, he has found to be light; and instead of its being an intolerable burden, it has been his highest pleasure for near twenty years to bear it.

Such testimonies contradict the words of the Savior. He says, my yoke is easy and my burden is light, and those who bear them shall find rest to their souls. Taking the cross, bearing the cross, undoubtedly mean the same as taking and bearing the yoke of Christ; or doing the commandments. And we are told that 'his commandments are not grievous.' Wisdom's ways are pleasantness. Hence, like David, we should delight in the law of the Lord. We should not talk about Christian duties being a cross, in any other light than in doing them, we are cheerfully submitting to the easy yoke of Christ. There is not a duty which we are required to perform, in the word of God, at which a complaint should be uttered, or an unwillingness to perform it manifested; neither should it ever be said that to do the will of God is a great or heavy cross.

But are there no crosses, in any sense of the word, which are painful to be borne? which are heavy and unpleasant? Not to the truly pious and enlightened Christian. The old man with his deeds, was crucified; the painful cross in conquering and slaying the man of sin in his heart, and correcting his wicked habits, was borne when he repented of his sins. Yes, it was a great, a humiliating cross for the intemperate to forsake his cups and cry for mercy, for the swearer to break off from his profanity, and be heard raising his voice in prayer to his insulted Creator; for the lover of pleasure to leave his vanity, and humbly bow at the feet of Jesus; and it was a cross for every sinner, who ever commenced in the work of reformation, to do the work of repenting of the evil of his ways. But when his sins were forgiven, taken away, or nailed to the cross, then he was justified, made free indeed, and the work of his Master becomes his greatest delight. And so long as he lived in purity and obedience, he had no mortifying crosses to bear. But when he has committed a wrong, or backslidden from duty, the painful cross of confessing and subduing sin, has again had to be borne. Hence it is sin that has to be crossed, or that makes heavy and painful crosses: while the cross which Christ requires us to bear, is easy and pleasant. Keep yourselves, therefore, free from sin—be faithful and cheerful in duty—and you will have no heavy and unpleasant crosses to bear.

God Eternal.

A little boy once stood by the side of a small pond. He looked off over it, and thought it a great way across it, thought it very deep, and he thought it was a very great water. But when he grew up and became a great man, and had passed over the great ocean several times, where he sailed many days and nights without coming to any land, that pond seemed very small.

Any thing seems great or small to us, according to what we measure it by. If one of these children were to break his arm, and it became so bad that it must be cut off to save life, the surgeon must come to do it.

As you saw him take out his knives, and saws, and strings, and carefully go to work to take off the arm, it would seem a long, long time, before he got through—though it might not be more than fifteen minutes. Fifteen minutes seem a great while, when we have to measure them by great and severe pain. But when you measure them by a whole year, they seem very short.

Did you never lie down at night in health, and go to sleep, and when you awoke in the morning have the night seem very short? But if you were shipwrecked on the great ocean, and had to hang all night by a rope, wet and cold, and expecting that the very next wave would wash you into eternity, you would feel that one night is a great while, and that the morning sun had forgotten to rise.

Or if you lay upon your bed, sick, full of pain, and sleepless, with friendstreading softly around you, and hearing nothing but the slow ticking of the clock, O, how long would the night seem!—It would seem as if the day would never return. This is because you measure the night by the pangs of pain which you feel.

A year seems a great while to a child, but to the old man it seems a very little time.

We think the gray headed man who has lived seventy years, an old man; but if you measure life by the lives of men who lived before the flood, what are seventy years? Measure seventy years by the whole time since the world was made, and what are they?

How old is that little boy in that front pew? Ten. Well, go back ten years, and there was no such boy. Go back fifty years, and his parents were not created. Go back, over the graves of men for two thousand years, and you come to Jesus Christ. Go back four thousand years more, and you come to the time when this world was created. The hills and rivers were not made. The sun, and moon, and stars, were not made. Light was not made. There was nothing. Out of this nothing, the old world must come:—the sun, and moon, and heavens must come. Now, what can make them come? Can they come themselves?

But some pretend to say that there was ground, water and wind, to move the water and the dust.—Suppose there was; could dust, and water, and air, make themselves into birds and fish, and cattle, into the fields and trees, into an arm and a hand, an eye and a tongue—and above all, into the mind which is within us?

No! no! There are too many marks of mind, and we say that mind must have been there—away off in that dark place [!] which we call eternity, before this world was made! That mind so wise, so great, so contriving, so powerful, we call God. This is what I mean when I say that 'God is eternal.' 'I am the first.'

A child can look into a great deep gulf, and see as far into it as a man, but he cannot see the bottom. Let me tell you what I mean by the gulf. This world and these heavens have been made but a few thousand years; but God was living before them. What was he doing? Where was he during that long eternity, before he created any thing which we see? Can I tell? No.—Can an angel tell? No. Was he making other worlds, and letting millions of creatures live, and go on to judgment? and then was he burning up these worlds and making new ones, as he will one day burn up this world? Perhaps he was. Perhaps he did this to millions of worlds, and for millions of ages.—Perhaps millions of thinking beings passed into eternity. Yes—yes—but before he even made anything—for ages and ages before—what was God doing?

Ah, I do not know. 'Who, by searching, can find out God?' who can measure an ocean which has no bottom? Who can go back, and back, and back, and say, 'Here eternity began?'

Did you ever hear such a word used as mystery? It is a hard word, but it means something which we believe, but which we do not understand. Thus we believe that God is eternal, tho' we cannot explain what eternity is.

Some people talk as if they would not believe any thing which they cannot understand, and thus they say that they will have no mysteries in their religion! I do not know what such people think! If there be a God who has lived for ever, there must be about that God a greatness and an awfulness before which the angels in heaven cover their faces with their wings, 'Even from everlasting to everlasting, He is God.'

We see things begin. We know when that great oak on the hill was an acorn, and which perhaps, was carried up the hill by a child as his plaything. We know when the oldest man was born. We know when they began to build the great city.

We know when the great sun first shed his rising beams upon the earth. But we cannot thus go back, and say, that 'here God began to live.' We go back till we get to the beginning of all things, and there we find God—in eternity—alone, unchanging, unsearchable, eternal!

Thus we know that God has lived forever, because he made every thing at first. Tonn.

The Conferences in Michigan.

Bro. Marsh:—I am on my return from the conferences in Michigan, and take this opportunity to give you some account of them.

JACKSON.

The meeting in this place was well sustained, and was one of the most interesting I have ever attended, on account of the love and unity which existed. The providence of God so ordered, that the meeting should be held in the most favorable place which could have been selected, in order to obtain a hearing. Being unable to obtain the use of a house of worship during the entire proposed meeting, one of the brethren cleared his shop, and the brethren then erected a bower in front, which, furnished with seats, afforded an inviting place for the people; and being in a central part of the town, attracted large numbers to hear, especially on the Sabbath, who listened with respect and attention generally, though we were somewhat disturbed at times by disorderly conduct on the part of some low fellows. I am happy to say that the meeting was not without profit to the poor sinner. One intemperate man, who had grown old in sin, was powerfully convicted—confessed publicly his wicked course of life, and became one of the most happy, and apparently sound converts I ever saw; he was baptised, and also two others during the meeting.—But if there had been no one converted, the trouble and expense of the meeting would have been amply repaid in the rich and glorious manifestation of God's blessing on the waiting saints.—Our brethren in Jackson were much blessed, and they might well be, for by the grace of God, they are an exceedingly interesting and consistent body of christians; humble, self denying, spiritually minded, sound in faith, liberal in the extreme, and ardently in love with the doctrine of the Lord's coming, can be said of them in truth, and my soul praises the Lord for the sweet interview enjoyed with them, and for their liberality to the laborers in the ministry.

I found Bro. Needham at the conference, and was glad to meet one who had escaped from the "temporal millennium" influence of Oberlin, as well as myself. Bro. N. is still zealous and efficient in his labors in the truth, and seems to be more established on the word of God, by the many severe trials to which the grossest fanaticism has subjected him; some of his former brethren having idolatrously received one of their number as Christ. Awful blasphemy!! I was exceedingly gratified to meet with Br'n. N. M. Cutlin and E. Miller, laborers in the gospel from Indiana, ardently devoted to the cause of God, 'sound in faith,' who brought an interesting account of the work of God in connection with their labors. I have no doubt God will still work with them, and that their subsequent efforts will prove a blessing to the West. They are brethren worthy of confidence, both in respect to piety and talents, and as they will devote their labors to the spread of the truth where Providence shall open a field, I have no doubt the brethren scattered through the West, will avail themselves of their labors to secure the salvation of souls as far as possible, until the Lord comes. Bro. Carter resides at Laporte, Ind. Bro. Miller is now traveling, accompanied by Bro. Hays from Norwalk, O. We also met Bro. Byron at this meeting, one of the earliest advocates of our "blessed hope" in the Western States. He is still laboring in the cause—his residence is at Climax, Mich. Bro. Case, formerly of New York State, was also at the meeting, with whom I was rejoiced to meet. I accompanied him home to Saline, and spent one day with him. His pecuniary circumstances have been such as to keep him from the field most of the time, but he now intends to devote himself more to the "ministry of the word." Brother and Sister Seymour accompanied us to this meeting, and will remain in Michigan for the present, and will be enabled to do much good if the brethren furnish him with a conveyance, which they propose to do. Sister Parks was at the meeting, and passed on through the State, in company with the brethren from Indiana, and will be for the present at Milwaukee. On Monday morning we had a parting meeting, in which all the brethren and sisters spoke, and it was, I assure you, a happy time—we parted in hope of a speedy meeting in God's kingdom. There is a sincerity and simplicity, and solemnity in the brethren at the West generally, which I love, and which might profitably be considered by many more favored ones, in respect to meetings at the East. Some brethren walked many miles to meet the brethren in Conference, and hear for the first time, a lecture on the subject of the Lord's coming, and yet there is as much intelligence in reference to the doctrines we advocate here at the West, as you find at the East. The papers which have been published, have been a great blessing to those who are little favored by the "living preacher." The brethren generally, seem strongly in hope of redemption this year.

NORTHVILLE.

At this place we held a meeting of only two days, the number in attendance, small. A few brethren from Rochester and Troy were present, and some from the immediate vicinity of the village of Northville. The people of Northville seem determined to shut out this subject from their midst, and there is no faithful watchmen there to tell them of the speedy coming of our Lord.—Bro. Pennel and Bro. Lyon are firm and unshaken in their faith in the nearness of the Lord's coming, and wished to do what they could to warn the people. I trust they will be clear of their blood—if they are faithful in private as they have been in endeavoring to have the people publicly warned. The meeting on the whole, was a happy and profitable season, and the brethren and sisters were comforted. It was grateful to my depressed spirits to meet such warm-hearted and consecrated souls. May God's blessing rest upon them and keep them from the influence of "the blind leaders of the blind," is my ardent prayer!

DETROIT.

The brethren in this city are few in number, and feel rather depressed in mind. They have been much afflicted by the errors of the spiritualists. They do not hold any public meeting, but have meetings for prayer, at which a few of them assemble.

I expect to be in Cleveland early in the week, and remain for the present. I wish my friends and brethren would address me there. It has been impossible for me to get back in time to be at the meeting at Sidney, at the time appointed. I hope you have received my request expressed in Bro. Robinson's letter, and will attend the meetings in Canada. I sent a request to Brother Miller by your paper, and wrote personally to Bro. Galusha, but I fear neither of them will be able to attend.

Yours in the blessed hope,
L. DELLOS MANSFIELD.

Bro. R. V. Yates, Utica, June 25th writes:—I see by the last number of the "Voice of Truth," that the time has arrived again for me to cast in my mite to help sustain so valuable a little paper as the Voice of Truth has been to me, as well as to many of the other dear saints scattered up and down the earth, in this time of trial, patience, and waiting for the glorious manifestation of our Lord and Savior in the clouds of heaven. I praise the Lord that I yet stand unshaken on the sure word of the Lord amidst the many conflicting views, and lo heres and lo theres that have been among us since the 10th day of the seventh month.

Letter from Bro. Clark.

Bro. Marsh:—Having been absent West most of the Spring, but having now returned to this city, I cheerfully respond to the call in your last number of Voice of Truth, and forward you the amount of my subscription. I would rejoice did my means permit, to add still more to this fund, that through its means, the "Voice of Truth and Glad Tidings of the Kingdom at hand" might find its way to every residence throughout the United States, aye, throughout the world; for from my soul I believe it is the messenger of truth, and this truth is of such momentous interest, that the world, now dead in sin and iniquity, and ripe for the sickle, will soon awake to all its fearful results. But my soul is pained when I reflect that, as light and truth seem to advance, in the same proportion, piety on the part of many of its professed advocates seems to decline, and that too among those who, a few short months since, were strong in the faith, and stood foremost in the advent ranks. But I rejoice there are exceptions, and a few yet are found willing to stand and fight under the banner of the cross, and are looking for the great King of our salvation, expecting very soon to appear with him in glory. My prayer is, dear brother, that you may be strengthened in body and mind; continue to look upward, the day star will soon arise, the welcome shout will soon be made. "God will come and not keep silence, even God with a recompense," then shall the lame man leap as an Hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing. My soul rejoices in this blessed prospect. But O! foolish virgins, where is your light—replenish your lamps, there is room, the door of salvation, is open Jesus our great High Priest is on the mercy seat—but time flies—soon he will arise to shake terribly the earth, the saints gathered, and the cry of mercy will be, "open, open unto us." O, is it possible that those who have tasted the good word of God, and walked in this glorious light, should again fall away, having escaped from Babylon. Will you go down to worse than Egyptian bondage?

In my travels I have taken some thirty or forty names, designing to send some of those papers containing the evidence of our blessed hope,—some of whom seemed very anxious to rebuke them, but I find I have not the means to purchase them in order to carry my intentions into effect. I feel very sorry I cannot do so, and fulfil my expressed desire to those persons whom I thus promised. There are gleanings of the harvest yet to be gathered, although every indication seems to show that the work is nearly done, but the duty on the part of God's witnesses remains the same. They must be faithful, and if ever there was a time in this world's history when we were called upon to adhere closely to the divine precepts of our blessed Savior this is the time, and in doing this, others seeing our good works, may be led to glorify our father who is in heaven.

Your brother in the faith once delivered to the saints.
J. W. CLARK.

Buffalo, June 25, 1846.

Bro. T. F. Barry Sick.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Permit me to say to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, dear brethren, Paul tells us that ye are all one in Christ Jesus, and every one, members, one of another, and if one member suffer, all sympathise or suffer with it.

Our dear brother and fellow laborer in the Lord, T. F. Barry is just alive. He, in company with Br. Lee, were on their way from Oswego, to the grove meeting at Manlius. They had arrived within about half a mile of the ground, and having someting of a hill to ascend, they dismounted their carriage to ascend on foot. While ascending the hill Bro. Barry was taken with a violent bleeding at the stomach, and bled something like a quart before they could stop it. On Saturday he was taken again, and in all bled between two and three quarts, and has not entirely ceased yet. As God would have it, he fell into good hands—though they are not professed Adventists, yet they are exceedingly kind; and although they are so kind and generous we don't want to impose on good nature.

Now brethren, Bro. Barry is poor as it regards this world, and needs help and must have it. He is on expense, and that not a little either, for it takes two or three to take care of him as he ought to be, as he is exceeding weak, and if he should get up so as to be about, it will be some time first, and as to his preaching, that's done, in all probability. But should he sleep in Jesus, his widow and orphan child must be taken care of. But it will doubtless be gratifying to the saints to know his exercises of mind in this time of extremity. When asked by a brother how he felt in his mind he said, all is right. Every thing looks clear.—He could say with Paul, I have fought a good fight, &c.

Should he recover so as to be moved, he will be taken to Seneca Falls, so that brethren who send money to Bro. Barry will direct their letters to the above place, care of E. R. Pinney. Now, brethren and sisters, let us remember that Jesus has said, the poor ye have always with you, and when you will you may do them good. Again, he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord—more, He that hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? Again, sec Math. 25. Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Yours, looking for the King of Glory.

J. C. BYWATER.

JONAS D. JOHNSON.

MANLIUS, June 29, 1846.

Bro. J. C. Bywater, Manlius, June 29, writes:—In relation to our meeting here I can say to the praise of God, we had a very refreshing time;—there was quite a gathering of the saints, and a strong expression of faith in the glorious hope of soon seeing the Lord of glory, and entire resignation to the will of God, should he tarry beyond our present expectation. Br'n. Pinney, Johnson, Ongley and wife, with myself, were present.—Bro. Pinney's health is improving slowly; he was enabled to preach twice, with a good degree of energy. There is quite an interest in many minds to hear on the subject. We are holding some meetings in the village of Manlius; yesterday I preached in the outer court of the Methodist Church, (from the steps,) as they would not permit us to go in. I expect to speak from the same place to-day at 6 o'clock. There was quite a gathering of the people to hear, and good order and attention; some prominent men of the place seem much interested. What the result will be I can't say, but hope for good.

Letter from Bro. S. I. Roney.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I send you another subscriber for your valuable paper. The Voice of Truth is read with increasing interest by those who love to hear the news of the coming kingdom at hand. The spirit it manifests, the truth it advocates, the 'meat in due season' that it gives to 'the household of faith,' endears every lover of truth in sincerity to it more and more. I hope it will keep the same straight forward, wholesome, unblushing course, that it has from the commencement, that it may continue to advocate the truth, feed the flock with 'meat in due season,' &c. The Lord give you wisdom Bro. Marsh, from on high, is my prayer. Your warfare is almost accomplished—your work is almost done—your trials are almost over—your suffering persecution, jeers and scoffs that are heaped upon you, (and on those 'of like precious faith') by a self-serving ministry, and a cold, lukewarm back-sliden church, (or rather sectarian bodies,) will soon have an end. Then those that have stood in the front of the battle and have borne the burden and heat of the day, will be welcomed home from the battle field, to enjoy an everlasting rest with all the saints and angels, and above all, with Jesus, in the kingdom of God.

Glorious to God, my soul feels, while I write, an exstasy of joy in anticipating that day when the victory will be won, and the great coronation day arrives; when the King of kings and Lord of lords will be crowned King of the universe; and all the 'blessed and holy' will be crowned and made 'kings and priests unto God,' and 'reign on the earth.' (Rev. 5: 10.) They will then be freed from trials, and be called to exchange them for peace and joy, immortality and eternal life. Ah yes, they will take possession of the kingdoms under the whole heaven, and Jesus will be their King forever.

Praise God; and is it soon to be given? Is it near? Oh! that is the question that separates the great professing body of believers. That is the question upon which the inhabitants of the world are called to decide, and which will fix their doom forever. Shall we then lay down our watch and give it up? God forbid.

Be thou like the first apostle—

Be thou like heroic Paul!

If a true thought seeks expression,

Speak it boldly, speak it all!

Face thine enemies—accusers,

Scorn the prison, rack, or rod!

And if thou hast truth to utter,

Speak, and leave the rest to God.

Yours, in hope of speedy redemption,

S. I. RONEY.

Massena, N. Y., June 23, 1846.

Letter from Bro. L. E. Bates.

Bro. Marsh:—Thinking that it might be interesting to my brethren and sisters scattered abroad in this hour of conflict and of darkness, to hear that the Lord is still visiting his children, and calling on sinners to seek them a home,—permit me through the columns of your paper, to notice a meeting recently held in the town of Martinsburgh, Lewis Co. While attending the recent conference in New York, and witnessing the interesting gathering of our brethren from abroad, and listening to the reports given respecting the state of the cause in different places, and the increasing demand for labor, my spirit was moved within me, and my earnest prayer to Almighty God was, that he would send forth more laborers into his vineyard, and that he would attend their labors with the Holy Spirit, and crown them with abundant success. In this state of mind I returned at the close of the conference, to the town above mentioned, where I had been laboring a few weeks previous, in connection with Bro. Mansfield, and commenced a meeting, which held about nine days; and though most of the time was stormy, damp weather, the people turned out, listened with deep and silent interest to the evidences from the Bible, relative to the second and speedy coming of the Son of man, the resurrection, and the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom. I was assisted in my labors by Br'n. Jamerson, Bronson, Millard, and others, who were deeply interested in the work, and though the truths presented were unpopular, and to the great mass unwelcome, yet, attended with the Spirit of God, they were mighty in his hands in removing much of the prejudice existing, and in breaking down the obduracy of the human heart. And though there was evidently much of the Spirit and presence of God manifested, still there appeared to be none of that momentary enthusiasm, nor that false and transient zeal which has characterized many of the movements of these modern days. A deeper sense of condemnation on the part of the sinner, and a more hearty repentance before God, I think I never witnessed. And though I felt it duty on the account of the weakness of my lungs, and the state of my health, to leave in the midst of the interest, yet I had the pleasure of seeing a goodly number hopefully converted to God, and follow his "well beloved Son" in the solemn ordinance of baptism. To God be all the praise. O, that those servants that have talent and strength to labor, now slumbering upon their posts, and those that have this world's goods and have shut up their bowels of compassion, would listen for a moment to the Macedonian cry, borne upon every breeze, and come out from their hiding places, unfurl their banner, and with sword in hand, upon the watchtower of Zion, stand when Jesus comes, like "wise and faithful servants," earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Your brother in Christ,

LABAN E. BATES.

Cleveland O., June 26, 1846.

Bro. G. W. Burnham, Union Mills, June 11, writes:—My soul feels like spending and being spent in this glorious cause. I know I am very feeble—nothing of myself—but Jesus is all!—"He shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper." O, for perfect, continued consecration of all to God. A few fleeting moments more, and the season of labor will be over forever—the "trump in Zion will be still!" O, the gloomy night that is gathering for the poor soul out of Christ—the lukewarm and cold hearted professor. I am pained at my very heart, while their dreadful end is presented before me. When I think of the compassion of God, and the bleeding love of his suffering son on the accursed tree, which they are rejecting, I am constrained to lift up my feeble voice, cry aloud and spare not nor withhold any part of the counsel of God which I am capable of declaring. Let me entreat you, perishing sinner, to open your eyes to the dreadful danger which lies at your feet. O, listen to a merciful Savior's voice now. God is waiting to be gracious, and save you. Will you yet refuse? Will you say, go thy way, to the tender Spirit again? Ah, it may be for the last time. God says, "how can I give theo up—"as I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked.—Return ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" Remember my dear friends who has guarded your frail being—held your breath in mercy while it has uttered vanity in return, and known all your ways. And in return for all his mercies, you continue in ingratitude and rebellion. O, reject the Son of God no longer, but prepare to meet him in judgment.

I have visited some in this vicinity—find but a scattered few who are living to God and bearing an every day cross. I have taken sweet counsel with a few individuals in serving the Lord here. Have preached 5 times here, twice in Providence, and three times at Cranberry Creek. Things generally are about as they were last winter, only moral death and darkness is on the increase. The last of this week I start for Lake Pleasant, to be there over next Sunday, if the Lord will.

Yours, in hope of eternal redemption.

Bro. Marsh:—I recollect having had some fears of your misunderstanding my expression in respect to the deafness of Charlotte Elizabeth. She tells us that "before she was 10 years old she became entirely deaf," and she gives no account of ever having regained her hearing. On the contrary, she just refers to the inconvenience of being deaf. Also, many years after, she speaks of her brother sitting at her side and faithfully giving her the sermons (in a kind of short hand writing I suppose,) which they went to hear, though she heard through her brother's ears.—Please correct, for she is said to be deaf until ten years old, in my communication. What makes her writings more interesting and remarkable is, that they were all written by a deaf woman.

J. D. JOHNSON.

Bro. J. B. Mitchell, Baltimore, 26th June, writes:—The few remaining brethren here are firm in the faith of very soon seeing Jesus, and rejoice exceedingly that life to them in these last days was given that deathless they may rise to heaven and their Redeemer see; and love to wait, and watch, and pray, and trust the blessed words which says he will not tarry long. No, bless God, though he bear as much and as long as the unjust judge, yet he will speedily avenge his own elect; for though he appears to us to tarry long, yet he will not tarry beyond his time: and soon heavenly voices will say, the worldly kingdoms are the Lord Christ's, and he will reign forever. Oh, glorious day, hasten thy coming. Your Brother.

Bro. G. A. Lapham, Adams, Mass., June 23, writes:—At no time have I felt a greater interest in perusing your valuable sheet, which I believe has the appropriate name, "The Voice of Truth and Glad Tidings of the Kingdom." It is truly meat in due season, and from week to week I hail it as a welcome messenger.

The apparent aversion of the professed Church to the most prominent truths of the Bible—their misapplication of detached portions of scripture in support of their favorite theory—the conversion of the world and the latter day glory of the church, as they are pleased to term it, is truly lamentable.

The peace and safety doctrine is being taught here as elsewhere, so far as the coming of Christ and the judgment is concerned; and in view of the punishment of the wicked, death only is presented as a motive to repentance; whereas, the apostle presents the day of the Lord, which he says will come as a thief in the night, as a motive to all holy conversation and godliness. But to whom will it come as a thief, or entirely unexpected? Evidently to those who are virtually saying, my Lord delayeth his coming; proclaiming, as I heard a professed minister to his congregation, a few days since, that the Lord had promised the conversion of the whole world, and that holiness should every where prevail, referring to the very scriptures that foretell the destruction of the wicked, and the immortal reign of the saints with Christ on the earth; when the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.

How can any candid and enlightened mind apply those scriptures in proof of a temporal Millennium, when it is declared that the kingdom shall be an everlasting one, and the saints possess it forever, even forever and ever.

Yours in hope of the Kingdom.

Bro. S. B. Pratt, Gerry, June 19th, writes:—Truly, it is as cold water to a thirsty soul, to hear from the brethren and sisters in different places, scattered as they are over the whole world, as sheep having no shepherd. Yet when the chief shepherd shall appear, they will be gathered, and there shall be one shepherd and one fold. When I look forward to that day, which is near at the door, when all the children of God will be gathered from the four quarters of the earth, and made partakers of the inheritance in glory, my heart swells with gratitude to God for the great and exceeding precious promises contained in his holy word. There we read, "Yet a little while and he that shall come will come and will not tarry; the just shall live by faith." Never did I feel the importance of having strong faith in God and in his promises, more than at the present time: nevertheless, when the son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth? I can answer in the affirmative, that he will—yet none comparatively, of the multitudes who profess faith in Jesus Christ.

A Western Hail-Storm.

Correspondence of the Missouri Republican.

BELLEVILLE, (ILL.) WEDNESDAY EVENING,
JUNE 3, 1846.

About half-past 2 P. M. to-day, our town was visited by a tremendous storm of wind, rain, and hail. The hail was not so severe here as it was a short distance east of this place. The eastern stage was four or five miles from this place, near the residence of Gov. Kinney, when the storm struck it. The hail broke through the top of the stage, knocked the driver down, and the horses ran off. There was but one passenger in the stage, a young gentleman going to Salein, who succeeded in getting out before the horses got under full headway. I have just seen the young man, who returned to this place as soon as the storm abated. His hat was knocked off—I have seen it: it has three holes knocked through, one of the holes directly on top, as large as a man's fist. The young man ran to a tree, pulled off his coat and held it over his head, and in holding it his arm was so bruised that he now carries it in a sling. Some of the hailstones have been brought to this place, three hours after they fell, as large as a man's fist.

Hogs and sheep were killed by the force of the hail. The roof of a house near where this passenger got out of the stage, had holes driven through, and the windows knocked in—sash, glass and all. I have not seen any one from the neighborhood, so as to ascertain what damage has really been done, or what extent of ground was covered by the storm. Those that have seen some of the hail-stones soon after they fell, think that many were as large as a man's two fists. We have heard that the storm raged more furiously beyond Gov. Kinney's. Take it in all, you may put it down as one of the most extraordinary hail storms that has ever passed over this part of the country.

[Extraordinary as these statements may seem, says the Missouri Republican, we can vouch for the truthfulness of the writer. We learn that a farmer, coming to market from the same quarter, with six dozen of chickens in a coop, saved only half a dozen; the others were killed by the hail.]

Immensity of Creation.

Some astronomers have computed that there are not less than 75,000,000 of suns in the universe. The fixed stars are all suns, having, like our sun, numerous planets revolving around them. The solar system, or that to which we belong, has about thirty planets, primary and secondary, belonging to it. The circular field of space which it occupies, is in diameter, 3600 millions of miles, and that which it controls much greater. The sun which is nearest neighbor to ours, is called Sirius, distant from our sun about 552,000,000 of miles. Now, if all the fixed stars are as distant from each other as Sirius is from our sun, or if our solar system be the average magnitude, of all the 75 millions of suns, what imagination can grasp the immensity of creation! Who can survey a plantation containing 75 millions of circular fields, each ten millions of miles in diameter? Such, however, is one of the plantations of Him who has measured the waters in the hollow of his hand—meted out heaven with a span—comprehended the dust in a measure—and weighed out the mountains in scales, and hills in a balance.—He who, 'sitting upon the orbit of the earth, stretches out heaven as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in. Nations to him, are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance;' and yet, overwhelming thought! He says, 'Though I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also will I dwell who is of an humble and contrite spirit, and trembles at my word.—Christian Almanac.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN ST. JOHNS.—It is said that "at least two thirds of the city of St. Johns, Newfoundland, has been consumed by fire. The loss is estimated at a million sterling. Two streets each a mile long, and a number of detached buildings, have been totally destroyed, while 12,000 persons have been rendered houseless."

A war is said to be brewing between the Sioux and Pawnees on the Nebraska, which it is supposed will be quite fatal.

Appointments.

Bro. Bywater, the Lord willing, will meet with the brethren at the following places:
Chapinsville, Monday evening July 13th.
Victor, July 14th evening.
Rochester, Wednesday eve. July 15th.
Hancock Falls, July 16th evening.
Slab City or Livonia, 17th eve.
Springwater, Sabbath 19th.
Conesus, July 20th, 5 P. M.
Geneseo, 27th July.
Caryville, Sabbath July 26th.
Le Roy, 1st Sabbath in Aug. Bro. Bywater will not be able to fulfil his appointment at this place for July 26th.
Bro. J. D. Johnson will accompany him to the above places, with the exception of Springwater. He will be at Slab City on the 19th.

Letters and Receipts for week, ending July 2, '46.

ANCIENT BABYLON.

FROM 'EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.'

BY A. RIETH.

If ever there was a city that seemed to bid defiance to any predictions of its fall, that city was Babylon. It was, for a long time, the most famous city in the whole world. Its walls, which were reckoned among the wonders of the world, appeared rather like the bulwarks of nature than the workmanship of man. The temple of Belus half a mile in circumference and a furlong in height—the hanging gardens, which, piled in successive terraces, towered as high as the walls—the embankments which restrained the Euphrates—the hundred brazen gates—and the adjoining artificial lake—all displayed many of the mightiest works of mortals concentrated in a single spot. Yet, while in the plenitude of its power, and, according to the most accurate chronologers, 160 years before the foot of an enemy had entered it, the voice of prophecy pronounced the doom of the mighty and unconquered Babylon. A succession of ages brought it gradually to the dust; and the gradation of its fall is marked till it sunk at last into utter desolation. At a time when nothing but magnificence was around Babylon the great, fallen Babylon was delineated exactly as every traveller now describes its ruins. And the prophecies concerning it may be viewed connectedly, from the period of their earliest to that of their latest fulfilment.

The immense fertility of Chaldea, which retained also the name of Babylonia till after the Christian era, corresponded, if that of any country could vie, with the greatness of Babylon. It was the most fertile region of the whole east.—Babylonia was one vast plain, adorned and enriched by the Euphrates and the Tigris, from which, and from the numerous canals that intersected the country from the one river to the other, water was distributed over the fields by manual labor and by hydraulic machines, giving rise in that warm climate and rich, exhaustless soil, to an exuberance of produce without a known parallel, over so extensive a region, either in ancient or modern times. Herodotus states, that he knew not how to speak of its wonderful fertility, which none but eye witnesses would credit; and though writing in the language of Greece, itself a fertile country, he expresses his own consciousness that his description of what he actually saw would appear to be improbable, and to exceed belief.—In his estimation, as well as in that of Strabo and of Pliny, (the three best ancient authorities that can be given.) Babylonia was, of all countries, the most fertile in corn, the soil never producing less, as he relates, than two hundred fold, an amount in our colder regions, scarcely credible, though Strabo, the first of ancient geographers, agrees with the "father of history," in recording that it reached even to three hundred, the grain too, being of prodigious size. After being subjected to Persia, the government of Chaldea was accounted the noblest in the Persian empire. Besides supplying horses for military service, it maintained about seventeen thousand horses for the sovereign's use. And, exclusive of monthly subsidies, the supply from Chaldea (including perhaps Syria,) for the subsistence of the king and of his army, amounted to a third part of all that was levied from the whole of the Persian dominions, which, at that time, extended from Hellespont to India. Herodotus incidentally mentions that there were four great towns in the vicinity of Babylon.

Such was the "Chaldee's excellency," that it departed not on the first conquest, nor on the final extinction of its capital; but one metropolis of Assyria arose after another in the land of Chaldea, when Babylon had ceased to be "the glory of kingdoms." The celebrated city of Seleucia, whose ruins attest its former greatness, was founded and built by Seleucus Nicator, king of Assyria, one of the successors of Alexander the great in the year before Christ, 293,—three centuries after Jeremiah prophesied. In the first century of the Christian era, it contained six hundred thousand inhabitants. The Parthian kings transferred the seat of empire to Ctesiphon, on the opposite bank of the Tigris, where they resided in winter; and that city, formerly a village, became great and powerful. Six centuries after the latest of the predictions, Chaldea could also boast of other great cities, such as Artemita and Sita-cene, besides many towns. When invaded by Julian, it was a "fruitful and pleasant country." And at a period equally distant from the time of the prophets and from the present day, in the seventh century, Chaldea was the scene of vast magnificence, in the reign of Chosroes. "His favorite residence of Artemita or Destagered, was situated beyond the Tigris, about sixty miles to the north of the capital [Ctesiphon.] The adjacent pastures, in the words of Gibbon, were covered with flocks and herds; the paradise, or park, was replenished with pheasants, peacocks, ostriches, roebucks, and wild boars, and the noble game of lions and tigers was sometimes turned loose for the golden treasures of the chase. Nine hundred and sixty elephants were maintained for the use and splendor of the great king; his tents and baggage were carried into the field by twelve thousand great camels, and eight thousand of a smaller size; and the royal stables were filled with six thousand mules and horses. Six thousand guards successively mounted before the palace gate, and the service of the interior apartments was performed by twelve thousand slaves. The various treasures of gold, silver, gems, silk, and aromatics, were deposited in a hundred subterranean vaults." "In the eighth century, the towns of Samarah, Horounieh, and Djasserik formed, so to speak, one street of twenty-eight miles." Chaldea, with its rich soil and warm climate, and intersected by the Tigris and Euphrates, was one of the last countries in the world of which the desolation could have been thought of by man.—For to this day "there cannot be a doubt, if proper means were taken, the country would with ease, be brought to a high state of cultivation."

Manifold are the prophecies respecting Babylon and the land of the Chaldeans; and the long lapse of ages has served to confirm their fulfilment in every particular, and to render it at last, complete. The judgments of Heaven are not casual, but sure; they are not arbitrary, but righteous. And they were denounced against the Babylonians and the inhabitants of Chaldea, expressly because of their idolatry, tyranny, oppression, pride, covetousness, drunkenness, falsehood, and other wickedness. So debasing and brutifying was their idolatry,—or so much did they render religion subservient to their passions—that practices the most abominable, which were universal among them, formed the very observance of some of their religious rites, of which even heathen writers could not speak but in terms of indignation and abhorrence. Though enriched by a prodigality of blessings, the glory of God was not regarded by the Chaldeans; and all the glory of man with which the plain of Shinar was covered has become, in consequence as well as in chastisement of prevailing vices, and of continued though diversified crimes, the wreck, the ruin, and utter desolation which the word of God (for whose word but his?) thus told from the beginning that the event would be.

The burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amos did see.—"The noise of a multitude in the mountains, like as of a great people: a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together: the Lord of hosts mustereth the host of the battle. They come from a far country, from the end of heaven, even the Lord and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land. Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.—It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there: and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there.—And the wild beasts of the island shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces." Isa. 13: 1, 4, 5, 9, 19–22. "Thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say,—How hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased! Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee. Thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit. Thou art cast out of the grave like an abominable branch—I will cut off from Babylon the name and remnant, the son and nephew, saith the Lord. I will also make it a possession for the bitter and pools of water; and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of Hosts." Isa. 14: 4–23. "Babylon is fallen is fallen; and all the graven images of her gods, he hath broken unto the ground." Isa. 21: 9. "Thus saith the Lord, that saith unto the deep, be dry; and I will dry up thy rivers: that saith of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure,—and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut." Isa. 46: 27, 28; 45: 1. "Bel boweth down," &c. Isa. 66: 1. "Come down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon; sit on the ground, there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans. Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness:

for thou shalt no more be called the lady of kingdoms. Thou hast said, I shall be a lady forever. Hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, I am, and none else besides me; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children. But these two things shall come to thee in a moment, in one day, the loss of children and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection, for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments. For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness, &c.—Therefore shall evil come upon thee; thou shalt not know from whence it riseth; and mischief shall come upon thee; thou shalt not be able to put it off: and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt know." Isa. 47: 1, 5, 7-11.

"I will punish the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations. And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations. For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also: and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands." Jer. 25: 12-14. "The word that the Lord spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans by Jeremiah the prophet. Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set up a standard; publish, and conceal not; say, Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces, For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein; they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast." Jer. 50: 1, 2, 3. "For lo, I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon, an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her; from thence she shall be taken;—their arrows shall be as of a mighty expert man; none shall return in vain. And Chaldea shall be a spoil; all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the Lord. Behold the hindermost of the nations shall be a wilderness, a dry land and a desert.—Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate; every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plagues." Jer. 50: 13. "Her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down, for it is the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her. Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the sickle in the time of harvest; for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee, every one to his own land." Jer. 50: 16. "Go up against the land of Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of Pekod; waste and utterly destroy after them. A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction. How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord. The Lord hath opened his armory, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of Hosts in the land of the Chaldeans. Come against her from the utmost border, open her store-houses; cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly, let nothing of her be left." Jer. 50: 21-26. "Let none thereof escape; and the most proud shall stumble and fall, and none shall raise him up; I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all around about him." Jer. 50: 29, 32. "A sword is upon the Chaldeans, saith the Lord, and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and upon her princes, and upon her wise men. A sword is upon the liars; a sword is upon her mighty men; a sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all the mingled people that are in the midst of her; a sword is upon her treasures; and they shall be robbed. A drought is upon her waters; and they shall be dried up: for it is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. Therefore the wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands, shall dwell there, and the owls shall dwell therein; and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation. As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbor cities thereof, saith the Lord, so shall no more man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein. Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. They shall hold the bow and the lance; they are cruel, and will not show mercy; their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride on horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, O daughter of Babylon. Behold he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan into the habitation of the strong; but I will make them suddenly run away from her:—and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? For who is like me? And who will appoint me the time? And who is that shepherd that will stand before me? Therefore hear ye the counsel of the Lord, that he hath taken against Babylon; and his purposes that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans; surely the least of the flock shall draw them out; surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them." Jer. 50: 35-45. I will send unto Babylon fan-ners that shall fan her, and shall empty her land. The slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans. Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed; howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed; forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country; for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies. Jer. 51: 2, 8, 9. The Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes; for his device is against Babylon to destroy it, &c.—O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness. The Lord of Hosts hath sworn by himself, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men, as with caterpillars; and they shall lift up a shout against thee. Jer. 51: 11, 13, 14. Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth;—and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and I will make thee a burnt mountain. Set up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Aschenaz; prepare against her the nations with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion. And the land shall tremble and sorrow;—for every purpose of the Lord shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant. The mighty men of Babylon have foreborne to fight, they have remained in their holds; their might hath failed; they became as women: they have burnt her dwelling-places; her bars are broken. One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end; and that the passages are stopped. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor—it is time to thresh her:—yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come. Jer. 50: 25-33. I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry. And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant. In their heat I will make their feasts, that they may sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake: how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations! The sea is come upon Babylon; she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof. Her cities are a desolation, a dry land and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby. And I will punish Bel in Babylon;—and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up: and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him; yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall—a rumor shall come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumor, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler. Therefore, behold, the days come that I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon: and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her, &c. Jer. 51: 36, 37, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47. And I will make drunk her princes and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and mighty men:—and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of Hosts. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burned with fire; and the people shall labor in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary. And it shall be when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates: and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her. Jer. 51: 57, 58, 63, 64.

The enemies who were to besiege Babylon, the cowardice of the Babylonians, the manner in which the city was taken, and all the remarkable circumstances of the siege were foretold and described by the prophets, as the facts are related by ancient historians.

Go up, O Elam (or Persia;) besiege, O Media. The Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes, for his device is against Babylon to destroy it. The kings of Persia and Media, prompted by a common interest, freely entered into a league against Babylon, and with one accord, entrusted the command of their united armies to Cyrus, the relative, and eventually the successor of them both. But the taking of Babylon was not reserved for these kingdoms alone: other nations had to be prepared against her.

Set up a standard in the land: blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Aschenaz; Lo, I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon, an assembly of great nations from the north country, &c.—Cyrus subdued the Armenians, who had revolted against Media, spared their king, bound them over anew to their allegiance by kindness rather than by force, and incorporated their army with his own. He adopted the Hyrcanians, who had rebelled against Babylon, as allies and confederates with the Medes and Persians. He conquered the united forces of the Babylonians and Lydians, took Sardis with Croesus and all his wealth, spared his life after he was at the stake, restored to him his family and his household, received him into the number of his counsellors and friends, and thus prepared the Lydians, over whom he reigned, and who were formerly combined with Babylon, for coming up against it. He overthrew also the Phrygians and Cappadocians, and added their armies in like manner to his accumulating forces. And by successive alliances and conquests, by proclaiming liberty to the slaves, by a humane policy, consummate skill, a pure and noble disinterestedness, and a boundless generosity, he changed, within the space of twenty years, a confederacy which the King of Babylon had raised up against the Medes and Persians, whose junction he feared, into a confederacy even of the same nations against Babylon itself,—and thus a standard was set up against Babylon in many a land kingdoms were summoned, prepared, and gathered together against her; and an assembly of great nations from the north—including Ararat and Minni, or the greater and lesser Armenia, and Aschenaz, or, according to Bochart, Phrygia—were raised up and caused to come against Babylon. Without their aid, and before they were subjected to his authority, he had attempted in vain to conquer Babylon; but when he had prepared and gathered them together, it was taken, though by artifice more than power.

They shall hold the bow and the lance—they shall ride upon horses—let the archer bend his bow—all ye that bend the bow shoot at her. They rode upon horses. Forty thousand Persian horsemen were armed from among the nations which Cyrus subdued; many horses of the captives were besides distributed among all the allies. And Cyrus came up against Babylon with a great multitude of horse;—and also with a great multitude of archers and javelin men—that held the bow and the lance.

No sooner had Cyrus reached Babylon, with the nations which he had prepared and gathered against her, than, in the hope of discovering some point not utterly impregnable, accompanied by his chief officers and friends, he rode round the walls, and examined them on every side, after having for that purpose stationed his whole army round the city. They camped against it round about. They put themselves in array against Babylon round about.

Frustrated in the attempt to discover, throughout the whole circumference, a single assailable point, and finding that it was not possible, by any attack, to make himself master of walls so strong and so high, and fearing that his army would be exposed to the assault of the Babylonians by a too extended and consequently weakened line,—Cyrus, standing in the middle of his army, gave orders that the heavy armed men should move, in opposite directions, from each extremity towards the centre; and the horse and light armed men being nearer and advancing first, and the phalanx being redoubled and closed up, the bravest troops thus occupied alike the front and the rear, and the less effective were stationed in the middle. Such a disposition of the army in the estimation of Xenophon, himself a most skillful general, was well adapted both for fighting and preventing flight; while the Christian, judging differently of their successive movements, may here see the fulfilment of one prediction after another. For as in this manner “they stood facing the walls,” in regular order and not as a disorderly and undisciplined host, though composed of various nations, they set themselves in array against Babylon, every man put in array.

A trench was dug round the city—towers were erected—Babylon was besieged—the army was divided into twelve parts, that each, monthly by turn, might keep watch throughout the year—and though the orders were given by Cyrus, the command of the Lord of Hosts was unconsciously obeyed—let none thereof escape.

The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight. They have remained in their holds; their might hath failed, they became as women. Babylon had been the hammer of the whole earth, by which nations were broken in pieces, and kingdoms destroyed. Its mighty men carried the terror of their arms to distant regions, and led nations captive. But they were dismayed, according to the word of the God of Israel, whenever the nations which he had stirred up against them stood in array before their walls. Their timidity, so clearly predicted, was the express complaint and accusation of their enemies, who, in vain, attempted to provoke them to the contest. Cyrus challenged their monarch to single combat, but also in vain; for the hands of the king of Babylon waxed feeble. Courage had departed from both prince and people: and none attempted to save their country from spoliation, or to chase the assailants from their gates. They sallied not forth against the invaders and besiegers, nor did they attempt to disjoin and disperse them, even when drawn all around their walls and comparatively weak along the extended line. Every gate was still shut; and they remained in their holds. Being as unable to rouse their courage, even by a close blockade, and to bring them to the field, as to scale or break down any portion of their stupendous walls, or to force their gates of solid brass, Cyrus reasoned that the greater that was their number, the more easily would they be starved into surrender, and yield to famine, since they would not contend with arms nor come forth to fight. And hence arose, for the space of two years, his only hope of eventual success. So dispirited became its people, that Babylon, which had made the world as a wilderness, was long unresistingly a beleaguered town. But, possessed of many fertile fields and of provisions for twenty years, which, in their timid caution they had plentifully stored, they derided Cyrus from their impregnable walls, within which they remained. Their profligacy, their wickedness, and false confidence were unabated; they continued to live carelessly in pleasures, but their might did not return: and Babylon the great, unlike to many a small fortress and unwall'd town, made not one effort to regain its freedom or to be rid of the foe.

Pious Mothers.

Facts often carry more weight than arguments. Bishop Hall speaking in tender and affectionate terms of his mother, says: ‘How often have I blessed the memory of those divine passages of experimental divinity, which I have heard from her mouth!—What day did she pass without being much engaged in private devotion?—Never have any lips read to me such lectures of feeling piety as hers. In a word, her life and death were saint-like.’

Philip Henry, usually called, on account of the spirituality of his mind and the amiableness of his conduct, ‘heavenly Henry,’ was, in his earliest years, trained up by his fond parents in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and he retained to the end of his life, a lively sense of the benefits thus received. ‘If ever, says he, any child such as I was between the tenth and fifteenth year of my age, enjoyed line upon line, and precept upon precept, I did, and was it in vain? I trust not altogether in vain. My soul rejoiceth, and is glad at the remembrance of it. The word distilled as the dew, and dropped as the rain.—Bless the Lord, O my soul; as long as I live I will bless the Lord; I will praise my God while I have being! Had it been only the restraint it laid upon me, whereby I was kept from the sins of other children and youth, such as cursing and swearing, and sabbath-breaking, I was bound to be very thankful; so that it prevailed, through grace, effectually to bring me to God, how much am I indebted to him! what shall I render him?’

One of the most touching passages in the confessions of the celebrated Augustin, is that in which he speaks of the tender solicitude of his devout mother, and owns the influence which her prayers and tears had in checking his licentious course and changing his views and pursuits. The late venerable John Newton, in the narrative of his eventful life, expresses the most ardent regard for his revered mother. She made it her chief business and pleasure to instruct her only child in the elements of religious knowledge.—She stored his memory with whole chapters of scriptures, with catechisms and hymns, and left no means untried to impress upon his mind the truths of Christianity. This excellent parent he lost when he was seven years old. Plunged into a wicked world, his youth and mature years were given up to almost every kind of vice and profligacy: and he acknowledges, that after he was reclaimed by the grace of God, the instructions given in his childhood vividly recurred to his recollection, and were of considerable use to him. Gilbert West was at one time drawn into the labyrinth of infidelity. But he did not feel at ease in his unbelief. The lingering impression of reverence made by maternal tuition, could never be quite effaced. In a letter to Dr. Doddridge, he says: ‘I cannot help noticing on this occasion, your remarks on the advantage of early education in the principles of religion, because I have myself happily experienced it, since I owe to the care of a most excellent woman, my mother, that bent and bias to religion, which, with the co-operating grace of God, hath at length brought me back to those paths of peace from which I might otherwise have been in danger of deviating forever. The parallel betwixt me and Colonel Gardner was, in this instance, too striking not to affect me exceedingly.’

The Resurrection of Christ.

This is the most remarkable miracle in the gospel. Peruse the history with care, and you must conclude, either that he rose, or that his disciples stole the body away. The more the last is considered, the more improbable it appears. Jesus had declared, that he would rise again on the third day. The heads of the Jewish nation knew this, and determined to prevent any craft or force being employed by his followers, to take the body from the tomb, and then pretend that he was risen. A stone is rolled to the mouth of the sepulchre; a seal is fixed upon it, and a guard of Roman soldiers is set. Will the timid disciples, who ran away when their Master was seized, now attack a body of armed men; or could they hope to carry off the body secretly? what is more improbable? Besides, if they had reason to think their Master had deceived them, and filled their minds with false expectations, instead of running any risk to get the body into their possession, they would rather have renounced all connection with him for ever. Had they even stolen away the body as was said, that would have entirely cooled the ardor of their affections, and have banished the enthusiasm of love from their breasts, never to return. But their future lives, by the ardent fervor of their affectionate zeal, still more strongly confute the supposition.

It is evident the body is gone. The apostles describe the resurrection of their Master, and assert that he appeared to them on the very day that he rose, and frequently afterwards. Read the soldier's account, Matt. 28. Observe the conduct of the rulers. Why do they not order the apostles to be seized? Why do they not command the soldiers to be punished? Why do they not bring the whole to a judicial determination? Why is this neglect in men who had been so anxious to have a guard placed on the sepulchre? On the supposition of the resurrection of Jesus, the whole is natural and easy: on a supposition, that the disciples came and stole the body away, every thing is inexplicable.

BOGUE.

It has been well said that ‘he who does no good, gets none.’ He who cares not for others, will soon find that others will not care for him. As he lives to himself, so he will die to himself, and nobody will miss him, or be sorry that he is gone.’

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JULY 15, 1846.

REMOVAL OF OUR OFFICE.

We have removed our Office into Simpson's new block on Works Street, just back of the Arcade. We occupy the second floor, in the west end of the building; entrance from Works St.

Our Health.

Through the blessing of God we have been enabled to write a few light articles, and imperfectly prepare the matter for this paper. Our health, on the whole, we think is better than at the date of our last week's paper: though we are far from being well. For several months disease has been gradually fastening upon us. Our daily pressing cares were so urgent that we could find no time to spare to take the necessary remedies to throw off the threatened disease; hoping also that nothing serious would be the result in the end. But in this we were disappointed, as the sequel has proved.

Our complaint has been a bilious affection of the whole system, attended with a severe cold on the lungs, which resulted in a hoarseness which nearly deprived us of the power of speech, and an almost constant and most distressing dry cough.

We are now able to converse with considerable ease, our cough is less severe, and the general symptoms of the disease indicate a recovery of our usual health soon; for which we return our grateful thanks to him in whom we live.

O how precious has the Lord been; and his cause how precious has it looked to us, in this hour of sickness. We thought we could, in view of the past, say with Paul, 'I have fought a good fight,' and in view of the future, 'thy will be done.' We only desire health to glorify our blessed Lord: and whether he shall give us little or much, all, all shall be cheerfully devoted to his will.

Ancient Babylon.

The article on the fall of ancient Babylon, which we commence publishing in this week's paper, is from Kieith's Evidences of the Truth of Christianity. It will be read with interest and profit by the Bible student. It should greatly strengthen his faith in the fulfilment of those prophecies which relate to the future. God has been faithful to his word, in all he has said of empires, kingdoms, cities and people, which now exist only on the page of history; and he will be no less faithful relative to those now in existence.

Bro. Robinson, Preble and Pearson, have this morning (July 8) reached the city, on their return from the Canada conferences. The meetings, we learn, were good ones; an account of which we hope soon to lay before our readers. Also, an account of Bro. Pearson and Porter's recent interesting visit and meetings in Cincinnati O., and other places in that state, may be expected soon. Bro. Robinson is expected to remain over the Sabbath with us.—Bro. Preble has returned to Albany, the place of his labors.

We are still in want of soul stirring communications for our pages. If any one, who can write, has faith, living faith, in the near coming of the Lord, we hope he or she will do so. 'Faith without works is dead.' By the silence of some we have feared their faith is dying. It should live now if ever. The Judge standeth at the door. A few days more and he will call us all to give a strict account of stewardship.

Thanks to those kind whole-souled ones who have ever been mindful of our pecuniary wants: the Lord reward them—he will do it. May certain negligent ones imitate these faithful ones, that they may have their reward.

Drunk with Her Cup.

If our world, religious and political, is not drunk with the cup of the Mother of Harlots, then we greatly misjudge. She has held the cross of the forgiving Jesus in one hand, and the sword in the other, and still sustains this character. That the Protestant sects and world possess the same fiendish spirit, or, are drunk with the cup of the apostate mother, is evident from ten thousand facts connected with war and religion which we might name.—One among the many we will mention. It relates to a minister (?) in one of the Southern States, who has headed, as captain, a company of volunteers for the Mexican war. He preaches to his soldiers on the Sabbath to love and serve the Lord, and during the week trains them for the battle field. The papers from Maine to the Rocky Mountains are lauding to the skies the wonderful spirit and acts of this minister. Says the True Sun:

The Rev. Capt. A. R. Stewart, who commands a company of Louisiana volunteers, was the first to preach a Protestant sermon in Mexico.—This event occurred on Sunday the first of June. Throwing aside the military, he addressed his brothers in arms, responsible to the Supreme Being for their actions, and his appeals were listened to with the deepest interest, and the eyes of many sun-burnt veterans, recently distinguished on the field of battle, were filled with tears, and their bosoms heaved with emotions more powerful than were called out by the brisk cannonade of the enemy.

"Rev. Capt.!" What an association of titles! We might with equal propriety say, Holy Devil!—These are the times in which the expectations of the Church are raised high for the immediate conversion of the world, from war to peace. Oh, what blind infatuation.

Poor Deceived Mortals.

Paul had not yet attained unto the resurrection.—Phil. 3. Neither did he expect to shout victory over death and the grave, until flesh and blood are changed to immortality.—1 Cor. 15. But some poor deceived mortals now talk as though they at least tried hard to make themselves and others believe that they are immortal. If they are honest, why do they not let others test their immortality by opening a vein: Ah, they are willingly deceived, and some of them, we fear, wilfully so.

We are led to these remarks from the following expressions, (we suppose from Mr. G. W. Peavey, in a recent number of the Day Star, conducted by Mr. Jacobs of kindred sentiment. The writer says:

"Well, now I saw clearly that the key of living faith only, could open that gate,—and enter I must, so onward I pressed. Shortly after this, I found myself possessed of a clear assurance, that death was swallowed up of victory—that I never should go into the grave. Hallelujah forever and ever!! I feel the energies of eternal life moving while I write up on this point. I can now sing the song, 'O death where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?' I have now learned that the gift of God is Eternal Life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Now I know that I am established on that rock, against which the gates of hell, (death and the grave) can never prevail.—the last enemy is now a conquered foe. I have now attained unto the resurrection, having received the Son of God in his return from the wedding."

We say again, poor deceived mortals! We deeply pity them, and ardently pray for their salvation from this strong and deceptive snare of the enemy.

The reason why the communications of our worthy Maryland correspondent have been delayed, is, they are so closely written that it is very difficult to read them. His words and lines are crowded in to less than half the space they should occupy. We thank him for his favors; and hope he will continue to write, but in an open plain hand.

Death of the Pope.

The recent European intelligence brings the news of the death of Gregory XVI, the Pope of Rome.—Some political observers of the signs of the times have supposed that the death of the Pope would mark the commencement of some important revolution in the Papal States, which might lead to a general war between the European powers. Some modern interpreters of the prophecies have been strongly inclined to this opinion. Perhaps their opinions will prove correct, but we think otherwise. We see no evidence in the prophetic word to warrant any other change of great importance of a general character in Italy or any other portion of the globe, than will be effected by the Lord of glory at his actual revelation, to destroy the Man of Sin, and all the workers of iniquity, and to make all things new and glorious. That change we confidently expect will soon be made.

Speaking of the death of the Pope, the True Sun says:—

"Pope Gregory XVI is dead—an event not expected by the whole world. He died on the 1st June. His Holiness had been indisposed during the last week of May, but on the 28th and 29th of that month he was decimated by his physicians perfectly recovered. His death was sudden, and may possibly give rise to rumors such as followed the disease, similarly, of several of his predecessors. In ordinary times, the demise of a Pope would not occasion any sensation in the political world, but such is not the case in the present instance. The member of the Sacred College most likely to succeed Pope Gregory XVI is the Cardinal Franzoni, Prefect of the congregation of the Propaganda. He is considered friendly towards the Jesuits. Cardinal Franzoni was born at Genoa, on the 10th of December, 1775, and is, of course, in the 71st year of his age. Cardinal Acton might not probably be selected, and would in that case be only the second Englishman that has filled the Papal dignity."

"Great agitation continues to prevail in different parts of this country, especially in the Papal States, and it is to be feared that outbreaks will take place."

A Daughter of Sarah.

The following extract of a worthy brother's letter we think is due to our readers. In consequence of his faith in the coming of Christ, many of his old customers withheld their patronage, which brought him into straightened circumstances. His faith, however, has remained unshaken, and his judicious course has been steady, determined and onward, not only under these trials, but amid the most distracting scenes which have been brought on by those who have turned aside from the right way, to follow their own misguided feelings, or impulses. But he has had 'an helpmeet,' a true daughter of Sarah, to share in his sorrows, and cheer him onward in the good cause of his Lord. There are many daughters of Israel of like precious faith in our ranks, who, with all the sons and daughters of Abraham will soon possess the incorruptible inheritance. 'If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him,' Blessed promise. Our brother says:

"The Lord is good, however, and has not let us want long, though some times we found it rather difficult to fill the mouths of some five or six. But amid all the trials with which I have been tried, nothing has for a moment daunted me or my wife. She, although brought up in the most extravagant manner, and never knew what when under her father's roof, has been willing, nay, wanted to sacrifice all for Christ and truth's sake. All her relatives in the place were opposed to the truth, as we hold it, and as the Bible teaches it. Yet, in the face of them all, she has held fast the beginning of her confidence, and, I trust, will, firm unto the end."

We have no further intelligence from Bro. Barry, only that some hopes were entertained of his recovery. The friends where he is should keep us advised of his condition.

Mr. E. Jacobs in A. D. 1844.

The following expression of sentiment we take from a pamphlet published in Cincinnati O., by E. Jacobs, in Feb. 1844. Mr. Jacobs was then on Bible ground, from which he has since most fearfully departed. Will he and his followers compare their present sentiments and position with those they entertained at the date of this pamphlet, and the joyful and scriptural position they then held; and retrace their wandering steps to the path of truth, that they may again be useful and happy here, and prepared to meet their greatly injured Lord when he shall come to reward every man as his work shall be.

We not only give this expression of sentiment for the benefit of Mr. Jacobs and his associates, but for the good of all those who believe in the personal advent of Christ being at the door. Do you believe thus, your faith is according to the Word of truth—your feet are planted on that rock against which the gates of hell cannot prevail. Hold fast the profession of your faith—see that no man take thy crown.

POINTS OF DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE ADVENTISTS AND THEIR OPPONENTS.

1. We hold that the prophetic days of Daniel and John are years; as did Wesley, Scott, Clark, Fletcher, the learned Joseph Mede, Faber, Pridcaux, Dr. Hales, Bishop Newton, and Sir Isaac Newton, with all the standard protestant commentators, [and as the Bible clearly teaches.] Our opponents claim that they are simply days or half-days!

2. We claim that the prophecies of Daniel and John are historical prophecies, extending to the end of time, as all Christians have held, according to the undoubted testimony of historians, till our day. And if the end is not brought to view by these prophecies, they are to us inexplicable.

3. We claim that the ninth of Daniel is an appendix to the eighth, and that the seventy weeks and the 2300 days or years commence together. Our opponents deny this.

Dr. Hales renders Dan. 9: 27 thus: "But one week shall establish a [new] covenant with many; and half of the week shall abrogate the [daily] sacrifice and oblation. And upon the pinnacle [or battlement of the temple shall stand] the abomination of desolation, even until the consummation [of the 2300 days.] But then the decreed [desolation] shall be poured [in turn] upon the desolator."

He then adds, "This chronological prophecy (which I have attempted to render more closely and intelligibly, supplying the ellipsis necessary to complete the sense of the original,) was evidently designed to explain the foregoing vision, especially in its chronological part of the 2300 days; at the end of which the predicted desolation of the Jews should cease, and their sanctuary be cleansed."

If the "EXCEEDING GREAT HORN" of Dan. 8, is ROME, as all protestant commentators admit, it follows that the 2300 days extend to the cleansing of the sanctuary, and the sanctuary is to be desolated to the end of the world; if they begin with the seventy weeks, it follows that we have approached the very consummation, and may look daily for the coming of the Son of God.

4. We believe that the longer prophetic periods mark the limits of probation; and that when they expire, the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a shout, raise all the righteous dead in incorruption and glory, change all the righteous living from mortality to immortality, restore the whole earth to its Eden state, and set up God's everlasting kingdom. Then the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Our opponents locate their abode above the whole heaven.

Suitable Thoughts.

"But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, & watch unto prayer." 1 Pet. 4: 7.

If such be the case, thoughts suited to our position, must have a special bearing on this world's destiny, which is as surely "nigh," as that the throne of God is fixed in the heavens. However, on this, as well as every other point of Christian faith, each one must think and act for himself, and each one of us must give account of himself on the great decisive day. But the well digested thoughts of others, have prompted me to wise and healthy action, in regard to the things that belong to our eternal peace, and who knows but the well-meant though imperfect thoughts of this frail dust, may aid some lone pilgrim on his way to the "city which hath foundations." At any rate, let us try. Well, any one who has perused the "Signs of the Times," or the "Midnight Cry" for '42-3, will recollect that they contained many, very many letters and communications from credible witnesses, who unanimsly declared their belief, that the Bible taught definite time, on the second advent of the Lord, to judge the quick and the dead, and set up his kingdom in the new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Now, if the scriptures taught definite time then, it teaches it now, and the claims of God to our cordial acceptance are as imperative, and their authority as high, as holy, and as uncompromising as ever. It will not do to say, you were mistaken, and in error; inasmuch as human errors and mistakes can neither alter or disannul the plain and positive lessons of the word of God, which abide forever. Such a subterfuge will not ward off the evil day, and therefore ought not to be resorted to in a matter of such high import as the salvation of the soul. It is below the dignity of the Christian character, and no one who professes to love the truth for its own sake, can resort to it, and be consistent. Such things only suit the characters whom Isaiah thus denounces and describes. "We unto them that call evil good, and good evil, that put darkness for light and light for darkness;—that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!—We unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight, which justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him; therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff,—so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust: because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the Word of the Holy One of Israel."—5: 20, 21, 23, 24.

After our disappointment in the fall of '44, an extra of the Herald, &c. was issued at Boston which lit up the desponding features of many a weary pilgrim, with the glad tidings, that the advent of the Lord would most assuredly take place within the small circle of time, (between two and three years,) about which there was a dispute among the best chronologists, concerning the true dates of some important events. Now, as this small circle is nearly run round, it certainly is the duty of those who are "over us in the Lord to feed the flock with wholesome food," meat in due season, in order that there may be a people ready, prepared to hail their returning Lord, in the triumphant language of the prophet, Lo this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us; we have waited for him, and we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

Everlasting thanks to our heavenly father, who hath remembered us in our low estate. Whilst heaven-daring impiety, and iniquity abounds God hath set watchmen, faithful, devoted, persevering souls, over the house of Israel, who go forward from strength to strength, in acquiring and diffusing light and knowledge on the time "the set time to favor Zion," when the Lord will appear in his glory, to build up her broken down walls, and repair the desolations of many generations. The light of heaven has shone out from the sure word of prophecy more clear than ever before, and through the arduous, disinterested labors of the "good servants," many of God's dear children who were sorely bowed, lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing that their redemption draweth nigh; we have not followed cunningly devised fables, No, no! the Bible reveals the time of the advent, and is it not clear that the wise shall understand? Dan. 12. Those who give God's prophet the lie, must answer to God for it when Daniel stands up in his lot with all the just at the first resurrection.

Why do not some of the Rabbi's, who claim to be men of learning, talents, and critical acumen, show if they can, that the argument of Bro. Hale on the "harmony of the prophetic periods," is unscriptural and erroneous. Why do they not demolish the powerful arguments contained in Nos. 9 & 10 of the Voice of Truth, which all go to prove that the advent of Christ is nigh, even at the door, But no attempt of the kind has been made. It is considered more politic to sit in the scorner's chair and call hard names, than to sully ones reputation by such an undertaking. O what a blessed treasure is contained in the good old Book, which the heavenly Father has graciously given to guide his children thro' the dark mazes of this world, to the port of eternal rest.

There is a diversity of sentiment among the brethren on the subject of time, and this might naturally be expected from the many trials and disappointments, we have lately encountered.—One thing is certain, that in the olden time they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, &c. Our warrant to comfort and exhort one another, bears the same stamp as theirs; for when Paul tells the brethren that the "Lord himself shall descend with a shout" to raise the sleeping saints, and change them who are alive at his coming into immortality, he thus concludes: "Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." True, whispers unbelief. (mark its inconsistency,) but the apostle told the brethren at Thessalonica this, near 1800 years ago, and Christ has not yet come! True, but Paul in his second epistle, warned the brethren against being deceived, by any means, for that day shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, &c., whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." These events were all in the future when Paul wrote, now they are all matters of history, and may be known and read of all men.

Antichrist, the "man of sin," mystery of iniquity had begun to work in the apostolic age, but not till paganism was taken out of the way, did Popery gain its dark ascendancy—and this according to the most credible authorities, took place in 511. The 1290 of Daniel commenced here, and terminate in 1801, with the taking away of the dominion of Popery. The 1335 years commence with the dragon giving to the Papal beast his power, and seat, and great authority in 541, and include the 1260 years of Papal domination, when the saints fell by the sword and by flame, and by captivity for many days, (years) 45 years beyond the 1260 years, which is emphatically called "the time of the end," terminate this present year. "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the end of the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days; then Michael (Christ) shall stand up, and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that is found written in the book.

But the day of the saints everlasting triumph will also usher in the everlasting destruction of the wicked; 2 Thes. 1: 5-10; 2: 8, 12; Dan. 7: 13, 14. The shameful blunders and mistakes trumpeted so wide, will eventually lead to a far different issue, than thousands of deluded, misguided mortals ever imagined. Here in passing, I would observe that these mistakes were not peculiar to this side of the Atlantic. Archibald Mason of Weshawtown, Scotland, to whose fervent discourses I often listened with delight, proclaimed '43 as the time of the advent; so did Cunningham of Lainshaw, Joseph Wolf, and many others. From what I know of Mr. Mason's character, I am persuaded that he would not knowingly deceive, or mislead any man, but he had fortitude and devotedness enough to preach what he believed in his soul to be the truth, on every topic connected with the great salvation.

But had there been no wrong time preached, how could the scriptures have been fulfilled?—How could the ungodly have said, the time is prolonged, every vision faileth, if there had been no disappointments in regard to the realization of our hope. How could the profane scoffer ask, Where is the promise of his coming? if the vision had not tarried beyond an expected time.—Thank God, though cast down, we are not destroyed; our hope is as bright as ever, and soon we shall realize it to our soul's content, if we only continue faithful a little longer.

Says Paul, "Cast not away your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward: for ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise:—for yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry—only one tarrying time in the Book. The only mistake grew out of making the 490 years terminate at the cross—thus bringing the whole vision to a close in '43. From the light now elicited, the state of the argument is somewhat different. Gabriel gives 70 weeks (490 years,) for a fixed point in which certain specified results are to take place. Dan. 9. This period is divided into three others;—7 weeks, 62 weeks, and 1 week. The 7 weeks or 49 years, are taken up in building the walls, &c. At the close of the two first periods, 483 years the anointing of Messiah the Prince takes place, and in the middle of the last week, 3½ years, Messiah is cut off—and during the last half of the week which completes the 70 weeks, 490, the covenant is confirmed:—in other words, the gospel is preached to all nations without distinction. This extends to 37 of the Christian era, and 1811 includes the long period of the duration of earthly kingdom, even 2300 years—bring us to 1847. at the very farthest, for the termination of this wicked world. From a careful perusal of the valuable light which has beamed forth, my own conviction is, that this fall will bring the Savior. If disappointed, I hope to have grace given me to gird up the loins of my mind, and hope to the end. My limits are exhausted at present. Adieu.

JOHN MOFFATT.

Ellicott's Mills, Md., July 1, '46,

THE STRONG POINTS.—In the controversy with Romanism, it is well to keep in view the following strong points:—1. The sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures. This Romanism denies, by setting up tradition as a joint and co-ordinate rule of faith. 2. The right and duty of every man to judge of, and interpret the scriptures for himself. This Romanism denies, by setting up an ecclesia docens, or teaching church to do the individual's thinking for him. 3. Justification by faith only in the atoning blood of Christ. This Romanism makes of non-effect, by teaching that fasting, a partaking of the sacraments, confessing to the Priest, and the like, will avail to salvation.—Christian Alliance.

Letter from Bro. H. C. Robbins.

Bro. Marsh:—I think the evidence in favor of the soon coming of the blessed Lord is so conclusive, that every one that feels interested in it, will awake to the business of looking into their condition, to see if they are prepared according to the directions of the Lord, with loins girt about with truth, and lamps trimmed and burning, and waiting to meet the heavenly Bridegroom.

The divine personage and angelic messengers to Daniel, would have him instructed about the time of the vision, so as that he might be able to minister unto us who are living down at the termination of the prophetic periods, and time of the end. For this purpose one saint inquires of another, How long shall be the vision? Dan. 8: 13. And again, Dan. 12: 6, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? The answers are given. And Daniel is told that the wise should understand. I do most heartily believe that this saying and promise of the man clothed in linen, is now being fulfilled, in the light that is shed upon the words of the prophets to those who are interesting themselves with the heavenly hosts and righteous men on earth, and saying, O Lord how long. Likewise the blessed Savior, that he might impart instructions to his disciples, would be inquired of, "When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming and the end of the world?" The Savior gives them an outline of the events, adding and telling them the signs by which it should be known that it (his coming and end of the world) is near, even at the door. And I do think that verse 34, "This generation shall not pass away till all these things shall be fulfilled," was designed to give more light and instruction upon the time of the event. Again: in the 5th chapter of Revelations, there is a book presented in the right hand of him that sat on the throne. This book contained the events of time down to the great day of wrath, as the opening of the seals fully show. John's anxious heart is overwhelmed with sorrow and weeping, because none could open the book. At length his sorrow is turned to joy and praise. The Lion of the tribe of Juda prevails, to open the book and loose the seals. The four beasts and the four and twenty elders with golden harps, sung a new song to the praise of the prevailing Lamb. If there could be any doubt about the signs as given by the evangelists being literal, or what should be understood by tribulation of the days, it would seem that the events of the 5th and 6th seal would contribute much to settle the difficulty. Here is the "wearing out the saints of the Most High." The souls under the altar cry, "How long O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"—And here we may reasonably conclude, is the tribulation of the days immediately after which the signs should be given as in the evangelists, Matthew, Mark, and Luke. The events from the souls under the altar to the great day of wrath, when the blood of the martyrs shall be avenged, are the events of the sixth seal, great earthquake Nov. 1755, sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood, May, 1780; stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind, 1833. Thus far we are come in the order of events. The closing event of the little season hangs heavy upon the world. Sinners will know and hear their doom, and saints will join in the new song of praises to him that was found worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof.

O, Brother Marsh, do men believe? do advent professors believe? do advent lecturers believe? and if they do will they not be purifying themselves even as he is pure.

We are told by the ministers and people of the nominal church, that we can know nothing about the time of the event, and ought not to be prying into such mysteries. But angels inquired how long, prophets searched diligently, apostles are permitted face to face, to say to their divine and glorious Lord, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" The inquiries of none are repulsed, but all receive a gracious answer.—And shall not we for whose benefit these inquiries and instructions were especially given, feel deeply interested, and seek to understand, and say in prayer, How long? And while the light of the rising morn seems just ready to burst upon us, we ought to have our love and affections so broken off from every worldly object, that we can say, "Even so, come Lord Jesus."

Let me inquire, are all broken off from a proud and worldly church? are all broken off from worldly governments, which are soon to be dashed as a potter's vessel? do all identify themselves with him who is soon to be proclaimed King of kings and Lord of lords, and who is soon to take to himself his great power and reign.

Are all broken off from worldly riches? do all know and understand that a rich man can hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven? that it would be easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle? do all rich advent professors feel the alarm that the wo the Savior pronounces in Luke 6: 24 on the rich, ought to awaken?—And finally, are all broken off from a worldly mind? are all spiritual or heavenly minded? I do hope all will be faithful in the examination of their own hearts, that we may not be of the number of the disappointed ones at the last great day.

Yours waiting in hope,

H. C. ROBBINS.

Letter from Bro. Huskins.

Bro. Marsh:—How it would rejoice my heart to be able to say that the work of God was increasing this way, but alas, in some places I have visited, the week past, I find but very few that are strong in the faith, still the prospect is rather brightening; for many of the adventists seem desirous to meet in conference very soon, that they may devise some plan for a more general gathering of the saints, by holding some camp-meetings. The old adversary is very busily engaged, putting on foot every snare possible to draw souls down to death, and I find if a brother or sister was wide awake in '43, and came out from the church, going forth to meet the Bridegroom, if they became cold enough to set under the preaching of those who scoff at my Lord's coming, they die very fast: very soon lose sight even of the signs that our blessed Lord has given us. Many such I fear will sleep on, it may be a few months longer, than to be aroused only to wail and lament their awful doom. May God grant you, dear brother, much of his Holy Spirit, that you may continue to deal plainly, with much love, to all those of our dear brethren who are drinking into the spirit of this world. And may we not, any of us, who profess to follow Christ and look for his speedy coming, deny our faith by dead works. How plain the case, that all who are dead indeed to sin, and alive unto God, become shining lights to all around. Such are God's peculiar people, chosen out of this world, and of course accounted foolish by the wise and prudent of this world. I do praise my heavenly Father, that he converted me all over into this glorious truth of Jesus' coming, and that my path is growing brighter the nearer that day approaches. O yes, it is a blessed privilege I enjoy with my dear brethren far and near, of sounding the alarm. Fear God and give glory, for the hour of his judgment has come. And how much heavenly wisdom do we need in these perilous times, while some have gone far off into fanaticism, others are sinking into dead formality. May the blessed Lord arouse all such, that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil. None of us can be able to grow in grace and the knowledge of the Lord, without perfect resignation to his will; and so long as we continue to die daily to every worldly lust, we shall not be left in darkness, but have the light of life, and then be able to discover the straightness of the way, being not ignorant of the many devices of the devil.

In a few days I hope to be able to give you a more encouraging account of things.

I have been rejoiced to find some few of late at South Bridgetown that have had little or no light on the coming of the Lord, and the prospect is that 6 or 8 souls will escape for their lives as it were out of Sodom. They begin to see men as trees walking. Much love to Brother Pearson and family. May the Lord bless them and you, is my prayer.

Yours looking for redemption in a few months,
R. T. HASKINS.

Letter from Bro. Benedict.

Bro. Marsh.—Ever since I have been a subscriber and reader of your valuable paper, (the Voice of Truth,) for 15 months, I have been greatly strengthened in the faith, and cheered and comforted by its weekly visits. Next to the Bible, I prize your paper, and feel a deep interest in its continuance and welfare. And although I have felt that it would be sustained by its subscribers and voluntary contributions of its friends, and ardently hope and pray too, that it will be till time shall close, yet, in watching the receipts for some time past, and seeing them falling short of your expenses, with a pained heart throbbing with deep emotion, I exclaimed, and must the paper stop for want of funds! and shall we hear those sweet tones of counsel, warning, comfort and reproof no more! no more read those heavenly epistles of our beloved brethren and sisters scattered over the land and world, coming from hearts filled with the love of Jesus and groaning for redemption! may heaven forbid it: the thought is too painful to dwell upon—it must not be. I sincerely sympathise with you Bro. Marsh, in your present trials and embarrassments. I have just been looking back to Vol. 3, No. 1, where you state that you have expended about 2,000 dollars of your own funds, beside the avails of the paper, in publishing the Voice of Truth and Glad Tidings of the Kingdom of Heaven at hand. I am well satisfied that the profits of the paper afford you but a bare support, over and above meeting all the expenses attending it. You also state that you soon will have to meet heavy bills for paper, rents, &c—and I see that many of your subscribers are withholding that which is your due,—(such subscribers I refer to Luke 16: 10, 11, 12, & 13th verses—please read,) and the voluntary offerings of friends are not as large as they should be. With all this weight of responsibility and care resting upon you, you need large supplies of wisdom and grace, to enable you to bear up and go forward in this good work. I bless the Lord that he has raised you up for this important duty; and may the Lord give you grace and strength according to your day, and when the toil of life are over, then you will share in the rich reward of those who “turn many to righteousness,” and hear the Savior say, “Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.”

And now dear brethren and sisters, shall we suffer Bro. Marsh to bear his burdens alone?—shall we see him toiling and almost fainting, and not lend a helping hand? Shall we, when we know this our brother hath need, shut up our bowels of compassion from him? No! I seem to hear you say, we'll help him! yes, we'll help him! Those who have this world's goods must help him and others, or “how dwelleth the love of God in them.” And we who are poor, will endeavor, by self-denial and effort, to cast our mites into the treasury of the Lord, that by the blessing of God, the welcome visitant, the Voice of Truth, may continue to come to us weekly, richly stored with divine truth, and be meat in due season. I entreat those brethren and sisters who have written for the press, to continue their contributions, and others to resume their pens.—If they knew how cheering their epistles were to us, I think they would. We long to hear from sister C. R. B. again of Claremont, N. H. Will she respond to it? and Sisters Higgins, Parks, and Perkins, and many others, whose communications are like cold water to a thirsty soul. Bro. D. B. W. on the Nominal church is food for me, having seen and known for years, that the sects formed a part of mystical Babylon, whose fall has taken place, and she only remains to be burned with fire.

And now dear brother, in full view of the judgment just at hand, and the coming of our blessed Lord to call me to an account of my stewardship, and for the love I bear to my Savior and his dear cause and people, I send you five dollars to help sustain you and your dear family in your arduous labors, and also to send the paper to some brother or sister who cannot pay for it—and may the blessing of God rest upon it, so that when you and all who love the Lord Jesus shall receive their reward, unworthy as I am, I may share in the reward of those who give a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple.

Your brother expecting the Lord this year,
ANDREW BENEDICT.
West Bloomfield, July 5, 1846.

Letter from Bro. Congar.

Bro. Marsh.—By the blessing of God I'm still waiting for his Son, who in the glory of his Father will soon descend, and by his command, his holy attendants will gather his scattered and oppressed people from off this wicked earth, to meet with shouts of joy and loud anthems of praise, on the sea of glass before the throne of God. Rev. 4: 6.

“O glorious day, O blessed hope,
My heart leaps forward at the thought,
When in that happy, happy land,
We'll no more take the parting hand.”

The wickedness of this place is great, and scoffers not a few, yet I have found one good brother and family near by, at whose house we meet for prayers; and talk of the coming Lord, and where we receive the promised blessing; for the comforter can be with two or three and is not confined within the walls of a church, nor in the hearts of those who are wallowing amongst the flowers of worldly delights. O my soul, dost thou aim at a prosperous life? then labor for a glorious eternity, and never rest till thou dost rest with God. Lord, rather make me poor with a good heart, than rich with a bad conscience. As one remarked, “people in this age have grown so eminently hardened in sin, that it is now a days counted one of the greatest shames to be ashamed of sin;” but the blossoms of their glory will soon wither under the blastings of God's wrath. Some say they are looking for the coming of the Lord, who possess their thousands, yet have nothing to spare to aid in the cause of Christ. They are enlarging their barns because they have nowhere to store their surplus produce. O my brothers, let the hand of the widow, the bosoms of the poor be thy storehouse. Here no thief can steal, and no change can lose. And here it is improved; your temporal gift is turned into an eternal reward.—No ground is so fruitful as the bosoms of the poor: that brings forth an hundred fold. O my rich brother, thou hast a talent, but it wants improvement; thou hast a lamp, but it wants oil; thou hast the creature, but you need the Creator.—Then, no longer hug thy gold; loose the strings of thy purse, for the spreading of God's truth, that His poor children may be fed. O be wise, lest when the Bridegroom cometh thou hast thy oil to buy.

O my brethren and sisters, let us go up by faith on to the mount, and view the land of promise, for it is nigh! Let us be living, praying christians, for these are backsliding times.

And now, O heavenly Father, let us have such clear visions, such sweet fruition of thee, that we may not only hereafter be happy as thou art happy, but may likewise now be as holy as thou art holy. AMEN.

Yours, in the hope of reigning with Jesus.

JOSEPH CONGAR.

Byron Center, N. Y., June 29, 1846.

Bro. Morley writes from Spring Mills June 29:—Last week I preached twice in Bingham, Penn. There are a few there who feel deeply interested in the advent subject. I had good and attentive congregations. Yesterday I preached twice in this place. The Lord was with us. It was a refreshing season. The brethren in this region feel very anxious to have a Conference soon.

Cannot Bro. Hill and Bro. J. D. Johnson attend one with them. A number feel very anxious to see and hear Elder Galusha.

Yours in hope.

Bro. F. Gale, Newtown N. H., June 22d, writes:—The paper, I believe, is what its name imports. I have loaned some of them to my neighbors, but they say it is the Voice of error. All the believers in the advent doctrine in this place, consists of myself and wife; but I can assure you my brother the doctrine has taken deep root in our hearts. I generally go from five to eight miles to meet my brethren in Kensington. The conference in that place closed yesterday; we had a refreshing time—God's Spirit was in our midst, our souls were blessed, and our confidence strengthened. God bless you my dear brother, and save you with the groaning creation. May God grant it this year.

Your brother in the hope.

Errors of the Church of Rome.

SUPREMACY OF THE BISHOP OF ROME.

Scriptures.—But be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your master even Christ, and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon earth; for one is your father which is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters, for one is your master even Christ. But he that is the greatest among you shall be your servant. Matt. 23: 8-11. He asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way? but they held their peace; for by the way they had disputed among themselves who should be the greatest. And he sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all and servant of all. And he took a child and set him in the midst of them; and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them, Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me. Mark 9: 33-37.

Fathers.—I speak it confidently, that whosoever calleth himself Universal Bishop, or desireth to be so called in the pride of his heart, he doth forerun Antichrist. Gregory, Epist. 30.—And speaking of the Patriarch of Constantinople, who in his days assumed this empty name, Gregory also writes—By this pride of his what thing else is signified but that the time of Antichrist is now at hand. Lib. 4. Epist. 34.

Error when Introduced.—The Emperor Phocas in the year 606, first acknowledged the Bishop of Rome, Boniface, to be Universal Bishop.—Eneas Silvius, afterwards Pope Pius II., in Epis. 293, says that little account was made of the See of Rome prior to the Council of Nice, A. D. 325. Accounts of various councils and decrees, which never existed, were afterwards published to do away the impression thus incautiously made.

PUBLIC WORSHIP IN AN UNKNOWN TONGUE.

Scriptures.—He that speaketh in an unknown tongue, speaketh not unto men but unto God; for no man understandeth him: 1 Cor. 14: 6. How shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen, at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? 1 Cor. 14: 15. In the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue. 1 Cor. 14: 19.

Fathers.—The Greeks use the Greek tongue (in public prayer,) and the Romans the Roman (that is the Roman tongue,) and every one according to his ability praises God, and prays unto him in his own language; and he who is Lord of all languages hears the prayers which are offered to him in all.—Orig. Cont. Cel. lib. 8.—Take notice how the Apostle always seeks the edification of the Church. By the unlearned man the apostle means the layman, and he shows how this unlearned man sustains a very great loss when prayers are made in a language such as he, through want of understanding, cannot say Amen to: Chris. in 1 Cor. 14.—See also St Basil, St. Augustine, St. Cyprian.

Error when Introduced.—This glaring inconsistency first arose from the Latin language being corrupted by a mixture with Italian, French, Spanish, &c. The same forms of prayer continued in use, although those who used them had changed their vernacular tongue.—Banner.

A PROBLEM FOR THE AMERICAN CHURCHES.—During forty years of missionary labor, forty thousand pagans have been gathered into the fold of Christianity under the preaching of American missionaries. The average increase of slaves in this country is about seventy thousand a year; whom to teach to read the Bible is a penal offence. Now, if one thousand pagans are annually evangelized abroad, and seventy thousand native Americans heathenized at home, how long is the required time when "the knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters the sea."—American Citizen.

A SMILE.—Who can tell the value of a smile? It costs the giver nothing, but is beyond price to the erring, relenting, the sad and cheerless, the lost and forsaken. It disarms malice—subdues temper—turns hatred to love—revenge to kindness, and paves the darkest paths with gems of sunlight. A smile on the brow betrays a kind heart, a pleasant friend, an affectionate brother, a dutiful son, and a happy husband. It adds charm to beauty, decorates the face of the deformed, and makes lovely woman resemble the angel of Paradise. Who will refuse to smile?—Temperance Offering.

Signs of the Times.

The careful observer of the signs of the times must be impressed with the thought, that we are threatened by evils which are painful in their character. Storms seem to gather in opposite points at the same time. The various forms of infidelity make hostile demonstration on the one hand, while superstition, bigotry, and intolerance marshal their forces on the other. The practical development of infidel principles, would be the destruction of all moral restraint. Prevalent skepticism is an evil to be dreaded, even withheld in check by a large amount of good; but when there is reason to fear that it accumulates power more rapidly than the good is gathering strength, it assumes the aspect of an impending evil, which threatens to devastate the scene over which it breaks.

No Christian can reflect upon the evident growth of skeptical propensities in his own land without being painfully impressed with the thought that there is danger.

We are threatened however at the same time by superstition, bigotry, and intolerance.

Popery in somewhat varied forms is advancing at many points. It has discerned the signs of the times.

It has marked the tendency to lax notions and practices; and speciously proposes its own principles and discipline as the effectual remedy.

We seem to be approaching a most difficult and dangerous point, and our situation becomes the more critical, as mists and storm-clouds thicken around us: but very soon we shall at once emerge from the gloom and the danger, and see before us the land of promise, stretching forward into the distance, and opening her scenes of beauty to the unclouded sun-light. "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy border; but thou shalt call thy walls salvation and thy gates praise."—Repository.

Two Worlds Contrasted.

There is a fullness about the promises of future life, that contrasts strangely with the trials of this present time. The inhabitant of the blessed city shall never say, I am sick. God shall wipe away all tears from off all faces. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. The water of life, flowing from the throne, is not only clear as crystal, but it rolls a full, swelling river. The tree in the midst of the paradise, on either side of the stream, not only yields the fruits of life, but yields them every month; and even its leaves are for the healing of the nations. There is no night there. Not a cloud intervenes between the raptured saint, and the sunlight glories of God and the Lamb, and never do the curtains of evening close round that celestial day. Contrast this unmingled joy with "the sufferings of the present time," and how "beyond compare," is the "glory that shall be revealed." Every woe is here mitigated by some accompanying blessing. There are thorns along the Christian's path, but the roses bloom among them in fragrance and beauty.—There are clouds in his sky, but the sun breaks through, and darts golden rays to scatter the darkness. Storms gather, and thunders roll round his head, but they pass away, and the bow of hope is pencilled on the retiring cloud. How light then "the sufferings of this present time," mitigated and softened by him who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, compared to the unclouded peace and glory of heaven! to the fullness of joy, and pleasure for evermore at the right hand of God.

BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.—When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies within me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon the tomb stone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see tombs of parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must soon follow; when I see kings laying with them who leaped them, when I consider rivals laid side by side, or the holy men that divided the world with their disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions, and debates of mankind; when I read the several dates on the tombs of some that died yesterday, and some sixteen hundred years ago, I consider that great day, when we shall all of us be contemporaries, and make our appearance together.—Addison.

CHRISTIAN UNION.—It seems that the project for an alliance of Evangelical Christians, meets in England with considerable opposition. Many clergymen of the established Church, decline all co-operation, on the ground that they cannot but countenance dissent. Among these are several from whose friendly aid a strong influence was confidently anticipated. On the other hand, many prominent Dissenters withhold their sympathy, lest they should weaken the force of their own objections to the establishment. On both sides they are fearful that they may compromise their principles. Dr. Campbell of London, the battle-axe of dissent, it is said, has addressed a powerful appeal to Sir Culling Eardly Smith, himself a dissenter, and the prime mover of the scheme, denouncing, in severe terms, the whole plan of union. Rev. Hugh McNeile, of Liverpool, an evangelical churchman, and one of the most popular clergymen in the kingdom, has published a protest, strong in its hostility to the enterprise.—Chris. Alliance.

THE GOSPEL.—And seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre." John 20: 1.

The resurrection of Christ is the argument and claim of our happy resurrection: for God chose and appointed Him to be the example and principle from whom all divine blessings should be derived to us. "Because I live ye shall live also." Our nature was raised in his person:—and in our nature all believers: therefore is he called "the first fruits of them that sleep:" because as the first fruits were the pledge and assurance of the following harvest, and as the condition of the first fruits being offered to God, the whole harvest was entitled to consecration; so our Savior's resurrection is called "the first-born among the dead," and owns the race of departed believers as his brethren, who shall be restored to life according to his pattern. He is "the head," believers are "his members," and therefore shall have communion with him in his life.

ANCIENT BABYLON.

FROM 'EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.'

BY A. KIETH.

Much time having been lost, and no progress having been made in the siege, the anxiety of Cyrus was strongly excited, and he was reduced to great perplexity, when at last it was suggested and immediately determined on, to turn the course of the Euphrates. But the task was not an easy one. The river was a quarter of a mile broad, and twelve feet deep, and in the opinion of one of the counsellors of Cyrus, the city was stronger by the river than by its walls. Diligent and laborious preparation was made for the execution of the scheme, yet so as to deceive the Babylonians. And the great trench, ostensibly formed for the purpose of blockade, which for the time it effectually secured, was dug around the walls on every side, in order to drain the Euphrates, and to leave its channel a straight passage into the city, through the midst of which it flowed. But in the words of Herodotus, "if the besieged had either been aware of the designs of Cyrus, or had discovered the project before its actual accomplishment, they might have effected the total destruction of their troops. They had only to secure the little gates which led to the river, and to man the embankment on either side, and they might have enclosed the Persians as in a net, from which they could never have escaped."—Guarding as much as possibly they could against such a catastrophe, Cyrus purposely chose, for the execution of his plan, the time of a great annual Babylonish festival, during which, according to their practice, "the Babylonians drank and revelled the whole night." And while the unconscious and reckless citizens "engaged in dancing and merriment," the river was suddenly turned into the lake, the trench, and the canals; and the watchful Persians, both foot and horse, so soon as the subsiding of the water permitted, entered by its channel, and were followed by the allies in array, on the dry part of the river. "I will dry up thy sea, and make thy springs dry. That saith to the deep, Be dry, I will dry up thy rivers."

"One detachment was placed where the river first enters the city, and another where it leaves it." And one post did run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show the king of Babylon that his city is taken at the end, and that the passages are shut. "They were taken," says Herodotus, "by surprise; and such is the extent of the city, that, as the inhabitants themselves affirm, they who lived in the extremities were made prisoners before any alarm was communicated to the centre of the place," where the palace stood. Not a gate of the city wall was opened; not a brick of it had fallen. But a snare was laid for Babylon—it was taken, and it was not aware; it was found and also caught, for it had sinned against the Lord. How is the praise of the whole earth surprised! For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness, and thy wisdom, and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee, therefore shall evil come upon thee, and thou shalt not know from whence it riseth, and mischief shall come upon thee, and thou shalt not be able to put it off, &c.—None shall save thee.

In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord. I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, &c. I will make drunken her princes and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men, and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, &c. Cyrus, as the night drew on, stimulated his assembled troops to enter the city, because in that night of general revel within the walls, many of them were asleep, many drunk, and confusion universally prevailed. On passing, without obstruction or hindrance, into the city, the Persians slaying some, putting others to flight, and joining with the revellers, as if slaughter had been merriment, hastened by the shortest way to the palace, and reached it ere yet a messenger had told the king that his city was taken. The gates of the palace, which were strongly fortified were shut. The guards stationed before them were drinking beside a blazing light, when the Persians rushed impetuously upon them. The louder and altered clamor, no longer joyous, caught the ear of the inmates of the palace, and the bright light showed them the work of destruction, without revealing its cause. And not aware of the presence of an enemy in the midst of Babylon, the king himself, (who, as every Christian knows, had been roused from his revelry by the hand-writing on the wall,) excited by the warlike tumult at the gates, commanded those within to examine from when it arose; and according to the same word, by which the gates (leading from the river to the city) were not shut, the loins of kings were loosed to open before Cyrus the two leaved gates. At the first sight of the opened gates of the palace of Babylon, the eager Persians sprang in. The king of Babylon heard the report of them—anguish took hold of him,—he and all who were about him perished: God had numbered his kingdom and finished it: it was divided, and given to the Medes and Persians; the lives of the Babylonian princes, and lords, and rulers, and captains, closed with that night's festival: the drunken slept a perpetual sleep, and did not wake.

Her young men shall fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day. Cyrus sent troops of horse throughout the streets, with orders to slay all who were found there.—And he commanded proclamation to be made, in the Syrian language, that all who were in their houses should remain within; and that, if any one were found abroad, he should be killed.—These orders were obeyed. They shall wander every man to his quarter.

I will fill thee with men as with caterpillars.—Not only did the Persian army enter with ease as caterpillars, together with all the nations that had come up against Babylon, but they seemed also as numerous. Cyrus, after the capture of the city, made a great display of his cavalry in the presence of the Babylonians, and in the midst of Babylon. Four thousand guards stood before the palace gates, and two thousand on each side.—

These advanced as Cyrus approached; two thousand spearmen followed them. These were succeeded by four square masses of Persian cavalry, each consisting of ten thousand men: and to these again were added, in their order, the Median, Armenian, Hyrcanian, Caducian, and Sacian horsemen.—all, as before, riding upon horses, every man in array,—with lines of chariots, four abreast, concluding the train of the numerous hosts. Cyrus afterward reviewed, at Babylon, the whole of his army, consisting of one hundred and twenty thousand horse, two thousand chariots, and six hundred thousand foot. Babylon, which was taken when not aware, and within whose walls no enemy, except a captive, had been ever seen, was also filled with men as with caterpillars, as if there had not been a wall around it. The scriptures do not relate the manner in which Babylon was taken, nor do they ever allude to the exact fulfilment of the prophecies.—But there is, in every particular, a strict coincidence between the predictions of the prophets and the historical narratives both of Herodotus and Xenophon.

On taking Babylon suddenly, and by surprise, Cyrus, as had been literally prophesied concerning him, and as the sign by which it was to be known that the Lord had called him by his name (Isa. 45: 1-4), became immediately possessed of the most secret treasures of Babylon. No enemy had ever dared to rise up against that great city. To take it, seemed not a work for man to attempt; but it became the easy prey of him who was called the servant of the Lord. And as at this day,—from the perfect representation given by the prophets of every feature of fallen Babylon, now at last utterly desolate,—men may know that God is the Lord, seeing that all who have visited and describe it, show that the predicted judgments against it have been literally fulfilled; so, at that time, Cyrus, who, for two years could only look on the outer side of the outer wall of Babylon, and who had begun to despair of reducing it by famine, was to know by the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places being given into his hand, that the Lord, which had called him by his name, was the God of Israel. And when the appointed time had come that the power of their oppressor was to be broken, Babylon was taken; and when the similarly prescribed period of the captivity of the Jews, for whose sake he was called, had expired, Cyrus was their deliverer.

Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden to subdue nations before him. Cyrus, commencing his career with a small army of Persians, not only succeeded to the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, first united under him, but the Hyrcanians yielded also voluntarily to his authority. He subdued the Syrians, Assyrians, Arabs, Cappadocians, both Phrygians, the Lydians, Carians, Phenicians, and Babylonians. He governed the Bactrians, Indians, and Cilicians, and also the Sacians, Paphlagonians, and Mariandinians, and other nations.—He likewise reduced to his authority the Greeks that were in Asia, and the Cyprians and Egyptians. Nations were thus subdued before him.

I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it. He who was called the anointed of the Lord, was free from covetousness. His character is drawn by Xenophon, (who states that he excelled all other kings,) as the model of a wise and generous prince. The liberality of Cyrus was more noble than the mere possession of immensity of wealth, though including both the riches of Croesus and the treasures of Babylon. He reckoned that his riches belonged not any more to himself than to his friends. And he made as well as pronounced it his object, to use and not to hoard his wealth, and to apply it to the reward of his servants, and in relief of their wants. So little did he regard silver, or delight in gold, that Croesus told him that by his liberality he would make himself poor, instead of storing up vast treasures to himself. The Medes possessed, in this respect, the spirit of their chief, of which an instance recorded by Xenophon is too striking and appropriate to be passed over. When Cobryas, an Assyrian Governor, whose son the king of Babylon had slain, hospitably entertained him and his army, Cyrus appealed to the chiefs of the Medes and Hyrcanians, and to the noblest and most honorable of the Persians, whether giving first what was due unto the gods, and leaving to the rest of the army their portion, they would not overmatch his generosity by ceding to him their whole share of the first and plentiful booty, which they had won from the land of Babylon.— Loudly applauding the proposal, they immediately and unanimously consented; and one of them said, "Cobryas may have thought us poor, because we came not loaded with coins, and drink not out of golden cups; but by this he will know that men can be generous even without gold."— As for gold, they did not delight in it.

Cybryas, it may be presumed, was stirred up and prepared by gratitude on the one hand, as well as by revenge on the other, to go up against Babylon. And it may be mentioned, he was afterward the first to lead the way to the palace;— and—for, though a great deed, the judgments of God are altogether righteous—his hand was among those who slew the murderer of his son.

NONE SHALL RETURN IN VAIN. The walls of Babylon were incomparably the loftiest and the strongest ever built by man. They were constructed of such stupendous size and strength on very purpose that no possibility might exist of Babylon ever being taken. And, if ever confidence in bulwarks could not have been misplaced, it was when the citizens and soldiery of Babylon, who feared to encounter their enemies in the field, in perfect assurance of their safety, and beyond the reach of the Parthian arrow, scoffed from the summit of their impregnable walls, the hosts which encompassed them. But though the proud boast of a city so defended, and that had never been taken, that it would stand forever, seemed scarcely presumptuous; yet, subsequently to the delivery of the prophecies concerning it, Babylon was not only repeatedly taken, but was never once besieged in vain. Cyrus, indeed departed, after he first appeared before its walls, but he went to prepare and gather together the nations against it. And he did not return in vain. But this prediction, as it is applicable also to all others, is true, not of him only, but also of all who, in after-ages, came up against Babylon. It fell before every hand that was raised against it; yet its greatness did not depart, nor was its glory obscured in a day. Cyrus was not its destroyer, but he sought, by wise institutions, to perpetuate its pre-eminence among the nations. He left it to his successor, in all its strength and magnificence. Rebelling against Darius, the Babylonians made preparations for a siege, and bade defiance to the whole power of the Persian empire. Fully resolved not to yield, and that famine might never reduce them to submission, they adopted the most desperate and barbarous resolution of putting every woman in the city to death, with the exception of their mothers, and one female, the best beloved in every family, to bake their bread. All the rest were assembled together and strangled. These two things shall come upon thee in a moment, in one day, the loss of children and widowhood, they shall come upon thee in their perfection, for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments. For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness, &c. They did come upon them in their perfection, when their wives and children were strangled by their own hands; and so suddenly, as before, in a moment, in one day, did these things come upon them, that the victims were assembled for the sacrifice; so general was the instant widowhood, that fifty thousand women were afterward taken, in proportionate numbers, from the different neighboring provinces of the empire, to replace those who had been slain; and the very reservation of their mothers, multiplied the lamentations for the loss of children. But trust in their wickedness, brought them no safety. For, while they were thus instrumental in the affliction of one grievous judgment, for which such murderers were ripe; their iniquity was not thereby lessened, and therefore, at however great a price, they procured not any security against another judgment, which also had been denounced against Babylon for its wickedness.— They deemed themselves absolutely secure against famine and against assault. The artifice of Cyrus could not again be a snare; and an attempt to renew it was, along with every other, entirely frustrated. But still it was not in vain, that Darius besieged Babylon.

In the twentieth month of the siege, a single Persian, whose body was covered over with the marks of stripes and with blood, and whose nose and ears had been newly cut off, presented himself at one of the gates of Babylon,—a helpless object of pity, and if not a great criminal indeed, the obvious victim of wanton and savage cruelty. He had fled or escaped from the camp of the enemy. But he was not a common deserter, such as they might not have admitted within their walls,—but it was Zophyrus, who was well known as one of the chief nobles of Persia. He represented to the Babylonians, that, not for any crime, but for the honest advice which he had given to Darius to raise the siege, as the taking of the city seemed to all impossible; the enraged tyrant (his pride wounded, or his fears perhaps awakened, that his army would be discouraged by such counsel) had inflicted upon him the severest cruelties, caused him to be mutilated as they saw, and to be scourged, of which his whole body bore the marks,—to one of his proud spirit and high rank, disgrace was worse than suffering;—and he came to join the revolvers, his soul burning for vengeance against their common tyrant. "And now," addressing them, he said, "I come for the greatest good to you, for the greatest evil to Darius, to his army, and to the Persians. The injuries which I have suffered shall not be unrevenge, for I know, and will disclose all his designs."

On such proofs, and cheered by such hopes, the Babylonians did not doubt the sincerity of Zophyrus, nor his devotion to their cause, identified, as it clearly seemed, with the only hope of revenge against the cruel author of his wrongs, towards whom they could not conceive, but that he would cherish an inflexible hatred. He sought but to fight against their enemies. At his request, they gladly and unhesitatingly intrusted him with a military command. Forgiveness of injuries was not then reckoned a virtue,—which it is too seldom practically accounted even in a Christian land; and vengeance, still called honor, sleeps not in an unforgiving breast. Zophyrus soon satisfied the Babylonians that his wrongs would not long be unavenged. To their delight, having watched the first opportunity, he sallied forth from the gates of Semiramis, on the tenth day after his entrance into the city, and falling suddenly on a thousand of the enemy, slew them every one. After an interval of only seven days, twice that number were in like manner, slain, near to the Ninian gates. The men of Babylon were animated with new vigor and new hopes; and the praise of Zophyrus was on every tongue.— He received a higher command. But the Persians, seemingly more wary, were nowhere open to attack for the space of twenty days. On the expiry of that period, however, Zophyrus, by a noted exploit, again proved himself worthy of still greater authority, by leading out his troops from the Chaldean gates, and killing, in one spot, four thousand men. In reward for such services, and such tried fidelity, skill, and courage, as none, they thought, could be more worthy of the honor and of the trust, they not only raised him to the chief command of their army, but appointed him to the dignified and most responsible office in Babylon, which it was his aim to attain, that of guardian of their walls.

Darius, as if to be secure against the continued repetition of such desultory carnage of his troops, advanced with all his army to the walls. They were manned to repel the assault. But the treachery of Zophyrus, however incredible, and unknown and unsuspected alike by the Babylonians and the Persians, became immediately apparent. Intrusted as he was, in virtue of his office, with the gates of the city, no sooner had the enemy approached, and the armed citizens ascended the wall, than he opened the Belidian and the Cissian gates: close to which the choicest Persian troops were stationed. The whole scheme was a preconcerted snare, known only to Darius and Zophyrus, and invented solely by the latter, the mutilation of whose body was his own voluntary act. To the glory of the deed were added the greatest gifts and honors, and the governorship of Babylon without tribute, for his reward. The numbers of the different detachments of the Persian troops who fell, their positions, and the precise time of their successive advancements, had all been resolved on and arranged. And Darius as freely sacrificed the lives of seven thousand men as Zophyrus had inflicted incurable wounds upon himself. "Thus," says Herodotus, "was Babylon a second time taken." And thus was the word of God,—from whom nothing, past, present or future, can be hid,—a second time fulfilled against Babylon—none shall return in vain.

Gathering of the Saints.

"That in the dispensation of the fitness of times, he might gather in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him."—Eph. 1: 10.

The Angels of God will be the agents in the work of gathering.

This is the way God has always done. Angels ministered to Lot, Abraham, Sarah, Hagur, the Israelites through the wilderness. An angel met Joshua on the borders of the promised land, Jos. 5: 13; appeared to Gideon, to Daniel, Zecariah, Mary, Peter, Paul, to Jesus, to John in the Isle of Patmos, and others. They are always looking after the children of God; defending them when in danger, and comforting them when in trouble. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him." "Their Angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Math. 18: 10. These are the agents for the gathering of the saints, not men.

As this is an important question now under discussion, let us consider it for a little while in the light of scripture and reason. He will send His angels that are called a flame of fire, Heb. 1: 5, 7; and "Ministering spirits." "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them that shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 14.

There is necessity for this agency in the case, because no other can be depended upon. The angels of God ministered to our blessed Savior at His birth, when they sung "Glory to God in the highest," over the fields of Bethlehem; ministered to Him in His temptations in the wilderness, comforted Him in the garden of His passion, on which occasion He said He could have twelve legions of them; rolled away the stone from the sepulchre at His resurrection, and accompanied Him in His ascension to the right hand of His Father. Bless God, the same angels that ministered to the King of Kings will minister to the kings and priests, or heirs of salvation. Amen.

I say no other agency is competent except God himself. But it is replied, Cannot God endow men so plentifully with His spirit, as to make them competent for the work? Yes, he can: so he can save us without any mediate agency; but He has not promised to do so. Neither has He promised to employ the saints to gather the saints, or man his fellow-man. But has said, "When they say, 'Come with us, Lo, He is in the desert,' Go not forth." "He is in the secret chambers," Believe them not, is the divine caution. What is man to be accounted of? Believe none of his pretensions. To secure your confidence they will "Show great signs and wonders." But, says Jesus, "It is but to deceive. Beware! Beware!"

Again, these men angels anticipate the time. The word says, "The saints shall be saved out of trouble, Jer. 30: 7; Ps. 18: 15, 17, 27; Dan. 12. They are gathering them at their Mount Zions, in time of peace, to avoid trouble. Our Lord says, "He that will save his life shall lose it."

Again, the saints cannot be the angels that are to gather the saints, for other reasons that might be named. I will name some of them. One is of necessity they would be slow in their work; for they would be obliged to hold a parley in every case, which would make it an unthankful and discouraging work, and the gatherers would return saying, "Who hath believed our report?"

Again, who would gather the gatherers? for they are as dependent as the very weakest ones of the flock.

Once more. How could men be expected to discriminate between two persons "grinding at the mill" in mutual friendship; or working in the field, or sleeping in the same bed in the darkness of midnight? Could men be entrusted with a work so important—involving so much—even the salvation of God's elect? No! never! never!

The agents that God will send will not hold a parley with any. Those that do not wish to go, or feel even indifferent about it, will not be disturbed or pressed into the journey, or on the glorious ascension through the air to "the place of the name of the Lord of Hosts."

The first the saints will know an angel hand will touch them, thrilling them with a heavenly power and delight. They will arise and follow, as Peter did, and will find themselves borne away up on the "hands of angels," feeling that a glorious change has been effected as they ascend to meet the Lord, to be like Him, and to be with Him forevermore.

That you may know that this is not a fancy sketch read the Bible testimony touching this matter. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air," 1 Thes. 4: 16, 17. "And He shall send His angels to gather together His elect," Math. 24: 31. "And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God, with Abraham Isaac and Jacob—See Ps. 50: 3, 4, 5—Also 34: 5, 7. "Our God shall come and &c. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, &c. Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." "The angel of the Lord encampeth round them that fear him, and delivereth them. Read in this connection, Ps. 103; from the 18th to the 20th verses. The 91st Ps. furnishes clear proof that God's angels are the ministers of deliverance to the elect. 11th vs. reads: "For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways; they shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. When this divine intervention takes place, the saints will be in the midst of trouble. There will be "distress of nations with perplexity." Luke 21: "Thousands shall fall by thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand." The pestilence will walk in darkness, and destruction shall waste at noonday; and no way of escape but from the earth, and by the power and energy of angels that excel in strength—that will bear us upon their hands. The very best of the saints will not be sufficient for this work: No man then can deliver his own soul. If God does not send after us, and give His angels charge concerning us; we shall be left to perish in the midst of the massive ruins of an expiring world.

The Saints will be gathered into the capital of the Kingdom—the new Jerusalem.) Ancient Jerusalem was the place where the tribes of Israel were wont to assemble three times a year, to worship the Lord of hosts. It will be so again. "It shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations shall even go up from year to year, to worship the king. The Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." Zec. 14; also read Isa. 60: 3, 4, 11—15. "This glorious city will be where ancient Jerusalem stood. The new will be, when all things are restored, on the site of the old. Zec. 14: 4, 10, 11; Jer. 31: 35—40. The kingdom will be David's, restored. This is abundantly promised: Zec. 89; Ps. 20, and forward. This was believed and expected by the apostles of Jesus. "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" This was not a mere Jewish prejudice of the apostles; for they retained the same idea after the Holy Ghost had been given; read Acts 2: 29, and forward. "David seeing this before, spake of his own redemption and the resurrection of Christ, saying, 'Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell [the grave,] nor suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.'" "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus both Lord and Christ." He was raised from the dead for the very purpose of sitting upon the throne of his father David, and to reign over the house of David for evermore. All the prophets witness to this. They have all spoken of the restitution of all things, even the Garden of Eden, and Jerusalem. Our Lord said Jerusalem should be "trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." After which it shall be restored. Hear Amos: "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof, and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old." Amos 9: 11. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it [the kingdom of David,] and it shall be no more, until he come [Jesus Christ, of the seed of David according to the flesh] whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. 21: 27. This same prophet in the 36th chapter declares, (and that after the resurrection,) that David, or the beloved son of David, and the son of God, shall be king of Israel at that time. "And they shall all have one Shepherd, and shall dwell in the land that God gave to Jacob his servant, wherein our fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell there, even they and their children. And, moreover, God will make with them an everlasting covenant, to be their God, and they his people." 37: 24; compare this with Gen. 28: 15. "And behold I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land, for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." Moses gives a bold testimony on this subject. "And it shall come to pass when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, and thou shalt call to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shalt return, and then the Lord thy God shall turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee; and if any of thine be driven out unto the uttermost parts of heaven, from thence will he fetch thee; and the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it." Deut. 30. Nehemiah is another witness. "Yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them into the place that I have chosen to set my name there:" 9: 1. "The Lord doth build up Jerusalem, he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel, he healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds."

Mount Zion proper is the place of gathering, not any place that men may call so in their fancy: "For the Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell forever, for I have desired it." Ps. 132: 10—15. "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God. The Highest himself shall establish her." Ps. 87. "This is the hill that God desireth to dwell in. Yea, the Lord will dwell in it forever." And it is to this Zion "God will bring his saints from the depths of the sea, and because of the temple at Jerusalem, shall kings bring presents unto thee." Ps. 68: 16, 22, 29; Rev. 21. "The people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem. Thou shalt weep no more: he will be very gracious unto thee, at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee." Jeremiah is another witness. "I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive;" 29: 14 and 30. "Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth.—'They shall come with weeping.'" "Therefore shall they come and sing in the heights of Zion," 30th chapter. "At that time will I bring you, even in that time that I gather you, for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord."

Don't be deceived: trust no man or men to gather you; God himself will send his angels that excel in strength, and they shall be the ministers unto those that shall be heirs of salvation.

One other thought: Let it be remembered forever, that by no show of reason or argument, or scripture, can it be made to appear plausible that any community now on earth can answer to the body spoken of by our Lord, where the eagles will be gathered together. Luke 17: 27. The difficulties to such a view are insurmountable.—The saints are taken away: they are not consulted or persuaded; they are caught away: "two in one bed, one taken and the other left." "Where, Lord?" is the question. Where the body is, (where their treasure is,) to which they feel a strong attachment—for which they have a strong desire—of which they sing—"Jerusalem, my happy home,

Oh how I long for thee!

Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day!"

They sigh and pray for it. "O when shall I come into his presence? I cannot be satisfied until I awake in his likeness. O that thou wouldst rend the heavens and come down!" &c. "Even so, come Lord Jesus! In this we groan, being burdened; not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." They are tiptoe for the inheritance (the body.) Their eyes are open for its visions; their ears are waiting to catch the first sounds of heavenly music, and their hearts are beating for the infinite joy of it. Their appetites are sharp for the marriage-supper. They cry out for the living God, and long to come into his presence. This state of mind answers to the eagle.

The place of gathering has nothing but attractions in it. Jesus, the fairest among ten thousands, is there. The city of jasper and gold is there, whose builder and maker is the Lord.—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are there, with prophets, and apostles, and everything lovely in society. There are visions of beauty: fields of living green—gardens of never-fading flowers—and brooks and streams that never dry—and fruits in endless variety that never corrupt—and whatever else of which the most refined taste can conceive, or that would be desirable; while the most trifling evils that can be feared or felt will never be seen or heard of there.

The following is the idea in the simile of the eagle and the body. The eagle has a propensity to prey upon a carcass, and never feels any reluctance whatever to gather for such a purpose; it is their nature; they love to enjoy it, and they never dream of declining the privilege of a meal.

See that eagle perched upon a projecting rock, or a lightning-scathed tree. He is whetting his talons, and rubbing his beak upon the rock or hard oak. Behold him stretching forth his neck, and spreading abroad his wings. He is evidently uneasy; hunger pinches; he is watching for the prey, and waiting on Providence. The wind passes by, bearing the scent of a carcass. What now? Has he a trial? Is it worse than death to him to go and get his breakfast? Is every feather in his body a barbed arrow? Does he scream with anguish? No! What does he then? He snuffs up the breeze, stretches himself, and claps his wings for joy, and darts away like lightning, while every feather is as it were a spear to urge him on, while every pulsation of his proud heart beats for joy. Not so with those that submit to be gathered by each other to their temporary Zions. It is the greatest of all trials. It is worse than many deaths for them to go to their Mount Zions. It is as if they were going to prison, or to freeze or starve, or to be tortured; as if they were going to associate with drunkards, sorcerers, liars, and every abominable character.—No wonder there should be such a repugnance to going to those Zions. It is against the law of God. The way of the transgressor is hard. If we would go to the right place without any mistake, we must wait for the Lord—wait with strong desires of being filled with the Spirit. For "if the Spirit of Him that raised Jesus Christ from the dead dwell in you, it shall quicken your mortal bodies." Mount Zion and her King are the magnet. Have the Spirit now, and let your conversation be in heaven, and you will feel a thousand springs impelling you for your inheritance. And when the time comes, you will soar away like an eagle to meet your Lord. "They that wait for the Lord, shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not weary, and walk and not faint." Isa. 40.

To the children of God looking for the blessed hope, greeting, Hempstead, L. I., July, 1846.
BARNET MATHIAS.

P. S. You may say to all the brethren, through your paper, that I am looking for the glorious appearing of our blessed Lord in the clouds of heaven, and mean to contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints, and am praying for his speedy coming.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JULY 22, 1846.

The Crisis.

We are rapidly nearing another point of time, when many of our brethren will look with strong assurance and joyful hope for the coming of our long absent Lord. We think they have very good reasons for their faith and hope. May they not be disappointed. If destined to meet with another disappointment, let us not murmur, nor waver in our faith. We cannot be far from that joyful moment, when our fondest hopes will be more than realized. The most infallible evidences clearly prove that the revelation of the Son of man will soon, very soon, be witnessed. It may reasonably be looked for to day, now: it cannot be far distant in the future. Be ready every moment, and all will be well with you now, in that dread crisis, and forever in the peaceful kingdom of God.

"Bible Advocate,"

This is the title of a paper just commenced by our brethren in Hartford, Ct. The terms are,—“those who are unable to pay will receive it without money and without price.” It is published “under an association of advent brethren—by an executive committee” of five. Timothy Cole, Publishing Agent. “C. H. P.” (Charles H. Pearson) and “E. C. Clemons Pearson,” (formerly E. C. Clemons, we suppose) Editors. The paper is a size smaller than our sheet, and it is said, that the “prominent truths designed to be disseminated through its columns have reference to the immediate coming and kingdom of our Lord.”

The matter of the paper, with one or two Editorial exceptions, is valuable, well calculated to comfort and strengthen the believer in the near coming of the Lord. As opportunity offers, we design to give some extracts from the ‘Advocate.’

The Association has obtained a large tent, in which it is designed to hold meetings in different sections, as doors may open, to wake up a slumbering community; if possible, to make the necessary preparation to meet in peace their coming Judge.—A camp meeting, and other large meetings, are also appointed by the conductors and friends of the Advocate. They manifest, at the commencement of their paper, a commendable zeal, worthy of the glorious cause in which we all profess to be engaged.—We ardently pray that these extra efforts of our brethren of the Advocate may eventuate in the salvation of many from sin, the edification, and union of the now, to some extent, divided flock, and in strengthening many a weak one, to hold fast the profession of his faith unto the end.

Finally, we see no act in the doings of our brethren relative to their future meetings, as published in the Advocate, that we cannot highly approve; nor but little in the sentiments it proclaims, that we cannot most heartily endorse. And, were it not for certain reasons, which we deem it our duty, in kindness, to give, we could, and would recommend the Advocate to a share, at least, of the patronage of our brethren; but we have our honest fears that serious evils will be the unavoidable result of the publication and continuation of the ‘Advocate.’

And now, brethren, conductors and friends one and all of the Advocate, can we in love, in true christian kindness, converse freely on the cause of the fears we entertain, relative to the result of the publication of your paper? We believe we can; for we doubt not that you are Christians—Christ-like,—and such can bear, without offence, to meet with the ‘contradiction of sinners.’ And if you have grace for this, most surely it will be an easy matter for you to bear, in love, the words of friendship from a brother, though they may be words of rebuke, counsel, or correction. Do not understand that we impugn your motive, or question your character as Christians, children of our heavenly Father. No, no, far be it from our heart to even think any such thing. We believe you are heirs of glory, with whom, if we are faithful, we joyfully hope soon to possess the incorruptible inheritance. But we seriously fear that much evil will be the result of the continuation of the Advocate. Is it right to keep those fears in our own bosom, or is it duty, in love freely to express them? The latter appears to be the plain path the frank and faithful watchman of Christ would pursue. Then, dear brethren of the Advocate, permit us to say—

That we fear the continuation of your paper will result in evil, from the consideration that it must, in the very nature of the case, lessen the subscriptions, and consequently the now scanty support, of the Advent Herald and Voice of Truth, and, therefore, limit to a still smaller circle their power of doing good. This will readily be admitted by every discerning mind. It is reasonable to suppose that the influence of the contemplated camp, grove and tent meetings of the Association will be turned in favor of the Advocate. We do not say, nor wish to intimate that it will be turned against either or both of the other papers. For our brethren assure us that they “do not design to interfere with other papers advocating like precious faith, who have so long stood in its defence, and to whom we are under the deepest obligations for the light they have conveyed to us and others.” But they cannot but see that the subscription of their paper must be made up of subscribers to the other papers; and that the influence that is given to the new paper must necessarily operate against the older ones.

These fears would not be named, were there sufficient strength among us to sustain three papers.—But judging from the present embarrassed condition of our publications, we are quite confident this is not the case. If the Herald and Voice of Truth are barely sustained, with their present lists of subscribers, certainly it will tend to embarrass them, so far as their patrons are induced to withdraw their support and give it to another paper.

Again, we should not express our fears on this point, if the professed object of the Advocate was to oppose our other papers. Then, we should have been prepared to meet it as an enemy. But it professes to be a friend, a co-worker with our other papers. This being the case, we meet it as a friend, a brother, and freely unbosom to its conductors all of our fears relative to its existence. If the friends of the Advocate are not opposed to the Herald and Voice of Truth, but approve of their course, and wish them success, would it not have been consistent with this profession, and better for the cause, to have given their influence to enlarge the means of usefulness of the two papers, than to withdraw it from them, and turn it to the support of another paper? It seems clear to us that it would have been better. Can they not do this now? We hope the hearty response will be,—we can and will do it: for selfish, sectarian, or sectional principles shall not influence our acts. We are brethren, all laboring for the promotion of the same good cause. We will not, therefore, for a moment think, or try to promote the cause in one section or place, at its embarrassment, sacrifice or prostration in another.

Here it may be necessary to remark, that these fears do not arise on account of any selfish principle, or pecuniary interest of ours. Had we consulted either, we should long since have abandoned the publication of our paper. It has been continued under the severest trials, to the sacrifice of all our worldly interest, and, we fear, the prostration beyond a full recovery of our health. In this respect we have nothing to lose by the continuance of the Advocate, or the discontinuance of the Herald or Voice of Truth, or both. But we fear, by this movement of our dear brethren of the Advocate, that the already crippled, divided, and greatly suffering cause of our soon expected Lord will again be made to bleed and languish. To us, that cause is dearer than life.—We, therefore, under these delicate and peculiarly trying circumstances, step forward, in weakness, in its defence. We love our brethren whose acts we oppose, but we love the cause of our Master more.

If the Advocate can be sent out free of expense to its readers, and if it is to be of the same character of, and co-worker with, the Herald and Voice of Truth, would it not have been better to have made those papers free, as far as possible, with the funds on hand, than to appropriate them to a new paper not differing in character from those already in existence? So it looks to us. But we presume it is not expected long to sustain the Advocate without the aid of a certain number of paying subscribers; for its prospectus says, "Those unable to pay will receive it without money and without price." These are the same terms on which the Herald and Voice of Truth have long been published.

From certain communications in our possession, it appears that some of the members of the Association which conducts the Advocate, have been induced to engage in the new enterprise, by a motive somewhat different from that expressed in the Advocate, and which, we hope, has not influenced all of the members of that fraternity. Under date of May 4, 1846, one of the members writes:

"Now, Bro. Marsh, it will be labor lost for you to try to get me away from my faith of the thousand years, that I have had so long, and know to be truth. My advice to you is, to take your Bible, get down on your knees before the Lord, and if need be, like your brother Daniel, eat no pleasant bread for one and twenty days, and see if you cannot find out by books when the Lord did accomplish the thousand years in Rev. 20. We have many sound heads and warm hearts here in New England, that take the Herald and Voice, and they are very much dissatisfied with both of them. Nothing can be admitted to their columns that does not perfectly agree with the editors' theory. One brother, the other day, remarked that the Voice was not what it was a year ago; it had become worse than the Herald. Another one said, the editors had something the appearance of a pope, sitting in the church or temple, judging what is truth and what is error.

"When I read your remarks on sister's article, [Sister Clemon's article on the first resurrection being a spiritual one, &c.,] I felt hurt. Said I, is it so? Can we support a paper that will not allow us to speak through it? No. We have men and money, and paper-mills, and I can get paper cheaper than you can in Rochester; but we do not want any more papers, only do the thing that is fair. Do you know that the 1260 days [of papal oppression] are passed? I think I hear you say, yes, I do. Well, I think I have double the proof that the thousand years [named in Rev. 20, in which the saints are to reign with Christ, after having experienced the first resurrection] are passed. And if you want an exposition of the 20th of Rev. I can send you one, but it must go into the Voice."

To these brethren, and all of like faith and feelings, we say, that our columns have never been closed against the investigation of these peculiar views. We have published all of the regular correspondence of Sister Clemons, which we have received from her pen on this question, and have ever stood ready to publish more, when furnished. It is true, we reviewed her articles, agreeably to her voluntary consent, and as we had a right to do, and as the cause of Bible truth required at our hand. Was there any thing unfair in this? We cannot see that there was. Truth was our object; therefore, we were willing to lay both sides of the question at issue, before our readers. But, for some cause unknown to us, Sister Clemons retired from the investigation, before giving all of her promised articles on the point at issue.

These facts are due to our brethren; for, if the Advocate is designed, by its conductors, to work in harmony with the Herald and Voice of Truth, as it professes, this disaffection and counter influence should be known by its friends, that they may timely prevent its being turned to subserve the ends, and advocate the peculiar sentiments of those disaffected ones of their own number. But, if all of its conductors possess similar feelings, and entertain like sentiments, of these brethren above referred to, then it is right that our brethren scattered abroad, should know it, that they may be on their guard against being led from the path of love and truth, into that of contention and error, by the spirit and teachings which may in future come from that paper.

We hope the Advocate will explain on this point, define its position on the first resurrection, the thousand years named in Rev. 20, the peculiar sentiments advocated by Sister "Clemons Pearson," (as she now subscribes her name,) in some recent numbers of the Voice of Truth; and inform us how many of the conductors of the Advocate entertain those views. We make this request in love, and hope it will be responded to, in the same kind spirit, and with the frankness with which it is made. We freely acknowledge that we are jealous after a godly sort, and think we have reasons for expressing our feelings as we do. (We have seen errors under various forms spring up in our midst, and their blighting influence is yet painfully beheld all around us. We dread to witness any more similar unhappy occurrences in our broken, and, to some extent, disheartened ranks.) To avoid them, we have been impelled to the unpleasant task of writing this communication. If we have misjudged any one point, it will be our highest pleasure to be corrected, and acknowledge our mistake. If we have uttered an unkind word, it has been unintentional, and when pointed out, we will atone for the wrong. The glory of God has been our aim; before Him, we have a clear conscience, and now stand justified. And, with him, we now leave this whole case, until it shall be decided in the great day; or, we stand ready to say and do more as duty may require. His will, not mine, be done. May His tried people, in this hour of perils, be kept by His power, from the many dangers that surround them, and soon be gathered into their safe, peaceful, and everlasting rest.

Gathering of the Saints.

The article in this number from Bro. Mathias, on the gathering of the saints, we commend to the prayerful examination of all, especially those who suppose that man is to be the agent in this work, and that the place of gathering is to be any other Zion or Jerusalem than that which the Lord will create or restore, at his second personal appearing.

The omission of the small item of our brother's communication, on the dispensation of the fullness of times, does not in any way affect the other part of his valuable production. On a moment's reflection it seems that he will not only approve of the omission, for various reasons, but be led to see his mistake on that particular point.

One text, quoted by our brother, in that part of his communication which we publish, most conclusively proves that the gospel dispensation has not yet closed. It is in Luke 21, and reads, 'And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.' Facts say that Jerusalem is yet trodden down, hence the 'times of the Gentiles,' or the dispensation of times, is not yet full. When this dispensation of times is full, or when, as Macknight renders the text, 'the dispensation of the fullness of the times,' expires, then the glorious gathering, of which our brother speaks, will immediately take place. Instead of a dispensation, called 'the fullness of times,' commencing at the time of, or just before this gathering is witnessed, the dispensation of times closes them; and the gathering marks the termination of that dispensation; and commencement of the glorious day of the Lord.

The day of the Lord, great day, day of wrath, day of judgment, &c., commences with the personal appearing of the Lord, the resurrection of the dead saints, changing the living ones, rolling together as a scroll the heavens, dissolving of the earth by fire, and the destruction of all the workers of iniquity on the earth. These things are not to be witnessed until the Gentile reign is over. That reign is limited by certain times. During those times the saints are to be scattered. In the dispensation of the fullness of times, or when those times are full, or the 'fullness of the Gentiles are come in,' then the now scattered saints will be gathered into the kingdom.

We are evidently on the very last expiring moments of the times of the Gentiles. Their crowns and sceptres, wet with the blood of fallen thousands, must soon fall and be forever broken by the omnipotent power of Him whose right it is to reign. Soon he will put on the robes of vengeance, come and vindicate his, and the rights of his down-trodden people; gather them from one end of heaven to the other into the Paradise of God, the kingdom rescued from the power of usurpers, and restored to its more than pristine beauty, glory and perfection. Thy kingdom come.

☞ Brn. Bywater, Johnson and Deverell, attended meeting with the brethren in this city, last week. They are strong in the faith, and well engaged in the work of the Lord. Bro. Pearson is with us in health, and actively engaged in the good cause.

We are again at our post, with feeble though slowly improving health, but never we think more grounded and settled in the truth of the near coming of the Lord, or more willing to spend and be spent in his service.

☞ We learn from the Herald for the 15th inst., that Brn. Himes, Brown and Hutchinson, on their voyage to England, nine days at sea, were well.—Nothing but the common events of a similar voyage had occurred. They have now, in all probability, reached the place of their destination, and we may expect soon to hear something from them of their success, and the state of the cause in proud Victoria's seat of empire.

Bro. Barry's Health.

We are happy to learn from Brn. Bywater and Johnson, who called on us last Wednesday, that the prospect of Bro. Barry's recovery to a measure of health, is somewhat encouraging. They think, however, that he will not be able to preach again very soon, if ever. The following letter from Bro. Pinney gives us all the additional information we have relative to the condition of our afflicted brother:

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Our much loved Bro. Barry arrived here yesterday morning. He left Manlius Wednesday in a private carriage to Syracuse, where he tarried one night, and taking the cars next morning arrived here about ten o'clock, A. M., somewhat exhausted with fatigue.

He is to-day quite comfortable, and I think his removal will not prove particularly injurious. He is now at Bro. Jennings's house with good attendance. Sister Barry is with him, and bears with Christian fortitude her affliction, trusting in God. His brother, Joseph Barry, of Boston, is also with him.

Yours in the Gospel,

E. R. PINNEY.

Seneca Falls, N. Y. July 10, '46.

Since the above was in type, we have received the following painful intelligence of Bro. Barry:

SENECA FALLS, July 16, 1846, }
Thursday, P. M. }

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Bro. Barry is still lingering on these shores of trial and afflictions, but is very low. For the last four days, he has seemed to fail continually, despite medicines, and the most faithful attendance.

He is very much emaciated and feeble; his strength fails continually. He recognizes all his friends and particular acquaintances, when you speak to him; but the next moment, his mind wanders on almost every subject; and he keeps up an almost incessant talking, and has for the last 30 hours.

Our hopes of his recovery are, consequently, very faint; though we know our Father, if he pleases, can, and will, raise him up. Sister Barry is under severe trials; and, I trust, will not be forgotten at the throne of grace, by those who love to pray for the afflicted. His brother, Joseph Barry, is here with him, from Boston; and is with him almost night and day. Every thing will be done that can be, under the circumstances.

I was surprised to see your remark in the last Voice of Truth, inasmuch as I wrote you, last Thursday, a full account up to that time, and received an answer to the business part of the communication. I also sent two dollars, for which I received no acknowledgment. I could not account for it in any other way, only that it might have laid in the office here, one day.

Yours, in Christ,

E. R. PINNEY.

* Our paper was ready for the press, when your letter was received.

Letter from Sister E. S. Bryant.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—It has been with pain that I have noticed, for some weeks past, the lightness of your receipts; and, also, that your health is somewhat impaired; but I am thankful that God still enables you to persevere in your arduous work. It certainly is the duty of all who are benefited by your labors, to relieve you from embarrassment, as far as God has given ability to do so, and to aid in defending and explaining His truth, by an active improvement of the talents entrusted to them; for when He cometh to reckon with his servants, he will require a strict account of just as much as has been committed to their care; and to how many will it then be said, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things." May God enable us all to feel the weighty obligations resting upon us; and not only feel, but act, as He requires us. Surely if we love the Savior as much as we ought, we cannot see those who are toiling in his service, bearing the burden and heat of the day, faint for the help we might extend to them. The Lord enable us all to be up and doing, actively engaged in his work, that we may be found occupying when the Master comes: for the evidence that he will soon appear, is clear and conclusive. But how much to be deplored the prevalence of unbelief in the nearness of that great event, for which we have so long looked! It is now a time of trial; and it is our duty to watch unto prayer—to see to it, that we do not in any measure partake of the spirit of the world, and are not overcome with its deadly influence, lest we should sleep as do others, and so that day overtake us as a thief. But let us, who are of the light and of the day, "walk as children of the light," discerning the signs of the times, and, with our lamps trimmed and burning, waiting our Lord's return.

There are still a few here who hold on their way, becoming stronger and stronger. We often meet together for prayer and conference, and are agreeably cheered and strengthened by your paper. Our bond of union is the only one recognized in the scriptures, having the love of God shed abroad in our hearts—having been made one in Christ Jesus; being branches of the same living Vine; loving and looking for the appearing of the Savior. How sweet and blessed the principle that thus unites, as dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, those who were once far separated by sectarian creeds and party prejudice! Blessed be God, that we have been made to know the truth; and it has made us free.

We have been much gratified with a short visit recently from Bro. Wendal. His simple and unpretending manner of presenting truth, and its clearness and soundness, pleased us much. May God keep him humble and make him useful.

We are pleased to know that Bro. Pinney's health is improving. We hope that he or some other faithful brother, will take this place in their way, in their journeyings, if they can conveniently do so. The spot where the building stood in which we once met to worship God, and which was burnt on the night of the 10th day, was, last evening, occupied by a traveling circus; the sounds of uproarious merriment proceeding from it were truly heart sickening. That very ground, where once the servants of Christ proclaimed—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh," was then occupied by the servants of him who is the enemy of all righteousness. Thus they have gained an apparent triumph; but the triumphs of the wicked will be short. God will soon vindicate his injured cause, and then it will be the time for his now despised and persecuted people to shout and rejoice.

Since writing the above, I have received the "Voice of Truth" of the 8th inst., and was sorry to find your health still declining. May God spare you to labor for his cause, but give you submission to his will, and much of his presence in this hour of trial. I hope the brethren will be inclined to aid you in every way they can in this time of need.

I send two dollars as a donation. That the Lord may speedily restore you to health and usefulness, and grant that we may meet in his kingdom, is the prayer of your sister in the hope of the gospel.

ELIZABETH S. BRYANT.

P. S. I have written in haste at several different times, and have not time to copy. Bro. Benedict, of Newfield, died in June, in a most happy and triumphant manner. I have understood that the particulars were to be furnished for the "Voice of Truth."

E. S. B.

Ithaca, N. Y., July 5, 1846.

Bro. R. P. Grant, Port Hope, (C. W.,) June 15th, writes:—The Voice of Truth continues to be a welcome and cheering messenger to me, and to my mind it has been distinguished from the commencement by a steady untiring perseverance in the advocacy and dissemination of truth—and has exerted an influence that the great day of the Lord can only unfold; and now I lift my poor heart to God and invoke heaven's best blessings to rest upon you and your family, and all connected with you in the work of faith and labor of love. Every day brings additional evidence to my mind that we are rapidly nearing the heavenly port, and the full fruition of our fondest hopes.—How important then that we listen attentively to the instructions of Peter, who says, "Wherefore beloved, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless."

Yours affectionately, waiting and striving, by the grace of God, to look for and love the appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ.

Letter from Bro. W. Burnham.

Bro. Marsh:—I would like, by your permission, through the "Voice of Truth," to say a word by way of exhortation and comfort, to those who expect to "inherit the kingdom."

Dear brethren and sisters: The great day of final retribution "hasteth greatly!" "The Lord is at hand." "Behold the Judge standeth before the door!" Behold, the Son of Man cometh quickly, to take "vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; and to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day."

"Be ye, therefore, followers of God, as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering, and sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks." Do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Be sure that you have on the whole armor of God, as described by Paul, Eph. 6: 14, 17, "that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." And, having on the whole armor, be sure to pray always "with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." O, do not sleep, as do the thousands around you! but "watch and be sober."

I would exhort those who have this world's good, not to "shut up their bowels of compassion from those who "have need." It is true, I fear, that there are some, who profess to be "looking for Christ," and the kingdom, who do not do their duty in regard to "feeding the hungry and clothing the naked." You cannot knowingly withhold this world's good, if you have it, from the "poor and needy," and at the same time, "have the love of God dwelling in you." It is impossible.

In conclusion, I would say to all who love Christ's appearing, Be strong, fear not; "behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save us." It is written, "The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." The time will come when all the faithful will obtain their "incorruptible crowns." Be of good courage, ye "heirs of God," "ye sons of light," ye loyal subjects of the "King of Israel," for your inheritance will soon be revealed—the day of glory and blessedness is at the door; yet a "little while," and the King will appear in his glory, to redeem his people, and destroy all the works of the devil. O, blessed hope!

Yours, "anxiously desiring that better country."

WESLEY BURNHAM.

Concord, N. H., July 7, 1846.

Letter from Bro. G. W. Burnham.

Bro. Marsh:—I write to inform you that our four days' meeting at Cranberry Creek, N. Y., was well attended, and interesting to the lovers of Christ's appearing. On Sunday, the barn where we assembled was crowded with attentive listeners. Brother Miller gave seven lectures during the meeting, four of which were devoted to the prophecies of Daniel, and were reviving to the saints while contemplating the speedy end of all tribulation, and a glorious resurrection in immortal bloom, to live and reign with Christ forever, even forever and ever. From more eyes than one of the poor stranger to God and hope, was seen to burst the penitential tear. It seems to me that those thrilling appeals of truth, while they were listened to with so much apparent candor, must have made impressions on some minds that will not easily be effaced. Several whose love had grown cold were awakened to see their dangerous situation, and were renewed in spirit. I think none of God's true children went from the meeting on Sunday fasting.

Brother Miller is strong in faith that we shall soon see the King in person, even that "same Jesus" in all his glory! He still is willing to do all he can to publish the glorious truth to men, but feels the effects of age, and past labors upon him, so that we cannot expect his strength will hold as formerly. He thinks he shall need more quiet for a while at least. Let us remember one another in our prayers, brethren, and especially those who are sick.

It gave me peculiar sensations, dear brother, to learn of your feeble state, and of the sickness of Brother Barry—to look abroad on the great harvest, and see so few who seem to be laboring in the cause of Him whom we expect soon to see, and then to see even this little number of faithful Watchmen sinking upon the walls; my heart was filled—but you know the source of consolation. "He that keepeth Israel doth not slumber!" He has not forgotten to be gracious to His confiding ones—and blessed be His name, a little while more of griefs and pains, and trembling steps, and they will sing the song of triumph in the air! Glorious moment to the meek of the earth! "Look up," dear brethren, these tokens which Almighty God has held out in ocean, earth and sky, cannot fail. Not many more watching moments, ere the veil of mortality will be rent asunder, and we shall see the face of our descending King!

Brother Buckley baptized one youthful believer at the close of our meeting at the Creek. He was to remain on the ground the week following our meeting, and then go south to visit the brethren in Albany and Green counties. May the blessing of God attend him!

In company with Brother Miller, left the place Monday morning, June 28, and reached his residence Tuesday evening; found his family in health, and united in the faith of soon beholding the Saviour. Last Sunday I spent with the friends in Addison, Vt., and enjoyed a good season; last evening spoke to a few at a school-house in this place; next Sunday, the Lord permitting, I shall be in Bristol, and Monday following leave for Massachusetts. There is but a small proportion of believers in Christ's speedy coming in this region to what there were two years ago; many, I fear, are determined to be caught in the snare, and are sleeping their last sleep of unbelief. A few in the different places about here, stand firm. But I must say no more at this time.

I remain your brother in hope,

GEO. W. BURNHAM.

Letter from Bro. Whitten.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—The "Voice of Truth" has just come to hand, with the melancholy tidings, both of your own inability to perform the duties of the office; and of the apparent fatal sickness of our beloved Bro. Barry. I feel to pray, O, Lord, raise Br'n Marsh and Barry from this sickness; because the laborers are few. Nevertheless, thy will be done. You mention that your receipts are light! I enclose $2. I know the paper can not be printed without money. But we must have it. We cannot do without it. It must be sustained. Brethren must look around them, and pay for the "Voice of Truth."

Dear brethren, scattered abroad, let us be consistent; yea, let us be honest. We say that we must have the paper;—we say that we must have a medium, through which we can hear from each other all over the land; and through which we can communicate our thoughts to each other. Now, Is this right? I believe it is. Is it not, brethren? I seem to hear you all, from Maine to Oregon, saying, Yes, YES! Then let us do our part towards having it. Come, brethren, highly favored of God, in being permitted to see the truth of the coming of our King: though poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith; let us all see that our paper is paid for. Let us learn a saying of the New Hampshire farmers, "Earn your breakfast before you eat it." We shall feel much better while reading the precious contents of the paper, to think it is paid for. Recollect the name of the paper is, the "Voice of Truth." In a very "little while," we shall learn that its name was right; and the story it tells, correct, to the joy of our souls. O, for a place in that kingdom. I feel unworthy to have it. Dear brethren, what a precious gift is God's kingdom! May we not come short of it. Time is short—afflictions will soon end—I long for the time to come—I want to see the family all together—I want to see the peaceful kingdom, "under the whole heaven!" We soon shall see it! Infallible testimony makes it certain.

Finally, brethren, farewell; be perfect; be of good comfort; be of the same mind; pray for the laborers who are sick, that God will raise them up; and for those who are in the fields, that a door of utterance may be given them, that they may speak the words of God boldly.

Yours, truly, in blessed hope of the approaching kingdom of God. P. WHITTEN.

Templeton, Mass., July 8, 1846.

Letter from Bro. D. I. Robinson.

Bro. Marsh:—I got your letter at Cleveland, in answer to mine requesting you to attend the camp-meetings at Canada, as the ministers were all occupied. You said you could not attend, and that I must go, or no one from the States would be there. So, no sooner said than done, I provided for my appointment at Akron, and packed up and put off for Canada. At Buffalo I took tickets for Lewiston and Toronto. The runner deceived me 50 cents in my passage by boat. On arriving at Toronto the Custom House officers were as impudent and unreasonable as bigoted haters of the Lord can well be. Charging me duties on my charts and books of study, $1 65. But I had an opportunity to preach the faith to Caesar's household; explain the charts and answer their objections. The officer thought I had better be at work on a farm; I told him I thought he had, but I did not come to assault him on his faith, and if he had any duty to do toward me, I should like to have him about it. He said my chart ought to be burnt, and he was a mind to do it. I told him if he had the right, and that was his duty, to do it—I should not prevent him. He said I ought to be put in prison. Well, said I, just do it; I shall not resist you; if that is part of your official duty be about it. He said if I would go back, he would charge me no duty, and let me go. What, said I, are you not sworn under oath to be faithful, and let me go free? He then said he would pay the duty for me, and my passage back, too, if I would go. I told him if he had any duties of his office to do to me I would like for him to attend to them, for I was in a hurry. He said we were a set of scamps and ignorant fanatics, going round and living on the people. I asked if his ministers did not live on the people? He wished to know if I was liberally educated, and if I had studied any languages but my mother tongue? I told him I had some, but I had no knowledge to boast of. Well, then, you profess to be a minister, do you? I told him I had been one for near twenty years. Well your chart must be of immense value if it shows when the end of the world will come. I told him its value was much more than its cost. Well, he thought I better preach to men to be ready all the time, for it might come to us at any time, to-day or to-morrow. I said that was just what I was doing exactly. Now, are you ready? Say, are you ready? If not, prepare to meet thy God. Well, said he, come along here, and we will see what you have got. He then made out a bill of $11 and over, and sent me to another officer to get duplicate copies, for which I paid twenty-five cents, and then sent me back to the Custom House to pay duty. He then requested me to sign a declaration that this was a true manifest of all goods and merchandise I brought into the Province, at a fair valuation, at the port I last left before reaching the Province, and then gave me a passport for one map only. Such are the corrupt and unfaithful stewards of Queen Victoria in Toronto, Canada West.

Having done with them, I took stage for Darlington, and reached there about one o'clock, P. M., and stopped at a poor stage tavern. The next day I reached the camp-ground at Whitby. By the assistance of Bro. Cryderman, on Friday I found the meeting in progress, Bro. P. Hough alone sustaining the labor. Bro. Deverell arrived about the same time. I spoke in about an hour after to a goodly company of advent believers. Bro. Deverell in the evening. Bro. Grant, of Hope, spoke the next morning, and I followed. Bro. Devrell in the afternoon, and Bro. Perry in the evening. The exercises were profitable and interesting, though the congregation was not large; but all felt revived, and that it was good to be there. On Sabbath there was a very large assembly—about 3,000. Bro. Deverell spoke on the Covenant; I followed on the Evidences of the Time, and again in the afternoon at two o'clock, on the preparation for it. Bro. Campbell spoke in the evening, and we closed the services by a prayer-meeting, which continued till late at night. Some were reclaimed, and some filled with the love of God, and all parted in love and peace, in hope of soon meeting in a better country. The meeting was one of quietness and order, with very few exceptions, occasioned by the groggeries in the vicinity of the meeting.

The Trent camp-meeting was about seventy miles east of the other, and held a week later. It was not so large as the other, but still one of great interest and profit to believers and the cause. The brethren labored in prayer-meetings and conference more abundantly than at the other, and were more abundantly refreshed. About two thousand attended Sabbath day, and were attentive listeners, with the exceptions named at the other.

The cause receive a new impulse, and the cry for laborers is urgent. The doors for lecturing are many more than there are ministers to enter. Prejudice is breaking; a willingness to hear is rising among the people. O may we all pray the Lord to send forth laborers into His harvest; and O, that they would hear and obey the commission, and our brethren see that their wants are met, and they are helped on from one place to another. May all be ready to do what our hands find to do with our might, lest coming suddenly He find us sleeping.

Yours, truly,

D. I. ROBINSON.

Rochester, July 9, 1846.

P. S. The brethren have taken active measures to start a paper in Canada, to be published and edited by Bro. J. Pearson. The arrangements are not yet completed, but probably you will soon hear from him or them on the matter. If they do, I hope they will rally around it with liberal hearts, and the friends in the States do the same to those established here.

Letter from Bro. A. Beach.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I feel grateful to God that he has enabled you to conduct with so much meekness and ingenuous discretion, in view of so many irritating things said and done by your former, and so many painful ones by your present brethren. Though aware that one who is conscious that his ways please the Lord, has consolation in himself, I have thought of writing you an encouraging word, but have found so little to say but that has been so well said by others, that I have hitherto neglected it.

Since my attention has been turned to the subject of the Second Advent, I have been chiefly engrossed with two leading topics—the nearness of the event, and preparation for it. The signs of Christ's coming have never carried as clear conviction to my mind as the prophetic numbers. The signs have seemed rather calculated to awaken attention, so that many should run to and fro, and knowledge be increased, until the wise understand the numbers. It was at first supposed that the last of the seventy weeks, during which the covenant was confirmed, embraced John's ministry, three years and a half, and Christ's of the same length; and that Christ's ministry extended to the ascension, bringing the crucifixion when he caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease, in the midst or half part of the week. It was then seen that John was only six months older than Christ, and that John did no miracle. It was afterwards supposed that Christ's ministry was seven years, but as he attended only four passovers and was crucified at the last, his ministry must have been four years or less; and as the word that began to be spoken by the Lord, was afterwards confirmed by them that heard him, it seems about certain that the last week of the seventy must extend as much beyond 33 as Christ's ministry fell short of seven years, Hebrews 2: 3, 4. Mark 16: 20.

If we may understand by the term rendered midst, the exact middle, it seems to settle the question that the 2,300 days extend three and a half years, and only three and a half years beyond 1843. And recent investigations show that the other numbers harmonize strikingly with this reckoning, so that had we not been previously mistaken, we should feel very confident now.

The views you have advanced on the subject of Babylon, appear quite as likely to be the truth as any that I have seen. It is important that stress should be laid on what is implied in coming out of Babylon. I doubt whether it requires dissolving our connection with a church, correct in principle, and corrupt only in practice, as the Savior retained his standing in the Jewish church till he was crucified by its members; but it requires more moral courage, more stamina of character to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them to live plain, simple and cheap in the midst of pride, sensuality and costly display, holding the church suspended from our fellowship, keeping the salt without losing its savor, in the mass, than to withdraw and associate with those of correct department. To come out of Babylon then requires not only that we do not multiply delicacies, till, to meet their expense, we traffic in slaves and the souls of men, but that we withhold fellowship from those that do.

Let us then, after careful investigation, believe what appears truth, and do what appears right, and wait the result.

Yours, &c.,

AUGUSTUS BEACH.

He that is little in his own eyes, will not be troubled to be little in the eyes of others.

Humble yourselves in the sight of God, and he will lift you up.

"Equal to the Angels."

Equal to the Angels! Fellow mortal, Christian soldier,— Ye who from day to day are striving still your flesh
And will to mortify, and do those things which please
Thy Maker, and in his sight to stand approved—
Durst thou ever dwell upon the glory of that promise?
—That man, poor fallen man, who, sunk in sin so low,
Incarnate suffering Deity alone could save,—
May, by repentance, faith and holiness, through Christ,
Be counted worthy to obtain the world to come,
To die no more, but to enjoy his Maker's favor,
And, to the Angels, who around the throne in glory stand,
Be equal made.

Created are the Angels,

But of power exceeding far the sons of men.

Once, when the Assyrian king the hosts of Israel Sorely pressed, a mighty Angel to the rescue came,
And in one night vast numbers slew of warriors brave;
They fell beneath his arm like reeds before the whirlwind's power.

And oft in Apostolic age, when Christ's Ambassadors by wicked men were 'prisoned, Angels,
Sent by God, their prison doors wide open threw,
And sent them forth again to tell mankind the words of life.
And e'en the matchless Son of God, when suffering in the flesh
The last, the fierce vindictive rage of hell's dark prince,
Was, by an Angel's strength, still stronger made. But chief
By him, who God's Apocalypse wrote, have we on record
Mighty deeds performed by Angels bright, who stand
Before the Omnipotent, and wait his high command.

But time would fail to sing of all—Of him, who thought Himself with Satan equal to dispute, yet still No railing accusation 'gainst him durst he bring,— (Christian, learn a lesson here,) but said, 'The Lord rebuke thee!
Of him, who skill and understanding gave the 'man beloved,'
That he should far down the future see, and know
When came the end.—Of him, who rolled away the stone
That closed the sepulchre of the Crucified,
Before whose lightning glance the keepers shook, and seeming died.

Of him, who cried, 'Oh, who to open the sealed book is worthy?'
Of those, who power have to hold the symbolic winds,
That nought should hurt the earth or sea, until another
Of the Angelic host shall, with the Spirit, seal
The servants of the living God, and thus complete
The number of his saints.—Of those, to whom are given
The seven trumpets, which bring on earth's inhabitants
Such awful woes.—Of him, who in mid-heaven cries,
'Fear God, and to Him glory give; for now is come
His Judgment Hour.'—Of him, who will, with solemn oath, Proclaim the End of Time.—Of him, who'll reap the earth.
Of those, who'll gather God's elect.—Of him, who, girt
With high commission, Satan binds, to roam no more Till ends the Grand Millennial Reign, on earth,
Of Christ and all his saints,—great day of God Almighty;
With whom, a day a thousand years, a thousand years a day.

Such are the Angels; such as thou hast seen their power.
And fitted to them 'tis given, to pour upon the guilty
Vials filled with wrath, yet oft their message is of peace
On earth, good will to men. With lofty intellect
Endowed, eclipsed by none but Him who formed them;
With power and wisdom gifted next to Him to whom
All power in heaven and earth is given; happy and fit
They are, to wait upon the Eternal One, and execute
His dread commands. His will obeyed, they take their harps
And sing his praise. The courts of heaven ever ring
And echo to their lofty, boundless song—
'Holy, holy, holy! evermore; Lord God Almighty!'

O, the amazing love of God's dear Son! Every saint
In faith that died, and who believing live when sounds
The 'trump of wondrous melody,' immortal shall be made,
And equal to the Angels; in song almost superior.
Ye anuring saints, rejoice, fresh courage take; for ye
On the right hand of bliss shall stand,
And with your golden harps shall sing the rich new song;
Song which around the throne of God was never heard before;
Song of redeeming love; song which the Angels cannot sing,
For they were ne'er redeemed!

The happy day is rolling on,
When ev'ry promise sweet, which he whose word can never fail
Hath made to those who live the Christian here, shall be fulfill'd.
All prophecy is history now, save that which close Upon the knell of time will come to pass, and that
Which still remains for after years, when Time is gone.
Some prophecies, revealed by holy bards,
Have tarried long; so long, that many wail the head,
And, taunting, ask, 'When will they come?' They'll ask no more,

Nor mock: for the reproach of prophecy will soon
Be wiped away, and every word of God found true.

Oh, fellow mortal, listen to the solemn warnings
Of the Book of Truth, the Lamp of God, which never shone,
Till now, with such a lustre bright upon the path
Of time. O, to your Maker be ye reconciled,
Ere with the Godhead's burden He bow the heavens down,
And come in awful pomp, to sweep into oblivion's shade
The wicked who his words despise. Methinks
His retina on high is now already marshall'd,
And but wait the bidding of their King, to come with him
To earth, to cleanse by fire this now rebellious world,
His usurped kingdom; rescue and redeem the fair possession
He with his own blood hath purchased,—the field, which,

For the treasure's sake, the church, he bought, his life the price,
And make it, in his time, all beautiful again,
And give it to his saints. For he has said, that earth
His footstool is, and, that the place of his feet
He will make glorious.

Happy! aye, thrice happy, then.

Who waiting, watching, ready stand to meet their Lord.
Their ravished eyes shall see the King in all his beauty,
And behold the land which now, methinks, is not far off.
Christian, thy Master's coming soon; coming to crown
His suffering church, now militant, and bid her welcome
To her long, long happy home. O still fight on the fight of faith,
And an eternal life lay hold. To Jesus look,
The Author of thy faith and soon to be its Finisher:
He'll robe in glory bright who his appearing love,
Who're 'counted worthy to obtain the world to come,
And resurrection out from 'among the wicked dead.
They never marry there; in union sweet, the Church
Redeemed, the Bride, with Him shall sit upon his throne
And reign forevermore, joint heirs with Jesus Christ,
Of God and Immortality: never, as here,
To part hopeless of meeting soon; and never again to die.
—The endless years will come and go eternally,
And find them happy still; and, to the mighty Angels,
Who their homage pay to Him who sits in glory
On the great white royal throne, be equal made.

Bro. A. B. Huntington, Hartford, Ct., July 11, writes: "I have lost none of my interest in the Voice of Truth, or the glorious truths it advocates. I have no fears but that while it continues to hold out the truth it will be abundantly sustained. Most of the little flock here are holding on their way, and many of them are fully of the belief that this is the year "of time's farewell."
There is evidently a waking up among the children of God in all this region, and many are coming out strong on time. The Lord helps us all to watch and pray, and keep our garments un-spotted, so that when Jesus appears, we shall hear him say to us, 'Come up hither!'"

The most important news of the day is, that another revolution has taken place in Mexico, which again places Santa Anna at the head of that ill-fated Republic. Our government is making large preparations to prosecute the war with Mexico.

Large fires have recently spread desolation in several towns and cities.

Crime of every form, and of the most aggravated character, has become a common occurrence of the day. It goes unpunished, and no longer shocks the sensibilities, nor alarms the fears of a palsied community. The world is nearly ripe for the vintage.

Appointments.

Bro. Deverell will attend a Conference at Niagara, C. W., to commence August 1st, and hold over the Sabbath, where Bro. Stevens may appoint.

Bro. Deverell wishes to be addressed at Delaware, C. W., as he has moved to that place.

Also, a Conference will commence at Le Roy, July 31st, and hold over the Sabbath. The Editor, if health will admit, and Br'n Bywater, Hill, Johnson and others will attend.

ANCIENT BABYLON.

FROM 'EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.'

BY A. KIETH.

Babylon was a third time taken by Alexander the Great. Mazæus, the Persian General, surrendered the city into his hands, and he entered it with his army drawn up, "as if they were marching to battle." Again was it filled with men—and literally was every man put in array, like a man to the battle. The siege of so fortified a city would have been a work of great difficulty and labor, even to the conqueror of Asia. But the inhabitants eagerly flocked upon the walls to see their new king, and exchanged, without a struggle, the Persian for the Macedonian yoke.—Babylon was afterward successively taken by Antigonus, by Demetrius, by Antiochus the Great, and by the Parthians. But whatever king or nation came up against it, none returned in vain.

Each step in the progress of the decline of Babylon, was the accomplishment of a prophecy. Conquered, for the first time, by Cyrus, it was afterward reduced from an imperial to a tributary city. Come down and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon: sit on the ground, there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans. After the Babylonians rebelled against Darius, the walls were reduced in height, and all the gates destroyed. The wall of Babylon shall fall, her walls thrown down.—Xerxes, after his ignominious retreat from Greece, rifled the temples of Babylon, the golden images alone in which were estimated at £20,000,000, besides treasures of vast amount. I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth, that which he has swallowed up; I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon.—Jer. 51: 44, 47, 52. Alexander the Great attempted to restore it to its former glory, and designed to make it the metropolis of a universal empire. But while the building of the temple of Belus, and the reparation of the embankments of the Euphrates were actually carrying on, the conqueror of the world died, at the commencement of this his last undertaking, in the height of his power, and in the flower of his age. Take balm for her pain, if so be that she may be healed.—Jer. 51: 8, 9. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed. The neighboring city of Seleucia, which was built with that intent, was the chief cause of the decline of Babylon as a city, and drained it of a great part of its population. And at a later period, or about 130 years before the birth of Christ, Humerus, a Parthian governor, who was noted as excelling all tyrants in cruelty, exercised great severities on the Babylonians, and having burned the forum and some of the temples, and destroyed the fairest parts of the city, reduced many of the inhabitants to slavery on the slightest pretexes, and caused them, together with all their households, to be sent into Media. They shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

The "golden city" thus gradually verged for centuries towards poverty and desolation. Notwithstanding that Cyrus resided chiefly at Babylon, and sought to reform the government and remodel the manners of the Babylonians, the succeeding kings of Persia preferred, as the seat of empire, Susa, Persepolis, or Ecbatana, situated in their own country: and in like manner the successors of Alexander did not attempt to complete his purpose of restoring Babylon to its pre-eminence and glory; but, after the subdivision of his mighty empire, the very kings of Assyria, during their temporary residence even in Chaldea, deserted Babylon and dwelt in Seleucia. And thus the foreign inhabitants, first Persians, and afterward Greeks, imitating their sovereigns by deserting Babylon, acted as if they verily had said,—Forsake her, and let us go every man unto his own country; for her judgment is reached unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies.

But kindred judgments—the issue of common crimes—rested on the land of Chaldea, as well as on its doomed metropolis: and the tracing of their fulfilment may best lean to the view of the utter desolation of fallen Babylon.

They come from a far country, from the end of the earth, to destroy the whole land. Many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of thee also, &c. The Persians, the Macedonians, the Parthians, the Romans, the Saracens, and the Turks, are the chief of the many nations who have unscrupulously and unsparingly served themselves of the land of the Chaldeans; and Cyrus and Darius, kings of Persia; Alexander the Great; and Seleucus, king of Assyria; Demetrius, and Antiochus the Great; Trajan, Severus, Julian, and Heraclius, emperors of Rome; the victorious Omar, the successor of Mahomet; Holagou, and Tamerlane, are great kings who successively subdued or desolated Chaldea, or exacted from it tribute to such an extent as scarcely any other country ever paid to a single conqueror. And, though the names of some of these nations were unknown to the Babylonians, and unheard of in the world at the time of the prophecy—most of these many nations and great kings need now but to be named to show that, in local relation to Chaldea, they came from the utmost border—from the coasts of the earth.

They are cruel both in anger and fierce wrath, to lay the land desolate, &c. The Persians vied with the Parthians in cruelty and fierceness against resisting and against subjugated enemies. Three thousand Babylonians were at once impaled by order of Darius. Conquest was the object, and kindness was not in the nature of the Macedonian conquerors of Babylon. The possession of Chaldea was contested between Antigonus and Seleucus, and ruler rose against ruler. After its long subjection to the Seleucidæ, the proverbially cruel Parthians held Babylonia in bondage. In the second century of the Christian era, the Romans, coming from afar, still maintained the character of the cruel and fierce desolators of Chaldea, and were thus the unconscious instruments of the fulfilment of other prophecies. Under the reign of Marcus, the Roman generals penetrated as far as Ctesiphon and Seleucia. They were received as friends by the Greek colony;—they attacked as enemies, the seat of the Parthian kings; yet both cities experienced the same treatment. The sack and conflagration of Seleucia, with the massacre of three hundred thousand of the inhabitants, tarnished the glory of the Roman triumph. Seleucia sunk under the fatal blow;—but Ctesiphon in about thirty-three years, had sufficiently recovered its strength to maintain an obstinate siege against the emperor Severus. Ctesiphon was thrice besieged, and thrice taken by the predecessors of Julian. And when attacked by Julian, the anger of that Roman emperor and that of his army was not moderated, nor their cruelty abated, by the effectual resistance of the citizens of Ctesiphon against sixty thousand besiegers.—"The fields of Assyria were devoted by Julian to the calamities of war; and the philosopher retaliated on a guiltless people, the acts of rapine and cruelty which had been committed by their haughty master in the Roman provinces. The Persians beheld from the walls of Ctesiphon, the desolation of the adjacent country." With such violence did he wreak his vengeance on the inhabitants of Chaldea, that their fierce wrath was conjoined with the cruelty of their enemies, to lay the land desolate. "The extensive region that lies between the river Tigris and the mountains of Media, was filled with villages and towns; and the fertile soil for the most part, was in a very improved state of cultivation. But, on the approach of the Romans, this rich and smiling prospect was instantly blasted. Wherever they moved, the inhabitants deserted the open villages, and took shelter in the fortified towns; the cattle were driven away; the grass and ripe corn were consumed with fire; and as soon as the flames had subsided which interrupted the march of Julian, he beheld the melancholy face of a smoking and naked desert." But "the second city of the province, large, populous, and well fortified," in vain resisted a fierce and desperate assault; and a large breach having been made by a battering-ram in the walls, "the soldiers of Julian rushed impetuously into the town, and after the full gratification of every military appetite, Perisabor was reduced to ashes; and the engines which assaulted the citadel, were planted on the ruins of the smoking houses." When, in after ages, the Romans under Heraclius, penetrated to the royal seat of Destagered, and spread over Chaldea to the gates of Ctesiphon, "whatever could not be easily transported they consumed with fire, that Chosroes might feel the anguish of those wounds which he had so often inflicted on the provinces of the empire: and justice might allow the excuse," says Gibbon, "If the desolation had been confined to the works of regal luxury, if national hatred, military license, and military zeal had not wasted with equal rage the habitations and the temples of the guiltless subjects." The fierce Abassides, proverbially reckless of committing murder, which was the very work that their missionaries went forth to execute, long reigned over Chaldea; and Bagdad, its new capital, distant about fifteen miles from Seleucia and Ctesiphon, was their imperial seat for five hundred years.—"Their daggers, their only arms, were broken by the sword of Holagou, and except the word assassin, not a vestige is left of the enemies of mankind,"—for again and again has it proved true of the land of Chaldea—I will destroy the sinners thereof out of it. The Mogul Tartars succeeded as the guilty possessors and cruel desolators of the land of Babylon. "Bagdad, after a siege of two months, was stormed and sacked by the Moguls, under Holagou Khan, the grandson of Ghengis Khan." And Tamerlane, another great king, "reduced to his obedience the whole course of the Tigris and Euphrates, from the mouth to the sources of these rivers: and he erected on the ruins of Bagdad, a pyramid of ninety thousand heads." Finally, not with abated, but if possible with increasing or with more persevering cruelty, the Turks, aided by Saracens, Coords, and Tartars, have become the weapons of the indignation of the Lord, brought forth out of his armory which he hath opened; for, fearful as a token of judgment, and clear as the testimony of truth—this is the work of the Lord God of Hosts in the land of the Chaldeans. Waste and utterly destroy after them. A sword is upon the Chaldeans. A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction. I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all around about him.—A sound of great destruction cometh from the land of the Chaldeans.

And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the Lord. Come against her from the utmost border upon her storehouses. A sword is upon her treasures, and they shall be robbed. O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness. On taking Babylon suddenly and by surprise, Cyrus became immediately possessed of the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places. On his first publicly appearing in Babylon, all the officers of his army, both of the Persians and allies, according to his command, wore very splendid robes, those belonging to the superior officers, being of various colors, all of the finest and brightest die, and richly embroidered with gold and silver;—and thus the hidden riches of secret places were openly displayed. And when the treasures of Babylon became the spoil of another great king, Alexander gave six minæ (about 15*l.*) to each Macedonian horseman, to each Macedonian soldier and foreign horseman, 2 minæ (5*l.*), and to every other man in his army a donation equal to two months' pay. Demetrius ordered his soldiers to plunder the land of Babylon for their own use. But it is not in these instances alone that Chaldea has been a spoil, and that all who spoil her have been satisfied. It was the abundance of her treasures which brought successive spoliators. Many nations came from afar, and though they returned to their own country (as in formerly besieging Babylon, so in continuing to despoil the land of Chaldea,) none returned in vain. From the richness of the country, new treasures were speedily stored up, till again the sword came upon them, and they were robbed. The prey of the Persians and of the Greeks for nearly two centuries after the death of Alexander, Chaldea became the prey chiefly of the Parthians, from the north for an equal period, till a greater nation, the Romans, came from the coasts of the earth to pillage it. To be restrained from dominion and from plunder, was the exciting cause, and often the shameless plea, of the anger and fierce wrath of these famed, but cruel conquerors of the world. Yet, within the provinces of their empire it was their practice, on the submission of the inhabitants, to protect and not to destroy. But Chaldea from its extreme distance, never having yielded permanently to their yoke, and the limits of their empire having been fixed by Hadrian on the western side of the Euphrates, or on the very borders of Chaldea, that hapless country obtained not their protection, though repeatedly the scene of ruthless spoliation by the Romans. The authority of Gibbon, in elucidation of Scripture, cannot be here distrusted, any more than that of heathen historians. To use his words, "a hundred thousand captives and a rich booty, rewarded the fatigues of the Roman soldiers," when Ctesiphon was taken, in the second century, by the generals of Marcus. Even Julian, who, in the fourth century, was forced to raise the siege of Ctesiphon, came not in vain to Chaldea, and failed not to take of it a spoil; nor, though an apostate, did he fail to verify by his acts the truth which he denied. After having given Perisabor to the flames, "the plentiful magazines of corn, of arms, and of splendid furniture, were partly distributed among the troops, and partly reserved for the public service; the useless stores were destroyed by fire, or thrown into the stream of the Euphrates." Having also rewarded his army with a hundred pieces of silver to each soldier, he thus stimulated them (when still dissatisfied) to fight for greater spoil—"Riches are the object of your desires? those riches are in the hands of the Persians, and the spoils of this fruitful country are proposed as the prize of your valor and discipline." The enemy being defeated after an arduous conflict, "the spoil was such as might be expected from the riches and luxury of an oriental camp; large quantities of silver and gold, splendid arms and trappings, and beds and tables of massy silver."

When the Romans under Heraclius ravaged Chaldea, "though much of the treasure had been removed from Desagered, and much had been expended, the remaining wealth appears to have exceeded their hopes, and even to have satiated their avarice.

While the deeds of Julian and the words of Gibbon show how Chaldea was spoiled—how a sword continued to be on her treasures—and how, year after year, and age after age, there was rumor on rumor and violence in her land—more full illustrations remain to be given of the truth of the same prophetic word. And as a painter of great power may cope with another by drawing as closely to the life as he, though the features be different, so Gibbon's description of the sack of Ctesiphon, as previously he had described the sack and conflagration of Seleucia (cities, each of which may aptly be called, "the daughter of Babylon," having been, like it, the capital of Chaldea,) is written as if, by the most graphic representation of facts, he had been aspiring to rival Volney as an illustrator of scripture prophecy. "The capital was taken by assault; and the disorderly resistance of the people gave a keener edge to the sabres of the Moslems, who shouted with religious transport, 'This is the white palace of Chosrocs; this is the promise of the apostle of God.' The naked robbers of the desert were suddenly enriched beyond the measure of their hope or knowledge. Each chamber revealed a new treasure, secreted with art, or ostentatiously displayed; the gold and silver, the various wardrobes and precious furniture, surpassed (says Abulfeda) the estimate of fancy or numbers; and another historian defines the untold and almost infinite mass by the fabulous computation of three thousands of thousands of thousands of pieces of gold. One of the apartments of the palace was decorated with a carpet of silk sixty cubits in length and as many in breadth (90 feet); a paradise, or garden, was depicted on the ground; the flowers, fruits, and shrubs were imitated by the figures of the gold embroidery, and the colors of the precious stones; and the ample square was encircled by a variegated and verdant border. The rigid Omar divided the prize among his brethren of Medina; the picture was destroyed; but such was the intrinsic value of the materials, that the share of Ali alone was sold at 20,000 drachms. A mule that carried away the tiara and cuirass, the belt and bracelets of Chosrocs, was overtaken by the pursuers; the gorgeous trophy was presented to the commander of the faithful, and the gravest of the companies condescended to smile when they beheld the white beard, hairy arms, and uncouth figure of the veteran who was invested with the spoil of the great king."

Recent evidence is not wanting to show that, wherever a treasure is to be found, a sword, in the hand of a fierce enemy, is upon it, and spoliation has not ceased in the land of Chaldea.

"On the west of Hilleh, there are two towns which, in the eyes of the Persians and all the Shiites, are rendered sacred by the memory of two of the greatest martyrs of that sect. These are Meshed Ali, and Meshed Housein, lately filled with riches, accumulated by the devotion of the Persians, but carried off by the ferocious Wahabees, to the middle of their deserts."

And after the incessant spoliation of ages, now that the end is come of the treasures of Chaldea, the earth itself fails not to disclose its hidden treasures, so as to testify that they once were abundant. In proof of this, an instance may be given. At the ruins of Hoomania, near to those of Ctesiphon, pieces of silver having (on the 5th of March, 1812) been accidentally discovered, edging out of the banks of the Tigris, "on examination there, were found and brought away," by persons sent for that purpose by the Pasha of Bagdad's officers, "between six and seven hundred ginots of silver, each measuring from one to one and a half feet in length; and an earthen jar containing upwards of two thousand Athenian coins, all of silver. Many were purchased at the time by the late Mr. Rich, formerly the East India Company's resident at Bagdad, and are now in his valuable collection, since bought by Government and deposited in the British Museum." Amid the ruins of Ctesiphon, "the natives often pick up coins of gold, silver, and copper, for which they always find a ready sale in Bagdad. Indeed, some of the wealthy Turks and Armenians, who are collecting for several French and German consuls, hire people to go and search for coins, medals, and antique gems; and I am assured they never return to their employers empty-handed," as if all who spoil Chaldea shall be satisfied, till even the ruins be spoiled unto the uttermost.

PERILS OF THE LAST DAYS.

"This know also, that in the last days, perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as their's also was."

In the first place, I would ask attention to the language with which this scripture is introduced; "This know also." What he was about to utter, was something that Christians were bound to understand,—to "know," as well as what had preceded. He had been teaching Timothy among other things, the doctrine of the resurrection.—Chap. 2: 8-12.—"Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David, was raised from the dead according to my gospel: wherein I suffer trouble as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound. Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. It is a faithful saying: for if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:—If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he will also deny us." He charged him to preach the doctrine. (Vs. 14.) "Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers." (15) "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." He also admonished him of the errors of some, who said, "The resurrection is passed already." Having instructed him how to conduct himself towards those errorists and opposers, he then commanded him to "know" certain other things which he was about to mention.

And was Timothy only, to understand those things? They were things that were to take place "in the last days." Was it so important that he should have such positive knowledge of these facts, and yet the generation that should live on the earth when they should transpire, and the "perils" were to be shunned, be wrapped in profound ignorance of the whole subject? Reason teaches otherwise, and the word of God corroborates his testimony. The whole class of scriptures that teach us that that day will come "as a thief,"—"as a snare," &c., specify unequivocally, the class of the human family, on whom it will come "as a thief." It is on the wicked—on those that do not "watch"—that are saying, "peace and safety." But the Bible expressly declares, that the righteous will not be overtaken by that day as a thief. They are to "look for, and haste unto the coming of that day;"—to see the evidences of its coming, and "lift up their heads as it draweth nigh;"—and when the Savior appears they are to say, "Lo! this is our God, we have waited for him. He will save us, and we will rejoice in his salvation." How different this, from having "sudden destruction" come upon them, "as travail upon a woman with child," when "they shall not escape." It seems to me, that Christ himself has so far settled this matter, that it is wrong to question whether christians will understand when it is at the door.

The three-fold question was asked him, "when Jerusalem should be destroyed, and what should be the sign of his appearing, and of the end of the world?" In answer to the last two, he gave the "signs" that were immediately to precede the day, and added, "When ye see all these things come to pass, then know it is nigh, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away until all be fulfilled."

With regard to these "signs," one thing should be distinctly understood. They will be such, that those who are watching and waiting for the coming of that day, will see that the scriptures are fulfilled in them, while those who are not studying the "sure word of prophecy," are not conversant with their Bibles on the subject, and watching the "signs of the times," will not see that they are fulfilled, but will be saying, "Where is the promise of his coming; for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning?" Not, "where is the promise of his 'ever coming'?" but "where is the promise of his coming" during the time of "this generation, or of his speedy coming?"

With these facts before the mind, how can any one feel justified in saying, "It is not for us to know any thing about it." "No one ever did or will know any thing about it until it comes."—"It is nothing to me, let it come when it will, if I am only ready?" [What constitutes a preparation?] Or how can any professing child of God neglect the examination of the subject without feeling condemned? Certain it is, that he incurs very great guilt.

There is another expression I wish to notice, for the purpose of showing the incorrectness of a remark that is frequently made. We are frequently told that Christ and the apostles preached that "that day was at hand," while as yet, it was several thousand years off. These persons tell us, they believe "the day is at hand," meaning by it, to convey no more definite idea of time than if they had spoken it thousands of years since: and I have sometimes feared they said. Christ and the apostles thus preached; not from a conviction that they did, but for the purpose of removing the reproach of saying, "the day is at hand."

I admit that Christ and John preached that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand," and our Savior said to the Jews, "The kingdom of heaven is within you;" or, as the phrase may be more properly rendered, "the kingdom of heaven is among you;" for in no view of the subject, can we suppose the kingdom of heaven was within those wicked Jews. How, then, was it among them? The amount of the inquiries they had made of him was,—if you are a king, where are your armies and munitions of war to sustain your throne? He replied, "the kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation."—you will not see it coming over yonder mountain, nor across those plains, but it is among you—"within you." The gospel of the kingdom is preached—the laws of the kingdom, and the great principles on which those laws are based, are explained before the people, and men are deciding whether they will be governed by those laws or not. When a man submits to these laws and loves to obey them, he becomes an "heir of the kingdom." The laws obtain in his heart, and he is governed by them.—In this sense only can it be said, the kingdom of heaven "is within" them; and, as individuals, are thus converted to those rules of action, and to the remedial scheme of the gospel for past transgression, it may be said, the kingdom of God is among the multitude, even of opposers. But this is a very different thing from saying, "the day of the Lord is at hand." So far from teaching this sentiment, the Spirit of God expressly declared that it was not at hand.

Paul said, certain characteristics would be prominent in the church "in the last days." The question we are now to consider, is, did he mean by 'the last days,' in his time, and thence down to the last day itself, or did he mean a few days just preceding the coming of the Lord?

It appears that certain ones had crept into the church at Thessalonica, who taught that the Savior was to be expected in their day. Some claimed to have had it revealed to them by the Spirit; others, that they had word; and others still, that they had received letters from Paul to this effect. Whether they were forged, or it was claimed they had been "misaid,"—we are not informed: but this seems to have been the great occasion of his writing to them his second epistle. In this, after having referred them to the true source of consolation for the troubles they were called to endure in consequence of those false teachers, he says, (2 Thes. 2: 1-8.) "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth, that he might be revealed in his time.—For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

Now, here he expressly declares, that the "day of Christ" was not 'at hand,' and exhorts the brethren not to be deceived "by any means" on the point. He goes on to state certain things that will first transpire, which it must necessarily take a long series of years to produce by natural causes: or in a usual course of divine providence. Things which we now see, it took centuries to fulfill. But when he throws his prophetic vision on to things that are to transpire subsequently to the revelation of the man of sin, as being the son of perdition, he says, "in the latter times," and "in the last days," they shall occur: and averred that the Spirit expressly declares it. There was no question as to what the Spirit said, or difficulty in understanding it. And what the Spirit "declared" to one, he declared to all the apostles who wrote or spoke on this subject. I aver then that they not only taught that "the day of Christ" was not "at hand," and would not come in their day, but declared things that were to transpire centuries subsequent to their day; and then did distinctly understand and clearly reveal the events that were to mark the days immediately preceding the coming of the Lord: so that there is no necessity of error on the point.

I now propose to consider the characteristics of the "last days," and the perils to which those then living, will be exposed, together with the important fact, that those days are now upon us.

In considering these, it is important to understand them as existing within the pale of the church. I believe the principle is generally, if not universally true, that when the character of an age is to be given, it is given as represented by the professed people of God. Hence the exhibition of the sins of Israel, by the different Prophets, in lamenting the degeneracy of the times in which they lived, and the commendations of the piety of Israel by other prophets at other times.

The scripture we are contemplating, appears to be arranged on the same principle. We therefore see, that after a delineation of the sins, of which people would be guilty "in the last days," it is stated that these same persons would be those "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." This is conclusive on the point, that those sins and perils are to exist among those who profess godliness, and even keep up the form thereof, within the nominal church. Peter, Jude, and others, speak of the last days in the same light, and use phraseology that leaves no doubt that the sins of the professed church give character to the times. It is, then, within the church, that we are to look for the "perils" we are to share "in the last days." Let us now contemplate, with a spirit of meekness and humility, the sins that will exist, and inquire whether facts, in connection with this scripture, warrant us in the belief that we are "in the last days."

The first in the catalogue is, that "men shall be lovers of their own selves." Selfishness will be marked on all the movements of the church. It will be the grand incentive to action in all her operations. Isaiah and Micah inform us that she will be proclaiming peace to the world, and predicting joyous times under the benign influence of her mild reign: and it is but natural to suppose that she will be putting forth efforts somewhat corresponding to her high hopes—but selfishness will lie at the bottom of the whole movement. We do not mean that those men who originated the present missionary arrangements, were particularly selfish; no doubt they were good men, as well as many that have labored in different portions of the earth in the missionary cause; but when the Lord comes, he will find the machinery of this work in the hands of men that are purely selfish. The same feature will be characteristic of all her movements. The church and ministry will be under the controlling influence of this sin. This is the prophecy.—What are the facts? Is it not proverbial that the churches are striving who shall be the greatest? Who shall have the finest house—most popular preacher—"scientific music,"—largest number of communicants, and influential and fashionable audience? and what is all this but supreme selfishness? Is there a proposition made in the cause of reform? The great point of consideration is, how will it effect our popularity;—our greatness;—our interest? And according to its supposed relation to these, is the question of sustaining or rejecting, usually decided. A church in one of our cities in western New York, recently refused to allow one of the most popular preachers in the country, of her own communion, to preach on the subject of Temperance in her house of worship. And why? I know not the specific causes assigned; but there are members in that church who keep their wine and beer in their cellars for daily use as a beverage, and if time continue long, and there is no change from the present course, they will soon be called to lay some of their members in a drunkard's grave.—Perhaps they would consider that as a providential visitation, to which they must bow in submissive "silence," so that the subject would not even then be discussed.

I cannot say that selfish considerations induced the rejection of the subject of Temperance from their pulpits, but the facts authorize at least, the query. But this is not an isolated case. It is difficult to decide, if at all possible, which, of all the popular sects and churches at the present day, are most continuous and persevering in their efforts to build up themselves, their own sect or church. As to the purity of all this, I can see no difference between it and the spirit that governs the party politician.

If any further proof or illustration is needed of the selfishness of the church at the present time, we have only to look at her position with regard to the questions of reform. The work of the gospel is to oppose sin and save men. But the church as a body, have uniformly opposed every branch of the great cause of reform, which is truly the cause of Christ, and a few have had to carry them forward until the question of their popularity among the multitude was decided, then she was ready to embrace those branches that became popular. Just like the selfish politician, will do any thing that promises success to the party.

The world hated Christ because he testified of it, "That the works thereof, were evil." This same principle holds true—the world will hate those movements in the cause of reform, which oppose sin—which testify against evil. Here is a reason why such movements will seldom if ever be popular among men. But those branches which do not propose to rebuke sin—or barely to speak of it as at a distance, so that no conscience shall be particularly disturbed, will be most certain to meet with general favor. A selfish church would have but one reason for rejecting the one and entertaining the other, viz: popularity.

Look at facts as they exist. The church has opposed every cause, or looked on with cold indifference, while a few have fought the battles.—The cause of Foreign Missions came up. So far as it proposed to speak of sins only at a distance, it was received; but that part of the operations which contemplated opposing sin in our own country, and in our midst, was rejected. The cause of education—of Sabbath schools—of the distribution of Bibles and tracts—of home missions, and other similar causes, were entertained, so far as it could be done without troubling any specific sins. But when the proposition was made to carry Bibles, Tracts, and the gospel to a class in our land that are in such a condition that popular sins must be opposed before they could be reached it was at once rejected. A movement to assail directly the institution of slavery—of intemperance—of licentiousness and the like sins, met the same fate. The advent cause was not fully rejected, until the brethren began to cry against the sins of "Babylon." Now, why this rejection of those causes which oppose sin, and the acceptance of others? Are not men "lovers of their own selves?" I know that many, very many, profess to be in favor of those causes, but they do nothing to advance them. They maintain a "mighty inactivity," except when they oppose those trying to do something to forward them. This opposition is usually manifested in finding fault with measures, &c. O that they understood that inactivity in the cause of reform, was treason against Jesus Christ!

The "peril," or danger in this case, will consist in this, I suppose. The sin of self-love, or selfishness, will be tolerated, and be a prominent sin in the church. Selfish individuals will therefore suppose that they can join the church, retain their selfishness, and finally, enter the kingdom of heaven. Fatal mistake! Benevolence is indispensable to true religion.

But another characteristic of the last days is, men are to be "covetous." Inspiration has defined this sin to be idolatry, and declared that no idolator shall enter the kingdom. It therefore becomes a matter of grave importance to every one, what the sin of covetousness is, and whether he is covetous.

I believe it has generally been defined to be, "desiring to possess wrongfully, that which belongs to another,"—or "to possess what belongs to another, without rendering an equivalent." It would seem that the splendid schemes of speculation in which the church, hand in hand with the world, have engaged for the last ten or fifteen years, would be sufficient evidence on this point, that the end is nigh. But there is too much other evidence. Look at the manner of doing business in commercial transactions. Is a professor's word worth more than that of any other man's? Do they not lie, cheat, deceive, with the same adroitness and avidity of other men? Do they care more about their neighbor's interests when dealing with him, than others do? So far as my information extends, I am compelled to bear testimony against them. I mean the great majority. The exceptions are not much, if any more numerous, than they are among those "out of the church." Go into any town or city in the land, and trade at one hundred shops, the amount of ten dollars in each, and then select the church members by their deal. It cannot be done. Let them have the advantage in any way, and will they not take it? How are all the laws of God trampled under foot by them in their eagerness for wealth! Christ said, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures in the earth," but the great mass plunge into schemes of wealth, and drive after the world as if no such command existed. Yea, doubtless many do not as much as think there is such a command. They will run steam boats, canal boats, cars, and stages, on the Sabbath—take usury at the rate of from thirty to one hundred per cent for money—obtain mortgages and securities, and foreclose and seize possessions;—in short, will do any thing and every thing the civil law will allow, and many things it will not, to obtain money;—accumulate wealth. Contemplate the extensive and powerful effort made to obtain money from these same professors, for what they call evangelizing the world. How much do they obtain? Not as much as is expended by the same members for tobacco and rum.—The ministry are so far under the influence of this sin, that but few will preach unless they can be well paid for it in dollars and cents. True, they do not all obtain the high salaries, but in most cases, it is not because they do not desire and strive to obtain them. Any church that wants a minister, and will offer a fine salary, can have

one. But this sin need only be mentioned, and facts will crowd upon the mind of the most casual observer, sufficient to enforce the conviction that the evidence from its existence, is not wanting.

The "peril" here must consist in persons supposing they can indulge in this sin because it is tolerated in the church, and yet entertain a good hope of heaven. The standard of piety in the church is not the condition of entering heaven. By the word of God, every one must stand or fall. O that I had a voice to make the world hear, I would say, beware of the sins tolerated by the church! If practiced, they will ruin the soul forever. (Concluded next week.)

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JULY 29, 1846.

Bro. Barry and Child Sleep in Jesus.

The following letter from Bro. E. R. Pinney, gives the painful intelligence, that our beloved brother T. F. Barry, and his sweet babe, are no more in this world of sorrow and death: they sleep in Jesus.—But, thank the Lord, they will soon awake to life and endless joy, in the resurrection morn.

With the history of Bro. Barry, we have been imperfectly acquainted, until within a few years past, since he became identified with the advent cause. Previous to this he was a worthy minister in the Christian connection. He embraced the doctrine of the second advent of Christ among the first who espoused that cause in the New England States, where his first incessant and efficient labors were bestowed for its promotion.

He came to Rochester early in the summer of 1843, with the large tent, and took an active part with Brn. Himes, Fitch, and others, in establishing the cause in this city, where he has made it his home, and been the stated preacher to the church, until a few months past. During this time he baptized in this city not less than six hundred believers in Christ. In the mean time he visited Canada, Ohio, and nearly, if not every congregation of our brethren in Western New York, preaching the words of life to the listening multitudes who came out to hear. In short though his was a feeble and delicate constitution, his labors were abundant. No man of his strength and health, has or could have done more. His works will follow him; and doubtless very many who have been blessed under his ministry, will be as stars in the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus.

A few months since he again visited the scattered and tried flocks, generally, in Western New York, confirming the souls of them who were looking for immediate redemption in Israel. Sister Barry accompanied him. They finally thought it duty to locate at Oswego, where we have a precious company of tried and faithful brethren. Soon after coming to this conclusion they visited their brethren in this city. Br. Barry preached and broke bread to the saints; and though we were not present we have heard many speak of the joys of that day; they never heard Br. Barry preach better, or see him more engaged and devoted to the cause.

He thought his health was much improved by his late visits among the churches, and returned to Oswego with the flattering prospect of enjoying, to a certain degree, the sweets of domestic life, in the bosom of kind friends and brethren. But these hopes were soon blasted. Our brother is torn by the relentless hand of death, from the fond embraces of his dear companion, and little one, which soon follows him to the grave, leaving the bereaved and heart-broken wife and mother to mourn her irreparable loss.

The case of sister Barry is afflictive in the extreme. Her cup is truly a bitter one. None can realize her loss, or feel her deep sorrow, but those who have been called to experience like afflictions.

Her husband leaves her, in usual health, to attend the meeting at Manlius. The next she hears of him, he is bleeding, and strangling in his own blood.—She leaves her sickly babe in the hands of the kind friends, and hastens to the place where her husband had fallen among strangers. She follows him in his enfeebled state to Seneca Falls, where she sees him sink in death: and, in the short space of three hours, with his lifeless remains, in company with his brother, takes the cars for Boston. All this time of toil and deep anxiety, she has been separated from her babe; the only surviving object on earth, on which her affections are now placed, to which her blasted hopes now cling. But, alas, her cup of sorrow is not yet full; the last tie, that binds her to earth, is sundered. The tidings follow her to Boston, or meet her on her return, that her sweet babe is no more.

It would be mockery to attempt to describe the lacerated feelings of our sister under these circumstances. God, however, knows the deep sorrow of her afflicted soul, and has a balm for all her wounds. May He be her trust, and the widow's God in this hour of her bereavement.

Sister Barry's numerous brethren, sisters, and friends, not only drop the tear of sympathy with her, but will be mindful of all her wants. Put your trust in God, dear sister, and all will work for your good. Look beyond this vale of wo for undisturbed happiness. Soon you will meet your departed husband, and your sweet babes, [one sleeps in this city] in the kingdom of God. And, thanks be to our kind Father, there will be no death there, no crying, no tears, no sorrow, nor pain, but life, and health, and eternal joy. The separation from your dear friends will be short—soon you will meet again, never more to part; wherefore be comforted with these words.

Those who wish to aid Sister Barry, can hand their free-will offerings to her, or send them by letter, directed to E. R. Pinney, Seneca Falls, N. Y., or to J. Marsh, Rochester, N. Y.

The following is Bro. Pinney's letter:—

SENECA FALLS N. Y., July 22d, '46.

Bro. Marsh:—Our much loved brother and faithful laborer in the gospel, Thomas F. Barry, is no more. He fell asleep in Jesus July 17th, 1846, at 4 o'clock P. M., after an illness of twenty-two days. He was taken with a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, on his way to attend the Manlius grove-meeting, when within about half a mile of the place.

He bled in three days about four quarts. At his second attack of bleeding, it was not supposed by himself or friends, that he could survive but a very few minutes, yet he seemed very composed, and observed that he did not expect to survive but a short time, and wished to say a few words, and proceeded to give directions respecting his funeral, his family, &c., with all that calm composure, that unwavering faith in God gives the Christian, even in the moments of death. On being asked if he felt at peace in his soul, he answered, O yes! all is bright and glorious in the prospect, and with a smile of joyous triumph, beaming forth from his inmost soul, exclaimed, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." He however so far recovered as to be removed to this place after an illness of 14 days, and arrived here at the house of Bro. Jennings, Thursday, July 9th, where he remained until his death, on Friday last.

Every thing that could be done was done for our dear brother, but all proved vain. It pleased our Father to remove him, and although we have sustained a great loss in the death of our dear brother, and one that will be severely felt by all who knew his virtues, yet as the pleasure of our Father is manifested, we feel to bow submissively to the stroke of Divine Providence, and say, "Even so Father, for it seemeth good in thy sight." As to his character, all acquainted with him will testify that he was a just man, and one that feared God. A bright light has been extinguished in the church of God, for he was mighty in the Scriptures, and his walk was such as became the gospel he preached. As a preacher, his talents were less splendid than useful. He had not much brilliancy of imagination, but considerable strength of mind, with a judgment greatly improved by application, for he was a close and critical student of the Bible, as well as a clear and faithful expositor of the Word, for he had obeyed the injunction of Paul to Timothy, "Study to shew thyself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." By reading and thinking, he had accumulated a stock of mental riches and facts connected with our glorious hope, with which he enriched his sermons, that but few of us possess. And although his light did not possess so much of that meteoric brilliancy of many, yet it was a clear and steady light that shone by night and by day, at home and abroad, that cheered the lonely pilgrim on his way through this dark and dreary world, to that bright haven of eternal rest, in the world of glory to come. He remarked to his companion during his illness, "that he had endeavored faithfully to preach the gospel as he understood it, without reference to pleasing his brethren or the world, but with a desire to please and glorify his God." In fine, he was one that lived as well as preached the gospel, and upon whom shall his mantle fall. I feel as though I could adopt with sincerity of heart, the prayer of the Psalmist—"Help Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men," and also that the Lord would raise up and send forth more laborers, for truly the harvest is great and the laborers few. Sister Barry endured her affliction and bereavement with fortitude becoming the Christian, and manifested that resignation to the Divine will, that magnified the sustaining power of God's grace, under affliction. May the Lord God still bless and sustain her under all her afflictions and trials yet to come, for I greatly fear her cup of sorrow is not yet drunk to the dregs. Her child is now with us, having been brought to this place last Saturday from Oswego, and afflicted by a complication of diseases, from which, there is no hope of recovery. Cutting 3 or 4 teeth, just recovering from the whooping cough, and a very malignant chicken pox, and most malignant case of diarrhoea. I am this moment interrupted, and called to go over to Bro. Jennings's for they think the child is dying. Oh my God, if possible, let this cup pass.

3 o'clock P. M. I have just returned—the child is dead. The little sufferer expired at 1-4 past two o'clock. May the Lord prepare and sustain this much afflicted sister under her severe trials. Sister Barry was expected in the train of cars this morning at 1-2 past 10, but we fear her health may have failed her, and she is detained at Boston. The child will be kept until Friday, if possible. After Bro. Barry's decease, preparations were made to convey his remains to Boston, to be deposited in the family vault, in accordance with the request of his brother Joseph, who has been with him during his illness, and they were placed on board of the train of cars going east, at 1-2 past seven o'clock, accompanied by the companion and brother; and ere this, his remains

Ready to Meet the Lord.

At this important crisis, this time when w good reason to look for the coming of the Lc ery moment, his often repeated admonitions, ing his children to be ready for that solemn cannot be too often repeated, nor too indelli pressed upon our minds. After giving the evi of his coming, the Savior says, 'Watch ther for ye know not what hour your Lord doth co 'Therefore, be ye also ready: for in such a as ye think not the Son of Man cometh.' M 'Watch therefore, for ye know neither the c the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.' M 'Take heed, watch and pray, for ye know n the time is.'—'Watch ye, therefore: for y not when the master of the house cometh, at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in th ing: lest coming suddenly, he find you s. And what I say unto you, I say unto ALL, W. Mark. 13.—'And take heed to yourselves, any time your heart be overcharged with s and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and day come upon you unawares. For AS A SHALL IT COME ON ALL them that t the face of the WHOLE earth. Watch ye t and pray always, that ye may be accounte to escape all these things, and to stand be Son of man.' Luke 21.

Too high importance cannot be attached admonitions, warnings and commands. He earth will pass away, but the words of Ch not fail. He will come again at the time a and in the precise manner he has said, sudd lightning's flash, as a snare on all living. t will escape the snare, or the destroying fire dread day, but those who heed the words of All who are not ready then must forevepe The most weighty considerations may t now, why we should be constantly ready to Lord. One is, the nearness of the time of ing. The next moment, the Son of man r vealed from heaven, to forever seal the ete tinies of the human family. The signs, e cursors of the near approach of the Lord, all been seen by this generation. They have c work, have uttered in trumpet tones th voice, that the coming of the Son of man even at the door. The church and the w seen, heard, and trembled under this divine t this dread message. But now they ha their eyes and ears against these solemn t truths; have hurried from their recollection once produced in their disordered breasts tokens of the near approach of that day, fallen asleep, we fear, never more to be aro sense of their condition, until the tribes of shall wail at the appearing of the Lord of Shall we follow their sad example? Sha come unbelieving, harden our hearts, and from our precious faith and hope, and negle the preparation necessary to meet our co churches are striving who shall be the greatest? Who shall have the finest house—most popular preacher—"scientific music,"—largest number of communicants, and influential and fashionable audience? and what is all this but supreme selfishness? Is there a proposition made in the cause of reform? The great point of consideration is, how will it effect our popularity;—our greatness;—our interest? And according to its supposed relation to these, is the question of sustaining or rejecting, usually decided. A church in one of our cities in western New York, recently refused to allow one of the most popular preachers in the country, of her own communion, to preach on the subject of Temperance in her house of worship. And why? I know not the specific causes assigned; but there are members in that church who keep their wine and beer in their cellars for daily use as a beverage, and if time continue long, and there is no change from the present course, they will soon be called to lay some of their members in a drunkard's grave.—Perhaps they would consider that as a providential visitation, to which they must bow in submissive "silence," so that the subject would not even then be discussed.

I cannot say that selfish considerations induced the rejection of the subject of Temperance from their pulpits, but the facts authorize at least, the query. But this is not an isolated case. It is difficult to decide, if at all possible, which, of all the popular sects and churches at the present day, are most continuous and persevering in their efforts to build up themselves, their own sect or church. As to the purity of all this, I can see no difference between it and the spirit that governs the party politician.

If any further proof or illustration is needed of the selfishness of the church at the present time, we have only to look at her position with regard to the questions of reform. The work of the gospel is to oppose sin and save men. But the church as a body, have uniformly opposed every branch of the great cause of reform, which is truly the cause of Christ, and a few have had to carry them forward until the question of their popularity among the multitude was decided, then she was ready to embrace those branches that became popular. Just like the selfish politician, will do any thing that promises success to the party.

The world hated Christ because he testified of it, "That the works thereof, were evil." This same principle holds true—the world will hate those movements in the cause of reform, which oppose sin—which testify against evil. Here is a reason why such movements will seldom if ever be popular among men. But those branches which do not propose to rebuke sin—or barely to speak of it as at a distance, so that no conscience shall be particularly disturbed, will be most certain to meet with general favor. A selfish church would have but one reason for rejecting the one and entertaining the other, viz: popularity.

Look at facts as they exist. The church has opposed every cause, or looked on with cold indifference, while a few have fought the battles.—The cause of Foreign Missions came up. So far as it proposed to speak of sins only at a distance, it was received; but that part of the operations which contemplated opposing sin in our own country, and in our midst, was rejected. The cause of education—of Sabbath schools—of the distribution of Bibles and tracts—of home missions, and other similar causes, were entertained, so far as it could be done without troubling any specific sins. But when the proposition was made to carry Bibles, Tracts, and the gospel to a class in our land that are in such a condition that popular sins must be opposed before they could be reached it was at once rejected. A movement to assail directly the institution of slavery—of intemperance—of licentiousness and the like sins, met the same fate. The advent cause was not fully rejected, until the brethren began to cry against the sins of "Babylon." Now, why this rejection of those causes which oppose sin, and the acceptance of others? Are not men "lovers of their own selves?" I know that many, very many, profess to be in favor of these causes, but they do nothing to advance them. They maintain a "mighty inactivity," except when they oppose those trying to do something to forward them. This opposition is usually manifested in finding fault with measures, &c. O that they understood that inactivity in the cause of reform, was treason against Jesus Christ!

The "peril," or danger in this case, will consist in this, I suppose. The sin of self-love, or selfishness, will be tolerated, and be a prominent sin in the church. Selfish individuals will therefore suppose that they can join the church, retain their selfishness, and finally, enter the kingdom of heaven. Fatal mistake! Benevolence is indispensable to true religion.

But another characteristic of the last days is, men are to be "covetous." Inspiration has defined this sin to be idolatry, and declared that no idolator shall enter the kingdom. It therefore becomes a matter of grave importance to every one, what the sin of covetousness is, and whether he is covetous.

I believe it has generally been defined to be, "desiring to possess wrongfully, that which belongs to another,"—or "to possess what belongs to another, without rendering an equivalent." It would seem that the splendid schemes of speculation in which the church, hand in hand with the world, have engaged for the last ten or fifteen years, would be sufficient evidence on this point, that the end is nigh. But there is too much other evidence. Look at the manner of doing business in commercial transactions. Is a professor's word worth more than that of any other man's? Do they not lie, cheat, deceive, with the same adroitness and avidity of other men? Do they care more about their neighbor's interests when dealing with him, than others do? So far as my information extends, I am compelled to bear testimony against them. I mean the great majority. The exceptions are not much, if any more numerous, than they are among those "out of the church." Go into any town or city in the land, and trade at one hundred shops, the amount of ten dollars in each, and then select the church members by their deal. It cannot be done. Let them have the advantage in any way, and will they not take it? How are all the laws of God trampled under foot by them in their eagerness for wealth! Christ said, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures in the earth," but the great mass plunge into schemes of wealth, and drive after the world as if no such command existed. Yea, doubtless many do not as much as think there is such a command. They will run steam boats, canal boats, cars, and stages, on the Sabbath—take usury at the rate of from thirty to one hundred per cent for money—obtain mortgages and securities, and foreclose and seize possessions;—in short, will do any thing and every thing the civil law will allow, and many things it will not, to obtain money;—accumulate wealth. Contemplate the extensive and powerful effort made to obtain money from these same professors, for what they call evangelizing the world. How ded by the same members for tobacco and rum.—The ministry are so far under the influence of this sin, that but few will preach unless they can they do not all obtain the high salaries, but in most cases, it is not because they do not desire and strive to obtain them. Any church that wants a minister, and will offer a fine salary, can have

one. But this sin need only be mentioned, and facts will crowd upon the mind of the most casual observer, sufficient to enforce the conviction that the evidence from its existence, is not wanting.

The "peril" here must consist in persons supposing they can indulge in this sin because it is tolerated in the church, and yet entertain a good hope of heaven. The standard of piety in the church is not the condition of entering heaven. By the word of God, every one must stand or fall. O that I had a voice to make the world hear, I would say, beware of the sins tolerated by the church! If practiced, they will ruin the soul forever. (Concluded next week.)

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JULY 29, 1846.

Bro. Barry and Child Sleep in Jesus.

The following letter from Bro. E. R. Pinney, gives the painful intelligence, that our beloved brother T. F. Barry, and his sweet babe, are no more in this world of sorrow and death: they sleep in Jesus.—But, thank the Lord, they will soon awake to life and endless joy, in the resurrection morn.

With the history of Bro. Barry, we have been imperfectly acquainted, until within a few years past, since he became identified with the advent cause. Previous to this he was a worthy minister in the Christian connection. He embraced the doctrine of the second advent of Christ among the first who espoused that cause in the New England States, where his first incessant and efficient labors were bestowed for its promotion.

He came to Rochester early in the summer of 1843, with the large tent, and took an active part with Brn. Himes, Fitch, and others, in establishing the cause in this city, where he has made it his home, and been the stated preacher to the church, until a few months past. During this time he baptized in this city not less than six hundred believers in Christ. In the mean time he visited Canada, Ohio, and nearly, if not every congregation of our brethren in Western New York, preaching the words of life to the listening multitudes who came out to hear. In short though his was a feeble and delicate constitution, his labors were abundant. No man of his strength and health, has or could have done more. His works will follow him; and doubtless very many who have been blessed under his ministry, will be as stars in the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus.

A few months since he again visited the scattered and tried flocks, generally, in Western New York, confirming the souls of them who were looking for immediate redemption in Israel. Sister Barry accompanied him. They finally thought it duty to locate at Oswego, where we have a precious company of tried and faithful brethren. Soon after coming to this conclusion they visited their brethren in this city. Br. Barry preached and broke bread to the saints; and though we were not present we have heard many speak of the joys of that day; they never heard Br. Barry preach better, or see him more engaged and devoted to the cause.

He thought his health was much improved by his late visits among the churches, and returned to Oswego with the flattering prospect of enjoying, to a certain degree, the sweets of domestic life, in the bosom of kind friends and brethren. But these hopes were soon blasted. Our brother is torn by the relentless hand of death, from the fond embraces of his dear companion, and little one, which soon follows him to the grave, leaving the bereaved and heart-broken wife and mother to mourn her irreparable loss.

The case of sister Barry is afflictive in the extreme. Her cup is truly a bitter one. None can realize her loss, or feel her deep sorrow, but those who have been called to experience like afflictions.

Her husband leaves her, in usual health, to attend the meeting at Manlius. The next she hears of him, he is bleeding, and strangling in his own blood.—She leaves her sickly babe in the hands of the kind friends, and hastens to the place where her husband had fallen among strangers. She follows him in his enfeebled state to Seneca Falls, where she sees him sink in death: and, in the short space of three hours, with his lifeless remains, in company with his brother, takes the cars for Boston. All this time of toil and deep anxiety, she has been separated from her babe: the only surviving object on earth, on which her affections are now placed, to which her blasted hopes now cling. But, alas, her cup of sorrow is not yet full; the last tie, that binds her to earth, is sundered. The tidings follow her to Boston, or meet her on her return, that her sweet babe is no more.

It would be mockery to attempt to describe the lacerated feelings of our sister under these circumstances. God, however, knows the deep sorrow of her afflicted soul, and has a balm for all her wounds. May He be her trust, and the widow's God in this hour of her bereavement.

Sister Barry's numerous brethren, sisters, and friends, not only drop the tear of sympathy with her, but will be mindful of all her wants. Put your trust in God, dear sister, and all will work for your good. Look beyond this vale of wo for undisturbed happiness. Soon you will meet your departed husband, and your sweet babes, [one sleeps in this city] in the kingdom of God. And, thanks be to our kind Father, there will be no death there, no crying, no tears, no sorrow, nor pain, but life, and health, and eternal joy. The separation from your dear friends will be short—soon you will meet again, never more to part; wherefore be comforted with these words.

Those who wish to aid Sister Barry, can hand their free-will offerings to her, or send them by letter, directed to E. R. Pinney, Seneca Falls, N. Y., or to J. Marsh, Rochester, N. Y.

The following is Bro. Pinney's letter:—

SENECA FALLS N. Y., July 22d, '46.

Bro. Marsh:—Our much loved brother and faithful laborer in the gospel, Thomas F. Barry, is no more. He fell asleep in Jesus July 17th, 1846, at 4 o'clock P. M., after an illness of twenty-two days. He was taken with a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, on his way to attend the Manlius grove-meeting, when within about half a mile of the place.

He bled in three days about four quarts. At his second attack of bleeding, it was not supposed by himself or friends, that he could survive but a very few minutes, yet he seemed very composed, and observed that he did not expect to survive but a short time, and wished to say a few words, and proceeded to give directions respecting his funeral, his family, &c., with all that calm composure, that unwavering faith in God gives the Christian, even in the moments of death. On being asked if he felt at peace in his soul, he answered, O yes! all is bright and glorious in the prospect, and with a smile of joyous triumph, beaming forth from his inmost soul, exclaimed, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." He however so far recovered as to be removed to this place after an illness of 14 days, and arrived here at the house of Bro. Jennings, Thursday, July 9th, where he remained until his death, on Friday last.

Every thing that could be done was done for our dear brother, but all proved vain. It pleased our Father to remove him, and although we have sustained a great loss in the death of our dear brother, and one that will be severely felt by all who knew his virtues, yet as the pleasure of our Father is manifested, we feel to bow submissively to the stroke of Divine Providence, and say, "Even so Father, for it seemeth good in thy sight." As to his character, all acquainted with him will testify that he was a just man, and one that feared God. A bright light has been extinguished in the church of God, for he was mighty in the Scriptures, and his walk was such as became the gospel he preached. As a preacher, his talents were less splendid than useful. He had not much brilliancy of imagination, but considerable strength of mind, with a judgment greatly improved by application, for he was a close and critical student of the Bible, as well as a clear and faithful expositor of the Word, for he had obeyed the injunction of Paul to Timothy, "Study to shew thyself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." By reading and thinking, he had accumulated a stock of mental riches and facts connected with our glorious hope, with which he enriched his sermons, that but few of us possess. And although his light did not possess so much of that meteoric brilliancy of many, yet it was a clear and steady light that shone by night and by day, at home and abroad, that cheered the lonely pilgrim on his way through this dark and dreary world, to that bright haven of eternal rest, in the world of glory to come. He remarked to his companion during his illness, "that he had endeavored faithfully to preach the gospel as he understood it, without reference to pleasing his brethren or the world, but with a desire to please and glorify his God." In fine, he was one that lived as well as preached the gospel, and upon whom shall his mantle fall. I feel as though I could adopt with sincerity of heart, the prayer of the Psalmist—"Help Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men," and also that the Lord would raise up and send forth more laborers, for truly the harvest is great and the laborers few. Sister Barry endured her affliction and bereavement with fortitude becoming the Christian, and manifested that resignation to the Divine will, that magnified the sustaining power of God's grace, under affliction. May the Lord God still bless and sustain her under all her afflictions and trials yet to come, for I greatly fear her cup of sorrow is not yet drunk to the dregs. Her child is now with us, having been brought to this place last Saturday from Oswego, and afflicted by a complication of diseases, from which, there is no hope of recovery. Cutting 3 or 4 teeth, just recovering from the whooping cough, and a very malignant chicken pox, and most malignant case of diarrhoea. I am this moment interrupted, and called to go over to Bro. Jennings's for they think the child is dying. Oh my God, if possible, let this cup pass.

3 o'clock P. M. I have just returned—the child is dead. The little sufferer expired at 1-4 past two o'clock. May the Lord prepare and sustain this much afflicted sister under her severe trials. Sister Barry was expected in the train of cars this morning at 1-2 past 10, but we fear her health may have failed her, and she is detained at Boston. The child will be kept until Friday, if possible. After Bro. Barry's decease, preparations were made to convey his remains to Boston, to be deposited in the family vault, in accordance with the request of his brother Joseph, who has been with him during his illness, and they were placed on board of the train of cars going east, at 1-2 past seven o'clock, accompanied by the companion and brother; and ere this, his remains are probably deposited in the sepulchre, of his fathers', where, may they rest until the great trumpet of God shall awake him to immortality and glory. And, my dear brethren, we mourn not without hope. No, praise the Lord—our dear brother will rise, and that quickly, and we shall soon meet him with all the dear saints in the New Jerusalem, where sickness and sorrow will be no more.

"O! glorious hope—O! blest abode,
I shall be there, and like my Lord,
When we all rise together in the morning."

O Lord Jesus come, and come quickly, and awake our brother and all the saints, and give us a part in the first resurrection, that with him we may enter into rest, for his rest will be glorious. Amen!
E. R. PINNEY

Ready to Meet the Lord.

At this important crisis, this time when we have good reason to look for the coming of the Lord every moment, his often repeated admonitions, warning his children to be ready for that solemn hour, cannot be too often repeated, nor too indelibly impressed upon our minds. After giving the evidences of his coming, the Savior says, "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." "Therefore, be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Matt. 24. "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." Matt. 25. "Take heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is." "Watch ye, therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto ALL, WATCH. Mark. 13.—"And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your heart be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For AS A SNARE SHALL IT COME ON ALL them that dwell on the face of the WHOLE earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21.

Too high importance cannot be attached to these admonitions, warnings and commands. Heaven and earth will pass away, but the words of Christ will not fail. He will come again at the time appointed, and in the precise manner he has said, sudden as the lightning's flash, as a snare on all living. And none will escape the snare, or the destroying fire of that dread day, but those who heed the words of Christ. All who are not ready then must forever perish.

The most weighty considerations may be urged now, why we should be constantly ready to meet the Lord. One is, the nearness of the time of his coming. The next moment, the Son of man may be revealed from heaven, to forever seal the eternal destinies of the human family. The signs, sure precursors of the near approach of the Lord, all, all have been seen by this generation. They have done their work, have uttered in trumpet tones their united voice, that the coming of the Son of man is nigh, even at the door. The church and the world have seen, heard, and trembled under this divine testimony, this dread message. But now they have closed their eyes and ears against these solemn facts and truths; have hurried from their recollection the fears once produced in their disordered breasts by these tokens of the near approach of that day, and have fallen asleep, we fear, never more to be aroused to a sense of their condition, until the tribes of the earth shall wait at the appearing of the Lord of glory.— Shall we follow their sad example? Shall we become unbelieving, harden our hearts, and turn away from our precious faith and hope, and neglect to make the preparation necessary to meet our coming Lord in peace? God forbid, and enable us to hold fast the profession of our faith, remembering that the signs of the Lord's coming have not been seen, neither have they spoken, in vain. No, no, the immutable Jehovah has given them a voice, and plainly told us what we might know when they were seen; and he will not disappoint the blessed hope these evidences have inspired in our anxious hearts.

The prophecies, historical and chronological, most clearly point with divine exactness to this auspicious hour, for the long predicted day of the Lord, of redemption, to dawn upon this dark and sinful world. It appears nearly absolutely certain that there can be no mistake in this matter. We should feel unwaveringly certain of possessing an earthly inheritance, if we had half the amount of testimony to prove our right to it, that we certainly have to prove that the coming of the Lord will soon be witnessed. We say evidence, because it is infallible testimony, drawn from stubborn facts, immutable as the throne of the Highest. Our opponents have not been able, with all their experience, skill and erudition, to invalidate, in the least, the evidence on which our hopes rest. Neither have we, after all our disappointments, first, second, third and fourth sober thoughts, or impartial and repeated reviews of the subject, been able to detect any fundamental error, or mistake, in our general calculations on the time of the Lord's coming. Instead of finding ourselves mistaken in the main question at issue, we have, by every investigation, been greatly confirmed that we have not followed cunningly devised fables, but the truth, in this important matter.

A few days, or weeks, or months at most, will bring us to the extreme point of time, according to our present light, for the termination of the prophetic numbers. We all acknowledge that we can see no defect in the computation which brings us to this conclusion. This being the case, we seriously ask, should not these considerations engage all of our ransomed powers, in making the necessary preparation to meet the grand and solemn event, which is evidently but just before us? Reason, prudence, and the word of wisdom, unitedly say they should. The wise man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; while the fool passeth on, and is punished. With our present light, foolish, indeed, shall we be, if found unbelieving, slumbering, our lamps gone out, and we without the wedding garment, at the coming of the Son of man. If not ready now, we have not a moment to lose in halting, doubting, fearing, or indulging in the pleasures, gratifications and sins of the flesh. What we do, must be done quickly and effectually, or all will be lost, forever lost.

Another important consideration why we should be constantly ready to meet the Lord, is, his coming will be 'sudden,' as the lightning; as a 'snare'; in an unexpected moment, or when we think not.—The shaking of the heavens and earth, and the sign of the Son of man, are all the events, of importance, we expect will be witnessed before the actual appearing of the Son of man; and these, we think, will be intimately connected with his appearing, so that all will take place nearly simultaneously: the beginning of which will be sudden, unexpected, and all will be grand and terrific. No further token, sign or warning, will be given to apprise saint or sinner of the coming of that great and terrible day. God has already been lavish in giving evidences of its sure and near approach. More evidence, or a reputation of that already given, would be superfluous. If we will not believe now, our hearts are hardened in unbelief, our case is desperately hopeless; and the greatest amount of evidence, which the Infinite God could reasonably give, would not produce in us justifying and saving faith. Beware, therefore, lest we, like the incorrigible Jews, despise, wonder, fall and perish, through unbelief. Let us also be careful how we incur the displeasure of the Highest, by asking for more or greater signs than he has already given.

We say the coming of the Lord will be as a snare on saint and sinner. This is true in one sense of the saint, and in every sense of the sinner. The snare is sprung suddenly. So the coming of the Lord will be sudden as the snare, or lightning, to all. Ag in, the snare is sprung unexpectedly, and to the destruction of its prey. So will be the coming of the Lord to the wicked, unexpected, and to their destruction: while the saint will be watching and ready, and instead of being destroyed, will be saved in that dread hour. But the saint will not know the precise moment, day nor hour, when the grand scenes of that day will commence: they will be opened to his enraptured vision suddenly, as quick as the lightning's flash. But he will not be taken on surprise, 'as a thief,' because he will be found watching, waiting, fully ready, and confidently expecting his Lord's return every moment. In this state of preparation, though in the field, the mill, or bed, or wherever duty may demand, all will be well: the ready will be changed in a moment, from mortal to immortal beings, be suddenly caught away from this perishing world, conveyed by angels, to meet their descending glorious Lord and King.

Hence, from the very important consideration that the great and terrible day of the Lord will come as a snare, suddenly, we do most urgently entreat all to be ready, every moment, lest that day come upon you as a thief, and lamentation, wailing, and everlasting destruction be the bitter portion of your cup.

How to be ready, is, or should be, well understood by all in this land of Bibles, especially those who have had their pathway but recently most brilliantly illuminated by that precious book, relative to the soon coming of Christ and his glorious kingdom.—Something more than a nominal faith in the most precious truths of God's word, is necessary in a work of this character: for 'faith without works is dead.' Your works, conversation and spirit, must correspond with your holy and high profession, or it is vain.—You must do the commandments, have your conversation that which becometh godliness, and possess the spirit of Christ, in order to be ready to meet him with joy and not with grief.

How many, we fear, will be weighed in the balance, and found wanting in the every day practice and spirit of godliness. They profess godliness, and this is about all the characteristic they have of a child of God. Their tempers are unsubdued by grace; their words are light and trifling, vain, and not unfrequently irritable and angry. They love to follow the vain and sinful fashions of the world, to conform to it in all things, or as far as they can. They do but little for the cause of God. Are eager for worldly wealth, and labor hard to lay up treasures on earth; yet they talk of their faith and hope in the coming of Him who plainly teaches us that such persons shall not enter his kingdom. Oh, deceived mortals! lay the axe at once at the very root of your carnal lusts and unlawful desires, and let them be slain. Crucify the whole, while the cross is accessible. Bring all you have and are into full submission, and joyful obedience to the will of Christ. Love him with all your heart, and obey him with all your ransomed powers; and your peace here will be as a river, and your reward in the day of the Lord Jesus, a crown of unfading glory, and an incorruptible inheritance in the everlasting kingdom of God. BE READY to receive the priceless treasure; for soon it will be given to all the pure in heart.

Bro. B. Morley preached to the brethren in this city, a few evenings since. His discourse was food to the soul.

The Two-Horned Beast.

If the two horned beast, in Rev. 13th, is symbolical of the Mohammedan power, and is yet to come up, by the workings of the Jesuits, as a late writer supposes, then the Mohammedan power has not yet come into being. Stubborn and acknowledged facts say that the Mohammedan power has fallen, only continues by mere sufferance. Hence, if the two horned beast is in the future, it can have nothing to do with a power that is in the past. Again, to suppose, as the writer intimates, that the Jesuits are to gain sufficient power in the Ottoman empire, to cause all the world to be put to death who will not worship the beast, is not even probable. The very nature of the case forbids it, and the word of prophecy renders it impossible. Such a work cannot be done, in a short time, or 'quickly.' The Ottoman supremacy fell under the second woe. Under the third woe, the Lord will come. All the time we can have between the second and third woes, is a short space called 'quickly.' Can the world be brought under the power of Mohammedan Jesuitism in this mere fraction of time; and when six years of it are already past? It is very unnatural, and to us unreasonable and unscriptural to suppose any such thing.

Perils of the Last Days.

The article on this subject, which we commence publishing in this number, points to existing facts in the churches, which we all know to be there. While we deeply deplore their existence, we nevertheless are strengthened in our faith in beholding them; for they assure us that the last days of apostasy and sin have come, and are nearly closed; and that the day for the purification of the sanctuary will soon dawn, when perils will no longer endanger the salvation of God's people. Now is the time, however, when we should 'beware of the perils of the last days.'

Safe Position.

Never receive as a part of your religious faith, any doctrine, however plausible in its appearance, which has not some plain scripture testimony to sustain it. God does not require us to believe without evidence of the most simple and intelligible character. He has not left us to form our faith on plausible, or doubtful inferences, but on his plain and positive word. It will be well for all to remember this, in this time of trial, when new tests, and new doctrines are being urged upon us. It is the only safe position we can occupy.

Grateful.

A return of gratitude is due to our kind friends, who have sympathized with us in the hour of sickness, and aided in our work by their communications. The Lord reward them.

We are happy to say to our kind patrons, that our health is slowly improving, though we are yet far from being well. We still solicit a continuation of your favors, not only for our individual benefit, but for the good of the cause in which we are unitedly engaged. Soon our sufferings and labors will end. Then every one will be rewarded according to his doings.

Arrival in England.

The Herald for July 22, contains an account of the safe arrival of Br'n. Hines, Brown and Hutchinson, in Liverpool, England. In a letter dated Liverpool, Eng., June 16, they say:—

"We came to anchor, quarter of a mile from the dock, about midnight, and remained on board until the next morning; making the voyage from Boston to Liverpool in a little more than twelve days. To show the speed of this mode of conveyance, we will state a fact. A merchant sent letters to his correspondent in Boston by the Hibernia, and received returns by the Britannia in the space of only 25 days.

Thus we have graciously been wafted over the sea, with little or no inconvenience; we have had a delightful passage, for which we bless Almighty God. Our health and spirits have been excellent; and never did we feel more peaceful and happy in yielding ourselves up to the disposal and guidance of God. We were glad in being able to have, in some respects, the scenes of the past few days changed. The influence of Father Matthew has never been felt over the company, of which, happily, or unhappily, we were a part on ship-board. The bills of many for wine, and other spirits, must have been enormous; a settlement of which was required on the day before our arrival.

On Lord's day morning, after putting a handful of necessary articles into our valises, which had to pass under the review of a Custom-house officer, we stepped into the ferry-boat belonging to the Packet Company, and in a few minutes were landed at the Dock, where we were met by two of the Brethren here in waiting for us; you may well suppose that they gave us what many others have done since, a hearty "Welcome to England!"

Bro. Hutchinson preached in Toxteth Hall on Tuesday evening, and started for the residence of his parents the next morning, to join us again in a few days. Bro. Himes preaches this evening at the same place; we hold another meeting to-morrow evening. On Tuesday we intend going to Exeter, Plymouth, and elsewhere, the brethren having made arrangements to commence work in that section forthwith, so, having cheered the hearts of our brethren here by our presence and our words, we must leave them and this important field for future attention. At another time we will write something respecting the cause &c., in Liverpool.

Letter from Bro. J. D. Johnson.

Bro. Marsh:—Permit me to say a few words more for the encouragement of your readers.—The last communication was from Manlius village. After the grove-meeting, we found it necessary to tarry longer in that place, to administer the word of life; and accordingly we continued the meetings until the next Sabbath evening, (July 5th.) We addressed the people each afternoon at 6 o'clock, from the steps of the meeting-house, Sunday in the grove again; at 5 o'clock in the main street, from the steps of a store, and a more attentive, interested, and solemn congregation, is seldom seen. We visited some from house to house, and found that a good work had commenced not only among professors, who praised God for the light and truth they had received, for the spiritual meetings they had enjoyed, but also among the prayerless. Some inquiring souls have found peace in believing. We had many calls from other places, and "a door of utterance" is open in this region, for the proclamation of "the glad tidings of the kingdom" at hand.

Bro. Bywater spent the Sabbath at Seneca Falls; I went to Lansingville. At the latter place I spoke Saturday evening, and three times on the Sabbath, and the word had its designed effect on the hearts of two, a young man and woman. We enjoyed a season of prayer with them in the evening, the young man felt that God had pardoned his sins, and the young woman thought she could choose the service of God, with all its trials, crosses, and duties, as well as its joys and everlasting glories. Brethren and sisters seemed to be strengthened. Praise God, salvation is free to all who will comply with its requirements. "His yoke is easy, and his burden is light." Next morning a ferryman was also induced to set out in this blessed cause of the Redeemer. I have mentioned these cases for the encouragement of the brethren, and if possible, to stimulate them to seek every opportunity to do good. There are many inquiring after truth in that region of country. Are there not more who are willing to go into the highways, hedges, school houses; some meeting houses are open for this doctrine. Wake up brethren! O, how can you slumber? Let us be active!

Seize your armor, gird it on!
Now the battle will be won!
See! the strife will soon be done;
Then struggle manfully.

J. D. JOHNSON.

Rochester N. Y., July 16, 1846.

Letter from Sister I. Perkins.

Bro. Marsh:—I consider it not the least among the countless favors of God, that I am permitted to read the "Voice of Truth." In it I find much to refresh my spirit, cheer, and yet solemnize the heart, much that is meat in due season: and I fervently pray it may afford us much more of the same kind of food that some of the late Nos. contain. And may the momentous truths it presents, being mixed with faith in those who read them, be instrumental of much good. O that all may obey the injunction, "humble yourself," give heed to the "solemn appeal," "acting out the precepts of the gospel," then, I believe, we can enjoy "inward quietude," having our hearts filled with "holy love," and cheered by "joyful hope." It is exceeding heart cheering to me to hear from the dear saints scattered abroad, to learn that they abound in the work of the Lord, that there are some (though but a remnant,) who love holiness, and "walk in truth." And every additional evidence that the Lord will soon come, is to me as cold water to a thirsty soul. "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning;" for my heart yearns to see him whom my soul loveth, who is chiefest among ten thousand, and to behold Him who is "clothed with honor and majesty, and covereth himself with light as a garment." O how boundless the goodness of God! how manifold his mercies to unworthy dust! My eyes overflow with tears of gratitude while I review the past blessings of God, or look forward with joyful hope, to that eternal weight of glory which awaits the faithful.

O that we may all understand what it is to live to the Lord, and to wait for his Son from heaven. May God grant, that according to the riches of his glory, we may be strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith; that we, rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth the knowledge of the unsanctified, that we may be filled with all the fullness of God. Then shall we be cheerfully submissive to the duty of "bearing the cross," even though it lead to prison or to death; and willing to suffer a little while longer here below, if then to glory we may go, and reign with Christ in love." I. PERKINS.

P. S. Bro. M., I suffered reproach on account of a slight typographical error in a former communication—but I consider it of minor importance, if the cause of my Muster is not reproached through my means. In my last "Word of Exhortation," instead of sufferer, it should read scuffer. I. P.

Bro. P. Bean, Bethel Vt., June 23, writes:—We endeavor to meet, comfort, and exhort one another; for we think we know our position.—We are nearing the port—soon all the ship's company will meet. Every day confirms me that the Lord is right at the door, and my only aim is, to gain the New Jerusalem. My whole soul is aspiring to be pure in heart, to gain that holiness, without which, none can see the Lord. It is a momentary work to keep the heart with all diligence, and I feel there is no other way to gain and retain that holiness which will enable us to live so as to be prepared to stand before the Son of Man and not be ashamed before him at his coming: it is to watch! watch! pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks. May the Lord enable me and all my brethren and sisters to do this, who profess to be looking for the coming of the Just One. We see some omens of good in this place. If we can have proper means used, the word preached, good may be done.—Bro. Marsh from West Randolph, recently preached to us. God blessed the word to those who heard.

Bro. A. Carpenter, Sutton Vt. June 6, writes:—It is high time for us who profess to be looking for the blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, to see that our work is done, for the Lord is coming. I fear some are drawing back. Where are some of those servants, who, in '43 were crying, behold the Bridegroom cometh? A sacrifice made in '43 will do us no good, unless it is kept on the altar. We must hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, to the end. O how it makes my heart ache when I see brethren who have faithfully and fearlessly stood in defence of the truth, fearless of censure and regardless of applause, begin to show signs of wavering in their faith on the time of the coming of the Lord, with all the additional light the Lord has favored us with. It has long been settled in my mind, that the time is revealed in God's word. God gave the prophet Daniel the length of time from a given period to the resurrection, when he should stand in his lot, which I believe will be this year. Do we, in reality, expect the King of glory to come this year? Yes, to me it looks plain.

There is a little band of brethren here, who are, most of them, strong in the faith, looking for Jesus. We love to see the evidence on time presented. We think it is, in reality, meat in due season.

Letter from Bro. M. Tewksbury.

Bro. Marsh:—The Voice of Truth is to me, truly, glad tidings of the kingdom at hand; for it feeds, enlightens, warns, admonishes, and comforts my heart; and I view it, as it truly is, a faithful corrector of mistakes and errors that we all more or less have committed. Although I have been a constant reader of the paper, I have not been known to you as a subscriber; the cause of this has been, I have always taken the Advent Herald, and many of my brethren took the Voice of Truth, by which means I have been privileged with the reading of your paper. Be assured, I felt much interested in your welfare; for I had formerly been a fellow laborer in the vineyard with you, Elders Hasen, Badger, Shaw and others, and was a subscriber to the Palladium, until I thought the paper and its board of directors had become corrupt by departing from the simplicity of the gospel, and were building the things they once destroyed, thereby becoming transgressors, and making void the law of God through their traditions and sectarianism. I stopped taking their paper; they voted me out of their conference, and when I heard you had embraced the advent doctrine, for which the board dismissed you from being their Editor, (but they flatly denied that your faith in that doctrine was the cause, and in attempting to prove that it was not the cause of your removal, their deception, fraud, and falsehood, was made manifest to every inquiring mind.) When I knew all this, my heart rejoiced, not at the downfall of that once devoted and happy people, but that you had escaped the snare, and was no longer in bondage. O, brother Marsh, when we look back upon our former associates and brethren, may we not exclaim with the Prophet, "how are the mighty fallen!" O, who would have thought twenty years ago, that that then loving people would now close their meeting houses against their former brethren, because they believe in the speedy coming of our blessed Savior, and be found with mockers and scoffers! Alas! Alas! but so it is. May your prayer and mine ever be, that God may have mercy on them.

I bless God, brother, that Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, his gospel is the same, and that the love and fellowship of the saints of the Most High is, ever was, and ever will be the same; praise God for the union of the saints.—I bless God that I still enjoy their company, although the passing by of '43 and the 7th month, disappointed us all, and caused some to give up their faith, yet, there are, in this place between sixty and seventy brothers and sisters strong in the faith, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ, who have breasted the storm of persecution, and withstood the closed door, spiritual wives, and many other foolish and false notions that some of our brethren have preached, and ran into, and by reading Br'n. Hale, Pinney, yours, and many others writings, showing how the mistake was made, and pointing out, (as they and I think,) the true time when we may look for the coming of our blessed Savior, and that we may all look, and pray, for, and expect his appearing in 1847, true era, with the same strong faith and assurance that we did in 1843. The brethren here are beginning to get rid of their fears, to talk about time, and there is, I think, evidently an increase of faith and a quickening of the spirit now, in our little down trodden company. May God carry on in us his good begun work, until we are all purified, sanctified, and prepared to meet the Lord at his coming, and with all the redeemed, to enter that glorious rest that remains to the people of God.

We have meetings every Sabbath, prayer meetings several days in the week: we have blessed times. We show forth the death of the Savior, the first Sabbath in every month. Brother W. H. Dow is with us, giving the children meat in due season. He is a beloved brother, faithful, and well engaged. The Lord is calling some more laborers from among us into the vineyard. By the labors of these brethren, together with what little I can do, we have blessed meetings—bless the Lord O my soul, and all that is within me praise his precious name.

Yours, in hope of eternal life soon, through Jesus Christ our glorious Redeemer,

MOSES TEWKSBURY.

Hartland Vt., July 13, 1846.

Letter from Bro. J. Weston.

Bro. Marsh:—I have spent three weeks in Maine, and attended three conferences, at which, the special influences of the Holy Ghost were sensibly felt and seen. Quite a number of the brethren who had formerly believed in the "shut door" views, came forward and confessed their errors, and so there was a mutual forgiving. The brethren and sisters are again gathering, after the tremendous storm of wild fanaticism which has swept over the State of Maine. They are getting more strong on time, and feel satisfied that the spring of '47 is the latest point to which we can extend the 2300 or the 1385 days to terminate.

Our dearly beloved and much esteemed brother M. Welcome of Maine, is about to go to Sheboygan, Wisconsin Territory—and we hope that the brethren will help him on, after a godly sort; and wherever his lot may be cast to labor in preaching this gospel of the kingdom, we hope he will be received as a faithful minister of Jesus Christ. He was once an esteemed Methodist minister, but he has seen and exposed the awful abominations of the existing sects, and left Babylon.

God grant him many souls as seals of his ministry in Wisconsin. Yours &c.,

J. WESTON.

New Ipswich N. H., July 8, '46.

Bro. E. R. Miller, Jackson Ia., June 24th, writes:—I had the privilege of attending the Conference at Jackson, Mich., and can say that it was one of interest and profit. We parted on Monday morning, after an hour or two sweetly spent in an interchange of feeling and prayer, with our faith confirmed, our zeal for the cause of God much increased, and with our hopes of speedy redemption much enlivened by our intercourse during the meeting. Yes, we parted with the cheering hope of meeting within a few months beyond where sorrows come. Praise the Lord for the prospect.

Bro. A. W. Griggs, Brimfield Mass., July 6th writes:—I love the truth: God's Word is truth. I love Jesus, I love his appearing, I love to feel the coming of that day will no longer be deferred, that the vision will soon speak and not lie.—I believe the few brethren and sisters in this place are loving one another with pure hearts fervently, looking anxiously for the consummation of the blessed hope.

IDLE WORDS.—Bishop Burgess, in speaking of his intimate friendship with Archbishop Leighton—an intimacy that had existed unbroken for more than twenty-two years—says, "I never, during that period, heard him utter an idle word, nor one that did not tend directly to edification, nor did I ever see him in any other temper of mind than such as I should desire to be found in when I come to die."

TRUTH.—The eye, by long use, comes to see, even in the darkest cavern; and there is no subject so obscure, but we may discern some glimpse of truth by long poring on it. Truth is the cry of all, but the game of a few. Certainly where it is the chief passion, it doth not give way to vulgar cares and views; nor is it contented with a little ardor in the early time of life; active, perhaps, to pursue, but not so fit to weigh and refuse. He that would make a real progress in knowledge, must dedicate his age as well as youth, the latter growth as well as the first fruits, at the altar of truth.—Bishop Berkeley.

Fear not, Christian.

Fear not, Christian, tho' your pathway
Lies thro' disappointment's vale;
Lo, the promise,—'I am with you
'To the end,'—can never fail.

Fear not, Christian, tho' oppression
Mark your way to Canaan's land;
Soon you'll reach the promised haven,
Soon on Canaan's banks shall stand.

Fear not, Christian, banish trouble,
Let your heart on God be stayed;
He will render more than double,
All thy toils shall be repaid.

Fear not, Christian, hear the promise—
'If I go, I'll come again;
'I'll prepare for you a mansion,
'Where the just shall ever reign.'

Fear not, Christian, soon the kingdom
Will the little flock receive,
On the plains of blest Canaan
Crowns of glory he will give.

Soon with beauteous robes he'll deck you,
Robes of perfect righteousness;
Smiling Angels soon will hail you 'To the pilgrim's glorious rest.'

ANN ELIZA.

Election of a New Pope.

Speaking of the election of a new Pope, the True Sun says:

"The election of a new Pope was achieved without much difficulty or delay, the conclave being in session only forty-eight hours. Its choice fell upon Cardinal Mastai-Ferrotti, who has taken the name of Pius IX. He is only fifty-four years of age, and is one of the youngest Cardinals chosen to the Papacy. He is said to be eminently virtuous, able, enlightened, and liberal;—consequently it is firmly hoped that he will do much to meliorate the condition of the Roman states and people. He is a native of the Papal States."

A TRUE REMARK.—While Dr. Franklin was in London, in 1776, he spoke, in some of his letters to a friend in this country, of reports which were spread by his enemies to his disadvantage. His language is that of a Christian philosopher—yet how few emulate his example in these things.

"I give myself," he says, "as little concern about them as possible. I have often met with such treatment from people that I was all the while endeavoring to serve. At other times I have been extolled where I had little or no merit. One's true happiness depends more upon one's own judgment of one's self, or a consciousness of rectitude in action and intention, and the approbation of those few who judge impartially, than upon the applause of the unthinking and scorning multitude, who are apt to cry 'Hosanna' to-day, and to-morrow 'Crucify him.'"

Bro. Marsh:—In my letter giving account of the Michigan meetings, the following typographical errors occurred, which you will allow this to correct. For "Bro. Catlin resides in Laporte," you have "Bro. Carter," and for "Bro. Hoyt," you have "Bro. Hays;"—which mistakes impair the sense of the letter materially. Milwaukee should not be terminated with a cc, as in my letter by mistake.*

Your affectionate brother,

L. D. MANSFIELD.

*We are correct on the cc. A late act of the Legislature decides the spelling thus, 'Milwaukee,' and Milwaukee papers come with this post-mark.

Appointments.

CONFERENCE.

Providence permitting, a Conference will be held at Stillwell Prairie, Laporte Co. Ind., commencing August 27th and continuing over the Sabbath. Several Lecturing brethren from abroad are expected to be present. Let those who can, rally to this meeting.

L. D. MANSFIELD.

GROVE MEETING.

If time continue, there will be a Grove Meeting in the town of Clinton, Clinton Co., N. Y., to commence on the 10th of September. The object of the meeting is, to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom and to give light on the doctrine of the Second Advent of Christ. We expect Bro. Wyatt, Adrian and others, to be present. Our brethren and sisters, far and near, are invited to attend.

ANCIENT BABYLON.

FROM 'EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.'

BY A. RIETH.

The past history of the land of the Chaldeans, may be briefly closed in the language of prophecy: for the prophets, in their visions, saw it as it is; although historians knew not, even after its grandeur was partially gone, how to tell of its fertility, which they witnessed, and hope to be believed. Those who recorded the word that the Lord spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans, had no such fear, though two thousand four hundred years have elapsed since they described what is now only at last to be seen.

I will punish the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations; cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the sickle in the time of harvest. A drought is on her waters, and they shall be dried up. Behold the hindermost of the nations, a dry land and a desert. Her cities are a desolation, a dry land and a wilderness, a land where no man dwelleth, neither doeth son of man pass thereby. I will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and empty her land. The land shall tremble and sorrow; for every purpose of the Lord shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant. The land of the Chaldeans was to be made perpetual, or long-continued desolation. Ravaged and spoiled for ages, the Chaldee's excellence finally disappeared, and the land became desolate, as still it remains. Rauwolff, who passed through it in 1574, describes the country as bare, and "so dry and barren that it cannot be tilled." And the most recent travellers all concur in describing it in similar terms.

The land of Babylon was to be fanned and emptied,—to be a dry land, a wilderness and a desert, &c. On the one side, near to the site of Opis, "the country all around appears to be one wide desert, of sandy and barren soil, thinly scattered over with brushwood and tufts of reedy grass." On the other, between Bussorah and Bagdad, "immediately on either bank of the Tigris, is the untrodden desert. The absence of all cultivation,—the sterile, arid, and wild character of the whole scene, formed a contrast to the rich and delightful accounts delineated in Scripture. The natives, in travelling over these pathless deserts, are compelled to explore their way by the stars. "The face of the country is open and flat, presenting to the eye one vast level plain, where nothing is to be seen, but here and there a herd of half-wild camels. This immense tract is very rarely diversified with any trees of moderate growth, but is an immense wild, bounded only by the horizon." In the intermediate region, "the whole extent from the foot of the wall of Bagdad, is a barren waste, without a blade of vegetation of any description; on leaving the gates, the traveller has before him the prospect of a bare desert,—a flat and barren country."—"The whole country between Bagdad and Hillah is a perfectly flat and (with the exception of a few spots as you approach the latter place) uncultivated waste. That it was at some former period in a far different state, is evident from the number of canals by which it is traversed, now dry and neglected; and the quantity of heaps of earth covered with fragments of brick and broken tiles, which are seen in every direction, the indisputable evidences of former population.—At present, the only inhabitants of the tract are the Sobide Arabs. Around, as far as the eye can reach, is a trackless desert." "The abundance of the country has vanished as clean away as if the 'besom of desolation' had swept it from north to south; the whole land from the outskirts of Babylon to the farthest stretch of sight, lying a melancholy waste. Not a habitable spot appears for countless miles." The land of Babylon is desolate, without an inhabitant. The Arabs traverse it; and every man met with in the desert, is looked on as an enemy. Wild beasts have now their home in the land of Chaldea; but the traveller is less afraid of them,—even of the lion, than of "the wilder animal, the desert Arab."—"The country is frequently 'truly impassable.'" "Those splendid accounts of the Babylonian lands yielding crops of grain two or three hundred-fold, compared with the modern face of the country, afford a remarkable proof of the singular desolation to which it has been subjected. The canals at present, can only be traced by their decayed banks.

"The soil of this desert," says Captain Mignan, who traversed it on foot, and who, in a single day, crossed forty water-courses, "consists of a hard clay, mixed with sand, which, at noon, became so heated with the sun's rays, that I found it too hot to walk over it with any degree of comfort. Those who have crossed those desert wilds, are already acquainted with their dreary tediousness, even on horseback; what it is on foot, they can easily imagine."

Where astronomers first calculated eclipses, the natives, as in the deserts of Africa, or as the mariner without a compass on the pathless ocean, can now direct their course only by the stars, over the pathless desert of Chaldea.—Where cultivation reached its utmost height, and where two hundred-fold was stated as the common produce, there is now one wide and uncultivated waste; and the sower and reaper are cut off from the land of Babylon. Where abundant stores and treasures were laid up, and annually renewed and increased, fanners have fanned, and spoilers have spoiled them till they emptied the land. Where laborers, shaded by palm-trees a hundred feet high, irrigated the fields till all was plentifully watered by numerous canals, the wanderer, without an object on which to fix his eye, but "stinted and short-lived shrubs," can scarcely set his foot without pain, after the noon-day heat, on the "arid and parched ground," in plodding his way through a desert, a dry land, and a wilderness. Where there were crowded thoroughfares, from city to city, there is now "silence and solitude;" for the ancient cities of Chaldea are desolations,—where no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.

Her cities are desolations. The course of the Tigris through Babylonia, instead of being adorna-ed, as of old, with cities, and towns, is marked with the sites of "ancient ruins." Sitace, Sabata, Narisa, Fuchera, Sandia, "no longer exist." A succession of longitudinal mounds, crossed by right angles by others, marked the supposed site of Artemita, or Destagered. Its once luxuriant gardens are covered with grass; and a higher mound distinguishes "the royal residence" from the ancient streets. "Extensive ridges and mounds (near to Houmania,) varying in height and extent, are seen branching in every direction." A wall, with sixteen bastions, is the only memorial of Apollonia. The once magnificent Seleucia, is now a scene of desolation. There is not a single entire building, but the country is strewn for miles with fragments of decayed buildings. "As far," says Major Keppel, "as the eye could reach, the horizon presented a broken line of mounds; the whole of this place was a desert flat." On the opposite bank of the Tigris, where Ctesiphon its rival stood, besides fragments of walls and broken masses of brick-work, and remains of vast structures encumbered with heaps of earth, there is one magnificent monument of antiquity, "in a remarkably perfect state of preservation," "a large and noble file of building, the front of which presents to view, a wall three hundred feet in length, adorned with four rows of arched recesses, with a central arch, in span, eighty-six feet, and above a hundred feet high, supported by walls sixteen feet thick, and leading to a hall which extends to the depth of one hundred and fifty-six feet," the width of the building." A great part of the back-wall, and of the roof, is broken down; but that which remains, "still appears much larger than Westminster Abbey. It is supposed to have been the lofty palace of Chosroes; but there desolation now reigns. "On the site of Ctesiphon, the smallest insect under heaven would not find a single blade of grass wherein to hide itself, nor one drop of water to allay its thirst." In the rear of the palace, and attached to it, are mounds two miles in circumference, indicating the utter desolation of buildings formed to minister to luxury. But, in the words of Captain Mignan, "such is the extent of the irregular mounds and hillocks that overspread the sites of these renowned cities, that it would occupy some months to take the bearings and dimensions of each, with accuracy."

While the ancient cities of Chaldea are thus desolate, the sites of others cannot be discovered, or have not been visited, as none pass thereby;—the more modern cities, which flourished under the empire of califs, are "all in ruins." The second Bagdad has not indeed yet shared the fate of the first. And Hillah, a town of comparatively modern date, near to the site of Babylon, but in the gardens of which there is not the least vestige of ruins—yet exists. But the former, "ransacked by massacre, devastation, and oppression, during several hundred years," has been "gradually reduced from being a rich and powerful city, to a state of comparative poverty, and the feeblest means of defence." And of the inhabitants of the latter, about eight or ten thousand, it is said that "if any thing could identify the modern inhabitants of Hillah as the descendants of the ancient Babylonians, it would be their extreme profligacy, for which they are notorious, even among their immoral neighbors." They give no sign of repentance and reformation, to warrant the hope that judgment, so long continued upon others, will cease from them; or that they are the people that shall escape. Twenty years have not passed since towns in Chaldea have been ravaged and pillaged by the Wahabees; and so lately as 1023, the town of Sheereban "was sacked and ruined by the Coords," and reduced to desolation. Indications of the ruined cities, whether of a remote or more recent period, abound throughout the land. The process of destruction is still completing. Gardens which studded the banks of the Tigris have very recently disappeared, and mingled with the desert,—and concerning the cities also of Chaldea, the word is true that they are desolations. For "the whole country is strewn over with the debris of Grecian, Roman and Arabian towns, confounded in the same mass of rubbish."

But while these lie in indiscriminate ruins, the chief of the cities of Chaldea, the first in name and in power that ever existed in the world, bears many a defined mark of the judgments of heaven.

The progressive and predicted decline of Babylon the great, till it ceased to be a city, has already been briefly detailed. About the beginning of the Christian era, a small portion of it was inhabited, and the far greater part was cultivated. It diminished as Seleucia increased, and the latter became the greater city. In the second century, nothing but the walls remained. It became gradually a great desert; and, in the fourth century, its walls, repaired for that purpose, formed an enclosure for wild beasts, and Babylon was converted into a field for the chase—a hunting-place for the pasture of the Persian monarchs. The name and the remnant were cut off from Babylon; and there is a blank, during the interval of many ages, in the history of its mutilated remains, and of its mouldering decay. It remained long in the possession of the Saracens; and abundant evidence has since been given, that every feature of its prophesied desolation, is now distinctly visible—for the most ancient historians bore not a clearer testimony to facts confirmatory of the prophecies relative to its first siege and capture by Cyrus, than the latest travellers bear to the fulfilment of those which refer to its final and permanent ruin. The identity of its site has been completely established. And the truth of every general and of every particular prediction is now so clearly demonstrated, that a simple exhibition of the facts, precludes the possibility of any cavil, and supercedes the necessity of any reasoning on the subject.

It is not merely the general desolation of Babylon,—however much that alone would have surpassed all human foresight,—which the Lord declared by the mouth of his prophets. In their vision, they saw not more clearly, nor defined more precisely, the future history of Babylon, from the height of its glory to the oblivion of its name, than they saw and depicted fallen Babylon as now it lies, and as, in the nineteenth century of the Christian era, it has, for the first time, been fully described. And now, when an end has come upon Babylon, after a long succession of ages has wrought out its utter desolation, both the pen and the pencil of travellers, who have traversed and inspected its ruins, must be combined, in order to delineate what the word of God, by the prophets, told from the beginning that that end would be.

Truth ever scorns the discordant and encumbering aid of error; but to diverge in the least from the most precise facts, would here awaken and destroy the argument; for the predictions correspond not closely with any thing, except alone with the express and literal reality. To swerve from it, is, in the same degree, to vary from them: and any misrepresentation would be less hurtful than iniquitous. But the actual fact renders any exaggeration impossible, and any fiction poor. Fancy could not have feigned a contrast more complete, nor a destruction greater, than that which has come from the Almighty upon Babylon. And though the greatest city on which the sun ever shone be now a desolate wilderness, there is scarcely any spot on earth more clearly defined—and none could be more accurately delineated by the hands of a draftsman—than the scene of Babylon's desolation is set before us in the very words of the prophets; and no words could now be chosen like unto these, which, for two thousand five hundred years, have been its "burden,"—the burden which now it bears.

Such is the multiplicity of prophecies and the accumulation of facts, that the very abundance of evidence increases the difficulty of arranging, in a condensed form, and thus appropriating its specific fulfilment to each precise and separate prediction, and many of them may be viewed connectedly. All who have visited Babylon, concur in acknowledging or testifying that the desolation is exactly such as was foretold. They in general, apply the more prominent predictions; and, in minute details, they sometimes unconsciously adopt, without any allusion or reference, the very words of inspiration.

Babylon is wholly desolate. It has become heaps—it is cut down to the ground—brought down to the grave—trodden on—uninhabited—its foundations fallen—its walls thrown down and utterly broken—its loftiest edifices rolled down from the rocks—the golden city has ceased—the worms are spread under it, and the worms cover it, &c. There the Arabian pitches not his tent; there the shepherds make not their folds; but wild beasts of the desert lie there, and their houses are full of doleful creatures, and owls dwell there, &c. It is a possession for the bittern, and a dwelling-place for dragons—a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert—a burnt mountain—pools of water—spoiled—empty—nothing left—utterly destroyed—every one that goeth by it is astonished, &c.

(Concluded.)

PERILS OF THE LAST DAYS.

It is further stated, that in the last days men will be "boasters." The word needs no definition, and we have only to appeal to facts, to prove to the candid mind, that the evidence afforded by this scripture, is abundant, that we are in the "last days." As a body, the church boasts of her age, numbers, doctrines, worship, wealth, science, acts of benevolence, indeed, every thing connected with her existence, is a matter of vain show and proud boasting.

If we refer to individuals, we find no lack of a boasting spirit. Take the most leading and prominent, and you will see little else but boasting.—They will tell you how much they have prayed, and preached, and travelled, and given, to sustain the cause of morality and religion. Those prominently engaged in "protracted meetings," will tell you how many they have held, how often they have preached, how many souls have been converted, &c., &c. Or, if we turn our attention to the movements of the church in her associate capacity, we find the same spirit pervading her doings. Look into her weekly, monthly, and other reports, and periodicals, and you will see it chronicled there, and published to the world, how much the Dea., the Col., and the Doctor, have given; besides the unlimited and unnumbered 'puffs,' bestowed on the advocates and friends of the different sects and parties, in the operations of the present day. How many eminent, and once useful men have fallen, in consequence of these "puffs," the judgment day alone will reveal.—True it is, that many have: some into overt acts of immorality, and others, from elevated spheres of extensive usefulness, into the low and miserable work of seeking public favor. What boasting they could not do themselves, others have done for them; until the infection having worked, piety is gone, and they are left mere "puffs" of vanity.

But, beware of the peril which this state of things presents. Christ instructed his disciples, when they did alms, not to let their "left hand know what their right hand did." In other words, to be content to do good, and receive only the praise that comes down from heaven. How different from those who proclaim, "see my zeal for the Lord!"—or, "Behold this great Babylon which I have built!"—who do good "to be seen of men!"

Another feature of the impiety of the times, given by inspiration, and closely allied to the one we have been considering, is pride. Is it not abundantly seen on all sides? It is seen in the very boastings we have been considering; in the personal appearance—in the construction and finish of houses of worship—frequently, in the manner of arranging the congregation—in the music, preaching, prayers, benevolence, and, in short, everything pertaining to the church. I do not mean those temptations to pride of heart, to which every christian is more or less exposed, and of which he ingenuously repents, when he finds he has, to any extent, yielded to them; but I mean pride in all these things, which is known, tolerated, and even honored in the churches. This is what stamps it as a moral feature of the age;—the fact that the church knowingly tolerates, and commends it as desirable.

The danger in this case is, that persons seeing this sin thus practised and commended in the church, will indulge hopes of conversion, join the church, and pass to judgment without relinquishing the pride of their hearts. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." Genuine humility is indispensable to acceptance with God. Beware of the perils of "the last days!"

I suppose many will think me almost or quite guilty of the sin charged in the next specification of the character of the times, by saying the church is extensively practising and sanctioning this same sin of "blasphemy."

Other things besides repeating the name of God in vain, are blasphemy. Says Christ, "I know the blasphemy of those that say they are Jews, and are not, but are of the synagogue of Satan." It is blasphemy, then, actually to belong to "the synagogue of Satan," and yet profess christianity. "He is not a Jew, which is one outwardly: but he is a Jew which is one inwardly:—and circumcision is of the heart, and not of the flesh." For a company of persons to associate professedly to worship and serve the Lord, while they are not truly converted, but are doing the work of the Devil, is to constitute a "synagogue of Satan." To be a constituent member of that association, is to belong to that "synagogue." This is blasphemy: and it is reasonable that it should be so considered. A man professing godliness, by that profession, declares that he has ceased to bear the image of the Devil; and that subsequently, he will be an imitator of God: that he will represent the moral character God possesses. When he, therefore, makes this profession, and still possesses and exhibits the features of an unsanctified heart, he avers, by his conduct, that God possesses these same features. And is this not blasphemy? Suppose a man should say in words, God is dishonest; he deceives, cheats, speaks falsely, will steal, rob, &c. Whose soul would not shudder to hear such blasphemous words uttered?—And yet, the professor who is guilty of these sins, adds to them all, the deep guilt of this horrid blasphemy. By his profession, he claims to be an imitator of God: and by his life, he says that God possesses these traits of character.

But we regret to say this is not the only way in which blasphemy is tolerated and practised in the church. Consider the many blasphemous words spoken concerning the men whom God was owning and using in advancing his cause, and the work in which they were engaged. How many genuine revivals have been slanderously called "fanaticism," "excitement," "work of the Devil," &c. But more especially have blasphemous words been spoken in reference to the coming of the Lord. The innumerable sneers and epithets, the amount of contumely and ridicule, the wicked perversion and violent treatment of the doctrine of the speedy return of Jesus Christ to this world to set up his everlasting kingdom, go to make up the blasphemy of the present day. This has been the popular side of the question in the churches. A taunt, a sneer at "the ultrasims," meaning by it, those causes and operations, in which constituted nearly all the vital and active piety of the present times, was a passport rather than a hindrance to popular favor.—Thus the church and ministry endorsed, yea, practised the sin, and stamped the age characteristic for blasphemy.

The dangers from this source are imminent.—Persons entertaining all the rancorous feelings towards active godliness, usually found in the unrenewed heart, can join the church, cherishing them, and, finding the taunts and sneers they prompt, a help rather than a hindrance to "a place of standing" there; will be encouraged to indulge them, until, at last, they find it too late to correct the fatal error. How much better to be where these sins, all sins, will be faithfully pointed out, and fearlessly rebuked. Beware of the "perils of the last days!"

But I should protract my article to an unreasonable length, were I to specify all the characteristics of the present age as given by inspiration, and sustained by fact. I can only mention them, and must depend upon my readers to recur to facts, which are but too prominent before the minds of the most casual observers, to decide as to the fitness of prophecy to the present days.—If the subject is so far presented in this communication, as to secure a thorough and candid examination in the light of Bible and fact, its great object will have been attained. The word of prophecy proceeds, exhibiting the characteristics of the "last days," and says, they shall be "disobedient to parents." Formerly, "gray hairs were honorable," and men deferred to the experience and wisdom of years; but now, many a youth at sixteen is more mandatory and consequential in his movements, and thinks he knows much more than his father at forty. They are to be "unthankful, unholy." For a person to believe in the sufficiency of the grace of Christ to cleanse from all sin in this life, and teach that that grace is available, is, in the opinion of some of the sects, so great an error, that they will cast him out of the party.

The enumeration proceeds; they are to be "without natural affection." The numerous divisions among the sects, their coldness, hatred, and disfellowship for each other, show that they are without "natural affection." They do not possess as much as natural affection for each other! "Truce breakers." Besides the other instances and various ways in which this sin is committed; there is infamy attached to this christian nation, in their treatment towards the natives of this country, that ought to make barbarism blush, and perfidy hide its head. And, if individuals are disposed to ask its immediate reference to the church, I reply that the church and world, indiscriminately, availed themselves of the benefit of the recent unjust bankrupt-law, and thereby broke the most sacred obligations. Also, the great mass of the church have no more scruples about breaking their obligations with the world, and one another, than the worldling. Moral obligation seems to be lost: nothing but the strong arm of the law will hold but few to make good their obligations. And besides, the most sacred covenants between the sects, of union, or for the promotion of the common cause, are unscrupulously broken, whenever party interest demands it.

Again, they are to be "false accusers." Prejudgment is a sin to which the human heart, in this depraved world, seems quite disposed. Peter preaches the word of the Lord to the Gentiles as well as Jews in Cesarea, and returns to Jerusalem; but ere he arrives, a report has gone before, all conclude that he has done wrong, and his salutation is a rebuke for having violated the commandments of the Lord. They being honest, an explanation satisfies them, and they retract their wrong statements. All this may be consistent with purity of design, or correctness of motive, or a hasty judgment may be the result of inconsiderateness or over zeal. But false accusations usually arise from a more malignant state of mind. It is generally intentionally wrong. This is the form of the evil of which I suppose this scripture intended more especially to speak.

The extensive and gross misrepresentations of the views and statements of opposing sects and parties and individuals, must go to make up the aggregate of this sin. Falsely accusing one another, is a prominent characteristic of the sects, in this day. No book extant, is so rigid in its rules in guarding reputation—that has its positions and requirements so clearly and definitely stated, as the Bible: and yet, no book has been more neglected or abused, with regard to this matter. The church and ministry have long since ceased to regard truth as a rule of conversation or remark.—No man's character for ecclesiastical order, or moral conduct, nor his reputation in any respect, has been safe for years.

Did A. arise and present views different from the commonly received opinions—did an eccentric B. go about among the churches, holding "protracted meetings,"—did a church divide—a new church or sect spring up,—was there an effort to put down slavery, intemperance, licentiousness, or other sins,—did some individuals believe and teach that the consummation of Israel's hope was soon to be realized—that the Lord of glory would soon appear to terminate the scenes of this earth and set up his everlasting kingdom on the new,—behold! the atmosphere teems with false and slanderous accusations, which have originated in malicious hearts, and published through the pulpits and the religious press, from whence they have been taken by the hearers and readers, and borne abroad through community, until, as a river of death, the polluting waters, deepening and darkening in their course, and dammed by the reptiles that sport in their fetid elements,—they have flown back, and polluted the very fountains from whence they emanated. What mean the multitudes of slanderous lies that have thus been hurled abroad with a recklessness becoming an army engaged in a war of extermination? What do they argue but exceeding depravity of heart?

These false accusations and lies, are, many of them, most improbable and irrational: lies that bear the evidence of their own infamy so prominently in their boldest features, that a very limited degree of candor would at once detect them, yet they are published with a zeal and boldness as if true: yea, even with a profession of belief in their truthfulness. The clergy have probably been the most prominent in the sin, yet the laity have not fallen far in the rear. With few exceptions, I regard the American Pulpit, in conjunction with the nominally religious press, as the general, grand auction stand, from whence have been issued, as at public outcry, the most infamous and slanderous lies and falsehoods, at wholesale; while private professors, as retail dealers, have been engaged to see that they were sent through all the ramifications of the channels of social intercourse. Facts might too easily be gathered on this point, to fill a volume, and need not be repeated here.

With such a current of iniquity in the church, who can expect to avoid "peril:" or floating with that current, can expect to land safe in the "haven of rest?" Do its polluted waters empty into the river of life? Shall its corruptions commingle with the chrysal element that flows thro' "the city of our God?" Beware, and avoid the "perils" of "the last days" arising from the influence of "false accusers."

But again, they are to be "incontinent." For decency's sake, as well as for the sake of religion, I would rejoice to pass this point in silence, would truth permit; but I may rejoice in the plan proposed to myself in this article, not to give a general and minute quotation of facts, illustrating the different characters specified, nor to speak at length except on those points on which the facts are so well known to the public, that I can safely rely on the observations of my readers, to recall an abundance of them to their mind, to prove any of my assertions.

It is doubtful whether there ever has been an age when the same forms of vital godliness were kept up, and such professions of piety made, and yet the same amount of "incontinency" in the church and ministry. If, in addition to all the known acts of impurity, the mask of secrecy could be torn off, and all exposed, what a spectacle would be presented! These facts can be universally and accurately known, only at the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. I leave the point, with the admonition, to beware of the "perils," and remember that the falls and disgrace of ministers and church-members in this respect, are so many evidences that we are in "the last days:" and the greater and more numerous the falls, the stronger the evidence.

The fierceness and anger with which the contentions and debates of the different sects and parties have been conducted, and the manner in which they have assailed those of their own number, when, on conviction of truth, they have presumed to change their opinions on points of faith, by which they differed from the "standards," fulfils the prophecy in another respect. Beware of indulging the spirit and practice!

Another important characteristic of the times, is, they are to be "despisers of those that are good." The time was, when humble piety and vital godliness were respected, consulted, and revered. The church delighted to defer to honest piety. The man who held communion with God—who was much ardent in prayer—who faithfully rebuked and reproved sin, and was abundant in labor to save souls, was the man who had influence in the churches, whose counsels were heeded, and who was entrusted with the offices and responsible duties of the church: but now, such are most despised. In these days of refinement and polite religion, the man of talent, eloquence, and popular applause, instead of the faithful, godly minister, is generally preferred. Those must lead in prayer who will do it most dispassionately, and with the least excitement, with a moderate tone of voice, and in language that will not shock the sensibilities of the refined and the intelligent. Those must hold the offices in the church who are the most popular, wealthy, and influential. Those that usually stand aloof from all exciting questions, who are called 'even tempered,' 'mild,' and "amiable in their dispositions, and, I might add, those who will let all do about as they please, except differ from the standards of the church." This is true, while men of active godliness, who desire to understand the true teachings of the word of God, and follow it whithersoever it leadeth; who have no ostentation, but are child-like in stern piety, and yet, are ardent and bold in their labors, faithfully oppose all sin, losing all sectarian feelings and jealousies in their all-absorbing desire to promote the cause of Christ, are the men that are most despised and hated in the sects and churches at the present day. I submit to the candid, whether this prophecy can be more literally fulfilled than it is at the present time. But let all beware how they "despise those that are good," for Christ will regard such contempt as poured upon him.

They are also to be "traitors, heady, high minded." In contemplating this subject, and reading these scriptures, the desire involuntarily arises, and the convictions of duty almost fastens itself on the mind, to write out an article in full, on each specified character; but I must content myself with a few suggestions and leading thoughts and leave it for wiser heads and better pens to complete the work.

Was there ever a time when it was more unsafe to confide in any human being, than at the present? when there were greater betrayers of confidence? or more dark-hearted perfidy? Was there ever a time when professors were more uncandid, and inconsiderate in their movements?—Thousands have rejected the advent doctrine, and other important Bible truths, without one week's close, diligent, faithful, candid, prayerful inquiry after truth: yea, thousands more, from the blasphemous slang they have heard their ministers hurl at these truths.

Again, when have the church been more high-minded than now? Splendid churches, splendid organs, splendid equipage, splendid singing, splendid preaching, and, in a word, a splendid religion is the order of the day. "Mind not high things," says Paul, "but condescend to men of low estate:" or, as it is in the margin, "be content with mean things." Instead of this, the man of humble demeanor, if tolerated at all, is permitted to occupy his seat in the "gallery," or in some corner below, while the man of wealth and pride, and display, though a publican, is honored with the best seat in the synagogue. James rebukes this making a difference, thus: and shows that a church that will seat a congregation on this principle, are mere hypocrites, and do not belong to Christ. (James, 2d ch.) But is this not the general practice in the churches? They build a house of worship, solemnly dedicate it to God, and then put all the seats under the hammer, and give the man of the longest purse, the first choice. Money will procure the best seat, though the man is the most abandoned character:—but pious poverty must retire from the house of God, when it sees the last seat going to the "highest bidder." "O tempora! O Mores!" When will Christ come and "cleans his sanctuary" from thus being a "den of thieves?" Beware of being partakers with them, of these horrid iniquities!

Another distinguishing feature of the times is, they are to be "lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God." Parties, balls, rides, walks, calls, visits for 'pleasure,' are among the most fashionable modes of indulgence of church members, of the present day. But the evidences that they are lovers of "pleasure," are so numerous and glaring, that I will indulge myself in considering but a single fact. I refer to the practice of having boat-rides, pic-nic parties, &c., to raise funds for pious purposes. I believe it is generally conceded, that these things are, in themselves, evils, and undesirable, but it is claimed that they are necessary, as a means of raising money: that people will not give without some such means. I ask attention to the single point, that this excuse involves in itself, an acknowledgment that the prophecy is fulfilled at this very time. Mind, the prophecy is, that men love pleasure, more than they love God. Now, the use a man makes of his money, shows where his heart is—what he loves. One man loves power—give him money, and he will expend it to gain power. Another loves display—give him money, and he will use it for display. Another loves pleasure—and he will expend his money for pleasure. Another loves God and a dying world, and he will expend his money according to the will of God, for the benefit of a world. He cannot love God, who keeps his money: for he loves the possession of it. Now, what is this excuse of necessity for the parties and times of pleasure, for the purpose of raising money? What is it but an acknowledgment that the people have not the love of God in them? Appeal to their love of God, and you cannot obtain their money: but appeal to their love of pleasure, and you receive it in abundance. "Lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God." Your excuse is an acknowledgment that the prophecy is fulfilled. It is necessary to sell an indulgence for a regular pious spree, to obtain the means to carry on the operations of the church!

If the Romish church is the "mother of harlots," she is false to nature in denying her "daughters."

I have given above, but a brief sketch of the characteristics of the "last days," with hardly an allusion to the facts, proving that the nominal church is in precisely the condition which the spirit of prophecy has declared she will be in when the Lord comes. I feel more inclined to write a volume on the subject, than to abbreviate into an article for a weekly paper. I hope what has been said, will call the attention of some souls to the subject, that they may shun the perils of these days. The closing phrase in the scripture, has compelled us to look for these perils within the nominal church. I trust what has been said seemingly severe against the churches, has been dictated by a spirit of kindness and of fidelity to the souls of men. We solemnly profess and aver, that it has not been from vindictive or inimical feelings, but from a deep sense of duty—a high regard for the cause of true religion.

If the view we have taken of the subject is correct, how wise and benevolent is the instruction, "from such turn away." And how wise and benevolent also is the providence of God, in his calling his people out of such corrupt and perilous associations as the nominal churches, "in these last days."

Yours, trusting in the mercy and grace of God for an humble seat in the glorious kingdom, for which we are watching and waiting, PHILLOS.

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, AUGUST 5, 1846.

☞ Sister Barry, since the death of her husband and babe, has spent a few days among her numerous and kind friends in this city: to whom, and many others elsewhere, she wishes us to tender her grateful acknowledgements for their acts of kindness in this hour of adversity. She bears her affliction with becoming resignation and fortitude, and her whole soul is bound up in the precious cause in which her husband suffered and died. She has returned to Boston, Mass., to make it her home, at least for the present, with the widowed mother of our departed brother Barry. Persons wishing to address her, will direct their communications thus:—Elizabeth D. Barry, Care of Christian Register, Boston, Mass.

☞ Several valuable communications are necessarily deferred for a future number of our sheet. We shall publish them as soon as we can. Our correspondents have been very kind in remembering our wants in this respect. We hope no one will neglect to write because we now have a surplus of matter on hand. A full supply of good original matter enables us to make a rich and useful selection for our readers.

"Bible Advocate."

The third No. of this paper has commenced a series of articles, in defence of the first resurrection being the conversion of the soul from sin, the thousand years reign with Christ, named in Rev. 20th, being past, and their kindred doctrines. These we consider fundamental errors, as we think in part has been clearly shown in our reply to sister Clemons, published in some recent numbers of our paper. To advocate these doctrines, we feared, was one prominent object of the commencement of that paper, and we now see that those fears were not groundless.—We shall endeavor, for the truth's sake, to keep this whole matter intelligibly before our readers, lest, in this hour of perils, some unguarded mind may mistake error for truth, and be turned aside from the right way. The Advocate says:

"The life which Christ brings is, then, a theme of the gospel—nay, is it not the grand theme of the glad tidings? I would suppose that the beloved disciple thought so, from the manner in which he introduces and dwells upon the subject."

'The grand theme' is the life which Christ brings. Very true, if we are to understand that life to be the crown of life, eternal life, or crown of righteousness, which the Lord will give unto all who love his appearing in that day, the day of his coming, as the scriptures abundantly teach us to expect. But it is not true, if that life is nothing more than the conversion of the soul from sin to holiness. Does the Advocate teach the latter? It says:

"The receiving of life from Christ, or becoming sons of God, through believing in his name, is then a change that must take place now—in probation. And unless this change of heart is effected here, we have no ground for hope that when Christ shall appear we shall be made like him. The simple doctrine of life through faith in Christ, seems to suppose the following things: Life is the opposite of death, and signifies existence in a certain state. By sinning, man fell, and lost his life in the holy state in which he was created; morally speaking, he was dead; as God's word expresses it, he was dead in trespasses and sins. And from this death there is no resurrection or recovery save by true faith in Jesus Christ."

The sentiment here expressed is, that man was in a 'state' of sin, the resurrection only morally changes him to a 'state' of holiness, 'now,' 'here'; this is the 'life which Christ brings,' and this is not only 'a theme of the gospel,' but 'the grand theme of the glad tidings.' Can our brethren, who are looking for GLORY, HONOR, IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE, in the first resurrection, at the appearing of Christ, now be made to believe that a simple change of state, or character, here, or, in plain English, conversion, is the first resurrection, the life which Christ brings, and is the grand theme of the glad tidings? We pray they may not. We admit that a theme of the gospel is the conversion of man from sin to holiness; but the glorious and 'grand theme' is "immortality, eternal life," in the first resurrection morn, to reign with Christ on the new earth. 'And we shall reign on the earth.' Rev. 6:10. 'Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.' Rev. 20: 6.—'Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.' Matt. 5: 5. 'Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance, incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you.' 1 Pet. 1: 3, 4.

These, and many more like precious words of the gospel, show most clearly what is 'the grand theme of the glad tidings.' May it be our happy theme until mortality shall be swallowed up of life; and then may the promised life and glory be ours forever.

The Advocate quotes a number of passages of Scripture to sustain the position it takes on this question. We would distinctly notice every text quoted, and show their true application, had we not thoroughly investigated this subject in some former numbers of our paper. If truth is the object of the Advocate, why are our former objections to its theory passed in silence? We gave sister Clemons a candid hearing in our paper, followed with our objections. Her sentiments are now reiterated in the Advocate, without an attempt to remove the insurmountable objections, as we and many others think, we throw in her way. Those who may chance to see the sentiments of sister Clemons, as repeated in the third No. of the Advocate, are requested to carefully read our reply to them, as published in the Voice of Truth, Vol. IX, No. 13, and Vol. X, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Do not treat this request with neglect. If you have not those Nos., try to obtain them of your neighbors, or send to this office, and we will supply all we can, who may desire them.

Lest some into whose hands the Advocate may fall, may not be able to obtain the reading of those Nos. to which we refer, we will here add, that the principle of interpreting scripture, adopted by the Advocate, if carried to its legitimate conclusion, would apply every text, every precious promise of life, everlasting or eternal life,—now 'here,' to this 'state' of 'probation,' to the conversion of the soul, or a spiritual change of heart. To support this theory, the following texts are simply quoted: John 1: 4, 5; 3: 5-21, 36; 4: 10, 14; 5: 21-34, 26, 29. Please examine them, and their connection, and we feel confident that you will agree with us that they teach something more than a spiritual change of the soul. They contain such exceeding great and precious promises of future life, that we cannot omit giving some of them. Hear them, ye tried and tempted ones, and rejoice in view of the incorruptible crown they promise.

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have ETERNAL LIFE. For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have EVERLASTING LIFE." John 3: 14-16. How it takes away the Christian's blessed hope, to apply such promises as these to this frail state of his being; but how it cheers and strengthens that hope, when he understands them to point to his life of eternal joy, beyond this vale of tears.

Again: "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst: but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing UP INTO EVERLASTING LIFE." John 4: 14. Campbell renders it, "Springing up to everlasting life." The meaning of this text, to suit the sentiment of the Advocate, is, whosoever shall drink of this water, that is, receive eternal life, 'now' 'here' in this state of "probation," that life shall be in him springing up to spiritual life, or conversion of the soul from a "state" of sin, to a "state" of holiness. How transcendently more consistent and glorious is the true meaning of this text, than such absurdities. It evidently teaches us, that whosoever receives the spirit or mind of Christ, and obeys his commands, will be happy here, and hereafter receive the reward of eternal life.

We admit that a few detached passages quoted by the Advocate, to the casual reader, might appear strongly to favor its theory; but to the careful Bible student, the reverse is the case. The texts to which we refer, stand in connection with those already given, and read, "but is passed from death unto life."—John 5: 24. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life."—John 3: 36. These and similar passages speak of life being received or possessed, in the present tense. This is a strong pillar of the fabric erected by the Advocate. But we think truth will remove it, and place it in perfect harmony with the other pillars on which wisdom's house rests. To make them subserve the cause of the Advocate, brings them not only in direct collision with the context in which they are found, but with other plain declarations of the word of the Lord. We will give a few examples.

"To them who, by patient CONTINUANCE in WELL DOING, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, ETERNAL LIFE."—Rom. 2: 7. Macknight renders it, "He will render eternal life." Here eternal life is clearly placed in the future, and is the glorious reward which those will receive who have continued in well doing unto the end of this mortal life.

Again: "But now being made free from sin, and become the servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the END, EVERLASTING LIFE." Rom. 6: 22. Macknight renders it, "And the REWARD everlasting life." The meaning is too plain to be misunderstood. It teaches us that we must "now," in the present tense, be "made free from sin," live a holy life, and that the end or reward will be, eternal life. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life."—Rev. 22: 14. "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit REAP LIFE EVERLASTING." When? at the conversion of the soul, or at the end of the Christian's well doing in this state of probation? The next verse tells when. "And let us not be weary in well doing;—for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."—Gal. 6: 8, 9.

These, and very many other passages, speak of life in the future, as the eternal reward of the Christian's service here: How then are we to understand those texts which speak of life being received in the present tense?

We must understand them to refer to the foretaste or earnest of life, which we receive by faith. Hence Paul says, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and THE LIFE which I NOW live in the flesh, I live by THE FAITH of the Son of God." Gal. 2: 20. This makes a perfect harmony in these seemingly contradictory passages; and presents the question in the light of the general tenor of the Scriptures. By faith, we "pass from death unto life," or "have eternal life,"—and if we continue to live by faith, the reward will be eternal life.

The manner the Advocate labors to force into its service the conversation of Christ on the death of Lazarus, in John 11, is truly painful to the lover of Bible truth. It is a mystery to us how any one of common understanding, on reading the simple narrative about the literal death and resurrection of Lazarus, can for a moment think, as the Advocate says, that it was "the change of heart alluded to in the conversation with Martha." The principle that would give that narrative this bearing, would force it into the defence of the most extravagant error, or expunge it from the sacred pages of the lively oracles of God. For an exposition of this portion of Scripture, see our reply to sister Clemons, in the Nos. of the Voice of Truth referred to in this article. In fact, that Scripture needs no exposition: it is a simple narrative about the death and resurrection of Lazarus, and any cause that will try to spiritualize away the literal import of the Savior's words, spoken under such circumstances, we hesitate not to say, cannot be the cause of the Lord.

"I charge thee therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead, [or "living and the dead," as Macknight renders it,] at his appearing and kingdom."—2 Tim. 4: 1. The principles of interpretation adopted by the Advocate, make the living and dead mean spiritual life and death! Comments are unnecessary: for if the plain word of the Lord will not convince any one that such an application of Scripture is dangerously wrong, all we can say will not do it.

In conclusion, we deem it duty to say that the ultimate object of this investigation on our part, is the glory of God in the defence of his truth. We have none other than the kindest of feelings towards those brethren, whose errors we oppose. We think we know by the inspired Word, that they have fallen into greatly mistaken views, which, if carried to their legitimate conclusion, will end in a wide departure from the truth. We wish to show them the right way, that they may be rescued from the imminent danger to which they are now exposed, and as far as possible, prevent others from running into the same perilous position.

We have let errors run unnoticed, thinking the Lord would soon come and put a stop to them. In this we erred: for, if let alone, "they will eat as doth a canker." Our past history has proved this saying true. We have learned wisdom from the past, and therefore have met this error on its first appearance among us. By the grace of God we mean to do our duty in reference to it, regardless of consequences. And we also earnestly entreat all the lovers of truth, who are looking for the appearing of their Lord, to cleave to the truth in this hour of danger. There is safety no where else. No other foundation will abide the day of the Lord, which will soon dawn upon us.

The letter from Bro. Kceker, published in this number, is worthy the careful perusal of all.—We hope he will often write for our humble pages.]

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

Much is daily coming under our observation, which, as it is of rich interest to us, no doubt would be to you: but we must content ourselves with making extracts from our Journal of such matter, mainly, as relates more particularly to our mission, and the cause of religion: the remainder you shall have at a future period, if we are allowed to see it.

Of Liverpool, we can say but little now: we have reserved that field for subsequent labor, as we told you in our last. The number of friends there who sympathize with us in our peculiar views of the Advent, is small: nor do we think they are so circumstanced as to grow themselves in the faith, or to be the means of propagating it among the 300,000 inhabitants of that town. But we are anticipating good things in store for that community. Our beloved Bro. Curry, is one of the principal and most efficient of the brethren there: he is a Dock-master, engaged in the duties of his office during the week, and preaching every Lord's day in L. and the vicinity, sometimes having some humble roof as his cover, and at others, and very frequently at this season of the year, the broad vault of heaven for his canopy. Field and street preaching, is no uncommon thing in England. Nearly all denominations practice it. There is one square in L., where you may see religious services conducted almost every evening in the week: several societies meeting there alternately. These meetings are perfectly orderly, and serious, and must result in good. It is a grateful sight to witness the most respectable, and the poor, unfortunate, and ignorant, mingling together, and listening to the gospel. The word preached was simple, earnest, and evangelical, and we are persuaded cannot be in vain. Why is not this practice fitted to the United States?—It appears that the mind of Bro. Curry had for some time been exercised upon the subject of the Advent, up to 1840, when, as he says, he met with Capt. Blanchard, of the American barque "Calypso," and in course of conversation upon the signs of the times, he informed him that he had in his possession a work upon the coming of the Lord. Bro. C. purchased it of him, and like John in another case, ate it up. He then began to spread abroad the tidings as extensively as he could, preaching the doctrine of the Lord's speedy return, to thousands. He also sent this little volume of "Miller's Lectures," to various parts of England, which, he thinks, was the means of blessing others, as much as it did himself. He believes it was the first copy of that work which was ever seen in this country. We think not, however. When at the late Conference in New York, we understood one of the English brethren there to say, he had read Bro. Miller's Lectures more than ten years ago, while in his own native land.

You will be gratified to learn that there are at least six clergymen in L., mostly of the Episcopal Church, who are preaching the Lord's speedy Advent. They are spoken of by our brethren as pious, devoted men, and excellent preachers. We hear of others, in other towns and cities, who are, in like manner, giving meat in due season. We get this information from various sources.—In one form or other, from first to last, this portion of the world has had considerable light on the coming of Christ; but its power has been more or less neutralized by false views, or some sorts of extravagance. If the preaching of this doctrine by the Established Church, could only be enjoyed by the mass of the people; if the writings on this subject by those excellent ministers, were only put up in a small, cheap form, so as to be accessible by the middling classes, it would be an occasion of rejoicing. Still, we are meeting with many little discourses, &c., such as we have already sent you, which are published by the ministers, and which, of course, fell into the hands of all. The introduction, however, of the "Jews' return" into these otherwise valuable sermons, takes the edge from the sword.

Ministers and churches in England are divided in respect to the events of the future: some anticipating a long period in which the Gospel shall triumph, and others expecting nothing but darkness and confusion until Jesus comes. The question is resolving itself into one of practical importance. For example: Mr. McNeile urges, as one of his strongest objections, in a recently published discourse, to the proposed "Evangelical Alliance," that its avowed object is the conversion of the world, which, being to his mind anti-scriptural, compels him to withhold from the project his sanction and support. His objections are worthy of deep consideration. As our brethren at home gave us discretionary power to sit in that convention, we shall act when the time arrives, as we believe God would have us. If the occasion of this great gathering in contemplation, might only result in the inquiry—Does God's word justify any cherished anticipations of the world's conversion? it would be enough to awaken profound gratitude. Such a question, discussed by such minds as may come together at London, would be likely to result in some good.

We left Liverpool for the south-west of England, on the evening of June 19th, being whirled over the rail-road at the rate of 50, 60, and sometimes over 70 miles per hour! There are three classes of cars on the routes here: for economy's sake, we took the second class, and found ourselves in very pleasant and respectable company; this class is more generally occupied than either of the others. The third class originated in an act of Parliament, which makes it obligatory upon every rail-road in the kingdom to run at least one train a day at a single penny per mile for each passenger, thereby opening to the poorest, the benefits of this expeditious mode of travelling.

Republican this! In Scotland, they voluntarily run the "Parliament line," or third class, at one half, and even three quarters of a penny! Some companies run as many as three or four of this description daily, at a minimum speed of 12 miles an hour, as required by law. The amount of baggage allowed each passenger, varies with the class of cars in which he seats himself; more being permitted to those of the "first," and less to those of the other two. The tracks, or gauges, are wider than with us: of course the cars and locomotives are in proportion. The road leading out of Liverpool is the oldest in England, it being 16 years since its construction: its station is on one of the principal streets, and at the mouth of a tunnel of one mile and a half in extent, cut through solid rock. We passed in sight of the residences of Lord Stanley, and Charles Kemble, and of the Bridgewater canal, which yields to its owner, Lord Francis Edgerton, the annual increase of £95,000. His father, though its projector and owner, died a poor man! His scheme was then regarded as visionary, but he foresaw that a communication between L. and Birmingham, &c., must, at a day not far in the future, be of great value. Such is only a solitary example of the vanity of asking any generation what they think of this or that commercial, political, or religious enterprise. A far-reaching, independent mind, acts for posterity: history records such men as the pioneers of the race, as the sons of civilization, as the apostles of Christianity.

The Conference Address.

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire."

It is evident that among Adventists quite a difference of opinion exists on minor points of Bible doctrine. I have been led of late to search for the cause; and after looking at the question on all sides, it appears to me, that one fruitful source of all this difference is, a misapplication of scripture.

What led me to think more particularly on this subject was reading the address of the Rochester Conference. In one clause of that address, its authors, I think, have fallen into a great error; and I have looked for some one, better qualified than myself, to point it out. Aware that it was intended for a wide circulation, I feared the error it contained would be productive of more evil than good, knowing that many would receive it, with all readiness of mind, because of the source from which it emanated. But God has long since shown me that good men may err. This I have been taught not only by example, but by sad experience. All flesh is as grass, but the word of the Lord endureth forever. (1. Pet. 1: 25) Whatever is not built on the Prophets and Apostles Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, I cannot receive. Yet I cheerfully grant to all, the individual right to read and believe for themselves, and act accordingly; but, that charity that suffereth long, and is kind, and rejoiceth in nothing short of the truth, will correct an error.

The man that will suffer error to be palmed off, because it emanated from his own people, is unworthy of public confidence, acts contrary to the plainest teachings of the Bible, and shows himself to be crusted with sectarianism, that will more or less blind his mind, and shut up every avenue of his heart against light; and the light he has once enjoyed will soon become darkness.

Therefore, the love I bear to these brethren, the love I bear to all who may read that address, the love I bear to Christ my Lord, whose I am, and whom I serve, the love I bear for the truth, prompts me to point out what I believe to be wrong in that address.

TO THE AUTHORS OF THAT ADDRESS:—Very dear and respected brethren,—I rejoice to be numbered with you in bearing the reproach of Christ, and proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom of God. I feel thankful, that in that address, I can stand shoulder to shoulder with you, in advocating and defending the glorious, and visible, and personal coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the resurrection of the just at his appearing; his personal and glorious reign on the earth; the necessity of personal holiness, in order to share with him: and also in holding out the great reward as a motive to quicken us; and likewise in accounting for our errors on Time, from the well known and acknowledged discrepancy among the best chronologists, of about four years.

But in the third clause under this head, we think you have greatly erred in the application of scripture. We do not believe you would in any way in the least depart from the truth, knowingly, but we are all in the flesh, and liable to err, neither do we doubt that you would, as readily as ourselves, desire to have that error pointed out. Having this confidence in you, and desiring to know the truth, has led me to address you on the above subject; and if you see that my objections are not according to the law and the testimony, I beseech of you to point it out, and I shall rejoice to acknowledge it.

We will give a few extracts from the clause above alluded to.

"3rd. Another ground on which our mistake on definite time may be explained, we think is, in not understanding the plain instructions of our Savior on this very subject, [time.] The prophetic numbers in connection with the types of the law, when critically examined and explained, we thought necessarily led to very definite conclusions, relative to the time of their termination. And such was our confidence in the correctness of those conclusions, that we lost sight of the Savior's instructions on this point. We must admit, if he has spoken at all on this question, that he spoke understandingly, and that his counsel should be heeded. We find that he has discoursed at length on this very subject, and if we are willing to let the New Testament be an expositor of the Old, then the whole matter in question is made plain and easy to the comprehension of the most common capacity.

In Matthew 24th, a question was asked our Lord on the time of his coming, and the end of the world. The conclusion or point of the whole of the lengthy, critical and definite answer is, 'when ye shall see all these things, know that he is near, even at the door.' This is as definite as our Lord warrants us in being on the time of his coming and end of the world."

In the above extract, you say that we erred in not understanding our Lord's instructions, on this very subject; namely, definite time. You then say, that in Matthew 24th, a question was asked our Lord, concerning the TIME of his coming, and end of the world.

This is where we are puzzled: we cannot find that question, in the chapter alluded to. In the Bible it reads,—"What shall be the SIGN (not TIME) of thy coming, and end of the world?"

You must be aware, I think, from a re-examination of that chapter, and your conclusions from it, that a plain contradiction is visible, and that no such question was asked; and therefore, your superstructure, on which you invite us to place our feet, is at once discovered to be fallacious, and without foundation; as it regards giving any comment on the time of his coming, brought to view by Daniel or any other prophet. Just see how different the language is, when definite time is the subject of inquiry. "Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?"—Acts 1: 6. Remember, there is nothing said here about a sign, as in Matthew 24th, but they speak understandingly: they name the thing inquired for, distinctly, TIME.

Just see in Matthew 24th, they ask him for the SIGN of his coming: they did not ask him to give a comment, a divine comment on the prophetic numbers, as you have it. Do you not suppose, if the Apostles had intended to ask a question on time, in the 24th of Matthew, they could and would have asked it as plain as they did in the 1st of Acts?

But again, it is evident, that the two questions were differently put, from the manner they were answered in Matthew 24th. Jesus answers the very question they put, by saying,—the sun shall be darkened, the moon shall not give her light, the stars shall fall, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken; and then shall appear the SIGN of the Son of man in heaven: (then has appeared the token you inquire for) not the time.

But again, it is evident, that it was a sign they inquired for, from the manner he enforced it. Now learn a parable from the fig-tree: when its branches are yet tender and put forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh; so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things come to pass, KNOW (not guess) that he is near, even at the doors.

This, you say, is as definite as our Lord warrants us to be on definite time, when, in fact, no inquiry was made on definite time, in the chapter alluded to.

Neither can I agree with you, that 'at the doors' is as definite as our Lord warrants us in being on the signs of his coming, for when he brings us down to his standing at the door, he has been pleased to confine it to this generation, with the verity of an oath; and having assured us, that, although heaven and earth shall pass away, yet we might depend on his word in this matter, he then adds, "But of that day, and that hour, knoweth no man, not the angels that are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.—Take ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is." (Does this belong to us?) See in the next verse the reason he gives why they did not understand the time. "For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house and gave authority to his servants and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Mark 13.

How natural, after bringing them down to the signs of his coming, and binding it, with the generation for him to tell them they did not know the time of his coming; and give the reason he was going away, and it would be a long time before the signs would be seen.

We have no feeling but love towards any who cannot see time, but what we object to is, a wrong application of scripture. Let us not grudge one against another; for behold the Judge stands at the door. But by love serve one another.

Yours, waiting to come to 1335 days,—and also, waiting for an answer, PETER HOUGH.
Mariposa, May 16, 1846.

ANSWER TO BRO. HOUGH.—Bro. Hough calls for an answer. In a word we will give it. Your communication we see is dated May 16; we received it July 24. 'The Advocate,' in which it was first published, for some cause, does not come to us. Hence it is not our fault that Bro. H. has waited so long for an answer.

After carefully examining all he has said, we are still constrained to think that the Savior did discourse in Matt. 24, on the time of his coming; and so Bro. Hough teaches, if we understand a part of his communication. He says, 'Neither can I agree with you, that 'at the doors' is as definite as our Lord warrants us in being.' 'As definite,' on what? Time, of course.

When he has looked at the subject again, we think he will see that the disciples not only asked the question, in Matt. 24th, 'what will be the sign of thy coming?' but 'when shall these things be?'—When, implies time, not only in the question but in the answer. 'When ye shall see all these things, know that he is near, even at the doors.' If time, in this case is not implied in 'when' and 'near,' then we do not know their meaning.

Let all examine the subject, as taught by the Savior, and decide according to the plain import of his word. Soon we shall see eye to eye on all those points on which we now differ. Let us keep the unity of the Spirit.

The New Earth.

The following extract respecting the New Earth, is from a Catholic work, published about 1776. It is valuable, as containing the opinions of some ancient writers.—Advent Herald.

Rev. 21: 1—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth. For the first heaven and first earth was gone, and the sea is now no more." Here is a total change in our system of nature. The earth, that was, the heaven or sky, with its atmosphere, its clouds, &c., had passed away and vanished; but now a "new heaven and a new earth" appear. The same we are taught by St.

Peter; "We look for new heavens and a new earth, according to his promises in which justice dwelleth;"—2 Pet. 3: 13. This new heaven and new earth are not of new creation, but the former heaven and earth, purified by fire, renewed by the hand of God, and made much more perfect, "not other heavens and another earth," says St. Jerome, "but the former ones changed into better." Isa. 45. And St. Gregory the Great, speaking of the same, says: "Others are not to be created, but these same renewed." Lib. 17 Moral in Job. c. 2. This sentiment is founded on Scripture. The Psalmist represents the heavens and the earth growing old and wearing away like a garment, and then to be changed. "In the beginning, O Lord, thou foundedst the earth: and the heavens are the works of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou remainest: and all of them shall grow old like a garment: and as a vesture thou shalt change them, and they shall be changed." Ps. 101: 26, &c. Solomon also seems to assure us, that everything shall remain that has been created: "I have learned that all the works which God has made, continue for ever." Eccl. 3: 14. Upon which St. Gregory the Great's comment is: "They will pass, as to their present figure or appearance, but as to their substance they will remain for ever." Lib. 17 Moral. in Job c. 5. St. Austin tells us, that "by the change of things the world will not entirely perish or be annihilated. Its form or external appearance will be changed, but not its substance." Lib. 20 de Civ. c. 14. And again more amply: "The figure of this world will pass away by the general conflagration. The qualities of the corruptible elements, of which our world is composed, which were proportioned to our corruptible bodies, will be entirely destroyed by the fire: and the substance of those elements will acquire new qualities which will be suitable to our immortal bodies: and thus the world, by becoming more perfect, will be proportioned to the then improved state of the human body." Ibid. c. 16. After the same manner speak St. Justin, St. Basil, and other holy fathers. Hence we may conclude that our new world, as to its substance, will be the same as the old; but its qualities will be totally altered, so as to be no more pernicious to the human body, offensive to the senses, or obnoxious to unseasonable vicissitudes. Every part will then appear bright, glorious, pleasing to the senses, and inspiring happiness. They will form as it were a paradise. Whether the superior heavens, that contain the sun, moon, and stars, will undergo the same change, is uncertain; and the writers on this subject are divided in their opinions.

Sighing for Home.

It is now about fifteen years since I took my leave of the Baptist Church, and put out to sea in the life-boat, having cleared my skirts of the pollution of the body with which I had been associated. It was on this wise. It pleased the Lord to visit me with his illuminating Spirit, and show me myself in a manner unknown before, which led me to look within, with deep searchings of heart, and at length produced a burden similar to my first conviction. I could not convict myself of any particular sin; yet such was my burden of mind that I could not attend to my business as usual; and I felt like Bunyan's pilgrim with a pack on his back. At last these words came to me: "At midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh: go ye out to meet him." Immediately, without conferring with flesh and blood, I commenced proclaiming the message, and began in my own family, (having a number of workmen,) and the effect that followed surprised me; for sinners and backsliders fell to weeping, and before the end of two days some were rejoicing in a sin-forgiving God. I then went to the neighbors; and such light, peace and joy followed as never can be forgotten. By this time the world looked very small, and eternity filled my mind, the things of God and eternal life were all my theme.

Thus I spent a number of months, by which time a general awakening throughout the town was manifest. (To God be the glory.) By this time the Lord led me to behold the corruption of the church as a body or denomination, and forthwith I communicated my mind to the church, and to my surprise I appeared to them deluded, but nevertheless, some few there were who sympathized with me, and held up my hands. After laboring with the church some years to no profit, I withdrew my fellowship from them as a body: consequently they labored with me, but the Lord sustaining me, they could not gainsay or successfully resist. However, they have a law, and by that law I saw that I should be cast out; and so it was. But Christ was better than the church, and he bade me be of good courage. Then were the promises of God precious, such as these: "Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified; but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." "Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

From this time until I heard the Advent cry, I had no light on the Millennium, distinct, but the Lord led me by his Spirit and word in that path that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. The doctrine of holiness, as given by Paul, (Romans 8th and onward,) occupied my mind mostly for a number of years, and before understanding it experimentally the Lord poured upon me the spirit of mighty prayer, for a number of months, unlike anything I ever knew before. Consequently I found what it was to be "filled with all the fulness of God."

When the Advent doctrine, by Bro. Miller and others, began to be preached in 1842, I attended a Camp Meeting, feeling confident I could detect any error the devil could invent. My shield was this. "My sheep hear my voice, and they know and follow me: a stranger will they not follow." But instead of error I found the truth, and I commenced devouring the precious food; for you must know I was very hungry for the bread of life, by this time, being out at sea, encountering the winds and waves, the rocks and quicksands. Before the meeting closed, I had the evidence in my inmost soul that this doctrine was from Heaven, and that the cry was of God, whatever might be the issue. I therefore put my hand to the plough, and have not looked back since. I was not staggered at the passing of '43, nor seventh month, neither shall I be at seven more disappointments, provided the Lord leads by his Spirit and word.

Perhaps you would like to know my position in view of the past, present and future. Well, as Paul said on one occasion, "Except ye abide in the ship ye cannot be saved," so if we make shipwreck "concerning the FAITH," we cannot be saved, or "if any man draw back" from the faith of the Gospel, the Lord says, "My soul hath no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but that believe to the saving of the soul." Again—"Whosoever is ashamed of me and my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of the Father, with all the holy angels."

My position is that of waiting and groaning. The scripture indicates a season of waiting, after having done the will of God, for the return of that very same Jesus; the signs of the times indicate to me that we are drawing near that haven of eternal rest. Wherefore, dearly beloved brethren, scattered upon the mountains of Israel, of whom the world is not worthy, take courage, fight manfully; the trial of our faith is needful. Perhaps we may pass this fall, and possibly next spring; but this is all the light we now have on time, and that is sufficient. Our faith may have to be tried seven times, before we are made white by the blood of the Lamb, and meet to be presented faultless before him at his coming.

Yours, &c., JOHN HEATH, Jr.

The Great Purchase.

It is exceedingly difficult for most people to discover how it is that a man can be bought by his fellow, and the one purchased, not become the purchaser's slave.

I am, therefore, about to present a case, showing how one may be purchased by his fellow, and yet remain "free." Although the one purchased may be compelled to be a slave to a cruel master, and be compelled to suffer, by reason of the stripes of a tyrant's lash; yet, there is a sense in which this child of sorrow may be said to be free:

"Art thou called, being a servant? care not for it; but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather; for he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's FREE MAN: likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant. Ye are bought with a price," 1 Cor. 7: 21, 23. Here is an example, teaching that a man may be "bought with a price," and yet be free. Yes, he can be the "Lord's free man." O freedom! Heaven's high boon! When the great Purchaser, who hath already paid the price, shall be pleased to "gather his elect from the four winds," may thy crown be mine!

Again: "Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Acts 20: 28. "Christ hath redeemed (purchased) us from the curse of the law; and that the blessing of Abraham might be given unto us." Gal. 3: 13, 14. "And if ye call on the Father, who, without respect of persons, judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear: forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed (purchased or bought) with corruptible things, as silver or gold; but with the precious blood of Christ, as a lamb without blemish, and without spot." 1 Pet. 1: 17-19. "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 9, 10.

Here are a few of the many passages in scripture, which bring to our view the purchase of men, women and children, by the precious blood of Christ." How great this purchase! purchased for freedom's altar, and not for slaves! There is one consideration connected with this great purchase, which makes the thought of it doubly glorious. It will be remembered that the "Colonization Society" purchase slaves; and, then, they call them free; while they provide for them no food, no clothing, no place to live, except now and then a miserable cargo of them, are carried and left on the African coast to perish;—but our Purchaser has also purchased a place for us to live forever and enjoy our freedom. While these "liberators" provide for the liberated slaves no food, our Liberator shall give us to eat of the hidden manna from the Paradise of God. While they give no clothing, our Purchaser will clothe us with immortality. While they give no foot of land for a possession, our Liberator will give us "THE PURCHASED POSSESSION." Eph. 1: 9, 14, Dan. 7: 27. This possession, fellow pilgrims, will soon, very soon, be enjoyed by the faithful.

I am still looking for, and anxiously expecting the Lord from heaven.

Letter from Bro. D. Keeler.

Bro. Marsh:—Feeling grateful in view of the light shed upon the sacred pages in these last days, I cannot but express my gratitude that I have been enabled to cast off all prejudice, and receive the truth as revealed in the Bible. And I feel the more grateful, when I look abroad and see how blinded the great mass of the human family are, by that soul-destroying influence, prejudice: which forbids them receiving any thing, or hearing to any thing but the customs and traditions of these times. The great majority of mankind, (from mental imbecility) in a great measure, ignorant, are ever the subservient dupes of the selfish policy of the few. This may be emphatically said of these times. In the days of the reformation, the Bible was in the hands of all. It was, in fact, the great prime mover of the whole course and conduct of Luther. It was preached to the common people, the most illiterate of whom would go forth with Bible in hand, and defend the doctrine of the reformation, so that it spread over Germany, and the strongest supporters of the Catholic church, were made to quail before the force of truth, wielded by these champions of the reformation. The Catholic religion was sustained by suppressing the Bible, and keeping the mass of the church in ignorance. In this way their fables were received as divine, and Priest-craft sustained as an institution from heaven. But through the instrumentality of the Bible, this corrupt institution was shaken to its centre, and the votaries of truth led to pray for the coming of Christ to destroy this man of sin, as promised in the Bible. So much for a diligent study, and belief in the Scriptures. In process of time, the Protestant church became skeptical, lost its confidence in the plain and simple truths of the Bible—her ministers denying the power of God by embracing the doctrine of rationalism, and in this way brought about a revolution in the faith of the church, which now defies all the efforts of truth to counteract. The doctrine of rationalism having obtained the deep, pungent, heart-searching preaching of the reformation, gave way to human compositions, critical essays, &c. In this way the Bible was thrown into the shade by the ministry, and all the fables now held by the church, inculcated. I look now upon the Protestant church, as in the same position as that of the Catholic. Ministers and people of each, practically denying the inspiration of the Bible, and each, special subjects of prophecy. Let none cherish that mistaken charity which shall cause them to look with complacency upon the different sects of our land. Is it usual in the history of God's dealings with his people, to own and bless them, when, like the character in the Revelation, they become amalgamated with the world? Can we look upon the history of the past and believe this? Has not God driven away and utterly forsaken his once elect people? How was it with the Jewish church at the first advent of Christ? Did they receive him? Was not His church utterly corrupted, and had they not wholly lost sight of the true hope of the gospel? Though they kept up the form, yet so blind had they become to the true hope of the gospel, that they actually denied the Redeemer of Israel, and put to death the very antitype of all their sacrifice. They, like the church of the present time, had every evidence necessary, by which they might know that Christ should so come, and at such a time.—Hence, Christ reproved them. "Ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" and many like things said he unto them, showing that they ought to have known these things. A few then, as there will be when He comes again, were waiting for Him. The church had then the same means of knowing the time of His coming, as the church now has: in fact, the very same prophecy which foretold the time of His second coming, also definitely pointed out the precise time in that period, when He should appear as the Savior. The manner and circumstances of His birth, as well as the whole history of His life, were minutely foretold, and to this day stand recorded on the pages of inspiration. So, in the case of his second coming, the Savior not only gave to his disciples a clear history, from His time, down to the end of the world, with signs that should immediately precede His coming, but the prophets likewise spoke particularly of these days, and of the precise time of His appearing, as King of glory. Historical facts, both sacred and profane, are calculated to confirm us in the faith in which we stand, rather than approbate in the least, the course and belief of the professed church of Christ. How degenerated that church, which says that Christ has come already, as the nominal church now assumes, when she says that Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem. Here the Universalist meets them on common ground. They both adopt the same principle of interpretation,—both mystify and spiritualize away the plainest and most glorious parts of the redeeming plan. Their premises must lead them to deny the personal coming of Christ—the resurrection of the body—in one word, the restitution. This word, restitution, to me, has a glory unparalleled in Scripture, and should settle us immovably in the faith in which we now stand. When all was lost, Eden, bliss, and immortality, the glorious restitution, was foretold. Restitution of what? that which was lost by the fall. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." In this, is comprehended the whole plan of redemption.

Again, "To thee and thy seed will I give this land for an everlasting possession." To thy seed which is Christ. If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. And again, Christ is promised as the successor of David's throne, which was to endure forever, as the sun. The Prophets and Apostles have conformed to these great promises, and more fully illustrated and explained them. Now, we have the gospel of the glad tidings of this kingdom—this restitution at hand—the good news of the triumph of Christ over the prince of the power of death and hell. Thus, we have one view, from Eden lost, to Eden restored. How glorious the Bible seems in this light. How comprehensive, how interesting. It is one grand whole, embracing the past, present, and future—all that pertains to the duty and interests of mankind. It also represents the mortal state, now about to close, and the ushering in of the great Sabbath of rest,—the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy Prophets, since the world began. Joy of the Saints.

And so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words. 1 Thess. vi. 10-12.

In the City of God we shall soon be at rest ;
For Jesus, our Lord, will soon come

To make all his subjects eternally blest,
And provide them a permanent home.

No sorrow, nor darkness, nor death, woe, nor sin
Shall be known in that blissful abode ;
For nothing unholy shall enter therein ;
And its light is the glory of God.

The winds of Erebus shall never blow there,
To engender corruption and death ;
But the fragrance of Eden shall float on the air,
And impregnate with life every breath.

The joys of the saints, when at home they all meet,
Shall prompt them to break forth in praise,
And with songs of thanksgiving their Savior to greet,
And their loud halleluias to raise.

Our joys, when we enter,—tho' mighty indeed,
Far greater than mortals could hear—
Shall seem, in the retrospect, less than we need
To preserve us from sorrow and fear.

As high as the heavens our transports shall rise,
And vast as eternity be,
And the drop we received, at the first, as our prize,
Shall become like the fathomless sea.

Our abode shall be splendid as God can adorn,
And there we forever shall stay.
No misfortune, nor grievance shall cause us to mourn,
Nor frighten our pleasures away.

But our happiness uninterrupted shall be,
And our peace shall increase like a river ;
Our joys shall expand like the waves of the sea,
And our pleasures depart from us never.

The holiest joys, in their loftiest flight,
That man, in the flesh, ever knew,
Are as dew to the showery of holy delight,
With which God shall his people renew.

We may fancy, imagine, and ponder, and know
All we can of that heavenly rest ;
Yet all we imagine shall fall far below
What God shall bestow on the blest.

Nothing short of eternity's endless extent
Can suffice for the work of the Lord,
In which all his infinite love can be spent
In the blessings his power can afford.

O! my soul takes delight in believing that we
All the fullness of God, then, shall know ;
That our power to enjoy fully equal shall be
To the power of God to bestow.

The rapturous transports we then shall enjoy
Baffles all the description of man ;
For God his omnipotent power shall employ
To make us as blest as he can.

To our rapturous delights, O, what transports 'twill add
To have Jesus dwell with us there,
To rejoice in our joys, and smile when we're glad,
And in all our beatitude share.

O Jesus, my Lord, in the morn of that day
Receive me among all the blest ;
For how can I bear to be driven away
From thee, and shut out from that rest!

THE SOUL.—If the globe were one mass of the purest gold—if the stars were so many jewels of the finest order—if the moon were a diamond, and the sun a ruby—they were less than nothing, when compared with the infinite value of one soul.

What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

ANCIENT BABYLON.

FROM 'EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.'

BY A. KIETH.

Babylon shall become heaps. Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, is now the greatest of ruins. "Immense tumuli of temples, palaces, and human habitations of every description," are everywhere seen, and form "long and varied lines of ruins," which, in some places, "rather resemble natural hills than mounds which cover the remains of great and splendid edifices." Those buildings which were once the labor of slaves and the pride of kings, are now mishappen heaps of rubbish. The whole face of the country is covered with vestiges of building, in some places consisting of brick walls surprisingly fresh, in others, merely a vast succession of mounds of rubbish, of such indeterminate figures, variety and extent, as to involve the person who should have formed any theory in inextricable confusion. "Long mounds running from north to south, are crossed by others from east to west ;" and are only distinguished by their form, direction, and number, from the decayed banks of canals. "The greater part of the mounds are certainly the remains of buildings, originally disposed in streets, and crossing each other at right angles." "The more distinct and prominent of these 'heaps' are double, or lie in parallel lines, each exceeding twenty feet in height, and are intersected by cross passages, in such a manner as to place beyond a doubt, the fact of their being rows of houses or streets fallen to decay." Such was the form of the streets of Babylon, leading towards the gates : and such are now the lines of its heaps. "There are also, in some places, two hollow channels, and three mounds, running parallel to each other for a considerable distance, the central mound being, in such cases, a broader and flatter mass than the other two, as if there had been two streets going parallel to each other, the central range of houses which divided them being twice the size of the others, from their being double residences, with a front and door of entrance to face each avenue." "Irregular hillocks and mounds, formed over masses of ruins, present at every step, memorials of the past."

From the temple of Belus and the two royal palaces, to the streets of the city and single dwellings, all have become heaps ; and the only difference or gradation now is, from the vast and solid masses of ruins which look like mountains, to the slight mound that is scarcely elevated above the plain. Babylon is fallen, literally fallen to such a degree that those who stand on its site and look on numerous parallel mounds, with a hollow space between, are sometimes at a loss to distinguish between the remains of a street or a canal, or to tell where the crowds frequented, or where the waters flowed. Babylon is fallen, till its ruins cannot fall lower than they lie. It is cut down to the ground. Her foundations are fallen ; and the ruins rest not on them. Its palaces, temples, streets, and houses, lie "buried in shapeless heaps." And "the view of Babylon," as taken from the spot, is truly a picture of utter desolation, presenting its heaps to the eye, and showing how, as if literally buried under them, Babylon is brought down to the grave.

Cast her up as heaps. Mr. Rich, in describing a grand heap of ruins, the shape of which is nearly a square of seven hundred yards length and breadth, states that the workmen pierce into it in every direction, in search of bricks, "hollowing out deep ravines and pits, and throwing up the rubbish in heaps on the surface." "The summit of the Kasr" (supposed to have been the lesser palace) is in like manner, "covered with heaps of rubbish."

Let nothing of her be left. "Vast heaps constitute all that now remains of ancient Babylon." All its grandeur is departed ; all its treasures have been spoiled ; all its excellence has utterly vanished ; the very heaps are searched for bricks, when nothing else can be found ; even these are not left wherever they can be taken away, and Babylon has for ages been 'a quarry above ground,' ready to the hand of every successive despoiler. Without the most remote allusion to this prophecy, Captain Mignan describes a mound attached to the palace, ninety yards in breadth by half that height, the whole of which is deeply furrowed, in the same manner as the generality of the mounds. "The ground is extremely soft, and tiresome to walk over, and appears completely exhausted of all its building materials : nothing now is left save one towering hill, the earth of which is mixed with fragments of broken brick, red varnished pottery, tile, bitumen, mortar, glass, shells, and pieces of mother-of-pearl,"—worthless fragments, of no value to the poorest. From thence shall she be taken—let nothing of her be left. One traveller, towards the end of last century, passed over the site of ancient Babylon, without being conscious of having traversed it.

While the workmen cast her up as heaps in piling up the rubbish while excavating for brick, that they may take them from thence, and that nothing may be left ; they labor more than trebly in the fulfilment of prophecy, for the numerous and deep excavations form pools of water, on the overflowing of the Euphrates, and, annually filled, they are not dried up throughout the year. "Deep cavities are also formed by the Arabs, when digging for hidden treasure." "The ground is sometimes covered with pools of water in the hollows."

Sit on the dust, sit on the ground, O daughter of the Chaldeans. The surface of the mounds, which form all that remains of Babylon, consists of decomposed buildings reduced to dust ; and over all the ancient streets and habitations, there is literally nothing but the dust or the ground on which to sit.

Thy nakedness shall be uncovered. "Our path," says Captain Mignan, "lay through the great mass of ruined heaps on the site of shrunken Babylon. And I am perfectly incapable of conveying an adequate idea of the dreary, lonely nakedness that appeared before me."

Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness.—There reigns throughout the ruins, "a silence profound as the grave." Babylon is now "a silent scene, a sublime solitude."

It shall never be inhabited, nor dwelt in from generation to generation. From Rauwolf's testimony it appears that in the sixteenth century "there was not a house to be seen." And now the "eye wanders over a barren desert, in which the ruins are nearly the only indication that it had ever been inhabited." "It is impossible," adds Major Keppel, "to behold this scene and not to be reminded how exactly the predictions of Isaiah and Jeremiah have been fulfilled, even in the appearance Babylon was doomed to present, that she should never be inhabited; that the Arabian should not pitch his tent there; that she should become heaps; that her cities should be a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness." "Babylon is spurned alike by the heel of the Ottomans, the Israelites, and the sons of Ishmael." It is "a tenantless and desolate metropolis." It shall not be inhabited, but be wholly desolate.

Neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there, neither shall the shepherds make their folds there.—It was prophesied of Ammon, that it should be a stable for camels, and a couching-place for flocks; and of Philistia, that it should be cottages for shepherds, and a pasture of flocks. But Babylon was to be visited with a far greater desolation, and to become unfit or unsuited even for such a purpose. And that neither a tent would be pitched there, even by an Arab, nor a fold made by a shepherd, implies the last degree of solitude and desolation. "It is common in these parts, for shepherds to make use of ruined edifices to shelter their flocks in." But Babylon is an exception. Instead of taking the bricks from thence, the shepherd might, with facility, erect a defence from wild beasts, and make a fold for his flock amid the heaps of Babylon; and the Arab, who fearlessly traverses it by day, might pitch his tent by night. But neither the one nor the other could now be persuaded to remain a single night among the ruins. The superstitious dread of evil spirits, far more than the natural terror of the wild beasts, effectually prevents them. Captain Mignan was accompanied by six Arabs, completely armed, but he "could not induce them to remain towards night, from the apprehension of evil spirits. It is impossible to eradicate this idea from the minds of these people, who are very deeply imbued with superstition." And when the sun sunk behind the Mujelibe, and the moon would have still lighted his way among the ruins, it was with infinite regret that he obeyed "the summons of his guides." "All the people of the country assert that it is extremely dangerous to approach this mound after nightfall, on account of the multitude of evil spirits by which it is haunted." Neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their flock there. But,

Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there, and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures;—and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs (goats) shall dance there, &c. "There are many dens of wild beasts in various parts. There are quantities of porcupine quills (kephud?)." And while the lower excavations are often pools of water, "in most of the cavities are numbers of bats and owls." These souterrains (caverns), over which the chambers of majesty may have been spread, are now the refuge of jackals and other savage animals. The mouths of their entrances are strewed with the bones of sheep and goats; and the loathsome smell that issues from most of them is sufficient warning not to proceed into the den." The king of the forest now ranges over the site of that Babylon which Nebucadnezzar built for his own glory. And the temple of Belus, the greatest work of man, is now like unto a natural den of lions. "Two or three majestic lions" were seen upon its heights by Sir Robert Ker Porter, as he was approaching it; and "the broad prints of their feet were left plain in the clayey soil." Major Keppel saw there a similar footprint of a lion. It is also the unmoled retreat of jackals, hyenas, and other noxious animals.—Wild beasts are "numerous" at the Mujelibe, as well as on Birs Nimrod. "The mound was full of large holes; we entered some of them, and found them strewed with the carcases and skeletons of animals recently killed. The order of wild beasts was so strong, that prudence got the better of curiosity, for we had no doubt as to the savage nature of the inhabitants. Our guides, indeed, told us that all the ruins abounded in lions and other wild beasts; so literally has the divine prediction been fulfilled, that wild beasts of the desert should lie there, and their houses be full of doleful creatures; that the wild beasts of the island should cry in their desolate houses."

The sea is come upon Babylon. She is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.—The traces of the western bank of the Euphrates are now no longer discernible. The river overflows unrestrained; and the very rains, with every appearance of the embankment, have been swept away. "The ground there is low and marshy, and presents not the slightest vestige of former buildings, of any description whatever." Morasses and ponds tracked the ground in various parts. For a long time after the general subsiding of the Euphrates, a great part of this plain is little better than a swamp, &c.—"The ruins of Babylon are then inundated, so as to render many parts of them inaccessible, by converting the valleys among them into morasses." But while Babylon is thus covered with the multitude of waves, and the waters come upon it, yet, in striking contrast and seeming contradiction to such a feature of desolation (like the formation of pools of water from the casting up of heaps,) at all times the elevated, sun-burnt ruins, which the waters do not overflow, and generally throughout the year, the "dry waste" and "parched and burning plain," on which the heaps of Babylon lie, equally prove that it is a desert, a dry land, and a wilderness. One part, even on the western side of the river, is "low and marshy, and another an arid desert."

It shall never be inhabited. It shall be utterly desolate. "Ruins composed, like those of Babylon, of heaps of rubbish impregnated with nitre, cannot be cultivated." "The decomposing materials of a Babylonian structure, doom the earth on which they perish, to lasting sterility.—On this part of the plain, both where traces of buildings were left, and where none had stood, all seemed equally naked of vegetation; the whole ground appearing as if it had been washed over and over again, by the coming and receding waters, till every bit of genial soil was swept away; its half-clay, half-sandy surface being left in ridgy streaks, like what is often seen on the flat shores of the sea, after the retreating of the tide." Babylon, which in its pride did say, I shall be a lady forever, is no more called the lady of kingdoms, but is desolate forever.

Bel boweth down. The temple of Belus, or Baal, here evidently spoken of, was a stadium, or furlong in height, computed by Major Rennell, at five hundred, and by Prideaux, at six hundred feet. By the lowest computation, it was higher than the greatest of the pyramids. The highest of the heaps which now constitute fallen Babylon, is the Birs Nimrod, generally supposed to have been the temple of Belus. The heap occupies a larger space of ground than that on which the temple stood, having spread, in falling down, beyond its original base. It rests not upon its ancient foundations, but lies upon the earth an enormous mass of ruin. "At first sight it presents the appearance of a hill, with a castle at the top," so as not only to deceive the eye on beholding it at a distance, or in looking on its picture; but, "incredible as it may seem, the ruins on the summit of it are actually those spoken of by Pere Emanuel, who takes no sort of notice of the prodigious mound on which they are elevated. It is almost needless to observe, that the whole of the mound is itself a ruin; and it is altogether needless to add another word, to show that it is bowed down, as may be seen by the sketch of the comparative ancient and modern height annexed to the plan of Birs Nimrod, in Sir Robert K. Porter's travels. Bel is confounded. Originally constructed of eight successive towers, one rising above another, it is now consolidated into one irregular hill, presenting a different aspect, and of different altitudes on every side,—a confused and mishapen mass. The eastern face presents two stages of hill; the first showing an elevation of about sixty feet, cloven in the middle into a deep ravine, and intersected in all directions by furrows, channelled there by the descending rains of succeeding ages. The summit of this first stage stretches in rather a flattened sweep to the base of the second ascent, which springs out of the first in a steep and abrupt conical form, terminated on the top by a solitary standing fragment of brick-work, like the ruin of a tower. From the foundation of the whole pile to the base of this piece of ruin, measures about two hundred feet; and from the bottom of the ruin to its shattered top, are thirty-five feet. On the western side, the entire mass rises at once from the plain in one stupendous, though irregular pyramidal hill, broken in the slopes of its sweeping acclivities by the devastations of time, and rougher destruction. The southern and northern fronts, are particularly abrupt." Such, and so confounded, is now the temple of Belus.

I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain. On the summit of the hill are "immense fragments of brick-work, of no determinate figures, tumbled together, and converted into solid vitrified masses." "Some of these huge fragments measured twelve feet in height, by twenty-four in circumference; and from the circumference of the standing brick-work having remained in a perfect state, the change exhibited in these is only accountable from their having been exposed to the fiercest fire, or rather scathed by lightning." "They are completely molten—a strong presumption that fire was used in the destruction of the tower, which, in parts, resembles what the Scriptures prophesied it should become, 'a burnt mountain.' In the denunciation respecting Babylon, fire is particularly mentioned as an agent against it. To this Jeremiah evidently alludes, when he says that it should be 'as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah,' on which cities, it is said, 'the Lord rained brimstone and fire.' 'Her high gates shall be burned with fire, and the people shall labor in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.'" "In many of these immense unshapen masses might be traced the gradual effects of the consuming power, which has produced so remarkable an appearance; exhibiting parts burnt to that variegated dark hue, seen in the vitrified matter lying about in glass manufactories; while, through the whole of these awful testimonies of the fire, (whatever fire it was!) which, doubtless, hurled them from their original elevation." (I will roll thee down from the rocks) "the regular lines of the cement are visible, and so hardened in common with the bricks, that when the masses are struck, they ring like glass. On examining the base of the standing wall, contiguous to these huge transmuted substances, it is found tolerably free from any similar changes, in short, quite in its original state; hence, continues Sir Robert Ker Porter, "I draw the conclusion, that the consuming power acted from above, and that the scattered ruin fell from some higher point than the summit of the present standing fragment. The heat of the fire which produced such amazing effects, must have burnt with the force of the strongest furnace; and from the general appearance of the cleft in the wall, and these vitrified masses, I should be induced to attribute the catastrophe to lightning from heaven. Ruins, by the explosion of any combustible matter, would have exhibited very different appearances."

"The fallen masses bear evident proof of the operation of fire having been continued on them, as well after they were broken down as before, since every part of their surface has been so equally exposed to it, that many of them have acquired a rounded form, and in none, can its place of separation from the adjoining one be traced by any appearance of superior freshness, or any exemption from the influence of the destroying flame."

The high gates of the temple of Belus, which were standing in the time of Herodotus, have been burnt with fire: the vitrified masses which fell when Bel bowed down, rest on the top of its stupendous ruins. The hand of the Lord had been stretched upon it; it has been rolled down from the rocks, and has been made a burnt mountain,—of which it was further prophesied.

They shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations, but thou shalt be desolate forever, saith the Lord. The old wastes of Zion shall be built: its former desolations shall be raised up: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her old place, even in Jerusalem.—But it shall not be with Bel as with Zion, nor with Babylon as with Jerusalem. For as the "heaps of rubbish impregnated with nitre" which cover the site of Babylon "cannot be cultivated," so the vitrified masses on the summit of Birs Nimrod cannot be rebuilt. Though still they be of the hardest substance, and indestructible by the elements, and though once they formed the highest pinnacles of Belus, yet, incapable of being hewn into any regular form, they neither are nor can now be taken for a corner or for foundations. And the bricks on the solid fragments of wall, which rest on the summit, though neither scathed nor molten, are so firmly cemented, that according to Mr. Rich, "it is nearly impossible to detach any of them whole," or, as Capt. Mignan still more forcibly states, "they are so firmly cemented, that it is utterly impossible to detach any of them." "My most violent attempts," says Sir Robert Ker Porter, "could not separate them." And Mr. Buckingham, in assigning reasons for lessening the wonder at the total disappearance of the walls at this distant period, and speaking of the Birs Nimrod generally, observes, "that the burnt bricks (the only ones sought after,) which are found in the Mujelib, the Kasr, and the Birs Nimrod, the only three great monuments in which there are any traces of their having been used, are so difficult, in the two last indeed so impossible, to be extracted whole from the tenacity of the cement in which they are laid, that they could never have been resorted to, while any considerable portion of the walls existed to furnish an easier supply: even now, though some portion of the mounds on the eastern bank of the river" (the Birs is on the western side) "are occasionally dug into for bricks; they are not extracted without a comparatively great expense, and very few of them whole, in proportion to the great number of fragments that come up with them." Around the tower, there is not a single whole brick to be seen.

These united testimonies, given without allusion to the prediction, afford a better than any conjectural commentary, such as previously was given without reference to these facts.

While of Babylon, in general, it is said, that it would be taken from thence; and while in many places, nothing is left, yet of the burnt mountain, which forms an accumulation of ruins enough in magnitude to build a city, men do not take a stone for foundations, nor a stone for a corner. Having undergone the action of the fiercest fire, and being completely molten, the masses on the summit of Bel, on which the hand of the Lord has been stretched, cannot be reduced into any other form or substance, nor built up again by the hand of man. And the tower of Babel, afterward the temple of Belus, which witnessed the first dispersion of mankind, shall itself be witnessed by the latest generation, even as now it stands, desolate for ever,—an indestructible monument of pride and folly, and of Divine judgment and truth.—The greatest of the ruins, as one of the edifices of Babylon, is rolled down into a vast, indiscriminate, cloven, confounded, useless, and blasted mass, from which, fragments might be hurled with as little injury to the ruined heap, as from a bare and rocky mountain's side. Such is the triumph of the word of the living God, over the proudest of the temples of Baal.

WORD OF CAUTION.

Brother, sister, is it your daily aim to obey the Lord, to pray and not faint, or fall out by the way, as do others? After all my pains taking, I inhaled a drowsy drug, which nearly put me to sleep on enchanted ground. You will ask, how happened this? Well, I thought it was meat in due season, because of its prepossessing appearance, wrapping up, label, and more than all, from the word "genuine" being very plainly stamped on the outward form. O how dangerous it is to trust too much to outward appearances. May the good Lord open our eyes, and guide our feet safely through the mazes of this dark world.—Had I not taken the proper antidote in time, my case would have been more perilous than Jonah's who foolishly tried to flee from the presence of the Lord, after behaving very improperly. But the voice of the venerable apostle of the Gentiles seemed to thunder in my ear the gracious word of warning, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time because the days are evil. Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the work of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." To such as obey, our apostle says, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should come on you as a thief, we are all the children of light, and of the day;" "therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober." It is rather a rare attainment now-a-days to be sober-minded, to prove all things, hold fast that which is good, and to abstain even from the appearance of evil. But if we strive to obey God, the God of peace will be with us to bless and sanctify us, and prepare us for the coming of the Just and Holy One.

Certainly God would have frowned on Nehemiah and the "builders," if they had left off the work to which they were appointed, to quarrel, dispute, and pertinaciously to contend with Sanballat and his ungodly companions. And had the builders, laborers, and those who laded and bore burdens, misdoubted the prophecies, consequently, the faithfulness and truth of their great author, who spake at divers times and in sundry ways to the prophets, as he saw best, the consequence of such conduct would have been terrible indeed. Would to God that those who felt themselves called to the work of warning the world, and of preparing a people for the coming of the Holy One, would think on this: those also, who, at their call, may be ready to meet the Lord in peace. A little reflection on this matter, might also be useful to the editors and correspondents of papers devoted to the glad tidings of the kingdom, the prophecies which relate to the second advent, and the appearing of our Lord to judge the quick and the dead, and set up his kingdom.

In conclusion, I ask leave to introduce an appropriate remark or two, from the pen of a well known writer. "Error," says our author, "will be attacked. It must be opposed by the truth.—But, it may be asked, whether the darkness may not be more easily dissipated by the introduction of light, than by elaborate discourses upon its nature and attributes. So with moral darkness or error. To dissipate it most effectually, the easiest and readiest way is to introduce the light of truth. No preacher is obliged to learn all the errors of all ages that he may be able to oppose them, nor is a congregation enlightened in the knowledge of God by such expositions of errors. Present opposing errors may require attention; but to attack them most successfully, it is only necessary to enforce the opposing truths.

This is a very grave subject, and requires very grave attention. Much depends upon a rational and scriptural decision of the question,—which is the most effectual way to oppose and destroy error? To aid us in such an inquiry, it is necessary to examine how the prophets and apostles opposed the errors of their times. The world was as full of error in those days, [we question this,] as it has ever been since. The idolators of the pagan world, and the various doctrines of the sects, of philosophers, in and out of the land of Israel, threw as much labor into their hands, as the various heresies of apostate christendom have thrown into ours. Their general rule was, to turn the artillery of light, and to gather into a focus the arrows of the day, upon the dark shades of any particular error. Their philosophy was—the splendors of light most clearly display the blackness of darkness, and scatter it from its presence. Thus they opposed idolatry, superstition, and error, of every name. Going forth as the armor of light, as the sun in the morning, the shades of the night retired from their presence, and the cheering beams of the day so gladdened the eyes of their converts, that they loved darkness no more. Let us go and do likewise. Amen and Amen!"

The foregoing extract is from Campbell's extra on regeneration, and it really contains matter worthy of our most serious attention. It is well known that Mr. C. in his debate with Owen, states 1847 as the time of the advent, and so does Duffield, S. M. McCorkle, and others; truly the Lord is at hand. O let us watch, pray, and be sober, that we may not be found asleep when Christ our life appears.

JOHN MOFFATT.

Palapso, May 24, 1846.

A Word of Exhortation.

Be ye also patient: stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.—James 4: 8.

This, brethren and sisters, is an important exhortation: it comes from one of the tried and faithful servants of Christ, "to the twelve tribes scattered abroad, greeting:" "It is spoken to brethren. Now let us see if we can justly claim to be brethren of James. If so, then let us take heed to his teachings, for he was inspired, and wrote as the Holy Ghost instructed. He says at the commencement of his epistle, "count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing that the trying of your faith worketh patience, but let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."—Thus he goes on with words of instruction and comfort, with warnings to the wicked, and especially to those who "have heaped treasure together for the last days," and who "have killed the just." Then, after leading the mind down to the last days, he presents an object of comfort to his brethren. And what is it? Let him answer: "For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."—This then is the end set before the poor, despised followers of Jesus, who have been scattered abroad and oppressed by the rich, the noble, the proud and depraved, who have made slaughter of God's flock. He gives a figure of "the husbandman, who waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it," &c. "Be ye also patient."

Well, we know how the husbandman waiteth for his fruit. He takes care to do all that is required for its growth, yet he depends wholly on the God of nature to bring it to maturity. He also knows the season for harvest, and has all things ready, waiting patiently, and with anxiety, makes his calculations for gathering his crops.—He counts the months and days when his garner shall be replenished. It is the only hope he has for sustenance, and with patient, confident assurance, he hails the harvest with joy. But James does not leave the subject by merely drawing a figure from nature. He next points his brethren to the prophets, "who have spoken in the name of the Lord;" for an example of "suffering and of patience." James "counted them happy" also, "which endure." Well my brethren, can we learn a lesson of profit from the example of the prophets? Let us begin to ponder it in our heart. Let us look at the suffering of our fathers in the Lord, and see the patience they had, although the coming of their great deliverer was not at hand; but seeing the promises "afar off," they embraced them, and confessed that they were pilgrims and strangers on the earth." How much more should we, who see the signs of the near approach of Jesus, be in possession of that patience which will endure all things, and that faith which works by love and purifies the heart, and overcomes the world.

Let us look over the history of those who have faithfully followed God, who have stood by the truth, and see the "examples of suffering and patience:" and let our mouths be stopped when we complain of our trials. Look at the case of Job, Daniel, the worthies, and Abraham. Paul tells us that "Abraham, after he had patiently endured, obtained the promise," and exhorts us to "be not slothful, but followers of them, who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises." Jesus tells us that on good ground (parable of the sower,) are they which, in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience. Again: we are exhorted in patience to possess our souls. "Patience worketh experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed." "If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it."

Again: ye have need of that patience that will enable you, after ye have done the will of God to receive the promise. O my brethren, let us look at the lesson of patience. Jesus says those who shall be kept from the hour of temptation, will keep the word of his patience, and "here is the patience of the saints."

In Rom. 8: 7, eternal life is promised to those that continue patient in well doing. Paul says, "rejoice in hope, patient in tribulation, instant in prayer, and prays that the Lord will direct the hearts of his Thessalonian brethren "into the love of God, and patient waiting for Christ." Peter exhorts to do well and suffer patiently. Why should we take all things patiently? Let James answer. He says, "the Lord draweth nigh."—He must be speaking to a people who are looking for deliverance, that are oppressed, that need to exercise patience in waiting for their burdens to be removed, their trials to cease, and their mourning to end. It can be none others than those, who like Paul, "groat within themselves, waiting the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." It is then, those who are "looking for the Lord from heaven," and the "manifestation of the sons of God."

We look for Jesus, the captain of our salvation, to come and receive us to himself, that we may be with him. He has not promised that we should go to him, but that he would come to us. Glory to God and the Lamb, for such a promise. We have looked with earnest expectation for his return, and we have been disappointed, but not discouraged; for the evidence stands good that "he is nigh, even at the door." Therefore, let us "stablish our hearts, by receiving and obeying the truth, looking unto Jesus, and consider him who endured such contradictions of sinners against himself, lest we be weary and faint in our mind." Let us stand on the Word, the sure foundation, not complaining at our trials, or mourning over our disappointments. But let us hope unto the end for the salvation that will be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Let our whole trust be in the living God.

Yours, expecting to enter the kingdom soon,
ISAAC C. WELLCOME.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, AUGUST 12, 1846.

Meeting at Le Roy.

Through the blessing of our heavenly Father, we were enabled to attend the recent meeting at Le Roy, and to address the people once on the all important subject of the coming of the Lord, and the necessary preparation to meet him. The short respite from the labors of our office, breathing the fresh country air, and mingling with the joyful saints at this meeting, was reviving and invigorating to soul and body; and we have returned to our post, with renewed strength for the work of our calling. We mean, as soon as circumstances will admit, to take more frequently similar exercises abroad among our brethren: it doubtless would tend to the improvement of our health, and to the furtherance of the cause in which we labor.

Brn. Bywater, Hill and Johnson, were in attendance, preached the Word during the meeting, and are strong in the faith of soon beholding the coming of their Lord. This also was truly be said of the brethren generally who attended the meeting. Seldom if ever have we seen a company of brethren apparently more grounded and settled in the truth, and more understandingly and deeply consecrated to God, than this one. It was composed of brethren and sisters from the surrounding country. Although strangers to each other in the flesh, they found that they had been made one in Christ; consequently they possessed his mind, and his power rested upon them in a signal manner during some parts of the meeting.

Sabbath afternoon was devoted to eating the supper of the Lord and exhortation. It was a joyful season to the saints, while some sinners wept under a sense of their wretchedness. May they find redemption from their sins through faith in Christ, and be saved in the day of his coming.

We parted from this dear people with joyful hopes of soon meeting them, and all the faithful, at the marriage supper of the Lamb. The bride will soon have made herself ready; then the happy meeting will take place, and the indissoluble union between her and her absent Lord will be consummated in her eternal home, the New Jerusalem, the city of our God. May I, may you, my brother, my sister, be a happy partner in this heavenly union. We most assuredly shall, if we are found having on the wedding garment at the coming of the glorious Bridegroom; but without it, we shall be banished from his presence forever. "And they that were READY went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut." "Therefore, be ye also READY: for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

Several valuable communications, designed for this number, may be expected in our next, and others, as soon as we can find room for their publication. Thank you, brethren and sisters, for these favors, and hope you will continue them.

Bible Advocate.

In noticing this paper again, we will first say that we very much regret that it has not answered our friendly inquiries, relative to the sentiments of its conductors, made in our notice of the first number of the Advocate. It professed to be a friend, and we addressed it as such; and now we ask, why it does not treat our friendly inquiries with the common civilities of true friends? Perhaps it will yet do this: it will, if it is a friend.

We also regret to see the following and like expressions in the Advocate. A writer for the fourth No. of that paper says:

"We want, in this hour of trial, a medium through which we can speak to the flock scattered abroad, and such a paper we had not either in the H. or V. I do not wish to do injustice to any one. I have aided, and still intend with my feeble ability to support and sustain both the Voice and Herald, but as they have both become ex parte upon some points, and, we believe, points of moment, (I allude to the subject of the two resurrections) upon which they have both taken sides, and by reviews and strictures introduced those principles which, in their influence, amount to absolute prohibition; we think that under the circumstances of the case, another paper (not a competitor) is called for, and should be sustained. I received, some time since, a letter from Bro. Chandler requesting my opinion and co-operation in carrying into effect a paper of this kind."

Other parts of this writer's letter show that he believes the first resurrection is the conversion of the soul.

We are pained to see such expressions as are contained in this extract, appear in print, under the sanction of the conductors of the Advocate. They are incorrect, and do great injustice to the Voice of Truth, and we think Advent Herald. We have not 'become ex parte,' as the writer charges us: our columns have been wide open, as all know, to a full investigation of this question. Will the Advocate, for the cause of truth's sake, correct this mistake? Such things are only calculated to stir up strife among brethren. Let us avoid them, and though we may differ on some points of doctrine, and feel it our duty to investigate the points of difference between us, let truth and love characterize all our communications.

Bro. Chandler, to whom the writer in the above extract refers, is one of the chief originators and conductors of the Advocate. And it appears from the letter he wrote "some time since," that the chief object he had in view in getting up the Advocate was, the propagation of his peculiar views on the first resurrection, and its kindred doctrines. This affords another conclusive evidence that we have not misjudged in this case. But as the chief object of this communication is not to further notice these unpleasant affairs, but to pursue our investigations of the doctrine of the resurrection, as held by the Advocate, we will therefore come directly to that point. In the Advocate for Aug. 1, it is said—

"If we are right in our conclusions, respecting the life through faith in Christ; the passing from death into life, which denotes regeneration of heart, is the first resurrection. And as this great moral change—"

See.
No one can mistake this position: 'regeneration of heart,' or a 'moral change,' is the first resurrection,—'if we are right.' That you are not right, brethren, in this conclusion, we think has been conclusively shown in our last week's paper, and some former numbers of our sheet. The objections we have offered to your theory should be noticed, and removed before your position can be sustained. It is easy to frame a theory, however absurd, provided we do not trouble ourselves about attempting to remove the objections which may be urged against it. But it should be remembered by all that no doctrine can be considered settled and sustained by the truth, until all objections against it are first removed. We have offered plain scriptural objections to your theory; you have not attempted to remove them; therefore, your position is not sustained.

We now offer one more objection to your theory on the first resurrection. It is drawn from Rev. 20, the only place in the Bible where 'first resurrection' occurs. According to your principles of interpretation, first resurrection means 'regeneration of heart,' death, 'moral death,' and life, 'spiritual life.' According to this principle, Rev. 20: 4-6, would read thus:—"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for Jesus and the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands; and they [spiritually] lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the [spiritually] dead lived not [spiritually] again until the thousand years were finished. This is [regeneration of heart] the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in [regeneration of heart] the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power."

How can you, dear brethren, entertain for a moment a sentiment that does such violence to the plain meaning of the word of inspiration? Will you pause in your course, and hear and receive the angel's explanation of this text? He says: 'THIS IS THE FIRST RESURRECTION.' But you say, this is 'regeneration of heart.' Do look at the warnings, in chapter 22: 19, against those who add to or take from the words of this book; and shun the fearful doom of those who knowingly do such things.

Again: The principle of interpretation adopted by the Advocate must necessarily place the beheading of the saints for the witness of Jesus and the word of God, and all that is said about not worshipping the beast, &c., before spiritual life, or 'regeneration of heart;' for these things precede their living again, and the first resurrection.

A number of texts are quoted by the Advocate to prove that there will be but one literal resurrection. They are the same, with few exceptions, quoted by sister Clemons, in her article published in the Voice of Truth for April 29. We refer the inquirer after truth to that number for a true exposition of those texts. They are there critically noticed, in our reply to sister Clemons. And as an answer to our remarks has not been attempted, we deem it superfluous to say more now on that point. We earnestly solicit our brethren to read the arguments, on both sides of this question, as presented in that paper, before you decide against the first resurrection being literal and future. And then, do not thus decide: for this glorious doctrine cheered on their pilgrimage, the patriarchs, and holy ones of their day. They sought to obtain 'a better resurrection.' Paul labored that if by any means he might attain unto the resurrection of [or, out from] the dead. He comforted his brethren with the blessed assurance that those who are Christ's shall be raised first, at his coming, then we which are alive shall be changed, and all caught up to meet our descending Lord. And the angel to John has said, 'Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.' May this glorious part be ours—it will, or we shall be changed at the last trump, if we cleave to the truth and live holy lives unto the end.

Paul says, 2 Tim. 4: 1, that Christ will 'judge the quick [or, living] and the dead' at his appearing and kingdom.' And John says, Rev. 20: 12, that he 'saw the dead, small and great, stand before God,' and that 'the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.' The principles of interpretation adopted in the third number of the Advocate, make the living and the dead in the first text mean the spiritually living and spiritually dead, but in the fourth number of that paper, the dead in the second text is made to mean the literally dead! By what principle of exegesis the last text is interpreted, we are not told. It is clear, however, that it is the principle of expediency; for, to make the dead in the last case mean spiritually dead, would leave out, what the Advocate contends is the last and general judgment, all the spiritually alive, which, of course, would be fatal to its theory of but one literal resurrection.

Is it safe to expound the word of God on such loose principles as this? It is hazardous in the extreme. And we do hope our brethren will see their danger, and flee from it without delay; and settle down upon the consistent principles of truth, which alone will abide the near approaching day of the Lord.

Definite Time.

The article from Bro. Preble, in this number, on the time of the second advent of Christ, appears very clear and conclusive. We publish it, not because our readers do not know these things, but because they do know them, and to stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance of their fearful import. Bro. P. writes, 'We had a great and good meeting yesterday, (July 26) praise God. I gave three lectures on the time, '46. My faith is very strong.'

We find this is the case with many: their faith is very strong in this year being the year for the appearing of Christ. The true A. D. 1817 evidently is the year for the termination of the 2300 days, when the sanctuary will be cleansed. The evidence in the case strongly preponderates in favor of the present being that year. This being the case, or there being a bare probability that it is, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness; earnestly desiring, and constantly looking for that great day.

We are glad to see our brethren in many places waking up on the time of the second advent of Christ. It is a fundamental doctrine in the inspired articles of our faith. It will not do to strike that article from our infallible creed, nor become unbelieving in its immutable truths. Neither must we become too dogmatical on this point, or so absorbed in it, as to lose sight of other equally weighty matters of the law of life, and consequently deceive ourselves relative to the preparation necessary to stand when the Son of man appeareth.

Acting with prudence, decision, and believing according to present light, we shall be prepared to meet the Lord at any moment; or to patiently wait his return, should he tarry beyond the time we now think we have good reason to expect him. We wish not to witness an unhealthy excitement on time.—Neither do we think it best to be so fearful of an excitement, or another disappointment, as to shun the subject of time altogether. We should look at it with the same calmness as any other portion of the inspired word, and regardless of past disappointments or future consequences, dispassionately proclaim our honest conviction on the subject to those who will hear. 'Wisdom is profitable to direct.' God will give it, if we seek it at his hand.

The omissions we have made in two articles published in this number, we hope will not prove a serious trial to their worthy authors. They treat on subjects which have been controverted to considerable length in some former numbers of our paper. We think it would not be wisdom to revive in our columns the controversy on either or both of those questions, at this momentous crisis. It is true the writers merely stated their faith in the sentiments to which we allude. To this we would have no objection, if the matter would there end; but the probability is, if published, replies would be made, and an unprofitable controversy would be the result. This we presume neither of the writers desire.

FALLEN.—We learn from a recent number of the Christian Palladium, that L. Perry, a prominent minister of the Christian connection, has fallen into the absurdities of Universalism. We are not much disappointed at this fearful step of Elder Perry; for before '43 passed, he told us that he would not preach the coming of the Lord at that time, if he actually believed he would come then. His reason was, mortification in case of disappointment! He thought more of his reputation than of the truth. No wonder that he has fallen. The Lord save him, and many others in a like condition, is the desire of our soul.

Bible Advocate.

Dear Bro. Marsh—I am glad to see your remarks in the last Voice of Truth in reference to the above paper. When I heard that the 1st No. had been sent here, I trembled for the cause of God, fearing lest that spiritualizing theory had much to do with the movement: but when I read the paper, my fears, on that account, were allayed. Still I judged it ill timed. And the more I reflect, I judge it the more so still. Two papers are as many as can be sustained at the present time. They are already embarrassed, and have to depend, in part, on donations. Why, if our Brethren in Connecticut have "money," not send it to the Herald and Voice of Truth, to enable them to enlarge their operations? I can find many in the West, who would be glad to take those papers, but are not able. If it is not designed "to interfere with any other advent paper, why send to paying subscribers to those papers? Three copies, Nos. 1 and 2, have been sent here to the subscribers to the H. and V. T. But if our brethren in Ct. still feel desirous to make extra exertions for the cause of Christ, and are unwilling the Herald and Voice of Truth should be the medium of such exertion, if they will withhold their papers from paying subscribers to those papers, and pledge themselves to keep that spiritual resurrection theory out of their paper, I will pledge myself, that I and my brethren in Northern Ohio, Michigan, and Indiana, will furnish them, forthwith, some scores of free subscribers. I hope, however, our brethren will see the thing in its true light, and let all our exertions be united. We are weak enough at best: and division has made us so. Thousands of dollars have been expended during the last eighteen months, in sending out papers, that have done nought but divide, weaken, and distract, the dear children of God. O! if those who have been instrumental in bringing about the division in Oakland Co., Mich., could now see, that once happy company, of between 30 and 40, rent and torn, until there are hardly two left together, (except those who have come back,) their hearts would be filled with sorrow. I do not think that the man who blasphemously assumes to be Jesus Christ, ever was a christian, but I do say there are christians there, and they have been divided, by heretical doctrines, propagated among them by such means. I do not charge on the conductors of the "Bible Advocate," the propagation of heresy—I am pleased with the sentiments of the paper—nor that they intend to do so—no, I hope better things. Why not then unite all their means in the papers already existing, and by united exertion, push the battle so much the more vigorously? But, it is said, "we need one here." Very well, then keep it there. Brethren in the West are in no particular want, at least, such as can pay for any paper. Reach all the mind, in your locality, you can; and God bless you in the effort.

A thought in regard to the spirit of the letter, an extract of which you give in your first notice of the Advocate. Can it be—have any of our brethren such a spirit? Does that bro. really know that the thousand years have terminated? What! that bro. talk about Popes? And if you cannot see the sun in some dark caves, "you had better fast twenty one days!" I fear there has been too much such fasting already. Are we to be told at this late hour, after we have toiled and suffered, and sacrificed our all, that we might attain unto the first resurrection, to give up this pillar of our hope? that the first resurrection is passed? I think for one I shall have to eat bitter bread, more than thrice 21 days, before I shall be willing to do it. No brother, never. If that question must come up, let it come. If Zion has not been peeled and flayed enough already, let her have a few strokes more—let her very bones be laid bare, but let the responsibility rest where it ought. What point peculiar to the advent faith has not been attacked by one or more writers, within eighteen months, and demolished in his own estimation, too? These writers have called themselves advent believers, and upbraided those who have held on to the faith, as blind or backslidden or as having cast away their confidence. I am "hurt"—grieved. But it is for the "slain of the daughter of my people." I did hope when fanaticism died, we should have peace, union and harmony in our midst—I hope so still. One word about the self-confident spirit of the letter—When I see such dogmatism, I fear, to use a western phrase, that "craft will soon be snagged."

We have a little company here, with whom I am laboring, at present, who have not cast away their confidence, but are still looking for that glorious hope and the appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ, and who, I trust, will continue to the end.

Yours fraternally, G. NEEDHAM.

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

We arrived at Exeter on the morning of the following day after leaving Liverpool. Here we met our beloved Bro. Burgess, who came to this place in company with Bro. Dentry last fall, and together gave a few lectures: a few weeks since he resolved to make another effort here: accordingly, on his own responsibility, he hired Exeter Hall, formerly occupied by the "Free church," where we are now holding our meetings. The house is very convenient, and will seat about five hundred people. Bro. Himes gave an excellent Introductory Discourse on the morning of the next Lord's day after our arrival, to a good congregation. In the afternoon and evening, the house was filled with as serious, interested, and intelligent an audience as one could ever wish to address. We appointed and attended meeting there three evenings during the week. Yesterday (Lord's day,) we again preached at the same place, to deeply interested assemblies, who hung on our lips, drank down the truth with delight, and lingered as if loath to depart, even when the meeting had been dismissed. If this first real effort for England is an index to future labors, we shall rejoice: we have concluded to follow up the meetings there during this entire week. We divided our forces on Lord's day, and held a meeting at the house of Bro. Stoodley, in Tiverton, fifteen miles from Exeter. At another time we may make an effort for that place. Bro. S. has passed the meridian of life—is a pious and wealthy gentleman, who has done much for the Advent cause in England. He has put £50 into our hands for this object. We found we could get our paper—the "European Advent Herald" printed in T., on better terms than elsewhere:—we issue an edition of 5000 copies: it is not so large as we could have desired—indeed it is not what we hope the next number to be. The Lord assisting, we mean to start the press, and start our energies, and arouse the public mind to this whole subject of the Lord at hand. Our coming was heralded in Liverpool some time before our arrival, by the "Mercury," a paper devoted to the interests of the Catholics, which spoke of us as "three shoe makers from America." We hope we shall prove ourselves able to drive the pegs sure, and to make at least one pair of shoes for his Holiness before we get done. We contemplate a visit to Plymouth soon, which the papers there we suppose understand, for they have already proclaimed "a fresh importation from the United States," of ministers belonging to the "Latter-Day Saints!" The mass of the people misunderstand us—confounding us with the Mormons, supposing us to be "prophets," actuated by pecuniary motives: and in some instances even making and fighting men of straw, under the conviction that they are opposing some heretical, anti-scriptural views which we are entertaining and proclaiming. We send you a few specimens.

A few days since, the proprietor of the Hall engaged and occupied by Bro. Burgess, and which we are occupying, was induced, without any persuasion, to abate ten shillings from the rent,—thus reducing it to £1 per week, under these circumstances: there are suspended in the room, two very large and elegantly painted charts of the prophecies of Daniel and John. Two clergymen of the church of England had happened in there at the same time with that of the proprietor, who was attended with two of his friends from London. The clergymen, having an understanding of the charts, kindly explained them to the latter in so fair and ingenious a manner, as to conciliate, please, and instruct them.—"But is he (Mr. Burgess,) not preaching for money?" inquired one of the ministers. "No," said the proprietor, "that cannot be, for he has regularly paid me thirty shillings every week for the rent of the Hall, and I know he has not received any thing like that from his audiences."—"And if," responded another, he is preaching for money, take money from your bishop, and we should get no more preaching from him!"—"Is he not favoring the cause of the Pope?" asked one. "No," replied the proprietor, "he is as much opposed to the Pope as any man in the kingdom."

In —, after some of our brethren had given lectures, and of course produced no little stir among the people, a clergyman was resorted to,—the Rev. J. G. C., B. A.,—to reply to them, to which request he acceded by delivering and publishing two discourses, which he dedicates to his congregation, and assigns as a reason for their publication. "The strange and unscriptural doctrines respecting our Lord's coming, lately propagated in the neighborhood." The man himself had probably not heard a word of the sermons he supposes himself to be combatting. Here is the title page—"The Scriptural Doctrine of the Second Advent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." &c. Text, 1 Cor. 1: 7—"Waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." From these words he proceeds to show:—

I. That the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ is always set forth in Scripture as the object of present expectation.

II. What should be the state and temper of our minds respecting this event?

To the defence of the first division, he devotes one entire sermon. An answer to the inquiry embraced under the second general division of the subject, completes the second discourse.

Just suppose how you would defend the point of the first sermon,—by Scripture texts drawn from the testimony of our Lord and his apostles, which run through the books of the evangelists, and the acts and epistles of his apostles,—and you have his method! Next, he meets the supposed inquiry of his hearer and reader, "Is not this a truth on which all are agreed, that our Lord Jesus Christ shall come again at the end of the world, to judge both the quick and the dead?"—He replies: There is a great difference between believing that he will come at some definite time or other, and believing that he may come now, in this our day, while yet we live. This was the belief of the Apostles' days, and in those succeeding them. This is that which generation after generation should carefully cherish, in nothing staggered by the taunts of mockery, "where is the promise of his coming?" This is the faith and patience of the saints. He next shows what the professed Christians of the present day have substituted for this faith—that they are more anxious to gain proselytes than to win souls to Christ—that their various efforts in the circulation of the Scriptures, preaching the Gospel, and even to some extent in the temperance movement, are looked to as tending to bring about the world's conversion—that "by means of this bustle and machinery, in which so much of man may be plainly seen, the world will insensibly glide onwards from one degree of improvements to another, until we arrive "to the spiritual millennium. "All this appears directly opposed to the testimony of Scripture. Such a view destroys that practical influence, which evidently the Scriptures designed our Lord's coming should have upon us. It was always the will of the Great Head of the Church, to keep his people in a state of constant expectation of his coming, to have their loins girded, and their lamps burning; waiting, not for death, but for the coming of the Son of Man;—never to forget her widowed state, but to be continually in supplications and prayers, night and day, waiting the coming of her Lord;—there is no such interval as a spiritual reign of a thousand years between us and this great event; and further, there is no reason, no Scripture reason to be assigned, why we may not ourselves expect to see him, while yet in these bodies, coming in the clouds of heaven. Nay, my brethren, my own personal belief is, that the signs of the times are pre-eminently those of the last days!" He concludes this sermon with the elucidation of this last observation. A good morsel, is it not?

A few words will furnish you with a clue to his second discourse. "The Greek word rendered "waiting," means to wait for with earnest expectation and desire. To expect earnestly; it seems to express:—

1st. A firm belief in the truth of the Advent of Christ. 2d. A constant expectation of his coming. 3d. Earnestness of desire. 4th. Preparation for it. The expression occurs seven times in the New Testament,—Rom. 8: 19, 23, 25;—Gal. 5: 5; Phil. 3: 20; Heb. 9: 28.

Such is the state of mind he contends that Christians should seek to possess and maintain. The reasonableness of this he shows by a course of plain and forcible argumentation: and concludes with a solemn and faithful appeal to professing Christians, to awake from their slumberings, and to sinners, to make preparation for the judgment!

Better advent truth than the above, we can hardly desire. It is refreshing and encouraging to our souls, to know that there are men of piety, learning, and influence, in the kingdom, who are willing to speak out on these great truths, and to barter their reputation for that ignominy and scorn which are sure to attend the reception and bold defence of the pre-millennial reign of Jesus our Lord. Would to God there were an equal number of ministers in America, who certainly have no more reputation to look out for than these in England, to be found thus decidedly and fearlessly giving the truth to the people. Are the great bulk of the clergy in the United States to close their eyes to these things, and to be the means of feeding the hearts of God's professing people with false anticipations respecting the future? If so, then will God not only trouble them, but he will suffer their flocks to die! What vast responsibilities rest upon the brethren at home, here, and everywhere, who have the truth, to be ever diligent, and untiring in their efforts and prayers for its success.

We have just heard that Bro. Dealtry preached a few days since in Plymouth, to some 2000 or 3000 people, in the open air. Have just heard too that the "Oregon question" is settled, which is also cheering to us. Every intelligent Englishman with whom we have conversed, has expressed an ardent hope that the thing might be amicably adjusted: some have brothers, sisters, friends, &c. there, and a thought of bloody war with America, has been very painful to them.— They will rejoice to hear the news: it will also save us from receiving the frequent inquiry,— "What will be the result of the Oregon matter?" &c. May God prepare us for that glorious kingdom where "the nations shall learn war no more."

Our health is very good—we are contented and happy, and trying to do all the good we can. We are pleased with the country, with the people, and with our labor. Pray for us.

Exeter, (Devonshire, Eng.,) June 29, '46.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

Dear Brethren:—When the memorable "10th day of the 7th month" passed, and for many months after, I did not suppose it possible for me ever to be so strong in definite time for the Lord's coming, as I am at this moment.

But within a few days past, my faith has been greatly strengthened in Christ coming before the first of November next, that is, if this year is '47 true era, as appears most reasonable. But should we now be living in the true A. D. '46, then I think the 2300 days will not end till a year from this fall.

That Christ was born in the fall, is most evident to my mind. I know most people think he was born the 25th of Dec., but from one fact recorded by Luke, in connection with the customs of the East, he evidently was born previous to that time. In Luke 2: 8, we read, "And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night," when "the angel said unto them, fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born, this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Now, as shepherds in that country take up their flocks in the latter part of Oct. or first of Nov., before the cold rains commence, it is very evident that Christ was born before November. Another proof that he was born before Nov., and in the first part of October, is the fact that he was crucified about the 3d of our April. Now run back 6 months, or half a year, to agree with the "midst of the week" when he was crucified, and this would make him born about the 3d of October. This looks more like the "shepherd's abiding in the field keeping watch over their flock by night;" as the weather then might be comfortably warm, but later than this, too cold and rainy to abide in the field over night.

Now suppose Christ was born about the 1st of Oct., then in the commencement of the true A. D. 30 he was baptized and began to preach, saying, "the time is fulfilled," &c.

Six months from this time would carry him to the first of our April, A. D. 30, true era, when he eat the first Passover. John, 2: 13. In 1 year and 6 months from this, A. D., 31, he eats the second Passover. John, 5: 1. In 2 years and 6 months from his baptism, A. D., 32, he attends the third Passover. John, 6: 4. And in three years and 6 months—or "midst of the week"—from his baptism, A. D. 33, he eats the fourth Passover with his disciples. John, 11: 55 to 18: 39. He then is betrayed and soon after crucified.

This proves that he preached only 3½ years, as he attended but 4 passovers.

When Christ was baptized and began to preach, he said, "the time is fulfilled," (Mark 1: 15) referring to the "seven weeks and threescore and two weeks," "unto Messiah the Prince," (Daniel, 9: 25,) or, to the completion of 483 years of the "vision." If, therefore, 483 of the 2300 (Daniel, 9: 14) were completed at his baptism, then his preaching 3½ years would make 486½ fulfilled at his crucifixion.

Now take from 2300

and we have 1813½

Add to this 33½

Christ's full age at his crucifixion.

and we have 1847

True era, when "the sanctuary will be cleansed."

But as it appears to be clearly proved by the Julian Period, that this year, is in truth, 1847; therefore we may reasonably look for the fulfillment in a few weeks from the present time. But if this year is indeed the true '46, then it must continue a year longer.

Oh! how few believe this, and I fear less are prepared for such an event. My dear brethren and sisters, who have once believed and rejoiced in this truth with me, "be not faithless, but believing." I know well how to sympathize with you in your trials and temptations, occasioned by our former disappointments. But I am now rejoicing in "time" again. But if I am destined to another disappointment, the Lord only knows how I shall be supported. I see, however, no safe way, but to believe, and also to act according to evidence. And, certainly, the evidence to my mind is as clear, yea, clearer than ever, that we are within 15 months, at farthest, of the coming of the Lord, and most likely within three months! O! blessed day. O! glorious hope. But to be ready, we have evidently much to do. Have not too many "left their first love"?—others made shipwreck concerning the faith, and gone back to perdition? while others have gone so far into delusion that they are past recovery? I fear it is too true! O! then, let the few remaining ones be faithful to God—to one another—to their wandering brethren, and to such as are in darkness and on the way to death!

Our meetings in this city are more and more interesting. O! may we all soon meet in the New Jerusalem, with all the Saints at home. Come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus. Amen and Amen.

Albany, July 24th, 1846. T. M. PREDLE.

Letter from Bro. E. S. Robbins.

Bro. Marsh:—I intended to have written you before the close of the last volume of your paper, but failed for want of opportunity. For one, I feel much encouraged, comforted, and strengthened, by its perusal, and hope it may be sustained till the Master comes. I feel confident if those who have the means, felt as I feel, the paper would be most amply sustained. But fear not brethren, trust in the Lord, our Father is at the helm: you shall have my prayers, and by self denial, I shall be enabled still, to do a little forward sustaining your paper. O how I wish all the little ones, who are looking for Jesus, felt more of the self-denying spirit of their Master. If they did, I feel confident that very few who really wish to read the Voice of Truth, would be deprived of that privilege, or of helping to sustain it. Why, I feel that I had rather go without my supper daily, and dispense with the butter, meat, tea, and coffee, and wear a seamless garment, like Jesus, than be denied the privilege of hearing weekly from the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, or of helping to sustain the medium through which this privilege is enjoyed.— O, I envy not the man, and especially the disciple, that is laying up his money in these last days, while a world lies in wickedness, and thousands are suffering for needful food, for clothes to wear, or house to screen them from the chilling blasts. Nor do I believe it was the duty of Christians in any age of the gospel church, to lay up treasure here below, at least, while all around, their fellow men in suffering might be found.— Much might be said on this subject. I wish some able pen might do it justice. I believe there is great danger in possessing much of this world's treasure. "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded," nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold of eternal life." "But they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof;" then we are but stewards of his bounty. Let us see to it, that we faithfully discharge the duties of our stewardship. Let us do this, and the cause of God in no department will suffer for pecuniary aid. The Lord's faithful servants, proclaiming the truths of the gospel, would not have to leave the field for want of support. The publishers of our papers would not want for encouragement, but all their needs would be amply supplied. The heart of the widow and orphan, of the poor and needy, would be made to sing aloud for joy.

Come then ye stewards, do God's will,
And all the blessed souls fulfill;
For Christ himself will quickly come,
And take his faithful children home.

We still keep up our meetings, although we have had no one to preach to us since last February. We are anxious to hear the preached word, but the laborers are truly few; and those, I fear, are poorly sustained. We are in a better state than when I wrote last, and have had some precious heavenly seasons of late: may the Lord continue to revive us, and send some of his faithful servants this way, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

EDWARD S. ROBBINS.

Copenhagen N. Y., July 10, 1846.

Bro. J. F. Huber, Middletown Conn. June 10, writes:—By the grace of God, I am determined to keep my loins girt about, and my lamp trimmed and burning, and to be like a man waiting for the return of his Lord, so that when he cometh and knocketh, I may immediately open to him; and I rejoice to say, that there is here a small church, (using the Scriptural term, as Bro. Jones I think rightly contends for,) that also mean to strive for the unity of the spirit, and to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, watching and praying till the Master shall appear, which we are assured will be in a very little while.

I had myself embraced the view of the Bridegroom's having come, and the door being shut, but was lately convinced that it was an error, and I have resolved to labor on in my humble sphere in the vineyard of the Lord, till he shall say "It is enough," "well done," &c.

Oh how important that we should all watch, and pray, and labor, doing with our might whatever our hand findeth to do, giving all diligence, to add to our faith virtue, or christian courage, fortitude, and all the other graces of the Spirit, that we may bring forth all its blessed fruits, and thus have ministered to us an entrance abundantly into his everlasting kingdom!

Especially may we be patient, meek, and filled with that love described so beautifully in the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians, exhibiting the lively faith of the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Martyrs, and abounding in the works of active benevolence which, according to Matt. 25, will meet with the gracious approval of our blessed Lord and Savior, at his appearing and kingdom!

It appears to me plain, that the mistake we made in our calculations for the end of the 2300 days, was in placing the crucifixion of Christ at the end of the 70th week, instead of adhering closely to the Word of the Lord which saith "In the midst or middle of the week," &c.,—and that this is the anticipated "little while" which brought us into the tarrying time, predicted by Habakkuk, —and that 3½ years from the time written on the Tables (1843) will bring us to the true end of the vision—1844.

My heart says, Amen! even so, come Lord Jesus!

I would observe that my change of sentiments on the doctrine of "the Bridegroom come," &c., was published in a letter written for the "Day Star," and inserted in that paper June 6. If you think it might do good to any of our erring brethren that may not take the 'Star,' and whom I would like to benefit by leading them instrumentally, if possible, back to the sober truths of God's word, you are at liberty, yea, you would do me a favor to copy it into the "Voice."* My heart's desire and prayer to God is, that those brethren might see their errors, and confess and forsake them; (for it is the truth which sanctifies,) ere they plunge like Bro. Jacobs and others, into deeper and more false delusions.

* We have not the paper that contains your article.—Ed.

Sister C. Stowe, Washington, N. H., July 18, writes:—The urgent request in the Voice of Truth, July 8th, induced me once more to take my pen to address a word to the little flock scattered on the mountains in this cloudy dark day, but soon to be gathered into one fold, under the one Shepherd.

Dear brethren and sisters, so sure as the 70 weeks are a part of the 2300 days, just so sure the gathering time is just at hand. Let this one simple fact be distinctly kept in view, let our faith correspond with the evidence, and our works with our faith, and we shall not slumber, but be hourly watching for the glorious event. This faith will as effectually give victory over the world, as it did in '43 and '44. "This is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith." True faith, is, as it were, the main spring to all the fruits of the Spirit; working by love, purifying the heart, and overcoming the world. May the Lord increase our faith.

While reading the reports from conferences in various places, I feel that it would be cheering indeed to meet with those dear saints who assemble to comfort each other with those blessed words of promise, "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Yes, in the assembly of the saints on earth, the emotions of holy love unite to swell the tide of joy, which wafts us nearer to the kingdom of eternal glory. Happy prelude to the blissful meeting at the marriage supper of the Lamb. I seldom find mention made of the celebration of the Lord's Supper on those occasions, yet I hope the observance which our blessed Lord instituted to show forth his death till he come, is not forgotten.

Above all, seek to know, and do the will of him who is able to take the control of consequences, and his name will be glorified thereby. He says ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. Not this or that command alone, but whatsoever I command you. Soon the faithful, humble, cross-bearing disciple of the meek lowly Jesus will exchange the cross for a crown; and with the harp of God unite in the chorus of praise to him that loved us, and washed us in his own blood. Courage then, dear brethren, the time is short. Your redemption draweth nigh. "That thou doest do quickly." Can anything be done to awaken the careless, enlighten the erring, restore the wandering, reclaim the backsliding, encourage the faithful, comfort the desponding, or relieve Christ in his sick and suffering members, do with thy might what thy hand findeth to do. Let him not say to any of us, "I was a hungered, and ye gave me no meat; thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick and in prison, and ye visited me not." But rather, "inasmuch as ye have done it one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." "Thou hast been faithful over a few things I will make the ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Dear brethren and sisters, while I thus address you, I feel more deeply sensible of the necessity of heeding those solemn admonitions. The Lord grant that I may obtain mercy in that day. Now is the time of conflict, but it will soon be over. Trusting in the Captain of our salvation we will overcome. Methinks I hear you respond, Amen.

Bro. J. C. Hall, Warsaw, July 10, writes:—After the Buffalo Conference, I returned to Attica, and attended meeting with the brethren the next Sabbath, in the same room where the Lord delivered my soul the Sabbath before the Conference; and let me assure you we had a heavenly season. I truly felt to say, "draw near all ye that fear the Lord, and I will tell you what great things he hath done for my soul."—Having long been wandering after a sort of natural religion, which is becoming so popular in our land at the present day, and having my soul clouded with infidelity, my ear caught the heavenly sound of the gospel given by that little heavenly band of advent brethren, shut out from any other place of worship excepting an old brick school-house, but with hearts united, and all their sails extended and filled with heavenly breezes, in constant waiting for the coming Savior. I now felt that the world was a shadow, its honors, its fashions, and its titles, had no charms for me. I felt willing to go, Jonah like, after his second call, and proclaim in the streets and lanes of the city, a Savior 'shortly to be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel, and to be admired in all them that believe.' Although I had, in years gone by, preached among the Baptists the unsearchable riches of Christ, and with some considerable success as I humbly trust, to the salvation of precious souls, yet I was now more deeply imbued with a sense of the greatness of the importance of the work, and the awful responsibility of those who are called, and have the charge of souls.

Having taken a line of introduction from Bro. Bywater, I started on a short mission, in which I have found an indescribable blessing. I attended meetings at Pekin, four miles from Yorkshire, at Lodi, and Perrysburg, I found valuable, steadfast brethren and sisters, united in heart and faith, in the coming of Christ nigh at the door. The meetings I attended were generally full, although the evenings were short, most profound attention was manifested to the preaching of the Word. I am now enquiring, what next the Lord will have me to do? It is my desire to work in his vineyard the rest of my days.

Bro. O. Irish, New Bedford Mass., July 8, writes:—I very much regret to say that the state of religion is very low here, as well as the advent cause. A great many who were once awake to this blessed truth, are now, as it were, asleep. We have no preacher with us at present: we have to do our own preaching.

WONDERFUL PHENOMENON.—Copenhagen, (Denmark), June 20.—Two days ago, in the morning, on the shore of the Sound, between the villages of Vedbeck and Rongsted, we had the phenomenon of a mirage, by which the island of Heven seemed to fly to a distance, and even to disappear, while the coast of Scania (Sweden) appeared so near our own, that we almost felt that it could be reached by the hand. All the ships which passed, presented themselves as if upside down, that is, the keel turned to the heavens, and seemed to move supported on the tops of their masts. This phenomenon, which is unexampled in our country, lasted about an hour.

OBITUARY.

Bro. Marsh:—It falls to my lot to acquaint you with the death of our dear Sister Wing.—She died of consumption, after a lingering illness of six months. I cannot do justice to her departed worth. She was a mother in Israel, a true child of God, a daily follower of Jesus, and a firm believer in his speedy coming.—Through her suffering, she was the most perfect example of patience I ever saw. She gave her husband and three little sons into the hands of God, perfectly resigned to his blessed will, and fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, in the 45th year of her age, June 18th, 1846. S. M. MORY. Camden N. Y., July 24, 1846.

Appointments.

A CONFERENCE will be held at Copenhagen, Lewis Co. N. Y., commencing Friday August 2nd, and hold over the Sabbath.

Also a CONFERENCE in Martinsburg, same Co., commencing Friday Sept. 4th, and hold over the Sabbath. Bro. Punney is expected to attend, if he is able. The friends in this County feel extremely anxious that Bro. Galusha should attend these conferences. They feel that his labors would be greatly blessed here. Will he inform me, on seeing this, whether he can come or not. Other brethren are expected to be present. Brethren who come from the West will take the Rail-road or Packet to Rome, arriving there in time to take the Stage Wednesday morning (July 26) to Lowville where I will meet them at the house of Bro. W. A. Chase.

L. E. BATES.

Bro. G. Henley, Canada West, says the friends back of Kingston are desirous to have a field meeting. He makes the appointment for Sept. 4th, and the meeting to hold over the following Sabbath. Bro. P. Hough and Perry are expected to attend. We may attend this meeting: it is doubtful, however.

Bro. Henley appoints to preach at Thurlogh Aug. 10, 10 A. M. The same day, at the Trent, 4 P. M.

On the opposite side of the bay, Aug. 17, at Coalbrook, or at Bro. Spaulding's, (as the friends may decide) August 15th.

At Lent's back of Cobourg, August 19th.
At Bro. D. Clark's, " 20th.
Darlington, " 21st.
At Bro. Stephen's, " 22nd, 23rd.
English Corners, evening, " 24th.
Toronto, " 25th.

Bro. P. Hough is requested to meet Bro. Henley at English Corners.

There will be an ADVENT CAMP-MEETING, (if the Lord will) on Rock Prairie, Rock Co. W. T., at or near Emerald Grove, about 6 miles from Janesville, commencing Sept. 23rd. We give a general invitation to all, to attend and hear for themselves. We hope all in that region who are interested in the subject of the coming of the Lord, will come with their tents and provisions, to stay six days, and with a mind to work for God. The same day, all preachers within a reasonable distance, will be there. Sister Parks from Canada West is expected to be present. Come, brethren, let us make one general effort in this western region to save souls.

Those who cannot come prepared to board themselves, will be provided for.

ANCIENT BABYLON.

FROM 'EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.'

BY A. KIETH.

(Concluded.)

Merodach is broken in pieces. Merodach was a name, or a title, common to the princes and kings of Babylon, of which, in the brief Scriptural references to their history, two instances are recorded, viz: Merodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, who exercised the office of government, and Evil-Merodach, who lived in the days of Jeremiah. From Merodach being here associated with Bel, or the temple of Belus, and from the similarity of their judgments—the one bowed down and confounded, and the other broken in pieces—it may reasonably be inferred that some other famous Babylonian building is here also denoted; while, at the same time, from the express identity of the name with that of the kings of Babylon, and even with Evil-Merodach, then residing there, it may with equal reason be inferred that, under the name of Merodach, the palace is spoken of by the prophet. And next to the idolatrous temple, as the seat of false worship which corrupted and destroyed the nations, it may well be imagined that the royal residence of the despot who made the earth to tremble and oppressed the people of Israel, would be selected as the marked object of the righteous judgments of God. And secondary only to the Birs Nimrod in the greatness of its ruins is the Mujelibé or Makloube, generally understood and described by travellers as the remains of the chief palace of Babylon.

The palace of the King of Babylon almost vied with the great temple of their God. And there is now some controversy, in which of the principal mountainous heaps, the one or the other lies buried. But the utter desolation of both, leaves no room for any debate on the question,—which of the twain is bowed down and confounded, and which of them is broken in pieces.

The two palaces, or castles of Babylon, were strongly fortified. And the larger was surrounded by three walls of great extent. When the city was suddenly taken by Demetrius, he seized on one of the castles by surprise, and displaced its garrison by seven thousand of his own troops, whom he stationed within it. Of the other, he could not make himself master. Their extent and strength, at a period of three hundred years after the delivery of the prophecy, are thus sufficiently demonstrated. The solidity of the structure of the greater as well as of the lesser palace might have warranted the belief of its unbroken durability for ages. And never was there a building whose splendor and magnificence were in greater contrast to its present desolation. The vestiges of the walls which surrounded it, are still to be seen, and serve, with other circumstances, to identify it with the Mujelibé, as the name Merodach is identified with the palace. It is broken in pieces, and hence its name Mujelibé, signifying overturned, or turned upside down.—Its circumference is about half a mile; its height one hundred and forty feet. But it is "a mass of confusion, none of its members being distinguishable." The existence of chambers, passages, and cellars, of different forms and sizes, and built of different materials, has been fully ascertained. It is the receptacle of wild beasts, and full of doleful creatures; wild beasts cry in the desolate houses, and dragons in the pleasant palaces—"venomous reptiles being very numerous throughout the ruins." "All the sides are worn into furrows by the weather, and, in some places where several channels of rain have united together, these furrows are of great depth, and penetrate a considerable way into the mound."—"The sides of the ruin exhibit hollows worn partly by the weather." It is brought down to the grave, to the sides of the pit.

"They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms? Narrowly to look on and to consider even the view of the Mujelibé, is to see what the palace of Babylon, in which kings, proud as "Lucifer," boasted of exalting themselves above the stars of God, has now become, and how, cut down to the ground, it is broken in pieces.

"On pacing over the loose stones, and fragments of brick-work which lay scattered through the immense fabric, and surveying the sublimity of the ruins," says Captain Mignan, "I naturally recurred to the time when these walls stood proudly in their original splendor,—when the halls were the scenes of festive magnificence, and when they resounded to the voices of those whom death has long since swept from the earth. This very pile was once the seat of luxury and vice; now abandoned to decay, and exhibiting a melancholy instance of the retribution of Heaven. It stands alone;—the solitary habitation of the goatherd, marks not the forsaken site." Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy vials; the worms are spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

Thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit; as a carcass trodden under feet. "Several deep excavations have been made in different places into the sides of the Mujelibé; some probably by the wearing of the seasons; but many others have been dug by the rapacity of the Turks, tearing up its bowels in search of hidden treasure."—as if the palace of Babylon were cast out of its grave. "Several penetrate very far into the body of the structure," till it has become as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword. "And some, it is likely, have never yet been explored, the wild beasts of the desert literally keeping guard over them." The mound was full of large holes"—thrust through.

Near to the Mujelibé, on the supposed site of the hanging gardens which were situated within the walls of the palace, "the ruins are so perforated in consequence of the digging for bricks, that the original design is entirely lost. All that could favor any conjecture of gardens built on terraces, are two subterranean passages. There can be no doubt that both passages are of vast extent; they are lined with bricks laid in with bi-tumen and covered over with large masses of stone. This is nearly the only place where stone is observable." Arches built upon arches raised the hanging-gardens from terrace to terrace, till the highest was on a level with the top of the city walls. Now they are cast out like an abominable branch—and subterranean passages are disclosed,—down to the stones of the pit.

As a carcass trodden under foot. The streets of Babylon were parallel, crossed by others at right angles, and abounded with houses three and four stories high; and none can now traverse the site of Babylon, or find any other path without treading them under foot. The traveller directs his course to the highest mounds; and there are none, whether temples or palaces, that are not trodden on. The Mujelibé "rises in a steep ascent, over which the passengers can only go up by the winding paths worn by frequent visits to the ruined edifice."

Her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces; all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground. "This place," says Beauchamp, quoted by Major Rennell, "and the mount of Babel, are commonly called by the Arabs, Makloube, that is, turned topsy-turvy. I was informed by the master mason employed to dig for bricks, that the places from which he procured them were large thick walls, and sometimes chambers. He has frequently found earthen vessels, engraved marbles, and about eight years ago a statue as large as life, which he threw among the rubbish. On one wall of the chamber, he found the figure of a cow, and of the sun and moon, formed of varnished bricks. Sometimes idols of clay are found, representing human figures." "Small figures of brass or copper, are found at Babylon." "Bronze antiquities, generally much corroded with rust, but exhibiting small figures of men and animals, are often found among the ruins."

The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken. They were so broad, that, as ancient historians relate, six chariots could be driven on them abreast; or a chariot and four horses might pass and turn. They existed as walls for more than a thousand years after the prophecy was delivered; and long after the sentence of utter destruction had gone forth against them, they were numbered among "the seven wonders of the world." And what can be more wonderful now, or what could have been more inconceivable by man, when Babylon was in its strength and glory, than that the broad walls of Babylon should be so utterly broken, that it cannot be determined with certainty, that even the slightest vestige of them exists.

"All accounts agree," says Mr. Rich, "in the height of the walls, which was fifty cubits, having been reduced to these dimensions from the prodigious height of three hundred and fifty feet," (formerly stated, by the lowest computation of the length of the cubit, at three hundred feet.) "by Darius Hystaspes, after the rebellion of the town in order to render it less defensible. I have not been fortunate enough to discover the least trace of them in any part of the ruins at Hillah;—which is rather an unaccountable circumstance, considering that they survived the final ruin of the town, long after which they served as an enclosure for a park; in which comparatively perfect state, St. Jerome informs us, they remained in his time."

In the sixteenth century, they were seen for the last time by any European traveller (so far as the author has been able to trace,) before they were finally so utterly broken as totally to disappear. And it is interesting to mark both the time and the manner in which the walls of Babylon, like the city of which they were the impregnable, yet unavailing defence, were brought down to the grave, to be seen no more.

"The meanwhile," as Rauwolff describes them, "when we were lodged there, I considered and viewed this ascent, and found that there were two behind one another," (Herodotus states that there was both an inner, or inferior, and outer wall,) "distinguished by a ditch, and extending themselves like unto two parallel walls, a great way about, and that they were open in some places, where one might go through like gates;—wherefore I believe that they were the wall of the old town that went about them; and that the places where they were open have been anciently the gates (whereof there were one hundred) of that town. And this rather because I saw in some places under the sand (wherewith the two ascents were almost covered) the old wall plainly appear."

The cities of Seleucia, Ctesiphon, Desingered, Kufa, and anciently many others in the vicinity, together with the more modern towns of Mesched Ali, Mesched Hussein, and Hillah, "with towns, villages, and caravansaries without number," have, in all probability, been chiefly built out of the walls of Babylon. Like the city, the walls have been taken from thence, till none of them are left. The rains of many hundred years, and the waters coming upon them annually by the overflowing of the Euphrates, have also, in all likelihood, washed down the dust and rubbish from the broken and dilapidated walls into the ditch from which they were originally taken, till at last the sand of the parched desert has smoothed them into a plain, and added the place where they stood to the wilderness, so that the broad walls of Babylon are utterly broken. And now, as the subjoined evidence, supplementary of what has already been adduced, fully proves,—it may verily be said that the loftiest walls ever built by man, as well as the "greatest city on which the sun ever shone," which these walls surrounded, and the most fertile of countries, of which Babylon the great was the capital and the glory,—have all been swept by the Lord of Hosts, with the besom of destruction.

A chapter of sixty pages in length, of Mr. Buckingham's travels in Mesopotamia, is entitled—"Search after the walls of Babylon." After a long and fruitless search, he discovered on the eastern boundary of the ruins, on the summit of an oval mound, from seventy to eighty feet in height, and from three to four hundred feet in circumference, "a mass of solid wall, about thirty feet in length, by twelve or fifteen in thickness, yet evidently once of much greater dimensions each way, the work being, in its present state, broken and incomplete in every part;"—and this heap of ruin and fragment of wall he conjectured to be a part—the only part, if such it be, that can be discovered—of the walls of Babylon, so utterly are they broken. Beyond this, there is not even a pretension to the discovery of any part of them.

Captain Frederick, of whose journey it was the "principal object to search for the remains of the wall and ditch that had compassed Babylon," states that "neither of these have been seen by any modern traveller. All my inquiries among the Arabs," he adds, "on this subject, completely failed in producing the smallest effect. Within the space of twenty-one miles in length along the banks of the Euphrates, and twelve miles across it in breadth, I was unable to perceive any thing that could admit of my imagining that either a wall or a ditch had existed within this extensive area. If any remains do exist of the walls, they must have been of greater circumference than is allowed by modern geographers. I may possibly have been deceived; but I spared no pains to prevent it. I never was employed in riding and walking less than eight hours, for six successive days, and upwards of twelve on the seventh."

Major Keppel relates that he and the party who accompanied him, "in common with other travellers, had totally failed in discovering any trace of the city walls;" and he adds, "the Divine predictions against Babylon, have been so literally fulfilled in the appearance of the ruins, that I am disposed to give the fullest signification to the words of Jeremiah,—the broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken."

Babylon shall be an astonishment. Every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished. It is impossible to think on what Babylon was, and to be an eye witness of what it is, without astonishment. On first entering its ruins, Sir Robert Ker Porter thus expresses his feelings, "I could not but feel an indescribable awe in thus passing, as it were, into the gates of fallen Babylon." "I cannot portray," says Captain Mignan, "the overpowering sensation of reverential awe that possessed my mind while contemplating the extent and magnitude of ruin and devastation on every side."

How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder! How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! The following interesting description has lately been given from the spot.—After speaking of the ruined embankment, divided and subdivided again and again, like a sort of tangled net-work, over the apparently interminable ground—of large and wide-spreading morasses—of ancient foundations—and of chains of undulating heaps—Sir Robert Ker Porter emphatically adds:—"The whole view was particularly solemn. The majestic stream of the Euphrates, wandering in solitude, like a pilgrim monarch through the silent ruins of his devastated kingdom, still appeared a noble river, under all the disadvantages of its desert-tracked course. Its banks were hoary with reeds; and the gray osier willows were yet there on which the captives of Israel hung up their harps, and, while Jerusalem was not, refused to be comforted. But how is the rest of the scene changed since then! At that time those broken hills were palaces—those long undulating mounds, streets—this vast solitude filled with the busy subjects of the proud daughter of the East. Now, wasted with misery, her habitations are not to be found—and for herself, the worm is spread over her."

From palaces converted into broken hills;—from streets to long lines of heaps;—from the throne of the world to sitting on the dust;—from the hum of mighty Babylon to the death-like silence that rests upon the grave to which it is brought down;—from the great storehouse of the world, where treasures were gathered from every quarter, and the prison-house of the captive Jews, where, not loosed to return homewards, they served in a hard bondage, to Babylon the spoil of many nations, itself taken from thence, and nothing left;—from a vast metropolis, the place of palaces, and the glory of kingdoms, whither multitudes ever flowed, to a dreaded and shunned spot not inhabited nor dwelt in from generation to generation, where even the Arabian, though the son of the desert, pitches not his tent, and where the shepherds make not their folds;—from the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, to the taking away of bricks, and to an uncovered nakedness; from making the earth to tremble, and shaking kingdoms, to being cast out of the grave like an abominable branch;—from the many nations and great kings from the coasts of the earth that have so often come up against Babylon, to the workmen that still cast her up as heaps and add to the number of pools in the ruins;—from the immense artificial lake, many miles in circumference, by means of which, the annual rising of the Euphrates was regulated and restrained, to these pools of water, a few yards round, dug by the workmen, and filled by the river;—from the first and greatest of temples to a burnt mountain desolate forever; from the golden image, forty feet in height, which stood on the top of the temple of Belus, to all the graven images of her gods, that are broken unto the ground and mingled with the dust;—from the splendid and luxuriant festivals of Babylonian monarchs, the noise of the viols, the pomp of Belshazzar's feast, and the godless revelry of a thousand lords drinking out of the golden vessels that had been taken from Zion to the cry of wild beasts, the creeping of doleful creatures of which their desolate houses and pleasant palaces are full, the nestling of owls in cavities, the dancing of wild goats on the ruinous mound as on a rock, and the dwelling place of dragons and of venomous reptiles;—from arch upon arch, and terrace upon terrace, till the hanging gardens of Babylon rose like a mountain, down to the stones of the pit now disclosed to view;—from the palaces of princes who sat on the mount of the congregation, and thought in the pride of their hearts to exalt themselves above the stars of God, to heaps cut down to the ground, perforated as the raiment of those that are slain, and as a carcase trodden under feet;—from the broad walls of Babylon, in all their height, as Cyrus camped against them round about, seeking in vain a single point where congregated nations could scale the walls or force an opening, to the untraceable spot on which they stood, when there is nothing left to turn aside, or impede in their course, the worms that cover it; and finally, from Babylon the great, the wonder of the world, to fallen Babylon, the astonishment of all who go by it;—in extremes like these, whatever changes they involve, and by whatever instrumentality they may have been wrought out, there is not to this hour, in this most marvellous history of Babylon, a single fact that may not most appropriately be ranked under a prediction, and that does not tally entirely with its express and precise fulfilment, while at the same time they all united show, as may now be seen,—reading the judgments to the very letter, and looking to the facts as they are,—the destruction which has come from the Almighty upon Babylon.

Has not every purpose of the Lord been performed against Babylon? And having so clear illustrations of the facts before us, what mortal shall give a negative answer to the questions subjoined by their Omniscent Author to these very prophecies? "Who hath declared this from ancient time? Who hath told it from that time?—Have not I, the Lord? and there is no god beside me;—declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done—saying, my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Is it possible that there can be any attestation of the truth of prophecy, if it be not witnessed here? Is there any spot on earth which has undergone a more complete transformation? "The records of the human race," it has been said with truth, "do not present a contrast more striking than that between the primeval magnificence of Babylon and its long desolation." Its ruins have of late been carefully and scrupulously examined by different natives of Britain, of unimpeached veracity, and the result of every research is a more striking demonstration of the literal accomplishment of every prediction.—How few spots are there on earth, of which we have so clear and faithful a picture as prophecy gave of fallen Babylon, at a time when no spot on earth resembled it less than its present desolate solitary site! Or could any prophecies respecting any single place, have been more procies, or wonderful, or numerous, or true,—or more gradually accomplished throughout many generations? And when they look at what Babylon was, and what it is, and perceive the minute realization of them all—may not nations learn wisdom, may not tyrants tremble, and may not skeptics think!

The Two Horned Beast.

In the Herald of the 10th of June, I find an article from Bro. Litch, under the caption of "Rome the last Worldly Empire," in which I find some views that I am not able to harmonize with the Word. I am free to admit that all the kingdoms of this world from the beginning to the end, are Babylonish in their derivation, both as to name and character, viz: from Babel or confusion, and also, because in Scripture, Babylon is often set opposite to Jerusalem. The former denoting the powers and kingdoms of this world, under the prince of the power of the air, and the latter, things heavenly. Yet, I cannot see any authority for his application of the 7 heads of the beast in the 17th chap. of Rev., viz: 1st Assyria, 2d Chaldea, 3d Media, 4th Persia, 5th Grecia, 6th Imperial Rome, 7th the barbarian or kingly powers of Rome, from A. D. 476, to A. D. 538;—and the 8th, which is of the seven, and goeth into perdition, the Papacy.

There is to my mind, a manifest impropriety (even were he justified in going back of the 4th kingdom,) in applying two heads to Medo Persia, when Media and Persia were represented to the prophet as a consolidated government, under the emblem of a Bear with three ribs in his mouth; and but one to Grecia: while the latter was symbolized by a four headed leopard, and the prophet was informed that those heads denoted that that kingdom should be divided into four parts.

I cannot see how any person who will read the 12th, 13th, and 17th chapters of Rev. in connection, can avoid the conclusion that the seven heads belong only to the fourth or Roman kingdom. But if any doubts should remain, I would recommend them to read Bro. L's. own expositions of those chapters, together with those of the 7th and 8th chapters of Daniel, as published in his "Prophetic Expositions." His application of the 6th head to imperial Rome, I think is correct. But in placing the 7th, embracing the 10 kingdoms, between the imperial and papal forms, and in calling the 8th the papacy, he involves himself and the whole subject in interminable difficulties, and does violence to the interpretation given by the angel in chap. 17: 12, 13, which reads thus: "And the ten horns which thou sawest, are ten kings, which have received no kingdoms as yet, but receive power as kings one hour with the beast, these have one mind, and shall give their power and strength to the beast. And from verse 14, it is evident they were to continue in existence till the Lord comes to judgment.

The inquiry arises as to what beast it is that is here brought to view. There is abundance of historical evidence to prove that the 10 kings gave their power and strength to the papacy;—i. e., to the 42 month beast of the 13th chapter, and as Bro. Litch admits that that form arose about the year A. D. 538, I think the period for the rise of the 10 kings is fixed to that point, and consequently there is no possible chance of slipping them in as the 7th form, between imperial and papal Rome. Then if the 10 kingdoms arose one hour with the papacy, and gave their power and strength to the papacy, did not the 10 kings constitute an integral part of the 7th form? and did not the papacy constitute the other part of it? I think evidence justifies the conclusion that those two powers unitedly, constitute the 7th form. I admit that the 10 kingdoms may have had an existence in history, and even in the prophecies of Daniel prior to that date. Yet, as God only recognizes them in his prophetic sketch in the book of Revelations, at that point, in endeavoring to fill up those outlines, we must confine ourselves to the stakes and lines which he has been pleased to establish.

Again: it is evident from the interpretation given in the 17th chap., that the 8th is to be the last form of earthly governments, and to be in existence at the coming of Christ. Now, if the papacy, or the 42 month beast was that form, it must have ended some 50 years ago, when verse 10 of the 13th chapter was fulfilled upon the papacy, by "carrying into captivity and killing by the sword" under Buonaparte. We also learn from the same, (17th ch.,) that that form is to carry the woman (the papacy) to the judgment. Now, to call the papacy the 8th, would involve the absurdity of having the woman seated upon herself. Neither could Buonaparte or his government constitute that form, because they have long since passed away, and the judgment has not yet set.

I think the argument is equally objectionable, which contends that the 10 horns or kingdoms of themselves constitute the 42 month beast of the 13th chap., and the papacy, including secular and ecclesiastical power, the two horned beast, that they arose co-taneous, and flourished at the same time; i. e., during the whole period of the 1260 years. Now it is evident that the 10 kingdoms alone, could not have constituted the 42 month beast, because they were not carried into captivity and killed by the sword, when verse 10 was fulfilled upon that beast. The facts are right to the reverse. It was the papal part thereof, which constituted the body of that beast that was killed by France, one of the horns. The ten horns or kingdoms of that form did not fall with the papacy, but continued to exist after the papacy was dead. Likewise, if you call the papacy the two horned beast, involves the same absurdity of having a woman at the end, seated upon herself.—Most of the points assumed in the foregoing exceptions, I shall hope to fortify with additional evidence, before I close.

The question may with propriety be asked, if the theories now before the public upon these chapters are so exceptionable, "can you present us with one less so." I am free to admit that the question is more easily asked than answered.—Yet, by the grace of God assisting me, I will make the attempt, and I hope Bro. L., or any one else disposed, will carefully examine, and in christian kindness and love, point out the errors that may escape my notice. Truth is all I desire, and I think it can only be arrived at upon this complicated and disputed subject, by a candid and prayerful investigation through the press. God grant that all who may thus engage, may have their eye fixed only upon the truth, irrespective of preconceived opinions. When we are in that state of mind, God can easily lead us into the truth.

In the 13th chapter, the Revelator is shown the three last forms of the 4th or Roman kingdom. The one then existing being imperial, is represented under the emblem of a head, and as we have already seen, constituted the 6th form. The others are represented by beasts; the first of which was to continue 42 months, and was, as we have also seen, the 7th form of the other, is distinguished as having two horns, like a lamb, which, of course, must be the 8th and last form. It is this last form that I purpose examining, and, if possible, ascertain what power is here symbolized, and as I have written out my views heretofore, and which are now before the public, I shall confine myself mostly to points and facts that have since come to light, which I think will, in the main, strengthen those arguments. Yet some of those views are manifestly erroneous, which I shall most gladly exchange for the truth, as well as those in this article that may be erroneous.

In verses 4-10, is given a brief history of the 7th or papal form, embracing a period of 42 prophetic months, or 1260 years, commencing when the Justinian Decree took effect, about the year A. D. 540, and ending about A. D. 1800, when God raised up Bonaparte, who fulfilled v. 10, by carrying into captivity and killing with the sword the papal part of the 7th form. Thus far there seems to be a perfect order of succession of kingdoms and forms from the days of Nebuchadnezzar down to the end of the 7th form of the 4th kingdom: that is, to about the commencement of the present century. If correct thus far, then as a matter of course, the only period of time left for the development of the two horned beast, is that intervening between A. D. 1800 and the end of time. According to Professor Whiting's translation, verse 12 reads thus: "And he (the two horned beast) exerciseth all the power of the first wild beast in his sight, and causeth the earth and those dwelling in it, to worship the first wild beast, whose deadly wound was healed." By reading verse 3 in connection with verse 12, it is manifest that the healing is to take place under the two horned beast, and that the beast is to have as much power and worship, as imperial Rome had in her brightest days. The wound, as has often been proven, was made when imperial Rome was taken away to make place for Paul's man of sin, or the 7th form. The manner in which it is to be healed, I think I shall be able to show is, by the introduction of imperial power under the two horned beast, and which must of necessity, constitute a considerable portion thereof. Also, by reading verse 10 and the last part of verse 14 in connection, it will appear plain that the 42 month beast is to live again under that beast, and by reference to verse 14 of the 17th chapter, it will likewise be seen that the 10 kings are also to have an existence at the coming of the Lord: consequently they must have an existence in some way, under the beast, and kingly power must have a place in it. Hence, I infer that the two horned beast must be made up by the commingling of the imperial and kingly governments of Europe, and they together, restore the papal or 42 month beast, and when thus united and restored, the 6th head or form will be healed, and the papal part of the 7th will live again, which forms, thus restored, will be the 8th and yet of the seven.

I wish it carefully noted, that the beast which had the wound by the sword (the 42 month beast, see verse 10.) is to live again under the two horned beast, and that that "killing" was accomplished by Bonaparte; then the argument is conclusive that the two horned beast could not have risen prior to the present century.

In the 17th chap. we have an interpretation given us by the angel of the 13th as well as those forms of the 4th or Roman kingdom that had (at the time the Revelator wrote) passed away; in which the papacy, including the literal city of Rome, is represented under the emblem of a corrupt woman seated upon a scarlet colored beast having 7 heads and 10 horns, full of the names of blasphemy, which beast is called the 8th, and yet of the seven, and is to go into perdition.—This beast is manifestly, the last form of earthly kingdoms, and the one in existence at the coming of Christ to judgment, and must, of necessity, be the same as the two horned beast of the 13th chapter. That we may ascertain what this power is, when it arise, &c., I now produce the following historic evidence.

Says Ranke, in speaking of the Vienna Congress, "the wide range of matters for the adjudication of this tribunal, made it the greatest and most important assemblage in civil affairs, which the world ever beheld. Dominions, thrones, estates and crowns, lay in one vast pile, confusedly commingled. Like a mighty tornado that had swept through the forest, had been the 15 years career of Napoleon amongst the governments of

ROCHESTER, AUGUST 19, 1846.

We close, in this number, the interesting article on Ancient Babylon. If properly understood, it will greatly strengthen the faith of the believer in the fulfilment of that prophecy which relates to the future. Having disposed of that long article, we shall now have more room to devote to our correspondents; a number of whose valuable communications have for some weeks been on hand. We shall now be able to give them to our readers soon. Let each continue his favors, and we will serve our brethren with a rich selection every week, from their valuable offerings.

A Difficulty.

You know that most of the brethren and sisters were strong on time in '43, and on the 10th day of the 7th month. These times passed, and their hopes were not realized. They were terribly shaken.—Many of them fell, and in their fall were dreadfully wounded, maimed and lamed. Though their wounds have got healed now, yet they go halting on their course. Well, many of these brethren were delighted when brn. Marsh, Pearson, Pinney, &c., came out with proof positive that Christ was crucified in the middle of the week, and by Ferguson's assumption, this was proved to have been Apr. 3d., A. D. 33. This looked like a straight path, so they ventured on; but soon they came to such a sudden turn in the way, as looked to them to be turning back into that thick, foggy, dismal swamp on the left—so they stop, confused and confounded, and know not what to do. They hear the same brethren who proved so conclusively from the Bible and astronomical evidence, that Christ was crucified in the middle of the week, and that middle was Apr. 3d., A. D. 33, saying, 'We should look for the Lord now, every day, as we think he will come somewhere in '46, but certainly, we think, before the close of '47. These poor brethren and sisters, see in such expressions, such gross (though undesigned) inconsistency, as to be strongly tempted to give up the whole advent faith. 'What!' they ask, 'Is not God an exact time keeper? If there is such proof, as these brethren pretend, that the crucifixion took place in the middle of the week, and that middle by astronomical calculations is shown to be Apr. 3, A. D. 33, then we know that Jesus will not come sooner nor later than Oct. 3, 1846. And why, then, do these brethren talk so at random about his coming before the close of 1847?—Have they been all the while deceiving us? Is there no time in the Bible? Or what does it all mean?'

The Difficulty Solved.

The grand secret, we think, of all the difficulty of the brethren, to which our brother refers, is, they think that the time of the second advent is either as definitely taught as month, day, and some the hour, or it is not revealed at all in the Bible. They must take one of these ultra extremes. And as either ground is untenable, those who plant their feet there find themselves constantly either in a state of undue excitement on definite time, and in fear of another disappointment; or unbelieving in time, or struggling hard to recover from disappointments to which their unwarranted confidence has made them the unhappy subjects. The true Bible position lies between these two extremes; and when we take our stand there, we are not only safe and happy, but these seeming discrepancies, which otherwise trouble us, all vanish before the light of truth.

There is no subject more clearly revealed in the Bible than the time of the second advent of Christ. And it is so revealed that we may know, beyond the possibility of a mistake, when that event is 'nigh, even at the door.' This is as definite as that perfect book makes the subject; and we all should have learned ere this, that our only safe position is, not on uninspired and inferential testimony, but on the plain word of the Lord.

Europe: such had been the wide circle of the engulfing maelstrom, that distant islands of the sea and ocean had their political relations adjusted by this Congress of kings, emperors, princes, nobles, ambassadors, and warriors. In this universal wreck, lay prostrate that supremacy, which, in former ages, wielded its sceptre over the kings of the earth, and all kindred, tongues and nations. It had been apparently slain, so that every thing, so far as that supremacy was concerned, was as lifeless as the grave. But the momentous events of 1814, brought instantaneous and vigorous life. It was the commencement, not only of a new age of the world, but a new era for the Holy See."

Thus we see in our own day, an entire breaking up of the powers of Europe, and a new order of things introduced. A new power has arisen, which has caused the beast killed by the sword, to live again. And that power is made up of kings, emperors, princes, &c. Another writer in the N. Y. Observer, under the initial X., of Aug. 2, 1845, in speaking of the Vienna Congress, says, that it was composed of representatives from all Europe: that in that Congress, "the political map of Europe was entirely changed. France was mutilated, Saxony despoiled, Prussia aggrandized, Italy given to Austria, Poland divided, Belgium united to Holland, &c."—Mark, Italy is given to Austria; and that Austria has, from that time to the present, sustained the papacy, is so apparent that proof is unnecessary. Every one at all acquainted with European history, knows perfectly, that it is the Austrian bayonets that have kept the woman in her seat for several years past.

From these extracts, it is plain that the allied powers of Europe are the beast, and we find also the time when the woman was seated thereon.—I now wish to prove that the power then possessed by the allies, has been, and still is perpetuated through what is called the Holy Alliance; which was first entered into by the Emperors of Russia and Austria, and the king of Prussia, on the 26th of September, 1815, and about the same time assented to by the king of England, and soon after by all the sovereigns of Europe.

I will first give an extract from the articles of confederation. The 3 powers first named agreed upon its terms; they set forth "their firm determination to take no other rule for their conduct than the precepts of the christian religion."—They promised "to continue in the indissoluble bonds of brotherly union, and to be ready on all occasions and in all places, to succor and assist each other; to consider themselves but as members of the same christian nation, and as delegated by Providence, to govern three branches of the same family, and finally, to receive into the same alliance all other powers who were willing to profess the same principles which had dictated that act." Says another writer in the American Encyclopedia, this power as early as 1817 proved itself a great conspiracy of kings, to subvert the liberal spirit then breaking out all over Europe.

A writer already quoted, says that prince Metternich on one occasion, in speaking of the intentions of the Holy Alliance, declared, "We will never allow that the least thing be changed from what has been settled by the treaties of Vienna and Paris. It belongs only to kings to grant or change political institutions, and they are responsible for their acts only to God." I think we see in the above, the lamb-like indications, and also the speaking like a dragon. As to the two horns, I cannot see why my former views are not correct, viz.: England and Russia, because they are certainly the two greatest powers of earth, and best answer the prophecy in their lamb-like pretensions, the one being at the head of the Protestant, the other of the Greek church. Certain it is, that those two powers have, for several years past, been almost the only ones in the world, whose ambassadors have protected Protestant missionaries in foreign lands, against both the papacy and heathenism, and also against Mahomedanism.

A few words on verse 18 of the 13th chapter, and I am done. "For it is the number of a man, and his number is six hundred, three score and six." The question is, what man? Answer—Daniel 8: 23—25. In the king of fierce countenance, understanding dark sentences, &c, who is to stand up against the Prince of princes, (or King of kings,) and to be "broken without hands," that is, in the last end of that power or the Roman kingdom; the one in existence at the coming of Christ, the same as in Daniel 2: 34, 35, and Rev. 19: 19—21. The No. 666, I think synchronizes with the names of blasphemy, of which that beast is full, that is, the name of all the different governments of earth, over which the allied powers exercise a controlling influence at the end of the world, which I think must be nearly, if not all the kingdoms that are in it.

We learn from this subject that which most intimately interests all the dwellers upon the earth. We see we have passed down the current of time as revealed to the prophets and recorded in prophetic history, through the first great kingdoms of the world, and have found their termination, and have passed the seven divisions of the fourth, and travelled some thirty years in the 8th, which is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. We have found the woman seated upon the scarlet colored beast, which is to carry her to judgment, and by the application of the 2300 years, the same rule whereby the God of heaven has measured these kingdoms, we see as plainly as though written in letters of light, across the canopy of heaven, that the last sands of time allotted to the kingdoms of this world have about run out. O how awfully solemn the thought! O that the exhortation of the Psalmist might now be heeded! "Be wise now therefore O ye kings, be instructed ye judges of the earth, serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little." "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

Yours waiting for deliverance,

P. ALLING.

The Time.

Bro. Marsh:—As you have proven quite clearly by the Julian Period, that this present year is A. D. 1847 true era, I wish to present another argument, which, to my mind, is quite as conclusive as the one you offer.

The evidence in part, I sent you last week, in my communication on time.

That Christ was born about the first of October, I think was clearly proved in that communication.

If so, then Christ was baptised and began to preach in Oct., when "about 30 years of age." Six months from this time, he attends the first passover, when he is 30½ years old.

When he attends the second passover, he is 31½ years old.

When he attends the third passover, he is 32½ years old.

And when he attends the fourth passover, at which he is betrayed and crucified, he is 33½ yrs. old.

Now, if he was crucified when he was 33½ years old, every one must readily see that it was A. D. 34 true era, when he was crucified—although A. D. 33 [vulgar era,] as all admit.

Therefore, if what is called A. D. 33, was in truth A. D. 34, then what we call A. D. 46, must be the true era, A. D. 1847.

Yours, looking, waiting, and watching for the Lord this Fall,
T. M. PRINGLE.
Albany, July 31, '46.

We admit that the prophetic numbers, when we have once settled the precise time of their commencement, bring us to very definite conclusions. But do we not all know that there is an uncertainty of a few months or years thrown around the commencement of every one of the prophetic periods, consequently the same uncertainty will necessarily exist around their termination. Why is this? If 'God is an exact time keeper,' as some suppose, why did he not make the time of the commencement of the sacred numbers as certain, and as easy to be understood, as the most simple portion of his word? We all know that he has not done this. He has left the commencement of the whole chronological reckoning so indefinitely settled as to make the termination perfectly harmonize with the plain teaching of the Bible on this subject, viz: 'Nigh, at the door.'

The prophetic numbers positively bring us within the small compass of a few years, to look for the coming of Christ, but do not positively define in which of those years he will come.

Historic prophecy, infallibly points to the time, without naming the year, day, or hour, of the advent of Christ.

The evidence drawn from the signs perfectly harmonizes with the above testimony.

And the Savior, in speaking on this very subject, plainly says, 'When ye see all these things, know that he is nigh, even at the doors.'

It is our duty to give all the light we can on the time of the Lord's coming. If our investigations lead to the conclusion, (we cannot investigate prophetic chronology without coming to a definite conclusion,) that the Lord will come in '46, or at any other date, let the evidence be given. But we should be cautious how we make these definite conclusions our position on the time of the advent. Remember that they are conclusions, and the evidence they afford should be used, with the other witnesses in the case, to prove that Christ 'is nigh, even at the door.'

If those brethren, who seem to be perplexed on this subject, would look into the nature of this case a little more closely, and make the plain word of the Lord the foundation of ALL their faith, their difficulties would vanish at once. They would find their feet resting upon the rock of truth, rejoicing in the blessed hope of soon meeting their long absent Lord. If he should come sooner than their best conclusions on the prophetic numbers have warranted them to expect, that day would not overtake them as a thief: they would be ready to meet it. And if he should tarry beyond the definite time of their appointing, their faith in his near coming would not in the least be shaken. Let them view the subject in this light, and they will see the propriety of giving all the evidence we can, on '46 or '47, or any other definite period, and at the same time expressing our strong conviction that the Lord may come at any moment.

One reason why we say '46 or '47 is, because we know the testimony in the case is not infallible: there is a possibility of misunderstanding the precise point of time in which the grand periods will terminate. Indeed the Savior has repeatedly told us that we could not know; and that such will be our ignorance of the precise time that we shall be found in the field, at the mill, or at our daily labor, or unconsciously locked in the embrace of sleep, at his return. No human reasoning, or definite conclusions, can give a different meaning to these plain truths: and we consider it the height of folly, if not of presumption, to attempt to do it. We may always question the divinity of that theory or doctrine which does not perfectly harmonize with the plain word of the Lord.

We have nearly approached another fearful crisis in our history: we must soon witness the grand and terrific scenes of the great day of the Lord; or some will meet with another sore disappointment. Our kind and heavenly Father does not place his confiding children in a condition where it is possible for them to meet with disappointment: he never deceives. Hence, if we have assumed a position where it is possible to meet with a disappointment, it is not a Bible position, and consequently must be wrong.—All will admit that it is possible to be mistaken in every calculation which has yet been made on the definite year, month, or day of the Lord's coming. We say it will be admitted that it is possible to be mistaken. This being the case, we ask, why God require us to take a position where it is possible to meet with a disappointment, or to base our most precious faith, and blessed hope, on evidences which may possibly deceive us? Never. 'He is faithful that has promised.' His word will never fail. The conclusion, then, is, that God does not require of us unwavering faith in any specific, or definite year, month, or day, of the Lord's coming. If he does make this requirement, the evidence in the case would not only have been placed within the reach of the comprehension of his weakest child, but would be infallible, and consequently impossible of disappointing our dearest hopes.

It will be asked, in view of these statements, if we are to have no faith in the time of the Lord's coming? Our faith should be of the most unwavering kind; based upon the immutable word of the Lord, a foundation that will not admit of a possibility of the least disappointment of our well grounded and fondest hopes. Such a faith we may and should have at this trying crisis. Without it, we doubt, waver, fear and halt; but with it we are strong, active and joyful, under all the trials of the way. That faith is, that the advent of Christ, to raise the dead and change the living saints, cleanse the earth, and set up his everlasting kingdom, in the order of prophecy, is the next event to be looked for, may be expected every moment, the nature of the case will not admit of placing it one moment in the future; in short, as the Savior has plainly said, is NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOOR.

The evidences to sustain this position are infallible as the word of God is true, and as stubborn facts are immutable. We need not name them; they are well understood by those for whose special benefit we write. They are drawn from the fulfillment of the signs, historical and chronological prophecy.—These evidences lay an imperishable foundation for unwavering faith. A faith that will not subject us to constant fears of an other mistake, and to many, a fatal disappointment. It will fill its possessor with holy confidence, joyful hope, and keep him in a state of constant preparation to meet his Lord. 'Lord, I believe, help that my unbelief.'

The Lord willing, we shall look at this most important subject again, and more critically.

THE TWO-HORNED BEAST.—The article in this number from Bro. Alling, on the two horned beast, will be read with deep interest by many. He presents some very plausible reasons for his faith, or opinion on this much controverted question. We cannot, however, yet endorse his views in full; especially on what constitutes this beast. We find it just as easy to define its character, as that of the little horn in Dan. 7. We think they both refer to the same power. But we can say no more now on this subject; we may, however, at another more favorable time give our views on it in full.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.—A brother asks the following questions, to which we give the following answers.

1. "Is it right to fellowship error, or in other words, those who practice error?"

"And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.' Eph. 5: 11.

2. "There are some who acknowledge sprinkling to be the mark of the beast, and still refuse to be immersed; shall we fellowship such, and receive them to the communion?"

There is no more reason why a person should be immersed because he believes sprinkling is the mark of the beast, than for believing the Catholic church is the Man of Sin. The only reason why a person should be baptized is, because the Lord commands it. We are to judge of a person's christianity by his fruits; not a part, but all that he bears. So far as he bears the fruits of the gospel, or obeys God, we are to fellowship him as one of his children, and no other. It is not our duty to judge of another one's fitness to come to the table of the Lord. Paul settles this question; he says, 'Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.' Our duty, then, is, to examine ourselves, and not another, in this case.

3. "There are some who contend that sprinkling is as right as any other mode of applying water for baptism."

They are mistaken. Sprinkling is not baptism. The literal import of baptize is, to dip, plunge, overwhelm, immerse. Sprinkling does not signify this; and besides, the Bible does not afford a shadow of proof that sprinkling is baptism.

Let there be no contention on these matters.—Cleave, however, to the plain word of the Lord, irrespective of the opinions and prejudices of others. If we are all willing to do this, we shall not differ materially, if any, in our practice, and shall be sure to keep the unity of the Spirit, in the bonds of peace.

BRO. B. MORLEY.—This worthy and efficient brother is laboring under sore trials, caused by pecuniary embarrassment. Brethren, where he labors, these things are wrong. Perhaps, through delicacy, he has not made his wants known; if so, in this he has erred. But his wants are now made known, and it remains for his brethren to say whether they shall be supplied or not. Oh! what a fearful account will some of the stewards of this world's goods have to give in the final day of reckoning!

The following note is from a private letter from Bro. M., under date, Cuba, N. Y., Aug. 16th. We take the liberty to make it public: we think the good of the cause demands it.

"I think I have never been more sorely tried in my life than I have for about two weeks past. There is a wide field about here for labor. But little has been done except in a few villages. I have sometimes thought I should be compelled to teach school for a living: but then I look over the field again, think of the glorious tidings committed to us to proclaim; I pray, and sigh, and cry, 'Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel.' I believe the Lord is near. I trust nothing shall separate me from this faith, or the love which results from it."

Blasphemy.

"William's Light Infantry.—May they soon give us an opportunity of verifying the truth of that passage of Scripture, 'With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.'"
"The Buffalo Light Artillery.—'Blessed are the peacemakers.'"

These are some of the many toasts which were recently drank at a large military gathering in this city. Professed Christians, of the different sects, of course were present, and gave their hearty cheers at this blasphemous use of the words of the peaceful Savior. Our city papers publish and sanction these doings. The ministry and church do not disapprove, but silently, if not publicly, approve them. And this is but a sample of the prevailing sentiments and daily acts of the entire church and world. Deplorable, indeed, is the condition of both. They put light for darkness, and darkness for light, and make the most flagrant and blasphemous perversions of God's word, to justify the unholy principles of war, violence, and bloodshed. Still the Church is looking for the dawn of the millennium, when the sword will be voluntarily beaten into the plowshare, and the nations learn war no more! Oh, what blind infatuation! Nothing, we fear, but the coming of the Lord of glory, to destroy those who destroy the earth, will undeceive them.

“The churches in the bounds of this [N. H.] Conference have been rent and torn asunder, and some entirely ruined by Millerism and Come-out-ism, which have travelled through that country like haunted ghosts breathing from their shrivelled lips the damning pestilence of destruction and death, to blight the workmanship of God in his visible church. May God sweep the refuge of lies from the world and save the churches in future from those aids of the devil, that we may yet see the cause flourish in our midst.—Gospel Herald.”

These are some of the overflowings of the soul of Elder I. N. Walter, the Editor of this paper. We truly pity the man who thinks he can be a minister of the lovely Jesus, and still indulge a spirit so unlike his. In reference to such denunciations, the Saviour has said, “The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his Lord. It is enough that the disciple be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household. Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and hid that shall not be made known.” Matt. 10: 24-26.

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

On the first day of July we left Exeter for Plymouth, leaving Bro. Hutchinson to finish up our labors, and to join us at P., in season to follow us with a like service there. We took the stage at noon, and rode the entire distance of nearly 50 miles in about 5 hours.

On arriving at Plymouth, we found Bro. Micklewood awaiting our arrival: soon Bro. Dealtry came in, and gave us one of his warm greetings. After tea, we repaired to the house of worship. The brethren had announced our coming in a flaming hand-bill, circulated to raise public expectation higher than we desired. Their Hall, or “Central Hall,” will hold about a thousand people, and which we found to be well filled: we were introduced to the assembly by Bro. Dealtry who, in connection with Bro. Micklewood, opened the services of the evening. More than a hundred voices joined in lifting praises to God, in hymns which had so often greeted our ears and moved our souls.—which, together with the sight before us of so many glad hearts in waiting for Jesus, drew the burning tears of gratitude from nature’s deepest well. Bro. Himes delivered a lengthy and masterly sermon on the occasion, which could not have fallen below the expectation of those convened. On our return to our lodgings, Bro. Himes remarked, “It is worth coming to England to receive such marks of Christian regard and affection!”—Many had looked, and longed, and prayed, and almost despaired of our coming. From our limited observation, we fear we shall have to conclude, that the English excel the Americans in politeness and respect: born to reverence their lords, and other dignitaries, they bestow the same kind of deference upon any whom they may suppose to be worthy of it; an admirable degree of politeness is also noticeable towards equals and inferiors. You are almost tempted to purchase a trifle of the hearty thanks returned. “Please sir, a gentleman is at the door who wishes to see you?” “Please sir, what will you have for your dinner?” inquires your lady-like hostess, or some modest, timid-hearted female servant. This term “please sir,” and that word “sir,” is interspersed most elegantly into sentences, by the uncouth of the lower classes. The idiom, some of them respecting America, is enough to create a smile: before our arrival it had been asked (it might have been in derision) whether we were black or white!

We appointed and gave lectures on the following evenings of the week, to large and interested audiences, who, as in other places, hung on our lips, and lingered after the services, as though they would not leave the place; so that although our meetings might commence at half past 7 o’clock, midnight would be fast upon us before we could retire to rest. On Lord’s day evening particularly, the Hall was crowded to excess, and many who stood without, sent in word for Bro. Himes, who was sitting in the desk, to come and address them. The afternoon of the day was devoted, according to custom, to the Lord’s supper: and a very impressive and solemn season it was: Bro. Micklewood conducted the service; after which we both spoke on the subject of Baptism as an ordinance quite universally observed among the Adventists of America, and showed how, without hardly preaching a single sermon upon the duty, yet had it extensively prevailed among us. Central Hall has a good baptistry connected with it, which was used on two occasions while we were there, by willing and happy believers following their Redeemer, and being buried with him in the likeness of his death, and raised again in the likeness of his resurrection, to newness of life. Our brethren meet with almost as much opposition in the advocacy of baptism, as that of the advent. Hence they spend much time and labor in their oral and printed discourses in defence of it. Bro. Burgess is having a baptistry built at Exeter, in Exeter Hall, which will be sure to stir up the ecclesiastical elements.

In Plymouth, we have some visible effects of what has been wrought in a short time by the preaching of the Advent doctrine. There is a noble and choice company of spirits at that place raised up by the untiring efforts of Brn. Dealtry and Burgess. God grant that they may not be scattered. Bro. Dealtry has now started for a hasty route through the country of Cornwall: he has a small moveable pulpit, which he carries with him on his preaching occasions, and which he pitches on the green, or in the fields, when he is necessitated, or chooses to preach in the open air. His domestic affairs have been very trying to him, and indirectly obstructed his usefulness: he is acknowledged to be a man of talent, and a most powerful debater: very few have the ability he has for stirring up the masses: we deeply sympathize with him in his peculiar trials, and fervently pray that God may keep and preserve him. The three young brethren of whom we have spoken, have done much for this country: they have printed and published works on the advent, and scattered them over the land; they have travelled and proclaimed the truth in many places, sometimes accompanying the “bellman” on entering a new place of labor, crying their own lectures, and at the same time distributing their papers to the gathered crowd. They have been abused by the police, and brought before magistrates, and in some instances, have not found either a private or a public house which could provide them with a meal of victuals when they have been hungry, or a bed and a shelter for their heads at night. They have denied themselves of many a superfluity, that they might have more to give to the cause of truth. They have scattered the seed profusely, but as few have appeared to watch and water it, and to husband the fruits thereof, the results of their arduous toils are not so visible;—the great day will disclose them. Our surprise is, that they have been able to do so much, and are now able to point us to so many whitening fields. Brn. B. and M. were formerly local preachers of the Methodist persuasion: the former is brother-in-law to Bro. Winter;—they are men of energy, perseverance, and piety, under whom we do not fear that the cause will suffer. We are sorry that the health of Bro. M. is so delicate; we pray God to spare his valuable life. He will serve the friends of Plymouth for the present, and at the same time conduct the “Cry,” as editor of which, he circulates weekly about 1000 copies. He was made interested in the truth we advocate, by the “Voice of Elijah,” published by Bro. Hutchinson, and sent to him from Canada. He soon became an inquirer, carried the papers to the Methodist minister of the place, and desired him to refute certain positions in them, if it could be done, and to relieve certain difficulties under which he was laboring.—The minister rejected his request; wherefore he engaged a hall, and announced his purpose to deliver lectures on the coming of the Lord. Thus his career commenced. He has labored mainly for several months in Nottingham. After he had come to an understanding of the visions of Daniel, and saw their truth and harmony, he concluded from the likeness in many respects of the books of Daniel and John, that he might, with equal ease and success, harmonize the latter.—As the fruits of his investigations, he has constructed a chronological chart of the Apocalypse, which he proposes publishing soon: he gave us one on a small scale, drawn and written in the style of an accomplished penman. We are glad he is blest with a good companion, who feels a lively interest in the cause of God.

One evening of our stay in Plymouth was set apart for a social gathering at the Hall, for the brethren and sisters, and all who felt interested in the truth. The object was two-fold: one was to make an expression of their good will to us, and the other to raise money to meet present contingencies and to aid us somewhat in defraying the expenses incurred by us in our visit to them. The bare rent of their place of worship is £2 per week; besides which they have many other expenses. About 500 assembled and partook of a very simple repast, consisting of tea, good bread and butter, and one other additional appendage to what is usually found on tea-tables in England, viz., plain plum cake. Everything was conducted with the utmost sobriety and Christian decorum. At a signal given, the company rose and sung the following stanza as a “blessing:”—

“Be present at our table, Lord,
Be here and every where adored;
Thy creatures bless, and grant that we,
May feast in Paradise with thee.”

At the conclusion, another stanza was sung, as an expression of thanks:—

“We thank the Lord, for this our food,
But more because of Jesus’ blood;
Let manna to our souls be given—
The bread of life sent down from heaven.”

The cloths being removed, and the seats arranged, the remainder of the evening, until 11 o’clock, was spent in religious services. Bro. Burgess, in a brief address, expressed to the friends our sense of gratitude for the mark of Christian hospitality and courtesy which had been received from their hands on the occasion. Though away from the sweet and cheering influences of our own domestic circles, and denied the privilege of looking upon the happy countenances of beloved companions and children, yet we were favored with a privilege next in kind to that—the privilege of mingling with dear and chosen brethren and sisters in the Lord, of whom we have often heard, and to whom we feel the bonds of affection riveting us together in sweet and holy union: our relationship is of heaven, and must survive the decay of all mere earthly connexions. Our gratification was expressed with the order and decorum which had been manifest, together with the complicity of the repast, and the evidence that was afforded by their re-sitting that a disposition to gratify animal indulgence, had not originated their meeting. We had been apprehensive that they were in danger of following in the wake of those in the United States, whose motives and proceedings we had ever repudiated and condemned; who had made the house of God a theatre for banqueting, mirth, merchandize, and gambling. Bro. Burgess here related the origin and progress of religious festivals in America, and concluded with a word of caution, and an exhortation to the friends, to aim to be influenced in every religious action, by appeals to the highest and most worthy principles of the sanctified heart. Bro. Micklewood followed in a brief relation of his Advent experience; after which Bro. Himes spent an hour in a recital of the history of the Advent movement in America, which excited the delightful surprise and admiration of all present, and concluded by stating it to be our object now to collect the strength of the friends of this cause in England, to rally and raise £1000 for a printing establishment, &c.: many smiled at the boldness of his conception: he pledged £100 from the friends in the United States, providing the brethren in England would do their part towards filling the subscription. In addition to what was raised to defray the expenses of our visit, quite a little subscription was made for a press, or for printing a good paper: the poor were the first to cast their mites into the treasury, and we hope the more able will not keep back.

In the course of the services, one of our American tunes and hymns was sung, which is a great favorite with the English brethren,—“The Old Church Yard.”—Bro. Himes prefacing the singing with an account of its origin and author, who was a poor American slave. A short prayer ended the services, and we all dispersed, happy from our interview with each other, and the calm, heavenly influences which had been distilled upon us like dew.

Bro. Hutchinson joined us two days before our departure, and gave us encouraging accounts of the work in Exeter: persons from all sects had listened to his lectures there, and many precious souls seemed to see and feel the power of the truth. Several had given in their names to sustain the cause in that city. Bro. Hutchinson preached the next evening after his arrival, in Plymouth, and Bro. Himes the following evening, being the day before our own departure. We had no cause of regret for visiting that place;—neither for lack of interest on the part of the people in our mission.

While there, we sent off in various directions, numbers of our papers; some of them to clergymen: we wrote several notes with which we accompanied them, to Rev. Messrs. Pym, Bickersteth, Birks, Brooks, and Brock, of the Established Church, and whom you know are interested in the coming of the Lord at hand: Mr. Bickersteth has already written a very respectful note in reply, accompanied with a tract of his own, and speaking of several new publications on the question.

Letter from Sister Barry.

My Dear Brother in Christ:—After a long and tedious journey, through the goodness of God, I arrived safely home, but much reduced in health. I have not been able to sit up all the time the week past, but my health is some better.—I thought, when I got home, how sweet it is to rest, even in this world, when worn out with care; but, O, how much sweeter that Sabbath of rest, where—

“No more fatigue, no more distress,
Nor sin, nor death, shall reach that place;
No tears shall mingle with the songs
That warble from immortal tongues.
No rude alarms of raging foes,

No cares to break the long repose,
No midnight shade, no clouded sun,
But one eternal blessed noon.

And what child of God cannot say, in the language of the poet—

“O, long expected day, begin.”

That will, indeed, be a blessed day to all the saints. If we credit the word of God, we must believe the Lord will soon come again to this earth, to redeem it for his people. There are many who inquire, ‘What shall I believe?’ I would say to all such, ‘This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom God hath sent.’—“He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.” “For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.” When? At the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

Again, we are told in the blessed word, ‘You that are troubled, rest with us.’ Why? For ‘the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels.’ For what purpose? ‘To be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe in that day.’ The Lord help us all to believe in that day, and not only believe it, but be prepared for it when it shall dawn upon us. May the sinner get ready before that day shall come, when Jesus shall rise up to take vengeance on them who know not God, and obey not the gospel.

I would say to my dear brethren and sisters, neither time nor distance can lessen my strong attachment for you, I love you, and I need your prayers at this time, that God would guide me in the right way, and, wherever my lot may be cast, that I may be enabled to adorn the doctrine I profess, the doctrine in which my dear husband died. He often said, during the two years past, ‘If the blessed Savior has no more for me to do, I should be glad to rest.’ When he was so sick that I did not think it possible for him to live but a few hours, the following words of the poet were on my mind:—

Can this be he who used to stray,
A pilgrim on the world’s highway?

Yes, it was him. I knew that I had heard him preach for the last time. Oh, the dreadful realities of death! How my soul cowered in the presence of man’s relentless and triumphant foe! Death has stepped between us—the tie is severed. But a few months ago, we were a happy family; but now, I am alone; I have buried all that has been dear to me on earth. Oh, yes, bitter, indeed, has been the cup of sorrow; but still more bitter would it be were I unresigned to drink it.

Dear brethren and sisters, with whom we have labored, I shall in all probability see you no more in this vale of tears. Give me your prayers, forgive me all my unfaithfulness while with you, and may we soon meet my dear husband, and all the saints, on the new earth.

Mother Barry and family wish to be remembered to the kind friends in Rochester, and elsewhere, for their kindness in the hour of affliction. The Lord reward them all.

Yours, in Christian love,

ELIZABETH D. BARRY.

Letter from Sister Stoddard.

Bro. Marsh:—Having just received a letter from Bro. J. D. Johnson, in which he states that “the brethren and sisters West, wonder where I can be,” I felt it to be my very reasonable duty to inform them; and I here confess my negligence before God and them, and plead guilty in not occasionally writing through the Voice of Truth, to those dear brethren and sisters whose prayers, kindness, and hospitality were extended to me, the weakest of God’s children, in holding up my hands and heart when ready to faint under the responsibility which rested upon me in endeavoring to warn the world and church of a coming judgment, which I then as now believe to be at the door. I know how eagerly I grasp the paper to read a letter from some one of them, and even to look at the weekly receipts to see their names, the which I take as a sign that they are holding on to the “faith once delivered to the saints.”

I would therefore in the first place say, that the advent doctrine is near and precious to my soul; it has the word of God to sanction it. It begins in the garden of Eden, and ends in the garden of Eden. It covers the entire ground from Gen. to Rev., and all I need to be proclaiming it, is health. Two years and a half constant talking, completely broke my constitution, and brought on a disease, which undoubtedly will bring me to the grave shortly, unless the Lord come to change this vile body, which I pray may be the case. It is nearly a year since I have talked publicly, but once. I cannot even sing one verse without feeling the effects long afterwards. But while I am deprived of my health, and unable to do scarcely anything and a great part of the time not able to sit up, I do rejoice that the Lord gave me strength to proclaim His coming as long as I did, and now to believe his precious promise that “He that is to come will come, and will not tarry.”

I desire to be “where the inhabitants will not say, I am sick.” I groan, being burdened, not that I would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.”

And when I read in the “Voice” that you was sick, and our dear Bro. Barry was just alive, I was ready to exclaim, “Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly,” and put an end to death and mortality, and bestow eternal life to thy tried and faithful ones. The Lord sustain Bro. Barry if he is alive, and give him grace to endure to the end, that he may “receive a crown of life that never fades away,” and may Sister Barry, if she is called to lay her dear companion in the grave, feel the blessed assurance that it will be but a short time before “all that sleep in Jesus, God will bring with him.” “When the Lord descends with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God;” when she, if faithful, will with her little one now living, meet her husband and the one that sleeps, to be an unbroken family in the kingdom of God; for Isaiah says, they are the seed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.”

O, what a prospect before the Christian, to be where God will wipe all tears from off all faces. Where the tabernacle of God will be, when we shall see him if we are pure, for “Blessed are the pure in heart, they shall see God. John says, whoso has the hope of seeing Jesus, and of being made like him, “purifieth himself even as he is pure.”

When shall I reach that happy place,

And be forever blest.

When shall I see my Father’s face,

And in his bosom rest.

I have great confidence in Bro. Hale’s exposition of time, and especially I received great light from the long article on time in your double No. of the “Voice.” May the Lord continue to give light, and verify the promise, “The wise shall understand.”

I feel that the Lord is trying his people, to see who will endure to the end; and O may we not “sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober,” knowing that if we have our “loins girt with truth,” and be watching, that that day will not “overtake us as a thief.” My dear husband feels it his duty as well as privilege, to labor with his hands, that he may administer to my wants, and be able to comfort me while I am deprived of my health, and also to help the cause which lies so near his heart: and he often groans in spirit that we cannot be in the field again, publishing the glad news of the kingdom, but feels to say, “Thy will O God be done.”

LUCY M. STODDARD.

New Worcester, July 15, 1846.

The Lord, our Refuge.

A faithful friend we pilgrims have,
He hears us when we pray;
His promised grace will never fail,
Nor will he long delay.

He knows the heart of every child,
Nor will he deal unkind;
He says,—and O how sweet the sound—
'In me a refuge find.'

A refuge from the chilling winds
Is found in Israel's God;
And tho' with tempest blast they rage,
We're safe in Christ the Lord.

O, soon the winds will cease to blow,
The tempest soon be o'er;
And safe will land the pilgrim's barque
On Canaan's peaceful shore.

The sleeping saints all sealed by God,
With garments clean and white,
Will join the blood-washed throng on earth,
And rise to realms of light.

Not one of all the chosen race
Will then be left behind;
His angels will creation search,
And every saint will find.

Then, sorrow's cup will ne'er be drank
By hearts with anguish riven,
And Christian friends that now must part,
Will find a home in heaven.

A Real Disciple.

1st. A real disciple of the once crucified, but now exalted Jesus, is one who "loves him more than father, mother, wife, children, brethren, sisters, yea, and his own life also." Luke 14: 26; Matth. 10: 37.

2d. A real disciple of him who humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, is one who "bears his cross daily." Luke 9: 23-26.

3d. A real disciple of him who was rich, but for our sakes became poor, is one who "forsaketh all that he hath." Luke 14: 33.

4th. A real disciple of him who spake as never man spake, is one who not only believes on him with all the heart, but "continues in his word." And such are they who "know, and are made free by the truth." John 8: 31, 32.

5th. A real disciple of him who hath declared himself to be the true vine, is one who "abides in him, and bears much fruit." John 15: 8.

6th. A real disciple of him who was meek, is one who "adopts and cherishes his spirit." Rom. 8: 9.

If the above is a true picture of a genuine disciple of Jesus Christ, then surely they are rare at the present time. Thousands who profess to be his disciples are no more such than "Mystery Babylon" is the "Church of God." Many of them may have been such once, but they have "gone away from him." They have "left their first love,"—they have "ceased to bear the cross," they no longer "count all things lost for Christ," they no longer continue to "believe, and walk in the truth,"—they no longer continue to "abide in Christ the true vine, but have become withered branches,"—they have, by rebelling against God, "vexed his holy Spirit."

There is another class who profess to be Christ's followers, who never knew him, nor were never known of him. These are they I think, of whom Christ spake, when he said, many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity. It is a melancholy truth, that by far the greatest part of those who, at the present day, profess to be the disciples of Christ, belong to one or the other of these classes, while but here and there a real disciple is to be found.

WBBLEY BURNHAM.

Exeter N. H., July 22, 1846.

Letter from Bro. M. Batchelor.

Bro. Marsh:—When I read in the Voice of Truth your article headed "I am sick," it struck me with force; and turning over the paper, I saw a letter headed "Bro. Barry is sick." And then dear Bro. Fitch is dead, and had it not been for the blessed language of Isaiah, "the inhabitants shall no more say, I am sick," the thought would have sunk much deeper. Truly, in view of sickness, sorrows, disappointments and deaths, our hope is a blessed hope. Had I no hope only what is to be realized at death, or the prosperity of the Church in this world of sin, I should be of all men, most miserable. This is all the Church in general have: that is, if we judge by their preaching, praying, and singing. Death, say they, is the gate to glory, and the tares are all to become wheat before the harvest. Truly, blindness is upon the church, as it was on old Israel, at the first advent.

As I read my Bible, I see nothing for the church in this life, greater than has been realized; but on the contrary, I expect, as time shall last, that evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse. I see no prosperity ahead, until the blessed Jesus comes in all his glory. For this I pray with all my heart.

As to death, I see nothing in it but death. But to have a part in the first resurrection, on which the second death shall have no power, I see a glory, yes, unspeakable glory. And is this the last year of time? At the farthest, have we but one more winter to expect in time? It truly looks so, praise the Lord, but I feel sometimes like Noah before the flood; and am looked upon something as he was, by those around; I am delivering a message that but few believe. I have endeavored to let the light shine around these hills and valleys, but there are few who consider it light. I, like all others who believe in the speedy appearance of Jesus, am spurned by many who profess to be Ministers, considered weak by others, stubborn or insane by many, but amidst it all, I cannot give it up: the Lord is at hand, and will soon be here to take away the rebuke of his people from all the earth; when Moab shall be trodden down as straw, under him. Isaiah 25: 10.

I have often wished to visit the West, but the state of my family has forbidden my absence from home long at a time; the Lord knows my situation, and I am willing to leave it with him.

I am yours affectionately in the blessed hope,
MATTHEW BATCHELOR.

Pownal Vt., July 14, 1846.

Bro. T. J. Carlton, Green Creek O, July 17, writes:—Last Sabbath I met with brethren assembled from different quarters, at a place a little south of Norwalk Ohio. We had a good season; three men were baptized, who recently experienced religion under the labors of Bro. Whitmore, of Fairfield. The brethren in that quarter have been sifted like wheat. Those who remain, I think will stand by grace until the Lord comes.

One week ago last Sabbath, we had a blessed season at lower Sandusky, with brethren assembled from different parts. The day before that, which was the 4th of July, the Presbyterians in that place enjoyed a blessed season, I suppose they would call it: for they had a pick-nick, and took quite a large sum of money. There was holy gambling, and pious robbing, but no prayers, though, as I was informed, four of the clergy were present. The sooner the churches stop mocking God and deceiving the people, by connecting religious ceremonies with their riotous feasts, with the drunken, the better for mankind.

No sale here for the articles of which you do speak.—Ed.

Be humbled, therefore, under the strong hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time.

Bro. J. Wright, North Bennington Vt., July 19, writes:—The Voice of Truth still continues to be a welcome weekly visitor to me. From the perusal of which, I derive much consolation in this time of peculiar trial. I am glad that you are not ashamed to let the paper speak out on the much despised subject of time. Go on brother, let the truth sound out, though the world revile, and the church oppose and ridicule, and regard you as the filth of the earth, and the offscouring of all things. If you see good evidence for believing the Lord will come this year, proclaim it, and leave the consequences with God.

I must say the evidences in favor of '46, are (or appear to be) incontrovertible: certainly they appear stronger than in '43; at least it seems to me.

I rejoice that there seems to be a waking up among the saints, both on the subject of time and holiness of heart, or pure and undefiled religion. Very soon, I trust, we shall reap if we faint not. Then these scenes of trial, affliction, sorrow, sickness, pain, and death will cease, and violence shall no more be heard in thy land: wasting nor destruction within thy borders, but thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise. The sun shall no more be thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee, but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be thy everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.—Thy people shall all be righteous, they shall inherit the land forever: the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified; and none of the inhabitants shall say I am sick. Glorious day. O may it hasten.

"Two friends," July 22, write:—Bro. Marsh: We enclose you five dollars, to aid in your work of mercy, to this lost world. Our prayer is, that God would abundantly strengthen you in the outer and inner man, to do his will, and work, in sounding the alarm, "Behold he cometh," in the ears of this wicked generation, till our Lord shall come. This glorious event, we are waiting and expecting, will soon be ushered in upon this slumbering world, and in view of which, through the mercy of our covenant keeping God, we are permitted to lift up our heads, believing our redemption draweth nigh.

The Voice of Truth is a welcome messenger to us, as the weeks roll around.

Appointments.

A CONFERENCE is appointed at Slah City, Livonia, Livingston Co., N. Y., to commence Sept. 2d, Thursday 2 P. M., and hold over the Sabbath. Bro. Bywater, Hill, Johnson, and perhaps the Editor, will be present. Bro. Galusha is earnestly solicited to attend.

A Conference is appointed at Jamestown, Chautauque Co. N. Y. to commence Thursday, Sept. 3rd, and hold over the Sabbath.—Brethren are cordially invited to attend. If Bro. Robinson could attend it would be a pleasure to us. Will your health admit?

E. HOYT,
A. PARTRIDGE,
W. BREED,
E. HOYT.

The Lord willing, I shall be at Akron, O., Sabbath Sept. 13. Jamestown, Aug. 6th, 1846.

A Conference is appointed at Laona, Chautauque Co., N. Y., to commence Sept. 11th, and hold over the Sabbath. It is expected from previous encouragement, that Bro. Robinson, Porter, Bywater, and yourself, will attend. And we invite other ministering brethren, and our brethren and sisters generally, in the adjacent towns, to meet with us. As the Conference will immediately follow the one appointed at Jamestown, we shall expect brethren will come calculating to attend both.

On the Death of Eld. T. F. Barry.

There was a sound of heart's mourning borne
Along the breeze of night; the saddening wail
Told to the awe-struck list, her deeds of death,
For he, the pastor of a chosen flock,
Bows to the unseen Power, lovely yet sad.

Thy presence, Heaven-sent messenger to man,
When, with soft silent step, thou nip'st the bud
Of Innocence upon its cradled rest,
Sad is thy presence, when, in Youth's bright morn,
Thou blight'st hopes richest treasures ere they bloom;
But when, in Manhood's intellectual might,
And moral strength, firm-nerved to meet the shocks
Of life's stern conflict, thou, dread monarch, comest,
How doth the stricken heart with anguish break
Beneath the Chast'ner's rod!

Low in the tomb

He sleeps, who came, resting on Jesus' arm,
To preach salvation through a Savior's blood,
And lead to streams of living waters pure,
The church of Christ. How sudden stilled in death
The voice that wept for Zion: and the heart
That poured the strains of heaven-born melody
Bowl stirring, on the ear, is hushed in sleep;
But whom the mighty angel's trump shall rouse,
When Christ returns triumphant from the sky.

By the seven-pillar'd temple lingering,
In his right hand the oracles divine,
And in his left, the vision-blazoned scroll,
And in his heart, a heaven-erkindled zeal,
Methinks I hear his call,—"Thus saith the Lord,
The Gentile times have run their measured round;
Shinar's dark tower hath filled her number'd days;
The Crescent sinks; the Image stands revealed;
And signs portentous, in the earth and sky,
Announce the smiting of the mountain stone.
Rejoice ye saints, for your redemption's nigh;
Behold he cometh! and even so come!"

Such was his message,—tireless sentinel,
Powerful in spirit, tho' the flesh was weak,
He fain had girt the gospel panoply,
And given the God of Israel no rest,
Till Salem rose a praise in all the earth.

They wept for Moses, near the promised land;
Jesus fond tribute paid to friendship's worth:
BARRY, beloved, our tears are shed for thee.

"Go forward!" saith the captain of the host
To Israel, when dark affliction lowered,
"The Lord hath sworn by His Almighty Name, Ye shall possess the land."

Then, Christian, weep

Thy shepherd stricken low; but mourn in hope,
For thy Great Leader, thy Redeemer, lives.
Tho' clouds and darkness wrap th' eternal throne,
Sweet Mercy's voice from out the tempest speaks—
"Peace to thy bruised spirit, rest on me,
Thou church bereaved, I am thy firmer strength.
Thy shield, thy rock, thine everlasting stay."
What tho' the waves of trouble dash and roar
Around thy feet, the mighty billows serve
To lift thy head above the gathering storm,
And plant thee surer on th' eternal base.
Go forward, then, and, in thy Maker's strength, Bear up the ark, and help to usher in
The glorious day of Jesus' kingly reign.

And thou; to whom his presence was thy light
And joy, and happiness, whose burdened heart,
Turns from all human sympathy, canst thou
In faith and meekness, kiss thy Father's rod,
And say, "Thy will be done! Canst thou 'refrain
Thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears'
When the last golden link to earth is riven,
And trust the promise that they 'shall return'
(Father, thy blessing on the comfortless!)
THANK REST, meek sufferer; soon, life's journey o'er,

Thou, in the dazzling light of heaven, shalt read
The meed of all thy sorrows on the earth;
And in blest union by immortal tier,
Shalt tune thy harp with those who went before,
In that blest home, the City of thy God.

NEWARK, WAYNE CO., N. Y., Aug. 13, '46. SARAH A. REW.

THE CALL OF GOD TO HIS DEAR PEOPLE, AT THE FALL OF BABYLON.

"And I heard a voice from heaven, saying,
Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."
—Rev. 18: 4.

Immediately after the fall of Babylon, and attending its proclamation to the world, was this invitation given to the people of God. O, that all who are still lingering within her corrupt walls, might hear and live.

According to prophecy, and as I have traced its fulfilment in the proud, worldly, anti-christian sects of the present day, when Babylon fell, many of the people of God were in her; otherwise they could not be called out by a voice from heaven, after the fall had taken place. When mystery Babylon, that great city, becomes a habitation of devils, and a hold of every foul spirit &c. at her fall; she is spoken of as a whole, a great organization, reigning over the kings of the earth.

A small minority, however, remain in the spiritual city when Christ leaves the great mass;—these he invites to follow him. These are not sufficient in number and influence, to save the body from ruin. They have not practised its ambitions, nor tolerated in others, the sins which caused her fall, but have "sighed and cried for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof," and consequently have the mark of the Father's name written in their foreheads. These dear souls, Christ loves and visits; he invites, comforts, and wishes to have separate from sin and all uncleanness. When I met the dear saint, as I visit Babylon, and behold the tear, and hear the deep-toned sigh, and "what shall I do, I am surrounded by spiritual death, famine, worldly-mindedness, pride; I can't live so," my heart is touched with unspeakable anxiety, and my bosom swells with deep emotion, that they may know the truth and be delivered from bondage more intolerable than that of ancient Egypt.—Nor does the name, opinion, or location in the city, abate my zeal. God save them, is the prayer of my soul. But how can such be sanctified and saved? is the anxious inquiry. How can transient visits of the Spirit be exchanged for the permanent residence of the Holy Ghost." For if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

The text heading this article, is, in my opinion, the only true answer to these interrogatories. We must obey God and do our duty. His affectionate call, and our imperious duty, are here contained. It is not left to our own pleasure, option, or convenience; but a thrilling sound from heaven strikes upon the ear, the heart, the soul; "My people, come out of her;" "Go ye out to meet him." "Behold he cometh." Hallelujah, Amen! Even so, come Lord Jesus. We must all arise, trim our lamps, go out single-handed by light of our own lamp and that alone, into a full and perfect preparation to meet the Lord, and then and there, patiently wait for the Lord.

But what is implied in this invitation or command, "Come out of her," &c. That great city, the woman or fallen church, out of which God calls his people, is the anti-Christ, which the prophets said should come. All opposed to or against Christ, yet resembling him, is anti-Christ. Babylon denotes confusion or mixture. Mixture of opposite elements. A compound of christianity and the world. Anti-Christ—imitating Christ by profession and appearance, yet opposed to him in doctrine, spirit and practice. Christianity corrupted or compounded with the spirit and habits of this world, is both anti-Christ and Babylon.—But this is understood by those who have examined this subject. Then we come out from, and leave all against Christ; or all of a worldly and sinful nature, that is mixed with our christian profession.

To come out of Babylon, implies then, that we forsake the spirit and customs of the world.—Are they proud and haughty in their looks, gestures, dress, manners and equipage, we must abandon them, and seek the humility of Jesus, which is the true foundation of all other graces. Let us, my brethren, lay aside all our Babylonish garments and gay equipage, and be meek and lowly in heart, and we shall find rest unto our souls. The Lord giveth grace to the humble.—Covetousness, which is idolatry, the idol of the world, must be wholly abandoned. If we are wholly out of Babylon, we shall consider our property, time, and talents, the Lord's, over which we are placed as stewards, to distribute and improve to his glory, till he calls us to an account.

We must leave all the lusts of the flesh, and the pride of life. "Walk in the spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." Have we fleshy habits in eating, drinking, sleeping, &c? He that striveth for the mastery, is temperate in all things. We may plead that some of our vain and foolish habits are of long standing, for our health, comfort, &c.; but if they are unscriptural and sinful, we must give them up for Christ's sake, though as near and dear as a right hand or eye, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Narrow-mindedness and party spirit must be abandoned, and we put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. Anti-Christ is a spirit of bigotry and intolerance; let us have fervent charity among ourselves, for charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such, there is no law."

Have we fully got the victory over the mark of the beast in our foreheads, (spirit of worldliness, intolerance, and bigotry in our hearts,) and put on the gentle, lamb-like spirit of the lowly Jesus? we must see also to our hands, and wash away the mark from our whole deportment.

O, let us go out to meet Jesus. The conversation of Babylon is vain, corrupt, worldly, fashionable, censorious, blasphemous, and wicked;—let us forsake it, and have ours in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior. No one can be fully out of Babylon while they follow the vain conversation of a fashionable church and guilty world. The tongue can no man tame, but it may be governed. "But if any offend not in word, he is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." We must forsake war and bloodshed with all its accompaniments; "owe no man anything, but to love one another." Brother must not go to law with brother. We should deal justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God. But is this all that is implied in coming out of Babylon? I think not. But this state of holiness can hardly be attained in any of the sects of the present day. Would not such an one be called a fanatic, crazy, or deluded, and expelled from the church? Let any one do this, and expose her abominations, and he becomes an outlaw at once, and is subject to church discipline.

As in type, the ancient city Babylon, we could not be considered out of the city, though we could not submit to its cruel laws, and had abandoned the spirit and practice of the great majority of its wicked inhabitants, so long as we retained a place of residence there, and there lived and enjoyed the blessings of this life; so also in the antitype, as long as we retain a standing in any one of the denominations composing mystic Babylon. If our home is in any one sect or building composing that great city, and we there live and enjoy the benefits of the family, we are yet in Babylon, and it is vain to deny it. It is a common thing to say to young converts, "Go home; you must find you a home." Now, this piece of advice involves an unscriptural and cruel principle. It seems to say, we are not born again at home! But we are born again into the true church. It is by virtue of this change we become church members. The moment we are converted, we become members of Christ's body, the church, and our names are written in heaven. We are therefore at home as much as we can be till we meet the "whole family in heaven and earth." What, not at home where those are who groaned and travailed for us in birth! To leave them and join a sect, is, in fact, to go away from home.

This principle forms the basis of spiritual Babylon. Sects formed on the different opinion of Christians, with man-made names, are a source of confusion, form a diversity of homes, and divide the living child. But in the primitive church, the body of Christ formed a plurality of churches, by outward circumstances only. Distance of place, and the size of the house of worship, were the only causes of separate congregations; and to evince this, they appended to the church the name of the place of its location, or place of worship. Thus we have the churches of Jerusalem, Corinth, Philadelphia, &c., spoken of in scripture. But when distance of place was removed, and they assembled in one place, they were one indeed; being filled with the Holy Spirit. Differences of opinion were overcome:—they were one, as the Father and Son are one: of the same spirit, of the same mind, and of the same judgment. Therefore, to call God's people out of these human institutions and anti-christian sects, which are dividing the saints for a name or opinion, to call them, we say, into one body, on the ground they received Christ Jesus the Lord, and to the faith once delivered to the saints, is the kind wish of Heaven. Let us, therefore, leave our sectarian homes without delay, and follow Jesus.

We must also go out of the city. If our home in one particular denomination is given up, and we go around from sect to sect to commune and bear the word, we are still in Babylon; for they are perhaps, equally proud, worldly, formal, fallen, and dead, as the one you left. If so, you would equally endanger the eternal welfare of your soul. Do not, like the family of Lot, linger about the city which is full of corruption and blood, lest you feel other plagues: death, mourning, and famine, stealing upon your inmost soul. "Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity."

You must not be governed by her wicked customs or human creeds, but go through or over-leap her intolerant walls. The Bible, the Bible alone, is an "all-sufficient rule of faith and practice." This, thank kind Heaven, is given as the infallible wall of defence and protection against true, beloved Zion. Let us trim our lamps, and go out to meet him. In this we must do as Luther and his cotemporaries did in the great German reformation. Says Luther, "Scripture without comment, is the sun whence all teachers receive this light. The Reformers as also the Apostles, hold forth the word of God alone as light, while they exalt the one offering of Christ as the only righteousness. To mingle the commandments of men with this supreme authority of God, or any righteousness of man with the perfect righteousness of Christ, is to corrupt the two great fundamental truths of the gospel.—Such were the two great leading heresies of Rome.

Says D'Aubigne, "One gleam of light from God's word, gives more true illumination than all the wisdom of man." "I applied myself," says Zwingle, in earnest prayer to the Lord, to give me his light, and though I read nothing but Scripture, its sense became clearer to me than if I had studied many commentators."

The creeds formed for the government of God's people, by human legislation on the Word, have formed walls of division among the saints, and being substituted for the word of God, her enemies easily scale or overthrow her walls, laugh at her protection, and exult in her ruin. "Her prophets have built a wall, and lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar; say to them that daubed it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall, there shall be an overflowing shower, and yea O great hailstones shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it."—See Ezek, 13: 10-16.

We must also cause our names to be erased from the records of Babylon, by publicly declaring ourselves no longer a member, and requesting our names. This last step is, with many, by far the most trying, in leaving those unholy organizations. We are not considered members of an organized body of professed Christians, till we are received, and our names taken by motion of the body. We may have been born again into the family of God, and a member of the family first born, whose names are written in heaven months and years before, and by virtue of this great change, entitled to all the blessings of His children here, and to heaven hereafter; and yet, strange to tell, we are not church-members till our names are enrolled upon some of the church registers of the religious denominations of the day! Now, if a person can be converted, enjoy the fellowship of the Father, Son, and all holy beings here, and in the world to come, and yet, not be considered of the existing sects, we must enter the true church before we enter a nominal church, for we cannot be fellowshiped by the Father, and saved, unless we are members of his body, the true church. Christ's order and church and sectarian organizations, are two distinct bodies. We enter the former by conversion to God, but we enter the latter with the consent of the body, by giving in our name. We retain our membership in Christ's church, so long as we abide in him, and no longer; but we can retain our membership in a nominal church, though backslidden entirely, if we retain a form of godliness, though we deny the power hereof.

Christ's church can contain none but true saints, while the nominal church or Babylon, is composed of unconverted persons, deceived persons, apostates, and hypocrites, with some of the people of God in her. And as we are considered members of a sect so long as our name stands upon their church paper, though out, in spirit and practice, it is highly important to take our names.

But the name amounts to nothing, says one, whether on or off a church record. It may not so much, in your estimation, it is true: or in the judgment of Heaven; but in their estimation, it amounts to all the responsibilities of full membership. The sect, according to established usages, will consider you amenable to the body, for your conduct and support, as much as though you fellowshiped their conduct and spirit. Indeed, a man may fellowship their conduct and spirit, and yet he is not considered a member by them, unless his name stands recorded with theirs. It is well known that the American christian church stands at the head of an institution noted in Scripture as one of the crowning sins of Babylon, making merchandise of "slaves and the souls of men." Is our name among the number of those who support and defend this horrid institution, or any other sin of Babylon? Shall we not partake of sin? If our name and our money are given in support of an organization which tolerates crime and error, shall we not be, in part, accountable for the consequences? Our prosperity and influence are from the giver of every good and perfect gift. When called to give an account of our stewardship, we must answer whether we have done all to the glory of God. God grant we may be among the number that have gotten the victory over the number of his name, and stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. O may we have grace to endure this dreadful conflict, and stand entire at last.

"Seek ye out the Book of the Lord, and read."

Are these things so? what things? Is the church to have no rest, no time of peace nor triumph day, but one continual scene of suffering and warfare until the deliverer come? Is the second advent of the Lord Jesus pre-millennial? Is the existing nominal church departed from the faith once delivered to the saints? Such, I understand, are the teachings of the Scriptures of truth, and I thank God that the promise is still upon record, of being shown "what is noted in them." I wish here to give an answer to the two former questions, not so much for the benefit of my brethren of like precious faith, as for some others who may chance to peruse this article;—although it may strengthen the faith of all, to review the evidences of our hope, therefore my brother or sister, open the holy book, and see what saith the Scriptures.

In the seventh chapter of Daniel, is brought to view an anti-christian power, which (leaving out the question as to what it is,) is to "make war with the saints, (church) and prevail against them (mark how long) until the Ancient of days came, and judgment is given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." The time of the saints possessing the kingdom, you will find by reading the 25th of Matt. is, "When the Son of man comes in his glory."

There are other texts in the Bible, but the one under consideration is sufficient to prove the impossibility of this world's conversion. The anti-christian power, symbolized by the little horn, is doubtless, Popery or Roman Catholicism. She now numbers her 150 millions of followers, and according to prophecy, will continue to make war in some form or other with the true church, and give her no rest nor time of peace, until the Lord shall come to deliver his people, and the man of sin is destroyed. Turn again to Rev. 20. Here is the only place where the millennial reign of Christ is brought to view, connected with the time. The word millennium, means one thousand years. The coming of the King of kings and Lord of Lords with all the armies of heaven, the battle of the great day, victory of the Lamb, &c., is brought to view in the preceding chapter, in the ever sublime language of prophetic inspiration. We then read of the binding, shutting up, sealing, &c., of Satan, of thrones, and some seated upon them, (see Math. 19: 28, and Luke 22: 30,) of the souls of the once beheaded martyrs living and reigning with Christ a thousand years; and in verse 5 comes the explanation, than which, nothing can be clearer,—“This is the first resurrection.” The word resurrection, means reviving or raising up from the grave. Thus, the resurrection of the just is pre-millennial, and takes place at the coming of the Lord.—(See 1 Thess., 4: 16.)

The reign is doubtless upon the new earth,—for verses 4, 6, and 9 teach, that “Christ,” “the saints,” and the “beloved city,” are all then, evidently personally and literally.

The millennium, in my humble opinion, is not in time, but is as it were, the anti-chamber to the blessed kingdom of God, the unit, of the endless years of a long, and to the righteous, blissful eternity. O, blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection! What are the prospects at present for a time of peace? It is a fact, acknowledged and lamented by many of the press of our country, (whose editors do sometimes, check their wild career of earthly thoughts, and pen one solemn truth,) that the four most enlightened and christian nations of the earth, are continually at war. France, the protectress of the Roman Catholic church, is waging a costly and exterminating war with the natives of Africa. Russia, the avowed defender of the Greek church, is carrying on a destructive war with the hardy Caucasians. England and the United States, the professed champions of the Protestant church, are never at peace; the former, “on whose dominions the sun never sets,” has just consummated one of the most horrid butcheries recorded in modern times, and our own favored country is now making vast preparations to carry on a successful war with Mexico. Alas! we shall look in vain for peace, until the Prince of peace shall reign. And how is it with the professed church? O, it is sad and heart rending to contrast her present condition with what it was even 4 and 6 yrs. ago: how fallen! and death, and mourning, and famine, have truly come upon her. The city, which should be on a hill, is now in the wilderness. The candles are nearly all under the bushel, and wherewith shall the world be lighted? The salt has lost its savor, and wherewith shall the earth be salted? and if the salt, the preserver of the earth, has lost its savor, will the present world be long preserved? I think not.

God forbid that any should seek to cherish in himself or others, a spirit of fault-finding with all that does not accord with his views of the truth; but it is a solemn fact, and one which I am ready to affirm without fear of successful contradiction, that a large majority of the professed churches of our land have lost sight both of the Christian's hope and inheritance; they know not when they shall realize the former, nor what will constitute the latter: make little or no distinction between death and the coming of the Lord,—are destitute of a correct knowledge of the object of his second advent and of the great plan of creation & redemption; and are so utterly ignorant of the Bible, as not to be able to quote or refer to it, with scarcely any degree of exactness. Many too who are teachers in Israel, to whom the world and a part of the church look for wisdom, and from whom we should expect better things, teach for doctrines the commandments and traditions of men, and are “turned unto fables.” And they do it despite the plain teachings of the word of God, which affirms that the last days will abound in unparalleled wickedness, that the wheat and tares will grow together till the harvest, the end of the world; that the anti-christian powers of Mahom-edanism and Popery, will be destroyed only by the brightness of the coming of the Lord, (not his spirit.)
