I have heard these same teachers enter into a long, laborious argument, (“handling the word of God deceitfully,”) to prove the world must all be converted, and consequently there will be a thousand years prior to the end;” and hanging upon both horns of the dilemma, they will then most contradictorily assert that the Lord may come before they descend from the pulpit! The Bible, the “sure word of prophecy” which is a “light,” they thus make a blind guide; and now, when God commands them to know that his kingdom is at the door, they say the future is to them “like walking against the wall.” Heedless of the plain declarations of the same Word, that “no kingdom, no crown, no reward, inheritance, immortality,” nor entrance into Christ's “joy” will be given, until “the Son of man comes in his glory;” they make death the gate to endless joy, and place at its dark portals the fulfillment of nearly every blessed promise which belongs exclusively to the resurrection. Regardless of the teachings of the Bible, that the “redeemed” will “reign on the earth;” these misguiding teachers point their hearers to heaven, as their future abode, (which heaven, where Christ now is, is not in the Bible promised to the Christian) and tell them, if faithful, they will “reign in the spirit land,” “above the starry skies.” And now too, when the great Head of the church is giving her overwhelming evidence, to persuade her to avert her down-cast eyes from the charnel-house, and the time has fully arrived, nay, passed, when He bids her “look up, and lift up her head,” knowing that her redemption “is even at the door;” she still wilfully persists in looking down into the grave, affirming, as I heard but yesterday, that generation after generation will pass away before we shall witness the realization of the hope of the gospel,—the coming of Jesus and the resurrection. And many see no glory in his coming, and say it is a “matter of indifference to them whether they die or are alive and remain.” Did Paul think so? Read 2 Corinthians 5: 4, and see.

Strange, passing strange! is the present position of the nominal church. In matters of faith, she is directly antagonistical to the teachings of the Bible. Let us illustrate: the Bible teaches that gross wickedness will continue till the end; the church teaches that wickedness will be put away a thousand years prior to the end. The Bible says, the Jewish kingdom and nation will be “no more” till he (Christ) comes, whose right it is; the church says, the Jewish nation must be restored and converted, before he can come. The Bible says, the saints will “reign on the earth;” the church says, she shall reign in heaven. Christ says, “my reward is with me, to reward every man when I come quickly;” the nominal church teaches, the Christian's reward is given the disembodied spirit at death. Christ says, his kingdom is not of the world, but will be established “at his appearing;” the church says, God's kingdom has been set up in the world for eighteen hundred years. The Bible teaches that man is in the kingdom; the church, that the kingdom is in man. The Bible teaches, that the soul that sinneth, and the righteous man that turneth away from his righteousness and committeth iniquity and dieth in them, shall surely die;” the nominal church says, the sinner will live forever, in burning torment. The church says, a part of man is immortal, and can never die; the Bible teaches that man, the whole man, is mortal; bids man “seek for immortality” through Jesus Christ “of Him who alone hath immortality,” and who will put immortality on to his now “mortal” saints, “in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump.” The nominal church is proud, worldly, corrupt, laodicean, rich in goods, yet poor, miserable, blind, naked, and fallen. She has shut her eyes to the signs of the times, closed her ears and temples to one of the richest developments of truth, that ever shone from the pages of inspiration since the apostolic age. And last, to crown her sins, she, treading on the verge of eternity, rejects the overwhelming evidence, that the end of all things is emphatically at hand—refuses to warn the sinner in view of this truth, or lift up her own head at the prospect of speedy redemption. Questions of momentous importance to her eternal welfare, and which demand her candid and prayerful investigation in conference, and all her deliberations. Awful truths, which should be borne upon every breeze, echoed and reechoed from sea to sea, in every valley, and on every hill top, with a trumpet tongue, until the nations of the earth tremble; she passes unheeding by; has “made light” of them; many have prayed to be excused, and I fear God has excused them, and they will never taste of his supper!

These are painful facts, and for the church's sake, had far better be spoken out loud, than cloaked, or whispered in a corner; nevertheless, I write in love and deep self-abasement, remembering that “Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners of whom I am the chief,” and that I stand by faith, and must shortly “appear before the judgment seat of Christ. I speak of the churches as a body, not as individuals. Thank God there are some noble exceptions, and to them God says, “come out from among them, and be ye separate.”

It has been truly said, that that which was to be a token of the “end,” the preaching of the gospel in all the world, to have witnesses from all nations, “to sing the new song to the Lamb, thou hast redeemed us out of every nation;” the church has made a stumbling block to the theory of the conversion of the entire nations of the earth. Make her believe that when her militant state shall cease, and she becomes triumphant at the coming of Jesus, that the “earth,” the “kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven” will be given her for her everlasting inheritance, and you remove the grand stepping stone to the popular but unscriptural theory of a temporal millennium. So long as she rejects the former, she will hold to this latter; and thus, “ignorant of the times and seasons,” will walk in darkness until her Lord comes upon her as a “thief!”

Four years ago, I became a member of the M. E. Church. Then I “was a child, spake as a child, understood as a child;” and took it for granted, that all that came from those who stood in the sacred desk, was truth, but as I approximate towards the “man,” and read the Bible for myself, I learn other things. When the servants appeared, saying, “come, for all things are now ready,” they refused as a body, and I, in company with many others in Champlain, “came out from among them,” and “from such turned away,” to “look for that blessed hope and glorious appearing,”—and I have never had one misgiving, or conscientious scruple about the course I then took. I love my Methodist brethren still, as I do all Christians, and can meet and pray with and for them; (though alas! their prayer meetings in Rouses Point, are ‘like angels visits, few, and far between,’ and cold, withal,) but I cannot fellowship their erroneous doctrines, nor would I peril my soul's salvation, by treating with that cool contempt and heartless indifference that they have, the doctrine of the immediate coming of the Lord in glory.

I identified myself with those who were looking for immediate redemption, and could say, (sectarianism aside,) as did Ruth to Naomi, “entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go: where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God, my God.”

Brethren, I could not repeat the next sentence, "when thou diest, will I die," &c., for I verily thought and still think I shall be "alive and remain" at the coming of the Lord, nevertheless, not my will but his be done.

Let the Methodists read the hymns on pages 465, 69, 497, 500, 506, of the Methodist hymn book, and contrast the spirit then breathed, with the spirit many of them have manifested for the last few years, and say if I speak not the truth when I say, primitive Methodism is scarcely found in the land. May God open their eyes ere it be too late, and they perish! But, say they, have you not also been in gross error? Upon a candid retrospection of the past, we find, that as a body, we have committed but one fundamental error, that is in the time at which we expected the Savior. The cause of our mistake can be easily shown, and the foundation of the harmonious theory of the termination of the prophetic numbers first broached to the world by Brother Miller and others, still remains sure and immutable, and God will make it all right very soon.

Where are all those elder brethren who once, "terrible as an army with banners," stood in the front and battled so manfully for the "harmony of prophetic chronology?" Why are they so silent on time? Can the argument of the 'midst of the week,' be overthrown? Are we wrong in confidently expecting Jesus before the close of the true '47? If so, will they warn us of our error? and if they believe this year or next, will close up the hours of grace, why not speak?—Shall we now be divided on this solemn question? Shall we not go into the kingdom with "one heart and one mind?" Amen, say they. Although a stranger to many yet in love, and in the name of many brethren, I call upon them to speak out, to speak through the press, where all can hear, and, at least, let us know where they are.

We had an excellent conference at Champlain the 18th inst.; the Holy Spirit was there. There is, evidently, a waking up in this region, on the nearness of the Judgment. As for me, I am humbly resolved to "let no man despise my youth." I confess my backwardness, and that I have been "slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken concerning Jesus," and the "time appointed" for his coming. Brethren, sisters, awake! awake! awake! Wash your robes.—Be ye holy, be ye meek. Beware of a retaliating spirit: vengeance is mine, saith the Lord.—The judgment is near, the Lord is coming! yea, the earth, and hell, devils and men combine to oppose. In this case, the minority will rule. Jesus will assume his third and last office,—He will be king,—he will write his new name upon the brows of his saints, by placing crowns upon them, and they will "bring forth the royal diadem," and crown him King of kings, and Lord of lords, even so, Amen!

Let us buffet the storm a "little while," bearing in mind that the rougher the way, the shorter the stay, and that "the worst that can come, but shortens the journey, and hastens thee home." Hallelujah! the warfare will soon be ended, and in

A few more days or weeks at most,
Our trials will be o'er,
And we shall join the heavenly host
On Canaan's happy shore.

Yours in hope,

With the good Christian, the end of one duty is the beginning of another.

Error, like the assassin, dreads investigation: but truth, like the innocent, courts criticism.

We are reproached with forgetting others: we forget ourselves a thousand times more.

ROCHESTER, AUGUST 26, 1846.

True Faith.

Many very well informed Christians are not fully acquainted with some of the essential qualities of true evangelical faith. They seem not to know that it is infallible in its nature; that is, it never deceives or disappoints its possessor. It has its foundation in the immutable promises of the infinite Jehovah, and is as certain to obtain the promised blessing, as the word of God is true. "God that cannot lie has promised."—"He is faithful that hath promised."—"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." These expressions show the immutability of the entire revealed will of God.—We cannot repose too high confidence in the divinity of that will, the Bible. Not a promise it contains has ever failed, or will fail. Hence, those who believe it, will 'not be confounded,' or disappointed in their hopes. It is impossible to disappoint true evangelical faith.

That faith which is liable to be confounded, or to meet with disappointed hopes, must be defective: it cannot be that faith without which it is impossible to please God. It is a faith that is based upon testimony which is either misunderstood, or is false. Such a faith cannot be the true evangelical faith: for that rests upon testimony well understood, and which never deceives those who believe it.

Again, true faith never wavers, or doubts. Its nature, and the infallible evidences on which it rests, will not admit of doubts. When doubts are entertained, that moment our faith is not perfect. If the cause of those doubts exists in our own hearts, then we fall into condemnation: 'for he that doubteth is damned.' But if a defect in the testimony which produced our faith, is the cause of doubts, then our faith is not genuine, our confidence has been misplaced, and we are not only justifiable in doubting, but it is our duty to abandon a faith of this doubtful character.

These principles we wish thoroughly tested by the word of the Lord, and well understood. If correct, (and we think they are) when applied to our faith in the second advent of Christ, will serve to settle the mind of the wavering on the sure foundation of true unwavering faith. That many honest and devoted brethren, once confident on definite time, do now waver in their faith on nearly if not quite every fundamental principle of prophetic chronology, is a fact too apparent and generally known to be denied.—They have once, twice, and some thrice reposed unwavering confidence in a specific time when they expected the return of the Lord, but each time their fond hopes have been disappointed. They thought the evidences in the case were sufficient to justify the strong faith they professed; but time proved the testimony defective, and of course their faith imperfect.

Some have never recovered from their disappointments, while others, seeing so much truth in the general theory, have been unwilling to give it up, and in humble prayer and perseverance have searched for the cause of their disappointments. Our investigations on the eclipses, the time of John's ministry, the midst of the week, &c., it is thought by many, point out, and satisfactorily explain that cause. But this explanation throws a serious difficulty in the way of many. While it seems to give a very good reason for our former mistakes, it necessarily points to a specific time in the future for the termination of the prophetic numbers, and consequently the coming of Christ. Some are afraid to plant their feet again on definite time; their former disappointments unavoidably produce these fears. Unless they do this they are told by some that they have backslidden, and many like things. On the one hand they are constantly harassed with the fear of incurring the divine displeasure by rejecting the evidences on definite time; while, on the other, they are honestly afraid, if they do settle down on the conclusion that the Lord will come on a definite day, month, or even year, that they will again be disappointed.—They think it possible that his coming may take place sooner, or later than these definite conclusions warrant them to expect. Such honest souls are anxious to know the truth, would gladly embrace the true faith, on these matters, if they could find it, and be sure that it is genuine. Can their anxieties be relieved, and they once more become grounded and settled in the faith? or, in this most trying moment, these perilous times, has our kind Father left his children to wander in doubt and fear? Has he shrouded in darkness his revealed will, relative to these last moments, so that his most confiding children cannot intelligibly understand and unwaveringly believe it? And has he left us in this day of false faith, without a sure criterion by which to decide what is, and what is not true faith? We think he has not left us in darkness and perplexing uncertainty on these most important matters. He has not only made it possible, but our duty to know whether we are in the faith or not.

How is this very important knowledge to be obtained? By testing the nature of the testimony on which our faith rests. True faith cannot lay hold upon testimony that the mind cannot understand or comprehend. The testimony or evidence must be so plain and simple as to be brought within the comprehension of all who are required to believe it.—The weakest capacity cannot be made an exception to this rule. The goodness of God is strikingly seen in adapting the revelation of his will to the understanding of the most common intellect. This will appear evident from the general tenor of the Bible. We will refer to a few examples.

The testimony which produced the faith of Noah, Abraham, Moses, the Patriarchs, Prophets and ancient worthies, was plain, intelligible, and easy to be understood. Such, also, is the nature of the testimony which proves the truth of the first advent of Christ, his resurrection and second coming. In a word, we may add, such is the nature of the testimony which proves the truth of any fundamental doctrine of the Bible. It is so given that the common people may readily comprehend and believe it.

Startle not, brother, when we tell you to test, by this rule, the evidence of your faith on the time of the Lord's coming. Is your faith, in this respect, predicated on clear and simple testimony, that which may easily be understood by the learned and unlearned, the wise and unwise of this world: is it simplified to the capacity of all? If so, then, thus far the foundation of your faith is good. But if the reverse is the case, then there is just cause to question the divinity of the testimony, and of course the correctness of the faith which it produces. How is it with that faith which takes hold on a specific time for the coming of the Lord? Is the evidence in the case so clear and simple that the particular year, month, week and day, may be understood by the unlearned as well as the learned? Or, is it by difficult and doubtful inferences that the learned only have been able to come to these very definite conclusions? The latter has been the case. The testimony, then, on precise definite time, is not sufficiently clear and simple, to lay the foundation of enlightened gospel faith; consequently, all the faith that has yet been professed on this point has been spurious.—But the testimony, that the coming of Christ is at band, the next event, is 'nigh, at the door,' is so clear and simple that all may easily understand it. Enough may be understood by the most common capacity, to impart the first principles of the foundation of true faith.

Again, infallibility is another indispensable principle in the evidence which produces true evangelical faith. Sound reason and the entire testimony of the Bible justify this declaration. It is unreasonable to look for unwavering faith in fallible or doubtful testimony. The stream must partake of the nature of the fountain from which it flows; and the fruit, of the tree that bears it. So faith must correspond with the nature of the evidence which produces it. If the evidence is doubtful, the faith will be weak and wavering. But if the evidence is clear, positive and infallible, the faith which it produces will be confident, strong and unwavering. It is impossible, in the nature of the case, for these things to be otherwise.

Does the Bible justify this view of the subject?—Who will say it does not? No one who believes that it is, like its Author, infallible. How was the faith of Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, the Patriarchs, Prophets and ancient worthies, produced? By fallible, or infallible testimony? By reference to your Bibles you will find that the evidence was infallible. And the faith partook of the nature of the immutable foundation on which it was based: those who possessed it 'pleased God,' whose word they believed. Again, was it doubtful, inferential, and uninspired, or plainly inspired testimony that produced faith in the first advent of Christ, his resurrection, and ascension to his Father? Every Christian is ready to give one and the same answer: they unite in saying that the testimony was infallible.—And will they not be equally united in saying, that the testimony which produces faith in every fundamental principle of the gospel is also infallible?—They will.

How will the evidence, which produces faith in the minds of some on precise definite time, bear to be tested by this rule. The many times it has disappointed our hopes in the past, clearly shows it would be found defective. And the most tenacious sticklers now, for precise definite time, do not, we believe, pretend that the evidence on which their calculations are based, is infallible. They admit that there is a possibility of a mistake in their most accurate conclusions. They are compelled to make this admission from the fact that perplexity and doubt is thrown around the precise commencement of every prophetic period, consequently, their termination is involved in the same uncertainty. The fact is, the testimony for precise definite time is not infallible; consequently, true faith cannot be based upon it. God requires of us none other than TRUE FAITH; hence, the unavoidable conclusion is, that he does not require us to believe in a precise definite time for the second advent of Christ.

This conclusion we think is justified by the plain declarations of the Savior, when he says, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man,'—'In such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh,'—'For ye know neither the day nor the hour,'—'Ye know not when the time is,'—'Two shall be in the field,' at the mill, or in the bed, and 'one shall be taken, and the other left.' These positive declarations of the Son of God, never have been, and we are absolutely certain never can be reconciled with the belief that the precise definite time of the Lord's coming now is, or ever will be a matter of true faith of his children.

True faith uses no ifs, entertains no doubts or fears; meets with no disappointments; turns not aside from its course to shun even death itself; is infallible in all of its parts. Can this justly be said of any one's faith on precise definite time? We think not. Then; there is no true faith on this point; and we should not trouble ourselves in trying to believe where faith is not required, and is impossible to be had, nor press such things upon the faith of others.

But can we have no true faith in a time for the advent of Christ?—enquires many a lover of the time. Most certainly we can and should have strong faith in the time of this most glorious event. Our faith should take hold on the time of the second advent of Christ without an if, a doubt, or a fear of a possibility of a mistake, or of meeting with a disappointment. But that time should be Bible time, and no other; which will as surely be fulfilled, as the prophetic word predicts, as that there is an immutable God who has given it. We need have no fears in planting our feet on the time, as definite as the Bible reveals it: which is, 'NIGH, EVEN AT THE DOOR.'

On this position, this immutable foundation, true faith may rest secure from all the assaults of surrounding foes, and momentarily rejoice in the blessed assurance of soon seeing him who is the object of our faith. 'Nigh at the door,' is sustained by an overwhelming amount of testimony, proved to be infallible in its nature by the appearance of the signs, the fulfilment of prophecy, historical and chronological, and may be understood by persons of the most common intellect, or opportunities. The entire evidence in the case is wisely given so as to produce true evangelical faith in the coming of the Lord, at the door. The signs and historical prophecy are indefinite in their signification; they bring us, however, to that point of time where we are justified in looking every moment for the Lord. The prophetic numbers do more than this: they throw an impassable wall around a few years, within which they assure us the coming of the Lord will certainly take place.

We have already entered, and nearly crossed the ground encompassed by this invulnerable wall. And while occupying this fearful position, the often repeated warnings of our hourly expected Lord should be faithfully heeded.—'Watch; for ye know not what hour your Lord cometh.'—And of his inspired Apostles,—'Hold fast the profession of your faith,'—'Let no man take thy crown.'

Look at this subject, dear brethren, in the light of the Bible. Let your faith take hold of evidence that is clear and immutable. On this imperishable rock plant your feet, and no where else, in this hour of perils. Show your faith by your works, and nothing can harm you. Under this frame of mind, you will have no disposition to put the day of the Lord far off; nor to slumber at your post. It will lead you to be holy in life, active in duty, joyful in spirit, and fully prepare you to wait the return of the Lord his appointed time, and to meet him with joy at any moment.

West India Mission.

We refer our readers to the communication in this No. from Bro. Mansfield: you will see by it, that himself and wife, in company with Bro. Livingston and wife, of Oberlin, O., purpose embarking in a few weeks, for the West Indies. Their object is, the proclamation of the glad tidings of the kingdom, to the colored population, and all who will hear, on those Islands, where they may find time and opportunity to labor. It is a benevolent undertaking, and will be attended with much sacrifice of pecuniary interest, by Bro. Livingston.

We hope the call of Bro. Mansfield for pecuniary aid, will not be forgotten by the stewards of the Lord. Look at his request, observe his directions, send him what assistance you can without delay, and fervently pray that the blessings of God may abundantly crown this mission.

"The Day-Dawn."

This paper is edited by O. R. L. Crosier, and advocates the doctrines of the Bridegroom come, Door Shut, Sanctuary cleansed, and their kindred absurdities. It is printed occasionally, at different places. To show the spirit of the editor and character of the work, we give from No. 3, just issued, the following article.

"THE OPENING HEAVENS."

"We have just received and read a small pamphlet of 39 pages, bearing this title, and written by Bro. Joseph Bates.—

Bro. Bates treats especially upon the city New Jerusalem and the Sanctuary. In our judgment the work will do good—the brethren love it—we hope it will be circulated and carefully read. Bro. B. missed it, however, in sending so many copies to the editor of the Voice of Truth. Had he known him as well as we do, he would have entrusted his pamphlets to better hands.

Had Bro. Marsh a little more confidence in the judgment and good sense of the brethren, we dare say he would be happier and the brethren get more light. Some people know that they are safe only so long as their real character and position are shrouded in mystery. We love an honest man.—He may be in error, but there is hope of his getting out of it. This dodging and covering up betrays an alarming want of confidence in God and his Word.—The gracious solicitude for the brethren which is affected is a mere subterfuge, which will soon be found as treacherous as those who take shelter under it.

We design to get the pamphlets and let them speak for themselves."

Comments on this production are not called for: its character will be well understood by our readers, especially when they have read the following extract from the pamphlet, which we could not aid in circulating; but which "the brethren love," and in the circulation of which the editor of the 'Day Dawn' feels such a deep interest. Speaking of the New Jerusalem, the writer says:—

"When we look at the size of this City of Gold, we are at once almost overwhelmed with the view of its dimensions. Fifteen hundred miles high, long and wide! In the seventeenth verse, he gives but one way to measure the wall, and that is its height. If he had undertaken to have given the contents of the City by the same rule, he would have measured the wall.

Then we have nothing more to do in making an arithmetical calculation, but follow the Apostle's description. Jesus said, in my Father's house are many mansions. Now, allowing twelve feet between joints for a story, this seven millions nine hundred and twenty thousand feet square would give six hundred and sixty thousand stories, twelve feet high, (Ezekiel xl: 7), and fifteen hundred miles square, four hundred and forty stories to a mile: which would amount to 990,000,000 of square miles on a level surface, twelve feet high—equal to the square miles contained in five worlds like this, (which is only 199,512,000 square miles), and seventy times more extensive than the Continent of America.—Now 660,000 twelve foot rooms in each story, would make in all 435,600,000,000—four hundred and thirty five thousand and six hundred millions of 12 feet square "rooms."—Ezekiel: "places,"—John; or "mansions,"—Jesus. It is computed that there are 900,000,000 of inhabitants on the Earth. The Bible informs us that there was but one, six thousand years ago. Admit that there was nine hundred millions at the commencement of creation, and this number had passed away every thirty years for two hundred generations, their whole number would only amount to 180,000,000,000—one hundred and eighty thousand millions, a little more than one third of the mansions in this building: four hundred and eighty-four to every human being now on the earth. Surely, this looks like an "abundant entrance" into the everlasting kingdom. O yes, say many, I see there is abundance of room for every body! The apostle tells us who they are. He says, "There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie;—but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." This then is the capacious and glorious golden City;" the "New Jerusalem;" the "heavenly sanctuary;" the "Bride, the Lamb's Wife;" the "Mother of us all;" the "Paradise of God;" the "capital of our coming Lord's everlasting kingdom, which is now about to descend from the "third heaven" by the way of the open door, down by the "flaming sword" of Orion. O let us see to it, that we are all ready to enter into this celestial City."

Bro. L. D. Fleming.

This brother from Newark, N. J., has recently spent several days in this city. His general health is good, and his voice much improved. He spoke to the congregation in Talman Hall, to the comfort of many who heard. He is strong in the faith that the coming of the Lord is at the door.

Brother Galusha called on us for a few moments a few days since. He was on his way to Philadelphia, where Sister Galusha has been, we believe, ever since last May, attending on one of their sons, who came very near losing his life by the explosion of gas in his store. We hope they will be able to return soon, as Bro. Galusha's labors are much needed in this region.

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

We are frequently furnished with evidences of what has been done, or is doing for this country, towards arousing the public mind to a consideration of the coming of Christ. We have just seen "A Prophetic Almanac for the year 1844, (being the 6000th Year of the World.)" It is of 35 pages octavo, and without the author's name: it is clear, however, that he must have seen Bro. Miller's works. "The Prophetic Register" was published in the same year, and was a large sized magazine of 24 papers. The object of the work was to bring before the public "the most important portions of celebrated writings of eminent theologians in all ages, on the prophecies of the word of God, that the judgments of all who feel interested in what the mouth of their Creator hath spoken may be assisted, and their spiritual welfare ministered unto. Among others in the list of contents, we notice "Judaism overthrown; or, the kingdom Restored to the True Israel, by Josiah Litch." Here is another just from the press, by whom it does not state,—"Proofs of the Second Coming of Messiah, at the Passover in 1844."

We begged of Bro. Micklewood the following note for your eye; we omit the name of the town, &c.

"Our little band meets weekly at Bro. Micklewood's school-rooms, on Tuesday nights, and that good man of God leads the meeting himself. I think I may say he goes word by word and step by step with yourself, although he does not say the advent will occur in 1847; yet he cautions, he warns and beseeches us to prepare for it, as it may take place even before: he says the signs of the times tell us it cannot be long. His text last night was, "I will not leave you comfortless." I cannot give you his sermon, but you would have been astonished to have heard how he came out. I believe the whole of our little band are thinking right earnestly and seriously about the near approach of Christ: if I go to Mr. H.'s, there he is with his Bible in his hand, preaching and warning all that may come to his shop: then Mr. W. is spreading the truth in the same way at the station; so is Mr. B. at the chair factory; indeed Christ's coming seems to be the subject of their conversation from morning till night.

"Such may we ever be,
Till in the clouds our Lord we see,
Then each will welcome to his rest
One who from us will never part."

Bristol (Eng.) July 15, 1846.

West India Mission.

I wish to say to the brethren through the Voice of Truth, that I have arranged to accompany Bro. Livingston of Oberlin, on a mission to the West Indies, and propose embarking from New York, about the middle of September. I feel that it is a self-denying and arduous work, and one which will require assistance from my brethren, both in prayers and pecuniary aid. I therefore request the dear brethren and sisters to remember in their prayers, for God's blessing on the effort, and also to contribute of their means to aid in the prosecution of the work. The second coming of Christ at hand, has not been proclaimed there I believe, and there is a large population of both whites and colored people, who have never heard the evidences on this subject. May God open the hearts of my brethren, who have this world's goods to assist in this mission.

Dear brethren, if you feel disheartened in reference to much good being done here in this land where the doctrine has been preached and rejected, you need not feel thus in reference to a foreign land; you know what power attended here at first. May not the truth produce like effects where it has not been preached and rejected.—May the Lord direct you in duty.

The mission will require considerable expenditure of means, both in going and after we arrive there; we therefore hope and pray you will come up to this work and assist. We shall pass on to the East next week, the Lord willing.—Let correspondents address me until the 1st of September, at Pulaski, Oswego Co., N. Y.; afterward, to Sept. 15th, at 199, 15th street, care N. A. Van Winkle, New York City.

Yours, looking for the Lord,

L. DELOS MANSFIELD.

P. S. It is due to Bro. Livingston to say that he assumes the responsibility of the expenses, so far as he is able, and yet the expenses of the voyage, and the subsequent expenditures while there, will necessarily require a considerable sum, therefore let the brethren do their duty in the matter. We go accompanied by our wives, who will co-operate in the work as much as possible.

From the Advent Herald.

Dear Bro. Bliss:—I thank you with all my soul, for the stand you have taken against this second edition of fanatical spiritualism, which threatens to sweep over us. I heartily respond to your sentiment on this subject: sooner let the "Herald" go to its grave, than ever permit it to be the advocate of such a prostitution of some of the plainest declarations of God's holy Word;—or silently connive at their advocacy among Advent believers. It is no time now to give up the very basis of the Advent doctrine, and a point involving the whole question of the literal principle of interpreting the Word of God.

True, we are told, that after all is said through the "Bible Advocate," which its originators wish to say in support of a spiritual resurrection, the other side may be presented. This looks altogether too much like wishing to have the door open till the horse is stolen, and then, if we wish, we may lock it. If they have full confidence in the doctrine they advocate, why shrink from an open, fair, manly, and Christian discussion, conducted in the candid manner of Bro. Marsh's in the "Voice of Truth?" Why this attempt, by threats and bribes, to silence discussion, except on one side of the question? Go on, then, in the name of the Lord, and let us have such arguments as you have been giving us from English pens for some time past, and we have nothing to fear for the cause of truth. Your course is most heartily approved by the brethren in this city and State.

I cannot express to you in words, the gratitude I feel to you for your manly and decisive course, and the sound and wholesome matter with which the "Herald" is weekly filled. It is a source of comfort and encouragement to thousands of scattered, tempted, and persecuted saints of God, and you have their prayers and best wishes for its success and perpetuity. And if need be, as in months past, you will have something more substantial than good wishes. The "Herald" will not go down! Let this be understood. God sustained it when it had not a subscriber, nor a dollar. It has never betrayed its trust,—it has never faltered, or vacillated, and He will not forsake it now. If those who have suffered so many things for its support, and the support of its principles, choose to build again the things they destroyed, and run through another paper, with its funds, to end in ruin and fanaticism, why, so be it; but the "Herald" will live.

Where are Brn. Hawkes, Kent, Stoddard, Carey, and many others whose names are on that famous "Committee" list? Are they snared, and drawn away into this effort to divide the Second Advent ranks again? Why do they not speak, and let us know where they are, and whether they volunteer in this enterprise, and stand there with hearty good will, or otherwise?

The world seems to be rapidly approaching that profound sleep, in which it will be when the Savior comes. The voice of warning, "Lo the hour of His judgment has come," has been proclaimed, had its effect, and to a very great extent, lost its power over the consciences of the multitude.

They are more unmindful of the approaching day, than ever. They regard the knowledge of the time, as more uncertain. The view of the prophecies, which brings the termination of all things earthly, at, or about this period of the world's existence, they also say "has failed," or "time has proved it false," and they rest quietly in their sins, seek after the world, and are more extravagant in indulging in its sins and vanities, than before. Thus they are literally, and most emphatically asking, "Where is the promise of his coming?" In their opinion, it has failed.—Hence, they settle into a sleep, from which, we fear nothing short of Gabriel's trump will wake them. Perhaps this is the correct view of the scoffer's language:—Your promise of his coming has failed; now where is it? Not where is the Scripture or promise on which you rely; as though they did not understand its locality in the word of God; but, it has failed, now where is it? "Since the father's asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Your whole scheme is false. The world will still remain, and will never be destroyed.

Be this as it may, so far as my limited observation is concerned, the mass are settling into a sleep more profound and dreadful than before the subject was proclaimed. It is not as then, a sleep of ignorance and consequent indifference, but of deliberate, wilful rejection of Christ as a coming King, and are equally deliberate and wilful, plunging after this world as their portion. From such a sleep, what can wake them but the "last trump" itself! It is proclaimed, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him;" they have already heard that and refused to believe it. Are they told "The signs are fulfilled, the day is at hand?" they have replied to that, "all things continue as they were." Is it proclaimed, "the hour of his judgment is come?" this they have also refused to hear, and madly gone after the world, setting all the proclamations of a coming

Judge, at defiance. This is deliberate: it is willful. What can remain? What angel is there to fly through the midst of heaven that can reach their case? What truth can he utter? Is there to be any thing subsequent to the proclamation, "the hour of his judgment has come," that will awake them in season to repent and prepare?—Is not the next scene the voice of the angel uttering that everlasting scripture, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." When this scripture shall be uttered, all change of moral character, except from good to better, and from bad to worse, will forever cease. What then must be the hopes of those who are now settling into this appalling sleep, after all the efforts that have been made to arouse and prepare them for the coming of our blessed Lord! It is solemn; it is dreadful to reflect that this will undoubtedly, yea, certainly, though not necessarily, be the condition and doom of the mass.

Yet there is a gleam of hope. While Christ is on the mercy seat, men may be redeemed;—souls may be saved. There are, no doubt, many individuals in this mass, that may be reached. Let us put forth every effort for their redemption. "Pull them out of the fire." It must be a desperate struggle that will save them. They are in imminent danger, and certain to perish unless saved soon. Who will not exert every energy to bring them to Christ, while mercy is offered? Save them as a shepherd would his flock that had wandered on the plains, when he saw an impending storm, that he knew would visit them with inevitable destruction. Ho would call: would urge: would seize hold of them and draw them under the covert of the rock, that they might be saved.

This should be the effect of our sentiments;—every effort should be put forth to redeem men, that is in our power. The Lord grant us grace to be thus found laboring when he comes.

Yours hoping,

PHILOS.

A Mistake Corrected.

Bro. Marsh:—In my article on the "Time," published in the Voice of Truth Aug. 12, I see there is a mistake, which, to my mind, is quite important to be rectified.

In the article as published, it reads, "in the commencement of the true A. D. 30, Christ was baptised and began to preach. Six months from this time, would carry him to the first of our April, A. D. 30, true era, when he eat the first passover."

The mistake is this:—instead of A. D. 30, it should read A. D. 31, true era, because Christ was baptised when he was 30, and of course A. D. 30, true era, then closed, and A. D. 31 commenced. Therefore, when he attended the first Passover, it was in the "midst" or middle of the true A. D. 31, as all, I think, will readily see.

This mistake, however, is not attributed to you, but was an oversight in me.

Yours in the blessed hope,

T. M. PREBLE.

A Chart.

I have recently had a Chart painted, which, I think, and others, who have seen it and heard me lecture from it, is well calculated to show the reasons of our former mistakes, and also of our present hope.

Therefore I would say, that those who may wish to hear on this subject, if they will let me know, I will attend to all calls as far as am able.

Letter from Bro. S. Chapman.

Bro. Marsh:—I never yet had the pleasure of seeing you, neither have I communicated a word for insertion in your columns, having confined my correspondence to the Advent Herald, but at this time, I feel called upon to say a word or two. The article in your last paper from Bro. G. Needham, headed "Bible Advocate," as also the editorial in a preceding number to which he refers, were, in my estimation, very timely and appropriate, and I would that many more who are on the walls of Zion, would, in like manner, speak out their views on the same subject, that the evil may be "checked in the bud." I regret exceedingly, that the Devil should be permitted, at this late hour, to come in like a flood, still further, to distract and divide the dear disciples of the Lord.

When the views of Col. Holkins, (though in the name of E. C. Clemons,) were through your columns fairly brought before the public, reviewed, and in so masterly a manner refuted, I had hoped that we should hear nothing more from the wreck, till the Master came. But alas, what will not money accomplish!

Although I hail from Hartford, yet I would have it distinctly understood that I have no fellowship or sympathy with those new and novel views presented in the "Bible Advocate," published in that place. Previously to my leaving the city in April last, I openly expressed my views on that subject, and in my correspondence with the dear friends there since that time, I have admonished them to beware of this stratagem, and shall hereafter, on all proper occasions, raise my voice against such delusion.

This paper professes to be designed for the valley of Connecticut, and were it confined to that section, I would not say a word through your columns respecting it. But as it circulates in every place where other advent papers have found their way, I feel called upon to speak.—For five years past, it seems to have been my calling to labor in the open field in Ct., R. Island, Mass., and N. Y., during which I have been almost constantly at war, either within or without the camp. In that time I have been enabled, by the grace of God, to establish or constitute more than forty Advent churches or associations of our faith and order, all of whom, patronize the Voice of Truth or Adv. Herald, (generally both) thro' this medium therefore, I advise them all, as one, to return their papers: i. e., the Bible Advocate, to the publisher, without delay, that it may circulate only in the region for which it was especially designed, and fail not to keep their own eye fastened on the "mark," the speedy coming of the Lord, for surely his coming is near, even at the door.

Yours my dear brother in the blessed hope,

SAML. CHAPMAN.

P. S. I spent the last Sabbath with Bro. Pinney, and the dear friends at Seneca Falls. It was a day of mutual joy to our souls. I longed to continue on as far as Rochester, that I might see you and the brethren of the household there, but engagements at Cicero, (8 miles north of here,) prevented. To-morrow I expect to commence a series of meetings there, which will doubtless result in the glory of God, (trusting in his arm alone, as I shall always do.) Shall probably remain in this section two or three weeks. Should the friends write me during that time, please direct to the care of I. M. Clapp of this place, or to S. B. Palmer, Fayetteville N. Y., (8 miles east.) Will only add, "come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Syracuse, Aug. 13, '46.

Bro. W. Burnham, Concord N. H., July 27th, writes:—The Conference in this place, which commenced last Friday, and closed last evening, has been one of great interest and profit to the waiting saints who attended. In this place as in all others, there are but few in whom there is faith. They have been severely tried since the passing of the time, and for a while, held no regular meetings: but now they meet every Sunday, and God is with them. Bro. J. Weston, E. and G. W. Burnham, J. Howell, and Reynolds, were present, and gave us the word in the power and demonstration of the spirit.

Bro. D. Stuart, Exeter Me., July 12, writes:—It is truly heart cheering to my soul to hear from the saints scattered abroad, who are looking for the appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ. I have ever loved the appearing of the Savior since I embraced the christian religion, and I have wondered how it was that the great mass of professed christendom could, so deliberately, oppose this glorious doctrine of the pre-millennial advent of Christ so plainly taught in the word of God. It is evident that those who love the Lord Jesus Christ, will love his appearing: for the apostle Paul says, (2d Tim. 4: 6—8.) "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." "And unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin [sin offering,] unto salvation. So we see it is evident from Scripture testimony, that when our glorious deliverer comes, he will find his true followers loving and looking for his appearing.

The little church in this place has been strengthened and revived since the fierce winds of fanaticism have died away. We are very well united, and are striving for the faith of the gospel. We have been blessed with the labors of our beloved bro., Elder Thomas Smith, and other ministering brethren, who have administered to us the word of life. May they receive a crown of life when the chief Shepherd shall appear.

Abiding in Christ.

"And now, little children, abide in him: that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John, 2: 28.

This language implies, that those who do not abide in Christ, will be confounded and ashamed when he appears. As Adam and Eve, when God came to commune with them, fled from his holy presence with shame, because they had sinned; so will all those who are not found abiding in Christ, flee from his glorious presence, seeking mountains and rocks to hide them "from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

In presenting this subject, I will consider first, the character.

II. What it is to be in Christ.

III. What it is to "abide in him."

"Little children."—This seemed to be a favorite phrase with the above disciple: denoting simplicity, humility, purity, and confidence. It is applied to those who have their "sins forgiven for his name's sake,"—who "have known the Father,"—with the understanding, that those who know him, keep his commandments;—also, ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them, (the many anti-christs already in the world) because, greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." They have Christ formed within them the hope of glory, on which account they overcome the world, and "the god of this world," because Christ is greater than he.

The Lord says concerning his people before they rebelled against him and vexed his Holy en City;" the "New Jerusalem;" the "heavenly sanctuary;" the "Bride, the Lamb's Wife;" the "Mother of us all;" the "Paradise of God;" the "capital of our coming Lord's everlasting kingdom, which is now about to descend from the "third heaven" by the way of the open door, down by the "flaming sword" of Orion. O let us see to it, that we are all ready to enter into this celestial City."

Bro. L. B. Fleming.

This brother from Newark, N. J., has recently spent several days in this city. His general health is good, and his voice much improved. He spoke to the congregation in Talmann Hall, to the comfort of many who heard. He is strong in the faith that the coming of the Lord is at the door.

Brother Galusha called on us for a few moments a few days since. He was on his way to Philadelphia, where Sister Galusha has been, we believe, ever since last May, attending on one of their sons, who came very near losing his life by the explosion of gas in his store. We hope they will be able to return soon, as Bro. Galusha's labors are much needed in this region.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

We are frequently furnished with evidences of what has been done, or is doing for this country, towards arousing the public mind to a consideration of the coming of Christ. We have just seen "A Prophetic Almanac for the year 1844, (being the 6000th Year of the World.)" It is of 38 pages octavo, and without the author's name: it is clear, however, that he must have seen Bro. Miller's works. "The Prophetic Register" was published in the same year, and was a large sized magazine of 24 papers. The object of the work was to bring before the public "the most important portions of celebrated writings of eminent theologians in all ages, on the prophecies of the word of God, that the judgments of all who feel interested in what the mouth of their Creator hath spoken may be assisted, and their spiritual welfare ministered unto. Among others in the list of contents, we notice "Judaism overthrown; or, the kingdom Restored to the True Israel, by Josiah Litch." Here is another just from the press, by whom it does not state,—"Proofs of the Second Coming of Messiah, at the Passover in 1844."

We begged of Bro. Micklewood the following note for your eye; we omit the name of the town, &c.

"Our little band meets weekly at Bro. Micklewood's school-rooms, on Tuesday nights, and that good man of God leads the meeting himself. I think I may say he goes word by word and step by step with yourself, although he does not say the advent will occur in 1847; yet he cautions, he warns and beseeches us to prepare for it, as it may take place even before: he says the signs of the times tell us it cannot be long. His text last night was, "I will not leave you comfortless." I cannot give you his sermon, but you would have been astonished to have heard how he came out. I believe the whole of our little band are thinking right earnestly and seriously about the near approach of Christ: if I go to Mr. H.'s, there he is with his Bible in his hand, preaching and warning all that may come to his shop: then Mr. W. is spreading the truth in the same way at the station; so is Mr. B. at the chair factory; indeed Christ's coming seems to be the subject of their conversation from morning till night.

"Such may we ever be,
Till in the clouds our Lord we see,
Then each will welcome to his heart
One who from us will never part."

West India Mission.

I wish to say to the brethren through the Voice of Truth, that I have arranged to accompany Bro. Livingston of Oberlin, on a mission to the West Indies, and propose embarking from New York, about the middle of September. I feel that it is a self-denying and arduous work, and one which will require assistance from my brethren, both in prayers and pecuniary aid. I therefore request the dear brethren and sisters to remember in their prayers, for God's blessing on the effort, and also to contribute of their means to aid in the prosecution of the work. The second coming of Christ at hand, has not been proclaimed there I believe, and there is a large population of both whites and colored people, who have never heard the evidences on this subject. May God open the hearts of my brethren, who have this world's goods to assist in this mission.

Dear brethren, if you feel disheartened in reference to much good being done here in this land where the doctrine has been preached and rejected, you need not feel thus in reference to a foreign land; you know what power attended here at first. May not the truth produce like effects where it has not been preached and rejected.—May the Lord direct you in duty.

The mission will require considerable expenditure of means, both in going and after we arrive there; we therefore hope and pray you will come up to this work and assist. We shall pass on to the East next week, the Lord willing.—Let correspondents address me until the 1st of September, at Pulaski, Oswego Co., N. Y.; afterward, to Sept. 15th, at 193, 15th street, care N. A. Van Winkle, New York City.

Yours, looking for the Lord,

A Mistake Corrected.

Bro. Marsh:—In my article on the "Time," published in the Voice of Truth Aug. 12, I see there is a mistake, which, to my mind, is quite important to be rectified.

The mistake is this:—instead of A. D. 30, it should read A. D. 31, true era, because Christ was baptised when he was 30, and of course A. D. 30, true era, then closed, and A. D. 31 commenced. Therefore, when he attended the first Passover, it was in the "midst" or middle of the true A. D. 31, as all, I think, will readily see.

Yours my dear brother in the blessed hope,
SAML. CHAPMAN.

P. S. I spent the last Sabbath with Bro. Pinney, and the dear friends at Seneca Falls. It was a day of mutual joy to our souls. I longed to continue on as far as Rochester, that I might see you and the brethren of the household there, but engagements at Cicero, (8 miles north of here,) prevented. To-morrow I expect to commence a series of meetings there, which will doubtless result in the glory of God, (trusting in his arm alone, as I shall always do.) Shall probably remain in this section two or three weeks. Should the friends write me during that time, please direct to the care of I. M. Clapp of this place, or to S. B. Palmer, Fayetteville N. Y., (8 miles east.) Will only add, "come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Bro. W. Burnham, Concord N. H., July 27th, writes:—The Conference in this place, which commenced last Friday, and closed last evening, has been one of great interest and profit to the waiting saints who attended. In this place as in all others, there are but few in whom there is faith. They have been severely tried since the passing of the time, and for a while, held no regular meetings: but now they meet every Sunday, and God is with them. Bro. J. Weston, E. and G. W. Burnham, J. Howell, and Reynolds, were present, and gave us the word in the power and demonstration of the spirit.

Bro. D. Stuart, Exeter Mo., July 12, writes:

—It is truly heart cheering to my soul to hear from the saints scattered abroad, who are looking for the appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ. I have ever loved the appearing of the Savior since I embraced the christian religion, and I have wondered how it was that the great mass of professed christendom could, so deliberately, oppose this glorious doctrine of the pre-millennial advent of Christ so plainly taught in the word of God. It is evident that those who love the Lord Jesus Christ, will love his appearing: for the apostle Paul says, (2d Tim. 4: 6—8,) "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith. Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." "And unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin [sin offering,] unto salvation. So we see it is evident from Scripture testimony, that when our glorious deliverer comes, he will find his true followers loving and looking for his appearing.

The little church in this place has been strengthened and revived since the fierce winds of fanaticism have died away. We are very well united, and are striving for the faith of the gospel. We have been blessed with the labors of our beloved bro., Elder Thomas Smith, and other ministering brethren, who have administered to us the word of life. May they receive a crown of life when the chief Shepherd shall appear.

Abiding in Christ.

"And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John, 2: 28.

This language implies, that those who do not abide in Christ, will be confounded and ashamed when he appears. As Adam and Eve, when God came to commune with them, fled from his holy presence with shame, because they had sinned; so will all those who are not found abiding in Christ, flee from his glorious presence, seeking mountains and rocks to hide them "from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

In presenting this subject, I will consider first, the character.

I. What it is to be in Christ.

II. What it is to "abide in him."

"Little children."—This seemed to be a favorite phrase with the above disciple: denoting simplicity, humility, purity, and confidence. It is applied to those who have their "sins forgiven for his name's sake,"—who "have known the Father,"—with the understanding, that those who know him, keep his commandments;—also, ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them, (the many anti-christs already in the world) because, greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." They have Christ formed within them the hope of glory, on which account they overcome the world, and "the god of this world," because Christ is greater than he.

Spirit—"surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Savior. Those who profess to know God, but in works deny him, are abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work, reprobate." They are not God's children, because their works prove their profession to be a lie.

Those who do not possess the character of little children, cannot obey the exhortation—"abide in him;" they must first be converted, and become as little children.

II. What is it to be in Christ?

Paul says, "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new." Now, he which establisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us is God, who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the spirit in our heart." If these things are not true concerning us, we are not in Christ, repentance is our first work.

I fear that many are trying hard to imitate the christian character, who have never become "new creatures." But let it be remembered, that if the yoke of Christ is not easy, it is because the heart is hard; old things have not become new.

III. What is it to abide in Christ?

John says, in the 6th verse of the next chapter, "Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not:—whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. This text cannot be referred to the future state, when the saints shall have become immortal, because, the reason why we should abide in Christ is, "that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

Here we should naturally inquire, what is sin? In the 4th verse of the 3d chap., we have the answer:—sin is the transgression of the law. The word transgress, is formed from two Latin words, which signify, to walk over. Sin then, is the walking over, or trampling upon God's law. It is voluntary—something done understandingly. As James says, "To him that knoweth to do good, [right or duty.] and doeth it not, to him it is sin. [4: 17.] also, When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin. [1: 15.] The moment that the will is brought under the sway of lust, the law is transgressed—lust hath conceived, and sin exists.

Now let us inquire, what is meant by the law, "sin is the transgression of the law.

It cannot be the Moral law or ten commandments, for Paul calls that "the ministration of death," written and engraven in stones,—and says of it, "which is done away." [See 2 Cor. 3: 6-11.] This moral law was, evidently, nothing more than a moral law: given as a code of morality to the Jews, as a nation. They were commanded to abstain from idolatry, from profanity, theft, murder, and adultery: also, to keep the Sabbath by abstaining from all labor, both themselves, and all under their control, whether man or beast, all of which, could be kept to the letter, without being righteous in the sight of God. In order to become truly righteous in the sight of God, they must be circumcised in heart, rend their hearts and not their garments.—[Deut. 30: 6.] They were required also, to love the Lord with all their heart, and their neighbor as themselves.—[See Deut. 6: 5; and Lev. 19: 13.]—The "Royal Law," or law of love, containing two commandments, numbered by the Savior, first and second, [Mar. 12: 29-31,] I understand to be the law, the transgression of which, is sin.—To abide in Christ, then, is to abide within the circle of that law. It seems to be the divine enclosure thrown around the church of Christ; and those who transgress its bounds, or violate the law of love to God, or their neighbor at once go out upon "the devil's commons."

This seems to be the highest law in the family of Christ, and those who set it nought, at once assume the character of strangers and foreigners. I do not mean that their characters become permanently changed, but that they are, for the time being, is as evident as in the case of Peter, recorded in Matt. 16: 23. Campbell renders the passage thus: "Get thee hence, adversary, thou art an obstacle in my way, for thou relishest not the things of God, but the things of men." A few moments before, when he possessed the right spirit, Christ said to him, "Blessed art thou," &c.

"Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not."—The present tense, especially in Greek, is used to denote a customary action. In the same manner as in English. If we should say of a tailor, he makes clothes, he may not be actually thus engaged at this moment, but that is his uniform employment. Thus, "sinneth not," is predicted of all such as abide in Christ. Obedience is the rule of their lives. Their habit or custom of life is, not to break, but to keep the commandments of God. John says, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not;" or, according to Macknight,—that ye may not sin, yet if any one hath sinned, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the just one. How far then, from abiding in Christ, are those who make sin the rule, and obedience the exception. Those who occasionally make a consecration to God, but uniformly are all, or nearly all, for selfish purposes. Beloved, let us possess the character of little children, and abide in Christ, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming. Whether we realize it or not, "The glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, is near at hand. The prophet had a vision of that mighty scene, and all the saints will soon witness it. The great God or Ancient of days, appears in snow white apparel, the hair of his head like the pure wool, a flame of glory on every hand,—the Son of man, the King of kings, comes near with power and great glory, and receives his kingdom. OBITUARY.

Bro. Marsh:—It falls to my lot to inform you that Brother and Sister Plum have been called to drink deeply of the cup of affliction. TOMAS, their only son, an interesting child of about 7 yrs. old, in company with another about the same age, unknown to their parents, went swimming in Shumla Creek. Wading a little too far, they were precipitated over their heads in the water, and no arm near to save until their spirits had fled. The scene which followed, was truly affecting. Sermon on the occasion by Elder C. Bailey, from these words: "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided."

They were both laid in the same grave at Lona, to wait the voice of the son of God to call them forth to life eternal.

C. CRAWFORD.

Casadaga N. Y., Aug. 6, 1846.

Bro. Marsh:—Our beloved brother, C. BENEDICT, is no longer numbered amongst the living. He fell asleep in Jesus the 8th of June.—He has left a widow and five orphan children, to mourn their loss. He died in hope of a speedy resurrection. Since his death, Sister B. has been called to part with one of her children, a little son five years of age. She feels to say, "The Lord gave, the Lord has taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord."

Our beloved Bro. B., was a faithful believer in the speedy coming of our Lord. He embraced this hope in the spring of '43, was among the poor that have the gospel preached unto them,—and often I have heard him thank God for poverty. Day by day he asked him for his daily bread.

Shortly before his death he offered up a most fervent prayer to his Father in heaven, to provide for his widow and children, and warned those who were sitting around the room, to prepare for the great day of God's wrath. He was strong in the belief, that he should soon see his beloved companion and friends, in the first resurrection. My soul is full while I anticipate this meeting of friends where there is no death, nor sorrow, and where the inhabitants will not say they are sick.

There are now but four or five of us that are believers in the speedy coming of Christ, and but one brother, and he lives nearly two miles from us. We have had no meetings for nearly six months, on account of Bro. B's. health, for we held our meetings at his house. The will of the Lord be done. How well did our blessed Jesus say when he said, "He that does the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my mother, my sister, and brother." When I look into the blessed word of God, how full of precious promises it is to me, and when once I used to read it, O how dark it was, but now all is light; the more I read its pages, the more it fills my soul; precious book; yes, inspired of God, to teach us the time when we shall enter Canaan, the promised inheritance of the children of God, where we shall walk with him in white, and have palms of victory, and crowns of glory. O how full of love, how full of glory shall we be, when we all get home. Glory to God, my soul is full.

Bro. Benedict, on Saturday, before his death, sent for a Methodist Minister, and gave him the text to preach from at his funeral. The preacher did very well. The words of the text you will find in 1 Thes. 4: 14.—"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again," &c., closing with, "comfort one another with these words." Bro. B. told the Minister his faith in the speedy coming of Jesus. I think he preached all the light he had. Would to God he had more. Bro. M. if you can continue the Voice of Truth to Sister Benedict, it will be a great blessing to the few who live here, for we have no preacher to give us meat, and the Voice of Truth feeds us every week. It is my prayer, that some of the Lord's watchmen would visit us. May the Lord speed the time when his kingdom shall be established a praise in the earth. Then our toil will be over.

In hope of a glorious resurrection,

MARY SMITH.

Watchmen, What of the Night?

Watchmen, on the walls of Zion,
What, oh tell us, of the night?
Is the day-star now arising,
Will the morn soon greet our sight?
O'er your vision
Shine there now some rays of light?

Tell, oh tell us—are the landmarks
On our voyage all passed by?
Are we nearing now the haven,
Can we e'en the land discern?
May we truly
On your guidance now rely?

They are silent—what's the meaning,
Are the watchmen all asleep?
Have they lost their chart and compass,
Do they now no vigil keep?
Have they left us,
In our sad despair to weep?

Blessed be the God of heaven!
He can from our fears release;
If we listen to his mandate,
From all 'trust in man to cease,
He will guide us
To the port of endless peace.

Light is beaming—Day is coming!
Let us sound aloud the cry;
We behold the day-star rising,
Pure and bright in yonder sky:
Saints, rejoice now—
Your redemption draweth nigh.

We have found the chart and compass,
And are sure the end is near;
Onward, onward we are hast'ning,
Soon the haven will appear:
Oh be wakeful!
Let the word your spirits cheer.

THE CALL OF GOD TO HIS DEAR PEOPLE,

AT THE FALL OF BABYLON.

(Concluded.)

"And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues."—Rev. 18: 4.

I now propose, with the indulgence of the reader, and the grace of God, to offer some reasons for the immediate discharge of this important duty. And 1st. God calls, and man should obey. Our Creator, Preserver, and Benefactor, speaks to his people. He is holy, all-wise, just, and good, and will reward every man according to his works. His character is a sufficient reason why he should be obeyed. But the voice proceeds from heaven. Its claims are high and binding. "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh, for if they escaped not who refused him who spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven." His command is founded in infinite reason. He addresses his people as his property. They are His by creation, preservation, and a gracious redemption. He has purchased them by the blood of his dear Son; called, regenerated, and sanctified them by His word and spirit. He cheers and animates them through this vale of tears, by exceeding great and precious promises of an inheritance in the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.—His claims are great; his people should listen to, and obey them.

The purity of God's people requires their separation from Babylon. She becomes, at her fall, a "habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." This language seems severe, but it is the language of inspiration. And what is man when the Spirit of God finally leaves him, but an incarnate devil, possessed of a foul and hateful spirit, which, like the bird, picks up every hateful thing for his support, and the gratification of those who are caged up with him. Shall God's people hold fellowship with persons of such a character, and attempt to walk with them? Society exerts a transforming influence on all its members. In this respect, (other circumstances being equal,) the controlling power of the great majority, brings at length, the minority to the standard of its general character. This is especially true in the case before us. In Babylon, after her fall, the proud and worldly professors form the great majority in number, while her unholy influence rules the mass. Her spiritual condition is such as cannot be effectually reached by the power of the Holy Ghost, and therefore, all attempt to reform her by supernatural agency of the Spirit, must be abortive. She has prayed to be excused from attending to the call of heaven at "supper-time," and in righteousness her prayer is heard, and it is done. Her fall speaks her reprobation as recorded in the registry of heaven. The Spirit of God alone, is able to bind the strong spirits of the wicked one in the hearts of men under hopeful circumstances, as before the fall of Babylon; and on the remaining few who have now the gracious strivings of the reproving spirit. In the latter case, it is true, one can chase a thousand, and the puny few can awaken and reform the mighty mass, and that too against the tide of depravity, crime, tradition, popularity, civil institutions, and the sword. And why?—Simply and solely because God is with them to fight their battles and make his sword efficacious and victorious upon the heart. But the Lord will not work with his people in the reformation of Babylon or the sects, after he himself has left her, and commands his people to follow. On the other hand, it leaves them with every advantage. For the unholy influence of the spirit, example, deportment and precepts of wicked men, will affect the true saint more or less, giving point and power to the temptations of Satan, till the very end of time. But why remain with them, when all hope of reforming them as a body, is gone? What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you; and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

You acknowledge you cannot fellowship the cold, worldly spirit of the great majority, nor tolerate their conduct, and, consequently, cannot walk with them as a member of Christ's body.—Why remain, by outward appearance and profession, when you are not there in heart. My dear brethren and sisters, let us reason together on this subject. Let us be kind, but plain. We shall soon come to judgment, when all hearts will be known. Your profession is hypocritical, and your course inconsistent. By formal association you profess fellowship and walk with the body; but in heart you have none. You in the narrow path, they in the broad way. God's ways are equal, yours are unequal. He calls you out to a fellowship of his people alone, thus bringing your outward profession to the feelings and walk of your mind. But you remain in your human organizations, making your profession war with your heart, and internal walk in the Spirit. O, why do you give your countenance, name and support to a denomination, whose general spirit and practice, your emotions of heart and better judgment must condemn. O why pull this heavy burden upon thy soul, when God invites thee out?

All who remain in Babylon, must be partakers of her sins. "For her sins," says John, "have reached to heaven." Her sins are fearful in character, and great in number. The nominal church stands justly charged with the wilful transgression of all the ten commandments, by individuals nominally connected with some one of her numerous branches. Not a crime recorded on the pages of the criminal calendar in the history of man, but what has been committed by her. I do not mean by this that all sin has been committed by professors of religion, but that she has imitated the modes of sinning among non-professors, and that she has originated many of the forms of wickedness now calling for judgment from righteous heaven. — Look at unenlightened pagan nations; compare the number and turpitude of their sins with those of the enlightened christian nations of Europe and America; and why the amazing difference? The amount of it is this; they do not know enough to do so wickedly. The abuse of gospel light has made "Babylon the great the mother of harlots, and abomination of the earth."

God has been good in granting the light of the glorious gospel, but alas, alas, depraved and wicked man has used its blessed illuminations in seeking out many inventions, and framing and executing deeds of darkness, before unknown to man. Says John, "I saw the woman, mystery Babylon, drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. And in her was found the blood of prophets and of saints, and all that were slain upon the earth." A catalogue of the sins of the last days of peril, as committed by those having a form of godliness, [church members by profession,] is addressed to Timothy. Let us hear it. "Men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false-accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." We daily see these heinous sins committed under the cloak of christianity.—"They have borrowed the "livery of heaven to serve the devil in." "A serpent with an angel's voice." A grave with flowers bestrewn.—"Clouds they are," says, Jude, "without water, carried about of winds; trees, whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots."

The three crowning sins of Babylon, in my opinion, are war, slavery, and the final rejection of the everlasting gospel. It is well understood, that christian nations and church members train men from youth, year after year, in all the art of war, with instruments of death in their hands to kill men in defence of their rights; the professors of the religion of the meek and lowly Jesus, frequently head the armies, or are soldiers in the ranks, to carry death and destruction in the field of battle. War, in whatever light it is viewed, can be nothing else than systematic, legalized murder. It is utterly opposed to the example of Christ and his gospel. It conflicts with the faith once delivered to the saints, and the example of the primitive martyrs. The blood of slaughtered millions will be required at the hands of these murderers, in the day of retribution.

Says John, in closing his enumeration of the merchandise of Babylon, "and slaves, [bodies, margin,] and souls of men." It is also a well known fact, that upwards of three millions of human beings under our national banner, are held in servitude, and are sold as goods and chattels to the highest bidder. Many slaveholders and dealers are members of the different religious denominations, while others tolerate and uphold this most crying sin. They sell the body and the precious soul, and Christ in the soul; if the slave be a christian. A slave who is valued at six hundred dollars, when the soul has left the body, is worth, perhaps 50 or 60 dollars for a skeleton, for the use of the surgeon and his students. Others, well-disposed, kind and faithful, not stronger or more healthy, are sold for $500 or 1000 dollars. The sale therefore, would stand nearly thus:—for the body $50, for the soul, $550;—Christ in the soul, from two to four hundred dollars more! Moral darkness can be no palliation for this abominable crime. It is committed in christian America, considered (and perhaps justly) the most enlightened for general knowledge among all classes, of any nation on the globe.—Yes, it is here the tears, blood, and sweat of wronged sons of Africa, are bottled up, and had in remembrance in heaven, to be exchanged for the seven vials of his wrath, and poured upon the heads of the cruel merchants of Babylon. May the Lord save us from partaking of such daring violations of the laws of righteous heaven.

The religious bodies of the present generation, have made light of the call of God by his servants at supper-time, and prayed to be excused from a preparation for the speedy marriage of the Lamb. By so doing, they have finally rejected the everlasting gospel, preached by the angel to them that dwell on the earth, the claims of which were to be urged by the nearness of the judgment. "For the hour of his judgment is come." "Therefore fear God and give glory to him."—This gospel has been published to the world, and pressed home upon the conscience, by motives drawn from definite time, or the hour of judgment. It produced, it is true, a mighty revolution; and resulted in the conversion of thousands; but was at last rejected by the sects. Christ has suffered many things, and been rejected of this generation, upon whom he will soon come without observation, like the lightning. This forms the climax of her sins. Who would wish to partake of them? If we continue in the same denominations with those who commit such sins, we shall be in danger of doing the same. Their example and conversation will have a mighty influence upon us. We also partake of the sins of others, when we have pleasure in them that do them. If we mingle in their conversation, smile at their follies and blasphemies, or sit in silence and listen to their errors, slanders, and vanities, without rebuke, we consent to their offences. Again: when we imbibe the spirit or act from the motives of formal, ungodly professors, we incur guilt:—for the motives and spirit of an act weigh far more in the scales of a righteous retribution, than its mere form. Indeed, the motive gives it character in the sight of him who said, "Son, give me thine heart." We also partake of her sins, when we pay our money to support her institutions.

Our usefulness and safety require us to come out of the sects composing mystery Babylon.—Many have informed me that if they should leave the society of which they are a member, they should lose their influence among their brethren, and their ability to do good generally. I know this is a common opinion. It is, however, erroneous and fatal. 'Tis true they might lose all that influence derived from sectarian views and feeling, and from the popularity of the denomination, in the eyes of the world. This worldly, sectarian influence, may assist the revivalist in moving the great, rich, and popular, and also in counting numbers; but such converts are generally short lived. "They shall go with their flocks and herds to seek the Lord, but they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself from them. They have dealt treacherously against the Lord, for they have begotten strange children, now shall a month devour them." If then, by coming out, we exchange this party, and perhaps general influence, for the operations of the pure spirit of God, though affecting and sanctifying but few in number, how blessed is the result.—Far better to have a few converts truly regenerated and sanctified by the holy Spirit and truth alone, than to have the multitude deceived, or made hypocrites for a deeper bed in hell, by the the confused or misled spirit of Babylon. The purer the spirit and doctrine, the more power we possess truly, to perform lasting good.

To illustrate:—suppose twenty men fallen into a lake and were all drowning, and must soon be rescued or find a watery grave. Now the question is, how can we succeed in doing them the most good? Two only are able to get out themselves, or to assist their fellows. Can the two do the most essential good by remaining with them, and holding their heads alternately above the water to prevent their immediate suffocation, or by swimming ashore themselves, and then, by means of a pole, rope, or otherwise, assist the drowning? The probability of saving their own lives, and perhaps a few if not all the rest permanently, would outweigh, in a sound mind, the temporal advantage of a few moments relief to all. In the water, they could not exert their strength as on the land, and they would incur the imminent danger of being overcome by their superior number and dying struggles, and all perish together. The application is easy. The nominal church is in the waters of spiritual death. Some have sunk, others are still floating on its surface, sinking and rising; a few others have reached the shores of primitive faith and power. These on the shore wish to help them all they can without periling their own souls, but dare not go in to tarry. The living ones, in the death and darkness which surround them, wish to have them come in, and run the hazard of all living, or all perishing together. If you tarry, you must feel her plagues;—death, mourning and famine, steal upon your soul. If you wish to save your soul alive, flee from the devoted city, like the family of Lot; tarry not in all the plain, and look not behind you. "Remember Lot's wife," is an injunction for you.

Babylon is destined soon to be burned with fire. She will then, like a millstone cast into the sea, be found no more at all. O ye dear saints yet within the enclosure of her creeds, come out, and you shall find rest to your souls. You shall find the child-like, free, heaven-born spirit of love that you had before entering your favorite sect at conversion. You shall then see and rejoice in your freedom. Jesus and angels shall rejoice over you, hallelujah, the Father and Son shall make their abode with you. Depend on no human arm, measure, sect, name, or creed, for acceptance, but in the Lord, without any intervening system or measure. The experience of hundreds might be brought in attestation to the truths I have written in this communication. Their bondage, death and darkness, has been changed for glorious liberty, life, light, and love. Observation confirms this truth. I have seen many who have come out recently, and brought nothing belonging to worldly policy or spirit with them, and they are shouting victory, like the Israelites on the banks of the Red Sea. Among those who hold the same views on the coming of Christ, and who are not divided on this question, there is a marked difference. God will have his people go out single-handed, without leaning on system, man, or measure, that he may have all the glory. The majority of God's people may be out of Babylon; but others yet linger. How their souls are becoming dark, oppressed, and sickly. To this, their oral and written communications and their own confessions, bear ample testimony. I am, daily, more and more persuaded of the importance of this call of God from heaven. But I must take my leave of you my brethren in the fallen city. I shall occasionally visit and address you till Christ comes. But I have faithfully warned you, and feel a consciousness that if you finally perish, your blood will not be upon my head. O look to Jesus, and follow him.

We have no King but Caesar.

How emphatically is the language once used by the cruel Jews, while thirsting for the blood of the innocent Lamb of God, now uttered by the world and professed church, not only by word but by actions, that speak louder than words—They are willing to contemplate the Savior as the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, but when he is represented as an Almighty King, talking to himself his great power to reign, how unequivocal is the language, "We have no King but Caesar." It would be well for all to inquire, in this state of things, what is the concurrent testimony of the word of God on this subject? Do not those prophets that speak most clearly and feelingly on the subject of his humiliation and sufferings, speak also of his exaltation and glory? and does not the plan of redemption require that he should be preached as a Prince as well as a Savior? Redemption! I love the sound of that word. I love to contemplate its deep meaning, its cause and completion; beginning in the garden of Eden, where man committed the first transgression, and brought himself under the penalty of God's violated law, and earth, cursed by her Creator, gave signs that all was lost. I look forward to the development and completion of that plan, when man is restored to the favor of his maker, through faith, in a crucified and risen Redeemer, and onward, to the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, when man, soul and body, shall be redeemed from all the effects of the curse, and live forever under the mild and peaceful government of him who has undertaken, in infinite love and benevolence, and carried forward with divine wisdom and power, this great plan of redemption. With such views, we may exclaim with the poet,

"Say, live forever wondrous King,
Born to redeem and strong to save;
Than ask the monster, where's thy sting?
And where's thy victory boasting grave!"

A Word on Time.

I find, as I pass from place to place preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, that there are some who are holding on with an iron grasp, to that faith once delivered to the saints; and it does work by love, and purifies the heart, and overcomes the world. Others there are, whose faith (if they have any,) is inactive, and they have little or no confidence in the truth, that the personal coming of Jesus is emphatically near, even at the doors. If we can judge them by their works, they seem to have rushed into the world all over, have no time to attend the weekly prayer meetings,—get so tired that they will retire to their beds on Lord's day, instead of going out to hear the word preached, or meet with the children to exhort and pray. And now, dear brethren, let me inform you that the time has been when I was skeptical in relation to time, but now it is as clear to my own mind as a sun-beam, that Jesus is very soon to come and redeem his waiting children, and cleanse the sanctuary (which is this earth) and that 1847 years from his birth will close up probationary time, bring his coming, &c. Then the door of mercy will be forever closed against Jew and Gentile. Solemn truth! Are we ready?

But you will say, we cannot believe that 1847 years from his birth, will bring his coming. To illustrate and prove the time, we will suppose that you were passing by my dwelling on your way to Hartford, and should inquire of me the distance. Well, I tell you that it is just 2300 miles from my dwelling; and in order that you may have farther instruction on the point, and be assured that you are traveling on the right road, after having started, I say to you travel on 483 miles and you will find a person called Jesus, preaching the gospel of the kingdom to a nation called Jews. $3\frac{1}{2}$ farther, you will find the same person hanging on a cross, dying for the sins of a lost world. Now, I ask, would you not believe with all your soul, that after having travelled out the remainder of the 2300 miles you would find Hartford? O yes, say you. Now brethren just have the same confidence in the direction that God has given us in relation to the end of this world, as found recorded in Dan., 8th and 9th chapters.

In Dan. 8: 13, I understand the question is asked, how long shall the three powers, brought to view under the emblems of a Roman he-goat, and little horn, tread under foot the saints and their inheritance? and in the 14th v. the answer is given—"unto 2300 days [or years,] then shall the sanctuary [or the inheritance] be cleansed." Peter tells us that it is to be cleansed by fire.—And in Dan. 9: 25, he is told when to commence the 2300 years. He is also told that 69 weeks (483 years) from the starting point, which was the decree that went forth to restore and build Jerusalem, the Messiah should appear. From that time, or in half a week, (or $3\frac{1}{2}$ years,) he would be cut off. Well, we come down 483 years from the going forth of the decree, and we find Jesus entering Galilee, preaching the gospel, saying, "the time is fulfilled;" that is, the 483 yrs. (or 69 weeks.) $3\frac{1}{2}$ years farther, and we find Him on the cross, groaning, bleeding, dying.—Rom. 5: 6; Dan. 9: 27.

Now, I ask, is not the evidence conclusive, that after we shall have come down to the end of the 2300 years, we shall see the blessed Jesus?—which will be just 1813 $\frac{1}{2}$ years from the cross. I believe it with all my soul.

The 2300 years reach to Christ's second coming. 483 years to the time he appeared publicly as the Messiah. Luke says that he was about 30 when he thus appeared.—Luke 3: 23.

Take 30 from 483, and you have 453; take 453 from 2300, and you have 1847. This brings us to the end.

Now brethren, are we doubting? if so, we are not looking for the Lord; consequently, we are not ready to meet him. Heb. 9: 28. Let us see to it, that we have clean hands and a pure heart. Let us examine ourselves every hour, to see whether we love the appearing of Christ. Such only will be able to stand in that day.—Psa. 24: 24; 2 Tim. 4: 8.

Your brother in the faith that Jesus will soon appear to deliver the true Israel of God,

My Present Position.

Bro. Marsh:—I desire to define my present position, and feel called upon to do so, from remarks in your paper of Aug. 19th, in an article headed "A Difficulty," in which I am represented as having taken a position on definite time, based on the argument that Christ was crucified in the year A. D. 33, and in the middle of the week, and afterwards taking a short turn and talking at random about Christ's coming in '46 or '47. The position named, I took and still maintain firmly; but that I have since turned from it or talked at random about '46 or '47, I deny, and ask my brother to put his finger on any remark of mine, pointing to '47. I have no evidence for—and consequently, no faith in '47. By reference to the "Trump of Jubilee," No. 4, March, '46, he will see my faith on time, then and now. In that article, I took this ground:—"that just as sure as that Christ was crucified in 33, just so sure it is the vision will terminate this year." I am not aware of having written any thing contrary to that view since. If I have, I now repent of it before God and my brethren. With these remarks, I proceed briefly to define my present position.

1st. I know that the coming of Christ is near, for this reason: I have seen those things begin to come to pass referred to by our Savior in Luke, 21: 28.

2d. I know He is not only near, but even at the door; because I have seen the fulfilment of all those signs by which I was to know this fact, independent of all other considerations. See Math. 24: 33.

Were there no prophetic periods nor any other signs given in the Bible, it would not affect my faith on this point. Jesus gives four events as constituting the sign of the Son of man: i. e., the sign of his coming; and then says, when ye see ALL these things, then know that my coming is at the door. The last named event, was "the shaking of the powers of heaven," which sign is fully explained in Luke 21: 25, 26, by reference to which, we see the last item has been fulfilled to the letter,—“men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.” I am aware that some of my brethren do not hold with me in this, but say that the powers of heaven have not yet been shaken, and yet those same brethren say, “they know that Christ is at the door,” as well as they know that summer is nigh from the usual spring indications. I ask for their evidence. If this sign is not fulfilled, they have no evidence in God's word upon which to base this positive knowledge of the fact. These signs fulfilled, and nothing else, is the evidence, and the only evidence we have given us for such knowledge. Some take the position, that this sign is to be fulfilled in the shaking of the heaven and earth, when Christ comes.—But mark—he does not say that heaven shall be shaken, but the powers of heaven shall be shaken, and it is not at his coming, but a sign by which we may know his coming is at the door. I prefer the explanation of the Holy Spirit, in Luke, 21: 25, 26, to all theories of men, and rejoice that Christ is at the door.

3d. I believe the vision of the 2300 days end this year, and I take the position that they cannot be extended to the fall of '47, nor even to the spring passover. In Dan. 9: 25, we have this declaration,—“From the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be 69 weeks,” or 483 years. The expression “to Messiah the Prince,” we all understand as being fulfilled in his anointing by the Holy Ghost (according to Isa 61: 1,) at his baptism, by which act he was made known as the Messiah to John, who was the one officially appointed by the Father as the herald of Christ, who proclaimed him to the world as the Messiah, after his baptism. By reading John 1: 29-34, we learn that Jesus was thus manifested to John at his baptism, previous to which, he knew him not as the Messiah who was to baptise with the Holy Ghost. Verse 33.—“And I knew him not: but He that sent me to baptise with water, the same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record, that this is the Son of God.” At this point, the 69 weeks end. The only question we have to settle is, when was Christ baptised? I answer, in the Fall of A. D. 29. Proof.—John commenced his ministry in the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar. See Luke 3: 1. No point in history is better established than the commencement of his reign. See Pearson's Diagram, &c. The 15th year of his reign is pinned down to be from Aug. 19, A. D. 28, to Aug. 19, A. D. 29, within which period, John commenced his ministry. John was only six months older than Jesus, [Luke 1: 36] and as John could not commence his ministry short of 30, and as Jesus was not quite 30 when baptised, [see Luke 2: 23,] it is evident that John's ministry could not have been 6 months up to the time he baptised Jesus, at which point the 69 weeks ended. Now, as John commenced preaching in the 15th year of Tiberius, which year ended Aug. A. D. 29, and as no point of the year is specified, all our opponents can ask is one half, which would accord with Prideaux's view, who says, John commenced his ministry “about the time of the Paschal feast.” We will, however, give them $\frac{2}{3}$ of the year. Then John had preached 4 months up to Aug. A. D. 29, to which add two months, and we are brought to Oct., at which point Christ was baptised, and the 69 weeks ended, leaving 1817 years of the vision, which, added to Oct. A. D. 29, terminates the vision in Oct. 1846. And this supposition harmonizes with the cross in the middle of the week, and according to Ferguson, in April of A. D. 33. If we say John preached only 3 months in the 15th year of Tiberius, then the 6 months will extend to Nov. A. D. 29, and Christ's crucifixion was in May, A. D. 33, according to the perpetual time-tables of London, and the whole vision ends in Nov. A. D. 1846. Now, as John commenced his ministry previous to Aug. A. D. 29, and that ministry was short of six months up to the point where terminated the 69 weeks, it is settled that Christ was crucified in A. D. 33, and of course in the first month, being at a passover.

Once more: I took the position that the 2300 days could not be extended to the spring passover. For this reason, inasmuch as John commenced preaching previous to Aug. A. D. 29, and his 6 months ministry will not reach to the passover in A. D. 30 for the termination of the 69 weeks: so neither can the 2300 days be extended to the passover in 1847.

In conclusion, we perceive that John's ministry is a short chain of less than 6 months, that holds the vision firm both ways, and resolves all our doubts, and brings them into a circle of less than six months, within which, the vision must terminate. It also settles the point, that Christ was crucified in A. D. 33, and if the cross stands at the middle point of the week, all is brought into a circle of about one month. For if Christ was crucified in A. D. 33, it was, evidently, in April or May, and the vision must end in Oct. or Nov. of 1846. I believe, therefore, that within 90 days, the vision will speak and not lie. God help us to be prepared for the great scenes of that great day of God Almighty. I do not say I know this—I do not feel justified in saying so; I believe it. I consider such ground as presumptuous and unwarrantable. Now, the just shall live by faith. Neither can I take the opposite extreme and go all lengths with some of my brethren in their conservatism. I have seen the injurious effects of both. Our faith should correspond with the light and evidence which God has given us. Many of my brethren say to me, Bro. Pinney, I confess that this is the clearest light and the strongest argument by far, that we have ever had, and but for our former disappointments, I could believe and not doubt. My brother, what hast past disappointments to do with your present faith?—The question should be, is the evidence good?—If it is, believe without wavering, or any considerations of the past, present, or future. If our present faith is modified by past considerations, is it not because of pride within our hearts not fully slain? If there is a flaw in the argument, I think my brethren will point it out: if there is none, let us cease talking about '46 or '47, and let our faith and works accord with the evidence on '46. I fear '47 is a device of the enemy to destroy souls, and I know it has unsettled the faith of many of God's dear children.

Finally, my brethren is it so? Is this the last year of time? Is the consummation of our hope so soon to be realized? What manner of persons ought we to be? What holy, consecrated lives we should live. May the Lord help us "to watch and pray always, that we may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man;" that having suffered with him here, we may also reign with him in glory. Amen. E. R. PINNEY.

Bro. G. W. Burnham, Concord N. H., July 27, writes:—The end, Bro. Marsh, is nearing—every thing in trumpet voice proclaims it! The brethren, in the places that I have visited, Essex, Mass., Exeter, and Concord, N. H., are strong in the faith, giving glory to God. But they have been wonderfully sifted—but a small number in each of these places remain. I go this week to Addison, Vt., to be there, if the Lord permit, over next Sunday.

The Lord be with you—you have, or I might say, Christ has friends yet.

REMARKABLE METEOR.—At Earieux, in the Arondissement d'Autun (France) a very singular meteor was observed on Sunday, June 20th, about half past eight in the evening. The heavens were serene, and illuminated by a twilight. At the north-quarter-north-east, for the space of a minute and two or three seconds, it was easy to observe, in its perpendicular fall to the horizon, a luminous globe, of a violet colored outline, and about a metre in circumference. The body always preserved its spherical form. Five globules in succession, detaching themselves from its mass without appearing to take anything from its size, marked very distinctly the line of its fall. The globules appeared to have about a quarter the size of the principal mass. Finally the latter changed, if not in its visible form, at least in its density, burst a little above the horizon and threw out into a vast circumference, a thousand brilliant fusées, the appearance of which had something fearfully magnificent, even for those to whom the observation of this kind has the greatest attraction.

ROCHESTER, SEPTEMBER 2, 1846.

Letter from Bro. Wm. Miller.

The following letter was written by Bro. Miller to Bro. Bywater and Flint, in answer to a request from them, to attend a meeting at Attica. We take the liberty to make the letter public: the wholesome instruction it contains is too good to be lost.

Dear Brethren:—I received your letter and request, some days since. But owing to the precarious situation of my health, I have been fearful of saying, I will come, lest I should disappoint you—and I know not what a day may bring forth. Yet it would be a gratification to me to visit my old friends in the West, and especially those who are looking for the consolation of Israel.

If my health and circumstances will admit, I will do my best to come on about the first week in September. If anything should happen to prevent—I hope you will not be disappointed. For I tell you I have no new message. What I shall have to say will only be what the Lord has said in his word, be the same more or less. And you well know, that many, even of those who are professed adventists, are seeking for new things: 'the old manna stinketh.' I am feeding on the old promises yet.

The coming of that same Jesus, a glorious hope—The resurrection of our same bodies, a blessed prospect—The inheritance of this same earth, a good promise—The possession of immortality and eternal life, thrilling consideration.—A union of the whole family of heaven and earth whose names are enrolled in the saints' book of life, a brilliant idea.—Living with Christ, happy thought.—Without sin, blissful contemplation.—Where the wicked cease from troubling, a peaceful abode.—And where the weary shall be at rest, an eternal Sabbath.—The restitution of all things, glorious redemption, a Jubilee, a victory of our King—no more death, pain, fear; all evil banished, all glory revealed, at his coming. If these things are not good news enough to fill the soul with love and gratitude to God, for ages yet to come, then such men will never be satisfied with any bliss in the power of God to give. And yet, strange as it may seem, many of our advent brethren are dissatisfied, uneasy, and impatient to find something new or strange, and are making to themselves theories which are not true, and gods that are no gods. Well might the Apostle say, (James 5: 8, 9), "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned; behold, the Judge standeth at the door." They are like the children of Israel in the wilderness, saying, "Make us gods to go before us; for as for this man Moses we wot not what has become of him." Why can we not walk by faith? May we be sober, and hope to the end.

I am looking yet for the blessed hope, and
Yours, in love,

WM. MILLER.

True Faith.

Never have Christians needed true evangelical faith more than at this moment. It is but a short time since they were strengthened and cheered on their heavenly journey by powerful and general revival influence. All through the land, saints were rejoicing, backsliders returning, sinners crying for mercy, and happy converts singing the song of redemption. These influences, these helps, served constantly to strengthen the Christian's faith, and keep him active and joyful in the work of the Lord. But these helps do not exist now: they have given place to unbelief, back-sliding, cold indifference, and sin, like an overwhelming torrent, on every hand. The outward helps of the Christian are now nearly if not entirely gone. His only source of aid now is, in God and his word. If he cannot keep his faith alive by the aid of these helps, then it most surely must die.

to see that we are in possession of true faith at this fearful crisis. Without it we have lost our strength, and must fall; 'for thou standest by faith.' Without it, we cease to make any advancement on the heavenly journey; for we 'walk' and 'run by faith.' Without it, we cannot please God: for 'without faith it is impossible to please him.' Without it we die: 'for the life I now live is by the faith of the Son of God.' Without it, we shall never gain the promised heavenly inheritance: 'for ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus—And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise.'

True faith does not consist in a bare assent to the truth of a proposition: it must have good works in order to be a perfect or living faith: 'for faith without works is dead.' 'And by works was faith made perfect.' This subject is most beautifully explained by Paul, in the eleventh chap. of Hebrews. He there shows in what consists a perfect or living faith. By faith Enoch pleased God, and was translated. By faith Noah prepared an ark, and was saved. By faith Abraham went out, not knowing whither he went, and sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country. By faith Abraham offered up Isaac. By faith Moses refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, suffered affliction, forsook Egypt, kept the passover, passed the Red Sea, and triumphed over his foes. 'And what shall I more say! for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Sampson, and of Jephthae; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets; who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance: that they might obtain a better resurrection: and others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment. They were stoned, were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (of whom the world was not worthy:;) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.—And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.'

Unless we have a faith like this, that will enable us to work, go out, suffer affliction, and the most cruel death, if required, it is not perfect, it is dead, and will not justify us now nor in the day of the Lord.

If true faith is so essential to our present peace and future salvation, the important inquiry naturally arises, How can it be obtained? Not by dreams and human impulses; not by doubtful inferences, supposed visions or revelations of modern date: for 'if an angel from heaven preach any other gospel [than is contained in the Bible] let him be accursed.' How then? Let Paul answer. 'How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?—So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.' Rom. 10: 14-17.

Here is the plain and easy way to obtain true faith: it is to hear, believe, and obey the "word of God." Believing and obeying any other word will not bring us into the possession of true faith. Here is where we need wisdom at this trying moment. While we should most scrupulously believe all of the word o

God, we should be very cautious that we believe no more than his word. A subtle device of the enemy, when he has failed in preventing the confiding child of grace from believing all that he should, is, to push him into the extreme of believing more than is required at his hand. Many, not aware of their danger here, have run into the most extravagant and wild delusions. They have thought there was no extreme in this case, and hence have been deceived. The Apostles, and the Thessalonians erred on this point. The apostles believed that Christ came to 'redeem Israel' at his first advent, and consequently were sadly disappointed when they saw him crucified. The Thessalonians believed the second advent of Christ would take place in their day, and were corrected in their mistake by Paul. In each case, they believed too much; and the mistake, doubtless, would have proved fatal to many if not all, if it had not been timely corrected.

Can we believe too much as well as not enough on the time of the Lord's coming? Some seem to talk and act as though we could not. But our past mistakes and disappointed faith and hope, say that we have believed too much: the facts in the case infallibly prove that we were not required to believe in any of the past precise definite times, which have been set for the advent of Christ. Is there any danger in our believing too much in this respect now? Not if the 'word of God' defines a precise definite time for the occurrence of this event. But if it does not, then there is danger. It does not give any such definition. Hence, true faith does not take hold of any of the precise definite times now set for the advent of Christ; for it not only fearlessly believes all that the word of God requires, but it does not believe more, or go beyond that word: it keeps within the bounds of the Bible, and is not safe in going one step beyond that divine enclosure.

If faith comes by hearing the word, our duty is plain relative to our faith in the time of the coming of Christ. We should believe all that that word proclaims on this long-looked-for event. And it cannot be understandingly disputed that it most clearly proclaims that the stone will soon smite the image, when the kingdom of God will fill the whole earth; that the times of the Gentiles are nearly complete, will soon end, when God's scattered people will be gathered into their eternal and glorious inheritance; and that the signs in the natural, political, moral and religious world, indisputably proclaim the coming of the Son of man, 'nigh, at the door.' Let faith take hold of these immutable pillars, these sure way-marks to the final consummation; let us keep in mind that we have passed the very last prophetic tokens of our near approach to the end, and faith will not waver, but will hold fast its grasp upon the sure word of promise, until joyfully relieved by the coming of Him who is the author and finisher of our faith.

Articles Declined.

The communications from Bro. M—, on the two horned beast, are more an expression of the writer's opinions, than evidences to sustain his position.—Such communications are well enough, and sometimes the most acceptable, on undisputed questions. But on unsettled questions, sound argument and good evidence are called for. Relative to what the two horned beast symbolizes, we consider a question not yet settled. Hence, we think it advisable to publish on this question that only which will serve to bring the point at issue to a right termination.

The questions of Bro. N—, and the answers they necessarily call for, we think are not demanded by the general wants of the cause at this time. It is for the general good we labor; the questions are therefore laid over.

Our brother's article on patience is very good in many respects; yet his application of certain texts of Scripture is most certainly wrong. There is no good evidence that what Paul has said on patience, in Heb. 10:36, was exclusively designed for this last generation of Christians, any more than the rest of the epistle was. The writer of that epistle does not tell us that this part is designed for the Hebrews of his day, and this part for the Gentiles of the last days. No, no, the epistle was written to the Hebrews, and its doctrinal and practical instructions were suited to the wants of Christians of every nation and age, to the end of time. We are sorry to find it duty to decline our brother's article: we think, however, he will approve of our decision when he has looked at this matter again.—We solicit a continuation of his favors. We all must exercise, at this trying time, a good degree of that patience of which our good brother writes.

Bro. Pinney's Position.

Which we give in this number, will be read with interest. Though we cannot agree with him on what constitutes the shaking of the powers of heaven and the sign of the Son of man, yet we see no real necessity of controverting the points of difference between us: for we are perfectly agreed on the fundamental truths in the grand question. We both think the evidence in the case warrants us in believing that the coming of Christ is at the door. The only difference is, Bro. P. thinks the powers of heaven have been shaken and that the sign of the Son of man has been seen, as sure precursors of the near coming of the Son of man. We hold that the shaking of the powers of heaven will take place when Christ shall actually rise up 'terribly to shake' the heavens and earth, that the sign of the Son of man will then appear, and in immediate connection with these things, the Lord will be revealed. All, we believe, will be literal, and soon witnessed.

Let each one examine the point in dispute by the light of the Bible; it is our only sure guide in such matters.

News of the Day.

The news of the day, directly bearing upon the fulfilment of prophecy, is rather unimportant just at this time, with the exception that everything of a national warlike character wears the aspect of universal peace and quietude, throughout the world: the state in which it evidently will be found at the appearing of Christ. Though the Mexican war has not yet terminated, it doubtless will soon be ended, and peace be restored between the belligerent powers. In short, we are more and more convinced that no general war will exist at the coming of the Lord. The winds will be held until that time: then the battle will be between the kings of the earth and the Lamb. He will fight with the sword of his mouth, and suddenly destroy all his foes.

West-India Mission.

Bro. L. D. Mansfield called on us one day last week, on his way to Pulaski, from whence with his wife he expects soon to leave for New York, where, in company with Bro. Livingston and wife, he will embark for the West Indies. Bro. Mansfield's health is good, and his faith unwavering in the near coming of the Lord. Let him and those with him be remembered in our prayers, and gifts according to the will of the Lord, that this mission may be crowned with the special blessing of God.

Conferences.

A number of conferences are now appointed to be held in Western N. Y. within a few weeks from the present time; also, one or two in C. W. Several fall on the same date. Now, as laborers are few, unless we make a distribution of our help, some of these meetings will prove a failure. If Bro. Robinson, Porter, Robins and Morley, will attend the meetings at Jamestown and Laona, we think those appointed at the same time at Slab City and Attica may be supplied by other ministers.

The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth more laborers into his harvest.

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

As Bro. Hutchinson joined us before our departure from Plymouth, we were able to leave that place, so as to spend the last Lord's day in Exeter. Bro. Himes was intending to have spent that day in Tiverton, but the friends there were disappointed in obtaining a place for worship.—We hope to have the privilege by-and-by, of delivering a thorough course of lectures: Providence, however, had otherwise arranged for us.—It was supposed we had closed up our labors in Exeter; and as the truth had begun to cut its way through error, and to open the eyes of the blind, the devil thought it well to bestir himself. In E., we have had to labor much against the views of the spiritualists, especially that view which makes Christ either to have come at the destruction of Jerusalem, or that which assumes that he never will come personally. There is a class of the former type in that place, who violently oppose, of course, the visible, glorious coming of the Lord. Their great apostle is a Mr. Stark, of Torquay; their chief speaker, or minister, is a wine merchant of the city. It is said that Prof. Lee, the Oriental Professor of Cambridge, is also an exponent of their faith, though we hope he is not of their lives. On Saturday, it was announced by posted bills, that Mr. Townley, A. B., formerly minister of St. Matthews, Liverpool, would preach two sermons at the "Subscription Rooms," for the purpose of proving that Christ's second advent was in the past, &c. It was understood that the above society had invited him to the place, and that he would edify them on the occasion with his lectures. We thought it our duty to attend in the forenoon at least. Bro. Burgess supplied at Exeter Hall in the meantime, and announced our intention of a reply in the afternoon and evening of the same day. We had read in the United States, Mr. T.'s book, in which he attempts to prove the fulfilment of all inspired prophecy; and we knew the influence it was exerting over many honest minds. The meeting was opened and concluded without a syllable of prayer, the above sect not favoring prayer, contending that the present is a state of praise. We only regretted that we should have spent two hours or more, so poorly: for a greater jumble of nonsense we hardly ever heard fall from a professed minister's lips. I say minister:—the speaker gave not the faintest shadow, either in his person, or attitudes, or words, or spirit, of ever having been familiar with the desk, the Bible, or the God of the Bible. A greater pedantic, a more perfect clerical coxcomb, we never knew to harangue an audience. The Pope could not have affected more supreme contempt for those who should dispute his claims to the pontifical chair, than did this self-conceited, pompous defender of the present glorified state of the Church, for those who professed to believe in a judgment, a resurrection, and a Redeemer, yet to come. A more puerile effort at a Scripture exposition, than was exhibited on the above occasion, we will venture to say, that, leaving his audience to be the jury in the case, they would not hesitate to declare had never been played before them. We think they gave him, some time before his farce ended, their appreciation of it. His "lecture to prove the coming of Christ at the destruction of Jerusalem," consisted of a superficial exposition of the 24th and 25th chapters of Matt., which was only prefatory to his discourse, the subject of which was—the Qualifications of a Religious Teacher! We leave on our journal the rare specimens of his qualifications for that sacred office, as illustrated in his exegesis as above. You must have a single one: "Two women shall be grinding at the mill," &c. "Women don't grind at the mill now!!" O, ignorance, where is thy blush! He "would not argue the question with a person who did not understand the original" (Greek); he should have added, and "the English." Mr. T., and those he represents, are nothing less than Universalists and Infidels. He denied the existence of a devil, and the future punishment of the wicked.

We each gave sermons according to appointment, and not because of the importance of the gentleman who occasioned them, or the formidable character of his assaults: and we can bless God for the good that was accomplished. The minds of several were relieved, who confessed they had been delivered from a long and awfully dangerous snare. The brethren there, felt as though we had been sent of God.

We arrived at Bristol to-day, and intend to leave to-morrow for Reading and Uckfield, near London. We have a meeting with the brethren this evening: they are already beginning to assemble. We design, at a future time, visiting this city, and making a thorough effort. Brother Hutchinson is doing good in Plymouth, and will join us on Saturday, if the Lord will. We are each well and happy.

There is a great work to be done in England, and few, very few, to aid in carrying it forward. The cause needs some moving spirit to direct it; the fragments must, if possible, be collected and built upon. The people here have not the pecuniary ability that the mass have with you. Of course, most of the expenses incident on our labors, must come from our own pockets. We find attentive hearers everywhere, in the streets, in the cars, and in the house of God. O that there were laborers sufficient in the field, to meet the wants of this interesting and solemn time. You will pray that God may raise up and send forth laborers to gather the harvest. An awful account awaits those professed ministers who are negligent of the responsibilities resting upon them at this solemn crisis. How many must, in consequence of indifference and sloth somewhere, have that great day come upon them unawares! Our souls cry out, "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail from among the children of men."

On leaving Bristol we proceeded to Reading, and on our arrival there, we met Bro. Kitchen at the station, in waiting for us, and we were taken to his hospitable roof, where we abode during our stay in that place. Bro. K. is one of the many good and substantial brethren with whom it is our happy lot to meet in our perambulations, and to whom God seems to have committed a measure of his Word in these last times. He was formerly a chess-leader in connection with the Methodists, a circuit steward, and superintendent of the Sabbath School. The first two of these offices he voluntarily relinquished on embracing the advent faith; and from the last, after having in vain received hints to retire, he was excluded. There are but a few composing the "waiting band" in Reading: these feel lonely and forsaken, yet they strive to be happy and resigned to their lot. Bro. K. in particular, has, for a long time, kept in the counting-room of his store, papers and small tracts on the advent, with which to supply those who are willing to read. As much of his time as he can possibly spare, he spends in visiting the solitary ones of the household in his neighborhood, and comforting them with the words of the kingdom. We were happy to learn that Rev. Mr. Goodheart of the Episcopal church, preaches the coming of the Lord, at hand; he has also published on the subject. We were not able to have an interview with him, in consequence of his absence. Rev. Mr. Dorman, of the "Plymouth Brethren," preaches in this town a part of the time; he gave us a call, and we spent some hours in conversation, principally respecting the destiny of the Jews; he also preaches the duty of watching and looking for the return of "the Nobleman." By the way, we have received a letter from Bro. Dealtry, who, at the time of our last, was making a preaching tour through the county of Cornwall: he states that Mr. Friar, who has a small society in Truro, called the "Home Missionary," has embraced the truth, and goes with us entire.

Hardly two hours after our arrival in Reading had elapsed, before we were addressing the people on the glorious hope, in "New Hall, the largest and best place in town for lecturing. We were listened to with good attention, and announced another lecture for the following evening, when the audience was larger: among whom were many of the most intelligent, who listened to a discourse on the Papacy, apparently with much interest. At the close, many hands were stretched out for papers, and numbers testified to the truth. We were very sorry that a previous engagement of the hall for Lord's day, and a want of the means necessary to secure it for us at other times, greatly limited, if not almost entirely defeated, our efforts in Reading. All did not perfectly discharge their duty, or it would have been otherwise. O for apostolic zeal and fire to be impelled to the consecration of ourselves, our property, our ALL, to this last great and thrilling truth of the speedy coming of our King in glory!

On the next day, Saturday, Bro. Himes started for Uckfield, and Bro. Hutchinson arrived at Reading from Plymouth, bringing a good report from that place. On Lord's day, we were allowed to occupy the pulpit of "Hope Chapel, (Baptist,) in which we gave three discourses to small audiences, laboring under the disadvantages of preaching in a house not very centrally located nor, generally, much frequented. Still we have reason to believe good was done, for several expressed their approbation of what was preached, and affirmed that it was in accordance with the word of God. One of the deacons of the church, who had heard us at New Hall, was much interested, also Bro. John Albert Francois, a young preacher who is at present supplying the pulpit. We had the opportunity of several interviews with Bro. F., and found that he had for some time entertained views much like our own, though he had said but little upon them. He authorized us to announce his intention of preaching upon the same subjects on the next Lord's day evening.—We have since learned that he did preach according to appointment, and came out square on to the truth, and announced again for his theme on the following Lord's day—the promise made to Abraham. He is a brother of ardent feelings, and will be likely to do much good. So we hope a little light will shine in Reading, to guide the weary pilgrims to read and pray. We expounded the Scriptures under the hospitable roof of Bro. K. to a few friends, on two subsequent occasions. We expressed to the audience, on Lord's day, our willingness and desire to have an opportunity of going more thoroughly into the question of the "consummation," and that we were only waiting for a convenient place in which to gather an assembly, in order to lay before them much that would be sure to contribute to their edification; but if no place presented itself, we must consider our work done there for the present. And so we had to regard it.

A want of adequate means cripples us greatly in the efficient execution of our mission. It seems as though the kingdom might be shaken, if we could put our hands upon the money. The comparatively little with which we are provided, has to meet a great many and a great variety of demands. The people seem to feel as though they had done their part if they come out to hear, and we are thankful to see them even on these conditions. If you want a large audience on any moral or religious occasion, you must have it understood that the admission will be free "from collection." But for some professing the advent faith, and having the ability to give, to feel as though they had done their duty to this cause on dropping a sixpence into the contribution box, or spending half a sovereign in opening a hall for lectures, this is a shame on them and on their profession! It looks like throwing a half penny to the strolling hand-organist who occasionally stops under your window and grinds out his music. In our own land we have sometimes been pained to see, not the poor widow casting "all her living" into the Lord's treasury, but those "of their abundance" hardly exceeding the widow's mite in their contributions, after having heard a discourse not of dull music, in which they manifested an interest, but confessedly that which has instructed and blessed them. A cent! how could you offer it to a dog without blushing! How disheartening to the poor, anxious, laboring minister, to see such a miserable appreciation of his services! Let those of us who can reform, begin at once to amend in this respect. If we hold on to our earthly goods to the last moment of time, without repentance, will it not be easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for us to enter the kingdom of God?

Another barrier to the execution of our mission is, in some instances, the irrelevant, and in some others, the erroneous views that have been associated with the proclamation of the Advent doctrine; and we might add, the profound bigotry of some few, who, in their ignorance, suppose that all the truth is with themselves, so that they withhold their co-operation from the great work of arousing the church and the world to the grand truth which should swallow up every other, unless all their motives are endorsed and mingled with it. We shall devote a chapter, in a future communication, to this subject. By this means, the minds of many good Christians have been poisoned against the truth, who doubtless would have long since embraced it, had they heard it under favorable circumstances. In proof of this remark, we only introduce what is frequently heard from the lips of hearers after our own humble lectures—"Your preaching is different from that of ———." "Ah, this is another thing—it is the Bible with an easy and natural interpretation," &c. Still we operate under some advantages over those at home: the people here are not so ready to question the motives of a minister in preaching this or that: they feel themselves "bound to listen," as one aged brother said in self-defence, "to the expositions of the Scriptures by my brethren; so long as Bible is adhered to, so long I must hear." Then there are so many respectable ministers of different denominations, and "clergymen," as they of the Established Church are called, who are preaching, at least, portions of our faith, that we are often told in course of conversation with many who are ignorant of our views,—“Why that is the view of our minister,”—or, “That is the opinion of Rev. Mr. A., of B.” and so on.

Many appear as anxious to convince us that we err in not admitting the carnal Jews to the inheritance of the promises, as we do to convince them that a veil is over their eyes in this respect. In one instance we had but just got into ———, and sat down, weary and worn with the fatigues of our journey, when a stranger in the place, having had us pointed out to him on our way from the depot, came in and filled our ears with questions respecting "the Jews." Rev. Wm. W. Pym, well known to you as an able writer on the prophecies, recently wrote us a very respectful letter, thanking us for a copy of the "European Herald," and our joint communication, an extract of which we here insert; it is in reply to that part of ours respecting further light on the fulfilment of prophecy:—

"The latest occurrence with which I am acquainted which bears upon unfulfilled prophecy, is the permission, just now granted to 10,000 Jews to migrate from the Emperor of Russia's dominions, to Palestine. This seems to be such a clear preparation to that state of things in which Jerusalem and "the tents of Judah" will be found of our Lord when he shall appear, as foretold by Zech. 12: 7-14, that he who runs may read it.—My views upon this passage may be found in an Address which I made at Bath, April, 1844, to the clergy and friends of the Jews' Society, published by Nisbet and Son, London, which I should like you to see. I humbly hope that the Lord may bless your labors to arouse many to their true position, and to their nearness to the coming of the Lord."

Another letter, very gentlemanly and Christian in its tone, has been received from Rev. Mr. Brooks, regretting that the duties of his parish will not allow his controverting with us the point of the Jews' return, &c.

Bro. Hutchinson has prepared a long article on the "Kingdom of God," for the forthcoming number of the "European Herald," which covers the whole ground in dispute, and is designed to meet the wants of this case.

London, (Eng.), Aug. 1st., 1846.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

Evidences increase daily, of the fallen state of the nominal church, and the rapidity with which the great harvest is approaching: and very soon it will be said, "Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the time is come, and the harvest of the earth is ripe;"—Rev. 14: 15; when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ."—Rev. 11: 15. The curse being removed, (Rev. 22: 3) and earth restored (Acts 3: 21) to more than primeval innocence and beauty: the saints "shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever."—Psa. 37; 11, 29, 34;—Matt. 5: 5, and 25: 34. To those who are looking for and desiring the return of our Lord, permit me to say a few words. With you, I am looking for a better inheritance, when the "purchased possession" shall be redeemed (Eph. 1: 14) at the appearing of Jesus. We are scattered as in a dark day, and some of us like sheep without a shepherd, but soon the gathering time will come, "And there shall be one fold and one shepherd."—John 10: 16. Having heard the glad tidings, let us keep our eye of faith fixed on the coming glories, until with immortal eyes, we gaze in rapture on the glory-beaming countenance of the Savior. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," but if we abide in Christ, when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. We must strive, yea, agonize to enter in at the straight gate, if we would obtain that rest that remains for the faithful. Seek that communion with God, and rest of the soul in him, that outward circumstances shall not disturb the inward peace, that with humble confidence you may say, nothing shall separate us from the love of our coming Lord. Shun everything that tends to weaken and sever the ties of union with Christ our living Head. Be watchful, lest you partake of the spirit and maxims of this wicked world, that is doomed to swift destruction.

"In the way a thousand snare Lies to take us unawares."

And no marvel, if Satan, to accomplish his design, to draw away the soul from God, transform himself into an angel of light: but keep looking to Jesus, that by the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, you may be changed into the same image, and continue to reflect upon the surrounding darkness, the light you receive from the revealed word and indwelling spirit, until the trump of God proclaims eternal deliverance from the abominations of earth, and the parting clouds reveal our long expected Savior, to "reward his servants, the prophets, and them that fear his name, both small and great."

The trials consequent upon a state of probation, are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed. Think you that when we stand upon Mount Zion, with palms of victory, and crowned with eternal life, we shall regret any sacrifice for the spread of truth and holiness, or trial endured for the cross of the coming One? No! We cannot do too much for him who laid down his life for us. No sacrifice is too great that he calls for: it is no more than duty to lay all upon the altar, never to be recalled, and that in which the humble, faithful soul delights. Let us do with our might what our hands find to do, for the salvation of the perishing, in these last expiring moments. Not as an uninterested servant labors in view of a definite time, and if not discharged as soon as he anticipated, go about to undo the good he had done: but as "obedient children," delighting to do the will of our heavenly Father, and waiting in the exercise of living faith and hope, the appointed time of change.

Brother or sister, are you at your post at this time of danger? when "the second wo is passed, and behold, the third wo cometh quickly." Are you trimming your lamp by searching the Scriptures with increased diligence, maintaining that communion with God, through Jesus Christ, which assimilates to the divine likeness, and prepares for a participation with the shining host in the kingdom (represented on the mount of transfiguration, Luke 9: 28-31,) that is just at hand?

I am convinced that the next great event in this world's history, is the coming of Christ: when it will be said, "He that is holy, let him be holy still, and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still. Rev. 22: 11. These things may be looked for at any moment. Do these truths rest upon us with all their solemn weight? Do they produce the designed influence to detach our affections from earthly things? Do they produce constant prayer and watchfulness, and keep the mind in a frame of readiness, (not knowing what hour the Lord will come) to "escape the things which are coming to pass, and stand before the Son of man?" Remember the warning of our Savior in Matt. 24: 43;—"If the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and not suffered his house to be broken up."

Since writing the above, we have heard of the deep loss Sister Barry has sustained. Bro. Barry "rests from his labors, and his works follow him." Many prayers from sympathizing hearts ascend for her, that she may put her trust in God, looking beyond these changing scenes of mortality, that day of bright glory, when those "who sleep in Jesus, God will bring with him," and "they shall die no more, being equal unto angels and children of the resurrection."—Luke 20: 36.

O Jesus come, come quickly, come,
We long to see our heavenly home,
Of immortality.

Yours, hoping soon to be gathered with the faithful into the kingdom of God,

SARAH GRIGGS.

Avoca, Aug. 4th, 1846.

Nothing raises the price of a blessing like its removal; whereas, it was its continuance which should have taught us its value.

Malice drinks one half its own poison.

Submission.

"Submit yourselves therefore to God."—Jas. 4: 7.

How important, how full of meaning is this requisition. How much is implied in that one word, submission, when it has a relation to ourselves and God. It implies an unreserved surrender of our whole being to God, an entire resignation of our will to His will, choosing that will for the law of our life, our one rule of action. Our soul, body, and spirit, must be yielded a living sacrifice to God; our time, talents, influence, reputation, will, and affections, must be laid upon the altar of sacrifice, that we may become the Lord's property unreservedly. This is what God requires, and it is but our reasonable service.—When we first sought for pardon, before we could believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, we had to make the entire surrender of all to God, although we might not have particularized the different objects presented, yet all had to be yielded in order for us to receive the Lord Jesus: and it requires no less sacrifice for us to continue to walk in Christ as we received Him. Unless we are now a whole offering, an unbroken sacrifice to God, we cannot have appropriating faith—that faith which brings a present salvation. It is impossible to exercise this faith while withholding any part of that sacrifice, which, by right of purchase, belongs to God.

Many complain of unbelief. How often we hear it remarked, "O, it is hard for me to believe: it is more difficult for me to believe than others," &c. If such individuals would but search into the cause of this unbelief, I think they would find it almost invariably to proceed from an unsubmitive spirit. The Savior at one time, when addressing the unbelieving Jews, thus interrogated them: "How can ye believe which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" and may we not well ask the question, how can ye believe who refuse to do that which God requires?

When in a state of complete submission to God, it is perfectly easy to believe, yea, far easier than to doubt. Some may think this a strong assertion, but it is a true one. Try it, ye who have so long complained of your unbelief, and see if it be not indeed so. Submission is an infallible remedy for unbelief, and the only one that can effect a cure. Unless we are now in a state of perfect submission to the will of God, as far as we understand that will, all our efforts are useless, our profession is vain, our faith also vain. A name to live while dead, will do us no good; the form of godliness without the power, will be of no avail, when Jesus comes.

All our prayers are unavailing, for there is no access to God but in the way of entire consecration. The word is, "Submit yourselves to God;" then the promise is, "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." The word of God assures us, that "If any man turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer is an abomination." And David says, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."

But, says one, would you have me leave off praying? By no means. I would have you at once "submit yourself to God," then you will have confidence in him, and whatsoever you ask according to his will, you will receive, because you do those things that are pleasing in his sight." How is it with thee, kind reader? Is the communication between God and thy soul open? If it is not, search well thine heart, and see if there be not some secret reserve on thy part,—some one thing unsubmitted; perchance it may be a choosing of thy own will or way; it may be some idol of thine affections, something that prevents thee from loving God with that supreme love that he requireth. Whatever that barrier may be, at once submit it up to God, that thy soul may have free access to the Father, and thou enjoy sweet fellowship with the Son. Submission should ever be our motto, and constantly should it be practiced. Our thoughts should be submissive thoughts, our words should be submissive words, our actions, our will, always submissive.

Dost thou say, "this is too difficult a lesson for me to learn and practice?" I reply, thou canst do all things through Christ, whose grace is sufficient for thee, and it is freely promised to help in time of need. God will always give ability to perform whatever he requires of thee. In the exercise of entire consecration and simple faith, look to Him for strength, to enable thee to practice the great lesson of submission, so shalt thou be kept in perfect peace.

MARY D. WELLCOME.

Hallowell Me., July 14th, '46.

Letter from Sister Fassett.

Bro. Marsh:—If having faith in the speedy coming of our blessed Savior to establish his everlasting kingdom on the renovated earth, will afford sufficient ability for communications, I am no longer excusable for the non-performance of a work my soul has often longed to engage in. Since the month of January '43, I have never doubted the foundation on which this blessed and all-glorious truth is based. Although the heart has been made sick at times, by hope deferred, and I have at times felt like withdrawing from the scoffs, ridicule, and contempt of the world, yet, a few days study of the holy Word, and strong crying to Him who heareth prayer, has brought back a healthy state of the soul, and with renewed zeal, I have felt like girding on the "whole armor," and "earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints," until the great Captain of our salvation appear. The language of my heart has been, I will 'anow,' my 'journey pursue.'

"Roll round with the year."

He who "goeth about seeking whom he may devour," was never more hostile in his attacks upon the Christian's faith. Who among us have not felt his power? The zeal, energy, and glory we felt on first embracing these precious truths, animated our whole being, and gave us no room to anticipate the trials of our present position.—The very many exhortations to watchfulness, and the admonition given by our blessed Savior in Luke 21: 21-26, we have heretofore looked upon as almost unnecessary. The man clothed in linen, informed Daniel that "many should be purified, made white and tried." We were first purified by receiving the truth, the very nature of which, is to purify. "He that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure,"—[1 John, 3: 3.] "and made white." By the grace of God, we were enabled, through faith to bathe in that fountain which was opened for sin and uncleanness, and array ourselves in that purchased robe of spotless white, ready to enter in through the pearly gates, into the city of our God: but had we, as we fondly anticipated, been enabled at this time to have hailed our returning king, where would have been the trial of our faith? We were to be "made white, and tried." Many of us had to pass through severe trials when embracing the doctrines we now advocate. All must be left behind if we would follow Jesus, but the glory we realized in yielding up our all to Him who had a right to claim it at our hand, made it comparatively easy to lay all upon the altar.

For one, I can say, though in first embracing the advent, I had to part with all I held dear on earth, leaving a pleasant home, surrounded by a dear circle of affectionate friends, disowned by some of the members of my own family, and looked upon by a dear father, as willful, and devoid of all feeling for his declining age, yet, these trials were nothing in comparison to those experienced since the passing by of our definite points of time. And truly, the small number who remain steadfast, but too clearly shows that but few were prepared to endure what is termed by Peter, "fiery trials." The true import of those precious words uttered by our Savior, (to which I have before referred) we can now fully realize, and the necessity of daily watching unto prayer. O, my dear brethren and sisters, should we now give over, neglect our "closet," omit the assembling of ourselves together, and allow our conversation to partake more of earth than heaven? What must be our feeling when the last sign shall be given, "the sign of the Son of man?" Fear and trembling will seize our frame. Yonder comes "the Son of man" with a retinue of angels,—the righteous dead are raised,—the living changed; they rise, they wing their way to meet him in the air;—they stand upon the sea of glass—the number is complete, but too late to enter,—we find ourselves at the door, crying, "Lord, Lord, open unto us,"—but ah, the fearful sentence is, "depart!" The Word long ago warned us of our fate if we did not continue faithful unto the end. To doubt that the righteous will soon realize the promised glory, is impossible.—I can as soon doubt my own existence. Glory be to God, my faith is unshaken in the precious promises of the Bible, and by His assisting grace, I shall strive to continue faithful unto the end.

Your sister in the gospel,

L. E. FASSETT.

Portland Me., July 29, '46.

Letter from Bro. M. Chandler.

Bro. Marsh:—The little church in this place is still waiting for and expecting soon to see the king of kings, when God will fulfill the promise made to the fathers, and for this hope we are dispersed, not bound, but groaning within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body; but now we are saved by hope. I have visited other places since I last wrote, and found a few of the little flock who are scattered to the four winds, almost famishing for the word of life. I visited Rock Prairie a few days since, and found about one dozen of dear brethren who were rejoicing in the blessed hope. An advent brother from Vermont moved there, went to advocating the doctrine of the speedy coming of the Lord, and He blessed his efforts, (with the aid of one Voice of Truth weekly,) and poured out his Spirit, and a number were converted to God, so there is now a church of twelve or fourteen members who are united and happy, strong in the faith, giving glory to God. This was about three or four months ago. They never heard a lecture there till I visited them. We had a very good congregation. Some were much interested, and I think good can be done there. I left Bro. Daniels, from Concord N. H., there. He is a promising young man, who intends to devote his time in blowing the gospel trumpet. He has preached some before he came West.

Sister Parks is in this region. She spent one Lord's day with us, and then went to Dodge Co. She writes that there is a prospect of great good being done. The Lord bless her efforts.

One great disadvantage we labor under here is, there are but a few brethren, and they are very much scattered, and most of them poor, so it is difficult to travel, for the want of money to bear the expenses; but we shall do the best we can, and leave the consequences with God: and if God's cause suffers on account of unfaithful stewards, he will soon see to that.

Milwaukie W. T., July 27, 1846.

When men speak ill of thee, live so as nobody will believe them.

The Slave Mother's Lullaby.

Sleep, baby mine! what mean thy sad complaining?
Thou canst not know what makes thy mother weep;
Sleep, baby mine! the night is slowly waning,
And my sad thoughts a mournful vigil keep.

Sleep while thou mayest!—my heart is slowly breaking Beneath a deep and hopeless weight of wo;
And thou, from childhood's happy dream awaking,
Too soon thy sad inheritance wilt know.

Thou hadst a father once, my precious darling,—
They tore him weeping from my wild embrace
Far, far away beneath the lash he's toiling,
And we no more, on earth, may see his face.

And once thou hadst a young and gentle brother,
Whose love on my worn heart like sunshine fell.—
Wo, wo is me, that I should be the mother
Of children doomed to 'slavery's hateful hell!'

But now amid the rice-swamps damp and dreary,
He drags his chains beneath the sultry sky;
Or in his cheerless cabin, sad and weary,
He lays him down, and vainly prays to die.

Alas! alas! no father's arm is near him,
When he may shrink beneath the tyrant's rod;
No mother with her loving tones may cheer him,
When sinks his heart beneath its bitter load!

For thee, my gentle babe, my heart is weeping,
For thou, like him, this hopeless chain must wear,—
Oh! would thy mother in the grave were sleeping,
And thou wert resting on her bosom there!

Question.

Agreeably to the law, the Jewish months and feasts were regulated by the moon. Did they, in the days of the Savior, reckon by astronomical accuracy, or when the new moon became visible to the eye?
J. P., Jr.

We answer this question in the words of Calmet, as given in the Encyc. of Rel. Knowl., in the article headed "Month." He says:—

"The new moon was always the beginning of the month, and this day they called Neomenia, new-moon day, or new month. They did not begin it from that point of time when the moon was in conjunction with the sun, but from the time at which she first became visible, after that conjunction.—And to determine this, it is said, they had people posted on elevated places, to inform the sanhedrim as soon as possible. Proclamation was then made, "The feast of the new moon! The feast of the new moon!" and the beginning of the month was proclaimed by sound of trumpet. For fear of any failing in the observation of that command, which directed certain ceremonies at the beginning of each month, they continued the Neomenia two days; the first was called "the day of the moon's appearance," the other "of the moon's disappearance."—So say the rabbins: but there is great probability that if this was ever practised, it was only in provinces distant from Jerusalem. In the temple, and in the metropolis, there was always a fixed calendar, or at least a fixed decision for festival days, determined by the house of judgment."

AN EARTHQUAKE.—It is said that a smart shock of an earthquake was felt on Tuesday of last week, in Boston, Newburyport and Springfield, Mass. It is supposed that the shock was severe in South America.

The Christian's Triumph.

Dabblers in human doctrines say,
At death the soul takes wing,
And soars like bird uncaged away.
To the spirit land to sing.
Believe them not; the Bible says
Dust shall to dust return,
From whence they'll come the Lord to praise,
When dawns the judgment morn.

To fall asleep in Christ is gain,
In his safe keeping blest,
They fear no sickness, feel no pain,
And from their labors rest.
Hark, Hark! methinks I hear a voice
Ye righteous, in the Lord rejoice,
Your triumph-hour is nigh.

Take courage, pilgrim, why shouldst thou,
When tried, give way to sadness?
Receive the light that beamed now,
I'll fill thy soul with gladness.
When Christ appears in glory bright,
The righteous dead shall rise,
Then we who live, with sweet delight
Our hope will realize.

'Then happy 'neath the guardian care
Of our all-conquering King,
The saints high passed in middle air,
Will Victory shout and sing.

Brethren in Christ, gird up the loins,
And on your God rely;
We know by Scripture and by signs,
That now the day is nigh.
Soon with great power He'll come to claim
The kingdom as his own,
And bless the heirs with his 'new name,'
And the unfading crown.

A LITTLE ONE.

Have Faith in God.

To speak the truth in love, and to follow Christ, the way, the truth and the life, alike regardless of the frown or the favor of the ungodly, is the duty and the privilege of the devoted Christian. Abraham our father believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness, and he was called the friend of God. He staggered not at the promise through unbelief, but being strong in faith, he offered up his only son at God's command, and so made his faith evident by works. Now, if we hope to enjoy the favor of God in this present evil world, and share the immunities, honors, and blissful enjoyments of the righteous kingdom, and the eternal inheritance in the "world to come" we must of necessity, obey God as did Abraham, and offer ourselves, soul, body, and spirit, a willing sacrifice, which is our reasonable service.—The faith, if it deserves the name, which resides in the head, and vents itself in empty, vain speculation, or "this, that, and t'other doctrine" of human invention, is abominable in the sight of that Holy One, who will not give his glory to another. To such the blessed Lord applies the words of his inspired servant, "Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, this people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain, they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matt. 15: 6–9. Can aught be more easy of comprehension than this, and is it not equally plain, that the want of true and living faith doth not proceed from any deficiency in the word of God, but because men love darkness rather than light, and will not come to the light lest their deeds should be reproved.

Now a days, one may hear, or read strange, far-reaching, and over-reaching desertations, upon the "charity which thinketh no evil, covereth a multitude of sins," &c., but he who rightly appreciates the love of God, and forms just conceptions of the value of the soul, from the matchless price paid for its redemption, will not be easily tempted to handle the word of God deceitfully." "Brethren," says James, "If any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Certainly this text calls for no learned comment, in order to be understood. The apostle just means what he says, and one reason for this is, that the Scriptures are divinely fitted by their great Author, to make the believer wise unto salvation, through faith in Christ. "Wherefore lay apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves; for if any be a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whose looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1: 21–25; read Matt. 7: 12–29, for further instruction on this important point.

In view of the speedy appearing of Jesus, the appointed Judge of quick and dead, I must say, that when a professed servant of the meek and lowly One, forgets his calling so far as to talk complacently about his dexterity on controversial topics, his prudence, in taking a conservative position, deciding doubtful matters, and last though not least, his successful management with regard to questions of expediency, &c.; my heart's desire for such is, that he may learn not to think of himself more highly than he ought, for if a man think himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. Brethren, have faith in God, cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now, if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is," &c.—1 Cor. 3.

Would to God that every servant who professes to love and labor for Christ, would heed Paul's advice to Timothy. "In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works, in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you." O that like Paul, each one would fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on the hope of eternal life, and make full proof of his ministry. After speaking of the bonds and afflictions that awaited him, for fidelity to the blessed cause, he adds: "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men, for I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Mark this brethren, and be not faithless, but believing. It was not a part but the whole counsel of God that the apostle declared, he kept back nothing that was profitable, and the reason he assigns, is, that he might be pure from the blood of all men. Paul certainly knew his duty better than the greatest theologian at the present day, and to the church of Corinth he thus writes; "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." Again: Phil. 3: 17, 20, 21. "Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so, as ye have us for an example;—for our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change this vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things to himself." This glorious change, according to the sacred oracles, will be effected in a moment at the coming of Christ, for which we may now look every moment. Come Jesus, and come quickly, Amen.

If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men, most miserable.—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept; for since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead. "But every man in his own order:—Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." "Even so Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight." Brethren, let us have faith in God, and soon we shall realize the blessing, and sing, "worthy is the Lamb that was slain,"—"and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation: and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." Glory to God for such an exalted hope.

To conclude, let us who profess to believe as the ancient christians did, discard at once and forever, the doctrine of the "mother of harlots," that the vulgar or unlearned cannot understand the scriptures unless the schoolmen explain them. Jesus says, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Now, if by searching and diligently comparing scripture with scripture, one could not arrive at the truth, such a command would be absurd in the extreme. Brethren, have faith in God. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings he can perfect praise. Ye see your calling brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world, to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence."

Fishermen were the companions of Jesus during his personal ministry, and the subsequent witnesses of his resurrection. When it so pleases our Father, he can make out of a profane tinker, an able minister of the New Testament. Witness the case of the humble, devoted, truth-telling Buynan, or if you would like a case still more striking, look at Saul of Tarsus, who, from being a furious, bigotted, persecuting priest, became the great apostle of the Gentiles, an eminent preacher of the faith he once labored to destroy. "Yea, doubtless," says he, "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ,—If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead," or [margin] from among the dead.

Brethren, let us imitate Paul, and press forward for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

The Kingdom of Christ—The Christian's Hope.

BY ELDER HENRY GREW.

'Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior, Jesus Christ.' Titus, 2: 13. "Be sober and hope to the end, for the grace which is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 1: 13. "To wait for his Son from heaven." 1 Thess. 1: 10; 1 Cor. 1: 7. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure."—1 John 3: 2, 3.

This 'glorious appearing' of Zion's King, which is thus declared, by the Spirit of Truth, to be the great object of Christian hope, is inseparably connected with our Lord's kingdom or reign. See 2 Tim. 4: 1. "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and His kingdom."—He has gone 'to receive for himself a kingdom and to return,'—Luke 19: 12, to enjoy it with his saints. Thus has he gone to prepare a place for us. Men go to Washington to obtain offices to return and reap the benefit of them for themselves and families.

The promised inheritance is the object of our hope. What is that inheritance? "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom,' &c. Matt. 25: 34. 'Fear not little flock for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.' Luke 12: 32. 'I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me.' Luke 22: 29. That this kingdom is none other than the kingdom of Christ, we have ample proof. 'To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne,' Rev. 3: 21. 'If we suffer, we shall also reign with him.' 2 Tim. 2: 12.—They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Rev. 20: 4. 'Do you not know that the saints shall judge the world,'—1 Cor. 6: 3; i. e. with Jesus Christ?

But where is this glorious inheritance of the kingdom of God to be enjoyed? Is it, as is commonly supposed, in some far distant region of infinite space, denominated heaven? 'He that hath ears to hear let him hear' 'the word of the Lord,' 'We shall reign on the earth;' even in the 'new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness' and there be 'unto our God, kings and priests.' Rev. 5: 10, 2 Peter 3: 13. We shall reign 'with Christ.' Rev. 20: 4. With him the meek 'shall inherit the earth,' which they never have yet, and never will until the triumphant announcement shall give new music to all the harps of heaven, and fill the earth with glory; 'The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever.'—Rev. 11: 15. Then shall the prophetic word, Dan. 7: 14, be fulfilled. He shall have 'dominion and glory, and a kingdom that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him.' Then shall the Redeemer's prayer be answered, 'Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me.' John 17: 24. That this glory is the glory of his kingdom or reign on earth with all his saints, see Dan. 7: 14.

That this glorious reign on earth, of righteousness, love and peace, and awful justice also, is the scriptural object of Christian hope, is further proved by the revealed doctrine of 'the first resurrection.' Rev. 20: 5. It is true that 'the hour is coming in the which, all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth,' &c.—Our Lord does not say 'at the same hour,' nor do the words necessarily imply it, although such might be the proper construction, if there was no opposing testimony. There is, however, the plainest testimony of this character, which proves this view to be inadmissible. The Greek word ara, signifies time, season, as well as 'hour.' The hour, or period of time will come when all shall be raised from the dead, although the wicked shall not rise until a thousand years after the righteous. Rev. 20: 5, our Lord remarks, 'They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels: and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.' Luke 20: 35, 36.

Thus are we plainly taught that there is to be a resurrection which all men shall not be accounted worthy to obtain; a resurrection peculiar to 'the children of God.' What is it? Let the scriptures of divine truth answer. 'Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power.' Rev. 20: 6. John had a vision of these who 'lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.' 'But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished.' Rev. 20: 4, 5. This first resurrection is what Paul desired when he said, 'If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection from among (ektanastasin) the dead.—How manifest to the unprejudiced mind, is the truth, that the grand object of the first resurrection, is, that the blessed followers of the Lamb may realize their hope, and 'the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus,' by living and reigning with their dear Lord. 'Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.' 1 Thess. 4: 14. 'Every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming.' 1 Cor. 15: 23. The Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee.' Zech. 14: 5; Jude 14.

That an entrance 'into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,' 2 Peter 1: 11, (which he is coming to establish on the earth, Rev. 5: 10,) is the object of Christian hope, appears also from the revealed truth that then the 'crown of life' and 'rejoicing' is to be given us. 'When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.' 1 Pet. 5: 4. 'Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only but unto all them also that love his appearing.' 2 Tim. 4: 8. 'For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? 1 Thess. 2: 19.—'When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory.' Col. 3: 4. 'Be sober and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you (not at death, but) at the revelation of Jesus Christ.' 1 Pet. 1: 13.

The joys and glories of this kingdom are set before dying men, as the grand motive to repentance, and the object, above all others, worthy of their serious and intense regard. 'Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.' Matt. 3: 2. 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God,' &c. Matt. 6: 33. Such is the magnitude of this matter, our Lord has made it the subject of the very first petition in the prayer he has taught us to say to our Father in heaven. 'Thy kingdom come.'

Letter from Geo. C. Thompson to Henry C. Wright.
LONDON, May 7, 1846.

My Dear Henry:—Yours of Tuesday from Edinburgh, is before me—the pamphlet also.—The latter leaves the question where it finds it.—As far as it touches that, it is but a repetition of the stale libels cast upon our holy and blessed Christianity, by those who go to the Old and New Testaments for their warrant to invade sacrilegiously, God's family, and to run away with a part of his offspring. O, what a God must the God of those be, who represent him, virtually, as saying, 'you must not enslave my white children, for I have made them free and equal; but I have some poor, black, curly-headed ones, and as I don't care much about them, you may help yourselves, and do as you please with them.—True, I have embraced them in the covenant of my grace and mercy, and they shall be mine, if they believe the gospel, in the day when I make up my jewels. This is enough—eternity is theirs; they are yours till TIME shall be no longer.—My word, preached by prophets, apostles and patriarchs, is for you, the Chinese, the Hindoos, the Mussulman—for all the straight-haired races;—but as for these, having 'searched the scriptures for yourselves, you may deny to them the power of looking into the 'will' of their Heavenly Father, and tell them no more than suits your convenience. They may read it, WHEN THEY GET TO HEAVEN! You may point them to mansions on high—you may tell them that they shall walk with their Savior, 'in white,'—you may promise them a crown of life, and lift their hopes to a world of glory, where they shall be 'kings and priests,' and tread the city of the saved, in robes of light; but here you may make and keep them slaves. Their names are written in the Lamb's Book; but you need not strike them out of your ledger. Their bodies are 'the temples of the Holy Ghost;' but the 'temple,' if not the tenant, is yours, to do with as you please. 'I stand at the door and knock;' and if any one opens, I enter and dwell there; but never mind me—the house is yours; you have a life-lease, though the guest is the Son of God! Tell them they may lay up treasures in heaven, but all they have and are, are yours on earth. Tell them that Christ hath said, 'If any do the will of his Father in heaven, the same are his brethren and his sisters, and his mother;' but that Christ has no objections to his mother, his sister, or his brother, being a SLAVE. Tell them, that in their origin, their destiny, and their faculties, to be hereafter unfolded,—they are but little lower than the angels; but that, for the present, you may make them a little lower than the brutes. Tell them they were ransomed out of spiritual bondage by the precious blood of the Son of God; but you may sell them into temporal bondage, for such corruptible things as silver and gold.

But whither am I running? My paper rebukes my rhapsody. My thoughts were with the slave on earth, and Christ's freemen in heaven, running up and down Jacob's ladder, from the plantation on earth, to the New Jerusalem in glory; from the horrible bondage of the slave below, to the glorious liberty of the sons of God above!

Forgive me! I had anticipated the day—the day for which all others were made—when Christ shall honor his own—when the Shepherd shall claim his sheep; the day when that temple shall be built, the stones whereof have been fashioned by the Divine Architect on earth. In that fold, I see the negro—in that temple, I see the negro, a living stone. Outside of that fold, and excluded from the materials of that temple, methinks I see those who claimed the child of God as theirs. What would they now give to recognize him—to be recognized by him? Methinks I hear them say, 'Have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works?'—and the answer is, 'I never knew you.' I was on earth, but ye bought and sold me—ye manacled and scourged me—ye outlawed and enslaved me—ye despised and insulted me. I came to you in the form of a black man!—I hungered, thirsted, faint, wept as a black man. I was poor, ignorant, friendless, powerless, as a black man;—and while ye professed to worship me, seated at the right hand of my Father, in majesty and glory, ye spurned me from the door, ye drove me to the fields, and hunted me with dogs! I came to you as a little child, and in the helplessness of infancy, asked you to succour me, and train me for heaven. You ranked me with the calves of your stall, fed me only for the flesh market, and sold me in the shambles.

No more. The ground is holy—the thought is overpowering. I have done. The more I think on the subject, the more I find the incompetency of words to express my thoughts. O God! forgive my sins, and save me from this, the most terrible of all, that of persecuting thy children! For better, for worse, I link myself with thy suffering poor, and glory in the name of 'infidel,' if thy vicegerent in my heart tells me, that I BELIEVE IN THEE, when I believe that it is not thy will that one of these little ones should perish. Appear for their deliverance! Make those strong, who favor their cause. Be with thy servants when they go unto Pharaoh, and cry,—'Let thy people go!' May they be confounded in the presence of the great congregation, who pervert thy law, and make void thy statutes; and may they pray to be delivered out of the hands of the spoiler!

I scribble this in the Club Room, and send it to assure you that my heart is with you. Be no longer from Edinburgh than you can help. All arrangements for the Assembly week should be soon made, and well made.

Yours and the slave's,
GEORGE THOMPSON.

Henry C. Wright.

Therefore be Ready Also.

He, whom God hath appointed heir of all things, and by whom he will judge the world in righteousness, must, according to all the evidences drawn from the fulfilment of physical and moral signs, historical and chronological prophecy, in a few short months, come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. But O, how few believe this sublime and glorious truth!—How few are prepared for that event, which will fix the eternal doom of all the inhabitants of earth! How few love his appearing. And, I fear that some of us who say we have faith, will not be able to stand in that great day of God's wrath.—Let us not deceive ourselves nor be deceived, my brethren, in relation to a preparation for that event, but let us make our calling and election sure. Let us beware, lest we be found when he appeareth, having what James calls "dead faith." Let us hear, and ponder well his words.

man say he hath faith, and have not works?—Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto him, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give him not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Be not deceived, my brethren! if you are hearers only of the word, you need not expect to be found amongst the "blessed of God," when the Son of man comes in his glory, and sits upon the throne of his glory, &c. Every man will then "be rewarded according to his works." "And behold," says the blessed Saviour, "I come quickly: and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be." And again, "Blessed are they that do his commandments," &c.

One command of the Saviour is to "give alms;" and as there are those amongst us who are rich in this world, I hope the "good servants" whose duty it is to "preach the word, will not neglect to charge such that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate," &c. I hope such will remember the fatherless and widow, which are amongst us in their afflictions. And I hope also, that they will keep in mind, that they which preach the gospel ought to live of the gospel. I hope too, that the "Voice of Truth," and "Herald," will not be forgotten in their struggles for life, (though I believe they will live,) by those who have the Lord's money. Let me affectionately exhort and admonish such, to beware how they withhold from God's poor, that, over which he has made them stewards, lest they shall hear from the Son of God, when he shall sit upon the throne of his glory, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, for I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick and in prison, and ye visited me not!" O, beware! beware! my brethren, lest through the "love of money," you share the fate of "wicked rich men" in the day of God!!!

A Suggestion to Parents.

The habitual temper of the parent—the tones of his voice—even his looks and gestures—all have an important bearing upon the character of the child. It is scarcely possible to conceive of a sweet-tempered child, brought up under the influences of fretful, scolding, and ill-tempered parents. A little acid introduced into a vessel of sweet liquor, will soon turn the whole into vinegar; and a sour temper in a parent can scarcely fail of a similar effect upon the whole domestic circle. Even an habitual cast of the parent's countenance may have an important and lasting influence upon the child. Nor is the influence upon the children of a family upon one another by any means to be overlooked. The impressions made in the family circle, are permanent and lasting.

If the children are permitted to tease one another, they may be expected to be ill-tempered.—If one is permitted to tyrannize over the rest, that one will grow with a haughty, tyrannical spirit. The passions and emotions, both good and bad, are strengthened by exercise or indulgence.—Mother's Magazine.

Bro. N. W. Spencer, German N. Y., July 10, writes:—Bless God that he has given you moral courage to cry against the sins of the age, and especially those of the nominal church. O, the deadly influence of the false teachers of these last days! My Brother, had I not seen the pernicious influence of these teachers, I would not speak thus plainly. I have seen many a your convert who once loved to talk about the coming of Jesus, by uniting with these sectarian bodies and having their minds poisoned against the true give up the blessed hope, and say they knew nothing about it! that it is all a delusion! They now manifest a hatred towards the doctrine of Christ's soon coming, and those who hold to it.

If the church in her organizations and creeds her popularity, worldly-mindedness, pride, hatred and opposition to the Lord's coming, constitute Mystery Babylon, or any part of it, two years ago, she is the same now. Her identity with the body is being more and more manifested. It is heart sickening to see and hear how her teachers pervert the word of God! A Baptist Minister not far from this place, a few days ago, took for his text the 24th chapter of Matt. and the 6th of Rev. He told his people that these two chapters were all fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem "When they shall say peace and safety, sudden destruction cometh." Another preacher, to whose church some of our brethren belonged, and from whom they were thrust out in '44, in preaching the funeral sermon of a little boy who was killed not long since, by partaking of the contents of a whiskey jug, took for his text Matt. 24, 44.—"Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." In the course of his sermon, he remarked that he supposed that this had direct allusion to the destruction of Jerusalem, but it would do to apply it to the child. He told the mother, that if she had known the Son of Man would have come for her child, she would have kept him at home, (as he was from home when he took the fatal draught Oh horrible! if the Son of Man comes in a whiskey jug, I shall not be ready for him, for I am not looking for such a manifestation. If this is the way he comes, he manifests himself often to many, very many of the professed Israel in this region.

There are some twenty brethren and sisters scattered over two or three different towns in this region, who are looking, and trying to wait and be ready for the coming of the Son of Man not in a whiskey jug, but "in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." We have many trials, but hope to be enabled to endure unto the end. We meet together every Lord's day "to exhort and comfort one another with these words." We have no preaching except occasionally a good brother comes along and breathes to us the bread of life. We are also poor in the world's goods, but mean to do what we can for the support of the truth. We earnestly request any of our brethren who may pass this way, call and preach to us, for we are very needy.

Sister M. Ongley's letter, through mistake was deferred: it should have appeared sooner.—

She writes:—Syracuse, Aug. 19.—We have been laboring in Cicero, Liverpool, Van Buren, Manlius Square and Centre, and Eagle village ever since our return from Rochester last April and we hope some good has been done in name of the Lord, and to the glory of God the Father. There is a band of about 15 brethren and sisters, that have taken a stand for God, Manlius Square, who intend keeping up the meetings every Sabbath, until the Lord come and we think that will be soon. They are a blessed company of believers, praise the Lord. There are a few precious souls in all the above places who have been raised up within a few months some from the church and some from the world who will be to the praise and glory of God the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. Glory to the door is not shut yet.

The music of war is the shriek of the wounded and the moan of the dying.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, SEPTEMBER 9, 1846.

Bible Examiner.

Bro. Storrs has favored us with another number of the 'Bible Examiner.' He thinks 'there is an appearance of evil' in the following expression of ours, published in the Voice of Truth for Aug. 12.— "We are glad to see our brethren in many places waking up on the time of the second advent of Christ. It is a fundamental doctrine in the inspired articles of our faith. It will not do to strike that article from our infallible creed, nor become unbelieving in its immutable truths." The Examiner sees so much of 'the appearance of evil' in this declaration, that it is led to speak in the following confident terms.

"I do not believe the Bible teaches any such doctrine: but that it teaches just the opposite, viz:— that the time is not revealed, and cannot be known by any prophetic numbers; and that our Lord has taught us that it should not be thus known.— To me, then, with my present light, it would be sin to advocate the same theory that the Voice says is a 'fundamental doctrine.'"

It is time, not definite time, that we called a fundamental doctrine of the Bible. Did Bro. Storrs observe this? If he did, then we are at a loss to reconcile his words already quoted with the following admission found in another article in his paper. He says:—

"I am now satisfied that the 2300 years do not bring us to the definite time of the advent; but they mark a period so closely connected with events to transpire about the time of the advent that no honest enquirer after truth need be left in doubt but that the advent is 'nigh, even at the door.'"

We are unable to see why nearly if not the same complaint, that it has 'the appearance of evil,' may not be made against this expression as well as against the one to which the Examiner objects.— Though it does not say definite time, or the time, it does say 'about the time of the advent;' and seems very certain that the Bible, especially the prophetic numbers, so clearly reveals 'about the time, that no honest enquirer need be left in doubt but that the advent is nigh, even at the door.'

We think there is not even the appearance of evil in either of these expressions, and are inclined to the opinion that the Examiner, on looking at the matter again, will view it in the same light. But whether there is the appearance of evil or not in one or both of these expressions, there is nothing more clear than that the time of the advent, in some sense, is a fundamental doctrine of the Bible. Strike the time out of the question, and not a small portion of the prophecies are rendered unmeaning, superfluous, and calculated to perplex rather than to enlighten the Bible student.

In Dan. 2d, the time when the God of heaven will set up his kingdom is a prominent subject of revelation. If not, why is the vision of the image given, symbolizing four universal kingdoms, which were to exist before the setting up of the kingdom of God? This is all superfluous, if the time is not to be taken into the account. It would have been all sufficient and more in keeping with the wisdom of God, to have simply revealed the truth that earthly kingdoms would exist, (without describing their order of succession and character,) until the coming of the Son of man to destroy them, when the kingdom of God shall fill the whole earth.

That time is a fundamental doctrine of this prophecy, is evident from nearly the first words which Daniel uttered to the king when he came before him to tell and interpret his dream. Daniel says,—

'There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the last days. But as for me, this secret is not revealed to me for any wisdom that I have more than any living, but for their sakes that shall make known the interpretation to the king, and that thou mightest know the thoughts of thy heart.'— vrs. 28, 30.

Here we see that an important and prominent object of this was, to 'make known what shall be in the latter days,' not for the exclusive benefit of the king, but for 'their sakes.' Whose sakes? Peter tells:— 'Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what or what manner of time the spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.' 1 Pet. 1: 10-12.

If, as we are here taught, the prophets revealed the time of the 'glory that should follow,' how, it may be asked, is such a revelation made in Dan. 2d? We answer, by a minute detail of national events, which we are taught must occur before the time shall come for the setting up of the kingdom of God.— The last events are so minutely described, that their real character cannot be mistaken. It is said, 'The kingdom shall be divided,'—shall be 'partly strong and partly broken.'—But these divided kingdoms 'shall not cleave one to another.' 'And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever.'—Why say, 'in the days of these kings,' if the time was not a fundamental doctrine in the prophecy? No reasonable answer can be given.

We know, (if the fulfilment of any prophecy can be known, after it is fulfilled,) that we are not only living in the 'days of these kings,' or kingdoms, but all that is said of them, with the exception of their being broken by the stone, has most strictly been fulfilled. Some of the ten kingdoms into which Rome was divided have retained their native iron strength, while others, like the clay, have been broken and moulded into different forms; but still, though the most determined efforts have been made, (by Buonaparte especially,) to unite them again into one empire, all has been in vain: the word of the Highest had gone forth, 'They shall not cleave one to another.' And the power of earthly monarchs has not been able to frustrate in the least this decree of the Almighty.

What more, we ask, is there to be looked for in this prophecy but the final and glorious fulfilment of its very last prediction? Nothing. And we also most solemnly ask, does not the prophecy clearly and emphatically point to this very time for that fulfilment? We not only say it does, but our opponents say so, and immutable facts fully justify this conclusion. It will not do, then, to strike the time of the advent from our infallible creed, the Bible: for it is a fundamental doctrine of that perfect Book.

Again, Strike the time of the advent from the Bible, and the 'time, times, and dividing of time,' of papal oppression, which reaches near the time of the saints possessing the kingdom, is unmeaning, and calculated to perplex rather than enlighten the honest seeker after truth. The text in which it is contained might have read thus, 'And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hands.' But ultimately 'the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.' This is the way Dan. 7: 25-27 might read if the time of the second advent is not a fundamental doctrine of the Bible.

Once more, If the time of the advent is not a fundamental doctrine of the Bible, then we can see no utility in the question and answer in Dan. 8: 13, 14, on the time when the sanctuary shall be cleansed. It would have been sufficient (leaving the time out of the question,) for Daniel simply to have been told, that the sanctuary would be trodden down, (an indefinite period,) but ultimately it would be cleansed. This is the way the word of inspiration might be corrected, if the time of the advent is not a fundamental doctrine of the Bible.

On the principle that the time of the advent is not a fundamental doctrine of the Bible, nearly all of the 12th chap. of Daniel might be expunged from that book. But admitting that it is a fundamental doctrine, then we see the propriety of the 'man clothed in linen,' under the most solemn oath, declaring that it 'shall be for a time, times, and a half, and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished.' There is also beauty and an important meaning in the twelve hundred and ninety days, and especially the thirteen hundred and thirty five days, or years, at the end of which Daniel is assured that he shall stand in his lot.

These remarks might be extended to a much greater length, showing from other portions of the Old Testament, and also from the New, that the time of the advent is a fundamental doctrine of the Bible.

When we say, the time of the advent, we wish it distinctly remembered, that we mean Bible time, or the time as it is revealed in that book. The Examiner objects to definite time. So do we, in its unqualified sense. It is not a Bible phrase, and most generally human names, in theology, represent erroneous doctrines and practices. Still we do not seriously object to definite time, provided we define in what sense we use the phrase. If it is used in the positive sense, then we object; for we do not know positively any definite period when the advent will take place. If it is used in a probable or presumptive sense, we do not object, provided it is not made a test of any one's faith; for true faith does not rest on probabilities, but immutabilities. If it is used as definite as the day and hour, either positively or probably, we object; because the plain word of the Lord forbids this definition. If it is used as definite as the year, we admit that the prophetic numbers make this use probably, not positively, correct: not sufficiently probable, however, to make our belief in a specific year a matter of faith, but of opinion; for, as before said, true faith rests not on probabilities. Is it used as definite as 'nigh, at the door,' now, this period in which we live, the next event in the fulfilment of prophecy, quickly, and other like expressions, which warrant us in looking for our Lord every moment, to this use, we say amen.

This is the time, the definite time, of the Bible, to which we most heartily subscribe. Can any one give us infallible evidence that we are justified in being more definite we will most gladly receive the testimony. We are confident that this understanding of definite time is justified by the word of the Lord. If so, then a sure foundation is laid for our faith in the time of the advent. We are enabled to say with confidence, with positive assurance, we know the coming of the Lord will soon be witnessed.

Instead of this view of the time of the advent 'unsettling the faith of many,' as some seem to fear, we think it will serve to settle it down upon the rock of truth. The true cause of unsettling the faith, we think, is found in the doctrine of precise definite time, or, in no time relative to the advent. Teach the wavering that the truth lies between these extremes and they will become settled in the truth. But, judging from the past, and from the truth on this subject as it is clearly presented in the Word, if our brethren are urged to take either of these extremes, the sad effect will be on many to cause them wholly to abandon this precious faith. Our only safety is, to 'abide in the truth.'—There let us patiently and joyfully stand until our faith shall be lost in sight. The trial of our faith is more precious than gold that perisheth. Let us cheerfully and manfully endure the trial a few days more, feeling the fullest assurance that our light afflictions will work for us an exceeding weight of glory, at the appearing of Christ.

Little Horn of Dan. viii.

Bro. Storrs, in his recent 'Bible Examiner,' labors to prove that the little horn of Dan. 8th chap. symbolizes the Mohammedan power. We can notice only one of his evidences now. In v. 24th it is said of this little horn, that it 'shall destroy the mighty and holy people.' Now, Bro. S. knew, we presume, that this is not true of the Mohammedans, if the 'mighty and holy people' were the true children of God: for that power, instead of destroying the saints, was commanded not to hurt them. 'And it was commanded that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads.' Rev. 9: 4. The history of the Mohammedans proves that this command was strictly fulfilled by them: they did not destroy the children of God. To harmonize this text (Dan. 9: 24) with his theory, Bro. Storrs gives the following exposition:

"He 'shall destroy the mighty and the holy people,' or, as the margin reads, 'the people of the holy ones': not the holy people, but the descendants, or successors of the holy people. In other words, a people who had not the faith and holiness of their fathers. This was eminently true of Mohammedanism, whether we apply the prophecy to the Jews or apostate Christians. The Jews were scattered in numerous bodies through Arabia. Mohammed used every possible means to induce them to embrace his religion, but degraded as they were they were immovable on this point, and preferred death to a compliance. Hence Mohammed heaped upon them the greatest cruelties; and a part of his last prayer was, —God curse the Jews."

Now, if Bro. Storrs is correct in his principles of interpretation, then the 'descendants, or successors' of the saints, and not 'the saints of the Most High,' will have the 'everlasting kingdom' given to them: for it is said, in Dan. 7: 27, that 'the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people OF the saints of the Most High.' The 'people of the saints' and 'people of the holy ones,' or, as the text reads, 'holy people,' mean the same: and that the saints are meant, nothing is more evident. And as the Mohammedan power did not destroy the saints, it is certain that it is not the power symbolized by the little horn in Dan. 8. But as the Roman power did destroy the saints, the evidence is good that it is that power which is symbolized by the little horn under consideration.

The European Advent Herald from the commencement, is wanted by Bro. Wm. Brown of this city, Will Bro. Bliss see that it is sent regularly.

Our meetings in this city have been increasingly interesting. Bro. Pearson is still with us.

The Lord's Supper.

"I think the observance of the Lord's supper is greatly neglected by many of our congregations.— Paul told his Corinthian brethren that many of them eat the Lord's supper unworthily, not discerning the Lord's body. 'For this cause,' he says, 'many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.'— Now would not the right observance of the ordinance produce the opposite effect—which is so much needed? And is it not almost as dangerous to neglect it as it is to eat unworthily?"

If we rightly attend to it, shall we not be strong, healthy and wakeful? and will not our deliverance be as sure and more glorious than that of ancient Israel from Egypt?

I throw out the idea: please consider it and let us know the result. Does not the supper take the place of the passover?"

Our brother, doubtless, is correct in supposing that the supper is greatly neglected among us: in some places, however, its non-observance is not so much from neglect as want of a proper administrator. Where circumstances will admit, it should not be neglected. 'Blessed are they that do [not only this but all] his commandments.' Such only have promise of a right to the tree of life.

It is very clear that the covenant, or law of types and ceremonies was taken away to give place to the new covenant, or gospel dispensation: for 'he taketh away the first that he may establish the second.' Heb. 10: 9. But we know of no evidence that the supper was instituted to take 'the place of the passover.'

Mr. Dowling's Position.

In a communication from Bro. J. Battersby, published in a recent number of the Advent Herald, we find the following account of Mr. Dowling's present position. Such expositions of prophecy from such men as Mr. Dowling, and our strong opponents too, serve greatly to strengthen us in the conviction that we are right in the main, in the views we as a people entertain on the prophecies relating to the advent of Christ. Speaking of a discourse which the writer recently heard Mr. D. preach, he says:

"The subject of the evening's discourse was the 2d of Daniel, the fore part of which calls forth our highest praise and admiration; the masterly and interesting manner in which he spoke of the 'four monarchies designated by the image: his notices of their rise, zenith, and fall, coupled, as he glided along in the prophecy, with eloquent and pithy remarks on the changeable character of all earthly things, showed him to be not only a man well acquainted with history, and possessing a strong retentive memory; but also a man whose evident design was to produce a practical influence upon his hearers. Thus far we feel constrained to say in his favor.

After expatiating on the four kingdoms, and ascribing to each that universal power and dominion, which the concurrent testimony of scripture and history justified him in doing, he then made the following (to me) startling remarks on the divided condition of the fourth kingdom, as represented by the feet and toes, or iron and clay portion of the image. Said he, 'The ten kingdoms shadowed forth by the toes of this great image are now in existence, and since the breaking up of the Roman or iron kingdom, by the 'Goths and Vandals,' they have undergone many changes, and assumed various aspects and names; yet' continued he, emphatically, 'these ten kingdoms do now at this moment exist, and it is during the reign of these kings or kingdoms that the God of Heaven sets up his everlasting Kingdom, which constitutes the 5th kingdom in our text.'"

From this admission, one would suppose that Mr. Dowling is a full believer in the doctrine of the immediate coming of Christ; but such is not the fact: he is looking for the soon commencement of the fabled spiritual or temporal millennium. The smiting of the image, with him, is the conversion of the world, and the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom is the universal triumph of the gospel.— But here the plain word of the Lord is against him; it says the nations are to be 'broken,' 'dashed in pieces,' or 'destroyed,' instead of being converted, before the kingdom of God will be set up and fill the whole earth.

The second chapter of Daniel is so plain and clear in its application, that our strongest opponents seem compelled to agree with us in its exposition. They admit that we are living in the 'days of those kings,' symbolized by the toes of the image, and agree with us that the prophecy warrants the expectation of an important change in the condition of the world to take place soon. We only disagree on the nature of that change, and the manner in which it will be effected. They think it will be the conversion of the world, effected by the power of a preached gospel: but we believe it will be the resurrection of the just, the changing to immortality of the living saints, the destruction of the ungodly, and the renovation of the earth, effected by the Lord himself at his second coming. We feel very confident that we have much plain Bible testimony to justify our position, while that of our opponents rests upon the incorrect opinions, and unqualified assertions of uninspired men. Our position, then, is the safe one; let us not abandon it. We confidently believe that the day is very near when it will be proved that our hopes, in this respect have been based upon the true foundation.

Letter from Bro. Wm. Miller.

Dear Bro. Bliss:—For the information of my friends who have been kindly and benevolently solicitous in inquiring about my health, and especially for those who have taken unwearied pains to procure a physician for my disease, supposed to be a cancer, I wish you would publish this letter, or so much of it as you may think proper.

About a year ago, I found on my left shoulder between the collar bone and shoulder blade, a hard tumor in the flesh, about as big as a hazelnut, which I, in my own mind, pronounced to be a common fatty tumor, and thought but little more of it; only at times, I observed it increased in size until it was as big, in circumference, as a dollar, and much raised on the top. Still, as there was no pain, nor inconvenience about it, I had no alarm. The last of June, I was lecturing in Mayfield, Fulton county, N. Y., and this tumor, as I called it, began to itch and twinge at times, so that I felt a little inconvenience. A doctor being present, examined it, and was of the opinion that it was a cancer. I returned home, a few days after, when a doctor of my acquaintance, who claimed to have great skill in curing or extracting cancers, also called it one, and agreed to come in a few weeks, not being then prepared, and take it out in his way, by plasters. Our family physician called it a fatty tumor. In the mean time, Bro. Litch, of Philadelphia, had sent me one of J. & C. W. Neff's Magnetic machines, to help steady my nerves, which, you will see by my writing, has performed the cure: my hand is now steady as it was in the prime of life. While my cancer doctor was absent, I thought it could be no harm to try the Magnetic machine.— I placed the positive button on my neck, and the negative on the tumor, or cancer, about three times in three days. At the end of which I found the tumor more soft, and not so large. I continued my practice ten or twelve times, in ten or twelve days. So that when my cancer doctor came, he said it was cured, and requested me to write to Philadelphia for a machine for him. I would remark, that, for some time after using the machine, there would issue from the pores of the skin, on and around the tumor, a sweat, like melted lard, so that I insisted to my wife that it had broke, and matter was running out. Yet they would say there was no breach in the skin.

I am thankful to many of the dear friends for their kindness and friendly pains and advice which they have taken and given to effect a cure of what we supposed was a cancer. May God bless them all, and may we all soon obtain that Divine power which flows from Jesus Christ our Savior, and will change these vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his glorious body. I still look for him, and although I have been disappointed in not seeing him as he is, before this time, yet I had rather be disappointed again and again, than be in the seat of those who scoff at my hope, and ridicule my expectation, who will be more disappointed when he comes in his glory, because to them it will be a fatal, a final, and an eternal disappointment. While I, if I am disappointed to-day, can look to-morrow, and have an increasing interest in every look until he comes, knowing that every disappointment is one less, and every day is one nearer: for he will come and will not tarry.

"Thy kingdom come! thus, day by day,
We lift our hearts to God and pray."

Yes, my brethren, I know there is more real joy, with you, in one day, while thus looking, expecting, and praying, than all the scoffers in Christendom will ever enjoy, in time or in eternity. I know it, because I feel, and see your grateful hearts are poured out in prayer and works for a poor, feeble instrument, who was the means of bringing your minds to this blessed hope, and upon you this cutting disappointment. You love me still. Give me such prayers, and I am safe in sickness or death, tribulation or persecution, disappointment or disgrace. Your prayers are better for me, than the hurrahs of the millions for an Alexander, a Caesar, or a Bonaparte. I love you still. Farewell.

WILLIAM MILLER.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

Before leaving Reading, we received the following interesting letter from Bro. Himes at Uckfield:—

"I met with the brethren in this place on the 19th instant, to assist in the opening of their new chapel. They have put up a fine chapel, which will accommodate between 400 and 500. On the day it was opened, I gave three lectures to audiences which crowded both the chapel and chapel-yard: about 1200 people were present during each part of the day. This is a new field of labor. Bro. Winter, in company with Bro. Tanner, came to this place about six months since, and commenced lecturing in the assembly rooms, and afterwards in the neighboring villages in public rooms, barns, and open fields. The novelty of the subject, the simplicity and zeal of the speaker, attracted crowds to hear the word.—A deep impression was made upon the whole community, but more particularly upon the infidel and irreligious classes. These have been disgusted with the common forms of religion, regard it as priestcraft, &c.; but when they heard the glad tidings of the kingdom of God at hand, they were deeply impressed with the truth of Christianity, and were not only led to search the Scriptures, but to yield obedience to their requirements. Within the last six months, 207 have been immersed: in some cases whole households. Among these were Sabbath-breakers, swearers, and drunkards. A necromancer was so affected, that he burnt his curious books. A very great moral work has been wrought by Advent faith in Uckfield. While some families have a sufficiency of this world's goods, the most of the congregation are poor. Their chapel is located in an eligible place, in the centre of four parishes: it is well filled—the seats are all let. Their prospects are flattering. This is the county where the celebrated Mr. Huntington, who wrote the book entitled the 'Book of Faith,' devoted much of his labors. His sentiments of high Calvinism, or as it may more properly be called, Antinomianism, prevails to a great extent. These sentiments have been met, and a clearer view of gospel truth has been received.

We see in this instance, what may be done in every county in England, by a faithful presentation of truth in connection with judicious management. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

We have also just received a note from Bro. Burgess of Exeter, stating that he baptised nine individuals in that place on last Lord's day, and that the house was filled with hearers. He has commenced labor for two days in each week at Tiverton, preaching in the open air, and producing quite a sensation.

As Bro. Himes has not completed his arrangements at London necessary to our departure for that city, we visited several places not very far from Reading. At Wallingford, there is a brother or two in the faith: we called on Rev. Mr. Tyso, a venerable and able Baptist preacher, who treated us in a kind and fatherly manner.—Samuel Walker, Esq., of Roxbury, is a relative of his: he has written, you may recollect, several good sized tracts, and quite a book on the prophecies, with which he kindly supplied us.—One of those fell into the hands of some of the ministers of your city and neighborhood, two or three years ago, and had the effect to shake, if not to undermine, some of their long standing views on the Protestant principles of interpretation. Some of whom we might mention, drew their weapons from his armory, in their efforts to put down Millerism: should this sentence come under their eye, they will understand it. Bro. Hutchinson gives us for insertion here, a minute of his interview with Mr. T.

"Called upon Rev. J. Tyso, a Baptist minister. He is a pre-millennial believer, but an ultra literalist; he maintains that the days in Daniel are literal and future, not excepting the "seventy weeks:" he holds the restoration of the natural seed, and that Anti-christ is yet to appear.—However, I found him less dogmatical than I expected; he seems to be open to the reception of new light; he confines the reign of Christ on David's throne, to the millennium: he presented as proof, 1 Cor. 15: 24—"Then cometh the end," &c. I maintained the eternity of Christ's reign on the throne of David, and took the ground that Paul does not teach that Christ will deliver up a kingdom in which he himself has been previously reigning, but in which the usurping power has been reigning. Mr. T. said this interpretation was new to him—that it looked consistent, and he would examine it. I formerly supplied Mr. T. with the 'Voice of Elijah,' in return for which he sent me his works." Bro. Hutchinson preached on the next Lord's day in Wallingford Market-place, to a good audience, most of whom listened with marked attention to "the True Inheritance of the Saints, the Evidences of its Nearness, and Qualifications for it.

In the meantime we went to Oxford, where our first matter of inquiry respected "Dr. Pusey," the leader of the party called Puseyites, author of the "Defection in the Established Church, and Guide to Papacy." His standing and reputation among the citizens of Oxford are not great, he is little known there. More is thought of him abroad than at home. He received many testimonies to this effect. So it is sometimes true of a teacher of error as well as of truth, that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country," &c. His first discourse after the expiration of his term of suspension attracted crowds: his text was, "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted." He showed himself to be Dr. Pusey still—retracted nothing, of course. As a Professor (of Hebrew) in the University, he is more thought of than among the citizens: though it is thought by some, that among the latter, he has more sympathizers than are willing to make it manifest: thirteen out of the sixteen parish churches in the city, were said to be under the influence of views like his own. He certainly has no reputation from any quarter as a pulpit orator; we were told that he enjoyed the benefit of a dozen "livings:" in the church, he can employ a "curate" for £100 per annum, and in the University a "Fellow" to attend to his duties there at a corresponding rate. His annual income from these two sources, is supposed to be great.

Bro. H. had conversations with several here to whom he used to send his paper. Among others, Rev. T. Dobney, (Baptist,) who treated him with great courtesy. He holds the personal reign of Christ,—regards the "little horn" of Daniel 7th, as meaning Papacy, and holds the generally received views of the "seventy weeks." He has a son, a Baptist minister, who has written a large and critical work, advocating the annihilation of the wicked.

Bro. H. has also written notes to various individuals to whom he formerly sent the 'Voice of Elijah;' among these are several clergymen.

Letter from Bro. D. B. Wyatt.

Bro. Marsh:—Our camp-meeting at Bangor, June last, was attended with the signal blessing of God. The scattered and despised believers in the immediate coming of Jesus, were on the ground to impart and receive meat in due season. Though the invitation was so general and cordial to all sects and parties, but two christian ministers, and one of the Wesleyan Methodist denomination were present. Brn. Adrian, Dudley, Baldwin, Southerland and Roney were present, looking for and proclaiming speedy redemption. At the commencement, we had some severe inward conflicts, and sore combats with the subtle enemy of God and man. He seemed resolved to take the ground, but in the name of Him who "led captivity captive," we girt on the whole armor of righteousness—a deep searching of heart took place, and almost every brother and sister came up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. The conflict was severe for a while, but at length the invisible ranks of the enemy were broken, and the hosts of hell were dispersed in all directions. We took advantage of this defeat, obtained more of the spirit of prayer and humiliation, and a complete victory soon was ours.

A few were converted, several backsliders reclaimed, and we all received a new and powerful anointing from the horn of salvation. A more lively impression of the Spirit of the coming kingdom, I have not seen since the seventh month movement. It was understood by many, that we were passing through the last sieve of trial.—That we were in the furnace under the searching power of the spirit of truth, for the finishing work of the graces of the Spirit,—that patience meekness, humility, charity, must be increased and perfected,—that the tongue must be governed, and our conversation be in heaven, and that we must be deeply imbued with that spirit of our Savior, which loves our enemies, blesses them that curse us, and overcomes evil with good. I believe these precious fruits of the Spirit were greatly increased in many hearts at this meeting. These sanctifying influences of the Spirit brought the worth of the soul, the scenes of eternity, and the nearness of a coming judgment, home to the heart. On the Sabbath, Bro. Southerland was ordained to the work whereunto the Lord had called him, by fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands, according to the Scriptures. The ordinance was attended by the approval of "thus saith the Holy Ghost," by the descent of the Spirit.—Light was imparted by the Word to the removal of prejudice, and the confirmation and comfort of believers. Thanks are due to those living near the ground, and other friends, for their kindness and hospitality on the occasion. Honor and praise to God forever.

July 11th, & 12th. I was permitted to meet with the dear brethren and friends at Caldwell's Manor, C. E., and we had a happy conference together, on the things of the Spirit. They are, truly, fearing God and giving glory to him.—Here we saw a large gathering of the saints in the vicinity, and others from a distance. But we were nearly all of the same mind and of the same judgment. Here the "King came in to see the guests," and we had a searching, rejoicing season. It truly partook of the blessed Spirit of those who shall soon sing around the great white throne, saying, "salvation, and glory, and honor and power, unto the Lord our God," "and a voice came out of the throne saying, praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."—Rev. 19,

The spirit of truth led the exercises. The nearness of the consummation of our hopes, was most deeply realized. "The Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." Many, who thought it strange concerning the fiery trial, which is to try us, saw with joy, that the Lord understands how to fit the virgins for the marriage. Overwhelming as the sight of our imperfections may be, and however piercing the fiery darts of Satan, yet it was seen in the light of inspiration, that the Lord was leading his people through the closing conflicts, and they wished to endure joyfully, until fully prepared to stand before the Son of Man in the spotless garment of salvation. Two or three have recently overleaped Babel's walls, and the cry, "come out of her my people," is having its savory influence. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." To him the porter openeth, and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out."

Saturday and Sunday, 18th and 19th, I spent with the brethren and friends in Champlain, together with others from a distance, in conference. This was also a searching time. Here I again greeted my brethren in the ministry, and in tribulation. Here we mingled our exhortations, songs, and prayers. We found it good for brethren to dwell together in unity. The brethren are coming up to the help of the Lord, renewedly, against the mighty foe in this place. Brethren Adrian and Dudley reside in this town.—They are strong in the faith once delivered to the saints, with hearts yearning over the fallen church, and guilty sinner, and are laboring day and night in the cause. Their labors are not in vain in the Lord. They will, I doubt not, if faithful a little longer, have many stars in their crown, when "the wise[or teachers, margin,] shall shine as the brightness of the firmament."

Bro. Roney was ordained to the work of the ministry on the Sabbath, by fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands. May he be faithful in the work whereunto he is called. Our commemoration of the death of Christ, by partaking of the Lord's supper at this and the other conference, was attended with an uncommon blessing to all. Many brethren here are strong in the faith that the Savior will come this fall. Let us all be ready. I am confident it cannot be long delayed.—There is overwhelming evidence bearing on the present point of time. God is lifting up his people by an internal mighty move of the Spirit, to stand in his holy presence with exceeding joy.—He is now washing off every spot, and taking out every wrinkle from their garment, that they may stand in perfect righteousness, and blameless before him at his appearing. O let us watch and pray, be ready and waiting every moment; the work of redemption is rapidly hastening to its close. The broad seal of heaven will soon be complete on every virgin's heart, and then will the four winds be loosed, the Lord appear to battle with the angry nations, and the ready will go on with him to the marriage, and the door will be shut.

Yours waiting,

D. B. WYATT.

Moira, Aug. 2, 1846.

Letter from Bro. Hoyt.

Bro. Marsh:—I have been preaching the word of life in this place and vicinity, since the Buffalo Conference. I spent one Sabbath at Bro. Crocker's near Fredonia, and propose to preach there again next Sabbath. I was at Youngsville and Lottsville, Pa., one Sabbath. The interest excited there last winter by Sister Seymour's lectures, is not altogether extinguished. There are in Jamestown, 20 or 30, who meet together for worship every Lord's day, and at other times, whether they have preaching or not. The brethren in this place are a very united, and scripturally united, church. Spiritualism, that baneful curse of the moral world, has found no quarter here.

Our seasons of conference and prayer are precious, the attendance also upon the preaching on Lord's day and Tuesday evenings, has been generally good. How transcendently bright the prospect before every true pilgrim child of God.—Says Paul, "If children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Says James,—"Heirs of the kingdom which God has promised to them that love him." But when will all the heirs get their kingdom conjointly with King Jesus? Let the faithful and true witness say.—"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall the King say to the righteous, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you." With all this light, how many believe as their minister teaches them, that the righteous will inherit the kingdom at death! How unprofitable must be the parade of Bible class study of the present day, if so plain a portion of the Savior's words are not yet understood. An heir of $100,000 of this world's possession, would be sure to find out from his little deed, when he would come into possession, but a professed heir of an immortal, everlasting kingdom, can't find out from his Bible, from the will of his heavenly Father, when he shall inherit the kingdom promised. There is a gloss on God's word that dazzles the eye, and the standard interpretation of the church, or her Rabbis, is considered a law as really binding upon the Protestant members as Catholic, and so the mass of professors suppose, contrary to the Savior's express words that the Christian will enter into or inherit the kingdom at death. But there is another worse perversion in regard to the kingdom than this, viz: that the saints of the Most High, according to Daniel 7th chapter, taking and possessing the kingdom forever, when it is given to them under the whole heaven, that this means the world's conversion soon to take place. For a man, previously made heir, to inherit and to possess that which he is heir to, is, most manifestly the same thing, and of course must take place at the same time. The saints possessing the kingdom, then, which is admitted to be the next event in the prophecy, must take place when Christ comes in his glory, and invites the righteous to inherit the kingdom. Is that Scripture soon to be fulfilled, that the kingdom under the whole heaven will be given to the saints, then the second advent is near, for both these events take place at the same time.

The patriarchs and prophets saw this glory from afar, as they confessed themselves pilgrims and strangers in the world, but the way worn pilgrim, travelling the same narrow road, is cheered by describing the city near, with its pearly gates, its streets of gold, its chrystal stream.

O, let us be faithful and watchful, praying always, that we may be counted worthy, to escape those awful things that will come as a thief upon a wicked world—that we may stand before the Son of Man, and enter his joy. "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Yours, in hope of the speedy kingdom,
E. HOYT.

Jamestown N. Y., August 6, 1846.

Bro. N. D. Wight, Wales Mass., July 20th, writes:—The few in this place who are believers in the advent nigh, meet together from time to time, to comfort one another with these words,—even the blessed hope and glorious appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ; and although we have no one to dispense the word to us, we examine for ourselves, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit, are enabled to understand some of the great truths of the Bible; so that we can lift up our heads and rejoice that our redemption draws nigh. Sickness has deprived me of meeting much with God's people abroad for three years past, but I am anticipating deliverance soon, when the afflicted ones will all be gathered into the fold, where there will be one Shepherd to go in and out before his people, and give unto them the bread of eternal life.

Bro. E. Brisbin, Champlain, July 26, writes: I wish to say, for the encouragement of others, that God is with us, and has been recently, in a most extraordinary manner. We have had two Conferences in this vicinity, one in Canada, and the other in this place. Bro. Wyatt, Adrian, Dudley and Roney, were present at the meeting in Canada, and a more powerful and glorious meeting, I think I never attended. God's people were abundantly blessed.

The other meeting, which was on the 18th and 19th, in this place, was no less powerful than the other, while the number that attended was greater. Comparatively few non-professors, or of those who had not identified themselves as believers in the advent near, were present, but the Lord was with us.

In conclusion permit me to say that I think I see a most striking analogy in reference to the first and second advent of our Lord. God's nominal church, (the Jews,) say, Cursed is every one that attempts to explain the seventy weeks of Daniel. Why? Because they predict the time of Christ's first advent. And now the church virtually if not literally say, cursed is every one that attempts to explain the 2300 days of Daniel. I harbor none other than the kindest of feelings towards those of whom I speak. O, may God have mercy on us all, and save us in his heavenly kingdom, Amen.

Bro. W. Burnham, Woodstock Vt., Aug. 13, writes:—I am cheered and comforted from week to week, while I peruse the "Advent Herald," and "V. of T." I greatly desire that they may be sustained so long as we shall need them, which will not be long. I think I shall in future, exert myself more than I have done, to the end, that they may be sustained. They are, in connection with the blessed Bible, just what we need in this time of trial. Let all who love the truth, who love this glorious cause, who are more interested in being ready themselves, and in getting others ready for the kingdom of Jesus Christ, than in controversy, speculation, new sentiments, having the pre-eminence, &c., rally for their support.—May God enable the publishers to be bold and persevering, disseminating through them the glorious truth, that the Lord of life and glory is soon to appear, to destroy the works of the Devil, and set up his own kingdom, and reign in righteousness and glory forever and ever. And also the truth, that there will be two literal resurrections: the first at the commencement, the second at the end of the thousand years mentioned in Rev. 20: 5, 6.

I have spent a few days here, in trying to stir up the pure minds of, and comfort the brethren who are waiting for salvation, and that too, I hope with some success. I endeavored to "preach the word" to them on Sunday last, and also on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons. The meetings Tuesday and Wednesday, were truly, "seasons of refreshing." Brethren Tewksbury, and Dow, (who are strong in the faith and greatly beloved by their brethren for their works sake,) were present, and we all rejoiced together in hope of the glory of God. I trust some good has been done, for which I thank the Lord. I leave to-day for Sutton, where, if the Lord will, I preach next Sunday.

Bro. Hazen, Sutton N. H., Aug 10, writes:—My faith was never stronger in the speedy coming of our Lord, than now. I think that we have the strongest reason to expect him this fall. If time was ever in the word of God, it is there now; and if ever it was the duty of God's children to study, to understand in regard to the time, it surely is their duty now. The signs spoken of by our Savior and his disciples, have been plainly fulfilled. The prophetic numbers never shone more clearly than now, and I think there never was a time when we had more evidence of the Lord's speedy coming, than now. It seems hardly possible that time can continue beyond this fall.

We have had a strong band of brethren in this place, but we have been tried. We generally embraced the idea that the Bridegroom had come and that the door was shut. Some have since embraced the notion that the Lord has come, and that they are immortal; while some have gone back to the world. A few still believe that that same Jesus will soon come again in like manner as he went away. Those of this belief have given up the idea of a shut door, and we feel like humbly confessing our error to God and our fellow men, and earnestly entreating them to seek their soul's salvation. A few seem to manifest some desire for salvation. Our prayer is, that they may not only be almost, but altogether persuaded to be Christians.

I became satisfied several months ago, of the error of the shut door doctrine, and since that have been laboring as far as my health would admit, in the vineyard of the Lord. The state of my health has been such that I have been unable to travel much. Last week I visited the brethren in the vicinity of Meredith Bridge, and found them steadfast in the faith, expecting immediate redemption.

I am much pleased with the Voice of Truth, and pray that God may continue to guide you and your correspondents in the pathway of truth.—May the Lord help us to endure unto the end, that we may have a crown of life.

Sister A. Ongley, Van Buren, Aug. 6, writes: There are a few in this place looking with joyful expectation, to see Jesus this year. O blessed hope: this same Jesus shall come again, in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven, personally, with the same body that hung upon the cross, was laid in the sepulchre, rose again, and ascended up to heaven. He will come again and receive his people to himself, that where he is, there his servants may be also. Glorious hope, full of immortality and everlasting life. We who are alive and remain until the coming of the Lord, shall not hinder those who are asleep, but the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them, to meet the Lord in the air, so shall we ever be with the Lord. The Lord will not ever remain in the air, nor "beyond the bounds of time and space" will he locate with his people. But, the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. Isaiah says, "Behold I create a new heavens and a new earth." Peter says, "Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." And John "saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away, and there was no more sea."

It seems that the new earth scarcely comes into the minds of the great mass of professors now-a-days. Talk to them about the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the body, and the earth as the future heaven of the saints, and you seem to them as a teller of idle tales, or as Paul did to the Athenians, "a setter forth of strange Gods;" but to me the subject is full of beauty, full of interest. O how I love the precious Bible: it seems entirely a new book when read in reference to these glorious truths: the seals seem to be taken off, chapters that formerly seemed so dry and insipid, which I could not bear to read, are now full of marrow and fatness, and appear the most interesting part of the Scriptures. O the exceeding great and precious promises made to the people of God! I believe them with my whole heart. The peace and joy I have found in believing, tongue cannot express. Glory be to God, I expect if faithful a few more days, I shall enter that rest that remains for the people of God, see my dear Savior, and dwell with him forever. My health is so poor, I sometimes think I shall not live till the Lord comes; but if it be his will that I fall asleep, I feel it will be but a little while, and whether sleeping or waking, I shall be the Lord's at his coming: for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, "even so they who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "I will come again and receive you to myself," is the anchor of my hopes.

Your sister in the glorious hope set before us in the gospel.

GREECE—THE LATE EARTHQUAKES.—A letter from Athens of the 20th June, informs us that great disasters had occurred at Messina, in consequence of repeated shocks of Earthquakes.—The town of Micromani has been entirely destroyed, and the villages of Balinga, Gliata, and Aslanaga, have shared the same fate. In the town of Nisi, a number of houses have been thrown down, and at Calamata, even the public buildings have been overturned. In the country parts, great mischief has also been done. Several plantations were completely ruined, and the ground has opened in various places and vomited forth torrents of water and mud. The loss of life is said to have been inconsiderable, but the exact amount is not yet known. The last letters received from the scene of devastation, to the 16th June, announces that the shocks, though less violent, were still going on, and that the general uneasiness was far from being calmed down. The government sent assistance of various kinds to the Messinians, and subscriptions have been opened at Athens for the victims. Several persons spontaneously left the capital to proceed to Messina to keep up the spirits of the people. Among them was the Minister of France, accompanied by M. de Roujoux, consul of the Cyclades.

We Are Going Home.

We're going home, O happy thought,
The strife will soon be o'er,
And heaven shall be the pilgrim's lot,
Where foes oppress no more.

We're going home, so says the word,
That sure unerring guide,
To dwell with Christ, our risen Lord,
When he brings home his bride.

We're going home, for long we've toil'd,
And searched God's holy word,
To find a rest for weary saints,
In Paradise restored.

We're going home, no more to feel
The breast with anguish riven;
There is a balm for hearts that bleed,
'Tis found alone in heaven.

We're going home to meet with those Whose friendship never dies;
To walk with them the streets of gold,
And fields of Paradise.

Great God, prepare us for that rest,
The mansions bright and fair;
And when we yield to thy behest,
We'll claim our portion there.

A Fragment.

How pure and how indissoluble the tie that unites the hearts of all the true disciples of Jesus. Let others talk of "great principles of union," and fruitlessly scan the wisdom of man for powers to combine hearts of discordant tones and repulsive views. I rest content with the pure love of God, which, shed abroad in our hearts, so firmly cements, that nought on earth hath power to dissolve. The union of saints, so sweet amid these haunts of sin, what must it be when all the holy throng, in one unbroken band, shall together, in harmony, sing the sweet praises of God and the Lamb, without one jarring sound.

I love to contemplate the innumerable company in the new earth, all the "heart of one man," moving harmoniously, or, in the will of the great I am, without one dissenting wish or thought, yea, gliding along the smooth "broad rivers" of God's immutable love, without shoal or shore, while the endless ages of eternity roll.

Oh! hasten the time, blessed God, when sweet anticipation shall give place to joyful reality,—when our eyes shall see the King in his beauty, and Jerusalem a quiet habitation, where thou wilt dwell with thy people forever, and unto thee be all the glory both now and forever, Amen.

Passing Away.

The beautiful, fair, and the lovely of earth,
Are destined to fade from the hour of their birth;
The dew-drops of morning, the sun's parting ray,
Are fading, fast fading, and passing away.
The roses of summer, whose breath fills the gale,
Who send forth their perfume from hill-side, and vale,
Look at eve to the skies, and in sighs seem to say,
"Bathe our petals in tears—we are passing away."
We pass from the meadow, the hill-side, and green,
And the spot looketh drear where our footsteps have been—
All, even the fairest, are marked for decay—
We bloom for a moment, and then pass away."
The sunny stream laughs in the pure light of morn.
But onward, still onward, its waters are borne;
Its sparkling is transient—its waves may not stay,
To the depths of the ocean it passeth away.
Yet what is the streamlet, the rose-bud, and dew,
To the cheek that is flushing with youth's crimson hue—
To the eye that is kindling with hope and delight,
As it turns to the future all splendid and bright!
Alas! for the visions and dreams of our youth,
When shadows seem substance, and friendship seems truth;
Like the sere leaves of autumn, the last beam of day,
They fade into darkness—they all pass away.
Yes, PASSING AWAY is the watchword of Time;
Earth's bright ones are destined to fade in their prime,
In Life's verdant spring to lie down in the tomb,
And shroud in Death's mantle their beauty and bloom.
And e'en the wide earth, with her valleys and rills,
Her firm'set mountains, and unshaken hills,
Is marked for destruction—is doomed to decay;
On her brow is engraven, "Fast passing away."
Then is there no rest for the tempest-tossed soul,
No pole-star to guide us when dark billows roll?
Is there no ark, no anchor, which still shall endure
Through storm and through tempest, unshaken and sure?
Yes, truth shall endure! Firm, immutable truth—
Change never comes o'er it; 'tis e'er in its youth,
Firm as Heaven's own arches, and pure as its day:
Eternal is truth, it can ne'er pass away.
Then cheer up, lone voy'ger on Error's wide sea,
Let truth be a chart, and a pole-star to thee;
'Twill guide thee to heaven's port of the blest,
To the home of the ransomed, the haven of rest. M. A.

ADDRESS TO THE PUBLIC.

BY WILLIAM MILLER.

Dear Reader:—Permit me to address you once more, by calling your attention to the great events, which the word of God declares are soon to come to pass, that I may faithfully perform my duty; and that you may be able to answer in that way that will be satisfactory to your own soul, in the day when God shall judge the secret thoughts of men, by Jesus Christ.

In my former communications to you on this subject, which lays near my heart, and fills my soul at times with indescribable joy and consolation, big with the hope of soon, very soon, coming into possession of immortality and eternal life, I readily confess I was misled in my calculations, not by the word of God, nor by the established principles of interpretation I adopted; but by the authorities which I followed, in history and chronology, and which have generally been considered worthy of the fullest confidence. And I fear many of you have been blinded to your own interest, which may be of eternal consequences to you, by this hasty expression of full confidence in these authors, before I had carefully and more extensively examined the subject to which I had, in the simplicity of my heart, called your serious and candid consideration. But the testimony of historians, as to the dates of events, cannot affect the testimony of the word of God:—that, at certain periods from these events, his promises shall be fulfilled. They may fail, but his word cannot fail. I confess I have been thus mistaken as to the definite time; but what of that?—Will you, or any man, dare to take the ground, that because Mr. Miller, or any other man, made a mistake, the word of God is not true? No, no, there would be nothing in that worthy of being called an argument.

But above all things else, I was deceived in the number and character of those, who, without study, argument, or reason, rejected the (to me at least) glorious news of the coming Savior. Neither did I suppose that a man or woman could have been found on the habitable earth, who loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and believed the Bible, that would reject the second advent, or the redemption of the body—the final salvation of the soul, or inheritance of eternal life, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Yet facts warrant me to say, I find more than one half who profess Christianity, denying one or more of these fundamental pillars of the Christian hope; and among them more bitter scoffers, and vindictive, unforgiving enemies, than in all the world beside. So much has this been noticed for a few years past, that men of the world have told me, that they regard it as a settled rule, that when they hear men scoffing and lying about those who profess the advent doctrine, they set them down as being, or once having been, professors.

I am thankful to God, although much and sorely disappointed, that I never pretended to be divinely inspired, but always directed you to the same source from whence I obtained all the information I then had, and now possess, on this glorious and heart-cheering subject. Let me then exhort you kind reader, by the value of truth, by the worth of your own soul, and the love of life everlasting, to examine your Bible,—on the coming of Christ, the redemption of the body, the salvation of your soul, and the everlasting inheritance. Lay by all prejudice, all opinions not founded on the plain and clear declarations of God's word, keep close to that rule which will thoroughly furnish you, and make you perfect in every good work; examine for yourselves; let no man deceive you in these days of deception, when the devil has come, deceiving, if possible, the very elect. Now is the time for you to exercise the "sober second thought;" a good time for you to come over on the side of truth; to choose the good and refuse the evil. I beseech you do not say, "Nay, I will not examine!"—Do not say, "I am well enough off, and I have got the truth!" Perhaps you have; if so, it will not hurt you to re-examine, for every re-examination only makes the truth the brighter, our evidence more clear, and our love for the truth more fervent; it helps to establish our faith and hope, and keeps us from wavering.

And now, dear reader, let me propose a few questions, in view of what I have said, for you to answer to God and your own soul; and I pray you not to trifle with them, or one of them, if you can find a plain Scripture text which authorizes the question. And I beg of you, delay not to answer every question which may, or can be answered. And let your answers be such as you will be willing to meet before the throne of God in the day of judgment, to which day I appeal in thus addressing you. I append a text to every question, to show you they are Scriptural.

1. Will Christ appear the second time? Heb. 9: 28.
2. Will he come himself? 1 Thess. 4: 16.
3. Who will see him? 1 John 3: 2; Rev. 1: 7.
4. Who will not be ashamed before him at his coming? 1 John 2: 28; 4: 17.
5. What will Christ come to do? 2 Thess. 1: 7-10; Heb. 1: 10-12; Rev. 21: 5.
6. When Christ comes, will there be a resurrection? and of whom? 1 Cor. 15: 23; 1 Thes. 4: 14-18.
7. Where is Christ now? Acts 1: 11; 3: 21.
8. At what time will Christ again be sent to earth? Acts 3: 20, 21.
9. When may we know he is near, even at the door? Matt. 24: 30, 33.
10. Have any one of the signs been seen which are given by our Lord,—in Matt. 24: 29; Mark 13: 24, 25; or Luke 21: 25, 26; or by Paul in 1 Tim. 4: 1-3; also 2 Tim. 3: 1-9; or by Peter in 2 Peter 3: 3, 4,—by any one living in this generation?
11. When is the day of redemption? Eph. 4: 30; Luke 21: 28.
12. When shall our bodies be redeemed?—Rom. 8: 23.
13. When shall our souls be saved? 1 Pet. 1: 7-13.
14. When shall the righteous inherit eternal life? Mark 10: 17; Matt. 19: 29; 25: 46.
15. What is the earnest of that inheritance? Eph. 1: 13, 14; 2 Cor. 1: 22; 5: 4, 5.
16. If we are to receive all this when Christ appears, and not until then, can you blame any Christian for loving his appearing? 2 Tim. 4: 8.
17. And if you was commanded to watch for him, and these blessings were promised when he comes, would you not look with intense interest until his coming?
18. And if you was commanded to watch, would you watch without expecting him? Luke 12: 35-40.
19. And if he did not come when you expected, would you not be disappointed in some proportion to your love for his appearing?

Remember, this is the situation of your Advent friends; this is our experience. And may God help you to love, watch, and expect the dear Savior until he shall come.

Scriptural Exhortation, in view of the Coming of Christ.

Dear Brethren:—Our authority to do this, is not of doubtful origin, nor common character.—Says the great apostle of the Gentiles, that inspired teacher of faith and verity, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another to provoke [incite] unto love and to God's works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day (of Christ's advent) approaching." But alas, during the "dark and cloudy day" the people of God have been peeled and scattered on mountains like sheep having no shepherd, so that many of us cannot meet together to take sweet counsel, as in the former days, when we met together for the purpose of mutual edification, and to draw the folds of love closer together; but, thank God, we can occasionally have an interchange of thought through the medium of the 'Voice of Truth' and the 'Herald,' and hold mental converse and communion sweet, though far apart from each other. For my ownself, I always preferred the inspired exhortation of the apostles of our Lord and Savior, to all others.—There is a pointedness and a propriety, an originality and freshness in them, which is not to be found in the dry, verbose, frigid, and metaphysical abstractions of their pretended successors. Instance the fitness of the following, to our present position.

"Take heed brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily, while it is called to-day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin: for we are made partakers of Christ [mark] if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Nothing short of that will do,—"he that endureth unto the end shall be saved." The beloved disciple, after stating the fact that "many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh," thus admonishes the brethren: "Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." And again, 1: 2, 28. "And now little children, abide in him, that when he shall appear we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

How affectionate, how benevolent this language, and O, how admirably adapted to the position we occupy. The voice of Christ by the Spirit, to the churches, now most emphatically is, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Is the bride prepared to respond with heart and voice, Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly! Amen! Let every individual answer to God and his own conscience.

Peter, who wrote to stir up the pure minds of the brethren by way of remembrance, states the reward,—"a full reward," to be the crown of glory, and an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." "Wherefore," says he, "gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought about at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Of this grand and glorious event, now at the door, Isaiah thus speaks: "O Zion that bringeth good tidings, get thee up in the high mountains, (among the scattered sheep) O Jerusalem that bringeth good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength, lift it up, be not afraid: say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God, behold the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him, behold his reward is with him, and his work before him." 40: 9, 10.

Daniel, the man "greatly beloved," was told to "go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." (years). He was carried down by the Spirit, to the very point when one like the Son of Man came in the clouds of heaven to confer immortality, and give the promised reward, the inheritance in the redeemed earth to the "meek, for an everlasting possession."

Paul too, had his faith firmly fixed on this grand and glorious consummation, when about to suffer martyrdom for the cause of his beloved Lord. Read his triumphant language: [3 Tim. 4: 6-8.] "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give to me at that day:— [V. 1.] and not to me only, but unto all them also, that love his appearing." How different the tone and character of this, to the cold, lifeless, whining speeches of modern professors in the new prospect of death, and O how striking the contrast betwixt the apostle's faith, and their foolish fanfaries. And yet, "mistaken souls, they dream of bliss."

Were professing Christians to place their faith on God's revelation instead of the doctrines and traditions of men, how very different from what it really is, would the aspect of the church appear to the gainsayer. But, were this the case, how could the predictions of the prophets, our Lord, and his apostles, respecting the state of the nominal church in the "last days," be fulfilled?—From the literal and progressive fulfilment of these prophecies, the careful student of the Word gets fresh proofs every day, that the advent of Christ is nigh, even at the door.

But I pass to observe that the second coming of Christ has been, through all of the past, the grand, the stimulating motive, to a holy walk and unblameable behavior in the world. A few testimonies on this point, must at present suffice.—We will begin with Enoch's prophecy, concerning that august event. "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him," &c. "For I know," says Job, "that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." 19: 25-27.

This is the language of strong faith, and the most unwavering confidence, that God who had promised was able, and would ultimately fulfil every jot and tittle of his word, in the redemption and final glorification of his people. When Job realizes his hope at the "latter day," Jesus will stand upon the earth, and then will be fulfilled the oath of God. Num. 14: 21. "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." To this, the eye of the prophet Isaiah was directed in vision. 6: 1-4. I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple; above it, stood the seraphim; each one had six wings;—with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto the other, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts, the whole earth is full of his glory."

With this before the mind, how very appropriate is the exhortation of the apostle, at the present time. Heb. 12, "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset, and let us run with patience, the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is sit down at the right hand of God," &c. O brethren, let us fix the eye of faith on Jesus, and through his matchless love, we shall be more than conquerors at last. The holy men of the olden time, who lived and walked with God, looked forward with faith to the day of Christ, and had a precious, soul-satisfying glimpse of the glory consequent on his sufferings. They looked for a city which hath foundation, whose builder and maker is God, and walked as strangers and pilgrims here, having respect to the recompense of reward. "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches, than all the perishing treasures of this world. To be convinced of the overcoming power of faith, one should peruse carefully, the 11th chapter to the Hebrews. Through the divine blessing, it may nerve you calmly to meet and patiently to endure the conflicts and trials that yet await us here. It is through much tribulation that we must enter into the kingdom of God, but if we abide faithful, and study to obey God in all things, he will carry us safely through, till he lands us safe in the harbor of eternal rest.

I have read with interest, the remarks in the "Voice of Truth," on the "Perils of the Last Days," and most acknowledge they give a true description of the state of things in this "down East" country. When I remember how forward our enemies have been to publish, in their various papers, and some of which were professedly religious, every thing that would in any way disgrace Millerism, as they term it, and much of which I know to be false, I see in it the fulfilment of the word of God, especially in regard to the reproach and contumely poured upon the people of God. It reminds me of the gallows fifty cubits high, prepared by Haman, upon which to hang the pious Captain Mordecai, who would not bow down and do homage to Haman, and to the spirit and customs of the age and place in which he lived. Would those now looking for the Lord only submit to the iron cast creeds, now extant, and sing with them, "death is the gate to endless joy," and beyond the bounds of time and space, look forward to the heavenly place, the saints serene abode." "My Lord delayeth his coming;" they would avoid much of the persecution which is now heaped upon them, and be considered quite orthodox. But, my brother, God requires truth "in the inward parts," and will have his people bound by his word and spirit, and fearlessly and lovingly declare what they believe to be God's truth, whether popular or unpopular with the multitude. One thing I have yet to learn, i. e., the time when God's truth and people were popular in this sin-polluted world. The Brother's remarks in the Voice on "Incontinency," brought painfully to my mind what I have heard and partly seen in this "down east" region. Within a few miles of where I reside, is imprisoned an old preacher, of more than 20 years standing, in one of the largest denominations of these United States. He was convicted on the testimony of four of his own daughters—of "carnal knowledge by force;" and some testify that he has been guilty for six years! during which time, he has preached, prayed, &c., and these same young women made a high profession of religion! Had I read of such things in foreign papers, I should not have supposed it possible to be true,—but my knowledge that the man is imprisoned, (for I have seen him) compels me to believe that such a case exists. Whether he is guilty or innocent before the Lord, I know not. But look at it which way you may, it seems too bad to believe. A father, a Reverend father, the guide, the protector of his daughters, it cannot be! And these young females to bear such testimony if false, against him, to whom, under God, they are indebted for their beings, is too much to be believed. I am lost in astonishment, and exclaim in the honesty and fullness of my soul, "my God save us in these last times of perils." It however looks like the last days. See Mark 13: 12.—"Then the brother will deliver up the brother to death, and the father, the child, and children will arise against their parents, and procure their death." Campbell's translation. O may we each feel and exclaim, "My soul be on thy guard; ten thousand foes surround." "Not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober."—"Hope unto the end for the grace to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ," which I believe will soon take place.

Yours truly, expecting the restitution,

AN EXTRACT

"Of a letter, from Mr. Adoniram Judson, (Missionary), to the Female members of Christian Churches in the United States," on Dress.

Dear Sisters:—Having finished my tale, and therein exhibited the necessity under which I lay of addressing you, I beg leave to submit a few topics to your candid and prayerful consideration.

1. Let me appeal to conscience, and inquire, what is the real motive for wearing ornamental and costly apparel? Is it not the desire of setting off one's person to the best advantage, and of exciting the love and admiration of others?—Is not such dress calculated to gratify self-love, to cherish the sentiments of vanity and pride? And is it not the nature of those sentiments, to acquire strength from indulgence? Do such motives and sentiments comport with the meek, humble, self-denying religion of Jesus Christ? I would here respectfully suggest, that these questions will not be answered so faithfully in the midst of company, as when quite alone kneeling before God.

2. Consider the words of the apostle quoted above, from 1 Tim. 2: 9, "I will also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness, and sobriety, not with brodered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." I do not quote a similar command recorded in 1 Peter 3: 3, because the verbal construction is not quite so definite, though the import of the two passages is the same. But cannot the force of these passages be evaded? Yes, and nearly every command in scripture can be evaded, and every doctrinal assertion perverted, plausibly and handsomely, if we set about it in good earnest. But preserving the posture above alluded to, with the inspired volume spread open at the passage in question, ask your hearts in simplicity and godly sincerity, whether the meaning is not just as plain as the sun at noon-day. Shall we then bow to the authority of an inspired apostle, or shall we not?—From that authority, shall we appeal to the prevailing usages and fashions of the age? If so, please to recall the Missionaries you have sent to the heathen; for the heathen can vindicate all their superstitions on the same ground.

3. In the posture you have assumed, look up and behold the eye of your benignant Savior ever gazing upon you with the tenderest love,—upon you, his daughters, his spouse, wishing above all things that you would yield your hearts entirely to him, and become holy as he is holy, rejoicing when he sees one and another accepting his pressing invitation, and entering the more perfect way; for, on that account, he will be able to draw such precious soul into a nearer union with himself, and place them at last in the higher spheres, where they will receive and reflect more copious communications of light, from the great fountain of light, the uncreated Sun.

4. Anticipate the happy moment, hastening on all the wings of time, when your joyful spirits will be welcomed into the assembly of the spirits of the just made perfect. You appear before the throne of Jehovah; the approving smile of Jesus fixes your everlasting happy destiny; and you are plunging into the "sea of life and love unknown, without a bottom or a shore." Stop a moment; look back on yonder dark and miserable world that you have left: fix your eye on the meagre, vain, contemptible articles of ornamental dress, which you once hesitated to give up for Christ, the King of glory; and on that glance, decide the question, instantly and forever.

Surely you can hold out no longer. You cannot rise from your knees, in your present attire. Thanks be to God, I see you taking off your necklaces and ear-rings, tearing away your ribbons, and ruffles, and superfluities of head-dress; and I hear you exclaim, What shall we do next? An important question deserving serious consideration. The ornaments you are removing, though useless and worse than useless, in their present state, can be so disposed of as to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, relieve the sick, enlighten the dark-minded, disseminate the Holy Scriptures, spread the glorious Gospel throughout the world. Little do the inhabitants of a free, Christian country, know of the want and distress endured by the greater part of the inhabitants of the earth. Still less idea can they form of the awful darkness which rests upon the great mass of mankind in regard to spiritual things. During the years that you have been wearing these useless ornaments, how many poor creatures have been pining in want! How many have languished and groined on beds of abject wretchedness? How many children have been bred up in the blackest ignorance, hardened in all manner of iniquity? How many souls have gone down to hell, with a lie in their right hand, having heard of the true God and the only Savior. Some of these miseries might have been mitigated; some poor wretch have felt his pain relieved; some widow's heart been made to sing for joy; some helpless orphan have been rescued from hardened depravity, and trained up for a happy life here and hereafter. Some, yea many precious souls might have been redeemed from the quenched fires of hell, where now they must lie and suffer to all eternity, had you not been afraid of being thought unfashionable, and not "like other folks!" had you not preferred adorning your persons, and cherishing the sweet seductive feelings of vanity and pride!

O Christian sisters, believers in God, in Christ, in an eternal heaven and an eternal hell!—can you hesitate and ask what you shall do? Bedew those ornaments with the tears of contrition; consecrate them to the cause of charity; hang them on the cross of your dying Lord. Delay not an instant.

Eternal Life.

"The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23. 'He gave me (Christ) a commandment what I should say and what I should speak, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting.'—John 12: 49, 50. Peter says to the Lord, 'Thou hast the words of eternal life.'—John 6: 68. 'For the life was manifest, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us.'—John 12. 'The gift of God,'—obedience to 'Christ's commandments'—and his 'words' are life eternal.

How many, or who have received it? 'Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give life eternal to as many as thou hast given him.'—John 17: 2. Paul says in Acts 13: 48, as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed; John 10: 27, 28, says, 'My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life,' &c. 'Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'—John 3: 16. 'Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst, but the water of life that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing into everlasting life.'—John 4: 14. 36 v. reads, he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life.' Paul says in Gal. 6: 8, 'He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption: but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.' Paul speaks in 1 Tim. 1: 16, of Christ being a 'pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.' This is the class that receive it. When do the saints receive it, in this world or in the world to come? Surely not in this world, for here we 'seek for eternal life:' (Rom. 2: 7) And if we have it, we need not seek for that we have. Again: 'Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect.' lived in 'hope of eternal life.'—Titus 1: 12. 'Heirs according to the hope of eternal life.'—3: 7. This same writer says, 'We are saved by hope.' But hope that is seen (or that you have) is not hope: for what a man seeth (or hath) why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, (or have not) then do we with patience wait for it.'—Rom. 8: 24, 25. John in his first epistle, (2: 25) speaking to those that heard the words of Christ from the 'beginning,' 'if they remain in you,' 'ye also shall continue in the Son and in the Father. And in this is the promise that he hath promised us, (who?) them that 'continue in the Son,' or 'abide in Christ' even eternal life.' Paul says in Rom. 5: 21, 'That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness (how long) unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.' In the 6: 22. 'But now being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end, everlasting life.' Daniel says, (12: 2) speaking of the resurrection, 'some awake to everlasting life.' Our Savior speaks at the solemn hour of separation; 'These shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal.' Matt. 25: 46. Our Lord tells us in Mark 10: 30, what his followers shall have for leaving all. They 'shall receive an hundred fold now in this time; houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life.' All must see that the scriptures quoted, places the gift of God, which is life eternal, at the resurrection of the just.

Some may inquire, 'are there not some passages that teach we have it in this life? Yes, there are five passages in John which use the word hath, in the present tense. 'Believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life,' &c. 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, hath everlasting life.' 'Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life,' &c.—'Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer:—and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.' John 5: 24; 3: 36; 6: 47, 54; 1 John 3: 15. In John's first epistle, 5: 13, the phrase 'ye have eternal life,' is used. In the 17: 3, of John, eternal life is explained thus: 'This is life eternal, that they might know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.'—There are six texts of scripture in John's writings, that speak of possessing it here, and in the same writings you will find ten passages that place it in the future: John 3: 15, 16; 4: 14, 36; 6: 27, 40; 10: 28; 12: 25; 17: 2; 1 John 2: 25.

He is the only writer that speaks of it in the present. Now, if we say it is possessed here, we contradict every other writer that has written on the subject. If the above scripture is correctly translated, it must not have more weight than other scripture will allow. Therefore it cannot mean more than; 'to be spiritually minded, is life and peace.' Rom. 8: 6. Or as Paul says in Gal. 2: 20, 'I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, 'who loved me and gave himself for me.'

Now, if we would have life eternal, we must not be like the young man that was not willing to sell all and follow Christ. Nor love our lives more than our Master's truth. But, with all meekness, 'fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life,' &c. 1 Tim. 6: 12. Brethren strive to 'keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life.'

Yours, waiting for the crown of eternal life,
WALTER PRATT.

ROCHESTER, SEPTEMBER 16, 1846.

Our receipts of late have fallen far below our current expenses. Those indebted for their paper, who are able to pay, should see and remedy this evil immediately.

"Advent Herald—Extra."

This paper, for Sept. 9th, is a rich number. It contains an 'Address to the Public,' by Wm. Miller, which we give in this number of our sheet. 'The Moral End designed to be effected by the Signs and Times revealed to the Prophets.' This is a valuable document: the author's name is not given. 'The Two Resurrections and Millennium' of Rev. 20: 4-6, by S. Bliss, Editor of the Herald. This article is what our brethren need at this time to strengthen their faith in the precious doctrine of the first resurrection. 'The Return of the Jews,' by J. Litch, is a masterly production, which every one should read who is in the least troubled with the unscriptural doctrine of the return of the carnal Jews to the land of Palestine. 'The Four Universal Kingdoms,' is also an interesting article from the pen of I. E. Jones.

An extra edition of 17,000 of this number of the Herald has been printed for general distribution.—We hope they will soon be circulated. Orders for the Extra Herald should be sent to J. V. Himes, Boston, Mass.

Evidence of Acceptance with God.

A brother, whose name and address we are not at liberty to give, writes:

"I feel that I cannot rejoice in the blessed doctrine of the second advent as I think you and many others do; for darkness and doubt seem clinging to me with deathlike grasp. Oh, it seems, sometimes, that my soul would willingly quit its frail tenement of clay, if it could but find perfect peace with God. What to do, I know not. Though I have professed to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus for about six years, yet now I feel to be as one enquiring the way to Zion. Nothing can give me real joy and peace, but a firm and unshaken confidence in the Lord, and the hourly inward witness that I am Christ's and he is mine; this is my prayer. When, oh when, shall I be a free man in Christ Jesus? Can you tell me what to do in this critical moment? I want some one to guide me."

There are various causes for such desponding feelings as those of which our brother speaks.

1. Ill health, or physical disability, is not unfrequently the cause of this despondency with which our brother is troubled. Such is the connection of our mental and physical powers that a disarrangement of the one must necessarily affect the other. We have been acquainted with a number of cases of this kind; some of them bordering very nearly on settled despair. But when the persons regained their usual health, their desponding feelings gradually gave place to feelings of joy. It is as utterly impossible for the mind to be free, buoyant and joyful, long at a time, when there is a defect in certain of its functions, as it is for the arm to be strong and active when broken. And it is just as unreasonable for a person to expect to be joyful when the functions of the mind are thus affected, as it would be to use his arm, if broken. In both cases it is necessary to know the cause of our complaint, and then exercise all the patience we can master until a cure is effected.

2. Making our feelings the rule by which to decide whether we are accepted with God or not, is another cause of the despondency of which our brother speaks. It is no certain evidence that a person is a Christian because he feels well, nor that he is not one because he does not feel well. No such rule is given in the Bible to test our Christianity; yet very many act altogether by this rule; and there is but little stability in their Christian joy. They are slaves to their feelings, which vary according to the circumstances with which they are surrounded. The remedy in this case is to follow the Bible rule in judging of your Christianity. "Blessed are those that do his commandments." Do right, or, as the Word requires, and your peace will be constant, and rest upon a foundation against which the gates of hell cannot prevail.

3. Doing wrong, or neglecting duty, is a cause of despondency to the Christian. There can be no real permanent peace where a person is habitually guilty of either. The remedy in this case is simple but sure. It is to do wrong no more, and no longer live in the neglect of the plain commands of the Lord. Then your peace will be as a river, and your joy uninterrupted and sure.

4. A want of confidence, or faith in God, is a sure cause of despondency to the Christian. There is but little true evangelical confidence or faith now in Christendom. Unbelief is not only seen in the rejection of the doctrine of the near coming of the Savior, but in doubting the truth or fulfilment of nearly every promise of God. Infidelity has crippled the faith of the best Christians of this degenerate age. It has led them to look upon the most simple and positive commands of God, with doubt. If they do a command of the Lord, they do not feel the fullest assurance that they will be blessed in the deed: and for want of confidence in the promises of their God, they are sure not to be blessed in obeying him; consequently, desponding feelings are unavoidably the result.

The cure in this case is, have faith in God; do as he requires, and entertain not a single doubt of his doing for you just as he has promised. He will fulfill his word: 'he is faithful that has promised.'

Finally, ingratitude is a cause of despondency. Many people are constantly asking and receiving blessings from their God, but seldom thank him for them. Ungrateful creatures! It is not only their duty to pray, but in 'all things to give thanks,'—Just pour out your souls in thanksgiving and praise; sing and make melody in your hearts to the Lord, ye desponding ones, and the gloom that now troubles you will give place to the cheering rays of the Sun of righteousness. 'Rejoice in the Lord, and again I say rejoice.' If any being in the world should be cheerful and happy it is the Christian.—Present blessings and future rewards, should so fill his mind with gratitude as entirely to prevent his indulgence in the sin of unbelief, ingratitude and despondency.

The Meeting at Livonia, recently held, we understand was very interesting. We were denied the privilege of attending, which was a great disappointment to us.

Elder Church's Letter.

We see in the 'Democrat,' for Sept. 2d, a letter from Elder P. Church, a Baptist minister of high standing in this city. It was written while on his voyage to London, to attend the 'World's Convention,' or Christian Alliance, recently held in that city. There are some things in this letter we cannot let pass unnoticed. Speaking of the fears which many seem to entertain relative to the result of the convention, Elder Church says:—

"Thus a general suspicion seems to prevail on the subject, and all apprehend, what I fear myself, that the good will not equal the hopes of its friends.—To all this I have but one answer,—we have tried controversy for three hundred years, and have filled the world with our books, and yet the Protestant sects have neither convinced each other nor been convinced, nor indeed has there been a material change in the strength of the parties. Their prejudices on all hands have been confirmed, and what of truth and argument they may embody, meets with so many hostile passions that it cannot take effect except to a very limited extent. Is it not the part of wisdom, therefore, to try some other expedient?"

We think Elder Church has just cause to fear that the convention will not be productive of much real good to the cause of Christian union: for there is too much denominational interest, or, 'hostile passions,' among the sects, to approximate any nearer to a permanent gospel union than they now are. If their labor for 'three hundred years' has served to 'confirm their prejudices on all hands,' the London Convention may try in vain, 'by some other expedient,' to bring about the desired union. Human expedients lie at the foundation of every departure from the word of the Lord. To continue to try 'some other expedient,' will serve to strengthen and multiply divisions rather than do them away. The only way possible to effect a gospel union is, to try no more expedients, ('three hundred years trial' is long enough;) but to abandon all sectarian names, creeds, interests, and human expedients, and meet on the broad, holy and peaceable foundation on which the church stood before her departure from the truth, viz: the Word of God. The only principle of true Christian union is laid down in that book, and a union attempted on any other principle than therein taught, will be vain. That all of the delegates do not design to act upon these purely gospel principles is evident from the following expression of Elder Church. He says:

"I expect to appear there as a Baptist, to work, and think, and act, and vote, in that capacity, and no other."

This, doubtless, is a very correct expression of the feelings of every delegate to the Convention, relative to his own denomination. He 'expects to appear there,' in the name, spirit, and defence of his own sect, 'and no other.' On this purely selfish principle each will act, and, as a matter of course, no union will be effected. That their hope of success is exceedingly doubtful, is further evident from the following singular admission, in the letter of Elder Church:—

"The Christian church, on the subject of union, is feeling her way towards light through a dark and dubious region. And what God may do for us, in answer to earnest prayer and honest endeavor, we cannot foresee."

What an admission! The church 'feeling her way through a dark and dubious region,' without light: for she is feeling her way 'towards light through a dark region.' She sends up her 'earnest prayer' and puts forth her 'honest endeavor,' to feel her way through this darkness, to the desired and Scriptural union, but still God will neither hear nor guide her, he has left her perfectly in the dark relative to his gracious designs: these 'we cannot foresee.'

If Elder C. has given a true representation of the church, she is in gross darkness, and knows not where she is going: Her leaders, also, are in the dark, are blind guides; and if the blind lead the blind both shall fall into the ditch. No subject is more clearly revealed in the Bible than that of Christian union, yet the Christian world, according to the admission of Elder Church, are perfectly in the dark, on this important matter. Again, nothing is more certain than that the meek will God guide in judgment; that he that will do his will 'shall know of his doctrine,'—shall not walk in darkness, but have 'the light of life;' and that they that give heed to 'the sure word of prophecy,' it shall be unto them as a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise in their hearts. Yet Elder Church cannot 'foresee what God may do for us in answer to earnest prayer and honest endeavor.'

'What God will do for us.'—Here lies the deep, and we fear, fatal deception of the church. Like the apostate Jews, the church justifies herself in all of her departures from the truth, and unholy divisions. She sees nothing to do on her part, but is waiting for God to work deliverance for her, or unite the sects in his one true church. This he never will do. The church must repent in sackcloth and ashes for her departure from the primitive faith, union, doctrines, ordinances and worship; and return to the Lord, then the desired union will be attained. It will require no human expedient to consummate it, but it will be effected as a matter of course. Christian union is a sure effect of true love to God: for he that loveth God will love his brother also. If any man say he loves God, and hate his brother, he is a liar, and the truth is not in him: for how can he love God whom he has not seen, and hate his brother whom he has seen?

'Dark and dubious' indeed must be the prospects of that church or minister who is 'feeling his way towards the light,' but 'cannot foresee what God may do for us,'—has no assurance that his 'earnest prayers and honest endeavors' will meet with the divine favor; or does not know 'what God may do for us in answer to' them! We pity the blindness of such ministers and people; and most fervently pray that they may see and embrace the true light before it shall be forever hid from their eyes.

Bro. Weston's Article.

It is more to gratify a request of a brother than from a sense of duty to the cause of truth, that we publish the article in this number from Bro. Weston, on the termination of the 69 weeks. We think—

1. That the point in dispute is not of sufficient magnitude to make it a matter of difference or dispute: there being only about six months difference between the disputants relative to the most probable time for the termination of the 2300 years when the sanctuary will be cleansed.

2. If the matter in dispute is of the highest moment, a constant repetition of arguments and evidences is not calculated to shed any new light, convert any one from his error, or confirm any one in the truth. But little if anything new has been said on the point in dispute for a long time.

3. We have not yet seen a particle of clear or positive evidence to prove that the 69 weeks terminated in the spring, but there is immutable testimony, the voice of God, and the visible descent of the Spirit, to prove that those weeks did terminate at the baptism of Christ. Here he was anointed, and it is useless, by inferences, to try to fix the anointing at any other time or place.

4. The passing of the time (Oct. next) will not in the least affect the nature of this question. If Christ does not come then, it will be no evidence that he will come in April next, or some time next spring; neither will it afford a particle of proof that he was not anointed at his baptism. But it will strengthen our already settled conviction that the precise definite time of the advent is not revealed.

We do not wish to leave the impression on the mind of any one that we think Oct. next will pass and the Lord not come. We think he may come before that date, but have no certainty at what day or hour he will appear. His coming will be sudden, 'when ye think not,' and no one will be saved but those who are found ready. The ultimate object of all our labors now should be, to be ready for that decisive moment. Let no one deceive himself on this most important point. If not ready, fully ready, when he shall come, all with us will be lost, forever lost; but if ready all will be gained. Eternal redemption and everlasting life, in the kingdom of God, will be our glorious reward.

Valley of Decision.

We think our brother is mistaken in his views about the 'valley of decision.' In fact the world is no more in the valley of decision now than it ever has been: the only difference there is, it is nearer that valley than ever before. When the world is, in fact, in the valley of decision, or 'conclusion or threshing,' as the margin reads, there will be no dispute about the matter. Then the Lord will 'sit to judge all the heathen round about.' Then the command will be, 'Put ye in the sickle; for the harvest is ripe—the press is full, the vats overflow; for the wickedness is great.' At this time, 'multitudes, multitudes' will be 'in the valley of decision,' or threshing, or destruction. Joel 3: 12-14. It will be the time of the Lord's coming 'to destroy them that destroy the earth.' Rev. 11.

The principle of interpretation that would make us in the valley of decision now, we think would justify all the spiritualism with which Bible has been, or may yet be, interpreted. Let us cleave to the plain word of truth, in matters of this importance: there is safety no where else.

"THE GOSPEL."—This is the title of a sheet in the form of a chart, recently published by Bro. Wm. Clark, Jr., Newton, Mass. It covers the entire ground of six thousand years, from Paradise Lost to Paradise Restored. It gives no specific time for the restoration to take place, but shows from the united testimony of the prophets and apostles, from Enoch to John, that the restoration is certain, and soon to be witnessed. The figures of the Prophets and Apostles, of Christ and Angels, of the image and beasts in Dan., and of Paradise Lost and Restored, and their arrangement on the Chart, give it an interesting appearance. In short, we think it is well calculated to do good. It may be had of Wm. Clark, Jr., Newton, Mass., for 37½ cts.

THE BIBLE ADVOCATE for Sept. 5th, repeats its peculiar views on 'Life, Death and Resurrection.'—We say repeats, because this is the third time these sentiments have been recently published. Once, in the Voice of Truth, and now twice in the Advocate. We did hope these sentiments would not be pressed upon our brethren in this manner; that is, without publishing or even noticing the candid and strong objections which have been urged against them.—This the Advocate has not done. Is this the way to "prove all things"? It is not. But it is a successful way to gain proselytes to an erroneous doctrine.

How is it?—The Post-master at Baltimore, Md., orders J. B. Mitchell's paper to be discontinued. "Reason: not called for."

The Post-master at Auburn, N. Y., orders W. G. Ocobock's paper discontinued. "Reason: Refused." We think there is some mistake in these notices. Will the persons concerned tell us how it is?

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

Leaving Oxford, Bro. B. proceeded to Henley-on-Thames, where he had been once before, and spoke to the friends again three times on Lord's day, in the house of Bro. Jacob Tanner. There are a few brethren and sisters looking for the Lord in H., to whom, our visit seemed to be very refreshing. He supplied them with copies of the Herald, and tried to encourage them in their lonely and tried state. We spoke to the Mayor for the town-hall, should we need it at a future time. On Monday we all met in the city of London, ready to communicate to each other the result of our labors, and to mingle together once more, our prayers and praises to our Heavenly Father. Here we met our dearly beloved brother, Henry Tanner, and his sisters, Elizabeth and Ellen, who have for some time served in the gospel of Christ; they have traveled much of the time with Bro. Winter, aiding him with money, collecting the people together to hear, conversing with them, distributing among them papers and tracts, writing letters of encouragement to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, sending papers and works on the Advent to ministers, and otherwise efficiently aiding the cause of Christ. Let us here give you a single sample of the kind of letters which they are continually receiving, from all parts of the country, from individuals to whom they have sent the advent publications:—

Dear Christian Friend:—From the time of your letter coming to hand up to the present, I have been very busy, and could not well reply to it before. I feel pleasure, however in being able to do it now. Your sending me the information you did respecting the brethren from across the Atlantic, I take as a kindness; I hope they are men endowed with the Spirit of God. O how I should like to see and hear, if it were the will of my covenant Father, more of what is truly divine, and less of that which is human. I am afraid, that all our boasted improvements in science and literature, are carrying, as with a flood, millions to perdition. Most of the ministers who of late have spoken in my hearing, have occasioned in my heart the thought, that they are yet carnal; and their religion—if they may be said to have any—based on systems of moral and sub-lunary and political philosophy, and not on the sure word of prophecy. For instance: I know one individual who has recently spoken to some of them, about the spiritual and supernatural influence which the true members of Christ receive from their living head. On hearing this, one of them (who, by the way, is now a theological tutor at —) replied, "Oh, you are a lunatic." Another exclaimed, when a word was spoken on another subject, "Why, your religion opposes public opinion." When I hear the like of these things, I am hurt in my inmost soul, and if I cannot speak audibly, silently exclaim, "O tempora. O mores! how are the faithful falling." On Christmas day last, I gave a lecture in the chapel here, on Nebuchadnezzar's Image, having, at the same time, a tolerably large figure, with a head of gold, &c., &c. The people were astonished on seeing themselves down into the toes of the image, and that they were so near the end of the present state of the world. We had about 200 persons present; several came a distance of seven or eight miles. Those who possessed some degree of understanding, were much taken with it, and have since said, "We not only heard but saw it with our eyes;" and some of them with ineffable simplicity added, "Could you not show the the foundation of every discourse in similar manner?"

The Lord's day after receiving your letter, read the principal part of it to my rural audience, from the pulpit, and if we hear of the brethren having come to —, we hope all well, to walk in and hear them.

I regret that I am not in a position so as to be able to render them any service, &c., to advance their designs of usefulness. I have long wished to leave ———, ——— was never in such a wilderness in my life before. I came here five years ago, after spending seven years in the neighborhood of ——— and am now reduced to a semi-savage: I long to be out of it for

"Man in society is like a flower,

These dear friends, understanding our purpose to visit London, and vicinity, came to this city and took "lodgings," or apartments, so as to accommodate themselves, and to entertain us. Being intelligent and energetic, they are of essential service to us, as also to the cause. They have received letters, inquiring whether we intend coming to Scotland.

Since our arrival here, Bro. Paul, of Dublin, has arrived; he has labored some in Ireland; to what extent, you shall have in our next. We have just received a letter from Bro. Cochran, late of Rochester, N. Y., now of Scotland, desiring us to visit there. We have, after much labor and anxiety, obtained a printing office for the "Herald," at No. 31, Bucklersbury, London;—to which all letters for us, should be directed.— We have been at great pains to secure several suitable rooms for delivering lectures here; whether we shall succeed to our minds, is yet to be proved. We held a preliminary meeting of the friends of the cause last evening, for consultation, &c. A city of over two millions of inhabitants, is almost as difficult to move as a small world; nevertheless, we shall try, in God's name, to do something.

During the present month, London is to be the theatre for several great moral and religious scenes. The "World's Temperance Convention" is to be held next week, in this city. Delegates are now arriving; among these is Doctor Beecher, whom we have seen, and many distinguished advocates of temperance from the United States. As we are interested in this cause, we purpose being present as visitors, and shall give you a report of the meeting. The "Evangelical Alliance," is to meet here on the 19th instant, of which you may expect an account in its time.

Solemn Appeal.

It is not my province to bring out much, if any light on the coming of Jesus, but to read, examine, and compare with the scriptures, the works of those who have written on the glorious hope of the Christian, which hope I believe is to be realized this fall. From a careful perusal of Bro. Hale's Prophetic Chronology, and Bro. Pinney's last experiments on Definite Time, it does seem to me that the advent is just upon us, and that this fall will bring Jesus. But O how my soul is pained when I look round me, and see how little the nominal church think of these things, and how cold and lukewarm those are that once were all life and animation, and with what energy and zeal they would contend for the faith once delivered to the saints; but alas, how are the mighty fallen, and how many harps are hung upon the willows! Oh that I had the tongue of an angel, that it might be heard wherever such a state of things exist. I would say in the language of the Revelator, 2: 5, "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove the candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." God has said, "as a snare, shall it come on all." Yes, as a thief in the night creeps softly in, so shall that day come.

O, when I see how clear the evidence that brings Jesus this year, and how fast bound in sleep are the people, my heart bleeds, and I am ready to cry out in the anguish of my soul, good God is there no help, no balm in Gilead? must and will they sleep on until the muttering thunders of Jehovah's vengeance shall burst upon them with all its omnipotence, to their eternal destruction?—The answer comes like seven thunders, "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." The world then knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so in the end of the world, with this difference, the latter destruction will be with fire, yet, as sudden as the first. O that I could thunder forth the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," in tones that would break this spell of hell, and wake up the world to see and escape the certain ruin. But O, it cannot be! God's word will stand, and what is therein written, will most assuredly be fulfilled, and that too in every iota; and He has said, "As a snare shall it come!" O my God! that snare is now set, never to be taken up. The slumbers now upon the world will never be broke, until the trump shall sound that will awake the dead, and then it will be too late to retrieve their loss! Casting up their eye, they will then see the "Great White Throne," and as the all-searching eye of the Omniscient Jehovah falls upon them, they will read at once their doom, and down they will sink into dark, deep, doleful, and eternal ruin! Their last wail will be, "the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved!" They are forever gone, not one gleam of hope will ever enter into the abodes of despair. O my God, may some yet acquaint themselves with thee, and be at peace.

I want to say one more word on definite time. I see that some are putting off the coming of our Lord till '47, and at the same time are saying, there is much evidence that Christ will come this fall. Now brethren, these things ought not so to be. If you have got greater evidence that Christ will not come till '47, than you have that he will come this fall, let us have it; if not, up and be doing, be found giving meat in due season. Let me say to those saints scattered abroad, strive to be found doing the will of our heavenly Father; for deliverance will soon come, the redemption of the purchased possession draws nigh.

Yours, expecting and waiting for the Son of God this fall.

Time of the Advent.

I would not be of that number who say, "My Lord delayeth his coming," yet, with your permission I want to say a few words, after reading Bro. Preble's article on time, in your last.

I shall look for the Lord this autumn, because many of my brethren think they see evidence for the ending of the days here, though for myself, with much searching and prayer, I have never been able to see so much as a shadow of evidence that the 70 weeks began or ended in the autumn. That Jesus was baptised in the autumn of A. D. 29, I see no reason to doubt. In John 1, we have an account of his baptism. In John 2: 12-24, we are told of a passover which Jesus attended subsequently to his baptism. Chap. 9: 23-24 we read, "John was not yet cast into prison."—And in Mark 1: 14, "After that John was put in prison, Jesus came preaching, the time is fulfilled." Mark 1: 14, Luke 4: 16, 22, and John 4: 45, seem to me to synchronize. If so, we can see plainly that the 70th week could not have begun until that time, for Jesus says, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." I know some think that when Gabriel told Daniel, "From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks;" he meant unto Christ's baptism, but I see no evidence of this. John says (John 1: 31) "that he should be made manifest to preach, therefore am I come baptising with water." Now I ask if we have any evidence that any but John knew Christ at his baptism? If so, why was it necessary that John should point him out to some of his own disciples? John 1: 35-36. I see no evidence that the Messiah was made manifest to Israel until he preached, "The time is fulfilled,"—(Mark 1: 14) until he said, "This day is this scripture fulfilled."—Luke 4: 21. If he was baptised in autumn of A. D. 29, this would have been after the passover in the spring of A. D. 30.

Many feel confident that Christ was crucified in April A. D. 33. This may have been, but any one who will look dispassionately at Ferguson's argument for it, will see that it is all a castle built in the air. He first assumes the Rabbinical reckoning to be correct, who commence the year with the new moon nearest the vernal equinox, and then, on that assumption, goes to work to ascertain when the paschal full moon fell on a Friday. That the Rabbinical were not correct, and consequently Ferguson's argument is all futile, seems evident from Scripture, and the very nature of the case. Twelve moons we know do not make a year, so that every 3 or 4 years the Jews were obliged to have an intercalary month. It would seem by Lev. 23: 10, 11, that on the second day of the passover, they were to present a sheaf of their first fruits (barley) to the Lord. Now the full of the moon (at which time they held the passover) whose change was nearest the vernal equinox, would, once in a few years, happen as early as March 25th, but according to all writers I have seen, Barley is never ripe so early in Palestine. I write these things to those who are so confident the Lord will come this autumn.

Dear brethren, if time should continue beyond the point you expect, do not make shipwreck of faith, as many did after the 7th month. I see not the evidence of his coming until next spring. If He comes this fall so much the better. Let us every day be doing our Master's will, so that when he comes he may say, "Well done good and faithful servants, enter into the joy of your Lord."

Yours waiting,

J. WESTON.

THE SEALS.

The following are the closing remarks of an interesting article on "the Seals," recently published in the Advent Herald, and from the pen of Bro. I. E. Jones:—

"The next event in this line of sublime phenomena, is the shaking of the powers, or "constellations," (Isa. 13: 10,) of the heavens—their departure as a scroll, is rolled together, and the moving of every mountain and island out of their places. And then, at that time, shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven. In other words, as if he had said, you inquire what should be the sign of my coming. I have given you three, but when the heavens are shaken and depart, "then" there shall be a climax, which, however the others were viewed, shall be an unmistakable sign to all, that I am coming. This view is strengthened by an allusion to Heb. 12: 26,— "Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. 27.— "And this word yet once more signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken," &c., namely, the heavens and the earth. What shook the earth then? The voice and trump of God waxing louder and louder. What will shake not only the earth but heaven, now? The voice and trump of God? 1 Thess. 5: 10.— "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first."— God appeared then with lightning clouds, and fire. Exodus 19: 16. He will appear now in the same manner: on an extended scale. Matt. 24: 27; 25: 30; 1 Thes. 1: 16. Acts 1: 9.—“And a cloud received him out of their sight.” Was not the cloud seen at least a little after he was? and if he comes again in the same manner, will it not be seen a little before he is, as it was on Sinai? Besides, his coming is so uniformly predicted to be in a cloud, that it may well be said to be “the sign” of his coming; as the royal carriage of a king is to his subjects that he is coming. I would not urge, but humbly suggest this view.

The thread of figure suspended at verse 12, in chapter 6, for the purpose of introducing a plate of literal events, is resumed again in chapter 7: 1. “And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.” “After these things,” referring to after in vision, and not in event. The four angels in chap. 9: 14, 15, all will admit, symbolize the four Turkish clans on the Euphrates, which were gathered into one by Othman, and since called the Ottoman empire. These, I believe, symbolize the four great powers in Europe, which, by their alliance, have settled nearly all the national disputes since Bonaparte’s time.—Winds indicate national commotions, Dan. 7: 1.

Verse 2. “And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea.” It is a singular fact, that the Advent message began in the East, where the gospel was first proclaimed, by Doctor Wolff, who sounded it long and loud there. The echo reached Europe, swept across the Atlantic, and has rolled with tremendous vibrations over this country. So that this gospel of the Kingdom has been preached in all the world, for a witness to all nations. “And THEN shall the END COME.” Tremendous thought! we are twelve or thirteen years past the last sign before the shaking of the heavens! Every passing moment proclaims, Prepare, prepare to meet thy God! “He will come and will not tarry; a fire shall devour before him and be very tempestuous round about. He shall drive asunder the nations; he shall call to the heavens and the earth, Gather my saints together, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.” I. E. JONES.

Letter from Bro. J. Pearson, Jr.

My Dear Brother:—We have enjoyed an exceedingly interesting and profitable Conference in this place. God has been pleased to bless this effort to spread before this community, the evidences of the speedy coming of Christ, in a remarkable manner. Quite a goodly number of such as have never before sympathized with us in our views, are now willing to admit the correctness of our position, and that the Savior is, indeed, emphatically “nigh at hand.” We now are also having ocular demonstration that the Spirit of God is yet reproving the world of sin, and that the word of truth does still have an effect on the hearts of ungodly sinners. In consequence of the increasing interest manifested by the people to hear more on this subject, we have been induced to continue the meeting until this evening, (Wednesday) and shall start to-morrow for the next Conference. Sinners are awakened to a sense of their lost condition, and the earnest inquiry is heard, “what must I do to be saved?” O, how strange it is, that some so wilfully continue to say, that there is no mercy for sinners, when God so frequently is giving them proof of his willingness to save all who will come unto him.

Mr. Peavy labored through this region some time since, but the little church here had nearly recovered from his blasting influence before the Conference, and are now firmly fixed upon the word of God, united in love, and looking with strong confidence for the speedy consummation of their hopes.

I will not forget to mention the observance of the ordinances of the Sabbath. After the morning meeting, we repaired to the water side, and in presence of a very large, solemn, and attentive congregation, I had the pleasure of leading into the water a sister, and burying her with Christ in baptism—in the likeness of his death, and if her countenance was a true index of her heart, she felt the peaceful presence of God’s approving spirit. The spectators were evidently much impressed by the service. Immediately after the afternoon meeting, the Lord’s supper was administered. Here the dear brethren and sisters gave vent to their overflowing feelings of love to the Savior, in view of what he had done, is now doing, and has promised to do for them, “when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day.” It was one of those precious seasons of “communion with saints,” which we are sometimes permitted to enjoy in this world, as a foretaste of those never ending joys, laid up in store for the children of God. About fifty partook of the supper, and although we occupied two hours, still it was with reluctance that we closed this melting season of love. The poet has truly expressed the feelings of God’s children at such time:—

Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear.

When we asunder part,
It gives us inward pain;
But we shall still be joined in heart,
And hope to meet again.

This glorious hope revives
Our courage by the way;
While each in expectation lives,
And longs to see the day.” Amen.

Our dear brother L. E. Bates, has labored and toiled with success through this country, and in consequence of his arduous, unceasing efforts, his constitution is broken up, and disease has fastened on him, from which, he will not, in all probability recover, until he is changed to immortality by the appearing of the Chief Shepherd to reward his faithful servants.

There is a great cry in this region for light and help, and the people were never more ready to listen, than now. May God send help.

I must now close, as it is almost meeting time, praying for God’s blessing to rest upon you, my dear brother, that your health may be precious in his sight, and you sustained and directed in the path of duty. J. PEARSON, Jr.

Copenhagen Sept. 2, ’46.

P. S. The preaching brethren were Mansfield, Pinney, Jamerson, Bates, Chapman. Bro. Mansfield returned on Saturday to his father’s house, to complete his arrangements for his mission. Bro. Pinney and Jamerson left on Monday, and Bro. Chapman will assist through the next conference. J. P. Jr.

Letter from Bro. Boutell.

Bro. Marsh:—Time, the great, unerring truth-teller, is fast telling up its last story for this wicked, God-hating world. They wish the nominal church united, are crying peace and safety, which are evident tokens of their immediate overthrow. “But we (the saints) are not in darkness, no, no, blessed be God.” Our opponents continue to say we can know nothing about Christ’s coming to set up his kingdom, but God says we may know by certain signs or indications, which are to precede immediately before his coming which are to be as plain and as positive as the putting forth of the trees in the spring; and when we see these things, we are to lift up our heads. Why? “Knowing that our redemption [the redemption of the body] is nigh.” This then, is the great difference between us who are looking for the coming of Christ, and those who reject his coming. We believe God’s Bible is so plain on this subject, that we ought, may, and shall know all about this mighty event. They say that all is darkness about it. So, after doing all we can to enlighten them in the way of life, we leave them to settle the great controversy with God himself. But the day hasteth greatly—the day of reward; “the day that shall burn as an oven,”—the day of his coming with all the holy angels, when he will say, “Come ye blessed, and depart ye cursed.” Believing all these things, what manner of persons ought ye to be, full of all holy conversation and godliness. But how is it even among those who profess to be looking for their Lord? Would to God I could give as good account of them as some of the brethren do, but the many among whom I have been recently, are living beneath their privilege, have less confidence in God than they ought to have: the cares and sorrows of this world, are creeping on—indifference takes the place of earnest expectation—unbelief instead of life-giving faith, and then this sin-cursed earth, with its maxims and fashions, takes up more of the mind than the eternal abode of the righteous; their conversation is not in heaven, but on the earth. True, there are a few good children who have a keen appetite for the bread of life, but how few upon the naked promises of God, disinterested, self-denying laborers, are ready to go out and feed the living flock of God with food, and even the few who have gone out, are falling asleep! How cheering to the afflicted [not disconsolate] saint, that the last loud clarion of the Almighty will soon blow its resurrection blast.

I have been into the State of Maine, where fanaticism and delusion, with its hottest fires, have burned, and while some have come out and others are coming out, with light, life, and love, filling the soul, others tenaciously hold on to door shut, vision theory, stronger than ever, and bring forth its fruits, but we can have no boasting over them: all we can say, through the grace of God, is, I am what I am, saved by Jesus alone—free gift, “kept by the power of God through faith.” O, how cheering to the weary pilgrim in his wanderings through this cold, cheerless world, to meet with a poor, despised outcast, yet loved of Jesus. It will make the soul burn within, and light up anew, the whole man. A union in Christ, the saints one, and they know it. Blessed be God, what a glorious religion—the whole man converted to God, selfishness all gone, God alone to be glorified, more blessed to give than to receive,—self-denied, God exalted. O praised be God for this way of life. L. BOUTELL.

Brimfield Mass., Aug 10, 1846.

Letter from Bro. J. Gibson.

Bro. Marsh:—Last June I travelled nearly the whole length of this State, (Vermont) and into Canada. In most of the towns through which I passed, I either saw or heard of some of the seed of Abraham scattered, one here, and two or three there, I was led to inquire, why has God in his providence, thus located his children? Is it not that the alarm generally may be given, “Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him,”—that all may be without excuse at his appearing? So it appears to me. And now my dear Brethren, one and all, think of your responsibility. God has commanded each one, however weak he may consider himself, to let his light shine, not only in word, but in deed and in truth, that you may be read and known of all men.—2 Cor. 3: 2.

O how it grieves me to see the professed Christian, who, years ago, gave good evidence of being truly pious, now, in these perilous times, instead of watching and preparing for the coming of the Lord,—watching for a chance to get a good bargain, that he may “heap up treasures,” directly in opposition to the command of Jesus.—Math. 6: 19. Again, John 14: 21; “He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father; and I will love him, and manifest myself to him.” O, glorious promise. Who will claim it? The number I fear is very small, even among professed Adventists. I tremble for you brethren and for myself, for the way is straight; yet, by the grace of God, we can walk in it. Take courage then, our journey’s end is near—a few months will either reveal the Lord of glory or another disappointment. The latter I think not very probable, but yet possible. Well the Lord has given us one assurance, which has been as a sheet anchor to my soul through all former disappointments, and I think it will sustain me through another if it must come: that is, after he told what signs should immediately precede his coming, he says, Math. 24: 34, “Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled.” Amen. I believe it. There are yet many alive who witnessed the darkening of the sun and moon in 1780, and they must all pass away before I can cease expecting my Lord continually. And if God should spare my life to see that time, I think I shall not cease to look then, for the advent is the Christian’s hope, yes, “that blessed hope.”

There are, in this place, a few of the tried ones, who are destitute of preaching most of the time, yet we meet constantly on the Sabbath, and we are taught by the unadulterated word of the Spirit, and we are abundantly blessed in our worship. We also have the privilege of reading the Voice of Truth and Herald. I have read the Herald from its commencement, and Midnight Cry, until it was united with the Herald, about 3 years ago. I have been a subscriber to your paper, and in the year 1844, I read the “Hope of Israel,” and from them all, I have received much light, for which, I have abundant reason to thank the Lord.

I was not a little surprised on receiving not long since, the “Bible Advocate,” which I think was uncalled for. It will of course, cause some little division. On the first resurrection, I think it is in error: for if I have an understanding of the Bible, it warrants me to believe that many, though once converted and experienced a change of heart, have subsequently lost their faith, and died in unbelief, and must of course be lost: hence the second death will have power on them. But the Word says, “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power,” &c. The Advocate would make the passage read thus:—“Blessed and holy is he that hath been converted, [or renewed by grace] on such the second death hath no power; which appears absurd in the extreme. The other features of the paper are generally good. May God overrule all for his glory. I highly commend your friendly remarks on that paper, and pray that God may sustain you at your post until you are called from labor to reward.

Yours, patiently waiting,

JOHN GIBSON.

Bro. C. R. Riggs, Brimfield Mass., Aug. 17th, writes:—God be praised, that we in a little while shall receive the possession that it is the Father’s good pleasure to give the poor of this world, who are rich in faith. Brother the Lord is coming, and God will sustain you till he comes if you put your trust in him. Lord increase our faith. The saints in this region generally, are strong in the faith. One week ago yesterday, I preached to the saints at Holland, baptised two, and had a refreshing time. The Lord be praised. The Lord is good, Bro. Marsh, and don’t let us get discouraged. Notwithstanding the way sometimes looks dark, let us have perfect confidence in our Father, knowing that “yet a little while, and he that is to come will come and will not tarry.”

Letter from Bro. B. Morley.

Bro. Marsh:—I attended meeting with the brethren in this place yesterday. Although the Lord sent down copious showers of rain, a goodly number made their way to the house of prayer. Bro. Porter preached in the afternoon, after which there were a few prayers and exhortations, which were as refreshing to the soul of the pilgrim, as the showers were to the parched earth. Several of the brethren seem to be well awake on the subject of time. And why should not all Christians be awake on that subject? Our Lord has notified us by the signs as well as the periods, that he is soon to come, that the night is far spent, and the day is now nigh at hand.

Now, suppose that I am sick, tossed upon my bed with pain, so that I cannot rest; it is a dark and dreary night—I confidently expect at the rising of the sun, to be restored to health. Suppose I have no time-piece in my house, but I have half the evidence that the morning will dawn within a few moments, that the Christian has that the Lord will come within a few months to give him perfect and eternal health and happiness, can I talk about long hours of weariness and suffering before the dawning light? not if I am in my right mind. But why this confidence? Evidently, because the morning with its expected blessings, is desired above every thing else. Brethren, if we earnestly desire the day of God as we should, shall we not make much of our evidences, instead of talking about years to come? Our Lord says, “Watch! lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping.”

B. MORLEY.

Bro. S. W. Thurber, Woodbury Vt., Aug 19, writes:—I am now traveling through several towns in the north part of Vermont. I find a good many brethren who are looking for their deliverance this year. The brethren have been rising in their minds for a few weeks past: our meetings are well attended, and the Holy Ghost meets with us. We have made up our minds not to go back to Egypt, but forward, to the saving of our souls. I have baptised some of late, and the Holy Spirit fell not only upon those that went down into the waters, but on the brethren present.—There are others that are expecting to go forward soon. We have been disappointed, but not forsaken.

Bro. D. & A. Rollins, White Pigeon, Mich., Aug. 22, writes:—We have been favored with the reading of one of our excellent papers, and feel anxious to receive more of them, because we believe they throw some light upon the very interesting and momentous subject of the second glorious “appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ,” being “near, even at the door.” We think it is Bible doctrine. We are in rather a dark corner of the earth as it respects that subject, for although we have had some lectures from Bro. Miller, Hoyt, and Catlin, yet very few seem much interested. But although nearly alone, we are not discouraged, but rather feel encouraged to “lift up our heads rejoicing, resting assured that the day of our redemption draweth nigh.” We hope that the brethren at the east will remember us.

Letter from Bro. Pratt.

Bro. Marsh:—Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, rest upon them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called. When I speak in the language of Paul, (2 Thess. 1: 3,) I undoubtedly express the feelings of every heart that enjoys the blessed hope, and feel we are nearing its consummation. “We are bound to thank God always for you brethren, as it is meet, because your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other, aboundeth.” The time has been when the brethren universally, could feel the force of this scripture, and the time now is, all that have an earnest of the inheritance, are increasing their faith, and their love more fully abounds. But it is lamentable to think there are but few of this character in this time of peril.

It is a time when we can feel the force of the prophet’s words, “Let the priest, the ministers of the Lord weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them:” but come Lord Jesus, and be “glorified in thy saints, and admired in all that believe,” &c.

Bro. D. Johnson, Collins Centre, August 29th, writes:—We have no preaching from those who are looking for the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven, and have had none during the year east; but we had a sermon last Sunday, from Dr. Hudson, of Massachusetts, which was like cold water to a thirsty soul. He set forth many of the truths contained in the New Testament, and was faithful in exposing the corruptions of the church.—He was bold in giving the cry, “come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.” The whisper began to go around the house, “he is a Millerite, he is a Millerite;” (I know not that he is one) he said he cared not what they called him, but he meant to declare the truth as he understands it. He is a friend to the poor especially the slave.

The severities of which Bro. J.—complains, we think he will see if he will examine again, relate more to doctrine than persons. Plainness of speech, with kindness of spirit, should ever characterize our communications.

The Advent Believer's Response.

"He who testifieth these things saith, 'Surely I come quickly.' Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

O this is not the promised rest,
A pilgrim here I roam;
When the meek are in the new earth blest;
O then I'll find my home.

To me, this world seems dark and drear,
When scoffers proudly say,
'Where is thy God?' and, void of fear,
Laugh at the Judgment Day.

But oh what pangs our Savior bore,
In lone Gethsemane,
What throes, and pains, his bosom tore,
On the accursed tree.

My trust's in thine omnipotence,
Thy Word's my staff and stay,
With this sure prop, this strong defence,
Thy cause, I'll ne'er betray.

My heart is with the tried and true,
Who faithful still remain.
Be of good cheer, ye waiting few,
Our labor is not vain.

Tho' troubled waves may o'er us roll,
While lasts the cloudy day,
We'll love as with one heart and soul,
And for each other pray.

Soon we shall meet the loved and lost,
Who sleep below the sod,
They'll come up with the shining host,
When sounds the trump of God.

O what a joyful countless throng,
In spotless white array,
Will join to swell the nuptial song,
On the bright bridal day.

Roll on thy chariot, old Time,
Mete out thy stinted course,
Earth graneth to renew her prime,
To bloom free from the curse.

The 'heirs' 'midst fiery trials groan
'To reach their native home;
Burden'd, they cry with melting tone,
'Come, O Lord Jesus, come.'

A LITTLE ONE.

From the Advent Herald.

THE FOUR UNIVERSAL KINGDOMS.

BY I. E. JONES.

Prophecy is the glass through which we see the future, as history is the vista through which we survey the past. Without these, all would be a blank to man, save the little that passes before him. Prophecy is a great highway, extending through time to eternity, called, "the Path of the Just," which shines more and more, by every successive fulfilment, "unto the perfect day."—Rev. 4: 18. It is a light unto which we do well to take heed till the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts." 2 Peter 1: 19.

As Nebuchadnezzar lay musing on the past and present, "thoughts came into his mind concerning the future;" and it pleased Him who revealeth secrets, to make known to him what shall come to pass. Daniel 2: 29. He saw in his dream a great image, whose brightness was excellent, and form terrible; verses 31-35.—"This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his sides of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. He saw till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon the feet, and ground it to chaff, and the wind carried it all away, that no place was found for it:—and the stone became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

Daniel informs Nebuchadnezzar that this image symbolizes four universal monarchies, which should span the whole arch of time, to the universal establishment of the kingdom of God.—36-45. A child that can read, can understand this. Observe; there are to be but four intervening kingdoms.

1. "Thou art this head of gold." Compare verses 37, 38, with Jer. 27: 7, and Gen. 1: 26-28.

2. "After thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee." 39. Chapter 5: 30, 31, shows what kingdom conquered Babylon, and was, therefore, next after it. This gives us the breasts and arms of silver. Cyrus entered Babylon at the head of the united forces of Media and Persia, and took it in the name of his uncle, and by marriage, father-in-law, Cyaxares, or Darius I. As Medo Persia conquered the first, it was itself the second kingdom.

3. "And another third kingdom of brass shall bear rule over all the earth." 39. To find this, we will turn to chap. 8. Daniel sees a ram, pushing in three cardinal points, previously standing in the fourth point, so that no beast could stand before him. This ram, Gabriel in the 20th v. informs him, symbolizes the Medes and Persians. He then sees a goat coming from the west, or all the world, with such rapidity, that he does not touch the ground, he runs unto the ram, is moved with choler against him, smites him, breaks his two horns, casts him down to the ground, and stamps upon him. This goat, in verse 21, is said to symbolize Grecia. Grecia, therefore, as it overcame Medo Persia, which was the second, was itself the third kingdom.

4. "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron." 40. To find this, we will turn to Luke 2: 1.—"And it came to pass in those days, that a decree went out from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed." That Rome, and not Grecia in its divided state after Alexander's death, was symbolized by the legs of iron, as "the fourth kingdom," is very evident, from several reasons. (1.) This dream made known to Nebuchadnezzar what should come to pass in the "latter days;" (verse 28,) a phrase, which it is agreed by all Commentators, when used in the Old Testament, means the Messiah's or the Gospel days. Whereas, Egypt, the last division of Greece, was conquered by the Romans more than 30 years before Messiah came.

(2.) The kingdom symbolized by the iron was to be stronger than the others. Ver. 40. "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise." Whatever the fourth kingdom was, verse 42 shows after its division, as represented by the toes, part of iron and part of clay, it was to be only "partly strong and partly broken."

(3.) The fourth kingdom was to reach to the universal establishment of the kingdom of God, verses 34, 35, 44. And whether this means the universal reign of grace, as some contend, or the destruction of all the wicked and regeneration of the earth, is immaterial to the argument; as neither has yet occurred, and yet Greece has long since ceased to have dominion. The zenith of Roman glory, indicated by the legs of iron, was evidently in the reign of Augustus Cæsar, in which time the Savior made his advent. He had much the longest and most prosperous reign of any of the Cæsars, so that it has ever since been called the "Augustan Age."

We now descend into the feet, the last department of the image, Ver. 41. This kingdom was to be "divided," and lose a part of its strength; and remain in that condition to the end, symbolized by iron and clay mixed, but not adhering together. Marchiaval relates, that between A. D. 356 and 483, the Goths invaded western Rome, and settled ten kingdoms, or dynasties. Gibbon says, that at that time, hundreds of thousands of naked savages poured down on Western Rome, followed by famine and pestilence. This movement, commonly called the "Northern Invasion," prepared the way for the establishment of the Papacy, destroyed literature, and cast the world into a night called the "Dark ages."

Ever since the Reformation began by Luther, the wrath of God, like a blighting mildew, has been settling down upon every Roman Catholic nation in the world. France and Austria are the only remaining strength of the Papal church. And France, like a rope of sand, is ready to fall to pieces at the death of Louis Phillippe; while Austria, pent up in superstition, refuses the improvements which give strength to other nations where freedom of speech and faith are allowed, and is tending downward. Spain, Portugal, and Italy, once the glory of all lands, and the South American States, which sprang from them, are like a reed shaken of the wind. While England, the United States, and Russia, are like iron—and have in them the strength of Rome in her golden days. For three hundred years this last item has been in a course of perfect fulfilment!

Thus far we see that this "path of prophecy is a shining light," reaching "unto the perfect day."

We have passed the head of gold, Babylon;—the breasts and arms of silver, Medo Persia; the belly and sides of brass, Grecia; the legs of iron, the greatest strength of which, was at the first Advent; the feet, the division of Rome from A. D. 356 to 483, and, passing more than a millenary, we come to the toes, and have passed three hundred years in them! Surely, Sir Robert Peel, in his address to the British Parliament, some five years since, and Doctor O. Dewey, in a discourse about the same time, were authorized in saying nearly in the same words, "that to every attentive observer, every aspect of the times, received in the light of the past, warrants the conviction that we are on the eve of an universal change."

The next great event of the prophecy, is the smiting of the image, not on the head, but the feet, when the whole shall be carried away, and an eternal state begin. On whomsoever that stone shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Matt. 21: 44. Unless, as one has said, prophecy turns around and flows back: we must be upon the very last verge of the present reign of sin and death, and soon the "last trump" will sound in a tone like the thunders of all past ages, gathered into one voice—"Come to judgment! come to judgment."

In chapter 7th, Daniel is carried over the same line of events, by different figures, in fuller detail. Instead of an image with four metals, representing the four great monarchies which were to intervene before the universal establishment of the kingdom of God; he stands and sees four great beasts rise up out of the sea, diverse one from the other. The first was like a lion, and had two wings; its wings were plucked, and it was made to stand upon its feet like a man, and a man's heart was given unto it. Verse 4. This is instead of the head of gold, and represents Babylon; the wings, the rapidity of Nebuchadnezzar's conquests; the rest, his humiliation and reformation. The second, like a bear, was lifted up on one side, and had in its mouth three ribs; and they said to it, "Arise, devour much flesh," ver. 5. This was in the place of the breasts and arms of silver; and represented the cruelty of the Medes and Persians; its being lifted up on one side, the kings coming mostly from the Persian side; the ribs, Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt; its principal provinces. The third was like a leopard, and had four wings, and four heads. V. 6. This was instead of the belly and sides of brass; its wings representing the four generals by whom Alexander slew to conquest, and between whom the kingdom was divided after his death.

The fourth was a nondescript, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly, having ten horns, ver. 7. This is instead of the legs of iron, and the feet of iron and clay, and represents Rome, subsequently divided between ten Gothic kings.

He then saw the thrones cast down, and the Ancient of days set upon a throne of fire, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool. A river of fire went forth before him, thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened, verses 9, 10. This was in the place of the stonemitting the image and grinding it to chaff; carrying it away so that no place was found for it, and becoming a great mountain and filling the whole earth.

Verses 17 and 23 show that these four beasts symbolized the four great monarchies of this world. Verse 15, shows that the fourth beast principally interested, astonished, and distressed Daniel, so much so, that the first three did not excite the least comparative interest with him.

A few facts will explain this, and also show with certainty, that the fourth kingdom was Rome and not Grecia, after it was divided by Alexander's four generals. This kingdom was "dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly;" it "devoured the whole earth, and trod it down, and broke it in pieces." It "grieved Daniel's spirit in the midst of his body, and troubled or astonished his head." Although Daniel inquires, in verse 16, respecting the whole beast, the ten horns, &c., yet it is evident, that the "little horn," verse 29, to him formed the worst feature of this worst beast.

1. Now Babylon, Medo Persia, and Grecia, did not put to death but about 200,000 Jews.—Rome put to death 1,100,000 in one war; following which, she destroyed in her ten Pagan persecutions, about 3,000,000; since which, she has destroyed from 50,000,000 to 68,000,000 of Christians in her Papal form!

2. Nearly the whole Protestant world have been agreed, that this "little horn" symbolized the Papacy, as they have also that the image and the four beasts symbolized the four great monarchies of antiquity. But, without taking this for granted, we will briefly examine the evidence of it.

It being settled that Rome is the kingdom symbolized by the fourth beast, we have then to find first, the ten kings represented by the ten horns, vs. 19, 20; 2, the "plucking up of three of them;"

and 3, the next power in this kingdom must clearly be the one symbolized by the "little horn." I have already quoted Machiaval, a political historian, as showing that Rome was invaded and divided by ten Gothic and Vandal kings, between A. D. 356 and 538. Other historians have found at a later date, 11, 12, 13 kings; but ten was clearly the original number. According to Machiaval, and others, (Hist. of Florence, B. 1.;—Bishop Lloyd, in Lowth's Commentary on the prophets, pp. 381, 382; Doctor Hale's Analysis of Chronology, v. 2, B. 1. pp. 536-8,) the first ten were as follows:—1. The Huns in Hungary, A. D. 356. 2. The Ostrogoths, in Mysia, A. D. 377. 3. The Visigoths, in Pannonia, 378. 4. The Franks in France, 407. 5. The Vandals, in Africa, 407. 6. The Sueves and Alans, in Gascoyne and Spain, 407. 7. The Burgundians, in Burgundy, 407. 8. The Heruli Ruggu, or Thuringi, in Italy, 476. 9. The Saxons and Angles in Britain, 476. 10. The Lombards in Gennany, 488.

The next step on this prophetic path, is to ascertain the "plucking up" of "three" of these ten original kings, or dynasties, to make room for the power symbolized by the "little horn."

In A. D. 493, the Heruli were overcome by the Ostrogoths. In 534, the Vandals were subverted in Africa, by Justinian, the emperor of the East, to make way for the Catholics. And in a protracted and various struggle in Italy, between Belisarius, who commanded the forces of the emperor of the East, and the Ostrogoths of Rome, the latter were subdued. This was a religious war, for the purpose of removing an Arian power which stood in the way of a decree of Justinian, made in 533, namely, that "the Bishop of Rome should be the head of all the holy churches, that nothing should be touched, moved, or handled, however manifest and unquestionable, without the knowledge and approbation of his Apostolic see." This was the next power in Rome. This power too, was "diverse from the others;" it being a religious one, which not only exalted itself above all earthly governments, but also above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sat in the temple of God, showing himself that he was God." 2 Thess. 2: 3, 4.

Thus we see that events, the greatest and most awful recorded in history, clearly fix the fourth beast as the Symbol of Rome; the ten horns upon that beast as the symbols of the ten Gothic and Vandal kings, which divided it; and the little horn, as the symbol of the Papacy, which arose on the subversion of the first three of those kings; the last two of the three being plucked up expressly to make way for it. See Gibbon's Dec. and Fall of Rome, abridged, chapter 28. Thus far, this path of prophecy "shines clearly towards the perfect day."

The saints were to be delivered into the hand of the little horn, for a time, times, and an half, verse 25, which extended to the setting of the judgment upon it, and the taking away of its dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end. See Rev. 12: 6, 14. In these verses it will be seen that the time, times, and a half, were expressed by 1260 days. As the Papacy did not cease to make war upon the saints in so many literal days, we must look for the other meaning of a day in Scripture, namely, a year. See Ezek. 4: 6; Num. 14: 33, 34. When, in figurative prophecy, a government is reduced to a beast, a year is reduced to a day.

I have alluded to a series of events, extending from A. D. 527 to A. D. 541, which resulted in the establishment of the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome. 1260 years from the last date, would extend to A. D. 1801. In that year, the Pope signed away his grant of power, which was received from Justinian, from A. D. 533 to A.

D. 541. A series of events began in A. D. 17-97, when Berthier invaded Italy, and took the Pope captive, which eventuated in that glorious result. How remarkable the instrument by whom it was effected! When the appointed time had come, an insignificant ensign, "born not a king, but born kings to rule,"—darts forth to the head of France, like a meteor shooting athwart the heavens, and makes every throne in Europe tremble, and humbles the proud dynasty of popes to sign articles of his own dictation: and his mission done, he sinks away into exile! This was God's strange work. He will hide pride from man.

When I look over the puerile attempts which Roman Catholics, and, of late, some Protestants, have made to suit this prophecy of the fourth beast to Greece, in its divided state, and the "little horn" to Antiochus Epiphanes, who governed one of its divisions, my heart grows sick. In addition to the foregoing arguments, turn to the 5th verse, where it is said that that horn had "eyes like a man." Those expositors believe this was said of a literal man, Antiochus, instead of a dynasty, or government! Why, then, was it not added that he had a nose, or ears? Is it so singular a thing for a king to have eyes, that it must be predicted of him, that those who lived when he reigns, or afterwards, may know that he is, or was the one? With more veneration for truth than man, I must say that this looks to me like leaving a plain post-road, to wander among briars.

If the view which we have taken be correct, the opening of this century witnessed the last event in this line of prophecy before the judgment. On this prophetic highway, we have passed Babylon, Medo Persia, Grecia, Rome in her strength, her division into ten kingdoms, the subversion of three of them, the establishment and continuance of the Papacy in her coercive form, making war with the saints and overcoming them for 1260 years; the signing away of that grant of power in the opening of this century—and have still passed on more than forty years towards the final judgment!

In this survey, we have witnessed the rise and fall of the four great monarchies of antiquity, and the destruction of nearly 100,000,000 saints.—This we have seen—but ah! what are we to see in the future, or the next thing? The Ancient of days sitting on a throne of fire, rolling on fiery wheels, with a river of fire flowing forth before him; and thousand thousands ministering unto him; and ten thousand times ten thousand standing before him, with the judgment set, and the books opened! We are to see the kingdom of God break in pieces all human kingdoms, and consume them; and the body of the fourth beast destroyed and given to the burning flame. We are to see the Lord Jesus Christ revealed from heaven, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power: when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day. What a thought!

As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away; but their lives were prolonged for a season and time. Ver. 12. When Babylon was overcome, the government was changed, but the people still lived. So with Medo Persia and Grecia. But, when the fourth beast is overcome, its body (the people, the head signifying government) shall be destroyed by the 'burning flame.' The image is to become like chaff: and the chaff will Christ burn with unquenchable fire, when he cleanses his floor.—Matt. 3: 12.

Seeing that ye look for such things, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness.

wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath died for us; that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. Be strong, fear not; behold your God will come; he will come and save you! Yet a "little while," and the saints of the Most High will take the kingdom, and possess it forever, even forever and ever. A few short months at most, and he whom God hath appointed heir of all things, will ascend the throne of David, and commence his reign in righteousness and glory! Then, with the unnumbered hosts of God's servants, with all that fear him, both small and great, you will, to all eternity, enjoy the privilege of praising God and the Lamb, and saying Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth! He which testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly! Amen.

ROCHESTER, SEPTEMBER 23, 1846.

Close of Vol. XI.

This number closes the present volume of our paper. Our thanks are due to those kind brethren who have aided in sustaining it so long. We still solicit your co-operation. We believe our Master will soon come, and give us a discharge from our toils. It is our duty however, to faithfully "occupy until he come." This, by his blessing, we mean to do.

"Bible Advocate."

This paper for Sept. 12th contains some further developments of its views on the first resurrection, binding and loosing the dragon, and other sentiments congenial with the faith peculiar to the 'Advocate.' We seldom have read a communication, of the same length as the one to which we refer, that contains more error than this one. And it deeply pains our inmost soul to know that we have brethren, professing to be looking for the immediate appearing of the Lord, who will advocate, countenance, or aid directly or indirectly in propagating such absurdities.—Do, brethren, look at this whole matter in the light of truth and sober reason, and act as we should in view of soon standing in the judgment. This is no time to trifle with the word of the Lord, nor join hands with those who do: we mean we should not join with them in the propagation of error. So far as they bear the fruits of the Christian we should love and fellowship them; but when they turn aside from the plain truths of the Bible, and attempt to subvert any of its fundamental doctrines, we should not go with them, nor give them our countenance.

We do most confidently believe the blessed Lord will soon come and hush all the contentions of this fallen world, when those who love and obey the truth will receive their everlasting, glorious reward. In view of the nearness of that glad day, we are sometimes almost persuaded to let error run unmolested, thinking it will not progress far in its hurtful course before its deep and foul channels will be dried up, by the purifying fires of the day of the Lord.—But then such words as these, 'Occupy till I come,' prompt us to grapple again and again with the intruding foe, whether he appears in the character of an honest but misguided brother, or an avowed seoff-er at our blessed hope.

The article in the 'Advocate,' now under consideration, commences upon wrong premises, and as a matter of course, the conclusions to which it comes are erroneous. It supposes that the 'Dragon,' 'Satan,' that 'Old Serpent,' the 'Devil,' in Rev. 3: 10, and in the 12th and 20th chapters, mean pagan Rome. That this view is not correct is evident from the explanation of the angel, in Rev. 12: 9. 'And the dragon was cast out.' Who was he?—The very next sentence tells, 'that OLD SERPENT,' called the DEVIL and SATAN, and which deceiveth the whole world.' Where is he thus called? and how has he deceived the whole world? In many places in the other scriptures he bears these titles; and he commenced his deception with our first parents in the garden of Eden. See the account given of the 'serpent' in Gen. 3. Through his deception, in the garden, Adam, and in him the whole world, was deceived, and fatal was that deception. Paradise, or the kingdom, was lost, and fallen man was subjected to all the miseries of six thousand years of the reign of Satan, the Devil, that old Serpent, &c. The Son of God was promised, and came, 'that through death, he might DESTROY him that hath the power of death, that is the DEVIL.' Heb. 2: 14. Glorious mission; soon the work will be accomplished, and Paradise restored to the pure in heart.

Rev. 12th shows clearly a conflict that Michael, or Christ, and his angels, for a certain time, would have with the Dragon and his angels, v. 7. In order to mark the time of this conflict, the opposing power to the truth is described under the character of a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, which most clearly points out Pagan Rome, as the power, or agent, of the Devil, that would at this particular time war against Michael and his angels, or Christ and his followers. The devil commenced his work of deception, and war, through the agency of the serpent in the garden of Eden, has carried it on through every unholy power, especially Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome in all its forms. This arch deceiver, and his angels, or agents, will continue to war against the Son of God, and his angels, or agents, until, as is described in Rev. 20, the mighty Angel, or the Promised Seed which was to bruise the Serpent's head, comes down from heaven, binds the dragon, that old serpent, called the devil and Satan, and shuts him up in the bottomless pit for a thousand years. Then the first resurrection will take place, the earth be cleansed, and the glorious reign of Christ and his people commence, on the new earth, or Paradise restored.

The principle that would make the dragon in Rev. 20 actually pagan Rome, because pagan Rome in the 12th chap. is called the dragon, that old serpent, the devil, and Satan, would make pagan Rome the only devil named in the Bible, which is a gross absurdity, apparent to all. The dragon, or devil, or Satan, in both cases, and in every case in the Bible, strictly, is the same, the arch enemy of God and man, whom Paul calls the devil, whom Christ came to destroy. When the serpent is the devil's agent, it bears his name; and when pagan Rome is the master piece of Satan, that wicked power bears his name. The binding of the devil or Satan, will be, not simply the binding of one of his agents, pagan Rome, which bears his name, but the devil himself will be bound, and of course his agents will have no power to act.

Speaking of the binding of the dragon, the Advocate says:—

"Belisarius, the Roman General, it is well known, enforced the Justinian code of laws in France, A.D. 539. As this gave the Pope his power and great authority; it may well be reckoned as the time Pagan Ecclesiastical Rome bound Pagan Civil Rome. It is worthy of note that whatever agency binds the dragon, descends, or lowers itself to do it."

According to the case as here stated, Pagan Rome, or the dragon, bound itself: for it is said that the 'Roman general enforced the Justinian code of laws.' But the facts in the case prove that Pagan Rome was not bound in 539; nor at any previous or subsequent period. At this date, only a part of Rome was converted (convert and bind are two different things) to Catholicism: the eastern division was still pagan. The dragon power had its seat at Constantinople until conquered by the Mohammedan power, in A. D. 1449. Papal Rome never did convert, bind, or conquer the dragon power. By what authority the Advocate makes Ecclesiastical Rome the mighty angel that descended from heaven, to bind Satan, the devil, we are not informed: and how it makes descend mean lowering, we are not told.—The authority is not drawn from the Bible; but doubtless has its origin in the mistaken mind of the very fallible author of these unscriptural dogmas.

Again, the Advocate is under the necessity of materially changing the character of the dragon, during the thousand years of his being bound, so that when he is loosed he bears no more resemblance to the original dragon than Christian Europe does to ancient Pagan Rome. This the Advocate admits in these words:

"Nevertheless, at the period of release, it may be found somewhat modified, and adapted to the change the world has undergone during the ages of its imprisonment."

How different from this is the case as recorded by John. He teaches us that instead of the dragon being bound a Pagan dragon and loosed a Christian dragon, he is the same when loosed that he was when bound: he was 'that old Serpent, which is the devil and Satan,' when bound, (Rev. 20: 2) and 'Satan—the devil' when loosed. vs. 7, 10.

Admitting that Papal Rome was the mighty angel that came down from heaven, and bound Pagan Rome in A. D. 639, (which is not true) there is nothing in the history of either Rome pagan or papal, one thousand years from that date, that in the least will justify the conclusion that either a part or all of the dragon power was then loosed. What, we ask, took place in A. D. 1539, which is 1000 years from 539, that will answer to 'the rest of the dead' who 'lived not again until the thousand years were finished,'—the loosing and going out of Satan 'to deceive the nations'? Nothing. But, about this very date, instead of Satan being loosed and going out to deceive the nations, his deception was exposed: for, about this time the mighty Reformation under Luther commenced. in Western Rome, while Eastern Rome, over which the dragon power was last exercised, was still under Mohammedan control, and remains in this condition to the present hour. Instead of pagan Rome ever gaining the ascendancy again, the 'little horn' is to prevail until the Ancient of Days shall come. This prediction forever annihilates the strange theory of loosing pagan Rome.

The following exposition of Rev. 20: 4, 5, by the 'Advocate,' shows what fearful liberties a favorite theory will move some persons to take with the Word of the Lord.

"What! did those that were beheaded live and reign! In view of the glorious triumphs of faith, John affirms that they did. Jesus said, 'If a man keep my saying he shall never see death.' Also, he said, 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and BELIEVETH ON Him that sent me, HATH Everlasting Life, and shall not enter into condemnation: but IS PASSED FROM DEATH UNTO LIFE.' 'This is the first resurrection.' John has a view of the martyr church during the days of great tribulation. And inasmuch as the more believers partake of the sufferings of Christ, the more they may be said to reign with Him, those that overcame by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony, during the thousand years, were most glorious examples of the passing from death unto life, or the first resurrection."

If here is not a wrong understanding of the word of God, then we know not how it can be wrongly interpreted. Instead of the saints actually living and reigning with Christ, we are told that they only lived 'in view of the glorious triumphs of faith'!—Plainly, they did not live at all! only as every person lives who experiences a change of heart!—They did not reign a thousand years, but 'those that overcame during the 1000 years, were most glorious examples of the passing from death unto life, or conversion. And finally, to cap the climax of absurdities, we are taught that the reign with Christ a thousand years is, the excess of suffering—or, in the words of the Advocate, 'Inasmuch as the more believers partake of the sufferings of Christ, the more they may be said to reign with him.' How could a believer in the Bible advance such a sentiment?—"It is through much tribulation that we enter the kingdom." 'If we suffer we shall also reign with him.' 'And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.' Rev. 21: 4. Whatever, and wherever, the reigning with Christ may be, it is freed from all suffering, as the Scriptures clearly teach; but the Advocate is under the necessity of placing the suffering and reign together!

Another specimen of expounding the word of the Lord must suffice for the present.

"But the rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years were finished." Some suppose that the term, 'rest of the dead,' refers to the bound dragon who had no political existence during the thousand years. But does it not rather comprise all those that dwell upon the earth—all who worshipped the beast or his image, or received his mark in their foreheads or in their hands—this 'worshipping,' receiving, &c., prevented their living and reigning with Christ. Thus they were hindered from passing from death unto life, or having part in the first resurrection."

Such expositions of the plain word of inspiration, are painful in the extreme to those who would not in the least have the meaning of that Word perverted. We do once more entreat the conductors of the Advocate to pause in their course—listen to the voice of reason and truth; and at this last moment of perils to God's scattered and tried flock, instead of contributing in any degree to their perplexity, join, with fresh zeal, with your brethren in strengthening the feeble, enlightening the uninformed, guiding the wandering, comforting the afflicted, and inspiring unshaken confidence in the speedy fulfilment of the most precious promises of the word of the Lord. We love you, and as brethren dearly beloved, we kindly, but plainly and faithfully warn you of the sad consequences of so plain a departure from the Word as is clearly manifest in the case under consideration. Remember that error may appear harmless at first, yet it ultimately will 'eat as doth a canker, or gangrene.' 1 Tim. 2: 17.

The reflections of our brother in Illinois on the termination of the 69 weeks, &c., we think unnecessary to publish. Our reasons for this conclusion in substance are given in our last week's paper, in the note headed, "Bro. Weston's Article." We do not decline the article because we dissent from the sentiment it expresses, but because sufficient, we think, at least for the present, has been said on this unimportant point. The following counsel, in our brother's closing remarks, should be heeded by all. In answering the supposed inquiry relative to the use of his communication, he says:

"Now the reader may say, What is the use of all this? I will tell you, the sequel is this,—that we do not lay down our watch, nor suffer our faith in the promises to fail, although we should not see our Lord come to his temple short of 6 or 8 months yet. He that shall come will come. Amen. Let us live by faith unshaken, keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, strive not about words to not profit, suffer not the adversary to get advantage over our frailties. For we are yet in the flesh, seeing but through a glass darkly."

Declension among the Methodists.

A correspondent of the Rochester Daily Democrat, in remarking on the doings of the Methodist Genesee Annual Conference recently held at Lyons, N. Y. says:—

"A very able report was submitted upon the state of discipline in the bounds of this body, which showed that the ancient strictness of this sect in that respect to be much relaxed; and the report feelingly deplored the fact. It set forth that love-feasts, class-meetings, kneeling during prayer, &c., were much neglected, and that a general departure and declension from the distinctive tenets of methodism was beginning to prevail. But it was resolved that no portion of such report should be published, further than to the ministers of this conference, for the reason as stated, that such publication of the facts brought to view in the report would be used to the disadvantage of methodism, by the papers, which, it was also asserted, were hostile to them."

Astonishing! a Methodist Conference, that once truth-loving and holy people, now withhold the truth, because they are fearful it will be made to operate against methodism! A similar, if not the same, principle actuated a similar conference, when one of its members said, 'If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans will come and take away both our place and nation.' Jno 11: 47, 48. Each had a higher regard for their sect than the truth. That came upon the Jews, which they by a rejection of the truth, meant to escape. The consequences of this official smothering of the truth by the Methodists, the future must tell. But we tremble in view of the fearful doom, not only of the Methodists, but of any enlightened body of the professed ministers of Christ, who, for the sake of sect or party, will, by a vote or any other way, withhold the truth of the moral and spiritual wretchedness of their own body from other bodies of professed Christians. "Wo to the rebellious children, saith the Lord, that take counsel, but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may add sin to sin." Isa. 30: 1.

Meeting at Attien.

We, with many others, were disappointed in not seeing and hearing Bro. Miller at this meeting.—Causes to us unknown prevented his attendance. We reached there on Saturday. Found a goodly number of the joyful saints assembled in conference and prayer meeting. Bro. Bywater soon addressed the congregation on the time of the advent. We spoke in the afternoon and evening on Faith, its nature, how obtained, its blessings, and the evidences on which true faith is based. The result of the investigation we think served greatly to strengthen the brethren in the conclusion that 'we have not followed cunningly devised fables,' but are fully justified by the plain and positive word of the Lord, in looking for the Son of man at about this time.

Saturday evening, news by Telegraph and Rail Road express was brought that N. Adams, a brother-in-law at Sennett, was "dead or dying," and that my "wife was very sick." This intelligence made it duty to return home early on Sunday morning. I found my wife, whose health is generally very delicate, just beginning to recover from a very low prostration of all her powers, caused by the sudden and unexpected news of the death of a brother. It was but a few months since she had been called to part with a step-father, a mother, an only sister, and two neices, in the same place where her brother lived.—Under these circumstances, the sudden and very unexpected news that a brother was "dead or dying," was too much for frail human nature to endure, and for a while it sunk beneath its load of human wo. But through the blessing of God she is again in comfortable circumstances, though yet very feeble in body.

We have learned that the meeting on the Sabbath and Sabbath evening was one of deep interest and joyful hope. Bro. J. D. Johnson preached in the morning; the afternoon was devoted to the supper of the Lord, and appropriate remarks; and the evening to prayer and exhortation.

At this meeting, we were forcibly struck with the following state of things, which we believe is a sample of the general condition of our entire world.

1. A general and almost universal disrelish for the glorious doctrine of the near appearing of Christ and his kingdom. We judge that this is the case from the fact that but very few, with the exception of believers, attend our meetings.

2. The few who do attend, with now and then a rare exception, are unmoved by the most weighty Bible truths we can present. And, indeed, they not unfrequently treat the whole matter of the coming of the Lord with marked indifference and scorn.

3. Believers in this doctrine we have never seen more deeply devoted to the cause, or wholly consecrated to God than at this time. They never have had a more joyful, enlightened, and well grounded faith and hope than now.

In short, the line between those who will receive the truth and those who will not, is evidently nearly drawn. The harvest and vintage are about ripe: the one to be gathered into the garner of the Lord, and the other to be trodden in the 'great wine-press of the wrath of God.' What a fearful moment!—In God and his truth is our only safety. There may we abide.

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

In our last we referred to the arrival in Scotland of Bro. Cochran, and of the desire which he and others there, had expressed for a visit from us. We have since arranged for Brother Hutchinson to go to Scotland, towards the end of this month. At present, he is with Bro. Winter, at Lewes, about sixty miles from here, delivering a course of lectures.

Bro. Paul has favored us with a minute of the state of things in Ireland. He says his efforts in the Advent cause there, have been from a variety of causes, of a comparatively limited extent. "In the North I travelled a little, and visited a few places, where, in much weakness, I endeavored to proclaim Jesus as the only Savior, and as the glory speedily to be revealed. Some few hailed with joy the Scripture evidences of the Advent near; one in particular, who detained me a week at his place, but who has since been removed by death, did often cry out,—

"Hope of our hearts, O Lord, appear!
Thou glorious star of day;
Shine forth and chase our gloomy night,
With all our fears away.
Strangers on earth, we sigh for thee!
O, leave thy Father's throne;
Come, with a shout of victory, Lord,
And claim us for thine own."

"Many in my native city (Londonderry,) said of me, 'he is beside himself;' still some searched the Scriptures to see whether these things were so. In Newtown, Stuard, I visited the house of a Roman Catholic, and began to talk with the family on the kingdom of God, and tho' they were strenuous adherents to the Romish faith, I have seldom had a warmer reception, or kinder treatment. I was entirely ignorant of their peculiar tenets, until explaining my chart on which 'Papal Rome' is inscribed. So deep was their interest, that they proposed bringing in a number of their neighbors, when I held an Advent meeting in the house of one held in captivity by that power which has 'waxed exceeding great.' In Dublin, the theme on which preachers and people take delight on dwelling, is the world's complete conversion. But though I asked many for even plausible reasons for such a hope, I got none. On one occasion, I went to hear a Presbyterian minister, who furnished his congregation with a pleasing picture of 'the whole world converted.' Among other things he stated, that a certain passage in Isaiah, completely swept away the foundation of a belief in the personal reign of Christ. Shortly after, I waited upon him, told him my object; at which he seemed surprised, but treated me politely. I read to him the passage referred to, together with the context—'I will destroy the wicked.' This said I, differs widely from converting them. I tried to point out to him the error under which he was laboring, from other passages of Scripture; he seemed, however, quite unprepared to defend his position.

The influence of Popery is fearfully extensive in Ireland, even among those who partially know the truth: they are afraid to read and to judge, to prove all things. But notwithstanding all the worldly wisdom, and deep laid schemes of the Papacy, its time is limited—destruction hangs over it. O, my country, long hast thou cried to heaven to have the chains of thy earthly bondage rent: but O, mistaken still! Still blindly, ah, willingly enslaved. The truth of God points to a day of freedom from the oppression of man, and all spiritual powers—from the thralldom of Satan's servitude. That day is just at hand: will ye then be free?"

Here follows a lengthy description of London, its beggary, licentiousness, intemperance, the World's Temperance Convention, and a sermon from Dr. Beecher, of Philadelphia, &c.

On beggary, it is said:—

"That four millions, or one seventh of the population of Great Britain, are said to be paupers. There are 1,200,000 receiving parochial relief, and there is an equal number of cases of semi-starvation."

On licentiousness it is remarked that "It is enthroned here; she is, next to intemperance, the great Diana of this city. All you have heard and read upon this subject is true to the letter, and a great deal more: debauched characters swarm the streets like locusts, as soon as the sun goes down: they are everywhere—their name is legion. There are herds of prostitutes, of every age, and adapted to every class of condition in life, ready to assault the most virtuous passer-by, and to entice into the way to hell, the young and the unwary. They unblushingly convert the streets into brothels, or that which is nearly as disgraceful. Gin palaces, beer shops, cabs, omnibusses, are all auxiliaries to their nefarious plots and sins; for midnight alone closes the day in London. Nearly as many people and carriages are in the streets, and shops open, particularly those for the sale of fermented liquors, at 12, as with us at 9 o'clock. A bolder and more daring crew, could hardly have disgraced Sodom itself."

On intemperance it is said:—

"The cost or expenditure on alcoholic drinks in this country, is said to amount to £65,000,000 sterling annually, or more than the whole annual revenue of the country. In 1843, the United Kingdom consumed more than 24,000,000 quarts of ardent spirits! 7,090,000 quarters of the people's food are annually converted into alcoholic drinks! 48,000 maltsters alone are engaged in this manufacture."

In the World's temperance convention, recently held in London, which our brethren attended, "It was stated that the liquor sellers excel in sale all the sellers of bread, meat, and vegetables;—that 60,000 are annually poisoned to death in Great Britain, by strong drink; that England is the most drunken nation on the face of the earth; that drunkenness among men, women, and children, "is a thing unknown elsewhere in the wide world, nor was it known in the worst days of the Roman empire." Some painful facts were related, reflecting severely upon many of our foreign missionaries, in connexion with their use of wines, &c."

The synopsis of Dr. Beecher's discourse, most conclusively shows, that Mr. Beecher, like Mr. Dowling, and nearly every Protestant minister of any note, is looking for an important change in the political, moral, and religious condition of our world, very soon to take place. In this they are right, but in the character of the change expected, they are mistaken. They think the world is soon to be converted, while the evidences in the case most clearly prove that the wicked are to be destroyed, the earth cleansed, and the saints made immortal, at the actual appearing of Christ.—Here is the synopsis:—

"His text was, Isaiah 65: 17-23:—

Jerusalem is the gospel church—all this text is applicable to the gospel day: new creation is a moral universal regeneration. In the gospel day the meek shall inherit the earth, not by force, but by the universal conversion of men. The god of this world will make trial of what sin can do, and then God will make trial of his grace, and will put out the light of sin and sinners: the sun and planets will be forgotten when God shall consummate this renovation. Some think these things will be fulfilled after the Advent of Christ; but not so. They will be fulfilled here, in this world.

The object of this discourse will be, to show this day is near, "at the door"—Christ is coming in his glory. Some good men object to this view, because of the evil of the times, judgments, conspiracies of nations, &c. But despotic and wicked governments will be crushed. This work has already begun. France, England, and other countries, have had a share in carrying it forward.

2. Another sign of the near approach of this day is manifest in the rapid advance of civil liberty—governments for the people—democracy for and by the people: old castles crumbling away, feudal systems gone, wars ceased, four nations united in amity (!) (referring to England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales,) and are on the advance in education, light, and liberty. America also is the free descendant of England, in which the democratic principle exists. According to De Tocqueville, this principle has been in existence for the past six hundred years, and is exerting a mighty influence in America, England, and other portions of Europe. England and America have the power to renovate the world.

3d Sign. The great prophetic powers have passed away, with but one exception, and that is not an exception (!)—Paganism is gone, Popery (this is the exception) is resuscitated, and is gathering the kings of the earth to battle,—they are afraid of enlightened intellect—we know the result, our Captain will conquer.

4th Sign: The separation of Church and State. The Church in sackcloth triumphed, in the true principles of the Christian faith, for the first three centuries; but when clad in the purple robe, she fell. The Church is now moving for a separation in good earnest—Scotland is an illustration. The same principle is manifest in Prussia and Switzerland. The Church must go for itself, and the State for itself.

5th Sign. Movement for the education of the lower classes of society. Under Pagan Rome, three fourths of the people were without education; and the consequence was, the empire fell:—but now, universal education will prevail, the people are rising in their strength to promote this cause—it will go on. The knowledge of the Lord will fill the earth. In this will be made manifest, the coming of the Son of Man.

6th Sign. The reduction of education to practical purposes; illustrated in agriculture, steam, &c. By the latter, the world is brought into one neighborhood, free trade and commerce will become universal. And this is for the millennium and not for wicked men—this is Paradise!

7th Sign. Signs—God has always given signs as a prelude to any great development of his providence—we now have them. The Mahomedan power is broken—the Papal head wounded, and all are in expectation of the coming of the Son of Man!

8th Sign. The missionary spirit has been given to the church within the last fifty years. The primitive spirit with prayer for the conversion of the world. Modern missions will succeed, and take charge of every land. We need revivals of religion to furnish sanctified pastors and laborers. Home missionaries, and all benevolent institutions, for the deaf and dumb, &c., all tend to this great result. He had been praying for more holiness among the ministry, and God had answered prayer. He had visited by his Spirit, Lane Seminary, and other like institutions; and now the inquiry is, what shall be done for a higher state of piety and holiness.

9th Sign. The work of Reformation in America and England, indicates the Lord to be near at hand; referred to the diminution of traveling on the Sabbath, and the Temperance and Washingtonian movements, &c., in the United States.

Practical influence. 1st. We ought to believe this evidence that the Lord is speedily to come! Have faith, God can do it—God has said it. Each one of the above mentioned signs, indicate a purpose of God. But all these combined make it certain. We might as well doubt the being of a God. The night is far spent, the day is at hand, &c.—These signals were set to hold up your courage in these trying times. They show that Christ is at the door! It cannot be that God has carried this work so far to fail. Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!

We want picked men to enter the field. The stumbling-blocks must be taken out of the way—the way of the Lord must be prepared. He calls for action. Soon we shall hear the voice, The kingdoms of this world, &c.!

Ideas resembling the above, were frequently thrown out by some of the speakers at the Temperance Convention; especially those from America:—"The temperance cause was the harbinger of the millennium,"—"the John the Baptist of the second advent." One speaker desired the formation of a World's Temperance Union, adding, that they would fall in the rear of the "Evangelical Alliance," if they did not thus unite; and he believed they ought, as temperance advocates, to keep in advance!"

Letter from Bro. G. Needham.

Bro. Marsh:—I am on my way home from the Conference at Stilwell Prairie, Laporte Co., and tarrying a few days to preach the glad tidings here also, I have snatched a leisure moment to give you an account of the meeting.

We had a heart-comforting, and soul-cheering time. Here were brethren and sisters gathered from Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, and Wisconsin, some of them having come 170 miles; surely, "Millerism" is not quite dead! No, it lives in the hearts of God's people, and will till the consummation.

We met with Bro. Chandler and Daniels, and Sister Parks, from Illinois and Wisconsin.—They bring a good report of the blessing of God attendant on their labors. In Dodge Co., W. T. the people left their hoes in their fields, to come and hear Sister Parks, and instead of there being no interest to hear, there never was so great.—Bro. Chandler I had never before seen, but was rejoiced to meet him and mingle our prayers, exhortations, and sympathies, together. I doubt not their labors will be the means of preparing many souls for the kingdom.

We met also with Brother and Sister Seymour, who are laboring with devotion, efficiency and success, in Michigan. They seem more devoted to their work than ever. The brethren there have furnished them with the means of conveyance from place to place.

Here we met with Brn. Miller, Hoyt, N. M. and Joseph Catlin, the latter of whom, has been the apostle of the Advent faith in the northern part of Indiana. It was soul-refreshing to meet with so many tried and faithful servants of Christ, of one heart and one mind, and all expecting soon to meet in the "general conference and assembly of the first born," to part no more forever.

Owing to Providential delays, we did not arrive until Saturday morning. When the Conference assembled, one half or more of our brethren and sisters on Stilwell Prairie, were sick:—but by the blessing of God, in answer to prayer, they were all raised up and able to come to meeting before it closed. I believe the general impression was, that it was a special answer to prayer. Owing to the above cause, the aspect of the meeting at the first was very unfavorable, but the interest increased towards the close, and the final results were very happy. The attendance on the last two days was very good—last day, (Sabbath) large. Wishing to give the people all the light we could, we occupied all the day, (Sabbath) in prayer, preaching, and exhortation, and assembled on Monday to partake of the Lord's supper, and take the parting hand. It was a season of blended rejoicing and weeping. Rejoicing in each others joys, and the transcendently glorious prospect of soon meeting on the blissful shores of immortality. Weeping, that we must now part, and sympathising with each other in our trials and afflictions, which we must endure till the good Savior comes. Two individuals expressed a determination to serve the Lord. The hearts of God's people were much strengthened and encouraged by the presentation of truth at this meeting. I trust the church of Christ on Stilwell Prairie, have received a blessing which will abide till the day of the Lord Jesus. Although there has been some slight differences among them, I trust even those are removed, and they will remain of one heart and mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel, till Jesus shall say, "Well done good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

The result of the meeting has proved God's willingness still to bless; and his faithfulness to his promise. "Lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world," said our Savior. It is as good and effectual as ever. The only reason why sinners are not now saved, is because they will not. Brother or sister, who may read this, do not think your work is done up because men's hearts are hard. He that measures his labor by the discouragements he meets with, walks by sight, not by faith. I never yet found an easy place to labor in—who did? Gird on the armor then, and go forth—the night is at hand when no man can work. We may save, under God, a few more—the Lord help us.

On our return, we tarried a night at the village of Mishawaka, in St. Josephs Co. Brother Seymour got out an appointment about sundown, for a lecture, and although the notice was so short, the Disciples meeting-house was well filled by an attentive and interested congregation, which Sister and Bro. S. and myself addressed till half-past ten o'clock. The truth was gladly received by some, who manifested their interest in it at the close of the meeting.

Last evening I spoke to a small but interested congregation, and expect to speak again this evening and Lord's day, and leave for Perrysburgh on Monday. There are several in this section, who, with warm hearts, love the appearing of our Lord.

Yours, strong in the faith, waiting,
GEORGE NEEDHAM.

Jackson, Steuben Co., Ia., Sept. 5, '46.

P. S. It is the desire of the brethren that the "Herald" should copy this, that it might be published in both papers, who all rejoice in the stand Brn. Marsh, Bliss and Hale have taken relative to the "Bible Advocate," and hope its conductors will see their error and discard it, and not be the means of another schism. G. N.

Letter from Bro. W. M. Ingham.

Bro. Marsh:—I left Maine the last of May, attended the Conference at Boston; since that time I have visited the following places, viz:—Roxbury, Dorchester, Randolph, Abington, Kingston, Mattapoisett, New Boston, Fair Haven, New Bedford, and Dartmouth. I find some of the children still strong in the faith, giving glory to God, looking for speedy deliverance, believing that Christ will soon come, when the promise will be fulfilled, "If I go away I will come again, that where I am, there ye may be also." Blessed promise. The 10th day of August I returned to Boston, and left the same day to attend the camp-meeting in Enfield, Ct. We had a good meeting, a large assembly, and good order as I ever witnessed at so large a meeting. I think much good was done, and that souls will rejoice in the day of the Lord Jesus, that they attended that meeting. Many of the brethren and sisters were strong on time, believing that within a few months the Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven, with power and great glory, to the joy of his saints, but to the destruction of his enemies.

I have visited the brethren in Springfield, Hartford, and Middletown. There is a waking up to a new engagedness among some of the children, and some of the children have been reclaimed, praise the Lord. I will now tell my brethren where I stand. I embraced the Advent doctrine almost four years ago. I believed in the '43, and the 10th day theories; a few months after the passing of the time, I embraced the doctrine of the Bridegroom come, and the door shut; but I became convinced some months ago, that I was in error, and confessed it to all, and confess it still, and wish always to confess all my errors, when I find them out, and ask all whom I have injured or led astray, to forgive me.

I have looked a number of times for Jesus to come since the 10th day of the 7th month, and I am glad I have looked, and I am looking still, and expect to continue to look till he comes, and that I believe will be speedily. The evidence is very clear to my mind on this fall. I need not rehearse it, but would merely say that I understand "midst," means middle, and that Christ caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the midst of the week. Hence he must commence confirming the covenant in the fall, then the midst or middle would come in the spring, and we know that Christ was cut off in the spring. Then the 3½ years for the finishing the confirmation of the covenant, would end in the fall. It is plain from Bible, that there was an appointed time for Christ to be crucified, for his enemies attempted to take him a number of times but could not; for "his time had not come." So it looks plain to me, that "midst of the week" means the centre, for there was a specified time for Christ to be crucified, and when the time arrived he was taken, and by wicked hands was slain.

I believe the 69½ weeks or 483½ years ended in the spring of A. D. 33, and that in 1813½ yrs. from that time the 2300 days will end, which will be in the fall of '46. Well children, in view of the end of all things being at hand, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness. We should strive to be pure and holy, by hearkening to all the sayings of Jesus, and doing them. Our conversation should be in heaven, from whence we look for the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile bodies, and fashion them like Christ's glorious body.—Let us be diligent that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless. If we would be ready for the Lord's coming, we must keep ourselves, and all that we have, consecrate to God. Let us be of good cheer; the crown of glory will soon be given to all the saints. Cast not away your confidence, which has a great recompense of reward. Finally, be perfect, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace be with you.

Yours waiting for Jesus from heaven, Amen.

WM. M. INGHAM.

Hartford Ct., Sept. 1, 1846.

Letter from Bro. P. H. Hough.

Bro. Marsh:—I am well known in Canada as a public speaker on the personal coming of Christ at hand, but by some means unknown to me, I am accommodated with a bundle of almost every new paper that is started, of which we have had an assortment of late. Last evening there arrived eight of the 3d No. of the "Daw Dawn," a new paper which it appears has just made its appearance in Rochester. I do not know the Editor's views: perhaps some of them may be good; but I have been bothered to get rid of the "Day Star," and have just got clear of that, when lo! the day has begun to dawn! and counting from the time that the "Day Star" made its appearance, till now, when the day has dawned, I think perhaps the sun may rise in the course of at least one year from this time.

I am willing every man should think for himself, but I wish it to be understood that I believe in the personal, visible coming in the clouds, as he went up. Two angels have said he would come in like manner, and unless four angels come and contradict the two, I shall have to believe the testimony already given.

There is one person who writes for the "D. S." that spells his name the same as I do; hence, in order to keep the brethren from thinking that I believe in the views advocated in that paper, I wish this to be published in the Voice of Truth.

In consequence of my being absent from the city, it prevents me from taking any paper; I wish no papers sent to me without my orders.

I am strong in the belief that Christ will come about the year '47.

I have a work now before me, called the "Morning Watch," written in England in the year 1829. It reckons the time just as we do, and comes out between '46 and 7. Likewise another work written by a Church of England clergyman, printed in 1835, and he reckons the 2300 days the same way. I have likewise a paper called the "Catholic," that reckons the age of the world, and says Christ will come about this time. All who have attempted to calculate Dan. 8: 14, have come to the same conclusion. It is only unbelief that keep men in the dark.

I have been laboring lately in North Augusta, Canada West, back of Prescott. I expect soon to return there. A wide field is open there, and I wish some brother could be sent to assist me in that place. I wish to labor till the Master comes. May the Lord bless you all and save you in his kingdom.

PHILIP H. HOUGH.

Toronto C. W., Aug. 21, '46.

Letter from Bro T. Smith.

Bro. Marsh:—I have just returned from a tour some twenty miles east of the Penobscot river, where I have been preaching "the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God," which I believe is nigh, "even at the door." But little has been known in that part, in comparison with what they have heard in some places, yet enough to have led the candid to inquire "what these things mean?" and also to awaken the prejudices of those sectarian minds who are ready to condemn as heterodox, every idea which had not been baptised as orthodox, by "our church."

With us 'down-easters,' we are ready to suppose that those persons who come from western New York, must necessarily have some acquaintance with Bro. W. Miller, of Low Hampton. But as astonishing as it may seem, I there found a lady, professor of religion, zealous according to the traditions of the sects, who prayed with "might and main," who asserted that Mr. Miller was a swearing, drinking man, and one of the worst characters New York could produce, and that she had seen him in his wickedness. In vain did I expostulate against such an idea. I told her if Mr. Miller was a bad man and a speculator, he certainly had common sense enough to conduct with more propriety than her account admitted he had done, and beside, if he began to be so bad his eagle-eyed opposers would have had him published the world throughout. Surely, my brother, I am reminded of the prediction of our Savior; John 16: 2.—"They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think he doeth God service." That we are about generally put out or shut out of the synagogues, is a fact known and read of all men, and that every thing is done within the power of "sectarian bigotry," to kill our character, is what cannot be denied by every unprejudiced person; and while the sins of the various sects are passed over among the fables of mankind, lies are made up about the "poor Millerites," and the lovers of lies publish them from one end of the country to the other, headed perhaps, "Effects of Millerism," and thousands believe them because their ministers say they are so.—But a few months since, a Reverend gentleman stated in public, that upwards of a hundred Millerites had hanged themselves,—while, I suppose hundreds of my acquaintances suppose I must be a very bad man, because report said I had run away, parted with my wife, was in the Insane Hospital, was in the House of Correction, was a Universalist, an Infidel, &c., &c. Thus making me blessed according to Jesus' declaration: Math. 5: 11.—"Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil of you for my sake;" and most heartily do I thank the Lord that I can "rejoice and be exceeding glad," for Jesus says, "Great is your reward in heaven:" "for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

I well recollect that when I first begun to look at this doctrine 'every where spoken against,' one strong reason why I thought it must be true was, the Infidel, the semi-Infidel, the Sabbath-breaker, the drunkard, the swearer, and the wicked in general, joined with the nominal professors of religion in crying, "away with it!" "away with it!" It must be clear to every candid, religious mind, that the coming of the Lord must not only be a subject of interest to the devout, but an event they would love, and for which they would pray in the language of the poet,

"Fly swifter round ye whelms of time,
And bring the welcome day."

I am perfectly satisfied that the notion of man's going immediately to heaven at death, is what has caused the church to lose sight of that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," to be revealed to his people at the coming of our Lord. My soul does magnify the Lord, and greatly do I rejoice, that notwithstanding my sacrifices, persecutions and trials, sectarianism no longer blinds me. On God's blessed word I mean to stand, believing it is given for a "light to our feet and a lamp to our path," that the common sense meaning is its true import; and I must believe that "fire and brimstone," is as literal 'fire and brimstone,' in Revelation 21: 8, as it is in Gen. 19: 24, when the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah, brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven. The spiritualizers of our day say it means a 'guilty conscience.' While this is the hell of the Universalist, in this world, the self-styled orthodox have the same kind of hell in the world to come! thus making the word of God of none effect through their traditions, and that because it is an absurdity to suppose a man to be always burning and never to be burnt up, being exceedingly zealous that the wicked shall have eternal life in misery; that the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began, may soon take place, is the daily prayer of yours, truly waiting the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body,

THOMAS SMITH.

Eddington Me., Aug. 18th '46.

Bro. E. S. Robbins, Copenhagen, Sept. 1st., writes:—Monday Morn. Aug. 31. I must just say a word about our Conference. Through the providence of God, we have been favored with the presence, counsel, and labors of several ministering brethren. The result thus far is, we have had a precious, heavenly, melting season, especially yesterday, while coming around the table of the Lord. Yes, such a heavenly season will not soon be forgotten. We met in the Baptist meeting-house, which was pretty well filled Sabbath and Sabbath eve., with attentive listeners. O may the Lord hear prayer, and send down salvation upon this community.

From the Journal of Commerce.

EARTHQUAKES.

WEDNESDAY Morning, }
Aug. 26, 1846. }

Messrs. Editors:—In your telegraphic notice this morning, you state that an earthquake was felt at Boston and the neighboring towns, on Tuesday night.

Messrs. Dutilh & Cousinery, No. 23, South William Street, New York, have letters from Smyrna, in Asia, of the 28th of June, stating that an earthquake was experienced there on the 25th of June, at about 6 P. M. The shock was very severe, and much damage was done.

In the Journal of Commerce of January 10, 1846, you chronicle an earthquake at Memphis, on the 23d of December, 1845; in your paper of April 1st, you state an earthquake took place at Maysville, Ky., on the 23d of March, and in your paper of the 23d April, you also state the occurrence of an earthquake at Cuba, on the Island of Cuba, on the same 23d of March.

In your paper of March 7th, you give an account of an earthquake at Cincinnati, on the 28th of February, in your paper of May 15th, you state an earthquake was experienced at Santa Cruz, on the south side of Cuba, on the 28th of April, and in that of July 7th, that an earthquake was felt at Catania, in Sicily, on the 28th of April.

In your paper of March 14, you state an earthquake was experienced at the Belgian settlement of Santa Thomas, on the 30th of January, and in the paper of June 4, you state that shocks of an earthquake were felt at Salem and Newburyport, on the 30th of May.

Thus, you will see by this recital, that there has been an extraordinary regularity as to the particular day of the month, viz. 3d or the 23d, 8th or the 28th, and on the 30th day of the month.

You have also chronicled in the Journal of the 30th of July, an earthquake at Martinique, and Guadeloupe, on the 16th of June—in the Journal of May 26, an earthquake at Memphis, Tennessee, on the 8th of May—in the Journal of August 5th, earthquakes in the Morea, and in that of August 22, an earthquake and Meteor at Fincastle, in Virginia, on the 12th of August.

The earthquakes in Greece occurred in June, but the particular days are not stated. I hope to ascertain them.

You will see that the Catania earthquakes traveled East, from April to June, commencing in East longitude about 15°—then in the Morea, in long. about 22, and last in Smyrna, in long. about 27°.

All of these earthquakes have produced equilibriums on Brooklyn Heights, the particulars of which have been sent you regularly from time to time, in the New York Municipal Gazette.

The great number of earthquakes which have been experienced within the last eight months, has been wonderful—our atmosphere has been singularly affected, as you will see by the extensive and very minute records in the Municipal Gazette.

The Icelandish Mountains have been greatly agitated, and continued in that state at the last dates—the mountains had been quiet for more than half a century. Yours, with great respect,

E. MERIAN.

Do what you can to induce others to do what they ought.

THE PORT.

As when on Ocean's dark expanse,
Each weary seaman's anxious glance,
Home's cherished shores descrie—
Elated by the prospect sweet,
That soon his loved ones he will greet,
Joy fills his watchful eye,—

As when becalmed, (the land he loves)
Seems to recede—in distance moves,
As if 'twere borne away—
His soul's aloft and would be free,
And time to him wears heavily,
Amid the vessel's stay.

And while the moments slowly roll,
In prayer he gushes forth his soul,
To him who dwells on high—
"Speed on, O Lord, the favoring gale,
Swift waft the ship—swell full the sail,
That I may homeward fly!"

So, like the weary seaman, we,
Desire at home with Christ to be,
Where we may peaceful rest—
With eye of faith, the vision true,
The 'new creation' near we view,
The Eden of the blest!

We pray, while falls the joyous tear,
"Come quickly! blessed Lord, appear!
'Thy chariot-throne speed on;
Call up the dead—change this vile clay,
Bid angels bear us swift away—
Speak, Lord! it shall be done!"

Joy fills our eye—now heave in sight
Our long sought land, and City's "light";
The voyage drear is o'er!
Now 'minis'tring' heralds on the wing,
Fair Eschol clusters often bring,
To cheer us to the shore!

Time of the Advent.

"Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

True faith, doubtless, is intended by the Divine Author of this important question—which we are told must be predicated on clear and simple testimony, that which may be easily understood by the learned and unlearned, the wise and unwise, even of this world; in fact, it must be simplified to the capacity of all. It is said also, unless our faith is thus based, then there is just cause to question the divinity of the testimony, also the correctness of the faith which it produces. In reference to our faith in the time for the coming of the Son of Man; some have taken the position, "Nigh, even at the door," as the only true Bible time; and that we are now justified in placing our feet (faith) on this immutable platform, on which we may rest secure from all the attacks of our opponents—while others, squaring their faith by the above rule, question the correctness of that position. It will be remembered the rule says the evidences must be such as are adapted to the understanding of all. And as all do not thus understand the testimony with reference to it, that position does not, therefore, embrace true faith.

For truth's sake only, let us investigate the Savior's answer to the question of his disciples.—"Tell us, when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world." In concluding the answer to these questions, the Savior says: "Behold the fig tree and all the trees; when they now shoot forth ye see and know of your own selves, that summer is nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things (Luke and Mark,—all these things, Matt.) come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Or as Matthew has it, "Know it is near, at the doors." "These things." What things? is the point on which this question depends. Luke 21: 25.—"And there shall be signs in the sun and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth, distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring,—men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."—Why? for, because, the powers of heaven shall be shaken. This is given as the reason or cause of the mourning and distress of nations. We learn from Isa. 24: 20, that in the last expiring agonies of convulsed nature, that "the earth will reel to and fro like a drunkard," (and be removed like a cottage,) which will probably be imperceptible to those on the earth—while at the same time, it will give the heavenly bodies, or powers of heaven, the appearance of shaking to and fro: then the powers of heaven will be shaken, which will awaken fear in the hearts of the wicked and impenitent—men's hearts failing them for fear, while looking for those things which are coming on the earth. They will then be convinced that the day of probation is closed, and their doom sealed forever. They will then take up the sad lamentation, "the harvest surely is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." Then, when we see all these things, we shall know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. How near? "Even at the door." Then there will be no more faith (true or false) respecting it; but then, true knowledge will have taken the place of faith. Perhaps some are ready to ask, "are we to give up our faith and hope in our redemption being nigh?" No. Not at all. For it is written,— "when these things (signs) begin to come to pass, then lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." "Come now, and let us reason together." I wish to understand the Holy Scriptures, which, Paul says, are able to make us wise unto salvation. Let us therefore, with hearts full of love, and for truth's sake only, examine the position "nigh, even at the door," a little more definitely. Now Bro. Marsh, if I understand you rightly, you say that "we are justified in taking the above position, at the falling of the stars,—the last of the signs mentioned by the Savior—the "shaking of the powers of heaven" being yet in the future, and closely connected with the coming of Christ, to gather his disciples, and to share with them the glorious inheritance—the earth renewed—in which will be established the everlasting kingdom, prepared for God's children (the faithful and obedient) from the foundation or formation of the world.

Again: I understand you to say, that this position is more definite even than the month or year; that we may look for the coming of Christ as the next event, that we should look for and expect it every hour, every moment. Now, I cannot harmonize the facts with this position. For, nearly 13 years have passed since the falling of the stars, thus showing it is not confined even to a dozen years. It is well understood also, that the prophecy relating to the Ottoman Empire, was not fulfilled till August, A. D. 1840, as predicted about two years before. Do not these facts show clearly, that the expression, 'Nigh, even at the door,' is either far less definite than the month or year, or we are not yet warranted in making this positive assertion, until the powers of heaven are shaken, which I believe is yet in the future.—Thus we see the faith of some is unsettled, with reference to this important subject. And as it is said, "this is as definite as we are warranted in being on the time—the faith of some is very much shaken relative to the time being revealed. But I think "we have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in our hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." Knowing this also, that this sure word of prophecy speaks of the time for the sufferings of Christ, and the time for the glory that should follow. Paul says, "All scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," time not excepted. Another Apostle says, "Be ready always, to give every man that asketh you, a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." Again: Jesus says, "It is written that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." (Time and all.)—Luke 4: 4. Let us therefore, search the Scriptures, in obedience to the command of our Master,—with reference to the time revealed by them for the glory of God, which should follow the sufferings of Christ.

It is well known by those who take heed to the admonition of the Savior, in this respect, that Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had a dream, and his spirit was troubled to know the dream.—If he lived in these days he would be called a fool, for troubling himself about a foolish dream, which nobody could understand. Nevertheless, he gave a commandment to call in the magicians, astrologers, sorcerers, and Chaldeans, to make known unto him the dream, and the interpretation thereof. Seeing they could not make known the dream, the Chaldeans answered and said before the king, "There is not a man on the earth that can show the king's matter." (Thus we see it requires something besides the wisdom which the men of this world can give, to understand the secrets of God.) Therefore the king became angry and very furious, and sent forth a decree, that all the wise men of Babylon should be slain. And while the king's captain sought for Daniel and his fellows to slay them also, Daniel answered and said unto him, "Why is the decree so hasty from the king." The thing being made known to Daniel, he went in and desired of the king, time, and he would make known unto him the interpretation of the dream.

Then Daniel went unto his house, and together with his companions sought mercies of the God of heaven concerning this secret. And in answer to their prayers, the secret was revealed unto Daniel. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants, the prophets." Amos 3: 7.—"The Lord will give grace and glory, and will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly." Psa. 84: 11. Therefore he makes known unto his servant Daniel, the king's dream, in which he beheld a great image, whose brightness and glory was excellent, and whose form was terrible, representing the different kingdoms of this world,—existing from that time until the God of heaven should set up a kingdom never to be destroyed, which should be accomplished in the days of the kings or kingdoms represented by the feet and toes of the image. All who have given the subject an impartial investigation, are satisfied that we are now living in the days of the kingdoms thus represented. Therefore we have an outline of the history of the world, from the time of the king of Babylon, symbolized by the head of gold, until the stone symbolizing the kingdom of God, should smite the metallic image on its feet, and it should be broken to pieces together, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing floors, and the wind would carry them away—that they would be found no more at all. The Savior, in speaking of the kingdom of God, says:—"Who-soever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.—Matt. 21: 11.

It is also understood (by those who take heed to the sayings of their Master, "Search the Scriptures,"—"whoso readeth, let him understand,") that Daniel had a dream or vision, (recorded, Dan. 7:) in which he saw four great beasts arise, one after another,—symbols of four great earthly kingdoms, and corresponding with Nebuchadnezzar's image. Daniel had a very minute description given him of the fourth beast; the fulfillment of which, clearly proves it to be the Roman kingdom. In speaking of this fourth beast, he says he beheld till his body was destroyed, and given to the burning flane. Again: he beheld till the thrones were cast down—the Ancient of days did sit—thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened. John the revelator had a view of the same. Rev. 20: 12.) Again: he says he beheld till the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Luke 12: 32.

Thus we see, dear brethren, that the vision extends beyond this vale of tears, and if we hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, adorning the same with a well ordered life and a godly conversation, we are sure to have an unfading crown of glory, and an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, in the everlasting kingdom of God. Let us therefore be faithful, and hope to the end for the grace that shall be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ: for yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry" [beyond the time appointed.]

Continuing to investigate the prophecy of Daniel, we find recorded in the 8th chapter, another vision, commencing with the Medo-Persian kingdom, (which is the second kingdom brought to view in the vision of the 6th chapter,) and reaching to the end. End of what? The end of all earthly kingdoms, when they shall be ground to powder, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing floors, and be removed, so that there shall be no place found for them. They have had their day, but their hopes are now blasted;—the end, the last end of indignation, and treading down of the host, (God's people) for at the time appointed, the end shall be. In the 13th verse the inquiry is made, "How long is the vision?" (This vision of the 8th chapter.) And he said unto Daniel, unto 2300 days: then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. It will be remembered this vision also, is expressed by symbols. Beasts, horns, &c., represent the different kingdoms.—The days too, are symbolic, or prophetic days. (meaning years, according to the rule given by God himself, which is a day for a year. Ezek. 4: 6; Num. 14: 34. Thus, we have 2300 yrs. definite time, given to measure the vision.)

Daniel says, (verse 15,) When he had seen the vision, he sought for the meaning. Therefore, Gabriel is commissioned to make him understand the vision. So he came near to Daniel and said, "Understand, O son of man, for at the time of the end, shall be the vision: and behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation: for at the time appointed the end shall be. He then begins to instruct Daniel—referring to the beasts which he had seen in the vision, giving a very limited, but perfect outline of their history. In describing the last beast, or horn of it, he speaks of its standing up against the Prince of princes; and in the next breath, refers him to the end of the indignation, when he shall be broken without hand. After all the instruction given by Gabriel, Daniel closes this chapter by saying he was astonished at the vision, but none understood it. Therefore Gabriel is sent again (Dan. 9: 21) unto Daniel, to give him further instruction concerning the vision, and thus announces the object of his visit: "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." He proceeds to instruct him by referring to the time, (the 2300 days given in the vision, and the only part of it not explained by Gabriel at his first visit) and saying, "Seventy weeks are cut off;" (true rendering of the word translated, determined.) Cut off from what?—2300 days, clearly, as there is nothing else to cut or take from. Why are they cut or taken from the 2300 days? The main object appears to be, to give an understanding of, and to make sure, the vision and prophecy.

Gabriel continues his instruction, v. 25:—"Know therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks, making 69 weeks or 483 years, to the Messiah the anointed. God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power."—Acts 10: 38. When? at his baptism.—Luke 3: 22.—And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove, upon him, attended by a voice from heaven, saying, "Thou art my beloved son, in thee I am well pleased." Thus Jesus was anointed at his baptism by the Spirit of God to preach the gospel.

One brother writes, "I see no evidence that the Messiah was made manifest to Israel" until he preached "the time is fulfilled," which was after John was put into prison.—(Mark 1: 14.) Let us see if we have evidence. "We have found the Messiah, which is the Christ."—John 1: 41. "We have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth." V. 45. "Rabbi, thou art the son of God, the king of Israel," v. 49. Jesus performed miracles, which caused many to believe on him.—John 2d chap. "Nichodemus, a ruler of the Jews, came to Jesus by night and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." John 3: 2.—"After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea, and there he tarried with them and baptised. And John also was baptising in Aenon, for John was not yet cast into prison." Are not these facts good evidence that Messiah was manifest to Israel, and began his ministry before John was put in prison?

Dan. 9: 27. "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, (the last of the 70) and in the midst of the week, (middle of it) he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, in effect at least. Now, what do we learn from this instruction of Gabriel,—that 2300 years is the whole length of the vision—70 weeks or 490 years are cut off in explaining the vision,—seven weeks or 49 years of which, are set apart for the rebuilding of the streets and walls of Jerusalem,—62 weeks, or 434 years added, make 69 weeks or 483 years to the Messiah. He was cut off in the middle of the 70th week, giving us 3½ years more. We now have 486½ years to the cross: which, taken from 2300 years, the length of the vision, leaves us 1813½ years this side of the cross.

Thus far, our research for truth has been confined to the sure word of prophecy. Now, with all this light and definiteness contained in the prophecy before us, ought we not to have confidence, and believe that God has thus revealed the time for the setting up of his everlasting kingdom for the benefit of his children, that they may have their lamps trimmed and burning, having oil in their vessels, their light shining, waiting, in perfect readiness, for the Master to return? So it seems to me. It is a universal belief that Christ was crucified in the spring of A. D. 33, which belief is founded on good evidence,—Gospel History confirmed by Astronomical facts. According to Ferguson, the crucifixion was in April, which is the time commonly received. But according to others, the crucifixion was in May.—While they differ on the month, they agree on the year, A. D. 33, to which add 1813½, the amount of time this side of the cross, and we have 1846 for the termination of the vision. With these evidences before us, and hearts not full of unbelief, we shall speak, and warn the ungodly to prepare for judgment, saying, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour [definite time] of his judgment is come." "Behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." (Isa.) "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment, to be punished." 2 Pet. 2: 9.

O let me say to the sinner, Be not deceived by the false teachers of the last days. "For when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." 1 Thes. 5: 3. "He that, being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." Prov. 29: 1. "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with him: " but "woe to the wicked, for the reward of his hand shall be given him." Isa. 3: 10, 11. When? "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." When I come.—Rev. 22: 12. What will be the reward of the righteous? "To them, who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, he will render eternal life." And what of the wicked? "But unto them that do not obey the truth, He will render tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil: of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile." Rom. 2: 7-9.

My heart is often made sad by the false teachers of these last days, who "strengthen the hand of the wicked, that he should not turn from his wicked way, by promising him life." O sinner, be not deceived! but search the Scriptures, to see whether these things are so. Would you be saved from the great time of trouble which is surely coming on the earth? repent, and believe the gospel. Flee to Christ, who is the "Author of eternal salvation, to all them (only) that obey him." Heb. 5: 9. O yes, we cheerfully point you to Jesus, the "Lamb of God taketh away the sin of the world." "He shall save his people from theirsins." Mat. 1: 21. Who are his people?

"Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Heb. 8: 9. Would you have the Spirit of Christ? "Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find; ask your heavenly Father, for he will give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." (In sincerity—Luke 11: 9-11.) Brethren seeing we know these things, let us persuade men to become reconciled to God. Let us cherish none but the kindest feelings toward each other, though we may differ in some points of faith. Let none of these things separate us from the love of God. But let us love each other with pure hearts fervently; exhorting one another, and so much the more as we see the day (of Christ) approaching,—that when the Master shall appear, we may also appear with him in glory.

True Faith.

"According to thy faith, be it unto thee."

Many it seems, have altogether misapprehended this Scripture, together with many kindred portions of holy writ. On this wrong construction rest many of the evils of the present day.

Let us examine a little, and see what are the conditions on which we are to expect the above answer to our prayers. 1st. Not simply that we have faith. 2. Not that our faith is strong and unwavering. 3. Not that it works by love. All these may be implied, but they do not make up the sum of the condition. Our faith must not only be in God, but it must have a thus saith God, or its equivalent. Then let us proceed to the inquiry, what is equivalent to a thus saith the Lord?

1. Some suppose that an assurance of mind that they shall receive all that they ask, is the condition, hence they expect the above answer: "According to thy faith, be it unto thee." This would lay a broad foundation on which we might plant ourselves, and fully maintain that the Bible is not true. Who has not had such confidence, and yet not realized his hopes? That a man's confidence may be as firm and unshaken where it has no real foundation in truth, as where the word of God is pledged, cannot be denied. Let the history of the Advent cause speak and bear witness to this. A supposed 'thus saith the Lord,' as really commands our assent, and demands our obedience, as though it were really a divine command: for such it is to the mind that so understands it. As also a supposed promise for the time being, becomes the sure resting place of the true child of God. He, having an obedient and confiding heart, will yield to a supposed, as readily and as conscientiously as to a real command of Jehovah; and rely as fully, and rest as securely, calmly, and joyfully, on a supposed, as on a real promise. And is not this true evangelical faith, (without which it is impossible to please God,) in the spirit but not in the letter; yet it cannot secure the answer, "According to thy faith," &c. The difficulty is not that the faith is misplaced, or is not gospel faith so far as the heart is concerned; but that it is exercised for a wrong object, having mistaken the testimony. It is in the heart evangelical, but not in the head; in the spirit, not in the letter.

It is this Christ-pleasing and child-like simplicity, coupled with wrong apprehensions of the predictions, promises, or ground of faith, with respect to the particular thing that withholds the answer, as in case of the "tenth day." Did not those who parted with all they possessed, demonstrate to all, their faith in God, whose word they fully believed taught the return of the Lord on that day, whilst others (Ananias like) kept part of the price. Which of the two classes has the fullest assurance that they pleased God: or which of them have secured the conscientious approval of all in this case? Whilst we or they lament the mistake, we never can deplore or at all regret that we or they exercised on that occasion such faith, whilst with all my heart, I commend their zeal and confidence, (which, with the evidence they had, could have been no less) flowing, as I believe it did, from hearts wholly swallowed up in love and confidence in God, I can but regret that the foundation of their faith, or rather that which brought their faith into exercise with respect to the definite time of the coming of the Lord, had not been better understood.

Another cause of head error on this subject is, that the mere proclamation of a supposed truth, never results in any good. That there is any direct tendency in error to produce good, I do not believe: but that it may produce great apparent good, is evident, and such may be the circumstances: and so, much truth may be coupled with the error, that great good may be done. But the effects cannot furnish a proper foundation for our faith. If so, just equal to the real or apparent good, will be the evidence that it is of God. Is this so? Let the Advent history testify. Which of all the proclamations made by Adventists, has proved the most powerful to move the mass of listeners? Was it the fact, that there would be a judgment? or that it was near: or rather, was it not the fact that it was proclaimed to be on the tenth day of the seventh month? Was it not this proclamation that gave such joy to those who were looking for the speedy consummation of Israel's fondest hopes? I think it was. Was it not the effect which was produced on the hearts and lives of those who first believed, that brought many afterwards to believe that the proclamation was a God authorized one? I think it was. And does not this mistaken notion in the minds of some, of resting on the same evidence, fully account for the errors of "Bridegroom come, and shut door?" I think it does.

Another source of error as founded upon this text is, or in other words, another false foundation of our faith with respect to particular events is, "I feel as though it must and will be so;" "I so ardently desire it, that I can but believe that it will be so." If, my brethren, we have no better evidence than this, it cannot secure the much desired answer, "According to thy faith, be it unto thee." Even our strong desires for the glory of God, in connection with a much-desired event, are not equivalent to a thus saith God. They are no evidence in the case when rightly understood, and properly considered. With our limited capacities, it is very easy for us to mistake what is for the glory of the Lord. If this forms a good foundation for the faith of one, then for all, and must, in every case, secure an answer: hence, whilst the desires of some would cause the Son of Man speedily to come in all his glory, the millennium (temporal) according to the desires of others, would soon dawn: for both, doubtless, are desired by good men, and for the glory of God. All things whatsoever we desire, for the glory of God, in the name of Christ let us ask for, and God will grant it.

Individuals laboring under each of the above mistakes, may exercise true evangelical faith as to the spirit, and enjoy the approbation of heaven, not on account of the correctness of their theory, but because the state of heart is right, and well pleasing in the sight of God. But this faith, or rather this evidence of the heart's confidence in God, whilst it pleases, it cannot bring God to grant the thing sought. Whilst he smiles approvingly upon the simple and unreserved confidence of the heart, he labors with the faithfulness of a God, and the kindness of a Father, to preserve this confidence in Him, though in the event looked for, a disappointment is experienced. And when time, Bible, Providence, or any other cause has convinced us, not that our confidence was misplaced, for it was in God, not the event, but that we had rested on wrong, or misunderstood testimony with respect to that event; we may then be comforted and cheered with the assurance that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Dear brethren and sisters, let me exhort you to pray much; read, search, try, prove, and trust with all your hearts, the never failing word of God. Do not falter nor become weary in well doing, waiting patiently for the Lord from heaven: for he that shall come will come and will not tarry. Whilst your past mistakes should serve to make you cautious, they should also lead you to examine every point closely, investigate every branch of the subject critically, and weigh every evidence candidly. But should you again be mistaken in understanding them, do not let this destroy, or even weaken your confidence in God or his word: for "faithful is he that hath promised," and there will certainly be a performance of all that he has said. The Bible every where points out to that great event, the coming of the Lord. My heart gladdens whilst I reflect upon many and blessed promises that point to that day for their fulfillment; and as I contemplate the evidences of its near, very near approach, my heart overflows with unfeigned gratitude to God, who has given me my being in this day and age of the world.

To friends of my former acquaintance scattered abroad, laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, be faithful a little longer and the kingdom will be yours with all its unceasing joys. I often remember you when before the throne of grace. May I not hope to hear from these friends? I would write to them, but do not know their post-office address.

A word to thee my brother:—You are filling an important place in the ranks of God's chosen army. Has not the trumpet been put to thy lips? then in God's name continue to blow. Throw out thy cautious, and pour out light and truth, as God may give the ability. Herald his coming according to the evidences of his changeless predictions, as they shall unfold themselves to thy understanding, and may the very God of peace sanctify thee, and bless all thy labors, which I trust are calculated to turn attention to the truth. Let us all remember, that however strong our faith, God cannot grant what is not agreeable to his word.

Yours, for truth, Christ, and his kingdom,
DAVID DAVIS.

A CHURCH IN 1802.—Plain pulpit—clerk's desk underneath—rows of benches with strips for the back. A plain, simple looking sexton, with a bunch of keys in his belt. Congregation rich and poor—no distinction, no partition.—They assemble for one object, to worship their God.

A CHURCH IN 1842.—Splendidly covered pulpit. A large orchestra composed of twenty-five singers—the principal ones paid by the year.—The floor carpeted—pews richly cushioned and carpeted—brass spittoons—richly bound doors.—Sexton richly attired—his name on a tin sign, emblazoned against the side of the church. Congregation select and well dressed—and seated in their pews.

The minister perfumed with otto of rose—Bible with red leather, and gilt letters. All splendor. All show. No poor to be seen, if to be seen, stuck away in some obscure corner. The minister trims his discourse to suit his congregation, and they lavish their money upon him and in building fine churches, while the poor are starved. And this is what they call RELIGION.—*Chr. Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

ROCHESTER, SEPTEMBER 30, 1846

Commencement of Volume XII.

We enter upon the commencement of this volume of our paper with very strong expectations that the Lord will come before its close. In this, however, we are not positive: he may appear before this number is issued, and he may not come till after the close of the volume. But that he will most certainly come not far from this time to us is a certainty, about which there can be no mistake, and should not be a doubt.

As the case is, it is our duty to occupy faithfully, the few moments more that we may have to spend before the return of our long absent Lord. So far as we are concerned in the work of feeding the household, through the medium of the "Voice of Truth," nothing shall be lacking which it is in our ability to give. But the work before us we cannot do, neither do we expect to be left to do, alone.—Judging from the past, we feel fully assured that we shall have the faithful co-operation of our brethren in carrying it forward until it is done. We will, however, just remind our patrons that our expenses have not, for some weeks past, been covered by our weekly receipts. Let each one, at the commencement of this volume, pay what he can, and we shall have nothing to fear from pecuniary embarrassments. But a neglect of duty in this case, if long continued, will inevitably greatly embarrass our business. "Owe no man," is just as much a command as "Repent" is. And when it is in our power to do it, it is as much our duty to obey the one as the other.

New Subscribers.

The number of our subscribers has been kept good, far beyond our most sanguine expectations at the commencement of our disappointments and peculiar trials. Recently, however, but few names have been added to our list, while nearly, if not quite, an equal number have been erased from it.

One reason, why we wish a united effort made, on the part of its patrons, to enlarge the number of subscribers to the Voice of Truth, is, that it may be read by more, and thereby more of our fellow beings be benefited by the truth it may contain. Can you not, brother, or sister, induce one more of your kindred, or neighbors, to read the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom at hand? Try. Tell them you will pay for it yourself, for the term of one volume, if they will only attentively read it. Or, if you are unable to pay the small sum stipulated in the terms of the paper, tell them they can have it without money or price, for a short time, or as long as we are able to furnish it on these conditions. Let us all engage anew in the good work: our labor will soon close, and the reward of eternal life will be given, if we are not weary in well doing.

Nigh, at the Door.

The candid article, commencing on our first page, from the pen of Bro. P. Miller, Jr., calls in question the correctness of our exposition of the Savior's words, 'Nigh, at the door.' At another time, we purpose to look at this subject in the light of the Word, and if we find Bro. Miller is correct, we will most cheerfully adopt the views he presents.—Let each one examine the subject impartially, guided by the word of truth, and abide the decision of that infallible Book.

If Bro. Miller has the true light on this subject, it will not materially affect the evidence, which we have supposed the signs furnish, of the near coming of the Son of man. We have taught that we may now know from the signs that the advent of Christ is 'nigh, at the door.' Bro. Miller thinks, if we understand him, that we do not now know anything from the signs, but may believe from the evidence they furnish that this event 'draweth nigh:' this is as definite as he thinks the signs reveal the time of the advent. Hence, according to either view, the signs bring us to that point where they justify our looking for the appearing of our Lord every moment. We both believe we have now reached that point; and both are looking for the shaking of the powers of the heavens in the future, which will doubtless cause men to 'expire through fear,' and in fact make it a matter of absolute knowledge, to both saint and sinner, that the coming of the Son of man is at the door: the sign of the Son of man shall have actually appeared in the sight of an astonished world.

The conclusion to which Bro. Miller comes on the time of the advent, viewed in its isolated capacity, is weighty. And indeed this may justly be said of his arguments when viewed in connection with other evidences in the case. Some seem to think, however, that the subject of the time of the advent cannot be overdone, or, rather, crowded too far on to the ground of exact definiteness; that there is no danger of believing too much in this respect. They seem to be constantly troubled with the fear that they shall not believe enough, will be too indefinite; consequently, they are constantly lashing their and others' powers of good common sense into a forced belief of some exact, precise, definite time for the advent of Christ.

Now we think there is at least as much danger of our running into extremes on both sides of this never more important question, as any other. Or will any one contend that there is only one extreme to this question? We think not. Then if there are two extremes; and if one is unbelief, the other must be its opposite, unwarranted belief. That the great mass of professed Christians have been deceived, decoyed, and led by the adversary, fearfully and hopelessly into the extreme of unbelief, is a painful and undeniable fact. That we, as a people, have been led into the other extreme, our past history testifies. These extremes yet exist, and so long as this is the case, frail mortals are in danger of running into them.

But, says a very confident one, (and perhaps his confidence is something like Peter's before he denied his Lord) supposing we are too definite, what will be the harm? We cannot see why it is not just as criminal to bear false witness of God in one case as the other: that is, to say his word absolutely declares that the Lord will come at a precise time, when it declares no such thing; or, to say it says nothing about the time of his coming, when it does most clearly speak on this subject. In either case it is a perversion of the word of the Lord. And judging from the effects, we know not which is the most disastrous, a rejection of the time on its first presentation, or running into fatal delusions, and the rejection of nearly every other sacred principle of godliness, in consequence of a disappointment on definite time. Certainly we have no examples more painful in the former than in the latter case. The facts, the undeniable facts in both cases, clearly show that the subjects were on forbidden ground, and consequently beyond the protection of God and the word of his grace, and, as a matter of course, they have both fallen: and their only salvation is, a return to the truth, the medium ground between these fearful extremes.

"The wise shall understand." Of late, we hear but little said on this positive declaration. Never have we been more confident than now, that it relates to the time of the first resurrection, and that the wise will understand as it is revealed in the Word.

'They will understand that 'unto 2300 days [or years] the sanctuary will be cleansed.' That Daniel and all the saints will stand in their lot, in the cleansed sanctuary, at the 'end of the days.' In short, they will understand according to their abilities, and means of understanding, all that is revealed about the time of the appearing of Christ and his kingdom. These things they will understand. We think they will also understand, that they cannot understand, or know the day and hour of the advent. However definite the prophetic numbers may appear, or to whatever definite conclusions they may bring us, the wise will not overlook the large amount of plain and positive testimony, furnished by the Savior, which places the matter beyond a doubt that the precise, definite time of his coming will not be known. They will understand, however, that they have reached the auspicious moment, or, if you please, the year, month, week, day, hour, and minute! when, from the prophetic numbers, historical prophecies, and the signs, they are warranted, nay, loudly admonished, to 'watch, and pray, always,'—every moment be 'ready:' that they 'may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass [on the wicked] and to stand before the Son of man.' 'For in such an hour as ye think not behold the Son of man cometh.'

The wise will, we think, understand that such expressions as these, 'Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not,' Matt. 24: 44; 'Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is,' Mark 13: 33, specially were designed for that generation of Christians who would be living at the very time of the Savior's advent. They are unmeaning to apply them to any other generation. Understanding these, and other like instructions and admonitions of their Lord, in this light, the wise will 'take heed' to themselves, 'lest at any time their hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and that day come upon them unawares: for as a snare shall it come on ALL them that dwell on the face of the WHOLE earth.'—'Though it will come thus sudden and unexpected to all, the wise will so understand as to be ready to escape the snare, whether they are found in the bed, at the mill, or in the field, at the dread hour when it is sprung. They will be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and caught away from the dissolving earth, and burning heavens, to meet their descending Lord. O, may we all have this wisdom. Soon, all who possess this priceless treasure will in some degree realize its infinite worth.

A Small Talent.

How common it is for Christians to talk about their small talent. Many think it consists in their ability to talk, sing and pray, in meeting, and as they have no gift for this, of course, in their estimation, their talent is very small; hardly worth making an effort to improve.

We were very forcibly struck with the incorrectness of this notion not long since, by hearing a rich brother talk about his small talent. He thought it so small that he could do no good by attempting to improve it. We turned to Matt. 25: 15, and learned that talents were given 'to every man according to his several ability.' Man's ability, then, to think, talk, sing, pray, &c., does not always constitute the talent or talents committed to his care. What then? In the parable, it doubtless was money, or property, and represents all the means and ability Christians possess for doing good. It is their duty to occupy the whole, improve all, for the advancement of the cause of God.

The rich brother, then, though he have no gift to talk, instead of having but one very small talent, possesses perhaps two, five, or ten. It is just as much his duty to consecrate his all to the service of God, as it is for the poor brother, with a gift to preach the Word, to lay himself, which is his all, upon the altar of the Lord. 'Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be RICH IN GOOD WORKS, READY TO DISTRIBUTE, WILLING TO COMMUNICATE. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come. 1 Tim. 6.

Let those who are rich look at their talents in this light, and then decide whether they have a very small one, or two, five, or ten; and also, whether they are occupying them as their Lord requires, or, are appropriating them to selfish, worldly purposes.—Deal honestly and faithfully in this case: for soon the reckoning day will come, when every man will be rewarded according to his doings, or as he has used the talent or talents committed to his care.

"Bible Advocate."

This paper for Sept. 19th continues the publication of its views on binding and loosing the dragon, &c. A few things in the communication before us claim our attention.

In the last week's paper it is argued that the dragon of Rev. 20 is Pagan Rome. It is said,

"Now since the dragon described in the 12th ch., is plainly proved to symbolize Pagan Rome, and since it is a good Bible rule, 'having once established the definite meaning of a symbol, never afterwards think yourself at liberty to depart from that meaning,' we must in all honesty conclude that the dragon described in the 20th chapter is a symbol of Pagan Rome." Again, "Papal Ecclesiastical Rome bound Pagan Civil Rome." Once more, "And when the thousand years are expired, the dragon which is called the devil, and Satan, shall be loosed out of prison for a little season. The power loosed, evidently is the same that was bound, viz: Infidel Pagan Rome."

In the No. of the Advocate before us we find a somewhat different sentiment expressed.

"The devil has not been bound!" says one, "and of course we do not contend that he has been in person, although there is abundant proof that one very efficient agent of his, Pagan Rome, was under the power of the Papacy one thousand years."—"But after the thousand years are expired, the devil again possessing this instrumentality, by the aid of the spirits of devils, goes forth working miracles to deceive the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

In the first quotation we are taught that the dragon of Rev. 20 has been bound and loosed. But in the second quotation we are told that this dragon has not been bound nor loosed in reality, but that an 'efficient agent of his' was; and that the loosing consists in the 'devil again possessing this instrumentality,' or 'efficient agency,' viz: Pagan Rome!

In the first case the Advocate makes Pagan Rome the PRINCIPAL in the case of being bound and loosed, but in the second case it considers Rome as an 'agent,' or 'instrumentality,' in the case.

In the first place the dragon of Rev. 20 is absolutely Pagan Rome; but in the second place, that same dragon is the devil, or Satan, and Pagan Rome his agent.

Finally, in the first place the foundation of an unscriptural theory is laid; while in the second place that foundation is destroyed: for if Pagan Rome is an agent (as the Advocate says) of the dragon, or devil, and Satan, of Rev. 20, then of course that dragon cannot be Pagan Rome; consequently the theory that he has been bound a thousand years falls to the ground; and with it the Advocate's whole theory on the first resurrection being a change of heart, and its kindred doctrines.

One reference more to the communication before us must suffice for this time. The Advocate says:

"The dragon is loosed out of his prison to go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, [or the whole world] Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, [whole extent of the earth,] and compassed the camp of the saints about, [the camp of the saints is wherever the saints are,] and whosoever the carcass is, thither will the eagles be gathered together,] and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them."

'Camp of the saints,' and 'beloved city,' appear to be synonymous terms, comprising the saints scattered here and there over the whole breadth of Armageddon's great battle field."

How can any one spiritualize away the 'beloved city' in this manner! The principle that would do it, would find no difficulty in making the second advent of Christ, the resurrection, cleansing the earth, or creating new heavens and a new earth, and the reign of Christ, all spiritual. Indeed these glorious truths are no more clearly taught in the Apocalypse than the one which teaches that the 'beloved city' will be a literal city. Read the description of it, as given in Rev. 21, ye children of Abraham who looked for this beloved city, and like him rejoice in the blessed hope of soon beholding its glory, and of entering within its pearly gates. We will give John's closing description of it.

"And the twelve gates are twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.—And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.—And they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it. And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they who are written in the Lamb's book of life."

Those precious words of divine promise do not convey the idea that the 'beloved city' is 'the saints scattered here and there over the whole breadth of Armageddon's great battle field,' as the Advocate says. No, no: instead of its being the saints, in their mortal, scattered, and sorely tempted and afflicted state, it is the pure and holy place into which the saints immortal are gathered, to eat of the tree of life, drink of the river of life, see God and the Lamb, walk the streets of gold, and forever enjoy the untold blessings, and behold the indescribable glories, of that 'beloved city.' O, glorious prospect! Soon it will be a blessed reality to all who do the commandments of God: for he says, in direct reference to this subject, 'Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and ENTER THROUGH THE GATES INTO THE CITY.' Rev. 22: 14.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

From the Advent Herald for Sept. 23, we extract the following items from the correspondence of the English Mission. The Letter was written in the city of London, and speaking of the state of the cause, the writer remarks:—

One of the main objects of our mission is, to survey the field, so as to see what has been done in relation to the Advent proclamation, how it has been done, and what remains to be done. Many of your readers may recollect, that quite a sensation was produced in England and Scotland, about a year ago, or more, through the preaching of our Lord's coming within a few weeks, by a Mr. Prince and three others, by the names of Thomas, Stark, and Williams. They were all educated at Lampetre, a Welch College, and were connected with the "Establishment." We are sorry to say that they have done the cause no credit, but have been left to fall into great extravagances and errors. Mr. Prince successively asserting that he was "Elijah," then the 'Two Witnesses,' and now, it is said, that he assumes to be the Holy Ghost! He maintained the 'shut door;' then denounced marriages as unlawful, and finally said he was in the kingdom, &c.—We send you a letter, written by a once particular friend of his, and addressed to him, which will give you a clearer and fuller account of his course, and that of his associates, than we can now stop to do. You can publish it in this connection or not. Alas for poor human nature!—First, self-righteousness, then bigotry, and finally, presumption and blasphemy! Let others beware! Two individuals in this city, who have been able to get up a pamphlet of some 30 pages, in evidence of the coming of Christ at the Passover in 1848, refused, at our preliminary meeting, to co-operate with us in efforts to arouse this great community to a knowledge of the Lord's Advent right upon the world, solely because, forsooth, we believed in a Millennium to take place in the future! Such conduct is not only disgusting to man, but must be abhorrent to God.

We have got out number two of the European Herald, and have number three in the press.—Bro. B. preached twice last Lord's day, for the Park Street Church, (Baptist,) the church of which Dr. Rippon was pastor for 60 years, and Dr. Gill, who was his successor, for 40 years.—Bro. H-s, has been invited to preach to them a part of next Lord's day, and will do so, if it is practicable. He preached last Sunday at a Hall, just over Waterloo Bridge. The preliminary meetings of the Alliance have already begun;—we have taken our seats as members: every individual of the Convention, sits on his own responsibility, and not as the representative of any church or association. Full particulars in our next. We are receiving encouraging letters from the brethren in different parts of the land.

Letter from Bro. Wm. Miller.

Dear Bro. Bliss:—In viewing the many opinions and messages which are palmed off upon the public, through the medium of the press, and more especially by what is called the Advent papers, I have almost come to the conclusion to refrain entirely from giving mine, in any case, lest I might be the means of adding to the confusion already so prevalent among the once happy band of Advent believers. Yet, I think I can clearly discern the cause of this state of things into which we are now brought, and which, in my humble opinion, has produced such unhappy results. It is not for want of charity among the dear brethren, which formerly characterized those who were looking for the blessed hope: although our former love is not in such active requisition as then. But it is for want of patience, and a thorough investigation of subjects which we hastily conceive, and as hastily throw out to the public. It then becomes our bantling, and we feel ourselves under as much obligation to nurse and foster it, as a fond mother would her offspring, and like her, soon become so much attached to our own progeny, that we lose sight of the unseemly parts, cover up the defects and palpable contradictions, hide, at least to our own eye, all its deformities, and thus become prejudiced, if not bigoted, to our own opinion, and then blame others for not seeing the beauty and comeliness which we see in our fondness for our own conceptions. Thus the spirit of enmity, hatred, strife, and opposition, is generated in our hearts, and division and contention follow as the inevitable result.—Charity ceases its influence on the soul, anger fills up the vacuum, and we become enemies instead of friends; warriors instead of peace-m-makers; and devils incarnate, instead of Christians.

And in order to remedy the evil results of which we all complain, what shall be done?—Shall we all buckle on our armor, and contend earnestly for our faith, that we think has been delivered unto us by the immediate inspiration of the Holy Spirit? Shall we all discard our present editors and papers, because they will not publish our views, and ours only, but get up new publications, new opinions, new theories, and publish them in every village and hamlet in our country? Shall we thus perplex, scatter, and divide, very friends? Must all of our dear and lovely brethren submit and bow down to our dictation, or we carry flame, faggot and fire, into their camp, and make them rue the day they rejected our councils and opinions? Must our editors listen to the advice of every professor of Adventism, or be denounced as a heretic, and deserted, and suffer his paper to go down? Who will come out plain, and support these propositions? No one—no one, say you all. But why not? All must admit that this is a perfect picture of the present time. Many have written and published with no higher motive than those given in the above propositions. Why not then be honest and tell your motives, and you will not deceive yourself nor others: but you do not deceive as many as you may imagine, for every wise man among us can, when they see a writing or publication, determine for themselves whether these selfish and destructive motives, govern the writer or publisher.

I have often blushed for poor fallen nature, when I have read the writings of some of those who think they are wise enough to govern the world, when they first disown any of these selfish and corrupt motives, then afterwards, before they close the second sentence, expose themselves to view. And let us always remember, that in nine cases out of ten, when a man begins an assault by professing good motives, it will prove in the end, that they were very corrupt. For who would plead his innocency, if he thought no one had occasion to call him guilty?

But, say you, what would you advise in this time of trouble? I answer:—if you will permit "Old Father Miller" to advise—let there be fewer writers, fewer theories, fewer leaders, fewer editors. More love, more righteous doing to others as we would others to do unto us—in one word, more PATIENCE. When we write a letter to a brother, to complain of some of his opinions, let us consider of it three days before we write; pray God nine times to direct us before we take up the pen; read it in the room of our brother three times before we send it; seal it only when we love him for being God-like; send it when we would delight to be the bearer, and while it is going, think with what tears of joy he will devour the contents, and remember not to forget to pay postage. And when we write for Advent papers, be very sure you have doubled the caution, and I will warrant all good men will read your communications with pleasure, and the devil will be insolvent for want of capital.

I know no better way to remedy evils, than for every one of us to shun all appearance of evil.—And to avoid confusion, let every one of us be fully persuaded in his own mind, "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." It is a sure sign that the man's piety runs very low, when he dips his pen in gall, and declares war against every petty offence; and love is wanting where words are many and very pointed.

Let us then be patient, brethren, and not be found in the seat of the scornful, or walking in the way of the violent man. Let us remember, truth needs no props, and error will soon fall, although multitudes are engaged to hold it up.—
Be patient, therefore, brethren, grudge not one against another, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

I am very thankful that the "Herald" and "Voice" are patient and calm under the trials of late. Remember, my brethren, your friends will understand your cause; let them be your "Advocate," and be ye patient, and you will soon receive your crown at the resurrection of the just. Amen and amen.

Letter from Bro. J. C. Bywater.

Bro. Marsh:—I would just say for the comfort of the saints who are still looking for the Lord of glory, that I have recently visited the brethren at Victor, Chapinsville, Seneca Falls, Ithaca, Scarsburg, Hall's Corners, Lansingville, and Auburn. In all of these places, I found the brethren, as a general thing, standing firm in the truth of a speedy deliverance. At Auburn, we held a Conference of 2 days, and am happy to say, that although the little church there has been very much reduced and torn by spiritualism, yet, I found a few strong in the faith once delivered to the saints.

The brethren came in from Sennet, Owasco, Jordan, and Seneca Falls, and although I had no one to assist me in preaching, yet, the Lord more than supplied our lack of help. Brother and Sister Ongley were with us, strong in the faith. May the Lord bless their labors. It was truly a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Having an opportunity of knowing the general state of the cause in western New York, after all the disappointments and trials the brethren have and are still passing through, it does rejoice my heart to see them still holding on to that blessed hope, and anxiously looking for the coming Savior, who I verily believe will soon appear to the joy of all his saints. O, blessed thought; and is it true that Jesus is coming!

"He who went to stray,
A pilgrim on the world's highway."

He who so often traversed the plains of Judea, preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and shall I soon see my Lord? Yes. O come Lord Jesus, come quickly. This, my brethren, is a comforting, yet awfully solemn truth. Comforting indeed to the way worn traveler, yet awful and solemn in the extreme, to the fearful and unbelieving. O my God, how alarming every thing appears! The last solemn truths of the gospel are fast dying away upon the ears of this ungodly and doomed world! The earth, and all animate nature, seems almost ready to heave its last dying groan, and yield up the ghost. O, my brethren, the last fatal shock will soon be felt, and the quaking earth be lit up by the unquenchable fires, which will burn to the lowest hell! O may we be ready to escape all those things which are coming on the earth, and to stand before the Son of Man, Amen. J. C. BYWATER.

Attica, Sept. 15, '46.

P. S. We closed our Conference here on Sunday eve., and to the praise of the good Lord, I can say that although our way seemed a good deal shut up at first, relative to a place large enough for our meetings, and our disappointment in not seeing Bro. Miller, as we expected, yet the Lord was with, and blessed us in every deed: and a more interesting season of communion of saints, I have seldom enjoyed. To God be all his praise. J. C. B.

Letter from Bro. B. Morley.

Bro. Marsh:—I think the Conferences at Jamestown and Laona, have been really profitable to the brethren in that region. There was at first a feeling of disappointment on the minds of many, in not seeing more preaching brethren, as neither Bro. Robinson nor Robbins were present, but the Lord helped us all to rise above it.—I am sure I never attended better meetings.—None so free from fanaticism, or so full of real interest and true devotion to the cause of truth.—Several brethren attended from a distance, and from places where the tidings of the Coming One are seldom heard. They seemed to feel an intense anxiety to hear and to speak of the glad tidings, and also to have it proclaimed to others.

Bro. Porter's strength held out remarkably well; in the space of about ten days, he preached twelve times—he thinks he owes much to a judicious use of cold water, drinking nothing else, and using it daily upon the whole surface of the body. It will not do for us to despise the principles of the "water cure:" we cannot do it and be consistent. Why? because, on the same principles that the priests overlook the Advent doctrine, do the "medical faculty" overlook the simple principles of water cure. Blind prejudice deprives many of great blessings, both for body and soul, which our heavenly Father is ready to bestow on all those who will receive them. Let those who are afflicted with "bronchitis," inform themselves on the subject of water cure.

I shall omit a particular account of the Jamestown Conference, as Bro. Hoyt is expected to give it. At Laona, we had the privilege of the Christian meeting-house. On Friday and Saturday, the time was not occupied in preaching, was well improved by the brethren and sisters, in exhortation and prayer. One aged sister referred with deep feeling, to the case of Peter in prison, when the angel of the Lord came and smote him on the side, and waked him up to hasten him out; she thought we must be thus ready, whenever the angels may come to take us away to meet the Savior at his coming.

On Sunday, Bro. Porter preached on the time, to a full assembly, giving the evidence for the coming of Christ, the present fall. The afternoon was spent in comforting and exhorting one another, and the observance of the Lord's supper.—It was a season of peculiar interest, and with one voice, we felt to give God all the glory.

Letter from Bro. S. S. St. John.

Bro. Marsh:—Your weekly visitor serves to cheer us by its timely visits, richly adorned as it is, by the Christian graces, friendly admonitions, cheering intelligence, and sound doctrine. It serves to strengthen our faith, putting us in mind that this is not our abiding place, and the one we are looking for will soon appear. Although we are called upon by those around us, to help sustain a corrupt government, opposed to the divine government of heaven's King, we dare not give our voice or influence in favor of that which is soon to be broken in pieces, and become as the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and carried away, and no place found for them. We are looking for a better country, with a law given of righteousness. We cannot believe that a good man will accept an office under a government which requires him to violate the laws of God; so we dare not participate in a violation of His laws, by voting in support of such a government. But we are told that we should occupy till Christ comes, that we should pity the poor slave, and vote for his freedom. Very true, but we ought not to violate the law of God while we occupy; and while we do pity the slave, we should remember that God is able to appoint the means for relief, without violating his laws: it is better to obey God than man. Christ said, "My kingdom is not of this world." When His kingdom is set up, it will need no improvement. We are strangers and pilgrims looking for such a kingdom which cannot be moved. I send you four dollars to help sustain you: use it as you see fit. It grieves me to see your receipts so small, when there is an abundance treasured up, that can be spared as well as not. We are poor in health and this world's goods, but we want the cause sustained.

Yours in love,

Jos. S. St. John.

P. S. Bro. Daniels made us a visit lately: the Lord bless him for his kind admonition.

J. S. St. J.

Letter from Bro. I. R. Gates.

Bro. Marsh:—Permit me to express my confidence and great satisfaction in the "Voice of Truth," and your independent and Christian course, as its editor. You have been placed in a peculiar and tried situation for months past, as well as myself. Yours, arising from a great attachment to many of our brethren who run over the mark, and mine, for my old Christian brethren, that I am now satisfied never will come up. I never renounced a single cardinal principle of the doctrine, when I went among them. But I tried an experiment, to see if they would hear with delight about my lovely Savior's immediate coming. But I am strong to say it was a profitless and hopeless task.

Elder I. N. Walter has expressed in his 'note' the feelings and revoltings of many a heart.—O! where is the safety in putting off the Lord's speedy coming, or spiritualizing the book of God. Mark the fate of Elder Perry, who has gone over to Universalism! How can or dare he, continue the Lord's supper, if Jesus has come! The Infidel says that the Bible is an instrument on which five hundred different tunes can be played, which is 499 lies. But it is only done by the process of spiritualizing its literal meaning and truths.—The pure water, which is so beneficial for man and beast, may, by heat, all evaporate in steam, and be rendered totally unfit for either.

I have traveled quite extensively the past season through the States, and am now in Canada East, and I can say in truth, that the Voice of Truth and Herald never were as much appreciated by our brethren as at this time, and never was I more convinced that this is the cause of God. I can say with Peter, "this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand."

I am doing up my last work for eternity, and never have I enjoyed more peace with God than within the last four months. I feel that it is a dyspeptic, sickly christianity, than can only live by the influence of others, but a healthy religion that lives by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Most High. I have traveled about 150 miles in Canada, and preached about 30 sermons, and can assure you that the cause is rising, all through this Province.

I am looking for that blessed hope, and I expect the sanctuary will be vindicated, and the time of trouble, caused by a transfer of the cup of God's fury, into the hands of all the nations, according to the 25th of Jer., to bring on the great battle, when the slain of the Lord will be from one end of the earth to the other. See Isa. 51: 22. That awful trouble is brought to view in Job 38: 22; Dan. 12: 1; and we conclude that the four angels must let go their hold on the winds, before the saints can be delivered, which will bring to pass what God affirms in Jer. 20: 6-8.

You will see by consulting Joel, 3: 9, that the mighty! in all the Gentile nations, have obeyed the providential call, to wake up, and get their instruments of death ready for the mighty battle. And in Isa. 63: 4, God solemnly declares that the year of his redeemed does not come until that day of vengeance.

Bro. Pinney I think is certainly wrong in taking out one item in Matthew 24: 29, and interpreting it spiritually, when all before, and all after it, is literal. I think it must be the constituent principles of the heavens, namely; the gases, which will not only shake the earth, but the whole aerial heavens. All know that the power of density is exceedingly great.

Shefford, Sept. 4th.

Bro. B. Morley, Buffalo, Aug. 19, writes:—Bro. Porter accompanied me to Boston, Eric Co., on Monday last, where I had left an appointment. We had a good meeting, and as Bro. Porter said, it seemed just as good as ever, to declare the glorious truths of the gospel of the kingdom. I expect to go north to-day: to visit Lewiston, and Canada, and perhaps Lockport.

It appears that we have got to fight spiritualism until the Lord comes. I am utterly astonished at this blindness on the first resurrection. If they had never been enlightened it would be a different thing, but now I see no excuse for running into this error.

Bro. D. George, Granville O., August 12th, writes:—We are still firm in the faith that the ushering in of the eternal kingdom of God is not far in the future. We believe in the pre-millennial resurrection of the just, and post-millennial resurrection of the wicked; and in the creation of new heavens and earth, in which righteousness will dwell after these shall have been dissolved with fervent heat: and in the unconscious state of the dead between death and the resurrection; and that the wicked will become unconscious after the second death shall have triumphed over them, and that they will, to endless time, remain so. These we believe to be very important Scriptural truths, and that a misconception of either, will lead men to a false conclusion of nearly every Bible doctrine. We are glad to know that each of these doctrines are defended by the Voice of Truth, and we hope that God, by his grace, will enable you in the future, as in the past, to defend the truths of his word. We live in an age of trial, where temptations present themselves in a thousand forms—here we are surrounded by those who profess to be the disciples of Christ—who are ready at all times, to class us with Mormons, Infidels and fanatics.—May God help us to endure evil as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, and enable us, as far as we can in meekness, to instruct those who set themselves in opposition to us, if by any means God will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth, and may we so live that we may be crowned with all the redeemed, heirs of eternal life.

"I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."—Rev. 3: 5.

How will men of this world toil and spend their whole lives to obtain a name among their fellow men. What a gratification it is to be the observed of all observers—the complimented—the distinguished. But, Christian, a higher honor awaits thee. Before an assembled world—before holy angels, tens of thousands of whom will be gathered on the occasion referred to in the words of this verse: yea—and O! what a thought—before the Father of the universe—thy Redeemer will confess thy name. How contemptible doth earth's pageantry appear to the child of immortality.—How worthless its fame: how insignificant its goods: empty its joys: low its pursuits: groveling its votaries.

We press to that world of delight,
Where pleasures forever do grow;

Where faith is succeeded by sight,
And Jesus his glories will show.

Where sorrow, and sickness, and pain,
Diseases and death are all past;
Where life, love, and beauty remain,
And joys to eternity last.

On condition that we endure to the end, are these promises ours. But if this meet the eye of an unbeliever or a backslider, let me call the attention to other words of Christ: Luke 9: 26.—"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of his holy angels."

O, if it be sorely trying to endure the marked ridicule and scorn of our fellow mortals, what must be the feeling to be disowned by Jesus, and exposed before multitudes of angels and men.—At this time there is great inducement to lay down the cross. Some, whom we knew two years ago, simple in appearance and manners, are now arraying themselves in fine apparel, and decking their persons with jewels; are shunning their poorer and lesser educated brethren; in short, denials notwithstanding, have left their first love. In vain you try to hide your departure from the simplicity of Christ: your works witness against you! Repent and bear your daily cross, or Christ will reject you. H. HERES.

Folly on a Large Scale.

On the occasion of Prince Albert's visit to Liverpool a few weeks ago, there was probably as much money expended in feasting, parade, traveling, &c., as in the whole Advent movement in this country from its commencement. The enumeration of the various kinds of fire-works, would fill a column of the Voice of Truth. The object of his "Royal Highness" visit, was good: to lay the corner-stone of an institution for the benefit of disabled seamen. If the Liverpool folks had given one half the money to the relief of these poor men that they expended uselessly, it would have done a great amount of good.

What an account will the wasters of this world's goods have to give to God, while thousands and millions of their fellow beings are suffering for want of food and clothing. Another reflection. When it was known that Victoria's husband would honor the great seaport with his presence, the people were pleased, and with one accord, prepared to welcome him. As he steps out of the carriage, a costly carpet is laid for his "royal" feet to tread upon. Men holding the highest offices, look into his face to see if he seems pleased with their attention, &c., &c. Now, this world has heard that the King of kings is soon to visit it. And how is the news received? are the honorable men preparing to welcome him? are the people glad to hear that one is coming to reign who will execute justice, root up oppression, and establish righteousness? Few, very few, seem pleased with the tidings. But it is His right to reign, and reign he will. A few loyal hearts are beating with expectation, and soon will the shout be heard, "This is our God, we have waited for him!" Even so, Amen.

Ballston N. Y., Sept. 17, 1846.

P. S. Since closing my letter, I have taken up a paper containing the following account of crime in France, which I have not seen published in any of our papers. It is something that our world-converting ministers would do well to look at:—

H. H.

Crime in France.

The increase of crime in France is, proportionally, six times greater than the increase of population, as appears from well authenticated returns. It is asserted, and no man has denied it, that during the last century, no less than ONE MILLION of Frenchmen have been found to have died by violence! An astounding, an awful fact! TEN THOUSAND violent deaths per annum, in a population of about 35,000,000.

From the year 1826 to 1843, the increase of population in France was only at the rate of seven per cent., while the increase in the various crimes, was as follows:—

Maiming and wounding,	3 per cent.
Poisoning,	5 "
Theft,	11 "
Manslaughter,	18 "
Rape committed on adults,	27 "
Parricide,	28 "
Infanticide,	34 "
Murder & murderous wounding,	37 "
Fraudulent bankruptcy,	39 "
Forgeries,	47 "
Arson,	74 "
Perjury,	81 "
Counterfeiting money,	91 "
Rapes committed on children,	140 "

This record, fearfully large as it is, contains only those crimes which have been proved upon individuals, and if there be added those which have never come to light, or which have not been successfully investigated by the police, the per cent increase must be swelled to almost an incredible degree!

The statistics of French suicides show an alarming increase in this kind of amusement, so peculiar to that country. From 1820 to 1830, the number of suicides was 1765; from 1841 to 1843 it increased to 2573; and in 1844, the number was 2900! Making the proportionate increase in this crime alone, seven per cent greater than the increase in population.

"Watch and Pray Always."

In the Scriptures of truth,
Precious guide of our way,
We're commanded to watch,
And, without ceasing, pray.

And not merely commands,
But examples are given,
By Prophets, Apostles,
And Jesus from heaven.

In company, alone,
For foe, and for friend,
With groanings of spirit,
His prayers did ascend.

When the multitude thronged,
Rising up before day,
He solitary wander'd
In retirement to pray.

He not only prayed off,
But proceeding ahead,
He continued all night
In prayer unto God.

For vile persecutors,
Amid torture and wrong,
He breathed out his life
With prayer on his tongue.

Then let us be humble,
Watch always, and pray,
Till Jesus, in glory,
Translates us away—

To dwell in his presence,
And his glory behold,
Where pleasures evermore,
Shall fill every soul.

Catholics refusing toleration to Protestants.—It is stated in the English papers that the Queen of Spain has issued a peremptory order, requiring the Baptist missionaries to leave the Fernando Po. The reason assigned was, that "the religion of Spain is the Catholic religion, which admits of no toleration," and that, as "the religion of the missionaries was not that of Spain, it involved, of necessity, disaffection against the authority of Spain." A few months are allowed for their departure; in the meantime they are not to preach.—Ch. Reflector.

Facts for a Thousand Millions.

Here are a few of the reminiscences of war, entirely shorn of poetry. They are bloody witnesses to the truth, and let them testify. In the periodical butcheries in the human family, the following hecatombs have been offered up to that god of battles which both Christians and pagans have worshipped with the same devotion:

Loss of life in the Jewish wars,	25,000,000
By wars in the time of Sesostris,	15,000,000
By those of Semiramis, Cyrus, and Alexander,	30,000,000
By Alexander's successors,	20,000,000
Grecian wars,	15,000,000
War of the twelve Cæsars,	30,000,000
Roman wars before Julius Cæsar,	60,000,000
Wars of the Roman empire, Turks and Sarcens,	180,000,000
Wars of the Reformation,	30,000,000
Wars of the middle ages and nine Crusades,	80,000,000
Tartar and African wars,	180,000,000
American Indians destroyed by the Spaniards,	12,000,000
Wars of Napoleon,	6,000,000

The above is a mere extract from the bloody statistics of glorious war; one chapter in the annals of the violence, crime and misery that have followed in the foot-prints of the Great Destroyer. The loss of souls is entered where human eyes may not read the list. Mr. Dick estimates the number of those who have perished directly and indirectly by war, at fourteen thousand millions, or about one-tenth of the human race. Edmund Burke placed the number at THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND MILLIONS. Taking the estimate of Mr. Dick, and assuming the average quantity of blood in a common sized person, the veins of those fourteen thousand millions would fill a circular lake of more than seventeen miles in circumference—ten feet deep; in which all the navies of the world might float! Supposing these slaughtered millions to average, each, four feet in length, if placed in a row, they would reach nearly 442 times around the earth, and four times around the sun. Supposing they averaged 130 lbs. each, then they would form a globe of human flesh of nearly a mile in diameter, weighing 1,820,000,000,000 lbs. Fourteen times more than all the human beings now living on the globe.

The London correspondent of the Atlas makes these remarks on the disease among potatoes.—The picture is a sad one.

It is now a well authenticated fact that the potato crops in England and Ireland, are already nearly lost, by the same disease that spread so widely last season. There is not a field in either country, that is not either totally or partially blasted by this pestilential disease. The very swine will not eat the diseased potatoes, and yet the poor people are compelled to eat them or starve! Whenever this is the case, a very fatal fever rages, and sudden deaths occur.

It is stated that diseased potatoes act upon the human frame as a slow poison, which eventually destroys life. In some villages, where blighted potatoes have been eaten, the English cholera prevails to an alarming extent, and the inference is that this diseased food produces the cholera.—It is stated that on fields where guano has been extensively used, the disease is more destructive to the potato. Even the leaves of young and healthy trees have been affected where potatoes have been planted. They wither suddenly, and fall off. The smell emitted from the fields is described as most offensive, and a kind of smoke arises from the ground, like a thick mist. What the legions of poor people in England and Ireland will exist upon, it is impossible to say; unless government again purchases large quantities of Indian corn for their relief, they will be in a most deplorable condition.

CRIME AMONG YOUTH.—There are, at the present time, confined in the jail in this city, no less than twelve boys under the age of 18, who have been committed by Justices of the Police Court, to await their trials for various crimes with which they have been charged. Gangs of boys roam the streets every night, seeking for opportunities to plunder. These are not all boys of vicious parents, but such as have grown up in habits of idleness and criminal indulgence, and have entirely set at naught, parental control.—Many of them are known to subsist by their dishonest pursuits, not even visiting the houses of their parents and guardians, except to find shelter from the officers of justice, and protection from the consequences of their crimes. During the summer, nearly every shop in Broad street has been broken open, chiefly by these youthful depredators; and the robberies and burglaries which from day to day occur, have thoroughly alarmed our citizens as to the safety of their lives and property. The False Priest.

BY POLLOK.

Among the accursed, who sought a hiding place
In vain, from fierceness of Jehovah's rage,
And from the hot displeasure of the Lamb,
Most wretched, most contemptible, most vile,
Stood the false priest, and in his conscience left
The fellest gnaw of the Undying Worm.
And so he might, for he had on his hands
The blood of souls, that would not wipe away.
Hear what he was.—He swore in sight of God,
And man, to preach his master, Jesus Christ;
Yet preached himself: he swore that love of souls
Alone, had drawn him to the church; yet strewed
The path that led to hell with tempting flowers.
And in the ear of sinners, as they took
The way of death, he whispered peace: he swore Away all love of lucre, all desire
Of earthly pomp, and yet a princely seat
He liked, and to the clink of Mammon's box
Gave most rapacious ear: his prophesies,
He swore, were from the Lord; and yet taught lies
For gain: with quackish ointment healed the wounds
And bruises of the soul outside, but left
Within, the pestilent matter, unobserved.
To sap the moral constitution quite,
And soon to burst again, incurable.
He with untempered mortar daubed the walls
Of Zion, saying, Peace, when there was none.
The man who came with thirsty soul to hear
Of Jesus, went away unsatisfied:
For he another gospel preached than Paul,
And one that had no Savior in't. And yet
His life was worse. Faith, charity, and love,
Humility, forgiveness, holiness,
Were words well lettered in his sabbath creed;
But with his life he wrote as plain—revenge,
Pride, tyranny, and lust of wealth and power
Inordinate, lewdness unashamed.
He was a wolf in clothing of the lamb,
That stole into the fold of God, and on
The blood of souls which he did sell to death, Grew fat: and yet when any would have turned Him out, he cried:—'Touch not the priest of God.
And that he was anointed, fools believed:
But knew 'That Day, he was the devil's priest:
Anointed by the hands of Sin and Death,
And set peculiarly apart to ill,—
While on him smoked the vials of perdition Poured measureless. Ah me! what cursing then
Was heaped upon his head by ruined souls.
That charged him with their murder, as he stood
With eye of all the unredemmed, most sad, Waiting the coming of the Son of Man!

SWEDENBORGIANISM.

It is well known to many of our readers, that Prof. Bush, for some months past, has been a zealous advocate of the illusive doctrines of Emanuel Swedenborg. We occasionally hear of a convert being made to this fanciful delusion.—It seems that Prof. Bush has recently written a pamphlet in defence of his sentiments. La Roy Sunderland, said to be "probably the best acquainted with the principles of Pathology, of any man in America," has reviewed the Professor's pamphlet, in the following article which we copy from the Advent Herald, for Sept 23. We hope it may serve to open the eyes of some, to the absurdities of the dogmas it opposes.

Prof. Bush and Swedenborgianism.

Mr. Editor:—Having been induced by an allusion in your paper, to read Prof. Bush's "Statement of Reasons" for embracing Swedenborgianism, I beg the privilege of offering through your columns, a few remarks on one or two of the Professor's "statements," in which he refers to the subject of Mesmerism. For Prof. Bush I entertain sentiments of profound respect, having enjoyed a most pleasant and friendly acquaintance with him for a number of years. I believe him to be a man of most excellent spirit, perfectly honest in his mental deductions, and, not the less so now, for his having embraced the assumed revelations of Emanuel Swedenborg.

For myself, I think I see, and have a tolerably correct apprehension of the causes which have led the Professor into the belief of Swedenborgianism. In the peculiar susceptibilities of his own mind, in the nature of the influences which have been associated with his researches after truth, and the peculiar circumstances with which he has been operated upon for the last few years, it is easy to perceive how it is that Prof. Bush has been gradually led along into that state of mind which receives or originates visions like those described by the Swedish baron.

However, Prof. B. may not, perhaps be willing to allow, that any one can be so good a judge of Swedenborg's claims, except those who receive his "Memorable relations." The justice of this objection I will not here attempt to dispute, but proceed to offer my reasons against the Professor's faith in Swedenborgianism, founded, as he tells us, upon "Mesmeric Phenomena," inasmuch as I think the Professor's candor will compel him to acknowledge, that, if I am not so competent to judge of Swedenborgianism, because I am not so well acquainted with it as he is himself; then, Prof. B. is not so competent to judge of "Mesmeric Phenomena," because, he cannot have been so familiar with this subject, as I have been for the last twenty years or more. Indeed, that Prof. Bush is not well acquainted with the "laws of mental intercourse," to which he alludes and, that he has been deceived, and that he has drawn unfounded inferences from alleged Mesmeric Phenomena, I know with just as much certainty, as he affirms of his own knowledge of the "Mesmeric Phenomena," to which he alludes.

Nor must Prof. B. be allowed to object to the witness now to be examined, in proof of what I have above stated. The witness is one of his own choosing, and, according to his own confession, it is one, without whose testimony he himself, "in all human probability, would never have come to the position he now occupies" in relation to the assumed visions and relations of Swedenborg!! It was "the overwhelming evidence of truth derived from this" very witness, I am now about to examine, that finally converted Prof. B. into the belief of the 'Memorable Relations of things seen and heard in Heaven and Hell,' by the baron Swedenborg. Now let us hear Prof. B.'s report of what this witness (Mesmerism) said to him, when he consulted it for information upon this subject:—

1. "Persons thrown into the Mesmeric trance invariably made the same report, as far as their perceptions extended, that Swedenborg does in regard to the laws and realities of the spiritual sphere, however ignorant beforehand of his disclosures."

2. "The state itself (trance) with its most obvious manifestations was such as to afford a demonstration to the very senses, of the truth of his general assertions in respect to the principles and mode of spiritual existence in the other life."

3. "The laws which Swedenborg lays down in regard to mental intercourse between spirits, are precisely the laws which are developed in the mesmeric manifestations, so that I hesitate not, in the least to affirm, that if the latter be true, the former must be."

How much I regretted the announcements of statements like the above, by such a man as Prof. Bush, when I first heard of them from the reports of his lectures, here, last fall! But they have been put forth, and now, involved as Prof. Bush's own mind, and professional influence are, in their truthfulness or falsehood, I know the nature of the human mind too well to doubt, but that, even if I should prove their falsity to a mathematical certainty, it will now be far more difficult for Prof. B. to give up his position, than it was for him to assume it while his mind was under the charm of "mesmeric phenomena."

Happily, however, the question now to be decided, is a question of facts.—Facts, of which ordinary minds may take knowledge, and of which they may be able to judge accurately, provided they have not too firmly committed themselves to one side or the other, beforehand. What then is true, with regard to the "mesmeric phenomena?" I answer:—

1. It is not true, that "persons thrown into the mesmeric trance, invariably (or even generally) make the same report, as far as their perceptions extend, that Swedenborg does in regard to the laws and realities of the spiritual world, however ignorant beforehand of his disclosures."

I have thrown more than three thousand persons into that state denominated the mesmeric trance, [called mesmeric very improperly, for Mesmer never induced that state at all,] and, I have seen, and consulted scores of persons thrown into that state by others, besides large numbers who fall into it spontaneously, as Swedenborg did, and I affirm that, but for the causes I am about to name, there would not be two somnambulists the world over, who would agree in their 'reports' in regard to the laws of the "spiritual world." Nay, out of the thousands I, myself, have thrown into this state, I have not found any two who have agreed, exactly, in the respects mentioned by Prof. Bush. The state of 'trance,' or somnambulism referred to, is precisely like that of ordinary dreaming, and there is no more correspondence between the 'reports' of different somnambulists than may be noticed between ordinary dreams. This I know to be the true state of the case.

But, the 'reports' of somnambulists do, sometimes, agree; and, they may agree with the reports of Swedenborg. This depends on a number of circumstances, as: 1. Upon the views of the person by whom the subject is thrown into the trance. 2. Or, upon the views of the person who puts the question to the somnambulists. 3. Or upon previous education of the subject; or 4. Upon the mental faculties most active at the time of the dream; or 5. Upon what the subject had previously heard about heaven or hell. I have had forty or fifty persons in that state of trance at once. On questioning one of them about the "spirit world," they would all agree, in giving a similar account; but, at another time, they would all differ, depending on the activity of certain portions of their brains, at the time. This was, unquestionably, the case with Swedenborg; his organs of wonder and credulity were enormously large, and they were probably diseased, (this I infer from his own account of his head, Apoc. Rev. 531,) and, that they were unusually active, his voluminous writings abundantly show.

2. Prof. Bush affirms, that the "mesmeric trance" itself, considered as a state affords demonstration of the truth of Swedenborgianism.—But, how so? I affirm that we know just nothing at all, of the "mode of existence in another life," except what we learn from the Bible. Swedenborg knew nothing; and somnambulists, by hundreds and thousands have confessed to me, that they know nothing, and that, in the nature of things, it is impossible for us to know anything.

3. What are the "laws developed in the mesmeric manifestations?" Prof. B. thinks they are precisely the same as those laid down by Swedenborg "in regard to mental intercourse between spirits." I think they are just the reverse. The 'laws' assumed by Prof. B. and others, with regard to mesmeric influence may be stated thus: "That one mind, by a mere volition, without any previous physical association, through the external senses, may operate upon another mind, so as to produce a state of trance." But suppose it has not been proved that any human mind was, really, ever influenced in the way here stated? That Prof. B. thinks he "knows" there is such a law, as well as he "knows any fact in geology, chemistry, optics, or acoustics," I readily admit. But, I think I know, not only that he is deceived, but, I know how he is deceived, as many others have been in like manner. To make it sufficiently plain, a treatise would be required on the susceptibilities, functions, and powers, of the nervous system. But, I must be brief.

1. Prof. B. errs in confounding a mere mental volition, with an impression made through the external senses, by physical association. Let him by a mere thought, a mere wish, desire, or volition, cause one or more persons to fall into a "mesmeric trance," whom he never spoke to, nor saw, and who never either saw him, or knew of his existence, through the external senses.—Such "mesmeric phenomena" as this, never was produced, and it is not, now, too much to say, it never can be,—no! never! But such results ought to be induced in the manner above stated, if Swedenborgianism be true.

2. Prof. B. thinks he saw his "own thoughts and sensations, sympathetically transferred to another person." Doubtless he did see all this, but it was neither done in the way he supposes, nor did it prove what he assumes. The transmission of sensations by sympathy, does not prove a mind, soul, or spirit, existing and acting, as Swedenborg and Prof. B. assume. Sympathy is peculiar to certain nervous organisms, when associated together through the external senses, and so far from proving the separate existence of the mind, acting as Prof. B. assumes, this sympathy proves the contrary. Precisely the same sympathetic laws govern animals. The charm of serpents has been proverbial, from immemorial time. A case in illustration of this law, is given in the "New York Sun," for April 6, 1843.

"Some years since, a gentleman by the name of A. W., was travelling in Mississippi, and found in the road side a rattle-snake. The road was narrow, and it is important to say that the snake was on the right hand. Mr. W. dismounted, and procured a stick to kill the snake, struck it a blow, so as to disable it, and to his astonishment, heard a partridge flutter on the left hand side of the road at the instant the blow was inflicted on the snake. The partridge was eight or ten feet from the snake, and he immediately went to it and picked it up, intending to secure it first and then despatch the serpent. He recollected, however, having heard that the charm of the bird was communicable, by contact with it to any other living animal, and deposited it in the place where he had taken it, and resumed his "labors of love" on the "charmer." To his great astonishment, he observed that every blow on the snake, seemed to tell on the partridge, which fluttered at every one: and as the work of death progressed with the snake, it seemed to proceed pari passu with the bird. When the snake writhed, the bird fluttered, and when the snake was dead, the bird absolutely fell on its side, made sundry gasps, and expired."

The following is from the "Philadelphia Public Ledger":—A gentleman of great respectability in St. Croix, showed me a hen's egg, which has on it, in relief, the figure of a goose. The annexed is a sketch of the figure, taken in my presence, and the following is his account of the case:—

The circumstances connected with this phenomenon, may not be unworthy of notice. There was only one fine white goose on the place, which constantly associated with the other fowls of the yard. Having no other companion, he frequently seated himself in the yard, among the rest of the fowls, precisely in the posture of the figure in the egg, which egg was laid by one of the hens constantly in company with the goose. The feathers on the body of the goose were in rather a rough state, but the neck was covered with down and no feathers. Did the goose 'mesmerise' the hen? or the serpent the partridge? I answer, undoubtedly. These were "mesmeric phenomena," just as real as those upon which Prof. B. places so much reliance in proving the truth of Swedenborgianism. The dilemma has 2 horns; and my friend, Prof. B., will find it somewhat difficult, I think, to avoid them both, while he receives Swedenborg's notions with regard to mind.

That Prof. B. is deceived, I think he himself must perceive, when he finds, as I doubt not he will, ere long, that the class of "phenomena" to which he refers, so far from convincing intelligent minds of the truth of Swedenborgianism, is really, exerting a contrary influence. I myself was favorably impressed with regard to Swedenborg's views, till I became familiar with what I now believe to be the true philosophy of mind.—Then it was I saw the causes, not only of common dreaming, but also the origin of Swedenborg's visions, and of the ten thousand varied "reports" made by somnambulists of the "spirit world," till my convictions amount to physical, moral, and mental certainty, that the 'mesmeric' and Swedenborgian visions are all resolvable into susceptibilities and functions peculiar to the nervous system, and consequently they are neither of them true, any more than any other class of dreams. The philosophy of the nervous functions by which I account for these results, the reader may find in a work I published a few years since, entitled "Pathetism with Practical Instructions," &c., &c., for sale by Redding & Co., No. 8, State-Street, Boston. And since the publication of that work, my opportunities have been increased, a thousand fold, as it were, for ascertaining the truth on this subject. The results of my numerous experiments and later researches I am now preparing for the press, and which will be issued, probably, in the course of a few months.

Sin of Slavery.

Bro. Marsh:—I want to present a few facts to those who read the Voice of Truth, to let them see how guilty the nominal church is of the sin of slavery. It can be proved, that ministers and members of the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist churches of the southern states, buy and sell their fellow men!—they separate husbands from wives, and children from their parents. The slaves are not allowed to learn to read: they are frequently whipped in the most cruel manner,—Sometimes, even until death ensues. And all these crimes are committed by men who call themselves followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Many of these men speak in high and lofty strains, about the soon conversion of the world by their churches, and they are continually boasting about the glorious liberty and freedom that is enjoyed in this enlightened land, where, they say every man can sit under his own vine and fig tree, and none to molest him.

Now, I defy any man to point out on the map of this globe, any civilized government or nation, which suffers such high-handed oppression, bloodshed and cruelty, as is perpetrated with impunity, in these United States. W. Giddings, one of the representatives from Ohio, said in Congress, that one hundred slaves were murdered every day in the United States! and no one contradicted him!! Let any man of spirit and feeling, for a moment cast his thought over this land of slavery: think of the nakedness of some, the hungry yearnings of others, the flowing tears and heaving sighs of parting relations—the wailings and woe, the bloody cut of the keen lash, and the frightful screams of helpless females, that rend the very skies, and all this to gratify ambition, lust, pride, and avarice, and the other depraved feelings of the human heart.

The Bey of Tunis, and the emperor of Morocco have abolished slavery in their dominions. Thus showing to the world, that some Mahomedans have more humanity than many professed Christians in America have!

The Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian churches in the northern states, fellowship, and are connected with, those in the south, and most of their members and ministers are the apologists of slavery, and vote for women whippers, and men stealers.

The only safety for those who want to escape the wrath of God, which is about to be poured out on this sinful world and fallen churches, is, to separate from them: God says, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."—How plain the description is given. In the same chapter it is said, that she deals in "slaves and souls of men." I believe that the 2300 days (or years) mentioned by Daniel, have nearly run out, and that very soon Gabriel's loud trump will sound. For my part, I would rather be called a poor, deluded Millerite and fanatic, by worldly professors of religion, and scoffers at our blessed hope of the speedy restitution of this world to its primeval state, than to have all the honors and riches they could heap upon me, for rejecting the truth as it is in the Bible.

SAMUEL FOWLES.

Brockport, Sept. 9, 1846.

Bro Weston's Article.

I was very much surprised at the want of christian courtesy, and brotherly love, manifested in the late communications of Bro. J. Weston, in the "Voice of Truth." The brother occasionally uses his long whip-lash, not only inconsiderately, but very inconsistently. I think that if he will again read them over, he will be induced to say, that a portion of the sentiment was immaturely written.

He gives the impression, that myself, with others, "came out with proof positive," that the Savior would make his second advent this fall. As it regards myself, the brother has done me some little wrong in this matter. In all my communications of late, on this much disputed subject, (definite time) I have invariably expressed my opinion with modesty, becoming those who possess as little knowledge in these matters as I do. Let the brother read (perhaps he has) the explanatory note on the "Historical and Astronomical Diagram;" also the article on "Definite Time," in the double number of the "Voice," and he will find the following guarded and circumspect language on this point. "If this be correct, and it is strong language—to my mind, the evidence is exceedingly strong, that the fall of this year will terminate the 2300 years—we now stand in the compass of only two short years of remaining chronological controversy—Usher, Scaliger, Prideaux, Ferguson, Bacon, and others, fix the crucifixion in A. D. 33. In accordance with this, the 2300 years will end sometime in the fall of this year. Time will soon test this strong testimony. I. Newton, supposes that Christ was crucified in A. D. 34. If this be correct, time will extend to the fall of 1847, A. D."

This is a sample of the positiveness that I for one, have used in writing or speaking on the prophetic periods. I repeat it. According to all the amount of evidence which I have been enabled to gather, I am looking with strong expectations of seeing my blessed Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, this fall, but, at the same time, admit the possibility of time extending to another year. Now, if this manner of reasoning will offend my brother, he certainly possesses an over-confident spirit, to say the least,—and if (as he says) many brethren and sisters "are strongly tempted to give up the whole advent faith," by 'such expressions,' (as above) 'such gross inconsistency,' they have but little understanding in God's word. and as Paul said to the Hebrews, "Ye have need that one teach you again, which be the first principles of the oracles of God."

Again. The brother says in his letter of August 20, "I shall look for the Lord this autumn." (Why?) "Because many of my brethren think (not positive) they see evidence for the ending of the days here, though for myself, with much searching and prayer, I have never been able to see so much as a shadow of evidence, that the 70 weeks began or ended in the autumn." Not a shadow? no! and yet it is perfectly consistent in him, to look for, and expect the coming of the Lord at a time when he cannot see so much as a shadow of evidence, but, it is "gross inconsistency in others, to admit a possibility of time being prolonged another year, when they can "see a shadow of evidence" to this effect. "O consistency! thou art a jewel!"

He says also, "many feel confident that Christ was crucified in April, A. D. 33." True. "This may have been, but any one who will look dispassionately at Ferguson's argument for it, will see that it is all a castle built in the air. He first assumes the Rabbinical reckoning to be correct, and on that assumption, goes to work to ascertain when the paschal moon fell on a Friday." This argument is brought forward (if it may be called an argument) for the express purpose of disproving the evidences of the second advent this fall: for he says in connection with this, "I write these things to those who are so confident the Lord will come this autumn." And we ask, is this a fair and honest statement of the question? Does the whole argument, whether the Lord was crucified in the spring of '33, turn on the correctness of the Rabbinical manner of computing the time of the Passover? Will the brother wish to be understood that he assumes such a position as this? We think not; yet he has virtually, thus committed himself. If we were not personally acquainted with the dear brother, we should attribute such sentiments to a want of knowledge on this subject, but as we before said, he wrote at the spur of the moment, and without due deliberation. I will, however, endeavor, for one, to receive the kind and brotherly exhortation with which he closes his remarks; "if time should continue beyond the point you expect, do not make shipwreck of faith, as many did after the 7th month." No, my brother, even if our Redeemer should not come until the fall of '47, I trust that we both shall be found of him in peace. O, may we, as the professed servants of Jesus, faithfully discharge all the duties and obligations resting upon us; abound more and more in the blessed work, so that at last, when our divine Judge shall appear, it may be said to us, well done good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. J. P. Jr.

Rochester, Sept. 30, 1846.

Letter from Bro. J. Weston.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—We had an excellent Conference last week, at Mount Holley, Vt. It was a melting time to the saints, and all seemed to feel that they should see their Lord very soon. Several backsliders were reclaimed, and one impenitent sinner converted. There was an awful solemnity on the minds of the impenitent generally, and many of them wept when the truth was pressed home upon them. Bro. L. Kimball, R. Baker Dow, and A. Sherwin, were present and took part in the exercises. At the close, we had a communion season, to celebrate the dying love of our Lord.

There are some very excellent brethren among the Green mountains, in Mount Holley, Jamaica, Springfield, and Grafton.

I am exceedingly pained at the course taken by the Bible Advocate. When I received the first number, I supposed that the conductors were honest, and that the true object of the paper was set forth in the prospectus, that it was designed to give meat in due season to the poor of the flock. I accordingly wrote a letter to Bro. Cole, expressing my approbation of the paper. When I found the manner of starting the paper and the object of it, I wrote to Bro. Cole, my entire disapproval of it. This he does not choose to publish, so that this paper still goes with my approval. No candid person can pretend that the prominent doctrines there inculcated, have anything to do with fitting souls for the kingdom, consequently they are not meat in due season. If time should continue until spring, I firmly believe that the adherents of these sentiments will be farther off from God and his truth, than those who followed the "Hope within the Veil," "Day Star," or "Jubilee Standard." I pray God that the conductors of the Advocate may see their danger in departing from the plain word of God before it be forever too late. J. WESTON.

Grafton, Vt., Sept. 6, 1846.

Letter from Bro. H. Morgan.

Bro. Marsh:—I was forcibly reminded, on reading Bro. Mansfield's call for assistance, that probably many of us who have been sometime waiting for our Lord, and who sometimes, perhaps, are inclined to despondency, and not sufficiently awake to our duty, doing all we can, in every way we can, for the spread of this glorious gospel of the kingdom through the earth as a witness to all nations: for when this is done, we are assured the end will come. When this is done, the Lord will come. Well then, it comes to this in one sense, that we are to say by our activity in thus spreading these glad tidings, when the Lord shall come. Then should we not at once bestir ourselves, and while we ardently pray, "Lord come quickly," be doing something to hasten his coming?

We may be sure that the good news will be spread according to the Word, as a "witness to all nations," and it will be done by the instrumentality of the saints of God in the last days. Then it remains for us to say whether we will be of the number thus employed, or whether we will be professedly waiting for the kingdom of God, while we leave the appropriate duties of such a waiting people to others, those who wish, and are resolved to approve themselves as faithful servants.

A train of thoughts like these, I say, occurred to me on reading Brother Mansfield's call, and I resolved to try and do something in answer to it, and have, by heavy labor, procured a little, which I send him. I wish I could send more, but I have done what I could, and I am resolved so to do as I have opportunity, and perhaps I shall be heard to speak of my humble efforts as I now do, but my motive shall be, as now, to stimulate my brethren to do the same, as one of the best ways to secure the favor of God.

Brother Mansfield believes he is going to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom to those who have not heard the heavenly sound. If so, that is the very place where it should be preached immediately, and any other place in the whole world where this glad sound has not yet come, should have it next, and I am mistaken, if the promulgation of this truth does not call for much sacrifice from some. Brethren, perhaps, are to leave all endearments here below, and go for Jesus' sake, to a remote corner, to proclaim His truth, not to raise up and sustain flourishing churches, but to witness to the nation that Jesus, the King, the Lord is coming. This is to be done that the virgins may arise and trim their lamps, and be ready to meet him; and he who has oil in his vessel, will cling to his hope, even if this truth should, in his flight as a messenger of heaven, pass on by him, to other nations. He would no doubt say to the messenger, you must stop with me, I am weak, I want your help to keep my lamp bright and burning, especially if I should have to wait for my Lord till other nations shall hear the sound. But the messenger would answer him, no, I cannot stay, I must go and do my Master's work, and the sooner you will be made glad by seeing him as he is, and being made like him.

You must see that your vessel is kept filled, and your lamp burning: this you already know how to do, and you too must be my Master's messenger to those around you, and say to all, by all your words and actions, the Lord is coming! "the hour of his judgment is come." I am weak like you, but I can do wonders through my Master, who strengthens me. Then let your strength be in Him, and never refuse to do His bidding, and so you will not only do valiantly, but you will be an approved and faithful servant.

Brethren, our Master wants that property you deeded and made sure to him, by your vows, dated on the tenth day of the seventh month, '44. He wants it brought into available form, such as cash and self-denying duties, and he wants it now. Shall he have it! I cannot wait long for an answer; you know how the business stands—see to it at once, that your vows are performed to the Most High. I charge you not to have property in your hands when the Master comes, that is his, and on which you have laid a sacriligious hand: better never have been born. And I charge you not to turn away from these things, but do what you can for him who has done so much for you. O brethren, shall we be found faithful servants when our Lord shall come? and shall we hear the welcome, "well done?" May it be the happy lot of us all.

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, OCTOBER 7, 1846.

Waxing Old as doth a Garment.

"Thou Lord in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands: they shall perish, but thou remainest: and they all shall wax old as doth a garment: and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed." Heb. 1: 10-12. Psa. 102: 25, 26.

We not only expect that the political, moral and religious world will be ripe for destruction at the coming of the Lord, but believe the above and similar declarations of scripture, warrant the belief that at that time the natural heavens and earth will no longer answer the end for which they were created: they will have waxed old like a garment, and consequently will need to be changed. A few startling facts, of recent occurrence, clearly show that some important physical change in the natural world is rapidly approaching.

1. Within the past year nearly if not every quarter of the globe has been shaken with earthquakes. A greater number in the same length of time have also been witnessed than in any previous year.—This one fact speaks volumes that the earth waxes old, and must soon, if from no other cause, be destroyed by the vast and rapidly increasing ocean of melted lava confined within her bowels.

2. Says a writer for a recent number of the Journal of Commerce, "The great number of earthquakes which have been experienced within the last eight months, has been wonderful—our atmosphere has been singularly affected, as you will see by the extensive and very minute records in the Municipal Gazette." What that change in our atmosphere, here referred to, is, we know not, for we have not seen the 'minute records in the Gazette,' here named, but that our atmosphere is affected by some cause inexplicable on any other principle than that the earth is waxing old as doth a garment, we think the following facts prove.

1. Unprecedented storms, hurricanes and tornadoes, within a few years past, have swept over land and ocean, spreading devastation and death in their resistless course. Changes, too, from heat to cold, and cold to heat, in the short space of a few hours of an unprecedented number of degrees, have been of unusual and frequent occurrence. These convulsions and sudden freaks, these hectic flushes and death-like chills of nature, show that she is laboring, comparatively speaking, under the infirmities and diseases of old age: and, like the exhausted and worn out human frame, must sink beneath her accumulated diseases, which most surely will soon result in her dissolution.

2. The fatal diseases of our world, especially the Asiatic Cholera, which has swept hundreds of thousands to the chambers of death, within a few years past, not only in Asia, where it has long prevailed, but in all parts of the globe, is admitted by the scientific to have its origin, and extension in an affected or disordered atmosphere. It is also true that poisonous vapors now float on nearly every breeze, engendering new and numerous diseases, which for a few years past have hurried millions of short lived mortals to a premature grave. There are natural causes for this vast work of death which has been witnessed within a few past years; and those causes can be satisfactorily traced to the once healthful but now disordered earth, from which we derive our subsistence, and the once pure but now poisonous atmosphere we breathe. The earth is no longer man's guardian or protector, but his destroyer. She has become one vast engine, moved by the mighty power of the tempest, and earthquake, aided by the pestilential breath of every disease, to hurry to the grave, annually, millions of its degenerate inhabitants.

3. That the atmosphere is affected to an alarming degree, is evident from the universal blight which, for a few years past, has fallen upon nearly every vegetable substance. The curse is visibly seen upon the products of this earth. In justification of these remarks we refer the reader to well known facts, together with the following account of the potato blight in Ireland. We take it from the London Times for Aug. 15th. It shows that the cause of this disease is found in a poisonous atmosphere. But it matters not whether it is there or in the soil: in either case the evidence is equally good, that the earth no longer subserves the end for which it was created. She has waxed old, and must soon with the heavens be rolled together as a garment. The account says:

"Friday evening closed as lovely and genial a day as August ever ushered, but about 8 o'clock p. m. a sharp easterly wind arose and continued until morning. Nothing was anticipated—no one dreamed of the coming calamity—the sun rose on Saturday as lovely a morn as a more genial clime could produce—but alas! and too true,—the rich and lovely potato fields which were a delight to behold on the previous day,—their rich foliage and variegated flower were faded and completely black! Nothing could exceed the change produced; they seemed as if electrified. I saw several fields within a few hundred yards of this town, and found them all withered; a man who was digging showed me them all black!—I inquired of several intelligent farmers who informed me that there was a blast, or as they termed it, bad wind, on Friday night, which caused this mighty change in this part of the county. From Cahir and the Galtee mountain by the banks of the Suir, extending to Sleevenaman, all were visited by the blast and were lost. In Powestown, Gammonsfield, Kileash, Kilmurry, the potato crop was a complete failure, and all the potatoes offered for sale in our market (Clonmel) on Saturday last were partially black, so extensive is the disease at present.

From Wexford the accounts are equally disastrous. According to what follows from the Waterford Chronicle, published on the authority of a trustworthy correspondent, both the potato and oat crops, especially the former, have suffered to a dreadful extent.

4. The strange the wonderful phenomenon recently witnessed on the banks of the River Thames, in what is called spontaneous combustion of the green willow tree, is a striking proof of the correctness of our position. The accounts of this, to the wise of this world, astounding mystery, we have not before us, and shall therefore quote from recollection.—The first appearance in the case is, the green willow (a most difficult wood to burn) is seen enveloped in smoke issuing from all its branches, and after a short time the tree ignites and is soon consumed, even to its roots, by the fire of its own kindling! There is a cause for this before unheard of phenomenon, and that cause we believe alone is found in the deranged state of the atmospheric gases; their equilibrium is being affected, and soon they will work their own dissolution, and the destruction of the world that now is.

That it is possible for this earth to be enveloped in flame, at any moment, or in the words of Scripture, 'burn as an oven,' we quote the following philosophical proof from the Scientific American:

"There is one view of the subject, which makes it appear miraculous that such an event has not occurred long ago. The fact has already become familiar with people of ordinary intelligence, that a mixture of hydrogen gas, with common atmospheric air, is highly inflammable, and will burn with a greater or less degree of violence according to the quantity of hydrogen in the compound. It is also well known that there is a constant emission of hydrogen from vegetation, and from the decomposition of various substances; and that this gas, being extremely light and buoyant, has a tendency to rise to the surface of the atmosphere. There is therefore no reason to doubt that immense quantities of this inflammable compound abound in the upper regions of the air, and that nothing more than a spark of electric fire would be required to envelope the world in flames. The only circumstance which has hitherto prevented such conflagration, is that the region of concentrative and excitable electricity is several miles below that of the inflammable air.—Yet there are no defined laws or theory to show any security against the occurrence of an aerial conflagration at any moment."

That it is absolutely certain that this earth will be dissolved by fire, is abundantly evident from various predictions of Him who created and upholds all things. A quotation or two will be sufficient.—

'But the day of the Lord WILL COME as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up.' 2 Pet. 3: 10.

'Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.' Mal. 4: 1.

Finally, that this great and burning day will soon be witnessed, we have the most weighty reasons to believe. It is not only proved to be very near from the natural causes hinted at in this imperfect article, but from the most infallible testimony, drawn from the sure word of prophecy. Therefore, seeing that the heavens and earth have already waxed 'old as doth a garment,' and as an old worn out 'vesture,' they will soon be folded up, 'dissolved,' or 'changed;' what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness—that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless, in that dread day when these things shall be witnessed.

Morals of London.

We learn from the London 'Times,' for Aug. 15, which some unknown friend has kindly sent us, that a proposition has been presented to the British House of Commons by Mr. Hume, one of its members, "That with the view of lessening the temptation to drunkenness and immorality, and of promoting thereby the welfare of the working classes especially, and also of society generally, it is the duty of a Christian Legislature to open the British Museum, National Gallery, and all similar places calculated to afford innocent and instructive recreation, for the reception of visitors on Sundays and on holidays, at such hour after morning service as gin-shops and public houses are open."

What a comment on the morals of London, the Sodom, the Babylon of Europe, and perhaps of the world. Intemperance and Licentiousness have gained the victory there! The power of moral suasion, of truth, of popular opinion, and of the civil arm, cannot check these growing and damning sins!—As a last remedy, to prevent these monster evils from rioting uncontrolled, on the Lord's day, grave Legislators propose to decoy, ensnare, and bind them by these unholy means! But the leader of these works of darkness and death will not be thus entrapped by his subjects. Should the proposition of Mr. Hume succeed, instead of checking these evils, it would only serve to open new channels for their desolating course.

Can a city (nay, a world: for this is but a sample of its morals) long exist in this state of moral wretchedness! It cannot. What, then, will be the end? Not a moral renovation; for the power to effect this work is tacitly acknowledged to be lost!—What then? 'Swift destruction!' as saith the Word of the Lord.

Oh, their end! their dreadful end!
Thy Sanctuary I sought me so—
On slippery rocks I see them stand,
And fiery billows roll below."

We do not rejoice at the perils of these last days; but we do rejoice that such men as Charles Beecher occasionally have a glimpse of them, and moral courage enough to point them out. Mr. Beecher speaks from actual experience and observation: his testimony therefore should be credited. The "Baltimore Saturday Visitor," from which we take the following extract of his discourse, says it was preached February last, at the dedication of the Second Presbyterian Church at Fort Wayne, Ind. C. Beecher, it should be remembered, is a son of the celebrated Dr. Lyman Beecher of Philadelphia.

"There is nothing imaginary in the statement that the Creed-Power is now beginning to prohibit the Bible, as really as Rome did, though in a subtler way. During the whole course of seven years' study, the Protestant candidate for the ministry sees before him an unauthorized statement, spiked down and stereotyped, of what he must find in the Bible or be martyred. And does any one, acquainted with human nature, need be told that he studies under a tremendous pressure of motive? Is that freedom of opinion? 'the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free'? Rome would have given that. Every one of her clergy might have studied the Bible to find there the Pontifical creed, on pain of death. Was that liberty?"

Hence I say, that liberty of opinion in our Theological Seminaries, is a mere form. To say nothing of the thumb-screw of criticism, by which every original mind is tortured into negative propriety, the whole boasted liberty of the student consists in a choice of chains—a choice of handcuffs—whether he will wear the Presbyterian handcuff, or the Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal or other Evangelical handcuff. Hence it has secretly come to pass that the ministry themselves dare not study their Bibles.—Large portions thereof are seldom touched. It lies useless lumber; or if they do study and search, they dare not show the people what they find there.—There is something criminal in saying anything new. It is shocking to utter words that have not the mould of age upon them.

Through the ministry, the same spirit has been conducted to the people. The same penalties hang over them. The denominations are so nearly balanced, the strife for power is so keen between them, that every fancied departure from the creed, is seized to make political capital, as really as in any political campaign. Houses must be built; salaries must be raised. This requires wealth. Wealth requires numbers and patronage. This creates a servile dread of novelty, for everything that another party can get hold of, strikes at the gold. Therefore, the people watch their minister, and the minister is afraid of his people. For if he studies independently, if he goes outside of the book, if he slips the handcuff, the people tremble—it will not please—the opposition will seize it—we shall be unpopular—we shall not succeed!

Oh, woful day! Oh, unhappy church of Christ! Fast rushing round and round the fatal circle of absorbing ruin! Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked!

Thus are the ministry of the Evangelical, Protestant denominations, not only formed all the way up, under a tremendous pressure of merely human fear, but they live, and move, and breathe, in a state of things radically corrupt, and appealing every hour to every baser element of their nature, to hush up the truth, and bow the knee to the power of apostasy.

Dinly does every one now and then see that things are going wrong. With sighs does every true heart confess that rottenness is somewhere; but ah! it is hopeless of reform. We all pass on, and the tide rolls down to night.

The time has come when men, having itching ears, and forms of godliness without the power, are heaping to themselves teachers; when they will not endure sound doctrine, but are turned aside unto fables. And the whole has come about stealthily, nobody knows how, among good men, out of good motives.

Was not this the way things went with Rome?—Are we not living her life over again? And what do we see just ahead? Another General Council! A World's Convention! Evangelical alliance and Universal Creed!

And what then is to be done? I know not what others may say; but if ever I shrink from declaring that the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, is the perfect and thorough furniture of the Christian minister, and the Christian church, then may my right hand forget her cunning, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth."

Coming Storm.

The Bible plainly teaches that this world will be ripe for destruction at the coming of the Lord.—That it is in this condition now, or nearly so, is abundantly evident from such testimony as the following.—The worldly wise see that 'the elements of a coming storm exist,' but the nature of that storm they do not understand; they think it will be anything but the fiery storm of the Great Day of the coming of the Son of man. They are looking for, and some are predicting, a great revolution soon to take place in the political, moral, and religious condition of our world, but the nature of the change, and the manner it will be effected, are mysteries to them. Would they look into the sure word of prophecy, they would clearly see that the evidences that produce these convictions of a coming storm, are nothing less than the sure precursors of the near advent of the King of kings and Lord of Lords, to destroy all earthly kingdoms, purify the earth, and set up his everlasting and most glorious kingdom.

"STATE OF EUROPE."

"The precarious condition of Europe was glanced at in an interesting article which we yesterday copied from the London Times. In another number of that paper now before us we have still further evidence of the feeble tenure upon which the peace of the old world hangs, after referring to a recent enquete at Elbeuf, in France, (a town on the Seine, celebrated for its woolen factories,) growing out of the introduction of a new labor-saving machine into one of them, and which was only suppressed by calling between 4 and 500 troops to the aid of the National Guards, the Times makes the following remarks:—

"The evidence that the elements of a coming, though possibly distant, storm, exist on the continent is pressed upon us in nearly every letter we receive from France, Italy, or Germany. Of the state of Spain and Portugal our readers require not now to be informed. The condition of Switzerland would be deemed alarming if anything done by the mountebanks at the head of the movements in the cantons could appear important. Throughout Germany a ferment prevails, the profundity of which is not appreciated by the Governments of the various States of which the confederation is composed. The Italian peninsula from north to south, is notoriously agitated. Lombardy and the Legations are even represented as ripe for revolt the moment when Austria shall have occupation elsewhere. To Poland it is unnecessary to refer. 'It is not,' says one of our private letters, 'the force of Russia, the strength of her armies, the depth of her intrigue, or the unbounded character of her ambition, nor the power and the absolutism of Austria and Prussia, nor the selfish views of France, supported by vast military force—it is not any nor all of these that menace peace and order; it is the progress.'

But the subjoined article upon this 'ground-swell,' symptomatic of a general convulsion, which we copy from the Paris 'Siccle,' is perhaps even more significant than the remarks of the London paper. It draws a picture of the condition of Europe, which, if it be a faithful reflection of the true position of the different nations, cannot long endure. And it is not the least significant indication of the temper of the times that a Paris paper has the boldness to proclaim that 'the banner of '89,' the revolutionary banner,—is the one to which all regards instinctively turn.' The 'Siccle' speaks of the present, and lifts an edge of the curtain that hides the stormy future, in the following bold and impassioned language:—

"Nations, like individuals, decrease, decline and die; and it must be admitted that at the first glance Europe presents several symptoms that apparently justify the drear forebodings of Pessimists. 'What, indeed, is Italy, the country of the sovereign people, they exclaim, 'but an academy of music?' 'What is Poland? A vast cemetery. What is Spain?—

A convent half secularized. What is Prussia? A workshop not large enough, and built next to a garrison. What is Austria? A feudal ruin in the midst of a meadow. Above these people arise, like two giants, Russia and England—Russia, which, in the north, attaches to her designs Prussia and Sweden, who are her vassals; and to the south, Persia and Turkey, her slaves; and England, which reigns over the councils of Spain, Portugal, France, and Belgium.—But, frankly, can it be thought that every part of mankind, which this state of things humiliates, should endure it for any length of time? Can it be supposed the empire of the world belongs definitely to the two Powers who alone appear at present to share it? We do not think so. Energetic protestations break out on every side, at short intervals, against the blows aimed at the liberty or independence of nations. Those which are disdainfully called at Vienna the dilettanti of Italy, sometimes transform themselves into soldiers or martyrs; the pretended dead of Poland rise from their tombs; Prussia in Poland, Russia in Warsaw, and Austria at Lineberg, must have felt that justice cannot be destroyed, as men may be. In the manufactories of Silecia and the Rhenish provinces the workmen began to think and exclaim loud enough, that man does not live alone upon bread, and that oaths are as binding on Kings as on the people. At Vienna it is now beginning to be acknowledged that what was hitherto considered as a species of herd, is really a human society. The domination of the Muscovite sabre and the Austrian stick is considered every where as the unjust triumph of the interests of a dynasty or caste over those of humanity in general. Great Britain, that formerly enrolled, by means of its subsidies, the States of Europe under the banner of its aristocracy, meets with resistance at Lisbon, and is herself subjected by the Corn Laws to an immense transformation. It is given to France to march at the head of a pacific league, to hold the torch which enlightens the efforts, labors, and perils of all friends of progress. The banner of '89 is the one towards which all regards instinctively turn."

From the Advent Herald.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

Our stay in London has been protracted beyond our expectations; nor have we accomplished while here just what either you or ourselves would have anticipated; though we have been exceedingly busy, and perhaps in the end may find that we have actually accomplished more for the cause of Christ, than we might have effected by efforts directed exclusively to the propagation of the truth relating to the Advent. We have issued Nos. 2 and 3 of the "European Herald," have given a number of lectures in the city with encouraging success, have distributed our papers in various directions, and prepared the way greatly for future labors, should Providence permit us to resume them. None but those who are on the ground, can understand the difficulties connected with an effort to direct the attention of a great community like this to a deep consideration of any moral or religious subject. We have just reached a point where we might consider that we have encouragement to begin work; but now we must quit or leave the field unsurveyed. As Great Britain is not a flower-garden, through which one may run in a day, or a month, neither is this, her great metropolis, to be viewed, and understood and acted upon in an hour. One may be here for weeks, without hardly being conscious of it. Station himself wherever he may, he is yet remote from much that is transpiring within the limits of the city. We feel that we have gained much through our lectures and papers.—Nor has our work been retarded by a faithful discharge of our duties in the World's Temperance Convention, and the Christian Alliance.—As our views of the "Advent" became known, we were frequently inquired of in relation to our past and present position, so that we were afforded the opportunity of scattering our papers and works in very desirable and extensive directions, and of disabusing the minds of many in relation to us and the cause we advocate. In a word, we are confident of having been much profited, and of having effected as much, or more, for the cause of Christ, during our stay here, than during all the previous portion of our time since we landed in England.

We are hearing good tidings from brethren scattered over the field in this kingdom. Bro. Burgess writes that he has already baptised 36 in Exeter. The Hall is filled every Lord's day. The work is onward there: he has also stirred up the people in Tiverton. Brother Micklewood says, "Few weeks pass without realizing some additional members to our ranks." The following is another specimen of the character of letters which we are frequently receiving. Truly we ought to be thankful:—

Sir:—It is with much pleasure that I have just been presented with the first number of the "Advent Herald," by Mr. Morgan, of Hertford. He tells me he met with you at the World's Temperance Convention in London, where you gave it him for circulation. As I deem it a great desideratum in these days, so clearly marked by the speedy return of Christ, I shall be obliged if you will forward me one of the numbers from the commencement to the present time. I enclose postage stamps for the payment of them, not knowing how to send so small a sum in a letter. We have a great many Christians in Hertford, who believe in the pre-millennial advent of our Savior, and who, I have no doubt, will be glad to become subscribers to your Herald. There are a large body of Saints, called Plymouth Brethren, who are looking for the revelation of the Savior, and two of the clergymen of the Establishment are firm believers in his speedy advent.—The independent minister is also now giving a course of lectures on the subject. I shall show your publication to as many as I can, and I think they will not require persuading to take it, but will at once be convinced of its desirableness.—Wishing you, by God's blessing, great success in awakening the Christians in England to a sense of the nearness of the manifestation of the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven, to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe. I remain yours respectfully.

A member of the Established Church from Ireland, informed Bro. Hutchinson, that the Episcopal clergy there nearly all held the doctrine of the pre-millennial advent.

London, Sept. 3, 1846.

Letter from Bro. J. Pearson.

Bro Marsh:—Perhaps I have been somewhat dilatory in not sooner furnishing you an account of the Conference held in West Martinsburg, but circumstances have been such, that it has not been convenient until the present time. It is certainly well to report the doings of these kind of meetings, as they serve to encourage those who are so situated as to deprive them of the privilege of being present. Then, again, as the cause is one all over the land, we are thus enabled to learn how the truth is prospering, at a distance from ourselves.

These two conferences have resulted in great good. They have not only proved profitable to the believers, but very beneficial to the cause, by removing prejudices from the minds of many who have not heretofore been favorable to the views. A deep interest is now awakened in that community, which, if followed by the labors of an active, judicious, intelligent servant of God, much good would be accomplished. We have often lost the vantage-ground after having obtained it, by not improving the opportunity with a continued, steady, and prudent, yet vigorous effort. We hope and pray it may not be thus in this case. Copenhagen and West Martinsburg are only about 16 miles apart, and in each of these villages is a church; although few in numbers, yet, they are very much devoted to this blessed truth, and are not only able to comfortably support a preacher among them, but are willing and anxious to do so, if one of the right stamp could be obtained. That field of labor is exceedingly promising.—But, whilst we hold out encouragement for some good man to go that way, in behalf of those brethren, we would, at the same time, throw out a word of caution. It will be entirely useless for any one to attempt to labor there, unless they are sound in the faith, and can "preach the word."

At the last Conference, (West Martinsburgh) in consequence of the unchristian course pursued by the Methodist preacher, a lord "over God's heritage," and one or two of "the rulers," the line was effectually drawn by themselves, (always the best way) and a wide and favorable door opened for the spread of these blessed truths.

Our brethren had obtained the privilege of the meeting-house from the trustees, reserving the afternoon of the Sabbath only, as the preacher's right, agreeably to his stated appointment. Thus, we occupied the house from Friday noon to Sabbath noon. Our social meetings were of the most spiritual nature. Saturday evening, Bro. Chapman gave us an excellent discourse from Dan. 2. Sunday morning we had a large congregation, who gave us the listening ear, and the truth "fell into good ground," and we trust will bring forth fruit to the glory of God. Circumstanced as we were, it was thought that the minister in charge would yield, and let the Conference proceed: but no; we had met with such kind and fraternal love from an aged Baptist minister in Copenhagen, that we had almost forgotten that every professed servant of the Most High, did not possess the same brotherly feelings. As he had sent us word, "to be sure and not trespass on his time," we told the congregation that if we did not speak in the afternoon, we would address them in the evening. Not wishing to manifest an opposing spirit by opening another place for worship, we concluded to be present as a body, and give him a hearing, and so we did. His text was, "but one thing is needful." First, he gave a condensed view of the context, second, he attempted to prove what the "one thing needful" is. The third division of his sermon was a perfect hash of perverted scripture, and nonsense. He said, that some people had strange ideas about a located heaven, (meaning those who believed as John Wesley did) but for his part, he did not know where heaven was.—He knew not but it would be the centre of the universe, around which the whole system of created things would revolve; at any rate, said he, "I don't know." His description of the resurrection was exceedingly ludicrous, and enough to excite the risibility of the most perfect stoic. It was a specimen of "the sublime, bordering on the ridiculous." "In the morning of the resurrection, the saints will sit down on the edge of their graves, and sing doxologies!" What an affecting and graphic scene of the employment and condition of the resurrected saints! Oh Methodism! how art thou fallen! He had just come from a meeting (he said) "where many were converted, and multitudes sanctified." Jesus prayed to "sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." He closed the doors against us for the evening, by appointing a prayer meeting. Bro. Bates immediately gave notice that we should resume our services in a school-house, directly opposite the meeting-house, after stating the circumstances under which we were placed.

Our social meeting commenced at 5 o'clock, and held until 7. It was one of the real old-fashioned, powerful, spirited prayer meetings. The house was exceedingly crowded with the brethren and sisters, and attentive hearers. If ever the wrath of man was turned to the praise of God, it was in this instance; they thought evil against us, but God meant it unto good. The sympathies of the intelligent and candid portion of the village were awakened in our behalf. Numbers of the church expressed their decided disapprobation against such proceeding, and declared their liberty from such men. From 7 to 9, we endeavored to spread before the people some of our views of Scripture touching the speedy revelation of the Son of Man, and it took effect.

The owners offered the school-house to our brethren for future meetings, and one especially, desired that they might have regular advent meetings for the future. The rulers of the church in that village have marked the line themselves, and O that it could be improved at once, for the benefit of precious souls.

Lowville is only two miles from this place, which is quite a village, and good could be done there. There is one or two believers in Lowville, and they are anxious to have the truth presented to that people. We called at the house of one of them, (Bro. Chase) and enjoyed a short season of Christian conversation. "Peace be to his house."

We returned back by the way of Copenhagen, for the purpose of baptising two: a dear brother and sister, husband and wife, who had come to the conclusion that sprinkling was not a very lively figure of the burial and resurrection of the Savior, or resurrection of the saints.

We took leave of those brethren and sisters, with feelings of strong Christian love and affection, praying, that if we should never meet again in this life, we may together join in the song of redeeming love, in that world where no enemy of God and the saints will mar their perfect happiness, or disturb their peace.

"A few short days, the conflict's done,
The battle's fought, the prize is won,
And we shall toil no more."

J. PEARSON, Jr.

Rochester, Sept. 25th, 1846.

Bro. H. A. Case, Saline Mich., Aug. 22d, writes:—I am still trying to give a reason of my hope. I labor night and day to lay the evidences of the advent near, before the people. Since my last letter to you, I have had the privilege of attending a number of meetings in this State, and some of them have been seasons of interest to me, and I hope some profit to others. The Conference in Jackson was, I think, the best that I ever attended. I have since attended a meeting 35 miles from my home, in company with Bro. and Sister Seymour. The people seemed to be anxious to hear, and some have begun to investigate this subject. I have another appointment there next Sabbath.

I have also visited Northville twice, and a good company of brethren I found in that place. I do not mean to say a large company: no, it is a little flock of worthy brethren, who not only said "Lord bless you," but administered to my wants, for which, may they be remembered in the day of the Lord Jesus.

At Ann Arbor, Brother and Sister Seymour called on a man by the name of Nobles, who pretended to be an Adventist. He is a Wesleyan Methodist preacher. They spoke to him about holding a meeting in the place, but he was opposed to it. Brother Seymour succeeded however in getting the Court House, and left an appointment for the next Sabbath. He requested me to attend with them. I complied with the request, and we gave three discourses to large and attentive congregations, and left them. The next Sabbath we visited Manchester. Here seemed to be but little interest, more than to hear the woman preach. O how surpassingly strange, to see so little interest taken in a subject so glorious, and of so much importance!

O my God, if possible, wake up sensibility of soul among the people.

Letter from Sister O. Smith.

Dear brothers and sisters, it is with great delight that I read your communications, and I feel to embrace you in the arms of Christian love.—O that I could have the privilege of meeting with advent brethren and sisters, weekly: my soul feels pressed, and I know not how to vent my feelings. I do long for the time to come, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. When dead formality, which seems to be stamped on almost all the movements of the nominal church, shall be forever done away; when the watchmen shall see eye to eye; when kindred spirits shall meet to part no more; where the grim messenger death can never enter, and separations from those we love, can never take place. Then friends will meet again, and

"There, on those high and flowery plains,
Our spirits ne'er shall tire."

O, happy prospect, soon to be realized by all the faithful. But, dear friends, I do believe we must be holy in heart and in life. Past experience, or a mere belief that Christ will soon come, will never save us. There must be a coming out, a separation from the world, denying ourselves daily, and taking up the cross. He that loveth the world more than Christ, is not worthy of him. O, what folly to love the sordid things of this world, that will so soon pass away, more than the riches of Christ that will never pass away.—Christ says, Matt. 6: 19, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Likewise 12: 23, he says that "a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven;" and again: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." O, how much better to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. There must be a dedication of all to God. David says, "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart. Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon day."—Psa. 37: 3-6.

For several years I have been anxious to know what sort of a fast was required of Christians at this day. At length I have found it. Please read the 48th chapter of Isaiah. Let us obey the teachings it contains. I never felt so strong in the faith of the Savior's near coming, as at the present. Brothers and sisters, let us gird on the whole armor, and fight valiantly the fight of faith, for our redemption draweth nigh. Bless the Lord O my soul! and all that is within me, bless his holy name!

In July, we had some 15 or 20 lectures from Brn. E. Miller and Hoyt, which were truly refreshing to my soul. The people in general listened with great attention and seeming interest, until the destruction of the wicked, and the sleep of the dead were held forth, when many were sore displeased. O what blindness has been on the minds of the Christian world since the days of Christ.

Yours, in the bonds of Christian love,
OLIVE SMITH.

Letter from Bro. G. W. Burnham.

Bro. Marsh:—The friends in Addison, Vt. and other places near, having expressed a united desire that I should move into these parts, and believing myself, it would be for the glory of God I have consented to do so, praying and expecting his presence will go with us. Our things are on the way. We expect to make Addison Vt., the place of our residence at present, where I wish all communications designed for me, to be addressed.

I greatly feel the need, Bro. Marsh, of the everlasting arms to assist me in my present lot. I think I have some sense of the weakness of man, and the awfulness of God, at the present moment. The truth we are called to utter is sublime and glorious—the work is great, but praise God, our sufficiency is of Christ. Brethren, pray for us.

I left the brethren in Greenville, Westerloo, and Reidsville, united and steadfast in the faith of the speedy coming of Christ. The idea of parting with them, though few in number, (perhaps in all of the above named places there may be 30 who love Jesus' appearing) was allicting to my feelings—but the sweet hope of being soon united in the everlasting kingdom of God, to be scattered and wander as pilgrims and strangers no more, consoles our hearts.

"O glorious day, O blessed hope!
My heart leaps forward at the thought,
When in that happy, happy land,
We'll no more take the parting hand."

I pray the Lord of the harvest to direct some of his good servants through this section, who shall give living bread to the household. My prayers shall not cease to God for them and the rest of His Israel.

Yours, in hope of the resurrection from the dead, or change to immortality at the last trumpet.

Letter from Sister H. A. Parks.

Bro. Marsh:—We are in the midst of an interesting meeting at the appointed Conference in Indiana. Love and unity are seen and felt in the exercises. You will have a full account of the meeting from Bro. Catlin or Miller.

I have had a pleasant and prosperous journey from the East, and was joyfully received by friends in Christ. My heart has been made glad when I see the hungry sheep fed with the sincere milk of the Word. Could the laborers at the East who are doing little or nothing in the field, witness the anxiety to hear, in Wisconsin Territory, they would no longer slumber at their post; methinks they would press their way even through difficulties, to the West. O that I could give the Macedonian cry sufficiently loud, that all might hear.

Come over and help us, is the cry
Of sheep, without a shephord nigh,
In this far western world.

I expect to return again to the Territory from this meeting. I had thought of returning to Canada this fall, but I do not know that duty will require it.

I assure you, Bro. Marsh, in laboring in the western field, I am reminded of old times: it seems like '43. The great mass of the people have never heard a sentence of truth on the subject of our blessed hope.

Letter from Bro. J. Wendell.

Bro. Marsh:—Never was my faith in the near approach of the Savior, stronger than at present. My mind and heart are perhaps as well convinced that God is in this movement, in relation to the second appearing of his Son from heaven, as was Paul, that Jesus was the Messiah. As for the apostle, the truth was stamped by the eternal Spirit, on his soul; he believed, therefore, spoke. The love of Christ constrained him to give a reason of his hope. I feel that it is my meat and drink, to do the will of my Father which is in heaven. Though the least of all his saints, to me is this grace given, to proclaim the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. For about 2 years, I have been a firm believer in the speedy coming of Jesus. O, the glorious expectation of the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ.

"My soul is happy when I hear,
The Savior is so nigh."

Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is my prayer.

During the early part of the summer, I journeyed forth as far as Bradford Co. Penn., where they had not heard the evidence on the speedy coming of Jesus. I presented, (in my feeble manner,) some of the evidences, to which they listened with (apparently) much candor and interest. I have reason to hope it was not in vain in the Lord; a few more months at most will tell. I visited in that county a dear brother and his companion: both had embraced the faith in the speedy coming of Jesus, through the instrumentality of some publications on that subject. May they be preserved blameless unto his coming.

On my return home I called at Newfield and Ithaca, found in each place a few that were looking for the blessed hope. It is about three weeks since I left Syracuse, (my residence,) during which time I have visited a part of the flock scattered abroad, and spoken words of encouragement to them. The brethren at Lodi and Cooperstown, contemplate having a Conference, the Lord willing, sometime during the present month. At the latter place, I spent last Sabbath. We met three times, and my soul was blessed presenting the foundation of the Christian's hope. It is almost heart rending to part with those whom we love as dearly as we do ourselves, but we know if we are all faithful to the grace given, we shall soon meet.

In that land where all is fair,
Where is seen no broken band,
All, all are there.

God grant that we may be all wholly sanctified, kept and preserved blameless unto the coming of Jesus.

Yours, groaning for speedy redemption.

Letter from Bro. J. J. Porter.

Last Sunday was a day of peculiar interest to us here. In the afternoon we ate the Lord's supper, and then repaired to the lake shore, where I baptised four believers, in the name of the Lord. Two of them had lately been converted to God, and to the glorious truth of the speedy coming of the Lord. One of them told me on Sunday morning, that his previous calculation was, to lay up treasures on this earth, but his mind was now changed, and he believed Christ would soon come, and wanted to be ready.

The other two had been believers in the Advent near, for some time, and now rejoice in having obeyed the Lord. I trust these lines may meet the eye of some, who will be induced to obey the Lord in baptism, even though they have made a profession of faith in Christ. "Obedience is better than sacrifice."

Yours, in faith and hope,
J. J. PORTER.
Buffalo, Sept. 20, 1846.

Bro. Marsh:—The following lines were handed to me a few days since, by a very aged sister in this city, who is looking for the speedy coming of the Lord—and wished me to forward them to you for publication in the "Voice of Truth," to be called—The Purification Hymn. They are very applicable to this time of trial, and appear to be founded on the following texts of scripture. But he knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold. Job 23: 10. That the trial of our faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Christ. 1 Pet. 1: 7.

A baby, Aug. 27th.

The Purification Hymn.

"With joy let each afflicted saint,
This cheering truth behold,
That when he's tried, he shall not faint,
But shall come forth as gold.

This privilege—dear Lord—I plead,
Nor am I here too bold,
That from the fire, as thou hast said,
I may come forth as gold.

What though the furnace burns on high,
Still to the truth I'll hold,
'Tis but designed my soul to try;
I shall come forth as gold.

Herein his wisdom and his love,
Will God to me unfold,
And from the furnace I shall prove,
He'll bring me forth as gold.

He'll kindly thus consume my dross,
So in his word I'm told,
Nor can I suffer real loss,
But shall come forth as gold.

Thus he'll conform me to his word,
And cast me in his mould,
And through the goodness of the Lord,
I shall come forth as gold.

Thus will I sing his praises here,
Whose mercies are of old,
And when in glory I appear,
I shall appear as gold."

Letter from Bro. L. E. Bates.

Bro. Marsh:—The Spirit of God is moving upon a mass of mind in this county. Since our Conferences, the work has been going on; our meetings are crowded with those who listen with solemn interest to the truths of God's word; a more interesting state of things I think never existed here. The excitement may have been greater, but a more calm, rational, and heartfelt interest than the present, has never been witnessed. The labors of our dear brethren during the Conferences, have proved a signal blessing to this community: the eyes of many have been opened, and much of the prejudice heretofore existing, has vanished before the sunlight of truth, and the solemn inquiry is going round, and I prepared for the judgment.

Our dear Bro. Chapman has been spending a short time with us since the Conferences, and his incessant labors, both public and private, have been blessed of God. The Lord reward him, and all his faithful seryants who have labored with us.

May the Lord sustain you, Bro. Marsh, and the dear brethren of the Herald, in your labors of love, and enable you to suffer with patience and Christian meekness, the assaults of your enemies, and still to send your messengers of mercy laden with the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand.

Your brother in Christ,

LABAN E. BATES.

THE EARTHQUAKE IN ITALY.

AUGUST 14th, 1846.

The earthquake at Florence, and other places, so briefly referred to in the English papers received by the Cambria, appears to have been a serious affair. In a letter written to the Boston Journal by Mr. Kellogg, one of the American artists in Italy, the following description of the phenomenon is given.

On the 14th of August, there was a violent shock of an earthquake here. I was engaged in the Royal Gallery at the time, (one o'clock, P. M.) and as it is a high building, standing mostly upon columns, the shock was frightful; for we all stood for the moment, gazing speechless at each other, awaiting for the time that we must be precipitated into eternity. The building rocked, and shook, and grumbled, for the space of several seconds, and the pictures were sliding and beating against the walls. No damage has been done in Florence; but accounts are sad enough from several other places in Tuscany.

The centre or seat of the earthquake was in the localities of the Due Vicariati di Rali and Rosignano, bordering upon the Maremma. The greatest disasters occurred in the territories of Oriciano, Risparbella, Monticudajo, Guardastallo, Lorenzana, and Vivajo; and the destruction has extended to the cities in the neighborhood, doing more or less damage, according to their distances from the centre. Leghorn, Pisa and Volterra, have received considerable injury; the first (Leghorn) scarcely contains one house that is not cracked, and some are so much injured that they are deserted, and will no doubt be pulled down. The Governor's house, and San Marco Hotel, seem to have been injured most. I wonder the Hotel did not fall into a mass of ruins, for when I was there last June, I could scarcely sleep when there was a high wind, on account of the fear which the shaking of the house occasioned.

After the shock had ceased, the inhabitants ran into the streets, or knelt in prayer in their doorways, and you can form no idea of the consternation, unless you could hear an Italian eye witness relate it.

Soon after the earthquake, multitudes of people were on their way to Monte Nero, from Leghorn; some in carriages, but generally on foot. There is a famous Madonna at Monte Nero, to which the crowd were hurrying; men, women, and children, to offer up their vows, and prayers, and thanks. The distance is about five miles from Leghorn, and you can imagine what an exciting scene presented itself on a hot summer's afternoon, in this moving mass of terror-stricken beings of all classes, high and low, rich and poor, making their way to the shrine of the Madonna, to supplicate her protection from further danger, and to render thanks for their present miraculous escape. During that night, hundreds of the citizens staid out in the open fields for safety; many slept, or rather staid upon the ships in the harbor. It is somewhat astonishing that the famous leaning tower of Pisa, stands!—a noble monument of the skill of the architect, which neither the elements nor the earthquakes of the last six or eight hundred years have been able to overthrow.—The little town of Oriciano has been entirely destroyed; one house only remaining. One hundred and fifty wounded persons have been taken to the hospital at Pisa, from the surrounding country; and it is reported that forty died on their way thither. We have no exact account of the number who have perished in this awful visitation. It is certain that about eighty have been destroyed.

The Gonfalonier of Florence, has implored and obtained permission of the Grand Duke, to ask donations from the citizens in favor of the distressed families of those who may need assistance. This was done also some two years ago, on the occasion of the great flood of the Arno, and great good resulted, as I have no doubt it will in the present instance; for the Italians are very liberal in giving of their means to the assistance of their unfortunate countrymen.

I have often thought that if one of our American cities should be so unfortunate as to be visited with such an earthquake as this, scarcely a single house would remain; but one vast pile of ruins would alone mark the spot where once a city stood! The thought is awful, but it should be a warning to all those who run up buildings four and five stories high, with walls scarcely a foot in thickness! From fire, the inhabitants may escape, and take part of their property with them; but from such a shock as Leghorn has just received, scarcely an inhabitant of one of our cities would be left to tell the tale of woe. May the Almighty protect us, and teach us wisdom enough at least to preserve our lives by all such means as he has placed in our power.

Jesuitism—Designs upon Our Country.

Rev. Jules Delauney, an agent of the Evangelical Alliance, recently delivered a lecture on the Jesuits, in Cincinnati, from a report of which, in the Watchman of the Valley, we clip the following paragraphs:

Mr. D. quoted the following part of the oath which the Jesuits of Germany swear when they take the monastic vows. It is taken from the Jesuit's Confession of Faith, published at Berlin, as late as 1829.

"We swear that we will persecute this cursed Evangelical doctrine, as long as we have a drop of blood in our bodies. And we will eradicate it secretly and publicly, violently and deceitfully, with words and with deeds, the sword not excluded."

This oath is taken by every Jesuit: and multitudes of the Priests in this country are Jesuits from Germany.

I can never forget what an old Jesuit in Rome said once to me when pointing me to a map of the United States. "We will prepare the new people of that country for the monarchical regime,—yea, we will Bourbonize them,—and their independence shall be a failure."

And when Bishop England visits his Catholic friends of Vienna, he hails them with these words:

"All that is necessary is money and priests, to subjugate the mock liberties of America."—Oberlin Evangelist.

We see by the news brought by the Great Western, that there is great fear of much suffering for bread-stuff the coming winter.

Christ is Arisen.

Christ is arisen,
Joy to thee, mortal!
Out of his prison,
Forth from its portal!
Christ is not sleeping,
Seek him no longer;
Strong was his keeping,
Jesus was stronger.

Christ is arisen,
Seek him not here,
Lonely his prison,
Empty his tier!
Vain his entombing,
Spices and lawn;
Vain the perfuming,
Jesus is gone.

Christ is arisen,
Joy to thee, mortal!
Empty his prison,
Broken its portal;
Rising, he giveth
His shroud to the ad:
Risen,—he liveth,
And liveth to God.

THE MORAL END

DESIGNED TO BE EFFECTED, BY THE SIGNS AND TIMES REVEALED TO THE PROPHETS.

In the economy of Prophecy, it is a striking fact, that future events are so indicated, as to leave room for the exercise of faith—of that faith which consists, principally, in a reliance on the truth, that "the Judge of all the earth will do right."—In this world, it is neither desirable nor possible, that the saints should be exempted from that moral discipline, which obliges them to trust, that all 'the counsel' of God shall be accomplished, even though the means, or the possibility, of producing the results, may entirely elude the sagacity of man. Hence it is, that some of the most important events in the history of man, have been announced by "holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," under circumstances, which left something vague, undefined, or difficult, when the prediction became a subject of investigation. The accomplishment of the principal event, is often indicated by others of a subordinate character, which precedes it, as time passes on. As each of these occurs, it becomes a pledge of the truth of the prophecy: as each is successively recognized, it confirms the full persuasion of faith, that the final link in the chain cannot fail. Yet, before that link, or paramount event is reached, there may be doubts, hesitation, and serious discouragements. To our impatience, it might often seem desirable, that prophecy possessed the fulness and clearness of history. Were it so, however, it is obvious, that there would be no room for the exercise of that spirit of a little child, which says, "My Father hath hitherto done all things well: he hath brought light out of darkness, and he will thus act even unto the end." One result of these peculiar features of prophecy is, that there will be mistakes in their interpretation. During that period in our history, in which God continued to reveal his will to man by his Spirit, while he confirmed the word of prophets by signs and wonders, it was a usual thing for him to add, by subsequent revelations, definiteness and distinctness to a prediction, which, in its primitive form, was encompassed with obscurities. A striking illustration of this principle, is found in the early promise (Gen. 3: 15)—"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." To us, the import of this declaration is sufficiently clear; but could it have been so to those, who lived from the time of Adam to that of Abraham! We find many of the prophets employed in developing this original annunciation, until it reaches the enlargement and perspicuity of its later form, in the 53d chap. of Isaiah.—Since the Apocalypse was written, we have no true prophets raised up,—we have no more miracles. All pretences to prophetic inspiration, or the power of performing miracles, may properly be classed with the "lying wonders," which were to mark the coming of the "Man of Sin."—the great wonders, wrought by the beast that came up out of the earth: or the operations of "the spirits of devils working miracles," who finally go forth, "to gather the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Our resources, therefore, for the interpretation of unaccomplished prophecy, are limited to a careful perusal of the word of God, a familiarity with the symbolic language often employed by the seers, and a comparison of prophecy generally, with the history of our race. In such an investigation, that quality, termed, in Scriptural phraseology, "soberness of mind," is of great value. No where does the imagination demand a firmer control, than in efforts to reach the mind of the Spirit, through the medium of the revealed word. It is far better to be held in suspense as to the import of certain portions of the Scriptures, than it is, by rash conclusions, to embrace the shadow, instead of the substance.—The great truths essential to the salvation of the soul, are not among the matters of doubtful disputation. The duties of man to God, to the Savior, and to his neighbor, are too clearly announced, to leave him sitting in darkness, and the shadows of death, unless he chooses darkness rather than light. Still, the whole of that revelation, which God has given man, is designed to produce important results on his moral being, both in this and another world. Hence, he has no right to presume, that his Creator had said too much in his word, or spoken things in which he can have no interest. To neglect the pages of inspiration, because they present difficulties,—to cast the volume aside, because there may be problems in it, which we cannot readily solve,—is to trample on the authority of "the Father of lights from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift."

Without entering farther into the wide field, which lies before those who study the prophetic Scriptures, the following considerations are submitted to the reader:

1. Where a chain of events, leading on to one of high importance, is made the subject of prediction, there will, of course, be an uncertainty as to the exact period when this last one is to arrive. Though we are often in the habit of making inferences, as to the time, when a particular state of things, or an event, must take place,—yet so many springs of action must be put in operation to produce the result,—especially when it is to be accomplished by human agency,—so many other truths, having an influence on that result, be beyond the reach of human sagacity,—that our estimate as to the era, must be mere conjecture.—From the rapid growth of our country in the year A. D. 1700, it was highly probable, that the period would arrive, when the Colonies would be separated from the parent land; still, there were contingencies, which might have delayed that event far beyond 1776. Had the British ministry understood the true feeling which pervaded the subjects of the crown on the western side of the Atlantic,—had they not deemed the physical power of Britain too great to be resisted by three millions of our citizens,—the Stamp Act would not have been hastily passed, and we might, at this very hour, have regarded the divine right of kings as a political axiom. Had our national independence been announced by the voice of prophecy,—had the French war and the Stamp Act been also predicted, as two events which must precede the Declaration of Independence—though these would have confirmed our confidence in the arrival of the event, which was to close our political connexion with Britain—still, a wide range of time might be left, at any point in which, the prediction would receive its final verification. Patriotism might long have sighed over that deferred hope, that maketh the heart sick: yet, faith would have said—"Though it tarry, we will wait for it—the Scriptures cannot be broken."

2. There are cases, where a predicted event is limited, as to its fulfilment, by an annunciation of time. Yet, in these cases, there is mathematical definiteness. The prediction does not assume the aspect of history. The principle, that faith must have a field for exercise, is not disregarded, even in chronological prophecy. Moral results, in the Divine economy, always have the pre-eminence. It is of more consequence to man, that he should learn to trust God—that he should walk by faith, instead of sight—than that he should be enabled to ascertain the day, the hour, or even the year, when some purpose in the Divine counsel, shall receive an accomplishment. This great end is effected, in what are termed "chronological prophecies," either by an indefiniteness as to the point from which a given period of time is to be reached,—by the language which describes that time, and not unfrequently, by a combination of both, in the same case. This kind of indefiniteness has been happily expressed by the phrase, DEFINITE INDEFINITENESS. As an illustration, suppose one of the seers had said to David, "It shall come to pass, that he who is to sit on thy throne for ever and ever, shall be born of a virgin, one thousand years after this generation." There would have been "A DEFINITE INDEFINITENESS" as to the commencement of the thousand years, and this would have proceeded from the use of the words, "after his generation." David might have inquired, "Must this period be reckoned from the era, when the great mass of those now living, shall have been joined to their fathers?—or from the time when the last one of the generation shall have died? In either case, how shall the fact be so ascertained, that it can be said, 'this month, or this year, is the point where we must begin to reckon the thousand years?'" Still, he would see that this indefiniteness was not absolute.

It must have its limits. On any principle, he could not commit an error of one hundred and fifty years. He would be sure that the virgin would not bear her son at a point nearer to the period, when he heard the communication, than one thousand years, nor more remote than one thousand one hundred and fifty. The moral end of awakening the attention to the birth of the Messiah—of leading all, who looked for the consolation of Israel, to pray and wait for that great event, would be fully attained by this definite indefiniteness; while others, who would give no heed to the sure word of prophecy, would be left to grope like the blind at noon-day,—to inquire, “where is the promise of his coming?”—to wonder and to perish.

In reference to the indefiniteness caused by the language in which prophetic chronology is expressed,—it is enough to say, that days are sometimes used by the prophets as symbols of years. The discussions, which have recently taken place on this subject, both on the Continent, in Britain, and in our own country, are regarded by the intelligent and candid, as having put the question, as to this symbolic use of days, at rest for ever. Now, it is obvious, that in any given case, when a day signifies a year, this point could only be determined by the lapse of time. If the phrase, “seventy weeks,” were used, it might be urged seventy literal weeks constituted the range of time,—until they had passed by, without bringing the predicted event,—and then only it would be certain that the larger period, of four hundred and ninety years, was that, which was contemplated in the prophecy.

3. As to the position, in reference to a limited indefiniteness in chronological prophecy, has been recently questioned,—and it has sometimes been confidently asserted, that we can, in such cases, make estimates of time with such accuracy, as not only to ascertain the very last year of a long series, but even the month and day.—it may be proper to appeal to the law and the testimony.

Previous to the Flood, when the earth was filled with violence, God announced his intention to destroy the old world in this language: “My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years.” (Gen. 6: 3.) So far as can be ascertained from the concise narration of Moses, no definite point, whence these years were to be reckoned, was given; so that Noah could not say, “On such a day, in such a year, the fountains of the great deep will be broken up, and the windows of heaven opened.” This is evident from the fact, that entire definiteness was only attained, by the declaration which the Lord made to the Patriarch, at a subsequent period, (Gen. 7: 4.) “For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights,” &c. Verse 10: “And it came to pass, after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth.” As Noah was “a preacher of righteousness,”—as we are informed (1 Pet. 3: 20) that “the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing?”—we are authorised to infer, that the period of one hundred and twenty years was revealed, not simply for the benefit of Noah and his family, but for that of those, whose wickedness was great in the earth,—who, while they heard the warning voice of the Patriarch, saw his labors in fabricating the ark, and witnessed the remarkable assemblage of the birds of heaven, and the beasts of the earth,—still continued blinded by unbelief, until they were swept away in their sins.

The servitude of Israel, in a land which was not theirs, and their subsequent deliverance, was announced to Abraham (Gen. 15: 13): “And he said unto Abraham, know of a surety, that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years.” Verse 16: “But in the fourth generation, they shall come hither again,” &c. The indefiniteness here is obvious. The inquiry which would be natural in the case of Abraham, and his posterity, would be this: The affliction is to last four hundred years,—how is this language to be harmonized with the phrase, “in the fourth generation.” Does the time of the first generation synchronize with the commencement of the affliction, or with that of its termination? The afflictions in Egypt did not commence until Joseph, and his brethren, and all that generation, had died. (Ex. 1: 6.) The act of the ‘new’ Egyptian ‘king,’ in reducing them to servitude, could not have been consummated in a day: a process of injuries and oppressions, always precedes the change of a nation of freemen into slaves. Hence, the precise time for the commencement of the four hundred years, must have been entirely uncertain. Yet, the time of this servitude was not unlimited. There was a time when Israel enjoyed as much freedom as the Egyptians: there was another time, when they were “made to serve with rigor.”

The indefiniteness, as to time, is strikingly exhibited, if we look at the fulfilment of this prophecy. Ex. 12: 40, 41—“The sojourning of the children of Israel who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass, at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt.” This was in the year B. C. 1491. Jacob, according to Usher, went down into Egypt, B. C. 1706. Between these two dates, there is a period of 215 years. Hence, the time of sojourning runs back from the Exode of Israel, to the period when Abraham entered Canaan, and was a sojourner and a pilgrim there, that is, to the year of B. C. 1924. According to the Apostle, four hundred and thirty years intervened between “the covenant confirmed before, (that is, with Abraham) of God in Christ,” and the giving of the law at Sinai. (See Gal. 3: 17.) Forty years after leaving Egypt, the posterity of Abraham entered the land of Canaan.

The removal of the Israelites to Babylon, as a punishment for their sins, was announced by the Prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah. In the predictions of the latter, specifications of the time of their residence in that land, are found. In one instance, this specification is made by a reference to the kings of Babylon, commencing with the capture of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. Jer. 27: 1-3, 6, 12, 7, 8. Now, apparently, the time of service, or captivity, must commence with the victories of Nebuchadnezzar, be continued during the reign of his son, Evil Merodach, (2d Kings 52: 27), and terminate with that of his son’s son, Belshazzar. When Belshazzar was slain (Dan. 5: 30, 31,) it would seem that the period of servitude must end, and the Jews be restored to their own land. Yet, in point of fact, the proclamation which relieved the Jews from their servitude, was not issued until the first year of the reign of Cyrus (Ezra 1: 1): “Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing,” &c. It is a singular fact, that Daniel, in the first year of Darius, presented his supplication to God in behalf of his people and their city. Dan. 9: 1-3: “In the first year of Darius, the son of Assuerus, of the seed of the Medes, which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans; in the first year of his reign, I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the Prophet, that he would accomplish 70 years in the desolations of Jerusalem. And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes.” Darius reigned two years. Hence, two years, and part of the third, which was the first of Cyrus, elapsed before the captivity terminated, although, from the prophecy, which has been quoted, it would seem certain that it must terminate with the close of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar’s “son’s son,” Belshazzar. The economy of prophecy thus left a space, in which the faith of God’s people might be tested; and this was evidently the case with Daniel. He witnessed the truth of the prophetic annunciations, respecting the termination of the captivity, since he had his last vision at Babylon, in the third year of Cyrus. See Daniel 10: 1.

There are other predictions in the prophecy of Jeremiah, where the duration of the captivity is limited to seventy years. Jer. 25: 9-13: “Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations. Moreover, I will take from them the voice of mirth, &c. . . and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations,” &c.

Now, if we will examine the historical facts respecting the servitude, it will be found, that portions of the Israelites were carried into captivity at three different epochs. Jehoiaikim (or Eliakim) was placed on the throne by the king of Egypt, Nebo, B. C. 609. He subsequently became tributary to Nebuchadnezzar, but finally rebelled against him. Nebuchadnezzar sent forces from Chaldei, Syria, Moab, and Ammon, who ravaged Judea, and carried part of the inhabitants into captivity, B. C. 606. See 2d Kings 24: 1, 2. His successor, Jeconiah, Jehoiachin, or Coniah, was besieged and taken by the king of Babylon, B. C. 598, and with 10,000 of his people, led into captivity. Nebuchadnezzar placed the uncle of Jehoiachin on his throne, changing his name from Mattaniah to Zedekiah. Zedekiah having confederated with the king of Egypt, was besieged and taken prisoner by Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 588, with most of his people. In reference to this last captivity, we find the following language used (2 Chron. 36: 20, 21: 6)—“Them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon; where they were servants to him and his sons, until the reign of the kingdom of Persia; to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah.” &c. Now, previous to the liberation of the Jews by Cyrus, it might very naturally be inquired, “From which of these three eras of captivity, are we to reckon the term of seventy years?” From the first to the third captivity, there is a period of eighteen years. As the entire desolation of the land is often alluded to by the prophet, as standing in connection with the removal of the people, it would have seemed to those, who lived when the displeasure of God was manifested, in sending them into exile, that the era of Zedekiah,—when the city was destroyed, the temple burnt, and only a miserable fragment of the people left,—must be the proper point, whence to date the commencement of the seventy years. In short, until the promulgation of the proclamation of Cyrus, it must have been impossible for the Jews to arrive at perfect definiteness as to the time. Yet, there were events, which marked the approach of the joyful era of their restoration, on which faith could repose, amidst the afflictions of captivity. A sign had been announced, which was to indicate the ruin of Babylon. Jer. 51: 44-46: "And I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up; and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him: yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall. My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the Lord. And lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the rumor that shall be heard in the land; and a rumor shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumor, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler." When these rumors were heard, and there was violence in the land, ruler against ruler, there was a pledge afforded, that "the end was near, even at the door." So, when "the families of the north" assembled, and besieged Babylon, B. C. 541, the Jews saw another verification of prophecy; and another, when the city was captured, B. C. 539. It is now generally admitted, that the seventy years must be reckoned from the captivity of Jehoiakim, B. C. 606: for if we deduct them from that period, we reach the year B. C. 536, coinciding with the first year of Cyrus. While, therefore, God could with ease have given such clearness as to the point whence the term of captivity was to be reckoned, that no question would have existed in the minds of the Jews on the subject.—the higher object, of leading them to repentance, under the anxiety which such a question must naturally produce, led Him to give his revelation such a form, that the principle of "definite indefiniteness" should be preserved. This object is distinctly announced, Jer. 29: 10-13: "After seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you in causing you to return to this place. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end. Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you. And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."

The first advent of the Messiah, might naturally be expected to hold a prominence in the prophetic writings, proportioned to the importance of its object,—a more clear revelation of the Divine will,—the establishment of a new and better covenant, founded upon better promises,—the manifestation of the new and living way into the holiest of all.

It has this prominence. With the exception of Isaiah, however, the prophets have, after announcing the character and works of the Messiah, noticed certain events, which were to precede his coming, such as "shaking the thrones of kingdoms," &c. The time of the advent was revealed to Daniel; yet to those, who lived before God was manifest in the flesh, the time had a limited indefiniteness, similar to that which has already been the subject of remark. The following translation of Dan. 9: 24-27, is given, as being more literal than that in our common version:—

"Seventy weeks have been cut off upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an atonement for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal the vision (Heb. the vision and the prophecy), and to anoint the Most Holy (Heb. 'a holy of holies'). Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment (Heb. word) to the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and sixty and two weeks, the street shall be built again, and the trench even in troublous times. And after the sixty and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, and not for himself (Heb. and it is not to live), and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and to the end of the war desolations are determined."

When this prophecy was first announced, the difficulty as to the interpretation to be given to weeks, as literal or symbolical, would present itself. When the lapse of time had removed this indefiniteness, it would be seen that each day in a week represented a year. Hence the following result would be reached. Four hundred and ninety years have been cut off, or separated from some other portion of time,—during, or at the expiration of these years, transgression was to be finished, and an end of sin-offerings effected,—atonement made for iniquity,—everlasting righteousness brought in,—vision and prophecy sealed, and the Most Holy anointed. Now, it is worthy of notice, that the order of events in this prophecy, is not the order of time, as the anointing is here placed after the act of making atonement; when, in point of fact, according to the New Testament, Christ was anointed by the descent of the Spirit upon him at his baptism, which rendered him the Messiah, or Anointed One,—while the atonement was made on the cross more than three years subsequent.

Again. How were those, who were first made acquainted with this prophecy, to interpret the phrase, "Messiah the Prince," otherwise than by referring it to the time of his birth? So interpreted, the period of seven weeks and sixty-two weeks, or 483 years, would fail of reaching the point, where he was manifested to Israel by about thirty years. And this would have been a necessary result, even if the time when the commandment went forth, "to restore and re-build Jerusalem," presented no difficulty. But to show more clearly, that prophetic times are always characterized by definite indefiniteness, let us look at Isa. 44: 28—"That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure:—even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built, and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." Connecting this passage with the prophecy just quoted from Daniel, it would seem that the Hebrews must have concluded, that the proclamation of Cyrus was a virtual "going forth of the command," to restore and re-build their city, and consequently, the first year of his reign,—the epoch of that proclamation,—must be the point whence they were to reckon the seven weeks and sixty-two weeks, or 483 years, to Messiah the Prince. But if this estimation is made, as the first year of Cyrus synchronized with the year B. C. 536—four hundred and eighty-three years brings us to the year B. C. 53. In other words, it falls short of the vulgar era of the Messiah's birth, by fifty-three years. The true period of his birth (we believe) has never been carried further back, than the year B. C. of the vulgar era 7. Hence, reckoning 483 years as above, we should still fail to reach the earliest period assigned for his birth, by fifty-six years. The Hebrews would, therefore, in view of these two prophecies, find the prophetic time expire (as they would estimate it) long before the birth of Christ, and might be taunted by those who gave no heed to the prophets, with the saying, "the days are prolonged, and every vision faileth." The result of such an apparent failure, would try, but not destroy the faith of those who were saints,—they would pray and be patient unto the coming of the Lord—the wicked might rage, and be confident.

Seventeen years after the proclamation of Cyrus,—that is to say, in the year B. C. 519—Darius Hystaspes issued a decree, by which he confirmed that of Cyrus.—Ezra 5th and 7th. It would have been natural for the Hebrews, who waited for the consolation of Israel, to look at this event, in the absence of any one of a similar character, as furnishing the datum for estimating the prophetic period of Daniel. But in this instance, another disappointment would arrest them in the lapse of 483 years, as they would only reach the year B. C. 26, of the vulgar era, when, on any chronological theory, the Messiah had not become incarnate. Here, then, would be a second failure—a second trial of faith—a second occasion for scollers to question the truth of prophecy—a full opportunity for them to ridicule "all prophetic arithmetic."

It is well known that the era of the accession of Artaxerxes Longimanus, has been the subject of much controversy. The critical investigations on this subject, have originated in the wish, to fix the chronology of the 7th year of his reign—the period at which Ezra obtained his commission, to regulate the Jewish polity. In England, the system of Usher, who supposes that this seventh year corresponds with the year B. C. 467, has had many followers,—while that of Prideaux, who professes to have corrected the errors of Usher, and which makes the seventh year synchronize with the year B. C. 456, (or more strictly, with B. C. 457)—has found numerous advocates. On the continent, Kruger, Hengstenberg and others, reckon the year B. C. 468 as the seventh of Artaxerxes. Without attempting to settle these conflicting views, it may be enough to say, that if the last named writers are not mistaken, and if Ezra's commission was obtained B. C. 467—then the 483 years reached the period A. D. of the vulgar era 15. This estimate does not bring us to the period of the Messiah's manifestation, anointing, and public ministry. On this hypothesis, there would have been a third apparent failure in the prediction,—certainly, real failure in the calculation, in the interpretation of the terms in which the time was presented by the prophet, when combined with an ever which would be supposed to furnish the proper point whence that time must be reckoned. It proper to remark, in passing, that Usher and Hengstenberg suppose, that the commandment went forth in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, B. C. 454 or 455. It is not necessary to dwell long on this subject. It is believed that enough has been said to establish the proposition, that the prophetic times have the characteristic which has been stated, and that mathematical exactness in announcing them, would have been inconsistent with the moral discipline of faith under which man is placed, in his earthly state. If, as firmly believed by many, the period of seven weeks, or four hundred and ninety years, is correct from the longer period of two thousand three hundred days, or years, noticed in the 8th chap of Daniel; or in other words, if the 490 years is the first part of the longer period of 2300 yrs at the end of which the sanctuary is to be cleansed,—then, whatever indefiniteness belongs to one of these periods, must necessarily affect the other. Those, therefore, who look for the appearance of the Messiah, that the sanctuary must be cleansed, must expect to have the field open for the trial of their faith, in reference to the second advent; as it certainly was to those who, in ancient times, waited for the first advent of Him of whom Moses and the Prophets wrote. When we reflect, that the learned are divided as to the year of the Crucifixion—some having fixed it on A. D. 28; others on A. D. 29; others on A. D. 33; and one, at least, of no common name, Sir Isaac Newton, on A. D. 31;—when we know Chronologists have assigned the birth of Jesus to the different years 7, 6, 5, and 4 before the vulgar era,—it will readily occur to the reader, that estimates in reference to the day, hour, month, or even the year, when Christ will appear, without sin unto salvation, cannot be received with much confidence. The accomplishment of the signs noticed by Christ and the apostles which were to precede that stupendous eve would seem to indicate that he will come quickly. The counsel which he gave his apostles, should be adopted by all who regard their highest interests. Luke 21: 34-36: "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

ROCHESTER, OCTOBER 14, 1846.

The Cause.

In this city our meetings are very interesting, though no conversions. The brethren are united, devoted, and as a general thing, strong in the faith of soon seeing the Lord. Bro. J. Pearson Jr. is still with us, laboring for the salvation of the flock to which he stately ministers. Bro. Chapman, formerly of Hartford Ct., called and spoke the word of comfort to the saints here, a few evenings since.—He is faithfully engaged in the good work, and brings a cheering report, for these cold perilous times, of the prosperity of the cause in a number of places where he has recently labored. In Buffalo, we learn that the good cause is prospering: a number have been baptized there recently by Bro. J. J. Porter, who is still located and laboring in that city.

Bro. J. B. Cook gave us a call last week on his way to Cleveland O. We were happy to learn from his own lips that he does not go with Mr. Jacobs in many of his wild and fanatical notions into which he has fallen. It has generally been supposed that Bro. Cook was a full believer in the doctrine of the shut door: but this, according to his own declaration in our office, he has never believed or advocated. He is still a full believer in the personal advent of Christ near at hand. In short, in the brief time we had to converse with him, we could perceive no material difference between his views and those entertained by our brethren in general, with the exception of some unimportant ideas he entertains on the doctrine of divine guidance, and washing feet.

Bro. Cook, perhaps, has not been fully sensible that very many of his brethren have considered him, to a great extent, identified with the doctrine of Mr. Jacobs, and highly responsible for the fall of that misguided and very unfortunate man. This being the case, and entertaining the sentiments he does, we think it due to the greatly injured cause of Christ, for Bro. Cook to disabuse the minds of his aggrieved brethren, and the community in general, on these things. We think the cause demands from his own hand a frank statement of his disapproval of those pernicious doctrines with which it has been supposed he has been identified with Mr. Jacobs in propagating. We open our columns, to a reasonable length, to Bro. Cook for this purpose. Will he occupy them?

Finally, the cause of our soon coming Lord throughout these United States and the world at large, is as prosperous as the prophetic word warrants us to expect at this momentous crisis; this closing up of the history of sin of our fallen world. When the harvest is ripening, we cannot reasonably expect to see the tender blade just springing from the soil, nor the ear in the blossom; neither shall we, if we rightly understand the subject, look for a general turning to the Lord, when the great mass have evidently closed their ears and eyes against the truth.

But we may and should expect that so long as God requires us to labor in his vineyard he has something for us to do there. Doubtless souls may and will yet be saved: how many, it is not our duty to enquire—one is of more value than this entire world. The Lord enable us to pluck some more new brands from the fire.

Meeting at Arcadia.

Our recent meeting at Arcadia, Wyoming Co., about seventy miles from this city, was very interesting, and we trust attended with some good to the cause of our coming Lord. We reached the place Saturday morning. Found Bro. J. C. Bywater and B. Morley, ministers of the everlasting gospel, and a goodly number of brethren from different places, had already reached the place, and commenced the meeting the day previous.

The meeting was held in the Chapel owned by the Baptists of the place, which they kindly permitted us to occupy, though, as we were told, it was the time for their regular covenant meeting and communion season. The Lord reward them for this act of kindness. But why do we talk thus? As though it were some wonderful act of courtesy, or kindness, or a great sacrifice for one body of professed Christians to open their house of worship to another!—In fact, there is no virtue, no condescension in such acts: for if we were all Christians, true worshippers of that God we all profess to love and serve, it would be our highest pleasure to open our house of worship to visiting brethren, to join with them in their devotions; and if praise were given to any body, it would be due to those who had taken the pains to come and worship with us. It is wicked sectarianism that makes it necessary to say occasionally,—we thank you for the use of your house, in which to worship the gracious and common Father of us all. Let this principle give place to pure brotherly kindness throughout Christendom, and such compliments would no longer be necessary.

We found our brethren in the ministry, and the saints generally who attended the meeting, well engaged in the work of the Lord, and we think immovably settled in that 'blessed hope,' and 'precious faith' of the gospel. The former 'entereth into that within the veil whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus.'—And the latter unwaveringly believes that 'this same Jesus' will very soon appear for the redemption of his people. Their faith we think rests on the word of the Lord, and will not therefore meet with a disappointment. One brother we found quite tenacious for precise definite time, but as a general remark this extreme view of this question is not taken by the brethren. They are however full believers in the time, as definite as the Bible reveals it, 'nigh at hand.' They believe we are justified in looking for the Lord every moment. This we believe is safe Scriptural ground. The time of the advent is a prominent truth of revelation, and cannot be discredited by those who understand the prophecies of that perfect book. Though some mistakes in the very definite termination of the prophetic periods may be made, those mistakes will not cause those who make them to become sceptical in the general theory of time, but will serve to drive them to that word, and to settle and ground their faith more and more in the time as the Bible reveals it.

Finally, our meeting was one of deep and joyful interest. A goodly number, Sabbath afternoon, joined in celebrating the supper of the Lord, and in the evening we parted with the blessed hope of soon meeting in the kingdom.

At this meeting, as at others we have attended, the most weighty truths seemed to produce no lasting effect on the unconverted portion of the assen-ably. They appear to have judged themselves unworthy of eternal life! And, painful to say it, the ministry and popular churches of the day, instead of faithfully apprising these thoughtless ones of their danger, are telling them they have nothing to fear from the immediate coming of the Lord to reward every man as his work shall be. Oh, the blindness of the times! Our teachers put light for darkness and darkness for light—are crying peace and safety, when sudden destruction is at the door. May they see the danger that is approaching, and faithfully warn their hearers to flee to Christ for refuge before the devouring storm of the final day shall break upon the ungodly.

Articles Declined.

The vision of I. Child we think best not to publish. Though it contains many good things, yet there is no evidence that it was of God. We should be exceedingly cautious, in matters of religion, how we follow any other guide than the visions, or rather, the revelations of God as plainly recorded in the Bible.

Bro. T. H.'s epistle to his brother in a foreign land, is valuable for the end for which it was written; but it is better suited for its individual object than for the public in general; and besides we cannot spare the time it would require to prepare it for the press: it would have to be re-written.

We do not decline publishing Bro. Dutton's good letter, for it was not written for publication, but we simply say in this place, that we see the force of some, at least, of his questions. The events to which they refer have occupied our thoughts much for some time past. We will try to give our views on these things before long.

PARABLES.

We think it advisable not to publish either of the articles but recently received from two worthy correspondents, on certain parables of the Savior, 1st, because they materially differ in their expositions of the same parable: it would be unprofitable to publish views so conflicting as are contained in these two articles. 2nd. We think each writer mistakes the true principle of understanding the meaning of the parables. They seem to have lost sight of the fact that a parable never lays the foundation of a doctrine, but is invariably used to illustrate or enforce a doctrine or fact already stated, or in existence. We believe this statement will hold good relative to every parable in the Bible. Another thing is also true of parables, which many do not seem to understand, viz; that a few, frequently not more than one or two, important truths are designed to be taught or enforced, instead of many. It is strictly true that 'parables were not designed to go on all fours.'

These statements are justified by the parables recorded in 2 Sam. 12: 1-7; 14: 6-11. The one spoken by Nathan was designed to show to David the enormity of his sin in procuring the death of Uriah in order to obtain his wife Bathsheba. The other, spoken by the woman of Tekoah, was designed to obtain from David a pardon for his son Absalom, who was then in banishment for the death of his brother Amnon. These were the prominent objects of these parables. They were also spoken in reference to already existing familiar facts. Without a knowledge of these facts, the parables would be unmeaning; but when the facts in the case are understood then the design, beauty and force of the parables are seen.

Looking into the New Testament we find these views relative to the nature and design of parables greatly strengthened. We cannot now call to mind a single parable uttered by the Savior that lays the foundation of a doctrine, or reveals a truth not already plainly taught, or which is not clearly taught.

in the explanation which immediately follows the parable. In justification of this statement, consult Matt. 13 : it is a chapter of parables. 'The doctrine of the chapter is found not in the parables, but in their explanations : the parables illustrate and enforce the doctrine taught. This is true of the parable in Matt. 15:11. It was unmeaning to the disciples of Christ until he told its design, as verses 15-20 clearly show. The doctrine taught was not to be learned from the parable. In Matt. 16: 6-12, the parable of the 'leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees,' was not understood until explained by the Savior : his Disciples 'then understood' its design. The parable of the lost sheep, in Matt. 18 : 13, 14, has its doctrine or explanation in these words, 'Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.' Also, in the same chapter is a lengthy and very minute parable of a certain king and his servants, which was spoken in answer to a question by Peter, asking how often he should forgive an erring brother, and its point, doctrine, or design is clearly seen in these words, 'So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother his trespasses.' vs. 21-35.

The lengthy and very minute parable of the householder, hiring laborers to work in his vineyard, at different hours of the day, recorded in Matt. 20: 1-15, was spoken in reference to the young man named in chap. 19: 16-22, who 'went away sorrowful,' after being told what he must do to 'have eternal life.'—Christ tells his disciples that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven,—that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle.—This filled their minds with astonishment. He tells them, with men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. 'Then Peter said, We have forsaken all and followed thee : what shall we have therefore ?' Jesus tells them, 'When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred-fold, and shall inherit everlasting life.'—It is then added, before giving the parable, (in reference to the Jews rejecting, and the Gentiles receiving the gospel) 'But many shall be first that are last, and last that are first.' Then, as a reason for this assertion, the parable is added, commencing thus, 'For the kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man that is an householder, &c. And at the close it is again repeated, 'So the last shall be first, and the first last : for many are called but few are chosen.' The parable teaches no new doctrine : but simply illustrates that which is repeated before and after the parable.

Matt. 21 : 28-30, contains the parable of the obedient and disobedient sons. Verse 31 shows its meaning in these words, 'Verily, I say unto you, that publicans and harlots go into the kingdom before you.' See also the next verse.

Verses 33-41 contain the very interesting parable of the vineyard and the wicked husbandman. Vrs. 43-45 explain its meaning, 'Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall upon this stone [kingdom of God] shall be broken ; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them.' Observe, they perceived that he spake of them. And such was their rage that, as the next verse says, 'they sought to lay hands on him.' Then the very next verse (the beginning of chap. 22) commences the parable of the marriage of the king's son ; and that it is spoken with special reference to the preceding parables, and explanations, is evident from the manner in which it commences. It reads, 'Then Jesus answered and said unto them again in parables, and said'—here follows the parable of the marriage of the king's son ; one of the parables which in a special manner has called forth these remarks.

Circumstances render it impracticable to close our remarks on this subject now ; they will therefore be continued and perhaps concluded in our next.

THE EXTRA HERALD.—The article commencing on our first page is copied from the 'Extra Herald.' Prof. Whiting, we believe, is its author. There are several other communications contained in that sheet which we design to publish soon.

The Sea Rouring.

On her recent passage from Liverpool to New York, the Steam ship Great Western was overtaken by a most terrific storm, which commenced Sept. 19 and continued until the 31st. The entire account of this tempest, as given by the New York papers, is too lengthy for our columns : we can only give a short extract. Says the account before us—

'To convey an idea of the appearance all around, is out of my power. In the words of Sheridan, 'the tempest roamed in all the terror of its glory.' The atmosphere was surcharged with a thick spray, rendering a look far out to seaward impossible. The wind howled, roared and bellowed, like the constant mutterings of the thunder cloud. Huge waves of tremendous light and volume, rose in mad display around the ship, threatening every moment to break over us amidships, and crush the vessel. Sea after sea striking us with terrific noise, caused the gallant ship to stop for an instant, tremble, and shake in every timber, from her stem to her stern post, reeling and lurching, tossed to and fro ; again would she gather fresh strength, and with her wheels half hid in the wild waters, again and again receive the thundering blows of an element that seemed armed for our destruction.

The sails on the yards, strongly secured by ropes and gaskets, were blown from their furls, and strewn out to leeward in ribbons. But all this was nothing. About 1 P. M., while most of us were seated in agonizing suspense in the lower cabin, holding fast to the tables and settees, a sea struck the vessel, and a tremendous crash was heard on deck. Instantly the cabin was darkened, and torrents of water came pouring down upon us through the sky-lights.

Scarcely had the waters reached the floor, when all in the cabins and state-rooms sprang to their feet, and simultaneously, as if by concert, the ladies uttered a scream of agony so fearful, and so despairing, the sound of it will never be forgotten ; and Heaven grant that such a wail of anguish may never again be heard by me. Several fainted—others clasped their hands in mute despair, while many called aloud upon their Creator.

The crash to which the writer alludes was caused by the tearing up of the benches and other wood work on the quarter deck. These were hurled with violence against the sky-lights, by the same sea which broke the windows of the saloon, drenching the berths on the larboard side, driving out their affrighted occupants, while it smashed by its weight the glass over the main cabin, and thus forced its way below.

This was a period of intense emotion. I was sitting in the upper saloon, trying to protect some ladies from injury. So violent were the shocks of the vessel, although firmly braced, it was with great difficulty we could prevent ourselves being hurled from our seats, and dashed with such violence against a part of the vessel, as to endanger life or limb. Many received severe contusions and bruises, notwithstanding all their efforts.

'Twas an anxious hour. My eye wandered over the different groups in the saloon : resting one while on a father passing from one to another of his family, and cheering with a kind word, an interesting group of daughters ; then on a young wife, folded to the bosom of her husband without a syllable being uttered, but the action spoke volumes, and again upon a mother whose children had been left in America, as she clasped her hands as if in secret prayer, while her husband and her father gathered around, and all seemed bowed down to earth in one common feeling of tender solicitude, for those who might so soon become helpless orphans.

It was an awful hour. The most thoughtless among us cowered in their secret heart before a danger which none but a fool or a brute would have mocked, and all therefore accepted the invitation to meet in the cabin for prayer.

Rev. Mr. Marsh read the 107th Psalm. Rev. Dr. Smucker prayed. Rev. Dr. Beecher made a few solemn remarks. Rev. Dr. Balch repeated the words of our Savior, "Let not your hearts be troubled : ye believe in God, believe also in me ;" commenting briefly on their consoling import, and then invited all present to join with him in the Lord's prayer : after which, he pronounced the Apostle's benediction.

Night approached. And I quote again from the gentleman who has kindly given an account of what took place below :

'Amid this accumulation of horrors, and still more to add to our alarm, night gathered in around us. The wind, far from abating, was on the increase. The lulls in the storm being less frequent, and the squalls, if any thing, more terrific. The whole ocean was one sea of foam, lashed up into terrible waves, wild and angry, while the spray and the wind seemed driven through the rigging and over the ship, as if with demoniacal power. As darkness came, clustering together in the cabin, we all thought and reflected on our fate.—Most, if not all of us, had given ourselves up for lost. For what, with the heavy laboring of the ship, the terrible noise and howling of the wind, the continued thumpings of the sea, the quivering and shaking of the groaning timbers, the carrying away of so many portions of the vessel's upper works, and the knowledge that we were perhaps for another night to be exposed to the full power of a raging hurricane, left us little to hope for.

In the evening, about 9 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Balch, at the request of several passengers, administered the Holy Communion in the cabin, to upward of sixty persons—many of whom received it there for the first time in their lives. Several applied to him as to the propriety of their embracing that occasion to fulfil a long cherished purpose of their hearts, but which, like many other 'good thoughts,' had been deferred to 'a more convenient season.' They all communicated, together with others of almost every creed and nation, thus reminding us of the promise of Scripture, 'they shall come from the East and the West, the North and the South, and sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God.'

It was a most solemn scene. Mr. Balch first read the service appointed for a storm at sea. After which, the whole communion office. The terrible conflict of the elements which raged without, was rendered yet more striking by the impressive stillness which pervaded that company of Christ's disciples within.

Gathered around the table, they received into hearts deeply moved, the consecrated emblems of the Redeemer's body and blood. All felt comforted by the blessed ordinance of grace. Many a bosom before tossed with fear, was now tranquil through faith. Once more all renewed their vows, and realized the peace of God shed abroad in their hearts, and felt with a vividness perhaps never before known, 'Your life was hid with God in Christ.' Oh! it was a night and a communion long to be remembered.

Three things specially impress the mind on reading this highly interesting account.

1. The howling, roaring and bellowing of the storm. Says the Savior, speaking of the sea at or near the time of his coming, 'the sea and the waves roaring.' We admit that terrific storms in all ages have been witnessed on the ocean, but that they have been more frequent and disastrous in their effects for a few years past, no one acquainted with the history of our world will deny. They are among the signs of the last day.

2. The communion under the fearful circumstances, and by persons of the faith of at least some of the communicants. 'The true design of the Lord's Supper is to shew the Lord's death till he come.' 1 Cor. 11: 26. 'The Lord's death.' It was a real person who died. 'Till he come.' Who? The Lord who died. Now Dr. Beecher, and we presume the other ministers with him, does not believe in the personal advent of Christ, but thinks his coming and reign will be spiritual. With this faith, what could be the object of the supper at this fearful moment? It could not have been to express their faith in the advent of Christ, the true design of the ordinance. What then? We know not, unless it was designed as an expiatory act. If this was the object, we leave the reader to judge whether a perversion of the ordinances of God's house, by his ministers, will or will not expiate for the sins of the frightened mariner: we think not.

3. The utter ignorance of the most learned divines, so called, of this age, relative to the locality and nature of the kingdom of God. There this helpless, despairing and ready-to-perish company were apparently at the mercy of 'the prince of the power of the air,' and yet we are told that they were in the kingdom of God, enjoying that blissful state, too, predicted by the Savior, when many should come from the east, west, north and south, and with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, sit down in the kingdom of God! Alas, what blindness! If such ministers as were present at this perilous moment understand their Bibles no better than this, relative to what it teaches about the kingdom of God, hopeless indeed must be the condition of their blindfolded and blind led flocks. Truly, the mass have been turned aside from the truth into fables.

THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.

Our Lord, in sending forth those he had called to preach his gospel, said to them—"go teach all nations," &c. It is admitted that this command is equally binding on the ministers of Christ of all generations, since it was given. As a body, they are bound to preach to all nations: and more, they are instructed what to preach—"teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Where are the ministers of this generation, who, irrespective of sect or party, teach the people "to observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded." The people generally are taught that the Jews, according to the flesh, must be restored to the enjoyment of peculiar privileges: and that Christ cannot come till this is accomplished. But our inquiry is, and ought to be, what is the doctrine of Christ on this subject.

In Matt. 21: 33-45, is recorded a parable which our Lord spake against the Jews. But before they perceive the intention or application of the parable, he gets their own decision in the case: and then (like Nathan to David) declares, ye are the men. "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruit thereof." If the time should come, when the Jews, according to the flesh, should have restored to them those privileges connected with the kingdom of God, which Christ declared should be taken from them, then this bold parable, with its truthful application, would need to be erased from the Divine record.

At another time he assures them in the most solemn manner, that their house shall be left unto them desolate, until his second coming; when all believing Jews will say, blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. [Matt. 23: 38-39.]

Again he says, Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles, until the times of the gentiles be fulfilled. But the prophets leave no space between "the times of the gentiles fulfilled" and the kingdom of God. [See Dan. 2: 44.] The gentile governments cease [their times being fulfilled] with the standing up of Michael, as did the Persian Empire, with the standing up of Alexander the Great, (Dan. 11: 3), "and then shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, to that same time." Or as Paul says, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile. Then every one found written in the book of life, whether waking or sleeping, will be delivered. Dan. 12: 1. I understand Christ to teach, that the Jerusalem which now is desolate with her temple, will thus remain until the end of all earthly kingdoms: when the Jerusalem which is above, will be made a rejoicing and "a praise on the earth." Now let the Great Teacher decide who "her people" are, that are to be created "a joy" in that day.

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, ye shall be made free? Jesus answered them, verily, verily, I say unto you, whosoever committeth sin, is the servant of sin. And the servant abideth not in the house forever: but the son abideth ever. If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. I know that ye are Abraham's seed: but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you. I speak what I have seen with my Father; and ye do that which ye have seen with your father. They answered and said unto him, Abraham is your father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham. But now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham. Ye do the deeds of your father. Then said they to him, We be not born of fornication; we have one Father, even God. Jesus saith unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me: for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. Why, do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word. Ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father will ye do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it. And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not. Comment is unnecessary. Let me just say, that those who encourage the Jews to expect peculiar favors from God because they are 'Abraham's seed,' do not hold to them the doctrine of Christ, and, of course, they stand in the way of the Jew's salvation. The doctrine of the national restoration of the Jews, so readily believed by them, is manifestly a lie, because they, in their unbelief believe it, and because it is opposed to the teachings of Christ.

Again: the people are taught that all nations will be converted to Christ before his second coming. On this subject also, our only appeal is, to the doctrine of Christ. He says, in explaining the parable of the tares of the field, recorded in Matt. 13: 24-30—"The field is the world: the good seed are the children of the kingdom: but the tares are the children of the wicked one,—the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels."

As therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of Man shall send forth His angels; and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity: and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father. Paul says, [1 Cor. 15: 23.] Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, [of the world] the great harvest time when the field, which is the world, will be 'cleared,' and afterwards (as we are elsewhere taught) cleansed or regenerated. [See Psa. 46: 6; 2 Pet. 3: 10, and Heb. 1: 10-12.] Paul also places the resurrection of all the righteous dead, the change into immortality, of all the righteous living, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, when also death will be swallowed up in victory; all this he places at the coming of Christ, the harvest, or the end of the world, up to which time, Christ teaches us that the children of the wicked one, and the children of the kingdom, will occupy the same field. If we wish to know which fruit will predominate and be the most abundant, let the following be considered: Matt. 7: 13, 14; Dan. 7: 21, 22. Let those who profess to be members of the church of Christ, not talk about prevailing for a thousand years before the Ancient of days comes, unless they are willing to join the Romanist communion, for "the saints" cannot prevail until the time comes that they possess the kingdom, which will be after the Ancient of days comes. [The coming of the Ancient of days, and "the glorious appearing of the great God," I understand to be the same.]

Again: in the parable of the nobleman, [Luke 19: 11-27] we are taught that the servants of Christ will be on probation until his second coming: and that some of those who professed to be "fellow-citizens of the household of God," would protest against his personal return and reign, up to the time of his coming, to reckon with them, when he will order them to be slain before him.

From this parable we may also learn, that that church or body of people who profess to be the kingdom of God, in the absence of the King, are in the attitude of rebellion against the king elect. True, they profess to have a spiritual king, but it cannot be Christ, for he declared: "a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." Not a single passage can be found in the teachings of the great founder of the christian religion, supporting the doctrine of the conversion of all nations to Christ. He himself said, I pray not for the world, but for them who shall believe on me through their word.—Jno. 17: 9, 20.

There is, evidently, much sectarian praying in christendom: and it comes clashing around the throne of God, if indeed, it ascends as high, which he cannot hear but to abhor. Let our prayers, then, be modified right down to the Savior's example—"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven. I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine, Amen."

But, positively, what is the doctrine of Christ? He says, "Go teach all nations, and teach them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you." This condition fulfilled, he will be with us always, even unto the end of the world; if we refuse thus to teach, he is bound to forsake us. The very reason why, as they say, "the Lord has forsaken us," is, they have violated the condition on which he promised to be with them. They have preached, and still persist in preaching, a sectarian Gospel, or what their creed teaches, instead of the doctrine of Christ. Let this be verified.

Christ, in discoursing upon his second coming, after revealing the signs which should just precede his coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, commands, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, [or be elated with joy] for your redemption draweth nigh." Many say, "We are willing to preach the gospel—we will cling to the great commission, but as for this 'Advent Doctrine,' we have never had any commission to preach it." Only let these ministers teach the people to observe this one command with reference to Christ's second coming, in its length and breadth, and just as Christ has given it, they would soon be charged with the crime (!) of preaching the "advent doctrine."

Let us read a little farther, with hearts fully set, to follow out the letter and spirit of the commission.

"And he spake to them a parable; behold the fig-tree and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves, that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

Again: "take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting [satiety, produced by over-eating,] and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares."

And again: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."—Luke 21: 24-36. The doctrine then, of joyfully looking for the coming of the Son of Man, and of knowing, by the fulfilment of his signs, when his coming and kingdom are nigh at hand, of taking heed to ourselves to be ready for his coming—of watching and praying always, with especial care to escape all these things that are coming on the earth, and that we may stand before the Son of Man at his coming, is the doctrine of Christ.

Importance of Diligently Searching the Scriptures.

We have first a few remarks to offer, and it is hoped these may not be altogether unprofitable. Generally speaking, we are aware that the brethren know the things whereof we write, but some do not, and others again, who are entitled to our sympathetic regard, claim also an interest in our prayers and unceasing efforts, for their salvation, till the door of mercy and hope is forever closed against the finally impenitent. Besides, it is our duty to stir up one another by way of remembrance, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. For this we have apostolic authority; and we need no more, but ought never to be satisfied with less, in regard to any point of faith, duty, or matter of practical importance. Had the professed friends of Jesus, revered as they ought to, the authority of God in his word, instead of being now scattered like stragglingsheep on the mountains, they might have gone forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," against the hosts of darkness. But every word of God must be fulfilled, and it is now the part of true wisdom, to keep the final consummation full in view, and "watch and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that are coming on the earth, and to stand before the Son of Man."

Now, even now, at this critical moment, the paramount importance of diligently, carefully, and prayerfully examining the word of truth, must be evident to all who fear the Lord, and wish to be guided and led in safety to the celestial city. If the duty of searching the word, when diligently practised, elicited commendation, when inspired men preached the gospel of the kingdom, (Acts 17: 11) and when men, full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, ministered in holy things, to the living members, of which Christ is the head, it is certainly as laudible, and more needful for us to search the Word, and meditate upon it day and night, when, through the baneful influence of erratic, wayward, un sanctified teachers, false apostles, deceitful workers, apostolic and worldly-minded professors, truth has fallen in the street, and because of the abounding of iniquity, the love of many has waxed cold. Truly, it is a time of little faith, comparatively speaking, and every thing connected with the "christian world," to use a cant phrase, whether at home or abroad, returns, as it were, an emphatic negative, to the query of our blessed Lord, relative to his second advent, and the wide spread unbelief that would then prevail; Luke 18: 8. "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, will he find this belief upon the earth?"—Camp. trans.

Luther, Milaethon, and the lights of the Reformation, were God-fearing, truth-loving, ardent, disinterested, devoted spirits, men who assiduously studied, believed, and enforced, all that the Old Testament Scriptures, and the clearer developments of the New revealed, concerning the advent of the Lord from heaven, to raise the righteous dead, change the living saints, destroy those who have destroyed the earth, purify, and remove the curse from the groaning earth, and set up his righteous, everlasting kingdom "under the whole heaven," for an everlasting possession to the saints of the Most High. After they had served their generation, according to the will of God, they fell asleep in Jesus, and were gathered to their fathers, to rest from their labors, and rise with the "blessed and holy," at the first resurrection. But others, of a different stamp, succeeded them, men who loved present ease, emolument, and "fat benefices," more than Christ's work, with the hate, reproach, and evil treatment of the world, the flesh, and the devil, as a present portion. Satan, who at first beguiled Eve with a specious falsehood,—“ye shall be as Gods,” and whispered into the ears of these willing servants of his, a "white lie," about a heaven for the soul at death, far beyond the starry skies, and they in turn preached the "falsehood" to the 'flock' who first believed and then applauded the deceived ones, without one scrap of testimony from the sacred pages, or even consulting them, by which "all things" should be proved, and so the poor, blind-led, deluded bride, lost sight of the true inheritance, and quite forgot her calling.

Through the blessed instrumentality of a few enlightened, devoted, humble, pious, unpretending men, the glorious hope of the gospel was lately dug out from the rubbish of human doctrines and traditions, and the "everlasting gospel," was preached through the length & breadth of the land, with apostolic fervor, plainness, and simplicity; and when the hour of his judgment has fully come, all will then know the result.—Certain it is, that the popular clergy, who seek honor one from another, and love the praise of men more than the praise of God, have, with one consent, rejected the overwhelming mass of testimony, which incontrovertibly shows, that the second advent of Jesus is nigh, even at the door. And when one reflects on the deliterious influence over the mass of mind in the community at large, may we not with the prophet exclaim,—“Who shall abide the day of his appearing!” “for the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God!” O my God, in view of the tremendous scenes just before us, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness." "Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness; but grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ; to him be glory both now and forever, Amen."—2 Pet. 3.

The concurrent testimony of God's children, through all time, proves that the entrance of the Word gives light, and we know from the divine Word, that "the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat;" but the word of God abideth forever. The Word therefore, holds forth light and life to the obedient disciple, and what more does he need, even at this awfully momentous crisis? The nutritious aliment of the mother, is not more necessary to the nourishment and support of the child, than the sincere milk of the Word is to the spiritual life of the believer. But in order to receive strength and vigor from it, he must feed on it by faith, and then let his light shine, that others seeing his good work, may glorify the Father in heaven. He must take heed to it, and endeavor to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord; hating even the garment spotted with the flesh.

On a certain occasion when the disciples murmured, these words fell from the lips of the divine teacher: "It is the spirit that quickeneth the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."—John 6: 63. We are exhorted to search the Scriptures, because they testify of Jesus, and the Revelator tells us, "the testimony of Jesus, is the spirit of prophecy." With this before the mind, how very appropriate is the admonition of Peter 2: 1-19. "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." O let us give heed to the sure Word, and it will surely be a light to our feet and a lamp to our path, until we hail the perfect day.

We have already witnessed the signs which were to premonish us of the near advent of the Lord, and ought, therefore, to lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption is nigh. Why rejoice? Because, when Christ who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. Hear the word of the Lord:—"Ye that tremble at his word, your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, let the Lord be glorified, but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed."—Isaiah 66: 5. Jesus is coming, but not to be despised and rejected of men as at his first advent. O no, He comes in his own and in the Father's glory, as King of kings and Lord of Lords, to wrest the kingdom from the grasp of the usurper, destroy the works of the devil, and make all things new; glory to God. O what a glorious hope is ours, and every one that hath this hope, purifieth himself, even as Christ is pure. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

Brethren, let us take the lamp in our hand, and let the word in our heart, and the fruits of the spirit will spring up to the praise and honor of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ. Now, the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such, there is no law, and they that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh with affection and lusts.

The Christian.

Though the murky waves of pollutedness roll,
(A delight to the wicked and sinful soul)
The Christian, undaunted, unshrinking, alone,
Pursues the short journey to Heaven his home,
And ever as he bends the suppliant knee,
A fervent prayer ascends silent and free.

When dangers are lowering with fearful display,
And nought but trials seem to darken his way,
Nerved by the arm of Jehovah alone,
He clings to the cross till the victory is won,
And his soul is buoyant as he nears that home
Where sin is debarred and sorrow cannot come.

When the vital spark of his frame grows cold,
And the body with sorrow and care is old,
His joy is increased in a ten-fold rate
As he quits the scenes of this mortal state,
For his is a part in the regions of rest,
Where the sanctified dwell and ever are blest.

Poetry.

The desert drear will soon rejoice.
With joyful shouts shall ring,
The wilderness shall hear the voice
Of praises to our King.
Ye fearful hearts, fear not, be strong :
Your God will quickly come,
The vision will not tarry long,
It soon will surely come.

To Zion's hill, with joyful songs.
The ransomed ones will come,
The little flock, with shouts prolonged,
Shall quickly reach their home.
Sorrow and sighing then shall flee,
And joy and gladness reign ;
The poor oppressed shall then be free,
The dead shall live again.

Letter from Bro. A. N. Seymour.

Bro. Marsh:—The blessed hope referred to in the Bible, of the immediate coming of our glorious King, and the consummation of the weary pilgrim's journey, the unfading diadem, and the eternal rest that appears at his revelation, cheer us more than ever, and afford God's waiting people great consolation: for while they take heed to the sure word that shines in a dark place, and will till the day dawn, and examine those luminous way-marks that point to the heavenly light-house, they are solemnly convicted of the irresistible and unequivocal testimony, that ere '47 A. D. true era shall pass away, the world will witness the termination of the vision, the righteous receive their reward, and the wicked theirs. O how delightful is the future to the poor, way-worn traveller, who is of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at the word of God. But how gloomy to the unregenerate.

Is it possible that any of God's servants, or children, enjoying this precious hope, can allow themselves for a moment to sit down, when there is such an extensive field for usefulness, and idle away their time which God has allotted them for doing good, and suffer multitudes to perish, without hearing or knowing any of the reasons of the hope that we cherish in this last age of infidelity, apostasy and crime? May the prophet Ezekiel's instructions rest with due weight upon all of God's servants. He says, "If the watchmen see the sword coming and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, and they are taken away in their iniquity, their blood will I require at the watchman's hand." O, what responsibility! I never realized it so much as of late: for while traveling from place to place, as we have since we came to Michigan, demonstrating from the Bible, that the Savior is even at the doors, we have seen a number of the professed watchmen willing to acknowledge the force of this truth, still, would remain inactive. Well, says James, "Faith without works is dead, being alone." The fear of being reproached, or called a Millerite, will shut out many a soul from the kingdom of God, but Peter says, "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye, for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you." Moses esteemed the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of reward—he chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.

Doubtless, it would be interesting to you and others, to know how the cause is prospering in Michigan. There are two public speakers only that preach this truth in the State, that we have any knowledge of, and most all of their time is consumed at home, except on the Sabbath. Bro. Case however, is arranging his business so as to spend the most of his time in proclaiming the truth. There are quite a number of warm hearted brethren and sisters here, who love the truth of Christ's appearing, and are willing to sacrifice for the cause.

Spiritualism has desired to stop with the brethren, but they choked it by adhering to the law and the testimony, and that tells them not to believe every spirit, but try them, for there are seducing spirits, false teachers, and false prophets, gone out into the world. Two wandering stars made their appearance from the East a short time since in Jackson, but they were like dark lanterns: did not shine; and the reason why they did not, was because their lamps had "gone out."

We came into this State the 17th of June, and since the Conference, we have visited Napoleon, Manchester, Saline, Ann Arbor, Milford, Howell, Climax, Constantine, Mishwaka, and we are now at Battle Creek. In all of these places, and some of the neighborhoods beside, we have had large congregations, and better attention we never saw: people will listen for hours, without manifesting any weariness. We have frequently spent five hours on the Sabbath in giving three lectures, and after dismissal the people seemed loth to leave, desiring to hear more. The good result of these meetings will only be known when the secrets of all hearts shall be brought to light. Quite a number have confessed the truth of the Savior's speedy coming, and have been afflicted by it. Some have desired to seek the Savior, and some have resolved to seek until they obtain the prize, even the incorruptible inheritance that never disappears.

A word to the dear saints scattered over the dominions of Satan. You now have severe trials, perhaps they will increase: the wicked may scoff and ridicule the pure hope you entertain—the world will hold out her inducements to charm you if possible, but look to Jesus continually; love not the world, nor the things that are in it. Be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. Remember that now we are absent from each other, but soon we shall have a joyful meeting and greeting, in the kingdom of God.

Yours in hope of the glory of God,

Letter from Bro. J. I. Whitman.

Bro. Marsh:—I have been absent from home six weeks, on account of the late sickness and death of my dear father, Mr. John Whitman, who died at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. S. Judson, in Mayfield, Fulton Co., on the 18th of last month, in the 78th year of his age. My father experienced religion in the 16th year of his age, which he publicly professed by baptism, on entering his 17th year, and which he perseveringly maintained during the remainder of his life. In the last four years of his life, his mind was much occupied and comforted with the doctrine of the speedy coming of the Lord Jesus.—His sickness, which lasted three weeks, was most excruciatingly distressing, yet his mind was peaceful, and his spirit joyful, in prospect of final victory over all the effects of sin, through our Lord Jesus Christ, at his glorious coming. His funeral sermon was preached by Elder A. Beach, from 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23.

Since my absence from home, I have preached in three different Baptist churches. In Whitesboro, on the hope of the Christian—at three mile Bay, Jeff. Co., on the coming of the Lord and its near approach—also on the salvation ready to be revealed in the last time—and also on the kingdom which God has promised to all them that love him. Last Sabbath in the Bap. church, in Warren, Herkimer Co. 1st, endeavored to show that we might know that the coming of the Lord was nigh—2d, the character and glory of it—3d, the salvation that would be completed—4th, characters illustrated. I am happy to say, that in all of these churches, I found precious souls who were feasted on these precious and glorious doctrines. I also preached to a little company at Cranberry Creek, one Sabbath. In all, my own soul was richly blessed. It was my father's request, that you send his paper, heretofore directed to Mayfield Four Corners, to my sister, widow H. A. Eaton, Troy, Miami, Co., Ohio. I must close. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen.

The Watchman's Song.

Air—Eden of Love.

Arouse ye, my brethren, awake from your sadness,
The Savior is coming! the Kingdom is near!
Your harps tune anew with the sweet strains of gladness,
The City Jerusalem soon will be here.
The night is far spent, and the auspicious morning
Rolls onward in haste with its heralds of warning,
Your souls now with patience and meekness adore him,
Our toils will be over this year, ay, this year.

Long, long have we sought for a bride for our Master,
And care-worn and weary, have roamed up and down;
And borne from his foes hatred, scorn, and disaster,
In hope of soon winning an unfolding crown:
And oh! have we trod on the thorn and the brier,
Through rivers of sorrow, and trials of fire;
But O the sweet hope of an immortal life
Has buoyed up our spirits to bear the world's frown.

O who, who can tell of the joys of the blest ones
That reign in eternity, holy and free:
Where nought will be heard save the warblings and rich tones
Of Saints and of Angels, in sweet harmony!
No more for our "hope" will the worldling deride us,
The bitter "farewell" ne'er again shall divide us,
With seraphs, and saints, and Immanuel beside us,
For ever and ever we shall happy be.

Our sighing all ended, our sins all forgiven,
Our songs of redemption in rich anthems sing;
Our Savior our joy, and his smile be our heaven,
The name of ambassador changed now to king:
The cross for the crown, and the sword sheathed forever,
Bright diadems sparkling with gems from life's river
We'll cast at the feet of our glorious Deliver,
While loud alleluia the kingdom will ring.

Away, then, ye watchman, the glad message carry,
Of peace and of pardon, to all who will hear,
That vengeance still lingers; and bid them not tarry,
But quickly repent, for the Judgment is near.
O win them to Jesus, and Eden's bright bower,
Where storms of red vengeance will ne'er darkly lower;
And tell the dear saints that the long-looked-for hour
Of Jubilee's coming, and soon will appear.

Then haste ye away, and repent the glad story,
The cry, "Lo! He cometh!" with loud echoes swell;
For ye shall soon join in the rapturous glory
Of seraphic legions, where ransomed ones dwell.
The haven of rest we are now swiftly nearing,
The promise is sure, and the prospects all cheering,
The green fairy fields of our sweet home appearing,
I'll meet you in glory, farewell, oh farewell! D. T. T.

THE NEW EARTH.

Professor of Theology in the University of Edinburgh, and Corresponding Member of the Royal Institute of France.

"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Peter 3: 13.

There is a limit to the revelations of the Bible about futurity, and it is a mental or spiritual trespass to go beyond it. The reserve which it maintains in its informations, we also ought to maintain in our inquiries—satisfied to know little on every subject, where it has communicated little, and feeling our way into regions which are at present unseen, no further than the light of Scripture will carry us.

But while we attempt not to be "wise above that which is written," we should attempt, and that most studiously, to be wise up to that which is written. The disclosures are very few and very partial, which are given to us of that bright and beautiful economy, which is to survive the ruins of our present one. But, still there are such disclosures—and on the principle of the things that are revealed belonging unto us, we have a right to walk up and down, for the purpose of observation, over the whole actual extent of them. What is made known of the details of immortality, is but small in the amount, nor are we furnished with the materials of any thing like a graphic or picturesque exhibition of its abodes of blessedness. But still somewhat is made known, and which, too, may be addressed to a higher principle than curiosity, being like every other Scripture, "profitable both for doctrine and instruction in righteousness."

In the text before us, there are two leading points of information, which we should like successively to remark upon. The first is, that in the new economy which is to be reared for the blessed, there will be materialism, not merely new heavens, but also a new earth. The second is, that as distinguished from the present, which is an abode of rebellion, it will be an abode of righteousness.

1. We know historically that earth, that solid material earth, may form the dwelling of sinless creatures, in full converse and friendship with the Being who made them—that, instead of a place of exile for outcasts, it may have a broad avenue of communication with the spiritual world, for the descent of ethereal beings from on high—that, like the member of an extended family, it may share in the regard and attention of the other members, and along with them be gladdened by the presence of Him who is the Father of them all. To inquire how this can be, were to attempt a wisdom beyond Scripture: but to assert that this has been, and therefore may be, is to keep most strictly and modestly within the limits of the record. For, wo there read that God framed an apparatus of materialism, which, on His own surveying, He pronounced to be all very good, and the leading features of which may still be recognized among the things and the substances that are around us—and that He created man with the bodily organs and senses which we now wear—and placed him under the very canopy that is over our heads—and spread around Him a scenery, perhaps lovelier in its tints, and more smiling and serene in the whole aspect of it, but certainly made up, in the main, of the same objects that still compose the prospect of our visible contemplations—and there, working with his hands in a garden, and with trees on every side of him, and over with animals sporting at his feet, was this inhabitant of earth, in the midst of all those earthly and familiar accompaniments, in full possession of the best immunities of a citizen of heaven—sharing in the delight of angels, and while he gazed on the very beauties which we ourselves gaze upon, rejoicing in them most, as the tokens of a present and presiding Deity.

Man, at the first, had for his place this world, and at the same time, for his privilege, an unclouded fellowship with God, and, for his prospect, an immortality, which death was neither to intercept nor put an end to. He was terrestrial in respect of condition, and yet celestial in respect both of character and enjoyment. His eye looked outwardly on a landscape of earth, while his heart breathed upwardly in the love of heaven. And though he strode the solid platform of our world, and was compassed about with its horizon—still was he within the circle of God's favored creation, and took His place among the freemen and the denizens of the great spiritual commonwealth.

This may serve to rectify an imagination, of which we think that all must be conscious—as if the grossness of materialism was only for those who had degenerated into the grossness of sin; and that, when a spiritualizing process had purged away all our corruption, then, by the stepping-stones of a death and resurrection, we should be borne away to some ethereal region, where sense, and body, and all in the shape of audible sound or of tangible substance, were unknown. And hence that strangeness of impression which is felt by you, should the supposition be offered, that in the place of eternal blessedness, there will be ground to walk upon; or scenes of luxuriance to delight the corporeal senses; or the kindly intercourse of friends talking familiarly, and by articulate converse together; or, in short, any thing that has the least resemblance to a local territory, filled with various accommodations, and peopled over its whole extent by creatures formed like ourselves—having bodies such as we now wear, and faculties of perception, and thought, and mutual communication, such as we now exercise.

Many forget that there is really no essential connection between materialism and sin; that the world which we now inhabit, had all the amplitude and solidity of its present materialism before sin entered it—that God so far, on that account, from looking slightly upon it, after it had received the last touch of His creating hand, reviewed the earth, and the waters, and the firmament, and all the green herbage, with the living creatures, and the man whom He had raised in dominion over them, and He saw every thing that He had made, and beheld it was all VERY GOOD.—They forget that on the birth of materialism, when it stood out in the freshness of those glories which the great Architect of Nature had impressed upon it, that then "the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." They forget the appeals that are made everywhere in the Bible, to this material workmanship—and how, from the face of these visible heavens, and the garniture of this earth that we tread upon, the greatness and goodness of God are reflected on the view of His worshippers.

No, my brethren, the object of the administration we sit under, is to extirpate sin, but it is not to sweep away materialism. By the convulsions of the last day, it may be shaken, and broken down from its present arrangements; and thrown into such fitful agitations, as that the whole of its existing frame work shall fall to pieces; and with a heat so fervent as to melt its most solid elements, may it be utterly dissolved. And thus may the earth again become without form and void, but without one particle of its substance going into annihilation. Out of the ruins of this second chaos, may another heaven and another earth be made to arise, and a new materialism, with other aspects of magnificence and beauty, emerge from the wreck of this mighty transformation; and the world be peopled as before, with the varieties of material loveliness, and space be again lighted up into a firmament of material splendor.

Were our place of everlasting blessedness so purely spiritual as it is commonly imagined, then the soul of man, after, at death, having quitted his body, would quit it conclusively. That mass of materialism with which it is associated upon earth, and which many regard as a load and an incumbrance, would have leave to putrefy in the grave, without being revisited by supernatural power, or raised again out of the inanimate dust into which it had resolved. If the body be indeed a clog and a confinement to the spirit, instead of its commodious tenement, then would the spirit feel lightened by the departure it had made, and expatiate in all the buoyancy of its emancipated powers, over a scene of enlargement. And this is, doubtless, the prevailing imagination.—But why, then, after having made its escape from such a thralldom, should it ever recur to the prison-house of its old materialism, if a prison-house it really be? Why should the disengaged spirit again be fastened to the drag of that grosser and heavier substance, which many think has only the effect of weighing down its activity, and infusing into the pure element of mind, an ingredient which serves to cloud and to enfeeble it? In other words, what is the use of a day of resurrection, if the union which then takes place, is to deaden, or to reduce all those energies that are commonly ascribed to the living principle, in a state of separation?

As a proof of some metaphysical delusion upon this subject, the product, perhaps, of a wrong, though fashionable philosophy, it would appear, that to embody the spirit is not the stepping-stone to its degradation, but to its preferment. The last day will be a day of triumph to the righteous,—because the day of the re-entrance of the spirit to its much-loved abode, where its faculties, so far from being shut up into captivity, will find their free and kindred development in such material organs as are suited to them. The fact of the resurrection proves, that, with man at least, the state of a disembodied spirit is a state of unnatural violence—and that the resurrection of his body is an essential step to the highest perfection of which he is susceptible. And it is indeed an homage to that materialism, which many are for expunging from the future state of the universe altogether—that ere the immaterial soul of man has reached the ultimate glory and blessedness which are designed for it, it must return and knock at that very grave where lie the mouldered remains of the body which it wore—and there inquisition must be made for the flesh, and the sinews, and the bones, which the power of corruption has perhaps for centuries before, assimilated to the earth that is around them—and there, the minute atoms must be re-assembled into a structure that bears upon it the form, and the lineaments, and the general aspect of a man—and the soul passes into this material frame-work, which is hereafter to be its lodging-place forever; and that, not as its prison, but as its pleasant and befitting habitation; not to be trammelled, as some would have it, in a hold of materialism, but to be therein equipped for the services of eternity, to walk, embodied, among the bowers of our second paradise—to stand embodied in the presence of our God.

There will, it is true, be a change of personal constitution between a good man before his death, and a good man after his resurrection; not, however, that he will be set free from his body, but that he will be set free from the corrupt principle which is in his body; not that the materialism with which he is now surrounded will be done away, but that the taint of evil by which this materialism is now pervaded, will be done away.—Could this be effected without dying, death would be no longer an essential stepping-stone to paradise. But it would appear of the moral virus, which has been transmitted downwards from Adam, and is now spread abroad over the whole human family—it would appear, that to get rid of this, the old fabric must be taken down, and reared anew; and that, not of other materials, but of its own materials, only delivered of all impurity as if by a refining process in the sepulchre. It is thus, that what is “sown in weakness, is raised in power;” and for this purpose it is not necessary to get quit of materialism, but to get quit of sin, and so to purge materialism of its malady. It is thus that the dead shall come forth incorruptible, and those, we are told, who are alive at this great catastrophe, shall suddenly and mysteriously be changed.

While we are compassed about with these vile bodies, as the apostle emphatically terms them, evil is present, and it is well, if through the working of the Spirit of grace, evil does not prevail. To keep this besetting enemy in check, is the task and the trial of our christianity on earth;—and it is the detaching of this poisonous ingredient, which constitutes that for which the believer is represented as groaning earnestly, even the redemption of the body that he now wears, and which will then be transformed into the likeness of Christ's glorified body. And this will be his heaven, that he will serve God without a struggle, and in a full gale of spiritual delight; because, with the full concurrence of all the feelings and all the faculties of his regenerated nature. Before death, sin is only repressed; after the resurrection, sin will be exterminated. Here he has to maintain the combat, with a tendency to evil still lodging in his heart, and working a perverse movement among his inclinations; but after his warfare in this world is accomplished, he will no longer be so thwarted, and he will set him down in another world, with the repose and the triumph of victory for his everlasting reward. The great constitutional plague of his nature will no longer trouble him; and there will be the charm of a general affinity between the purity of his heart, and the purity of the element he breathes in.—Still it will not be the purity of spirit escaped from materialism, but of spirit translated into a materialism, that has been clarified of evil. It will not be the purity of souls unclothed as at death, but the purity of souls that have again been clothed upon at the resurrection.

But the lightest homage that we know of to materialism, is that which God, manifest in the flesh, has rendered to it. That He, the Divinity, should have wrapt his unfathomable essence in one of its coverings, and expatiated amongst us in the palpable form and structure of a man; and that he should have chosen such a tenement, not as a temporary abode, but should have borne it with Him to the place which He now occupies, and where He is now employed in preparing the mansions of His followers—that He should have entered within the veil, and be now seated at the right hand of the Father, with the very body which was marked by the nails upon His cross, and wherewith He ate and drank after His resurrection; that He who repelled the imagination of His disciples, as if they had seen a spirit, by bidding them handle Him and see, and subjecting to their familiar touch the flesh and the bones that encompassed Him; that He should now be throned in universal supremacy, and wielding the whole power of heaven and earth, have every knee to bow at His name, and every tongue to confess, and yet all to the glory of God the Father: that humanity, that substantial and embodied humanity, should be thus exalted, and a voice of adoration from every creature, he lifted up to the Lamb for ever and ever—does this look like the abolition of materialism, after the present system of it is destroyed; or does it not rather prove, that, transplanted into another system, it will be transferred into celestial honors, and prolonged in immortality throughout all ages?

It has been our careful endeavor, in all that we have said, to keep within the limits of the record, and to offer no other remarks than those which may fitly be suggested by the circumstance that a new earth is to be created, as well as a new heavens, for the future accommodation of the righteous. We have no desire to push the speculation beyond what is written; but it were, at the same time, well, that in all our representations of the immortal state, there was just the same force of coloring, and the same vivacity of scenic exhibition, that there is in the New Testament. The imagination of a total and diametric opposition between the region of sense and the region of spirituality; certainly tends to abate the interest with which we might otherwise look to the perspective that is on the other side of the grave, and to deaden all those sympathies that we else might have with the joys and the exercises of the blest in paradise.

To rectify this, it is not necessary to enter on the peculiarities of heaven—a topic on which the Bible is certainly most sparing and reserved in its communications. But a great step is gained, simply by dissolving the alliance that exists in the minds of many between the two ideas of sin and materialism; or proving, that when sin is once done away, it consists with all we know of God's administration, that materialism shall be perpetuated in the full bloom and vigor of immortality. It altogether holds out a warmer and more alluring picture of the clysium that awaits us, when told that there will be beauty to delight the eye, and music to regale the ear; and the comfort that springs from all the charities of intercourse between man and man, holding converse as they do on earth, and gladdening each other with the benignant smiles that play on the human countenance, and the accents of kindness that fall in soft and soothing melody from the human voice. There is much of the innocent, and much of the inspiring, and much to affect and elevate the heart, in the scenes and the contemplations of materialism; and we do hail the information of our text, that after the dissolution of its present framework, it will again be varied and decked out anew, in all the graces of its unfading verdure, and of its unbounded variety—that in addition to our direct and personal view of the Deity, when he comes down to tabernacle with men, we shall also have the reflection of Him in a lovely mirror of His own workmanship—and that instead of being transported to some abode of dimness and of mystery, so remote from human experience, as to be beyond all comprehension, we shall walk for ever in a land replenished with those sensible delights, and those sensible glories, which, we doubt not, will lie most profusely scattered over the “new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.”

II. But though a paradise of sense, it will not be a paradise of sensuality. Though not so unlike the present world as many apprehend it, there will be one point of total dissimilarity betwixt them. It is not the entire substitution of spirit for matter, that will distinguish the future economy from the present. But it will be the entire substitution of righteousness for sin. It is this which signalizes the Christian from the Mahometan paradise; not that sense, and substance, and splendid imagery, and the glories of a visible creation seen with bodily eyes, are excluded from it, but that all that is vile in principle, or voluptuous in impurity, will be utterly excluded from it.—There will be a firm earth, as we have at present, and a heaven stretched over it as we have at present; and it is not by the absence of these, but by the absence of sin, that the abodes of immortality will be characterised. There will both be heavens and earth, it would appear, in the next great administration—and with this speciality to mark it from the present one, that it will be a heaven and an earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Now, though the first topic of information that we deduced from the text, may be regarded as not very practical, yet, the second topic on which we now insist, is most eminently so. Were it the great characteristic of that spirituality which is to obtain in a future heaven, that it was a spirituality of essence, then occupying and pervading the place from which materialism had been swept away, he could not, by any possible method, approximate the condition we are in at present, to the condition we are to hold everlastingly. We cannot etherialize the matter that is around us, neither can we attenuate our own bodies, nor bring down the slightest degree of such a heaven to the earth that we now inhabit. But when we are told that materialism is to be kept up, and that the spirituality of our future state lies not in the kind of substance which is to compose its framework, but in the character of those who people it—this puts, if not the fulness of heaven, at least a foretaste of heaven, within our reach.—We have not to strain at a thing so impracticable, as that of diluting the material economy which is without us; we have only to reform the moral economy within us. We are now walking on a terrestrial surface, not more compact, perhaps, than the one which we shall hereafter walk upon, and are now wearing terrestrial bodies, not firmer and more solid perhaps, than those which we shall hereafter wear. It is not by working any change upon them, that we could realize, to any extent, our future heaven. And this is simply done by opening the door of our heart for the influx of heaven's affections—by bringing the whole man, as made up of soul, and spirit, and body, under the presiding authority of heaven's principles.

Our Savior came down amongst us in the full perfection of heaven's character, and has made us to see that it is a character which may be embodied. All its virtues were in his case, infused into corporeal framework, and the substance of these lower regions was taken into intimate and abiding association with the spirit of the higher. The ingredient which is heavenly, admits of being united with the ingredient which is earthly; so that we, who, by nature, are of earth, and earthly, could we catch that pure and celestial element which made the man Christ Jesus to differ from all other men, then might we too be formed into that character, by which it is that the members of the family above, differ from those of the outcast family beneath. Now, it is expressly said of Him, that He is set before us as an example; and we are required to look to that living exhibition of Him, where all the graces of the upper sanctuary are beheld as in a picture; and instead of an abstract, we have in His history, a familiar representation of such worth, and piety, and excellence, as could then only be stamped upon our own persons, and borne along with us to the place where He now dwelleth—instead of being shunned as aliens, we should be welcomed and recognized as seemly companions for the inmates of that place of holiness. And, in truth, the great work of Christ's disciples upon earth, is a constant and busy process of assimilation to their Master, who is in heaven. And we live under a special economy, that has been set up for the express purpose of helping it forward. It is for this, in particular, that the Spirit is provided. We are changed into the image of the Lord, even by the Spirit of the Lord. Nursed out of this fulness, we grow up into the stature of perfect men in Christ Jesus; and instead of heaven being a remote and mysterious unknown, heaven is brought near to us by the simple expedient of inspiring us where we now stand, with its love, and its purity, and its sacredness. We learn from Christ, that the heavenly graces are, all of them, compatible with the wear of an earthly body, and the CIRCUMSTANCES OF AN EARTHLY HABITATION. It is not said in how many of its features the new earth will differ from, or be like unto the present one; but we, by turning from our iniquities unto Christ, push forward the resemblance of the one to the other, in the only feature that is specified, even that "therein dwelleth righteousness."

And had we only the character of heaven, we should not be long of feeling what that is, which essentially makes the comfort of heaven. "Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest iniquity; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Let us but love the righteousness which He loves, and hate the iniquity which He hateth; and this, of itself, would so soften and attune the mechanism of our moral nature, than in all the movements of it, there should be joy. It is not sufficiently adverted to, that the happiness of heaven lies simply and essentially in the well-going machinery of a well-conditioned soul; and that according to its measure, it is the same in kind with the happiness of God, who liveth forever in bliss ineffable, because He is unchangeable in being good, and upright, and holy. There may be audible music in heaven, but its chief delight will be in well-poised affections, and of principles in full and consenting harmony with the laws of rectitude. There may be visions of loveliness there; but it will be the loveliness of virtue, as seen directly in God, and as reflected back again in family likeness from all His children; it will be this that shall give its purest and sweetest transports to the soul. In a word, the main reward of paradise, is spiritual joy—and that, springing at once from the love and the possession of spiritual excellence. It is such a joy as sin extinguishes on the moment of its entering the soul; and such a joy as is again restored to the soul, and that immediately on its being restored to righteousness.

Let us attend, then, to the way in which the services of the upper sanctuary are rendered; not in the spirit of legality, for this gendureth to bondage; but in the spirit of love, which gendureth to the beatitude of the affections rejoicing in their best and most favorite indulgence. They do not work there, for the purpose of making out the conditions of a bargain. They do act agreeably to the pleasure of God, in order to obtain the gratification of any distinct will or distinct pleasure of their own, in return for it. Their will is, in fact, identified with the will of God.

Let the will of God, then, be done here, as it is done there, and not only will character and conduct be the same here as there, but they will also resemble each other in the style, though not in the degree of their blessedness. The happiness of heaven will be exemplified upon earth, along with the virtue of heaven; for, in truth, the main ingredient of that happiness is not given them in payment for work; but it lies in the love they bear to the work itself. A man is never happier than when employed in that which he likes best. This is all a question of taste; but should such a taste be given as to make it a man's meat and drink to do the will of his Father, then is he in perfect readiness to be carried upward to heaven, and placed beside the pure river of the water of life, that proceedeth out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. This is the way in which to make a heaven upon earth, not by heaping your reluctant offers at the shrine of legality, but by serving God because you love him, and doing his will because you delight to do him honor.

And here we may remark, that the only possible conveyance for this new principle into the heart, is the Gospel of Jesus Christ; that in no other way than through the acceptance of its free pardon, sealed by the blood of an atonement, which exalts the Lawgiver, can the soul of man be both emancipated from the fear of terror, and solemnized into the fear of humble and holy reverence; that it is only in conjunction with the faith that justifies, that the love of gratitude, and the love of moral esteem, are made to rise in the bosom of regenerated man; and, therefore, to bring down the virtues of heaven, as well as the peace of heaven, into this lower world, we know not what else can be done than to urge upon you the great propitiation of the New Testament—nor are we aware of any expedient by which all the cold and freezing sensations of legality can be done away, but by your thankful and unconditional acceptance of Jesus Christ and him crucified.

The "Better Country."—Heb. 11: 16.

It will be a healthy country. One of the numberless miseries of all present countries, and which is fearfully dreaded, is sickness and contagious diseases; but there, in that better country, "the inhabitants shall not say I am sick,"—"there shall be no more pain." In this world, we see mortals hurrying in all directions to escape the withering foe, and gain the precious boon of health. They pant, they strive, freely yield their golden treasures, they quail eagerly of the celebrated fountains, breathe the mountain air, visit distant climes, but all in vain:—the terror fills their nights, the poisoned arrow flies by day—no perfect health is found; but in the new earth, the blooming inhabitants will fear not the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor the destruction that wasteth at noon-day;—no plague shall come near their dwelling.

It will be a safe country. On the 'high mountains of Israel, in their own land,' shall Jesus the good shepherd 'make his flock to lie down in a good fold and in safe habitations' shall they rest.—'They shall then 'dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods:'—God will have 'made the wild beasts to cease out of the land,' while those beasts which are found therein as in Eden, 'shall not hurt or harm in all God's holy mount; No false shepherd will oppress or scatter them—no thief will break through and steal:' that country will never be shaken by the ruinous earthquake. Its extended plains, overspread with Eden's variegated beauties, shall never wither under the hail-stone or whirlwind blast. The once fiery, sin-cursed element, which rolled its waves down the mountain's side, or broke in fury from the lowering skies, laid mighty cities desolate in smoky desolation, or pressed its raging front on earth's wide spread forests, will there be harmless: God will have changed the elements.—Through the fervent, melting heat of the last day, will He bring forth a safe habitation for his people.

It will be a peaceable country. No hostile foe shall invade our peaceful walks or scale the walls of our beloved Jerusalem. In that land shall be no 'confused noise of warriors, and garments rolled in blood,'—our glorious Conqueror will have made wars to cease unto the end of the earth, and will brake the bow and cut the spear in sunder, and burn the chariots in the fire.—'There the glorious Lord shall be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, wherein shall go no galley with oars, nor gallant ship pass thereby.'—'The 'Prince of peace' shall there reign universal, without an enemy to oppose. Soon, ah, very soon, will the proud monarchs of earth, and their bloody armies, have fought their last battle, and with all the former hating, lustful hosts of Satan, be marshaled to drink the cup of unmixed wrath, and fall before the Son of God! Then shall the song of 'peace on earth,' and glory in the highest, swell loud and long, by countless hosts of saints and angels; not in anticipation, but in the abundance of possession! for in the days of David's son 'shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace, so long as the moon endureth.'

No death shall be there! Now, earth is one vast sepulchre: death reigns throughout the land, from the palace of kings and the habitations of the rich, to the cottage of the poor, and hut of the beggar. His relentless hand is laid on enfeebled age, vigorous manhood, blooming youth, helpless infancy, the precious and the vile. The brightest of human prospects fade before him—the fairest flower that ever flushed on nature's stalk, wither in his grasp. The tenderest of earthly ties are rent asunder, as though there was none to dispute his claim. Nearly six thousand years has this ghastly foe been throwing captives into his benighted chambers. It was he that pierced the hearts of Israel's mothers and caused the cry 'of lamentation and weeping' to ascend for their slain innocents, 'refusing to be comforted, because their children were not.' He has filled the land with sighing widows, and left the fatherless and orphan to wander solitary, amid an unfriendly world. But O, thou record of life, thou everlasting covenant of Israel's God, what exceeding great and precious promises are unfolded by thee to the eye of faith, of that better country,—fair Eden restored! In her blissful bowers, by her chrysal river, and in all her vast extended plains, eternal life! eternal life! 'They,' says Jesus, 'who are accounted worthy to inherit that world, and the resurrection from the dead, can die no more, but are equal to the angels of God.' Godly parents will there meet their offspring who died in infancy, and both be called, 'the blessed of the Lord,' to 'die no more.'—From the 'land of the enemy,' death, will 'Rachael' receive her children all immortal, within the borders of the 'land of the living.' She will then be eternally comforted, and 'her work rewarded.' The 'appointed time' is come, and God remembers his promise to Abraham, and his oath to David. 'He remembers the land.' He whose right it is to reign, comes in power and great glory, descends from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ rise first; the living saints are 'changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,' to immortality, and with the resurrected, are caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. But not to sing, we shall reign in the air, no; but 'we shall reign on the earth!' When God 'makes all things new,'—cleanses his sanctuary by fire, cuts off the 'proud and all that do wickedly' out of the earth, 'gathers out of his kingdom all that offend, and them that do iniquity,'—'binds him which has the power of death,—that is, the devil;' then will the 'meek of the earth' come down with the Lord of life and glory, to 'inherit the land forever.'—O blessed day! O sweet song of victory for the once mourning children of the bride chamber!—the once pensive, broken hearted children of captivity! their day has at length dawned, the night of weeping is past, and behold life and endless joy has come; the long wished for moment of deliverance from corruption and death, and an eternal release from his cruel 'sting!' Well may the ransomed armies of heaven sing the song which never, till the last trumpet sounds, can be sung,—'O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?' Well may the bright multitudes shout 'again' and 'again,'—'Hallelujah!' 'worthy is the Lamb'

'The new heavens and new earth, will remain before him forever.' The 'kingdom shall have no end.' The 'inheritance of the meek, shall be forever.' There shall not be found the least trace of the curse. 'No tear shall fall, nor heart be sad.' No 'hunger' shall prey upon them:—'bread shall be given them, and their water shall be pure;' 'fountains of living waters, freely' may they drink. No sun shall smite them by day, nor heat oppress them. The gates of their blessed and heavenly Jerusalem shall be open continually by day: for there shall be no night there.'

The country will be beautiful. The 'place of God's feet will be made glorious.' 'Instead of the thorn, shall come up the fig-tree. Instead of the briar, the myrtle-tree, the pine and the box-tree, the olive and the cedar.' The country shall abound in the choicest fruits, and blessings in their season. 'Behold the day's come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes, him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and the hills shall melt.' And I will make them and the places round about my hill, a blessing; and I will cause the showers to come down in his season: there shall be showers of blessings.—'And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase.'

This blessed, heavenly country, is that for which we seek and sigh: that for which our fathers sought, and which God has sworn to create. And O, when we consider that we are so near to possessing it, never to be plucked out of it, shall we not rejoice! shall we not be humble, self-denying, willing to bear the reproof of Christ for a season? O my brethren, with this goodly land, by God's own word presented for our comfort in this dark wilderness, shall we repine or murmur, as some of them also murmured, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness! tempt Christ as some of them also tempted, on whom the dread judgments of the Most High were poured. God forbid. May our cheerful, obedient hearts say, we are well able to go up through the help of the Captain of God's host, and possess the goodly land.

ROCHESTER, OCTOBER 21, 1846.

To Patrons.

From the scanty remittances recently received, we have thought that perhaps some of our subscribers have overlooked the fact that we have entered upon another volume of our paper since their last remittance was made. We will again inform them that we have but recently commenced vol. XII, and of course it is time for payment to be made on that volume.

We earnestly solicit all who can do it without injury to themselves and families, to make payment on the present and past volumes of our paper for which they may be indebted. This request is just, and will be promptly heeded by all who are able to pay, and love the cause, not in word and tongue only, but in deed and truth.

THIS NUMBER contains a choice article from the celebrated Thomas Chalmers, on the New Earth: it will be found to be meat in due season. Bro. J. B. Cook's letter will also be read with deep interest by many. We are glad to receive this frank expression from his pen: it was due to the precious cause, which we rejoice to see is still dear to Bro. Cook.

THE MEXICAN WAR is still raging. The American forces are victorious. In a battle between the two armies, of three days continuance, it is reported that 300 Americans were killed! and 200 wounded! The number of Mexicans killed and wounded is not stated. The Mexican army capitulated, and surrendered the city of Monterey into the hands of the American forces. Oh, the sin that must be charged upon this Christian (?) nation for this human butchery! The day of retribution is at hand!

Thoughts on the Parables.

In our remarks on the Parable, last week, we had reached the parable of the marriage of the king's son, recorded in Matt. 22: 1-14, which we quote in full.

"And Jesus answered and spake unto them again by parables, and said, The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, who made a marriage for his son, and sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come. Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them who are bidden, Behold! I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come to the marriage. But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise: and the remnant took his servants and treated them spitefully, and slew them. But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city. Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they who were bidden were not worthy. Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage. So those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furnished with guests. And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man who had not on a wedding garment: and he saith unto him, Friend, how earnest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen."

What is the true design of this parable? The context must give the answer, or it cannot be given with any certainty from any other authority. If the Bible does not explain its parables, then they are inexplicable. We believe it explains them. That the one under consideration relates to a doctrine previously stated, is evident from the fact that it commences thus,—'And Jesus answered and spake unto them again in parables.' He had uttered the parable of the vineyard, and explained its meaning so clearly, in the preceding chapter, that the 'chief priests and Pharisees perceived that he spake of them;' and in their malice 'sought to lay hands on him.' Under these circumstances, Christ 'answered them' in the language of the parable under consideration.

The doctrine previously stated, which this parable was designed to illustrate, is contained in vs. 42-44, of the previous chapter. They read,

"Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the Scriptures, The Stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes?—Therefore I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall on this Stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

The Stone becoming the 'head of the corner,' and its breaking in pieces and grinding to powder, is clearly proved by other portions of scripture, to relate to the final triumph of Christ and his kingdom, and the utter destruction of all his enemies, the Jew not excepted. So the chief priests and Pharisees understood it, as before stated. The ultimate design, then, of this parable was to bear upon this important point, viz; the final doom of all, Jew and Greek, who reject Christ, when 'the Stone which the builders rejected' is become 'the head of the corner,' when Christ shall appear in his glory.—Then, as the guests, at a literal wedding of a king's son, who have not on the wedding-garment, are cast into 'outer darkness,' dishonored, turned out of doors, so, in like manner, when Christ comes to be united to his saints forever in his glorious kingdom, all who are unprepared to meet him in peace, will be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power.' The Stone will then fall on them, and grind them to powder, destroy them.

There are other subordinate points in this parable. One is clearly seen in verse 7th, and doubtless relates to the destruction of the Jews as a nation, by the Romans, in consequence of their rejection of Christ. Another point is seen in verse 9th, and evidently refers to the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, after its final rejection by the Jews. But the ultimate design of the parable evidently was, as before said, to show the fearful doom of the wicked at the appearing of Christ: for it is added at the close of the parable, 'For many are called, but few are chosen.'

The other parable which called forth these remarks we will try to notice in our next.

Meeting at Scottsville.

This meeting was one of unusual interest. In company with Bro. E. R. Pinney, we reached the place in time to attend service on Saturday morning. Bro. Bywater had arrived and commenced the meeting the day previous. A goodly number of brethren from different places also assembled before and during the day of our arrival. And such was their love and zeal for the good cause, that the time designed for preaching, Saturday afternoon, was nearly all occupied by them in prayer and exhortation. It was a joyful hour to those present, who were looking for immediate redemption.

Though it was a time of rejoicing on account of the present blessings our heavenly Father bestowed on us, and future glorious prospects; yet it was deeply painful to contemplate the deplorable condition of the surrounding community. With scarcely an exception, professors of the different churches, and the thoughtless sinner, were alike uninterested in our blessed hope and most precious faith. We judge thus from the fact that they did not attend our meetings, excepting a very few, evenings and on the Sabbath. They have, to all human appearance, rejected the Bible truths we believe and advocate, relative to the appearing of Christ, and his glorious and everlasting reign or the earth.

We are astonished beyond measure at the manner the sects treat this subject. In the first place it is universally admitted by themselves that they are cold, corrupt and dead in things of pure godliness. Family devotion is observed by but a very few of their members, and in some of the largest churches it is with much difficulty that a stated prayer-meeting is kept up. In a word, the blessing of God is not upon them, as a body. This they see, feel, and acknowledge. They also, in many instances, have acknowledged (and we know not that any one has ever said to the contrary) that we, though, as they think, deceived in doctrine, have nevertheless good, spiritual, old-fashioned, lively and heavenly meetings. What does this argue? We answer, not boastingly but with humility and self-abasement, that it proves that God is with us, and not with the opposing sects. O that they would see the force of their own admission, humble themselves at the feet of the Lord, receive, love and obey his truth, and be happy in his favor. These things should also greatly humble us before the Lord, and serve to strengthen our faith in the correctness of the position we occupy. For if God be for us, or his blessings rest upon us, we most certainly are pleasing him, and therefore have nothing to fear from any who may be against us.

The Sabbath was a day of deep interest. Not only on account of the feast of love we enjoyed while celebrating the supper of the Lord, and the cheering exhortations and songs of heavenly praise of the saints, at suitable times during the day, but on account of the precious truth presented, especially by Bro. Pinney, Sabbath afternoon. We will here state that though the health of Bro. Pinney is much improved, yet he is unable to stand while preaching, on account of an affection of the back. He however speaks with apparent ease while seated in a chair. His discourse on this occasion was, as near as we can now recollect,

1. A brief statement of the difference between us and the sects on sundry fundamental doctrines of the Bible. He very justly stated that our difference on time was a mere unimportant circumstance. There are other points on which we widely differ, of much higher magnitude than the definite time of the Lord's coming. And in fact, with the leading influences of the sects, we are agreed on the time; not of the advent of Christ, but of some important predicted event, to be witnessed at about this time.—Dr. Beecher, Mr. Dowling and others, now use the same evidences to prove the time has come when we should look for the ushering in of their fancied millennium, that we use to prove that the coming of the Lord is at the door. Our difference lies not in the time, but in the event expected. If they are right in looking for the immediate conversion of this wicked world, (and daily increasing in wickedness) why, all we shall have to do will be, to give up our errors, share in the glorious change in common with the great mass, and rejoice in the unexpected yet glorious work wrought. In short, if they are correct, we shall have nothing to lose. But if they are mistaken, and instead of this world, steeped as it is in crime, being made holy, it is soon to be dashed in pieces as a potter's vessel, smitten, and ground to powder, or destroyed, as the Scriptures abundantly affirm, then our gain, if ready to meet the Lord, will be great, while the disappointment, if not the loss, of those of opposite views must be incalculably great.

2. He showed what the world lost by the sin of our first parents, viz; a right to the tree of life—to the Paradise of God, and consequently personal communion with Him. The earth was cursed for man's sake—he lost dominion over the world, and became subject to all the dangers and ills of this life, and finally death itself. He then showed that all and more than man lost by the fall of the first Adam would be restored by the second; and that this 'restoration of all things, spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began,' would soon be witnessed.

We think Bro. Pinney could not at this time subserve the cause better than to furnish the substance of his discourse for publication. We hope his health will admit of his doing it soon.

Finally, the meeting at Scottsville, like other similar ones which we have recently attended, furnished very conclusive evidence that this precious cause yet lives in the hearts of its advocates; and is destined to live until He who is its glory and ultimate hope shall come and justify it, and those who love his appearing.

Fly swifter round ye wheels of time,
And bring that welcome day.

"Shakers and Adventists."

This is the caption of an article in a recent number of the 'Christian Herald,' by a prominent correspondent of that paper. After showing that Mr. Jacobs, Peavy and some others, have run into Shakerism, the writer thus concludes his remarks:—"Thus from the embers of Millerism arises this new 'Day Star' for Mother Ann. Shakers are delighted." They are no more 'delighted' at their gain than this writer appears to be in the fall of a few unfortunate brothers!

The object of the writer evidently is to make 'Millerism,' as he calls it, but properly the doctrine of the second advent, responsible for the delusions of these misguided brethren. Has this writer and the conductors of the Christian Herald forgotten the history of their own favorite denomination—the Christians? If they have, we have not. And we ask them, if 'Millerism' is responsible for the delusions of Mr. Jacobs and others, what 'ism is responsible for the licentious doctrines and practices of Farnumism and Cochranism, which sprung up among them in their early history? Will they tell us?—Such kind of charges against us as a people, come with quite an ill grace from the Christians. And indeed the same may be said of every other sect in existence; as their histories fully show. They have all been troubled with fanatics; and even the pure cause of Christ and the Apostles had to suffer reproach on account of the treachery of Judas, the errors of 'Hymeneus and Philetus,' and the licentiousness of the Nicolaitanes. Would the Christian Herald say, or suffer its correspondents to say, that these delusions had arisen 'from the embers of' the doctrine of Christ and the Apostles! It would be justified in doing this, if it has justly charged the doctrine of the advent with being the cause of the delusions which have sprung up among us. We truly pity any body who will resort to such means to put down any cause: it betrays either ignorance or dishonesty.

Thanking the Most High by Resolution.—We place below the following resolution, adopted by the passengers, on board the Great Western, after the storm had abated. The idea of thanking God by proxy, in this manner, and deputing a Committee to draft the resolve, is certainly novel. The clause, including the 'Captain, officers, and crew,' in the same vote of thanks, is not the least curious part of the affair:—

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to draft a resolution expressive of our gratitude to Almighty God for his great goodness in our almost miraculous deliverance from destruction; and also to the Captain, officers, and crew of the ship, for their arduous labors, and their skill, firmness, and perseverance, in carrying the ship through her late perilous condition.

The serious reader will probably be still further astonished to learn that this was actually carried out, and that the Lord received a vote of thanks for his exceeding kindness and providential care in the same manner that captains of packet ships are frequently complimented at the close of dangerous and protracted voyages.—N. Y. Globe.

And we will add, that the understanding, 'serious reader will probably be still further astonished to learn' that such men as 'Rev. Mr. Marsh,' 'Rev. Dr. Smucker,' 'Rev. Dr. Balch,' and 'Rev. Dr. Beecher,' took a very active part, if not the entire lead, in this work of solemn mockery, and dishonoring God: for all must readily see that it is greatly lowering the Omnipotence of the Almighty to associate his high and holy name in a vote of thanks with the names of the 'Captain, officers, and crew' of a steam ship.

Letter from Bro. J. B. Cook.

Bro. Marsh:—At your suggestion, enforced as it was by the supposed fact, that my influence had led the Day Star and its editor, E. Jacobs, I write. It is proper in such a case, to disabuse the minds of brethren, so far as facts may do it.

Duty demands me to say, first of all, that I was not conscious of being subject to such an imputation. No, no. My conviction has been, and still is, that the editor of the Day Star has pursued a course as peculiarly his own, as other advent editors have done, and that consequently, I am no more responsible for the one, than the other. This is a reason why nothing has been said by me. I have felt no accountability in the case, except to confess Christ and his truth, whenever called on to speak or write at all. This was done when I wrote in the Day Star relative to "the shut door." That it was not the door of mercy, but the existing state of things, induced by the preaching of the advent,—the rejection of God's truth in the case, and the concurring providence of God, the facts exist. Relative to Christ's having come, I have spoken most definitely. His distinctive existence had become more real to my conceptions by converse with unbelievers: and his coming I have declared to be as certain as his distinctive existence. Surely no more need be said.

Then, in relation to any personal influence exerted to lead the paper into spiritualism, let me say, that I had not seen the editor for about four months prior to the Cleveland conference, up to which time, he was decidedly opposed to it. We have not met since. A private letter I wrote him, advising him not to attend that conference. I urged that no good would be done. Those views had appeared dangerous, and I was, at that time, in my humble sphere, endeavoring to counteract them. My letters then published, attest this. It is true, that funds were frequently forwarded by me to the paper. God had given me most precious truth, relative to those great themes then canvassed; also on the doctrines of Providence, and Divine guidance. For the publication of these, it was my privilege to pay. This is a matter of principle with me. I love to do it, so far as my most blessed Master shall give me means. But when my humble testimony lost its effect in that paper, and the editor rushed on still farther, losing himself in the delusive folds of the garments of the impious Ann Lee, my connection with it ceased.

Ann Lee the mother of Mount Zion! the Bride, the Lamb's wife!! Abraham "looked for a city that had foundations, whose builder and maker is God." The Jerusalem above, is the mother of apostles, and all the brethren, believers—"the children of promise." Did Paul refer to Ann Lee? Did Abraham look for Ann Lee? Did the apostle John in holy vision, see the Shaker settlements come down from God out of heaven? Why she might, with as much reason and less impiety, assume to be the mother of the moon! The idea is as monstrous as it is impious. It is on the principle that S. S. Snow assumes to be "the prophet," in the place of Christ. My frequent letters before that were designed to furnish all the food possible to the flock of our good Shepherd. The motive and the effort, are known to him, whose eye is on us all. As to my conduct and conversation toward those who have been overcome by the adversary, and led away, it has been prompted by Christian compassion. A feeling of sadness has pervaded my heart, in contemplating "the shipwreck of faith," which many made. The Spirit seemed to whisper, "consider thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Now, if these facts are needed to disabuse any minds on this subject, they are freely furnished: but hitherto having felt "clear in this matter," it has been left with an overruling Providence. We must, every one of us, give account of himself to God, therefore, I have not called that paper or its proprietor, to my bar, nor do I now. My connection therewith, gives me no such right. I only, in my humble sphere, testify when called on. He who judgeth us all, is the Lord.

Seeing the Scriptures cannot be broken, we find that "many spirits have gone out into the world." If one of these, assuming to be the true "spirit of the advent," flaps or falls in the way, wants lifting up when down, or goading on when going, I go on without it. If another darts off, first in a straight line, as did the Day Star, then rushes for its life, round and round, bringing up with a dance and "the roll," (as if under a touch of turpentine) I neither follow, or watch its evolutions. Each spirit will have its day, each will run its race. We need neither fret at, nor follow them. If God let them live to deceive and destroy, it is from some dreadful necessity, that we may not see; but he will not hold those responsible who adhere to the truth of Holy Scripture, and "keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

If any need my further testimony relative to the doctrines of the Day Star, for about 8 months, let me add, they are subversive of all Bible truth. The second advent must become as much a matter of fact as was the first, else both promise and prophecy will fail. The terms which record the first, are no more plain or positive, than those which predict the second. To doubt the latter, is to act on the infidel principle, which doubts the former. The marriage institution, which God calls "honorable in all," is by that paper, made dishonorable and polluting in all. The spirit which thus dares give the lie to Jehovah, must be one of the predicted "seducing spirits" of the last days—Their victims are those who "depart from the faith:" of course they must have been in it,— "speaking lies in hypocrisy, and forbidding to marry."

It has been a time of distraction and recrimination, the effects of which I have not dared, intentionally, to promote by any act or word, not deemed really necessary to sustain the faith of believers: hence, I have been so far silent. Then as to public self vindication, it has seemed to me sinful, at such a crisis. Blame was cast on me, but I left it with Him whose I am, and who has been infinitely more dishonored, than any poor mortal can be.

Let me in closing, add, that the principle which made me a Christiana, viz: a conviction of the truth relative to God and our Savior—the principle which led me into the baptismal waters, was the principle which led me into the doctrine of the advent. It is on the inspired page plainly and positively stated, just as I believe it. To this principle I adhere with more tenacity, than to my natural life. It is true, that we are all liable to mistake in our inferences from the positive statements of Scripture; but still, let me say, "sink or swim, live or die," I will, by God's grace, act on this principle of doing right—believing and doing the Divine will, as found in the Bible.—This blessed book is the standard of right, the fountain of truth in our world, and the rule of duty; to contravene the Bible, is to assail its author. Jehovah has "magnified his word, above all his name." The pillars of his throne will sooner fall, than a "jot or tittle" of it fail. He will speedily, gloriously vindicate the advent doctrine, with its proclamation, by the judgment now just impending. "Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus!"

My rule relative to truth, is this. It is not my feelings or experience that constitutes truth.—God's word is truth. Then my view of a doctrine or duty can be expressed most naturally and powerfully in the language of the Bible, given by the Holy Spirit to convey the Divine mind, on that particular subject,—if on comparing scripture with scripture, I find the view which harmonizes all beautifully, perfectly, divinely;—if I can expatiate with holy pleasure in the harmonies between prophecy and history, precepts and facts, things lost by "the fall," and things to be restored in the promised restitution;—if I may revel at will amid the heavenly visions of things present and things to come,—if my soul flows spontaneously, and at times joyfully, in the channels of thought and feeling, prayer and praise, opened up in Holy Scripture, and if I find myself 'helped' in expressing my most devout reverence for God, and his Christ, and salvation, (in the words which the Holy Ghost useth) then I may conclude that I am "in the way:" then the truth has made me free, and I am "free indeed" to hold fellowship with prophets and apostles, whose fellowship was with the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ. It is no small privilege to attain this Divine freedom in the truth, as it is in Jesus; such a soul, whoever he be, is like 'Mount Zion, which cannot be moved,' except as it moves forward, by a still further view, of the opening glory of God's great plan of providence and grace.

That this is the general character of the views entertained by me, I can most solemnly appeal to our coming Judge. Before Him, my whole being dissolves into humble, heartfelt gratitude, for being permitted to believe and obey His word so far. Glory to His holy name forever!

Please excuse my lengthy article: I could not be short in my circumstances. Where misunderstandings exist among brethren, I feel that God has made me neither 'judge' nor 'divider,' therefore it is best to let them alone: or if compelled to hear them, to forget as soon as possible. It is my habit to labor wherever a door is open. The little character I once had, seemed all gone some time since. I never expect forgiveness for having announced, so solemnly and sincerely, and soon, the judgment of God on this world. Reputation, distinct from God and his truth, seems too worthless to be looked after, or even picked up if it came in my way. God helping me, I will never make peace with the unbelieving and idolatrous rejectors of our coming King, except it be by their reception of the truth; the judgment is just opening, whoever may be unprepared for it. Jesus is coming, whatever may be thought of those who have announced it. It will, I believe, be honor enough for us poor mortals in the great day, to have had part in '43, "in the 10th day," and in all those predicted events, which God has so ordered as to set a snare for this doomed generation. It was a great thing to believe, "in the days of Noah." It has ever been a bold thing, to believe. Let us brethren, one and all, who are holding fast "the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end," take heed to yourselves.—Such faith condemns the world, thus God intends. Such faith will still triumph, and make us through Jesus, more than conquerors! Amen.

Yours waiting and groaning for redemption,
J. B. Cook.

Lockport, Oct. 10, '46.

Letter from Bro. L. Dudley.

Bro. Marsh:—The Lord is with us still in this section. The advent cause is rising in the field where I am laboring, in Caldwell's Manor, and Stanbridge, C. E. We have had a number of two days meetings. On Saturday and Sabbath, the 22d and 23d of August, we had a great gathering of people: the good Lord was with us of a truth—he owned and blessed his children in a glorious manner. The brethren thought it was equal to any thing connected with the 10th day movement. On Monday evening, nine persons came forward for prayer, and five were converted and reclaimed, in the course of the week.

The brethren and sisters have been greatly revived and blessed; to God be all the glory forever. Publish the above, as there a number of brethren scattered abroad that would be glad to know where I am, and what I am about. I would say to all, that I am looking for the redemption of Israel this year. Yes, glory to God, I expect the saints will soon be delivered from a world of sorrow, and sin, and reign with Christ on the renovated earth.

This, from your unworthy brother looking for speedy redemption,
Perry's Mills, Sept. 1, 1846.

Letter from Bro. H. Pratt.

Bro. Marsh:—The more I read and hear on the subject of the resurrection, the more I am confirmed that the dead in Christ shall rise first; not simply before we are changed; then it would have read, the dead shall rise, then we shall be changed, but emphatically the dead in Christ, implying that the rest of the dead will not then live as the Revelator says; now for the consolation—'the dead in Christ,' O glory hallelujah! are just about to come up. Brn. Fitch and Barry, are soon to understand and realize the force of these words—"the dead in Christ shall rise first." Yea, and Sisters Fitch and Barry, and most of the dear pilgrims, feel this comforting promise, while their loneliness apprises them that their beloved ones have been torn from them by that monster, death. Yes, and while bowing by pale moonlight in prayer over the grave of a dear little sister, who exclaimed in her dying moments, "I love you all, but I love Jesus more;" it was a cordial to my soul, as the tombs re-echoed back the sound, "the dead in Christ shall rise first." Glory be to God! "I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues, O grave, I will be thy destruction."—Hosea 13: 14. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed, is death."—1 Cor. 15: 26. Then the Revelator has it just right:—"There shall be no more death there."

I attended the Camp-meeting at Enfield, and a more comforting season to the children I never witnessed. The questions of Bro. Jacobs in the Bible class, and the presence of a large number of Shakers on the ground, (with their tent) brought forth in almost every discourse emphatically, the glorious, literal, and personal appearing of 'this same Jesus,' just to be realised. Bro. Kent spoke at length, on the time in Daniel, much to the confirmation of the brethren. It was his last work: he has fallen asleep. 'Help Lord, for the godly man ceaseth.'—Psa. 12: 1. Bro. Cole showed our hope from 1 Thess. 1: 10. 'And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.' Most of the teachers came in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

When we toil day and night, and deprive ourselves of every thing but the bare necessities of life, in order to help the teachers and papers, feeling that every cent is to be accounted for in that day, then see some of them dressed in the fashions of the world, we sigh, we mourn; but when we see them willing to bear part with us in denying ourselves of all worldly-mindedness, we greatly rejoice, and feel willing to double the sacrifice in their behalf. Again, we met the children of the little flock at Brimfield, Sept. 3—and here again God showed forth his power to save. Brn. Cole, Turner, and Matherson, spoke to us from the word of life, with great plainness and earnestness, showing from the Word, that in all probability, this fall is the set time to favor Zion. Even so Lord Jesus, Amen.

Yours in hope,

H. PRATT.

Wales, Sept. 12, 1846.

Letter from Bro. Sherwin.

Bro. Marsh:—The subject of the coming of the kingdom of God, is one full of interest, full of glory. Around its establishment, clusters all the dearest, the fondest hopes of the Christian;—insomuch that the glorious period has been looked for with the deepest anxiety, by the people of God in all ages. 'The kingdom was promised to Isaiah, claimed by Peter, seen by the Revelator, and is soon to be possessed by all the redeemed, the glorified saints, who have made it a subject of 'diligent search.' The period of its establishment has been held in admiration by patriarchs, prophets, apostles, and martyrs; by them it was looked for, prayed for, and earnestly desired;—but they died without the sight—they did not receive the fulfilment of the promises; the kingdom is still future, yet to come, to be set up at the fall of the fourth universal monarchy, which is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. The light upon the time to set up the kingdom, seems to have been reserved more particularly for the 'time of the end,'—the age in which we live.

How interesting to live in a day which is to witness the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior, Jesus Christ—to witness the accomplishment of all the blessed and soul-cheering promises to the righteous, of glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life. According to the testimony of the prophets, and signs not to be mistaken, these things are at the door; according to the testimony of the Book of God, the end of all things is at hand: the abominations of earth, betoken the speedy coming of the day of God.

We are full in the faith, that this world's wickedness and wrongs are about to close up—that the day is at hand when all these things shall be dissolved; and therefore, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness. O ye sons of sloth and slumber, awake, awake! before you are confounded by the last trump—before the burning day to sinners overtake you, and ye are made fuel for the fire: for "behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts." Wherefore, beloved brethren, seeing we look for such things, let us be diligent, always abounding in the work of the Lord; let us live watchful, live prayerful, live humble, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless.

Yours in the blessed hope,

A. SHERWIN.

Drewsville, N. Y., Sept. 7, 1846.

Bro. J. M. Judson. Sandusky, O., Sept. 12th, writes:—We have recently moved from Olmsted to this place, and find ourselves alone, with not a soul to sympathise with us in the glorious truth of the near approach of "Him, whose right it is to reign,"—yet there are a few who once believed Him to be near, but now—cannot see the propriety of advocating this part of Divine revelation. The Lord grant that they may be speedily aroused from their lethargic situation. Under such circumstances, you may readily conceive the joy and consolation we receive from that weekly messenger, the "Voice of Truth and Glad Tidings." Oh, the benevolence of that God, with whom we have to do. A reasonable degree of health, food sufficient, clothing enough, (though not near as much as our neighbors,)—the Voice of Truth, my Bible, and my Savior.—O that we may more duly appreciate these blessings, sink into the dust, and walk softly before our God. My soul feels to bless his holy name, and pour forth all its energies in this blessed cause. I am firm in the belief that that same Jesus will soon appear, to take his ransomed ones home.—The moral world, and prophetic periods, combined, hold this blessed truth so vividly before the mind, that I should do violence to my own convictions and the word of God, if I should, for a moment, doubt it. And how can any doubt it? and yet they do.

I have the privilege granted me, of occupying the Wesleyan house in this place, the 2d Sabbath in the month, for the present. O, for grace to occupy it to Divine acceptance. I only regret that a more able advocate cannot improve the time, yet I will not complain that I have but the one talent, but humbly implore divine assistance to improve it to the honor and glory of God, and to his name be all the praise.

An instance rarely occurs, like one which happened in Olmsted recently. A good brother, who, last winter, openly contended with Bro. E. Miller, against the truth of Christ's personal reign on the earth, &c., is now a firm believer, not only in his personal reign, but in his soon, very soon filling the whole earth with his glory, and reigning King of nations, as he does now, King of saints.

Letter from Bro. R. T. Haskins.

Bro. Marsh:—I have the blessed privilege of going to and fro in the land covered with sin and death, warning all men, every where, to repent: but sad indeed to say, almost all that I meet with, both in and out of the nominal church, treat the views I advocate, with the utmost ridicule and contempt. While dwelling mostly on the signs, which indicate that glorious day when Jesus shall be revealed, and trying to persuade poor sinners to prepare for that event, I am assailed on every hand, and the reputed ministers of Christ, and church members especially, charge me with being a false teacher, &c. Well, I praise the Lord that he does thus far enable me to pity and pray for such people that oppose themselves against the truth—surely, I am very happy in the Lord, when they say all manner of evil falsely.

I called on a Congregationalist minister the other day, by request of some of his people, desiring of him the privilege of holding a meeting at the house where he preaches, but he told me he did not want any such humming among his people, and that if they should grant me leave to preach, he would ask a dismissal from the society at once. O, what an awful account such men will have to give. I believe with all my heart, that such corrupt churches have fallen to rise no more, and that all the good I can do in the name of the Lord, is to try and save some out from under this heap of rubbish, before the vials of God's wrath shall be poured out upon this world, which is being rocked into a profound sleep, only to be aroused by the last trump. Whoever doubts this, in view of the overwhelming evidence we have from the sure word of God, must be in a sad condition indeed. But few will be found ready, when our dear Lord shall appear in power and great glory.

Through the goodness of God, my labor has not been lost in this part of the land, for some few souls have been aroused to see their danger, and I trust they will continue to the end. I do exhort my dear brethren every where, to increased watchfulness, to see if, after all their belief in the Lord's coming, there may not be some idol in the heart. Let us try ourselves by the blessed word, and find out by close teaching, whether we have been enabled to get complete victory over every selfish propensity. I fear there are many among us who profess to be looking for Jesus, who have not arrived to that perfection to love our neighbor as ourselves. May the Lord help us to grow in grace till our dear Savior shall appear.

R. T. HASKINS.

Pownal, Sept. 10, 1846.

Bro. F. A. Wildman, Clarksfield, O., Sept. 11, writes:—There is a little band of advent believers in this place, who meet weekly for exhortation and prayer, 'looking for and hastening unto the coming of the Lord.' We have not been rent by the dissensions and spiritualism, which have so sadly torn and divided the dear brethren in other places. We have no preaching of the Word, except what we receive through the Herald and Voice.

If length of days be thy portion, make it not thy expectation. Reckon not upon long life; think every day the last, and live always beyond thy account.

OBITUARY.

Bro. Marsh:—I address you at this time, at the request of the widow and relatives of our beloved brother, John H. Kent, who fell as a faithful watchman on the walls of Zion, the 3d inst., aged 23 years and 10 months, after a severe, though short illness, (the sinking typhus fever,) to sleep in Jesus a little season, till the glorious morning of the resurrection of the just.

Middletown Conn., Sept. 29. J. F. H.

The following sayings of Bro. Kent, on his sick and dying bed, will be interesting to many:—

His sickness commenced Wednesday, August 26th, 1846, though his health suffered considerably for some time previous, in consequence of excessive labor in preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, which was the delight of his soul.

On the above mentioned day, August 26th, he appeared to have had some presentiment of his approaching dissolution; wherefore he wished to make, and did make, some statements to his wife, bearing upon the subject of the Lord's laying him aside from his work for a little while, which he repeatedly said, he could with cheerfulness yield to, if it was his master's will; though he should like to labor a little longer in the vineyard of the Lord.

At other times, he said he was glad he had preached the coming of Christ as near, as he could bring it from the word of God; and he believed it still with all his soul, that the Savior was very nigh, and would soon come. He would be glad to live until Christ's appearing, but it seemed as if the Lord would let him sleep a little while before the resurrection morn, when he hoped, through grace, to rise with all the saints of God.

He was willing to meet his preaching at the Judgment, especially his labors at the recent Camp-meeting at Enfield, and Guilford—(where he appeared to have enjoyed an unusual measure of the unction of God's blessed Spirit) though he felt deeply that he had been but an unprofitable servant—(and who of all the saints of God will not have to make a like confession?)

When asked, whether he felt the Savior present and precious to his soul, he very readily replied with a smile, 'Oh yes, very precious;' and then expatiated somewhat on the amazing goodness and wonderful love of God, as manifested in the plan of redemption, and prayed that himself and others might duly appreciate it.

His fever soon ran very light, and continued thus, causing his mind to wander frequently on various subjects, though the gestures of his hands, and the expressions of his lips, very often exhibited him in the attitude of preaching; and thus proved that he desired still with his latest breath, to proclaim a dying, risen, and coming Savior, in whom were centered all his hopes of a glorious resurrection and a blissful immortality, and whom he felt constrained by love divine, to press upon the acceptance of all, who would come and partake of the waters of life.

He suffered much during his sickness, but bore it with great patience and submission to his heavenly Father's will, believing, as he said, that our present afflictions are but light, and for a moment, and work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!

Singing the praises of God, like preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, was the delight of his soul, living and dying—he broke out several times, in attempts to hymn some songs of Zion, though unable through extreme weakness, to complete it.

At one time he sang most sweetly:

"We shall all rise together in the morning."

Showing that the glories of the resurrection morn, as connected with the appearing of our blessed Savior, filled his heart, while they inspired his tongue.

And though, in consequence of the nature of his sickness, as has been before alluded to, he was often wandering, and could not collect the thoughts of his mind, he would on such occasions remark, 'that though his mind was not clear, nothing could destroy in him that blessed hope!'

On Monday night, (Aug. 34,) he seemed to revive considerably—was quite sensible, and apparently recovering strength—and when about 1 o'clock in the night, his father, mother, and sister came, he was very anxious and glad to see them—and talked for a short time freely with them—saying to his father, who had scarcely expected to find him alive, that he had himself thought he should be called to sleep in Jesus a little while, though now he intimated that he might yet recover, as indeed his symptoms appeared much more favorable than before. Yet he did not fail again to express his submission to whatever might be the will of the Lord.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, (Sept. 1 and 2,) he appeared to grow worse, and there was less apparent ground for hope of his recovery; but in his lucid moments, he ceased not to give evidence of his continued sense of God's favor and acceptance.

At one time he said, 'O Lord have mercy on the people:' showing his deep and sincere sympathy, and his earnest desire for the salvation of souls—while at another time he sang with a voice almost unearthly and heavenly, a whole verse with the chorus:

"O glory! O glory!

There's room enough in paradise,

For all a home, in glory!"

His mind was evidently most of the time pondering upon the plan of redemption, and its glorious completion at the resurrection of the just, to which he looked forward with peculiar interest and exceeding joy. Said he in reference to it—'The resurrection looks glorious to me, and I want to have a resurrection,' implying it would be sweet to rest a little while in Jesus, and then to enjoy the promised pre-eminence of the sleeping saints, over the living believers at the coming of Christ, in being raised first, or prior to the glorious change of the latter.

But again: when he looked at his dear companion, and their lovely babe, both of whom he most tenderly loved, he would fain for their sakes be preserved until the Lord's appearing, if it might be consistent with the will of his heavenly Father—and when he thought how little he had done comparatively, for the cause of God, and as an instrument in the salvation of souls, (though he had been abundant in labors, and blessed under God in his ministrations, as the churches and communities where he broke the bread of life, will testify, and as the day of God will disclose by the stars in the crown of his rejoicing, given to him as seals to his ministry)—when he thought, I say, how little, comparatively, he had done for the cause of God, and how much remained yet to be done, to pluck sinners as brands from the burning, and to make a people ready for the Lord, instrumentally, he groaned and prayed that he might yet be spared, if it were God's good pleasure, to labor more in his blessed cause and service.

Though, as before remarked, he was abundant in labors, and at times he enjoyed much of the special presence of God, and of the gracious influence of His Spirit accompanying the word of his ministry, yet he felt deeply humbled under a sense of his imperfections, and would magnify and adore the grace and mercy of God in Christ Jesus, as his only trust for salvation complete, glorious and eternal, in the day of the Lord.

On Thursday, (Sept. 3,) he was all day evidently dying, and spoke but once, pronouncing the name of 'his dear Mary Ann,' (for whom he ever manifested a most tender solicitude) after which his speech failed him,—and he continued thus till between six and seven o'clock in the evening, when, without a groan or struggle, he ceased at once to live and labor, falling sweetly asleep in Jesus, to rest a little while, till the mighty trump of God on the glorious resurrection day shall call him forth from his dusty bed, to 'rise together in the morning' with all the sleeping saints.

Thus, a good man—another watchman on the walls of Zion, has fallen—but he has fallen in a glorious warfare—soon to rise again, glorious and immortal, having fought the good fight, kept the faith, and finished his course, he is now awaiting that crown of righteousness, which the Lord our righteous Judge will give him in that day, and not to him only, but to all them also that love his appearing.

'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth, you saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.'

Advices from Nauvoo give accounts of great distress among the poorer classes of the Mormons, who still linger about the deserted city.

Bro. L. E. Bates brings cheering intelligence of the state of the cause at Copenhagen, where he labors. He preached to good acceptance in our Hall Sabbath before last. A good state of things exist among the brethren here.

THE TRUMP OF JUBILEE.—Will Bro. Marsh say to those concerned that I am unable to supply any more orders for the Trump of Jubilee, having orders now on hand for 10 or 1200 more than I can supply. Those indebted for this sheet will confer a favor by forwarding the amount as soon as possible. E. R. PINKNEY. Seneca Falls, Oct. 9th.

ed be God, know the preciousness of the one before us, and are not, consequently, surprised to see Satan's peculiar spite against it. They observe how it has been made odious by the turbulent Anabaptists of former days, and how it has been cherished by unscriptural sects of our own. But this does not surprise them, for they are not ignorant of "the depths of Satan." The light which they possess on these subjects they cherish; by it they endeavor to walk more closely with their God, and they earnestly seek for more. May all who read this know the blessed power it exercises over the soul. May those who, like the writer in years gone by, are prejudiced against this heavenly doctrine, be led seriously to inquire into it. And, in the inquiry, may the same blessing which, through these things, has rested on his heart, be by the power of the Spirit, made to light on theirs. That which he has found to himself to be, as it were, a second regeneration, he cannot but recommend, and earnestly press on others. Knowing the effective working, and practical bearing of this blessed doctrine, he cannot but commend it to his fellow-Christians. This, with earnest prayer for a blessing, he now does, concluding in the words of the learned and pious Joseph Mede—"I give thanks to Almighty God, who hath made the light of these his wonderful mysteries to kindle that warmth in my heart, which I felt not till I began to see them, and which have made me that which they found me not."

Bro. Marsh:—I send you the following extract, which Thomas C. Upham introduces in his work on the "Interior of Hidden Life." He states that it "is copied from a tract published in Boston in 1810, entitled, 'The Life of Faith'—being an answer to the question, 'how to live in this world, so as to live in heaven.'" Let 'Martha' and 'Thomas' read it, and cease from anxious care and cruel unbelief, remembering—'Now the just shall live by faith,' and 'without faith it is impossible to please God.' B. M.

POMFRET, Sept. 20th, 1846.

Hidden Life.

"I will tell you familiarly what God hath done for my soul, and in what train my soul keeps towards himself. I am come to a conclusion to look after no great matters in the world, but to know Christ, and him crucified. I make best way in a low gale. A high spirit and a high sail together will be dangerous, and therefore I prepare to live low. I desire not much and pray against it. My study is my calling; so much as tends that way (without distraction) I am bound to plead for, and more I desire not. By my secluded retirement I have the advantage to observe how every day's occasions insensibly wear off the heart from God, and bury it in self, which they who live in care and cumbers cannot be sensible of. I have seemed to see a need of every thing God gives me, and want nothing he denies me. There is no dispensation, though afflictive, but either in it, or after it, I find that I could not be without it. Whether it be taken from or not given to me, sooner or later God quiets me in himself without it. I cast all my concerns on the Lord, and live securely on the care and wisdom of my Heavenly Father. My ways, you know, are, in a sense, hedged up with thorns, and grow darker and darker daily; but yet, I distrust not my good God in the least, and live more quietly in the absence of all by faith, than I should do, I am persuaded, if I possessed them.—I think the Lord deals kindly with me, to make me believe for my mercies, before I have them; they will then be Isaacs, sons of laughter. The less reason hath to work on, [that is, the more entirely reason is perplexed and is at a loss what measures to adopt,] the more freely faith casts itself on the faithfulness of God. I find that while faith is steady, nothing can disquiet me; and when faith totters, nothing can establish me. If I tumble out amongst means and creatures, I am presently lost, and can come to no end; but if I stay myself on God, and leave him to work in his own way and time, I am at rest, and can sit down and sleep in a promise, when a thousand rise up against me. Therefore, my way is not to cast beforehand, but to walk with God by the day. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. I find so much to do continually with my calling and my heart, that I have no time to puzzle myself with peradventures and futurities. As for the state of the times, it is very gloomy and tempestuous.—But why do the heathen rage? Faith lies at anchor in the midst of the waves, and believes the accomplishment of the promise through all the overturning confusions and seeming impossibilities.

Upon this God do I live, who is our God forever, and will guide us unto death. Methinks I lie becalmed in his bosom, as Luther in such a case, [viz. when beset with troubles.] I am not much concerned; let Christ see to it. I know prophecies are now dark, and the books are sealed, and men have all been deceived, and every cistern fails; yet God doth continue faithful, and faithful is he that hath promised, who will do it. I believe these dark times are the womb of a bright morning.

Many things more I might add, but enough.—O, brother! keep close to God, and then a little of the creature will go a great way. Maintain secret communion with God, and you need fear nothing. Take time for duties in private; crowd not religion in a corner of the day. There is a Dutch proverb, "Nothing is got by thieving, nor lost by praying." Lay up all your good in God, so as to be able to overbalance the sweetness and bitterness of all creatures. Spend no time anxiously in forhand contrivances for this world.—They never succeed.—God will turn his dispensation another way. Self contrivances are the effects of unbelief. I can speak by experience. Would men spend those hours they run out in plots and contrivances, in communion with God, and leave all to him, by believing, they would have more peace and comfort. I leave you with your God and mine. The Lord Jesus be with your spirit."

"Look not Behind Thee."—Gen. 19: 17.

Before thee, christian, is the "prize"—the "incorruptable crown"—the "eternal inheritance!" You have "put your hand to the plough," vowed to God to serve Him—declared before many witnesses that you "sought that heavenly country"—will you look back? Can you linger—"can you bear the thoughts of losing all those joys which are above?" The past utters an entreating voice of wisdom, "look not behind thee"—believe God and obey Him. He who has no delight in the death of the sinner, but graciously waits for him to turn from his evil ways and live, has furnished us with a faithful record of past disobedience. He has caused the dreadful universal waters of a flood to sound a warning. Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, are set forth as examples of disobedience and vile lusts. "Remember Lot's wife."—ye that profess to be flying for refuge to the city of God, she disbelieved God: as a consequence, she disobeyed His word, "look not behind thee," and simply "looked back"—but God is just and her doom is written.

Behold the crooked track of Israel's thousands during 40 years in the wilderness, strewn with the carcasses of multitudes who forgot God, and, "in their hearts went back into Egypt." We are solemnly warned by them to "look diligently—to labor, to fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into that rest, we should come short after the same example of unbelief. May we keep the eye of faith fixed to the end. Is Moab seeking enchantments against Israel at this late hour? or, in other words, has a wicked world and apostate church, been seeking at any sacrifice, a curse from their Balaam ministers, on the little company of pilgrims who expect soon to come into the possession of their blessed Canaan? Yes, verily, they have sought to curse, but, God has, does, and will bless.

Many have "turned from the right ways of the Lord, and gone in the way of" the covetous sorcerer, "who loved the wages of unrighteousness." Do you look back at Balak's call, my brother, or sister? Can ye dispise them that God does bless? Listen not for a moment ye heirs of that immortal kingdom—listen not to the murmuring words of this sinful adulterous generation, such as, "Oh shame to be looking for Christ—give up your foolish dreams of the world's coming to an end, and once more be respectable! "Unworthy voice, linger not to hear it, it is vain, it is against thy blessed hope, against thy king!"

Ye flock of Christ, hear the voice of the "good Shepherd, who giveth his life for the sheep;" follow Him, "look not behind thee." All is dark when faith dies. A theory good as it may be, with abundant ability to proclaim it, will not profit, unless we are truly looking up and pressing on in the way of daily obedience, towards our glorious reward. Two masters we can never serve. God requires our bodies to be presented to him, a living sacrifice, which is our reasonable service. Let your sacrifice lie at his disposal; for he has a right to his own. While at the altar, keep your eye of faith on the sinless sufferer of Calvary. Trace his footsteps from his humble cottage in Nazareth to his baptism in Jordan, then to the wilderness to endure forty days and nights a battle with the prince of darkness; and back again to his native town, to publish the glad tidings of the gospel, and soon through the cities and vilages of Israel. Poor as it regarded this world, despised by the great, vile hypocrites thronging his path; loved and believed by a few, behold he walks undaunted, unfaintingly onward. Not one back step, not one lustful glance behind him, "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin."

Though the bitter Cross was before him, the joy, the glory was beyond it. His eye was fixed on his Father's will—on a world's redemption! He did not fail, nor was he "discouraged." "Let us consider him who thus endured, lest we be weary and faint in our minds. Look unto Jesus, all charm and glory is there. He is altogether lovely. His name is adored by angels. His gazing faithful ones will admire him when he comes. The chorus of praise will burst forth from all the multitude of heaven to his glorious name. His throne shall be as the days of heaven. His kingdom and dominion shall have no end. Soon, very soon, and sudden will his coming be, and those who have from the heart obeyed the injunction, heading this article, will be found worthy to live and reign with him on the earth. Amen.

GEO. W. BURNHAM.

Vergennes, Vt., Oct. 1st, '46.

From the Pleasure Boat.

The Battle Field.

Ye religious voters of America, come, let us make a pleasure excursion to the battlefield of Mexico. An excursion to a battlefield would be rather painful to a christian or a decent heathen, it is true, but to you sword-wielding religionists, that were cradled under the war-song lullabies of your mothers and grannies—to you, who from your infancy have heard your priests pray to a god of armies, a Beelzebub of battles—a demon of hatred, revonge and bloody carnage—to you who can fiddle praises to Beelzebub on the first day of the week, and then vote under his sword-supported and sword-supporting government on the second, an excursion to the battle-field must afford a feast of "fat things and full of marrow." There, you can gorge your turkey buzzard souls with the blood and brains of your religious brothers,—there, you can glut yourselves on the bleeding lives of your Mexican foe, and gather strength to travel on your heavenward journey in the broad way, with all your horrid load of sin, and guilt and blood and murder bound upon your guilty souls.

Come then, let us sail down to the ensanguined plain, and see what a glorious time your hired, religious brothers have had of it. There, see that puddle of stagnant blood—we must be near the battle ground, and some poor wounded creature has crawled out here to die in peace. See! there is a trail of blood! let us trace it—there look! a human being! or part of one! one hand is shot off and is hanging by the skin! his bowels are torn open, and he has crawled hither with his entrails dragging after him, torn and besmeared with blood and mud?

Behold your work ye voting religionists! and ye dumb dogs that bark in the temples for bread, and pray for hire to a God of battles, behold your work and feed your polluted souls on the miseries of this poor wretch! think what he must have suffered, and then down, ye serfs of superstition, down upon your knees and thank your deity for steadying the hands and directing the aim of your hired men to gain this "glorious victory."

Let us sail further. See, here is where the Mexican army stood, and where it fell! See how many dead bodies strew the plains! Look! those vultures picking out the eye of that fallen hero! Hoot ye ravenous birds! Ye are too much like the voting religionists of the United States, to disgrace your race by wings and feathers; you would best appear in the human form, while engaged in this bloody work! Hoot away, and hide your heads with shame? Look! here is a young man, the support of a blind father, and a decrepit mother. He left them amidst tears and entreaties to defend his country from your invading troops. And here he lies in a puddle of his own blood! your religious arguments have deprived him of both legs and an arm, the maggots are in the festering wounds and the vultures have torn out one eye while the other is hid in mud and gore. O horrors! he is alive! his lips move! hark "water—water" he whispers, but he will soon be unconscious of his wants.

Look! see that widowed mother hanging over her wounded son! She has been searching hours among the dead and dying, and at last has found him. A musket ball has passed in at the back part of his jaw, and out at his mouth, shattering the bone and carrying away the teeth. Five other balls have entered his body, and yet he lives, and amidst smothered groans, tries to smile through tears on his weeping mother. Poor fellow! he will not have long to smile; a company of cavalry are rushing towards them trampling the dead and wounded in the mud! See! the mother tries to save him! she screams and waves her hand but they heed her not! She falls upon her son to screen him with her frail form, and both are trampled to death by the horses of your religious troops.

Hark! they halt, and form a hollow square; the chaplain is in the centre, and is about to pray. let us listen, hear him, "We thank Thee, O, thou Most High, thou God of armies and battles, we thank thee that thou hast been with us in the fight! O, our God, thou wast with us in very deed, thou gavest courage to our hearts and strength to our arms. Thou taught our hands to war and our fingers to fight. Thou nerved our arms and enabled us to take sure and deadly aim, and our enemy fell before our leaden hail like grass before the scythe! Thou seest the plains strewed with the dead and dying foe, and thou delighteth in the stifled groan that cometh forth from the souls of the departing. Thy angels hover over this blissful scene, and as they look with delighted eyes on these mangled, bleeding, dying beings, they rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, and songs of praise ascend on high and mingle with the harmony of heaven, at the glorious victory Thou hast wrought out through us, thy chosen instruments; and we thy humble servants desire to render praise and thanksgiving to Thy holy name, for giving us this victory which will contribute so largely to the glory and valor of American arms, and will praise thee in thy congregations, and teach our children to adore Thee forevermore, Amen."

News of this horrid scene of religious murder and blasphemy has been carried through all parts of the Union. Religionists have run to post offices and periodical depots for the news, and have drank it down with a relish, and exulted over it with a satisfaction that must have caused a rejoicing in the infernal pit.

Reader, art thou a supporter of this blood-stained government? If so thou art guilty of thy brothers' blood, and no argument or sophistry will screen from justice.

West India Mission.

Dear Brother Marsh:—I have not neglected to write to you from a want of appreciation of your kindness and interest in our mission, but from a multiplicity of cares, incident to our delay, and from a want of definiteness in our arrangements, so I could not communicate anything satisfactory in reference to our enterprise. We have been delayed for want of a vessel, but now we are providentially provided with one, bound to the island of Antigua, which is the one we prefer on account of its being the residence of a son-in-law of Bro. Livingston, who is a missionary there, and will we trust facilitate our efforts for the spread of the truth and the salvation of souls. We have met a hearty response to our mission from the brethren in this city, who have contributed very liberally to the work. May the Lord reward them, and others of our dear brethren who have aided in this work of love. I feel to lay all upon the altar to be used in the cause of God, and I believe God will bless the efforts and save souls.

I trust we shall have the prayers and sympathies of our brethren throughout the land. O! to be filled with the spirit and made efficient in winning souls!! This is my great desire. I hope and pray the Lord will bless you and the dear brethren in our native land, in still sounding the cry, "Behold he cometh with clouds."

To my dear friends who may have expected a personal communication, I beg to say, that my multiplied cares and engagements must be my apology for not writing, and I trust that any remissness in writing will be attributed to similar causes rather than to a want of Christian affection. O! I long to meet them all in the kingdom, and expect rather to meet them there than in this present world.

We expect to sail to-morrow, the 17th inst. Farewell to you all! My heart is with you in the "blessed hope" of the speedy coming of the Lord. God grant we may be useful until the deliverance come. Yours, very affectionately,

L. DELOS MANSFIELD.

P. S. Correspondents please address at present—L. D. Mansfield, Missionary, Antigua, West Indies. Letter to be enclosed in a light wrapper—directed to W. Ide, 111 Wall-st., New York City—post-paid to New York. Bro. Ide will avail himself of the earliest opportunity of communication with the West Indies. I hope my friends will let us hear from them often—we shall be anxious to hear from you when away from all former associations. All remittances sent by this way will be likely to be received promptly. God's stewards, will, I trust, so act in this matter as to be able to give a satisfactory account of their stewardship. Some I have no doubt have done this already—others will help as help is needed. I believe this is God's work and we will sustain it.

Letter from Bro. Wm. Clark, Jr.

Dear Brother Marsh:—For some time I have been thinking to write you as a subscriber to the "Voice of Truth" and send a mite for its continuance, and as evidence that it is valued also. I might say many things by way of your consistency as its conductor; but I refrain from this, being sensible in some measure at least of the frailty of human nature. Man in his lost estate, while bearing the image of the earthly, cannot bear praise. To speak highly of his acts, however deserving they may appear, has ever failed to make him better. The tendency always has been and must ever be, to exalt him above the cross of a crucified Redeemer, rather than humble him at the foot of it. We search the scriptures of truth in vain to discover when and where the great God with whom we have to do, has praised mankind much. God says, the heart of man is deceitful and desperately wicked, and who can know it. How true this is, my brother; and that man who knows his own heart, and is sensible that it is all that God says of it, knows more and is more wise than all the kingdoms of this world besides. There is one position of yours, however, that I will not refrain from touching upon, because I regard it as invulnerable. It is found in your editorial communication upon time: the position is, that any evidence upon time, based upon such promises that it obscures ordinary mind, so that it cannot be grasped by all classes of intellect, cannot embrace true faith. This is true, and is a truth that will always be valuable, and increases in value to every brother and sister who ponders it well. It is also a truth by which we can always try new or old religious foundations or promises, or in other words, any doctrine which man attempts to promulgate to his fellow man, which all classes of mind cannot comprehend most clearly, and embrace it with a full and understanding faith nothing doubting, is error, and must always be error. Why? Because God deals with the human family as a great whole, and is no respecter of persons—equally kind, equally ready to receive whoever may come unto Him, and upbraideth none for so doing.

Furthermore, if this position is not correct, common mind cannot be held responsible if it does not obey what God requires of it. Faith cannot, neither is it required to grasp what it cannot comprehend. Therefore all communications upon the great subject of God's everlasting Kingdom, should carefully be adapted to the most ordinary intellect; and when such a course fails to feed more favored minds, the evidence is, such minds have, in their pride, got above what is written, and need to be humbled. "Condescend to men of low estate," is the injunction of God; "mind not high things;" the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the foolish things are chosen of Him also to confound the wisdom of men, and they are confounded now.

I do not, my dear brother, wish to throw any obstacle in the way of the truth we have on time,—but on the contrary, I regard our present evidence the best by far we have ever had. I rejoice in it, and also that my brethren and sisters are exhibiting a more trusty faith in view of it. I am disposed to think the day is passed when time will affect God's people; if they are affected by the presentation of it, it will be because it is put at a distance.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

ROCHESTER, OCTOBER 28, 1846.

We do not like to see duns in a religious paper, especially one which advocates the immediate coming of Christ. Such things are incompatible with the nature of its high and holy profession—or, we may more correctly say, it is incompatible with the professed character of one who is looking for the coming of the Lord, when he has the means to pay, to owe any man, especially a brother who toils day and night to furnish him with the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand.

We have no complaints to offer, or fears to express on this case: but wish simply to remind certain ones (not those who have paid, nor those who are unable to pay) of their duty in this case. We want our dues of such immediately: we have a heavy bill for paper to meet soon.

The Christian Alliance.

This long talked of meeting, under the imposing title, 'THE WORLD'S CONVENTION,' has met in the metropolis of the world, performed its work, dissolved, and its members are again scattered to the four winds, with no better feelings towards each other than when they first met. All the labors of this mammoth body, so far from doing anything towards effecting a union of the evangelical sects so called, have been like the labor of the mountain which brought forth a mouse.

Instead of trying to unite all Christians on gospel principles, the Alliance went to work to strengthen the unholy divisions which already exist among them, by forming another human creed, or unscriptural test of Christian union, in the following Nine Articles:—

1. The Divine inspiration, authority, and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures.
2. The unity of the Godhead and the Trinity of persons therein.
3. The utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall.
4. The incarnation of the Son of God, his work of atonement for sinners of mankind, and his mediatorial intercession and reign.
5. The justification of the sinner by faith alone.
6. The work of the Holy spirit, in the conversion and sanctification of the sinner.
7. The right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures.
8. The Divine institution of the Christian ministry, and the authority and perpetuity of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's supper.
9. The immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, the judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, with the eternal blessedness of the righteous and the eternal punishment of the wicked."

In speaking of this Alliance, the Christian Herald very justly remarks—

"This famous gathering, as we sometime since predicted, has resulted in a complete failure so far as the blessed gospel of our Holy Redeemer is concerned. The result is however as might have been expected where human articles of faith are the ground of fellowship.

Again we could not expect much holy, heavenly work where faith alone is made the ground of justification in opposition to the language of the Apostle, who says, 'Ye see then how that by works a man is justified and not by faith only.' James 1: 24.

By this Alliance, Christianity has been wounded, in the midst of her professed friends to the joy of her enemies and the gratification of Prince of Darkness and all his hosts. This great meeting commenced Aug. 19th, and continued fifteen days. The number of members was over one thousand. The first act of this body was to increase their articles of faith and fellowship. Having settled the creed, they came to the most solemn conclusion that no person should be a member of this alliance, unless he adopted this creed, while the slave holder and the beer and wine bibber could be received without opposition. Now if such a course is not straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel, then there is no moral meaning to such language. This is paying tithes of mint and annis and cummin, while the weightier matters of law, judgment, mercy and faith, are omitted."

To shed further light on the character and doings of this Alliance, we give the following—

LETTER FROM BRO. J. V. HIMES

My Dear Bro. Galusha:—I intended to have written to you before this time. But you know how difficult it is to get a moment's leisure, situated as I am. I however snatch a moment to write a few words.

My voyage was very pleasant—health has been good while here, with that of Bro. Brown and Hutchinson. Our work thus far has been preparatory, to future, successful effort. There are only three or four good congregations in this country with Pastors. There are little bands in many places that want ministers, who, with little effort, might build up good societies, and give publicity to the advent faith in their respective vicinities. We are visiting some of these places, and have crowds to hear. Birmingham is one. We are now lecturing to crowds in this town. It seems like the times in '42 and '43, in the U. S. The people are hungry—their preachers are spiritualists, and give them but little that is substantial. Very few of the Independents, or dissenters of any class, receive the Advent faith. There is a large number in the Establishment, but they are all Judaizers,—some of them good men—but most of them hold the advent faith in a dry theory. So we get but little sympathy from either class. We have to make our way to the common people, and rest our claims on them for sympathy and support.

We spent some weeks in London—in order to be present at the 'Alliance,' and the 'World's Temperance Convention;' in both of which we took part.

In the 'Alliance,' we had some hits from the American delegation. It was very evident that they did not wish to see Himes there. Job 1: 6 was quoted by one Doctor, in such a connection, as to show some of us, that it was not without its meaning.—But Dr. Cox, of N. Y., came out plain, in a Resolution to be added to the Basis, affirming the Immortality of the Soul, Resurrection of the Body, and eternal Rewards and Punishments. This was, as Howard Hinton said afterwards, designed to cut off the Millerites. The Doctor stated in his support of the Resolution, that the Millerites in the U. States had all gone into the doctrine of Annihilation, after their time passed. This gave me a good occasion before the Alliance to defend the poor Millerites.—I took the floor, defended a part of the Doctor's resolution, relating to the Resurrection of the Body, and cleared Mr. Miller, and the leading ministers of the Adventists in the U. States from the charge of Dr. Cox. At the close of the meeting the Doctor gave me his hand and expressed good feelings, and his gratification &c while I gave him the 3d No. of the Advent Shield for his edification. This little circumstance gave me a chance to explain to very many, personally, more fully our views—and to give our publications extensively to members from all parts of continental Europe, as well as England, Scotland and Ireland. I made a good use afterwards, also, of all the private sneers, and also the gossip about the dreadful effects of Millerism etc. by a certain member from Rochester, N. Y., and others.—But the worst part for the American Delegation was yet to come. The question of the membership of Slaveholders was introduced by I. Howard Hinton, (with whom you are acquainted.) He moved—I seconded, that no slaveholder be admitted. It was now that the Americans wished me in France, or some where else. They were really mad—some of them—but there was no help for them: the question was not to be dodged. The American Delegation were nearly all pro-SLAVERY. I was astonished to see in Methodists, and Presbyterians, and others of the North, such a spirit of sympathy with Southern slaveholders. And more, to see some of the English yield to them. But we held on, and tested the whole Alliance. It resulted in leaving it out altogether, and deferring the perfect organization to the next session. So now each branch is independent, and there is no general Alliance.

We had 36 hours in committee, trying all ways to get over an avowal of the truth. I shall, if it please God, give you some account of it when I see you. They wanted me to yield—but I told them either we must say slaveholding was sin—or be consistent and say nothing.

Bro. Brown is with me, and sends his love to all. Bro. Hutchinson is in Scotland, doing well.

I wish to be remembered to all who enquire.

Yours, more firm than ever in the Advent faith and hope,

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

P. S. Bro. Marsh may see this letter, if convenient, as I am disappointed in time about writing to him, the mail closing soon, fully intending writing him. Give him my best love, and assure him of my sympathies and prayers in his devoted labors for the cause of Christ.

J. V. H.

Birmingham, Eng. Sept. 18, 1846.

The grand secret why the English delegation winked at the sin of Slavery, is explained in the following remarks of the Christian Herald on this point. "Mr. K." it seems is an apologist for the slaveholder. The Herald says:

"One word more, showing how this union of the American apologist for slavery with the English Clergy was effected. Mr. K. says,—'But they (English ministers) must admit another point: if they cannot trust the American churches with that matter (meaning slavery) we shall find the same difficulty in trusting them to admit wine-bibbers and various other kinds of imperfect men.' Ah, here is the rub. Many of the ministers of England are not so temperate as total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks requires, and therefore for fear of having this sin exposed, they are willing to stop their ears against the cries of the oppressed, and thus a compromise is the result. If the conversion of the world is to depend upon such alliances, we may despair of ever seeing so glorious a day until the judgment of the great day shall sit."

From the Correspondence of the English Mission published in a recent number of the Advent Herald, we take the following pertinent remarks on this highly interesting point.

"The public mind is still agitated with the subject of the Evangelical Alliance, a large portion of some of the most popular journals being filled with it.—The 'Patriot' says:—

'We have conversed with those who pass for members of it, who are unable to say whether it really exists, and if so in what shape or form. Some openly avow it to be an abortion. Others, on the contrary, allow it to be indeed a sickly, but yet a living child. While some can be found bold enough to claim for it the character of an infant Hercules, already strangling with its heaven born energy, those twin sisters, Popery and Political Dissent? Could we persuade ourselves of the truth of this last opinion, there might be some hope of its yet turning the river of British indignation through the Augean stable of American slavery!'

On last Monday evening, at an early hour, Exeter Hall was filled to overflowing, by a very respectable audience, who listened with great attention for four or five hours to a review of the principles and measures of the Alliance in relation to the subject of slavery, by George Thompson, Esq., Wm. L. Garrison of Boston, and Frederic Douglass, a fugitive slave from Maryland. The object of Messrs. T. and G. was, to show the anti-Christian and 'hypocritical' position of the Alliance in the course they had taken—that the British portion of it had proved recreant to their long and solemnly professed principles, and had bartered away the interests of the slave for the sake of an 'unrighteous union' with the abettors of slavery."

From this testimony, it is evident that the Alliance instead of accomplishing, has defeated the object for which it met: it was, as one of its members remarked, 'a splendid failure.' We think, however, taking the whole affair into account, that it has accomplished much.

1. It has put the hand and seal of the sects to the condemnation of their unholy divisions: they, by this act, stand self-condemned. For the very fact that they have united in sanctioning the call for, and have attended, this convention, clearly shows that they considered there was sufficient cause or evils among them to justify such a movement. They have acknowledged that they are divided, that their divisions are sinful, and that it is their duty to remove those evils, and unite as Christians.

2. The Alliance failing to accomplish the object for which it met, has conclusively shown that it is beyond the power of the sects to bring about their fancied millennium: for if there is not sufficient gospel principle among them to effect a union when their best ministers meet in a World's Convention, for this express object, most certainly they have not the power to convert an ungodly, infidel, and heathen world to love God and one another as the Bible directs. This movement puts the veto upon the fabled dogma of Mr. Dowling, Dr. Beecher, and others that their temporal millennium is soon to dawn upon us. The acts of the Alliance do not look much like its dawning very soon.

3. This movement is another exhibition of human folly, in trying to bring about by unscriptural policy that work which can only be accomplished on the pure principles of the gospel, viz: pure disinterested love to God and all his children. Had this principle actuated the members of the Alliance, they would have united in the holy bonds of Christian fellowship, without the aid of a world's convention to do it. No, no, this parade, this expense, and worldly show, does not look like the humble unassuming genius of the gospel of the Son of God.—The union which he approves is found in humble repentance at his feet. The sects will not stoop so low to receive it: therefore they will never be united.

Meeting at Lockport.

A severe storm of rain and snow prevented our reaching this meeting until Saturday evening the 17th. We were happy to find the meeting progressing with a good degree of engagedness on the part of the brethren assembled. Brn. Porter, Bywater and Morley, and a goodly number of brethren from Buffalo, were there; also, Bro. and sister Ongley from Syracuse, who are still devoting their whole time to the proclamation of the blessed truths concerning the appearing of Christ and his kingdom.—Bro. Galusha, who resides in the place, was also present, to take charge of the meeting, and as usual on such and all suitable occasions, gave the word of counsel, doctrine, comfort, and confirmation. We are glad, after quite a lengthy absence from the former field of his unwearied and useful labors, to find him again among kind friends and brethren, ready, as much as in him is, to preach the everlasting gospel to all who will hear.

We found Bro. Galusha and our other brethren in the ministry never more understandingly and immovably grounded and settled in the truth. When we say this we do not exclude the time, Bible time, of the Lord's coming. A discourse by Bro. Morley, followed with remarks by Brn. Bywater, Galusha, and the writer, showed that we were perfectly agreed in our understanding of the Savior's teaching on this subject, viz: that the precise point of termination of the prophetic periods is not revealed. He will come 'suddenly,'—as the 'lightning,'—in an hour when all, both saint and sinner, 'think not.'—It therefore becomes of the highest importance that we constantly watch, and be ready for that moment, as the Savior has repeatedly warned us to be.

To prevent any one inferring that we did not believe in the time of the advent, because we took the position that the precise definite point of its occurrence is not revealed, and should therefore watch, it was clearly shown that it is a belief in the time that has caused us to take this position. This any one will see on a moment's reflection. A person who believes the precise termination is not revealed, of course must be a believer in those numbers, and the time of their termination at some period, at what 'day and hour' he cannot tell, but believes it is not far distant, is at hand, and may occur at any moment. Again, a person would not be very likely to watch every moment for the occurrence of an event, and on every suitable occasion be found warning others to do the same, if he did not believe it would soon come: his belief in the time of the coming of the thing looked for, would be a powerful motive for his doing thus. It is precisely so in the case under consideration: it is faith, unwavering faith, in the time of our Lord's coming, that contributes greatly to stimulate us to warn others, and to heed the warning ourselves, to be ready to meet him any moment.

He who has no faith in the time of the advent, in these perilous days, these days of apostacy, sensuality, and love of this world, will not watch for the appearing of Christ. This is painfully true of the opposing sects: they have no faith in the time, neither do they watch for the return of their Lord.—The prophetic numbers, historical prophecies, and the predictions of the numerous signs of the end of this world, occupy no small portion of the word of inspiration. Their moral design evidently is to influence men to be ready to meet the great and terrible day to which they all unitedly point. We have heard their infallible testimony, and believe it with all the heart; it speaks to all of the coming of the Lord at hand, be ye ready therefore to meet him at the most unexpected hour.

The discourse of Bro. Porter, Sabbath afternoon, on the prophetic numbers, was timely. It was conclusively shown that it is positively revealed in the prophetic word, that the Sanctuary will be cleansed at the end of the two thousand three hundred days, or years, of Dan. 8th; that Daniel, with all the saints, will stand in his lot at the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty five days, or years, of Dan. 12th. In short, it was shown that we have positive testimony to warrant this conclusion on these and similar prophetic numbers. Also, understanding the seventy weeks of Dan. 9th to be a part of the grand vision of the preceding chapter, it was urged, with much assurance, that Christ will come the second time just eighteen hundred and forty seven years from his birth. This positiveness, at the first view, may appear not justifiable, but we think it is fully warranted by the nature of the testimony in the case. But we think we are not warranted in fixing upon the precise time of the commencement of the prophetic periods, and consequently the precise year of their termination. The testimony in the case, however, makes it highly probable that the termination will be this year, and positive that it will be soon, very soon.

This view of the time we think our brethren in Western New York now generally entertain: and we believe it to be a correct Bible view of this highly important subject, and of course one that will not subject those who entertain it ever to become confounded by their opponents. It is the true faith, and will justify its practical possessor during his pilgrimage here, and furnish him with a sure passport into that glorious city to which he is bound.

Our communion season, Sabbath afternoon, was strengthening and comforting to those who were looking for the return of Him whose death they commemorated. In the evening we occupied the Baptist house of worship in the place, which was kindly opened for our services. The Lord enable the minister and people who stately worship there, to so love and obey the truth, that with all the true heirs of the kingdom, they may soon possess a portion in that promised everlasting and heavenly inheritance.

Finally, our meeting at Lockport was one of much joyful interest to the saints in general who composed it. They are generally understandingly and in spirit engaged in this best of causes. The blessing of God we believe is and will be upon such a humble, self-denying, despised yet devoted people. They have nothing to fear but God, and oh, how prayerfully guarded we should be against offending him. The least departure from the truth and simplicity of the gospel will bring upon us his displeasure; while a strict adherence to both, will forever secure his favor. In his favor is life; under his displeasure death irretrievable.

Our absence from home to attend the recent meeting at Lockport, has prevented our examining quite a number of letters which were designed for this number. We will try to look them over soon.

Brn. Himes and Brown we expect will sail from England the 31st of the present month, in the Great Western for New York. If prospered, they will reach there about the middle of November.—Herald.

Our remarks on the parables are necessarily deferred.

Thoughts on Matt. 24.

I feel unworthy to write on a subject so glorious as the one which engages our attention, namely; the speedy coming of our Lord, to which event we look for the consummation of all our hopes, and which we believe to be emphatically "nigh, even at the doors." Yes, the signs of the times, the termination of the prophetic periods, the state of the political and moral world, speak with words too loud, too emphatic, too plain, to be misunderstood by any candid, sincere inquirer after truth, with that blessed book the Bible in his hand. How can any unprejudiced mind, that has any observation, or information about them, be at a loss to determine that we are certainly living in the eve of time? Do not the signs spoken of by our Lord, (in Matt. 24, and its parallel in Mark and Luke) and hung out in their proper time, and order in the heavens, as forerunners of the great event to which the world is fast approximating, speak with tones like thunder to any mind that is void of infidelity, and is a lover of truth; that the Lord's Christ is about to be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, personally, and visibly, as he went up. They do most certainly.

"But stop" says a modern theologian, "not so fast, the 24th of Matt. had its fulfillment at the destruction of Jerusalem." Ask them for proof, and they refer you to the 34th verse. "This generation shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled." "There," say they "this chapter must have its fulfillment at that destruction, or in the generation that then lived." Well, let us look at such logic for a moment, (although it hardly needs to be noticed; for a school boy should know better,) suppose we admit that it had its fulfillment then, and at that destruction; how will some questions that would naturally arise, be answered? Such as the following:—Did the end of the world then come? Was the Son of man then seen coming in the clouds of heaven by all the tribes of the earth? Did he then send forth his angels and gather his elect from the four winds? Did the first resurrection then take place? Did the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and his Christ? Did the saints then take the kingdom, and possess it forever?

Many such questions might be enumerated, but these are sufficient; and an affirmative answer cannot be harmonized with the facts in the case. Some however of our Doctors and Professors of Divinity, have endeavored to do it. But what has been the result? They have shown their infidelity—their ignorance of the scriptures, and the absurdity of their theory. Say they, “the end of the world spoken of means the end of the Jewish economy, or age, which ended at the destruction of Jerusalem.” But in what year was that destruction? A. D. 70. Then the Jewish rites, and sacrifices ended in A. D. 70. But what says Paul, (Eph. 2: 14 & 15.) “For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace.” Again: Col. 2: 14. “Blotting out the hand writing of ordinances, that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailed it to his cross.” Whose testimony shall we believe? Paul’s, which says it ended at the crucifixion? or the teaching of modern Universalism, (for I consider it no better) which says it ended 36 or 37 years afterwards? Give me inspired testimony.

Again: What were the signs in the sun, moon, and stars given for? Why, according to teaching now-a-days, to show that the destruction of Jerusalem was near. But when were they to be given? Immediately after the tribulation of those days. Tribulation of what days? Why, according to modern teaching) the tribulation of Jerusalem’s disaster, and destruction. But does Jesus teach nonsense like that? Does he tell us Jerusalem shall be destroyed, and then tell us, that after it is destroyed he will give the signs of its destruction? Away with such ridiculous absurdity as this! “Take heed that no man deceive you.”

Again: When we tell them any thing about the Lord’s coming, or the time of his coming, they immediately quote, “But of that day and hour knoweth no man,” &c. But ask them what day and hour is there meant, and they find themselves in a dilemma; for if they say it means the day of Jerusalem’s destruction, they must see, that they have no right to apply it to our knowing nothing about the day of the Son of man, or end of the world; and if it means the day of the Son of man, or end of the world, then they must know that the Saviour has been teaching something about the end of the world, and the day of his revelation, in the chapter; and their superstructure must fall. Then just as sure as Jesus was talking about the end of the world, and his second coming; just so sure he has given signs, that are designed to benefit the last generation, which I fully believe is the one in which we live, and that, it “shall not pass away till all be fulfilled.”

The prophetic periods also terminate about this time. There are only about four years of disputed ground in which the periods will end, and that time of dispute is almost out. The end, therefore, must be near. Again: The state of professed christendom and the world at large show, that the present state of things cannot long exist. We are clearly in the ‘perilous times of the last days’ spoken of by Paul in 2 Tim. 3; when professed christendom would be guilty of all the sins there named. Well, what does this state of things prove to the Bible reader? It shows him that we are living in the last days.

The Jews knew not the time of their visitation. Neither do the nominal churches; and that is not all, for they say that the time of Christ’s coming is one of God’s secrets, and can not be known. But what says God? “The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant,” Psa. 25: 14. Again: “The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children forever.” Deut. 29: 29. “Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.” “Yes he will,” cries a multitude of voices, “he is going to come the second time and no one will know any thing about it.” What a contradiction is this of revelation! “Behold the former things are come to pass and new things do I declare; before they spring forth, I tell you of them.” Isa. 42: 9. “No you don’t” says an infidel! An infidel did I say? nay, a professed teacher in Israel! one that professes to believe the Bible. Again: God says, “I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.” “No, no,” says another, “you have declared nothing about the end, you have told us about the beginning, but, said nothing about the end!”

What a complicated mess of stuff it is; to call the word of God a revelation, and then in the next breath say it is a secret! Away with such inconsistencies! The word of God cannot be a revelation, and a secret at the same time. No, no. Our God is a consistent God. He has revealed in his word the second coming of his Son, and I believe the time also of his coming; as well as the event itself. “There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets.” Let us then beware of the “sycen song,” that we are to know nothing about the time of the coming of our Lord. God help us to believe the Bible, and search it, and see if we cannot know something about “those things that are revealed,” that “belong to us.” Let us not be faithless, but believing. Let us not cast one lingering look behind, but—Onward, to the battle, heroes, on! On to bloodless victory! The strife will soon be o’er! The victory will soon be won! Immortality and eternal life will soon be given! Paradise restored, and all will be joy and peace in heaven. Glory to God. Redemption is near.

S. I. RONEY.

Chateaugay, N. Y., Sept. 23, '46.

This Generation.

Bro. Marsh:—Permit me through the columns of the ‘Voice,’ to say a few words to the brethren scattered abroad concerning a subject which has dwelt much upon my mind of late, and which if not rightly understood will deceive souls, and prove disastrous to many who do not “stand complete in Christ,” and ready to hail him at his coming. In so doing, I will endeavor to make it clear to all minds both by reason and the simple “Word,” affirming that we have truth enough on our side without forcing an application of, or straining any passage in the Bible. Oh my Saviour, help me to write with an eye single to thy glory, for the judgment is near.

I believe it is a conceded point by all, that the generation spoken of in Math. 24–34, Mark 13–30, and Luke 21–32, is the one which is to see the signs of Christ’s coming, “begin to come to pass,” “see all these signs,” and not pass away, (to the grave,) till He comes with power and great glory. That a generation scripturally understood, continues 70 years, and that the time denoted by the phrase “nigh even at the door,” is limited to, and bounded by the generation, or 70 years, is so plain to my mind that I can pin upon it unwavering faith. Now for the evidence.

The generation cannot mean the one who lived when Jesus trod the earth; for they passed away centuries ago. It cannot mean a number equal to 8 or 10 hundred millions, or the population of the world, for double that number have passed away since the first sign. Neither can it with any propriety be called a generation of Jews or Christians, both classes of which will be found alive on earth at the coming of Jesus; consequently we infer from the text, a possibility of those who saw these signs passing away prior to his coming. It must mean those who saw the signs, and who will see the event of which they are the forerunners. By a reference to, and a careful examination of Gen. 5th and 11th chapters, and Math. 1st, it will be found that all the generations from the creation of Adam to the birth of Christ, were 59 or 60, by which divide the time 4150 years or more, and we have about 70 years for each generation. This also proves the age of the world.

David and Matthew had a correct understanding of these things, and says the former, “the days of our years are three score and ten, (margin,) in them are 70 years.” The above in my humble opinion, forever settles the point, that the word generation as used by the Saviour in the above mentioned passages, denotes a period of 70 years, and that the time denoted by the phrase, “nigh, even at the door,” is limited to the generation. Amen. Will the brethren examine the Bible signification of the phrase, “this generation” closely.

And now I ask, when did the generation begin? The prevailing idea advanced, is that it commenced in 1780, at the first sign, and will consequently end in 1850, conveying the possible continuance of time for several years to come. This view of the subject I opine is not only wrong, but will prove fatal in its preaching. I have abandoned it for several reasons. In the first place it would not exactly harmonize with the termination of the prophetic numbers, none of which extend beyond the time A. D. 1847, which is probably this year. Again; from this fall to 1850 would be about 3½ years, during which time the Lord would come, commencing the generation in 1780. Now I say that the above 3½ years belong on the other end of the 70 years, or more properly speaking, the commencement of the 70 years should be moved back from its present acknowledged starting point, 3½ years, or as much later as time will prove, and as will bring the dark day within the memory of the living man; and why? If I understand the Saviour aright, some who saw the first sign will live to see the “glorious appearing.” Now commencing the birth of the living witness or generation in May 1780, and you synchronize it with the first sign. Do you see the difficulty? Move it back one year and you are still involved in the same difficulty. Move it back again to 1778 and you are in the same predicament. Commence the generation in 1777, and you have a living witness three years old at the dark day, at which age he could certainly “see these things” and remember so remarkable an event; and you have also from this time till the spring of 1847, the extreme point to which the prophetic periods can extend for the termination of “this generation,” or 70 years, prior to which time we shall “see the son of man come in a cloud, with power and great glory.”

O the wisdom of God and the harmony of the blessed Bible. For light on the above I am much indebted to Brn. Wyatt and Hurd. And now dear reader are these things so? Is this view a creature of the imagination, or is it the mind of the Spirit? Ye watchman examine it and give us the time of the night. Taking this view, the generation and numbers harmonize, and as definite time can be drawn from the former as from the latter, and the strong probability is that our God will come this fall; indeed, reader, ere this reaches you the parting heavens may reveal the Son of Man!

Although I am as one born out of due time, yet when I look at the general history of the advent cause, I would not undo it. God has directed it. The whirlwind, the earthquake, and the fire, were of God. Yet he came not in thom. Every mutual move has been a fulfilment of lesser chains of prophecy, and is as clearly seen as is the larger chains of the four universal kingdoms, and others. The gospel of the kingdom arises from seeing the signs and knowing that the kingdom is near. The going forth to meet the bridegroom is the legitimate fruit of the gospel of the kingdom, &c. The marriage supper of the Lamb will be celebrated in the holy city. Every called and chosen guest, from righteous Abel to the last converted sinner must be there. The "supper time" came. "He (God) sent forth his servants to call in the bidden guests," (professed church,) and they refused. Did any servant doubt that supper would be eaten at the first call? Still it was delayed. God in his infinite wisdom had devised a tarrying time. Did the "virgins" clearly see it at the first going forth! And why to our understandings did the Bridegroom seemingly tarry? and why was supper delayed? Because "the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." He sent them out again "quickly," and again they were disappointed. Supper was not eaten then, but I verily believe this quickly move, this "earthquake," was the commencement of the true midnight cry, which will be echoed from virgin to virgin till the "while" is past in which the foolish go to buy, and the Bridegroom comes. Some thought he had come, and said he was in the "secret chamber," but Jesus said "go not after them nor follow them for I shall come as the lightning, and every eye shall see me." He has sent forth his servants again, and denied access to the churches of the land, they go into the "highways and hedges." God's house must be filled! and he has given them the 'compelling power,' for although the nominal church and world are set in array against us, yet sinners are converted and brought into the "spiritual house." Will not supper be eaten when the third and last invitation shall have been sufficiently given? Most assuredly it will, and none of those which were bidden, and prayed to be excused, shall taste of God's supper, but "blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God."

Oh the last three or four years have been a period of solemn interest to the children of men. It is not in the power of language to describe my feelings on this subject. The advent move I again repeat is a fulfilment of prophecy. It is seen in the unsealing of the book of Daniel and Revelations—in "writing and making plain the vision"—in its tarrying, and prolonging of the days—in the message of the advent angel—in the gospel of the kingdom, &c. The advent move is typified by the invitation to the supper at "supper time"—by the going forth to meet the Bridegroom—which parable be it remembered was a likeness of that which would take place at a certain time—"then shall the kingdom of heaven (children of the kingdom,) be likened unto," &c. It was typified by many analogous circumstances prior to the first advent—by the preaching of John the Baptist—by God's dealings with Elijah on Mount Horeb, and at his subsequent translation in a chariot of fire—by the days of Noah and Lot—and many other things. The advent move (extravagancies excepted,) is justified by the voice of inspiration—by God's dealings with his children in former ages—by the preaching of Jonah—by the state of the world and church—by the signs of the times—by the fulfillment of prophecies—by the signal approval of Jehovah—by reason and many a "thus saith the Lord." The great day of the Lord is near and hasteth greatly; and we are commanded to be hasting its coming. Two worlds are rapidly nearing each other. Every means that consummate wisdom could devise has been used to make man believe, yet he will not believe. The sun, the moon, the stars, the heaven, the earth, the great ocean, the evil servant and wicked world by their fulfillment of prophecy, the wise servant, the faithful watchman, the finer chains of prophecy crowding us close to the end, evidence undisputed, overwhelming, indubitable, all, all have preached with a voice louder than ten thousand thunders, "The judgment is near, prepare, oh prepare to meet thy God!" And the Lord himself will speedily "descend from heaven with a shout," "avenge his elect," and vindicate his own truth to this faithless and Christ-rejecting generation.

My brother, my sister in the Lord, are you ready? Examine yourself hourly. It is a narrow way, and close work it will be to get into the kingdom. Let your loins be girded with truth, ("present truth,") and your lamps burning. The seal'd book—the darkened lamp, shedding no light on his present position, all caused by the sin that doomed Lot's wife—unbelief and consequent disobedience—will mark the foolish virgin! Nominial Adventist, cold-hearted theorizer, lay aside your vain disputes, and get your soul filled with humble burning love, for methinks the day of argument and speculation is past! Poor unrepented sinner, should this meet your eye, oh heed the warning, repent, be converted, and what you do must be done quickly! Faithful Christians! passing away but homeward bound, your toils are almost over, the last tear will soon be shed, the last sigh breathed, and you will go to your long, happy home. Home, home, home, how sweet will be the Christian's welcome home! how cheering the thought! Remember, none but holy ones will enter there. Oh my Saviour, prepare both writer and reader for that solemn hour, for I verily believe that when endless ages have rolled away in the world to come, it will be found upon the records of Jehovah, that on this the 24th day of Sept., 1846, we were within a few days of the judgment!

Reader, farewell, and oh meet in glory your unworthy friend and "companion in tribulation and in hope." Amen, and Amen.

D. T. TAYLOR, Jr.

Letter from Bro. J. T. Morley.

Bro. Marsh:

We have all been sick. Our youngest child, (for we have two) has been sick nigh unto death, and is now a mere skeleton. I have been lame myself in the best of the working season—three or four weeks. But I hope soon to be where the inhabitants shall no more say I am sick, and where the lame man shall leap as an hart. I have sympathized with you in your pressing duties and pecuniary embarrassment. I have received support and consolation from your views on true faith as to the time of the Lord's coming. I think it the right position. Not that I would delay the time: it is my earnest prayer, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly." My heart is pained with every day's report of wrong and outrage with which earth is filled. O that the wickedness of the wicked might come to an end; but establish the just.

I have greatly desired to attend some of the advent meetings, but the distance of them from me and duties at home have prevented. I have longed for the social prayer circle; but people don't pray here. There is not a family in the school district in which family prayer is attended to. I am alone, yet have enjoyed the presence of God.

I have been chastened, and felt that the Lord dealt with me as with a son. I think there is a strong probability of the end coming this fall—if so, I believe that through grace I shall be gathered with the righteous. If time should continue beyond this season, I fear I shall become worldly again; but God is able to keep me until his own time is fulfilled. According to my experience, it requires a more determined perseverance in virtue and holiness to be in constant readiness for the coming of Christ, while we look for him as near, without a definite time, than when we have a definite time in our mind. In the former case we are to deny ourselves all ungodliness and worldly lusts, perhaps for a few years: in the latter only for this autumn. Now the just shall live by his faith. Faith on what? On time. How long a time? A little while. Who can tell how many days, months or seconds there are in a little while? O, we have need of patience. Were I waiting for an earthly inheritance, not knowing when I should be put in possession of it: and should thereupon ask my guardian when I should have the estate in my own hands, and he should reply, in a little while it shall all be yours—I think I should want a good deal of patience and great confidence in my guardian to wait patiently. But should he say in thirty days it shall all be yours, I could compose my mind and wait patiently. Much is said of patience in the scriptures and it is greatly needed by us all in the vexations of life: but James has spoken of patience as especially becoming to those who are looking for the coming of their Judge. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and know how the Lord blessed him for his patience: be ye also patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Yours, trusting in the God of patience and consolation, that we all be like-minded according to Christ Jesus,
JOHN T. MORLEY.
West Almond, N. Y., Sept. 16, 1846.

Bro. K. Coburn, Braintree, Vt., Sept. 28th, writes:—How unexpected the news that your brother-in-law and our former neighbor had fallen. Surely that house must be a house of mourning, as yours also must,—and yet I hope none "sorrow as those without hope." We would gladly drop a tear of sympathy and Christian affection with Sister Marsh in her oft repeated and heavy bereavements. But she knows in whom she has trusted, and will I trust, make the eternal God her refuge still.

What strange and perilous times are these last days. "As it was in the days of Noah so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." This scripture seems to be fulfilling at the present time in relation to the people in this vicinity, while there are few if any like Noah, faithful teachers of righteousness. And though all are ready to make excuse now, I believe all will be without excuse in "that day." How fearful the account of unfaithful stewards shall be rendered then. Nor rocks nor mountains shall hide them from the wrath of the Lamb.

Bro. W. Devereil, Killworth, C. W., Sept. 29th, writes:—My family have been considerably affected of late, but they are getting some better through the blessing of God. As it regards the cause, it continues about stationary. The brethren and sisters, as a general thing, are strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. I am pleased with your position on time; and I do hope that the dear brethren will make allowance for inspired and uninspired testimony. The former will stand, when the latter will be scattered to the four winds. My faith was never stronger than now, that the vision will soon speak and not lie. Ten were baptized recently, who are looking for redemption at the coming of our blessed Master.

Letter from R. R. York.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I rejoice that you are receiving assistance from day to day to publish the glad news of the kingdom at hand, in the Voice of Truth. How it gladdens my heart, to receive this messenger of love and truth from week to week. It is truly food to the enquiring mind, and to all who love the appearing of our blessed Redeemer. How different in this respect from most of the papers now published throughout the length and breadth of our land and world. In but very few, if any, is any thing said in relation to the subject of the Advent of Christ. A subject, the contemplation of which cannot but fill the heart of the real christian with overwhelming emotions of joy and gratitude. Of joy, because he feels that his trials will then be over, and that he will forever dwell with the Lord whom he has been waiting to see, and whose presence he has long desired to enjoy. Of gratitude, because his blessed Lord has ever called him from "nature's darkness into His marvelous light," and sanctified him, and made him meet to be a partaker of the inheritance of the Saints in light.

Notwithstanding this is so glorious a theme, how few of those, even who profess to be Christians, love to talk and think about it. Can such ever expect to live and reign with Christ? If they love not his appearing, how can they love to be in His presence continually. Oh, my heart is pained within me when I see and hear such persons sneer at those who love the subject, and ridicule the idea that our dear Saviour is soon to come. With what earnestness should we pray for such, that they may find mercy of the Lord in that day. Your remarks upon "Evidence of Acceptance with God" in the Voice of the 16th inst., were to me as cold water to a thirsty soul. Go on my dear Bro., and ever be faithful, giving each their portions of meat in due season; and you will be blessed.

Yours, loving the subject of Christ's speedy appearing. R. R. York. North Yarmouth, Me., Sept, 28, '46.

Bro. J. J. Porter, Buffalo, Oct. 14, writes:—Last Sabbath we were permitted to meet again on the Lake shore to attend to the ordinance of baptism. The assembly was large and attentive; reminding us of the seasons of a similar character, that we were permitted to enjoy about the "10th day of the seventh month," 1844.

The candidates were three in number, and one of them was recently converted. May the Lord continue to carry on his work. But alas, how few there are who are willing to bear reproach for Christ's sake. The multitude choose rather to have the approbation of men, and risk their eternal salvation. The ears of the many are turned away from the truth of Christ's speedy coming, by the false teaching of these last days.

May those who have been made free by the Son of God, remain so until He appears in his kingdom and glory.

Bro. J. D. Boyer, Shiremanstown, Pa., Sept. 30th, writes:—We have just returned from the Perry county camp. We had a precious time. The preachers who took part in the meetings were Br'n Osler, Harlett, Adams and myself. Three professed conversions, five were baptised, and the saints were shouting happy.

Bro. Rodenbaugh, attended on Sabbath; but there was no opportunity for him to improve, on account of his short stay with us; sickness in his family rendered it necessary for him to return home the same evening, (he is a Christian preacher.) He seemed to be quite interested in the truths presented. Five persons tented out with us, whose agns taken together amounts to 400 years. The friends in Perry would be happy to have a visit from Bro. J. J. Porter.

Crumbs for the Children.

My beloved is mine, and I am his.—If a man love me he will keep my words.—He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings.—In the world ye shall have tribulation; but he of good cheer, I have overcome the world.—OUR SAVIOR.

I see thee not, but love thy name
Better than health, wealth, friends or fame;
For thee all idols I resign,
And joy to know that thou art mine.
Thy love requires me at thy call
To sacrifice my life, my all;
For me thou shed'st thy precious blood,
And liv'st to plead my cause with God.
Yes, Lord, thou bought'st me with a price,
And school'd me in thy precepts choice,
And cast me in the mould of love,
And drew my heart this world above.
Round thee, the true life-giving vine,
May all the branches sweetly twine,
That borne and nourished from the root,
They may abide and bring much fruit.
Gather me not with any sect
Who, Jesus, like the Jews, reject;
For when the Judgment sweeps the land,
Their creeds and compacts will not stand.
But those who shun the haunts of pride,
And in the Lord by faith abide,
Will in the end victorious prove,
And share the banquet of his love.
Out from the tents of sin depart,
God dwelleth with the pure in heart;
The righteous Lord loves the upright,
Who in his word and ways delight.
O how I pant and thirst to see
The dawn of God's great Jubilee;
Then those who sleep in Christ shall rise
And find their long lost Paradise.

A LITTLE ONE.

Fearful Mortality.

Accounts from India show that between the 14th and 23d of June, the Cholera at Kurachee had swept thousands to the shades of death. The Bombay Times says:

"Before midnight nine of the Eighty-sixth were at rest; and men began to be borne into hospital in such numbers that it was difficult to make arrangements for their reception. It was a fearful night. With morning came the tidings that the pestilence was overspreading the town, and fifty had in twenty-four hours fallen victims. The Eighty-sixth were the earliest, and continued to be the severest sufferers. They and her Majesty's Sixtieth had for six months been in tents close to each other; the day after the disease appeared, they were marched out for change of air, and encamped by the sea-shore, near Clifton. The Rifles were next attacked; then the Fusiliers; the Artillery and Native Infantry began to suffer after this. For five fearful days did the destroyer lay his hand most heavily upon them; and in this time more than a thousand men were carried to their graves! The pestilence now began to abate—it had done its worst, and seemed about to withdraw; within less than a fortnight 2000 Europeans, including 815 fighting men were carried away; 600 Native soldiers, and 7000 of the camp-followers and inhabitants of the town, had been hurried into eternity. So sudden was death with some, that they were seized, cramp'd, collapsed, dead, almost as fast as I have written the words. Previous health and strength were no guarantees; men attending the burial of their comrades were attacked, borne to the hospital, and buried themselves the next morning. Pits were dug in the church-yard morning and evening; sewn up in their beddings, coffinless, they were laid aside, one service read over all.—Public works were suspended during the 15th and 16th. Medicine seemed powerless: nothing that medical science could suggest took effect—they were, in fact, dealing with corpses. It was not until the third day that medicine assumed any sway; since it has done so, I should say two-thirds of the cases have been saved.

Christian Graces.

"Still exhort the brethren that they come behind in no gift, waiting the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; and above all, that they have fervent charity among themselves." "for charity covereth a multitude of sins." Perhaps there is no grace that sits with more comeliness on the Christian, than humility, and I have sometimes feared that among us who are looking for the Lord, that there has been a lack of that grace. Perhaps we have been exalted through the abundance of revelations. It is said that knowledge has the tendency to puff up. Meekness and gentleness, what precious gems in the Christian character. How beautiful do they look, as ornaments hung about the neck, and developed in all our intercourse with our fellow men. I have often thought that Paul could make no stronger appeal than this to his brethren,— "I beseech you, therefore, by the meekness and gentleness of Christ." I love to contemplate that heavenly country that the saints are to inherit, and the character of the inhabitants: there shall be nothing to hurt or harm in all God's holy mountain; the people shall be all righteous. These blessed promises come like the refreshing shower to the soul of the pilgrim, while looking to his expected home. When anything arises in the heart contrary to love, how should we fear, lest the kingdom should come, and we be accounted not worthy to possess it.

Invitation to go on Pilgrimage.

BY JAMES MONTGOMERY.

Come let us go to heaven;—the way.
Like darkness, opens into day,
When, from the turning point of night,
Breaks the first beam of morning light.

Come let us go to heaven:—our guide
Is Christ who lived, is Christ who died,
And rose again:—his staff and rod,
Through life and death, will lead to God.

Come let us go to heaven:—forsake
Sin, death and hell; and gladly take
His easy yoke, his welcome load,
And brave the dangers of the road.

Come let us go to heaven:—and press
On through the howling wilderness:
Yet fear not, little flock! though foes
Without, within, your course oppose.

Come let us go to heaven:—no power,
Not Satan raging to devour,
Nor all his hosts can harm; for ye,
Through Christ, shall more than conquerors be.

Come let us go to heaven:—and meet,
Once and forever, at his feet;
Yea, in his kingdom, as his own,
Sit down with him upon his throne.

Can these things be?—they ARE,—are sure
To all who to the end endure;
While Unbelief cries—Can they be?
Come let us go to heaven, and see.

THE RETURN OF THE JEWS.

BY J. LITCH.

No objection has more weight with many against the speedy coming of Christ, than the prevailing belief, that the Jews are to be restored to Palestine, before the appearing of the Lord. Is that objection valid? To settle it, let us appeal to the law and the testimony.

I am met at the outset with a difficulty. Many who make this objection, (and it is that class I expect and design principally to reach in this article,) are in the dark upon the plain Bible doctrine, that "the meek shall inherit the earth:" as taught, Matt. 5, 5; and in the 37th Psalm. They do not believe, for the simple reason that their attention was never called to the fact, that the Bible teaches, that the earth restored, is to be the everlasting inheritance of the saints, and that here God will bring his own Tabernacle, or dwelling place, and "dwell in very deed with men on the earth." See Rev. 21st chapter. They do not know, because they never reflected, while reading the promises to Abraham and his seed, that God promised them the land of Canaan, "for an everlasting (or eternal) possession."—(Gen. 17: 8.

If I can persuade the reader to have sufficient faith in God's word, to believe he would raise up Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob from the dead, to inherit the land he promised to them for an everlasting possession, I should think the way very clear to enter on the discussion of the question of the Jew's return. What say you, reader, can you believe such a proposition from the mouth of God? If not, then I beseech you, pray, like the apostles, "Lord, increase (my) faith." Do, my dear friend, read Acts, 7th chapter, where Stephen, just before his death, declares, that God gave Abraham no inheritance in the land of Canaan, "no, not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." Please read also, St. Paul's account of the same thing, as given in Heb. 11th chapter, where he affirms of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that "these all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth."

The doctrine which the Bible every where holds out, that God will give the earth to his saints for an eternal inheritance, when once fully embraced, changes the face of things wonderfully, and causes many portions of the Bible, before dark and obscure, to appear in an entirely new light. Then we can see no difficulty in God's dwelling "in very deed with men on the earth;" when the "earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea;" then the wilderness shall blossom as the rose, it shall blossom abundantly and rejoice even with joy and singing,—there being nothing to hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain. I should be glad to go with my reader, into this question of the inheritance of the saints, at large, but my limits forbid it. I have merely thrown out these few remarks and references, to set him on the track, that he may follow out the idea at his leisure: while for the present we will turn our attention to the Jews.

DO THE SCRIPTURES PROMISE A RETURN OF ISRAEL?

They certainly do. Proof. Isa. 11: 12. "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." This must be fulfilled in futurity and under Christ, the "root of Jesse."

The next proof I will present is, Jer. 3: 18. "In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers." This also, must be a yet future gathering, because all nations are to be gathered to Jerusalem at the same time. This never has been done at any gathering which has transpired; it must, therefore, be fulfilled in futurity.

Jer. 33: 7, 8. "And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them as at the first. "And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me." True, this text is supposed by many to have had its accomplishment at the return from the Babylonish captivity. But I cannot think so; because they were not cleansed from sin, either nationally, or individually, at that time; but they will be cleansed when this text has its fulfilment.

Again, Ezek. 37: 21—25. "And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

"And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. "Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

"And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall all have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them." David has never been their king, nor yet any of his seed since the Babylonian captivity; it remains, therefore, that these promises should be yet accomplished. Texts of this sort can be multiplied to any desirable extent; but those already quoted, are sufficient to establish any fact or doctrine which can be established by Scripture.

WHO IS MEANT BY ISRAEL?

I shall admit the term to signify the natural posterity of Jacob. This is the natural import of the term, and I can see no reason why we should dissent from that use of it.

WHEN WILL THEY RETURN?

Not until the 2d Advent of Christ. It will be seen by a careful reading of the foregoing texts, and their contexts, that when Israel and Judah return again, it is to enjoy the kingdom of David, under the Messiah. For instance: Isa. 11 teaches, "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people." Jer. 3d declares, "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord." &c. Jer. 33: 15 says, "In those days, and at that time, will I cause the branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land." And Ezek. 37th maintains a union of all the tribes under one king, and that king is to be David, or the beloved. "David my servant shall be king over them."

When the last king of David's house went into captivity, the Lord declared, Ezek. 21: 25—27, "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high: I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is: and I will give it him." He whose right it is to have that throne, is Christ. Isa. 9: 6, 7. "Unto us a child is born." &c. The government shall be on his shoulder.—on the throne of David, and his kingdom." &c. So also Luke 1: 32, 33: "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord (God) shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

These are enough to prove Jesus Christ the rightful heir to David's throne. To occupy it, he has been raised from the dead to die no more. Hear Peter, Acts 2: 29—32: "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on the throne; he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption."

It is clear, then, that the David of Ezekiel is the Christ of Peter. And being David's seed according to the flesh, his flesh was raised from the dead to reign as the seed of David, on David's throne. The throne of David has not yet been given to Christ; for although he went in triumph into Jerusalem at his first advent, and was proclaimed "king of Israel," and "Son of David" by the multitude, yet by the rulers, or Jewish builders, the chief corner stone was set at naught: and he declared in consequence of it, "Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits of it." Matt. 21: 42, 43. He is therefore to return again and gather Israel to enjoy that kingdom. 1st. They can have no kingdom without a king. 2d. They can have no king before he whose right it is comes, and God gives it to him: that right belongs to Christ. Therefore, 3d. They cannot return to enjoy those promises we have contemplated, before the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

WHAT PORTION OF THE JEWS ARE TO RETURN?

"All of the house of Israel, even all of it." Ezek. 36: 10. "The whole house of Israel." Ezek. 37: 11. "All Israel." Rom. 11: 26. What do those terms mean? They must mean one of three things. All the Jews who ever lived; 2d. All the Jews alive on the earth at the time of fulfilment; or 3d. All the holy and faithful Jews who ever lived. I beg the reader's careful attention to this point. Every thing in this discussion turns here. Does the phrase, "the whole house of Israel," mean all the Jews who ever lived? Clearly not. For many Jews have died in unbelief of Jesus being the Christ; and Christ positively assured them that, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins," "and where I am ye cannot come." John 8: 21, 24. He also declared to the Jews, that they should see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and they themselves thrust out. Luke 13th. But at his return, All Israel is to be gathered and saved, and enjoy the land, under David their king, in one kingdom. Therefore the phrase, "Whole house of Israel," does not mean all the Jews who ever lived.

And precisely the same argument will hold good in reference to all the Jews of the age when the return takes place, with this addition; the Lord declares, Jer. 3: 14—"I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and bring you to Zion." Now this small remnant is not all the Jews alive. And besides this, the Lord by Isa. 10: 22, has said, "Though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant of them shall return." A remnant can by no logic be made to mean the whole.

We are left, therefore, to this, that the phrase, "Whole house of Israel," signifies all the faithful Jews of all ages. And to this agrees the words of Paul, Rom. 9: 6-8. "Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel: neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed."

How clear: "All Israel," does not mean all who are descended from Israel, or Jacob, "but the children of promise are accounted for the seed." Again, Gal. 4: 28—"Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of the promise." Those Jews who are of faith, therefore, are blessed with faithful Abraham.

HOW WILL ISRAEL BE GATHERED?

By raising them from the dead, &c.

Ezek. 37: 11-14—"Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts. Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it, saith the Lord."

This passage is an explanation of the preceding vision,—of the valley full of dry bones. The denial that this text teaches the resurrection of the dead, from their graves, was the error of the Sadducees, of Christ's time. They denied the resurrection of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, to enjoy the promises of God. To deny the resurrection, they must have taken the ground that this text, together with Dan. 12: 2, and Isa. 25th, only meant a national and political resurrection, and temporal return to their own land. From all such Sadduceism, good Lord deliver us.

Beside this positive promise of a resurrection of the whole house of Israel, to return to their own land, there are several collateral arguments.

1. The promise of an inheritance of the land was given to Abraham as a personal promise, independently of his children, for an everlasting possession. Gen. 13: 17—"Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee." Also, Gen. 15: 7, 8—"And he said unto him, I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it. And he said, Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?"

It was promised also, to the seed of Abraham for an everlasting possession. Gen. 13: 15—"For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever." See Gen. 17: 8 above. The promise was renewed to Isaac and Jacob; to each of them personally, and to their seed. "Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee: for unto thee, and unto thy seed I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I swear unto Abraham thy father." Gen. 26: 3. "And behold, the Lord stood above it, and said, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed." Gen. 28: 13.

Now it is certain, an everlasting inheritance cannot be enjoyed in a state of mortality and corruption. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are dead, and many generations of their seed. If that promise is fulfilled at all, it must be by their resurrection.

2. The promise of restoration was made as a personal favor to those very individuals who went out of the land, into captivity: and not merely to a certain generation of their descendants who should be alive at the time of return.

Jer. 24: 5, 6—"Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good. For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land; and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up."

It seems from this text and context, that altho' the righteous and the wicked were alike sent into captivity, yet, God made a distinction, and will yet make that distinction manifest, by returning one part of them, and not the other. The good went into captivity for their own good, and that of others, and will return. The wicked went into captivity for their punishment, or reformation, and those who did not reform will not return.

Another text which clearly teaches the same thing, is Ezek. 37: 25—"And they (Israel) shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant; wherein your fathers have dwelt; they (your fathers) shall dwell therein, even they (your fathers) and their children (each generation from the days of Abraham) FOR EVER, and my servant David shall be their prince FOR EVER."

WHAT WILL BE THE CONDITION OF THE LAND WHEN ISRAEL IS RESTORED?

(1.) It will be like the garden of Eden.—Ezek. 36: 35—"And they shall say, This land that was desolate, is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited."

(2.) The Tabernacle of God,—the New Jerusalem will be there. Ezek. 37: 27—"My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people." Rev. 21: 1, 2—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Can any one read these two quotations, and not see that Ezekiel and John both speak of the same state of holiness and everlasting blessedness?

The New Testament view of God's promises to Israel is, that he will raise the dead to fulfil them.

Acts 28: 20—"For the hope of Israel, am I bound with this chain." Acts 23: 6—"Of the hope of the resurrection of the dead am I called in question." Acts 24: 14, 15—"But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." Acts 26: 6-8—"And now I stand, and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"

What single text has the New Testament, which shows any other hope for the twelve tribes, but the resurrection? Is it replied, that Rom. 11: 26, teaches that when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in, "all Israel shall be saved?" I reply, that this is the very thing. Every saint of the Jewish race will be glorified and return to Zion, with everlasting joy on their heads. "Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation; ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end." Isa. 45: 17.

No language can be stronger and more plain, as to the salvation to come on Israel. "Everlasting salvation—world without end." Mark that.

Deny that "the meek shall inherit the earth;" and maintain the prevailing modern doctrine, that instantaneously, at the second appearing of Christ, the conflagration and utter annihilation of the earth is to take place, and the righteous be removed to heaven, to be there for ever; and with such a mind, of course, this argument will go for nothing. But admit that according to God's promise we shall have a new heaven and a new earth, which the meek shall inherit, and all is plain.

THE JEWISH SAINTS WILL NOT BE THE EXCLUSIVE HEIRS OF THE LAND OF PROMISE.

"The remnant according to the election of grace" from among the Jews may be beloved for the father's sake, but still it remains true, "that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel." Eph. 3: 6. It is also true, "If ye (Gentiles) be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3: 29. It will eternally remain a truth, that when God gathers Israel and Judah to their own land, "Strangers (Gentile) shall be joined with them, and cleave to the house of Jacob." Isa. 14: 1. It will also prove a fact, that "at that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart." Jer. 3: 17. Mark how this agrees with Rev. 7: 4, 9-17—"And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel. . . . After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshiped God, saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

From these references we learn, that national distinctions will exist in the immortal state; and that every nation will be there represented among the redeemed. Yet it is clearly stated, they are not there because they belong to particular nations, but the blood of Christ availed, and they suffered for his sake. "The Jew first, and then also the Gentile." Christ is the head, the saints of all nations are the body. God has provided for all the redeemed the same salvation—the same inheritance; and to this inheritance he points them by his promise, and this is to be fulfilled at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

Interesting Items in History.

The earth and system of nature, were created B. C. 4155 in the autumn: the trees and plants were created bearing fruit. There was rejoicing in heaven on the occasion, and the time is supposed to correspond with the time of the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles when all the Jews were required to rejoice seven days.

The flood came on the earth in the Autumn of B. C. 2500: and in the autumn of B. C. 2499, on the anniversary of the creation, Noah removed the covering from the ark, and beheld dry land, and without doubt, rejoiced with his family on the occasion.

About the year B. C. 900, at the same season, that is, on the 15th day of the 7th month, the splendid and sacred Temple of Jerusalem, was dedicated, and the bright glory of God filled the Temple, and the people rejoiced seven days.

At the same time of the year, B. C. 455, the Medo-Persian king, Ahasuerus, (or Artaxerxes), issued a decree to restore and rebuild Jerusalem, and gave liberty to all the Jews to return to their own country: and in B. C. 406 the sacred Temple, being completed and the city rebuilt, the Jews observed the Feast of Tabernacles with great rejoicing, such as had not been since the days of Joshua.

In the autumn of the year B. C. 2 (probably on the 15th of the 7th month, but not ascertained,) the Saviour was born and a multitude of the heavenly host was seen and heard rejoicing and giving glory to God. On the year following, an eclipse of the moon occurred, soon after which, Herod died; (having a little while before, slain all the children in Bethelhem, from two years old and under) and this event, according to Josephus, was thirty years after the battle of Actium. During this celebrated battle, which occurred in August, B. C. 31, and marked the commencement of the reign of Augustus Cæsar, the most remarkable eclipse of the sun on record occurred: and the time of its occurrence is fully established by astronomical calculations, as well as historical dates. Augustus reigned 44 years, lacking a few days, and at his death, the reign of Tiberius commenced which was in A. D. 14: and this event was also marked by an eclipse of the moon, which occurred a few days after, and the date of the historical record thereof is confirmed by astronomical tables.

In the spring of the 15th year of Tiberius, which of course must have been in A. D. 29, John the Baptist came into the country about the river Jordan, preaching and baptising—being then 30 years old: for the Jewish law would not admit his entering on his ministry under that age. And in the autumn of the same year, Jesus being thirty years old, (for there was only about six months difference in their ages) was manifested as the MESSIAH: being baptised, and then visibly anointed by the Holy Spirit of God, and acknowledged by a voice from heaven. He soon after commenced preaching, and saying "The time is fulfilled," alluding to the 69 weeks or 483 years from the going forth of the decree before mentioned, according to Dan. 9: 27. This event must have occurred in the 7th Jewish month, (corresponding to our second autumnal moon) because his crucifixion occurred on the 14th of the first month, which event was predicted to take place in the midst (middle) of the 70th week, which must have been three and a half years from his manifestation as Messiah (or "Anointed.") This proves the crucifixion to have occurred A. D. 33, which point has been for many centuries unsettled.—Scientific American.

"Be of One Mind."—2 Cor. 13: 11.

Paul in his farewell address to the church of God at Corinth, exhorts the brethren to be of one mind—to live in peace—assuring them that the God of love and peace shall be with them.

In his epistle to the Saints at Ephesus, he "beseeches them to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love—endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

In his epistle to "all the saints which are in Christ Jesus, with the bishops and deacons at Philippi," he touches this interesting point thus—"only let your conversation be as cometh the gospel of Christ—that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel." Again, "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind." In "preaching the gospel of Christ to them that were at Rome also," he exhorted the saints to "glorify God with one mind with one mouth." Hear our lovely Master, as he offers up earnest prayer to his Father, perfumed with the very essence of love,—"Neither pray I for them alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word—that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us—that the world may believe that thou hast sent me; and the glory thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one." It was this heavenly spirit of oneness, that ruled in the hearts of the early saints at Jerusalem, when "the multitude of believers were of one heart and one soul"—"steadfast in the apostles' doctrine, in fellowship, in breaking of bread and in prayers;" and by this their enemies knew they belonged to Jesus! God grant that we may drink deeper of that same spirit! "Now I beseech you brethren," says Paul to the church of God at Corinth, "by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

But how shall we "be of one mind?" Be Christ-like. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus,"—"He loved us—he humbled himself for our sakes—he laid down his life for us!" So ought ye to love one another—"Be of the same mind one towards another—mind not high things—but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits. Let no man glory in men—let "Christ be all." "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves." Let us do as Paul did—"forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forward unto those things which are before, press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore as many as be perfect, be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you—nevertheless whereunto we have already attained let us walk by the same rule—let us mind the same thing." May we pray as Paul prayed for his brethren, that our "love may abound more and more." That faith which does not work by love, is not the one faith that pleases God. In every particular point we may not see alike—let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind, as it respects minor questions; but God forbid that we shall sacrifice the Holy Spirit's union for unsettled points in theory. As well might we talk of the leaf giving nourishment to the branch instead of the vine. "We are members one of another—branches of Christ the living vine."

O, for that heavenly-mindedness—those Philadelphia bonds of brotherhood, which united the primitive saints! and O that heaven may smile upon us—our enemies be ashamed—and we stand before the Son of Man with confidence at his coming.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—Judge Edmonds remarked, while sentencing Charles Thomas to death, that it was the fifth case of murder that had come before him within a few weeks, and few persons can have failed to observe that the crime of murder is rapidly and fearfully increasing. From nearly all parts of the country accounts of horrible murders are pouring in upon us, and the frightful number is only exceeded by the atrocity of their character. It is true, that among the mass of our busy population these things soon fade from their remembrance, but there are those who look on with concern and dismay, anxiously inquiring whether there is any remedy for this state of things.—Tribune.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, NOVEMBER 4, 1846.

The lengthy article in this number, on the 'Return of the Jews,' by J. Litch, is taken from the 'Extra Herald.' It is unanswerable. Let your unbelieving neighbors see the light it communicates.

Meeting at Seneca Falls.

This meeting, like several others recently held in other places which we have attended, was crowned with the rich blessing of Him whom we love and serve,—the Lord our Righteousness. We can say but little if anything more of it than we have lately said of other like meetings. The brethren in attendance who preached the Word, were J. C. Bywater, J. Wendall, S. G. Clark, E. R. Pinney, and the writer. Bro. Clark is from the State of Maine, has been spending a few weeks at Syracuse and vicinity, and expects soon to leave for Wisconsin.—He is much devoted to the good cause, and we hope will prove a blessing to it wherever his lot may be cast. We were happy to find the health of Bro. Pinney rather on the gain. He is not well however. He is yet so far from possessing his usual health and strength as to be able to stand but a little part of the time while addressing the people. He is situated among kind brethren, who, we were rejoiced to find, so far as we had opportunity to learn, were understandingly and faithfully engaged in the cause of the Lord.

Judging from the fervent prayers, and spirited exhortations of visiting brethren, during the meeting, we conclude that the Lord yet has living witnesses of his truth in the several places where those brethren are located. May they live in such a manner, at home and abroad, as to be living epistles to the truth, known and read of all men. We have no fellowship for that religion which shines only on the Sabbath, at protracted meetings, conferences, and general gatherings of the church. The sects, for a number of years past, have been overstocked with this kind of religion, and all the while have been sinking into corruption, and under the displeasure of God. There is danger of our becoming of the same kind, and falling under the same condemnation; the only way to avoid it is, to keep ourselves daily, at home as well as abroad, in the love of God, looking for the mercy of God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

There is another error, into which we are in great danger of falling at this trying moment. It is in being governed too much by our feelings. A very large portion of the religion of the day is made to consist in good feeling. Hence, when a member of the church becomes backslidden from God, or the church has departed from the right way, the object is to try to create an excitement, somehow, that the backsliding brother or sister, or church, may be made to feel well, feel happy, &c. Then religion is supposed to be revived, and flourish again. But when the protracted meeting has closed, or the combustible materials which heated up the feelings for a few brief days of excitement, are all consumed, poor exhausted human nature sinks far below its natural state of good feeling, and the person or church again loses the religion it but a few days before possessed. With such a system of religion the church and the world for a few years past have been and are even now cursed; and it would be no marvel if its unhappy influence is still felt among us.

We do not oppose good and joyful feelings, when produced by right causes, such as the Scriptures justify, viz:—doing right. 'Whosoever looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a DOER of the work, this man shall be blessed in the deed.' The blessing, or good and joyful feelings, according to this testimony, is the unavoidable result, or precious fruit, of obedience, of doing right. Let a person do right and no man can destroy his peace: it will be permanent, based upon the assurance of having done right, in all things. This is the kind of religion that we would urge upon the serious consideration of our brethren at this momentous crisis. Be not so much concerned about how you feel as what you do. Remember that a particular state of feeling is no where in the Bible made a test of our acceptance with God. Were this the case, then we might expect to find such sentiments as these expressed in that book—Men and brethren, what must we feel to be saved?—Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for he that feels that he is a Christian shall never fall—Blessed are they that feel happy, for they shall have right to the tree of life, and shall enter through the gates into the city. This is as Scripture should read to be suited to much of the religion of these last days.—But the religion of the Bible teaches the sinner to enquire,—'Good Master, what must I do to inherit eternal life?'—'What must we do to be saved?'—'If ye do these things, ye shall never fall.' And, 'Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter through the gates into the city.'

Let it be remembered that doing the commandments does not consist exclusively in our first work of repentance, submitting to the ordinances of the house of God, and occasionally attending a conference, or protracted meeting, and such like things. No, no, this is not all: there are more weighty matters of the law of God than these, for our daily observance. Our words, our thoughts, our passions, our appetites, our acts, day and night, at home and abroad, at all times and places, and under all circumstances, should be brought into full subjection to the will of God, his written word. Study to obey that in all things, and your feet will stand upon that rock against which the gates of hell cannot prevail, and your joy will be full and inexpressible here, and you will be found worthy an admission into the kingdom of God. For 'not every one who saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven.'

At the close of our forenoon services on the Sabbath, we repaired to the water; and saw Bro. Bywater baptize five humble disciples of Christ. It was a joyful moment, and reminded us of former days of baptizing and rejoicing, when hundreds were turning to the Lord. While our absent Lord shall seem to his waiting children to tarry, may he often favor them with such reviving scenes. And may those who put on Christ at this time by baptism, be found worthy at his coming to have a part in the first resurrection.

In reference to our communion season, Sabbath afternoon, it was good for us to be there. And when in the evening we came to take leave of these dear saints, while their meeting was still in progress, and each soul full of love and 'that blessed hope,' we could say,—

'O, could I stay with friends so kind,
How would it cheer my joyful mind—'

But duty called us away, and we parted in full expectation of soon meeting again, not in this mortal state, on those shores of sin and death, but in a state of immortality—

'Where, in that happy, happy land,
We'll no more take the parting hand.'

The advent faith, by the great mass of believers in Scotland, as Bro. Hutchinson says, 'is held as a cold and lifeless theory.' The same is true of England. Let us take heed, lest we fall also.

The Little Horn Prevailing.

'I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given unto the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.' Dan. 7: 21, 22.

That this prediction is being fulfilled to the letter, in our own country, no one acquainted with the history of the Catholics will deny. Their Colleges, Cathedrals, Churches, and Jesuitical institutions of every description, with the rapidity almost of Jonah's gourd, are springing up in every important town and city in the United States and the Canadas. They are doing more in this respect than all the Protestant sects. As a specimen, we will show what they are doing in one Diocese. Says the Pittsburg Chronicle:—'Fifteen new Catholic churches are now in progress of erection in the Diocese of Pittsburg, all of which, it is expected, will be ready for service during the present year. Arrangements are also made for commencing about ten others early next season.'

In England the same power is prevailing. London papers state that the converts to the church of Rome in England are on the increase. Within a few weeks prior to the sailing of the Cambria, five more of the established church have conformed; also Dr. Duke, of Brighton, a physician of some repute, and four country gentlemen of ancient names and possessors of large fortunes.'

Though this anti-christian power is now prevailing throughout the entire world, her doom is certain. The Revelator clearly points out her present character, and destruction soon to come upon her. 'For she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.' Rev. 18: 7, 8.

Truth Will Out.

Some of our readers will doubtless remember we contended, on our separation from the 'Christian Palladium,' in '43, as we then expressed it, 'that my faith in the coming of the Lord was the cause, the moving cause' why the conductors of that paper wished my connection with it dissolved, and why they treated me with the unchristian kindness they did. This was denied; and doubtless the reason was, it was too much for 'the Christians' then to acknowledge that they made a belief and an avowal of the glorious doctrine of the second advent of Christ in '43, a sufficient cause for casting me off as they did. Such a step was then a violation of the most sacred principles of their faith. But they did this very thing, and now, accidentally or purposely, acknowledge that our faith in the advent of Christ was the cause of their unkind acts. Hence in the Report of the Association recently assembled (Oct 7) at the Palladium office, Union Mills, N. Y., it is said—

'Elder Marsh became so deeply engaged in the subject of the Savior's advent in 1843, that the Committee believed the interests of the Association and of truth would be subserved by placing the direction of the publication in other hands.'

The Report of the Association, with this acknowledgement, comes officially signed by the chairman, Elder J. Hazen, with whom we labored hard in '43 to prove what was then denied, but now admitted in this official report. We deeply regretted to witness the dark corruption of this body about the time of our leaving it, and our regrets are much increased upon seeing no signs of repentance manifested by its members, but a disposition to cover up their deeds of wrong by adding sin to sin.

The lapse of three years has not in the least changed our mind relative to the very unjust act of this body. It is painful indeed to say that it is guilty of the known violation of the most sacred principles of justice and truth. We wish its members no ill, but ardently desire and pray that they may yet see their sad condition, repent of their wrongs, and be ready to meet in peace our soon coming Lord.

Thoughts on the Parables.

The parable that we propose briefly to notice now is recorded in Luke 14: 16-24.

"Then said he unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many: and sent his servant at supper-time to say to them that were bidden,—Come, for all things are now ready. And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. So the servant came and showed his lord these things. Then the master of the house, being angry, said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. And the servant said, lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. For I say unto you, that none of those men who were bidden shall taste of my supper."

We think it will not do to apply this parable, as some do, exclusively to the proclamation of the kingdom at hand, by Bro. Miller and others in these last days. And

1. Because we have no evidence that it was designed by the Savior to be thus applied. We should never give the words of another, especially of our Lord, a meaning for which we have no other authority than our own imperfect judgment. One great error of some in the advent movement has been, to try to make this work the special fulfillment of very many prophecies, parables, and plain teachings of the Bible, which either have a general application, or refer to other events. This we think has been the case with the parable under consideration. It has been wrested from its true meaning, its simple design, and wrongly applied to the movement, which doubtless has, as a general work, been of God, and is justified by other portions of his word.

2. The parable is not a perfect type of the advent movement of these last times. The servant in the first place was sent out to tell those who were bidden to come, &c. The churches, of our day, had not been bidden before the commencement of the advent movement: they were in darkness on this glorious question, and the proclamation of the coming of Christ, was the first bidding. Hence they are not a prominent object in the parable, as some suppose.

Again, the servant in the parable was sent out but three times. But there have been more than this number of prominent movements in the advent ranks since the commencement of this good cause. One very prominent move was made by our brethren in England before the work commenced in this country. In this country, we may count—1st. The proclamation of '43. 2d. The tarrying of the vision. 3d.—The tenth day cry. And 4th. The proclamation of '46 or '47. Thus, it will be seen, that in this movement, at least five goings out of the servant could easily be found. The parable, therefore, in its most literal interpretation, must have its application to some other event or events than the advent movement of our day.

Other weighty objections to the application of this parable to the advent movement might be given, but what we have already offered must answer for the present. We will now try to give the true design or meaning of the parable.

The doctrine this parable is designed to illustrate and enforce is clearly taught in the preceding part of the chapter in which it is found. Christ was at a Jewish feast when he uttered it. He tells the guests, when they are bidden to such feasts to take the lowest seats, instead of the highest, thereby teaching them a lesson of humility. He also told his host,—'When thou makest a dinner or a supper,' or 'a feast,' to 'call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind,' assuring him that he should 'be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.' On hearing this, 'one of them that sat at meat said, Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.' In direct answer to this, Christ gives this parable, as the language of the very next verse clearly shows. It reads,—'Then said he [Christ] unto him, A certain man made a great supper and bade many,' &c.

Now, the point of this parable evidently is this, to show Jews and Gentiles, of every age, from the time the parable was uttered to the end of time, the danger of treating the urgent and repeated invitations of the gospel with neglect, and that, as a consequence of such neglect, they will be rejected from the kingdom of God; or, be denied the blessing of 'eating bread in the kingdom of God,' of being 'recompensed at the resurrection of the just.' AS the bidden guests, in the parable, were prohibited the privilege of partaking of the 'supper,' 'dinner,' or 'feast,' because they treated the invitation with neglect, so, LIKEWISE, all who treat the invitations of the gospel with neglect, will be forever shut out of the kingdom of God. This we think is the gist of this parable.

If there are subordinate points in this parable, the following may be some of them.

The first invitation of the servant 'to them that were bidden,' may represent the invitation of the gospel to the Jews. They emphatically had been bidden, by the prophets, which is not true of any other people. And in consequence of their rejection of this glorious invitation, as a nation they have been rejected, can never taste of the blessings of eternal life.

The second going out, or 'going out quickly,' may represent the quick, energetic movement of the apostles and the primitive disciples of Christ, in spreading the gospel invitation to the Gentile world. Taking all things into the account, the want of facilities for traveling, the opposition of the times, the rapid spread of the gospel in apostolical times is without a parallel in the history of the church.—'They went everywhere, preaching the Word,' and 'their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.' In fact they went out 'quickly,' and into those very places represented in the parable by 'streets and lanes of the city,' and brought in 'the poor, and the lame,' of the Gentile world who would hear their message.

The third and last going out of the servant, may cover the proclamation of the gospel from the commencement of the Reformation by Martin Luther to the close of the Gospel dispensation.

The word 'supper' is in the parable, and doubtless represents the blessings of the kingdom of God, when it shall come. 'Supper-time' is also in the parable, and may represent the very short time the whole gospel dispensation would occupy before the setting up of the everlasting kingdom. At its first proclamation it was said, 'The end of all things is at hand'—'The night is far spent, the day is at hand,' and like expressions, indicative of what the real facts were, viz; that the last dispensation, or proclamation of the gospel was then being made, giving to the world the last invitation to the eternal blessings of the everlasting kingdom of God. The invitations of the gospel dispensation, to the joys of the coming kingdom of God, are like an invitation 'at supper-time' to a literal feast or supper.

Having expressed our views, in short, on these parables, we will now say to those brethren whose communications we have laid over, and which called forth these remarks, that if after examining what we have said, they shall see cause to dissent from our expositions of these parables, and wish briefly to express their opinions upon them, they shall be heard through our columns. We hope, however, that they will see no cause for dissenting from the view we have taken, for we are very confident it is correct, and justified by the plain Word and the facts in the case.

Letter from Bro. J. V. Himes.

BIRMINGHAM, (Eng.) Oct. 2, '46.

My Dear Brother Marsh;—I have often thought of you and your dear fellow laborers in Western New York. Our fellowship has always been sweet and uninterrupted. Our labors though hard, have had their comforts, while we have seen that they have not been in vain in the Lord.

The present more than ever is the trying time. He that stands fast, and resists the temptations of a worldly church, and an alluring world, in this time, will have to pray much, and put all his trust in the living God.

God is trying us also by taking from us one beloved brother after another. Bro. Fitch is gone. And now our Bro. Barry is no more! Ah, how I loved these brethren. Our hearts were one in labor, suffering, and hope.

Our Mission to this country has not been in vain. We have seen some fruits of our labors, both in conversions and in the administration of comfort to the tried and suffering ones who cherished the blessed hope before we made their acquaintance. The trials of God's people here, in many respects, are similar to ours in America. Our hope and faith are scoffed at in a similar manner by the spiritualists, and the whole tide of the world is against them.

We expect to return by the Great Western Oct. 31st. I have no time to say more—for a general account of our mission, see our correspondence in the Herald. Love to ALL.

Yours truly,

J. V. HIMES.

P. S. Bro. Hutchinson is laboring successfully in Scotland. He will remain in this country till spring. Bro. Brown is with me, and is well. He will return with me.

Time of the Advent.

There are several facts concerning definite time, which seem to be passed over with indifference by a majority of the advent writers; but which seem to me to be of vast importance, and of a very convincing character—though it is but of late, within a few days, that they have exhibited themselves to my mind with such force and perspicuity; and those facts, with your permission, I will essay to enforce on the minds of my advent brethren—for I believe it is our duty to communicate the light which we receive, after we have canvassed it thoroughly and proved it that it is truth—for by so doing we may edify one another to profit.

Many of the brethren write with much seeming confidence about the evidence that Christ will come in 1846 or '47. I believe there is the most convincing evidence that he will come in 1846, but see no evidence that he will come in '47, any more than '48 or '49. I can see no evidence at all for any year but 1846. And if that event does not transpire this year, with only what light I now have, I can only look for it at some indefinite time within "this generation," commencing 1780. Let us examine some of the periods of prophetic time, according to our present light. So far as I know, we are all agreed respecting the meaning and application of the "midst of the week"—the "69" and "70 weeks"—the "2300 days"—the "time, times, and a half"—the "1290" and the "1335 days." Now, we understand from history, astronomy and Scriptures, that the Messiah was cut off in the "midst (or middle) of the week"—in the 4th of the 202 Olympiad—1746 of the Julian period—A. D. 33 $\frac{1}{2}$, true era, being at the end of 69 $\frac{1}{2}$ weeks, or 486 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, cut off from the 2300 prophetic days, or literal years. Then 1813 $\frac{1}{2}$ years would remain to complete the 2300 years. This being added to A. D. 33 $\frac{1}{2}$, the time of the crucifixion, makes 1847, true era. Here seems to be the difficulty with some of the brethren—they seem to be unable to comprehend that 1847 true era is 1816 vulgar era. Our investigations have settled the fact, beyond a doubt, that Christ was 33 $\frac{1}{2}$ years old, when he was crucified, which would make him in the middle of his 34th year, while the vulgar era reckons it in his 33d year, or one year earlier; thus it is easily seen that as 33, vulgar era, is 31 true era, so 46 vulgar era is 47 true era. Let us illustrate another way by the vulgar era alone. According to that Christ was crucified in the spring of 33. Now 1813 $\frac{1}{2}$ years remain to complete the 2300. Take the $\frac{1}{2}$ from the 1813 $\frac{1}{2}$ and add it to the spring of 33 and it extends to the fall of 33. Then add the remaining 1813 to the fall of 33, and it reaches to the fall of 1846—there terminates the "2300 days." How, then, has it anything to do with 1847, vulgar era? I know not.

But one thing, yet, is clearer to my mind than all else by which we have attempted to settle definite time; and it is that, and that alone, by which I believe the Lord designed that "the wise should understand," clearly, the time of his second advent. That one thing is the "time, times, and a half," the "1290 days," and the "1335 days," given in connexion, in the 12th chapter of Daniel. That these three numbers apply to the "abomination of desolation;" and that that is Popery, I believe is as certain and clear as any truth revealed in the Bible. This abomination, Popery, is represented in prophecy as having three kinds of existence; and the prophecies and their fulfilment concerning it, are understood (by all who have given their careful attention) to tell a tale something like this: It shall take the place of the "daily" or Pagan abominations. Three "horns" or Arian kings shall be plucked up, to make place for it, or establish its power by Clovis, in A. D. 511; and from that setting up of Popery, till its dominion shall be taken away, shall be "1290 days"—literal years, which extend to 1801. Thirty years from the time that Popery is "set up," the saints shall be given into his hands by the "Justinian code," so soon as the last power that stood in his way of exercising unrestrained power, viz: the Consular power has ceased, in A. D. 541—and he shall "wear out the saints, until a time, times and a dividing of time," or 1260 years, which also extend to 1801; at which time Bonaparte shall so overpower the pope as to compel him to sign away, by the Concordat, the supreme power given to him by Justinian, and make him relinquish the "Justinian code" to give place to the "Code Napoleon." Now the whole existence of popery, from the time it was "set up," in A. D. 511, to the time when it shall be utterly destroyed by the brightness of the coming of Christ, (2d Thess. 2: 8,) shall be 1335 years; when the resurrection shall take place, and Daniel shall "stand in [or for] his lot at the end of those (1335) days," which will be in 1846.

Do any of us doubt, that this is a true relation of the prophecy and history of this matter, in brief? I think not. And if not, how can any reasonably doubt that the termination of the longest period will be in 1840? Although many other predictions in holy writ, which point to the day of vengeance and deliverance, seem, almost certainly, to have their focus at, or very near this point; yet, in looking through the vista of many years, the dates are so obscured, by the mist of time, that it is almost, if not quite impossible to discover to a certainty, the exact time of their termination. But here is one date which is fresh in the recollection of those who now live. In 1801 an event happened by which we might be enabled to calculate from sura data, when the end will be; and in view of this fact it is said, "the wise shall understand." This was to be understood at "the time of the end," and could not be understood before. Daniel sought to know, but was told to go his way, for it should be "closed up and sealed till the time of the end;" but then "the wise shall understand." Understand what? The dates there given, viz: the "time, times and a half"—the "1290 days" and the "1335 days," or the length of the existence of popery, and the manner of its end. This is all that I understand the declaration "the wise shall understand" to mean. The question, of which this was a part of the answer, was: "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" and Daniel did not understand, so he asked, "what shall be the end of these things?" so he was told what should be the end—his resurrection. What were "these wonders?" They were things that related to the "abomination that maketh desolate." What else was there in the vision that was wonderful? Nothing. The answer shows this to be the true meaning, for it speaks of nothing else but the "abomination that maketh desolate." This, too, was what Christ was speaking about in his prediction of the end of the world—when he said, "whoso readeth let him understand." This, then, "the wise shall understand;" and I am fully persuaded that it was not said in reference to anything else.

If we search the scriptures and get a clear understanding of them, how can we help understanding when the end is? The taking away the dominion of popery, stands in blazing capitals before our eyes, no farther off than 1801; and 45 years—the difference between the 1290 and 1335 days—most clearly reaches in my mind, to A. D. 1846, and the resurrection together. If not, we must find some later event than that of 1801 that was a greater abasement of popery, or find some new exposition of the 1335 days.

R. W. WELLS.

Elmira, Oct. 4th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. J. B. Cook.

Bro. Marsh:—Your notice of my humble but hated name, was very kind. I saw you reciprocated my feelings in calling on you. It was to open my heart and let you know its state toward you and the great truth of the Second Advent. Had you not misunderstood one word, all would be and also seem straight. We talked fast, and also a little noise, so I do not attach blame to your notice. If you will do me the favor to insert this, it will explain sufficiently.

All my articles published, sermons and conversations, admit the state of things which has existed since the spring of '45. And I have no other, or no better names to apply to this state of things than those in Mat. 25. The necessity for so appropriating these names results from applying the doctrine of Providence to our history, in which just such a series of events as represented in Mat. 24: 45, 50, to 25: 1—10, has occurred. I take the facts which are unquestioned, and apply those names, because I conceive it to be impossible for the doctrine of Divine Providence, and promise to be true, and yet the divine agency not to have been exerted in the near view of his coming, to fulfil the divine representation of his people's history, while watching for that solemn event. As certain as the advent be at hand,

God is in the advent movement. If God be in the movement, he is supreme here as he is every where, guiding and controlling all, so as to bring out, in perfect order, the prophetic sketch of this age, preparatory and introductory to the coming event of all the divine predictions. The striking harmony between the prophecies, relative to the age, which is to witness the advent of Jesus, and the present is, to my mind, a most conclusive testimony that the advent is at hand. Had we not seen and heard the faithful and the unfaithful servants, each acting their predicted part—had there not been a time, based on Bible testimony, to expect our Saviour, followed by a tarrying—a midnight cry, (or that which may be represented by the cry at midnight,) then a breaking up of the waiting band, on the question of light or evidence; and then a closing of the "great and effectual door," which had till then been opened to us, we could not, in the light of the primary doctrines of revelation, expect our Lord. It is true that unbelief demands more accuracy, more fulness or more clearness; but faith sees as perfect harmony here as in other prophetic fulfillments. In the fulfillment of Dan. 7, we find no beasts as there employed for prophetic symbolic imagery; no wings—no horns; no, not even one with a mouth and eyes, nor brazen claws; but we find four beastly kingdoms, which are represented by those beasts with their wings, horns and claws. So in the parable of the tares we find a general representation of the state of the world, till its end. The literalities belong entirely to the parable. The facts represented are in a general way explained to mean that the wicked would mingle with the righteous—and that the righteous will not obtain the kingdom, till the end of the world.

It is true that we have no voice from the throne, nor angel from heaven, assuring us that the parable of the faithful and unfaithful servants, with that of the virgins, represent the minority and people of God in this age, but we have the facts, in advent history, occurring consequently in the precise order, represented in the parable of the virgins. Now how shall we prove that these facts are a fulfillment of that representation? I reply that we "know" that Jesus' coming "is nigh," from the signs—the prophetic periods—the woe trumpets—the descriptive prophecies. Do you grant this? Then THE TIME HAS COME to expect the events which are represented to occur in view of and introductory to his coming. No real adventists will join issue with me on this point. Well, then these facts have become matters of history, to wit: the writing out of the vision, with the annunciation of Christ's coming, by the faithful and the wise. We saw a confirmation, most marvelous, in "the great sights and fearful signs from heaven," witnessed in '43; a people called out, in expectation of the awful event, while the unfaithful and unwise were acting their part. Then came a tarrying, followed by a 'cry' on the tenth day of the 7th month, 44; subsequent to which, the virgin band broke up, and the world and the church became comparatively inaccessible. Many professed believers have gone to the world—but converts since then have been like angels' visits—"few and far between;" and these "have not consented to the counsel and deed of them" who derided our holy hope.

Now mark! these things have had a cause—either God in his Providence and by his spirit has guided those characterized as his people, so as to act the part assigned them, in fulfilling his word,—(those opposed, acting their predicted part also,) or else the Devil has deluded us to study the scriptures, and pray and "preach the word," and give up the world, and prepare to meet Jesus; and thus, apparently effect a false fulfilment of the preparatory scenes of the Son's glorious appearing!! If God has not led us, the Devil has —or else it has chanced to be so, and there is no special Providence. But this is infidel ground, from which we recoil; on that we dare not, cannot tread. Then I inquire into the Bible doctrines of Providence, and I find no false fulfilment of prophecy—none but the fulfilments at the right time, in the revealed order, and in the general predicted manner. See the events preceding the deluge—the deliverance from Egypt—the manifestation of Jesus to Israel, and all the grand scenes of prophecy concerning individuals and nations. From such a review we see that the plain teachings of the Holy Scriptures relative to Providence, forbid utterly and forever, the idea of a delusive fulfilment of prophecy, at the right time and in the right order of events. Well then, as we have in advent history the going forth, the tarrying and the cry, in the right order and at the right time, I say it is the fulfilment of Mat. 25: 1, 10. We are bound to believe as were the Jews at the first advent. God has set his broad seal on the advent movement: it is of heaven and not of men.

We reach this overwhelming conclusion, by tracing down the unbroken chain of prophetic events for the last 2500 years; not a link is found wanting. By observing that the fulfilments thicken and brighten, and then convey their rays into one grand focus—the 2d advent—we see that the judgment is near! The remarkable fulfilments of this age, crowd us close on to the opening glories of “the day of God.” With my light, I cannot, dare not “draw back” beyond a single event, that answers to its place and character on the prophetic chart. This being so, you see that Bible truth—Christian principles, and every holy motive ought to constrain me to acknowledge God in withdrawing his insulted spirit, since the breaking up of the advent band. I do, and must, though at the peril of life, confess Divine agency here. There has been extensively no convicting spirit abroad, as prior to '43, and the 10th day. To this state of things I apply—rather, it seems to me that God's word and Providence, applies the shut door, of the parable. After asking counsel of our wisest, oldest and most honored brethren, my position remains unassailed. It is true that some have laid undue stress on this, and have here applied the terms, “door of mercy”—unknown to this portion of scripture; while others have vibrated to the other side of the prophetic track, denying God's Providence and spirit in the whole, lest they should be compelled to occupy a position just down by that shut door of prophecy. Bless God, that some dare go just where the truth may lead.

Every body with eyes can see, that if this be our position, it follows necessarily, that the periods are just expiring, and the Lord is coming. God's great seal is thus put on our main exposition. If the Good Spirit has been grieved with those who have trifled with and rejected these tremendous themes, as unworthy of their research or regard; then it follows, that he has been pleased with those who have searched, and inquired diligently into them. “If this counsel and work be of God,” then the work—the great work for the world is about done, and we need like Noah before the deluge, to conform to the position, into which the Providence of God has led us. We should now especially “remember Lot's wife”—not “look back,” nor in heart “draw back.” Those who object overlooking some obvious representations of the revealed position of God's people just prior to the end, should be reminded that as certainly as the scripture cannot be broken—

“To this complexion it must come at last.”

If we have been honored to fulfil the scripture, preparatory to the 2d coming of Jesus, then it follows, that we are in the revealed position which God's people must occupy just prior to that event. Amen, even so—come Lord Jesus,

The poor widow crying to the unjust judge—the lovely dove mourning the absence of its mate, represent anything rather than that, “the called, the chosen and the faithful” will be in favor with a doomed world. They are represented, Ps. 74: 19, Luke 18: 6, 7, as looking with intense interest to God for themselves; and the minister is giving meat to the household “in due season.” Amen!

Yours, in hope,

J. B. Cook.

Cleveland, O., Oct. 20th, 1846.

Bro. Mitchell, Baltimore, Md., Sept. 28th, writes:—The cause is prospering here. The brethren are stronger and firmer rooted now than ever before. More devoted, punctual and spiritual; consequently, God is with us more manifestly. Yesterday (Sabbath) we had a blessed time—five poor wandering souls presented themselves for the prayers of the saints and the pardoning grace of God—four found peace in believing and now are happy in the Lord. Let me say here, they were not proselytes merely, but true and genuine converts to God's truth, and I think clearly prove, with many more of like kind, that those who teach no more mercy are not of the truth. I rejoice that God's long-suffering yet waits, as in former days, and that now he that will come may come and partake of Christ's healing fountain, opened in David's house for sin and uncleanness.

One young brother, son of Bro. Wm. Watkins, while at secret prayer the morning before meeting time, God, of his mercy, poured out such a blessing on him, that he could not describe but with tears of joy. Several rose and spoke of the goodness and love of God, and testified their faith of soon seeing Jesus. Yes, Br., God's ear is not heavy nor his arm shortened that he cannot save—salvation is not clean gone forever—God suffers with his people still—Jesus pleads his death, and will do so until his glory shall be revealed, and until then we should, nay, must labor for God's glory, and that is the salvation of souls.

Bro. J. P. Jacobs, Elyria, O., Sept., 23, writes:—We have a few brethren here who still hold to the true faith of the gospel. We have, for some two years past, held meetings by ourselves in private rooms, but since last spring our circumstances have been so changed that we have not been able to continue them; and the few that are left meet with the Disciples, the most of whom are on nearly the same ground with ourselves, excepting they are not as confident on the near approach of the consummation of all things as we are, but they are willing to hear and learn; and as it is my privilege occasionally to occupy a half of Lord's day. I endeavor to keep the subject before them, which is kindly and attentively received, yet, I fear there is not that unwavering confidence in the truth that is desirable.

We have not been favored with lecturing brethren from abroad for a long time. If any brother who is a candid gospel preacher would call on us, he could have a hearing. We hold no affinity with modern spiritualism. We believe the great plan of redemption, undertaken by Jesus Christ, is to restore this revolted province back to its original state, which will be done by removing every thing which has been introduced into the world in consequence of sin; and that the writings of the prophets and apostles warrant us in believing that the present generation are those who will witness its accomplishment.

Bro. A. Norton, Ithaca, N. Y., Sept.—writes:—I have just returned from a visit to the brethren in Newfield, where our highly esteemed brother C. Benedict died. I found a few hearts warm with the love of Jesus, but in rather a weak, low state, not having had any meetings since brother B.'s death. But blessed be God, they have taken a new start for the celestial city. The Lord suffer them not to faint by the way, as there is no stopping place until we enter the pearly gates of the city. Sister Benedict is left with 4 small children to provide for, and nothing but her own hands and needle to do it with. Will the good brethren who can, remember her in their prayers of faith, and minister to her wants by adding to faith works of charity—thereby causing the widow's heart to sing for joy. As it respects the good cause in this region, it is supposed to be dead; and the “woman” is quietly seated on the scarlet colored beast, saying in her heart, “I am rich and increased in goods”—“I sit a queen and shall see no sorrow!” wholly insensible that she is poor and wretched, blind and naked. God has in great mercy visited the lanes and hedges in the vicinity where I reside, and has gathered a few lambs into the fold of Christ, this season. Praise his holy name.

Bro. E. Dexter, Mattapoisett Mass., Sept. 9th, writes:—The little flock in this place, are still striving to live by faith, in these times of trial.—It is, truly, a day of darkness all around us, but thanks be to God, his word affords us light. By it we are enabled to penetrate the gloom that surrounds us, and behold the dawning of a day of bright glory. The weekly visits of the Voice of Truth and Advent Herald, bring to us the glad tidings that many of the scattered disciples of Jesus are still contending for the faith, and looking for the same blessed hope, and soon expect to see that same Jesus come in like manner as he went away. Our company is small: some have given up their faith, and walk no more with us. There are about fifteen that still mean to hope to the end; although poor in this world, yet we are striving to be rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom of that glory that will be revealed at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

Bro. A. Collins, Westford, Vt., Sept. 18th, writes:—The Advent brethren in this vicinity are generally confirmed in this one important truth, that Michael the great Prince will soon stand up, and that Daniel with all the righteous dead will then stand up for their inheritance, whilst those that live and believe in him (have saving faith) will never die. In view of these things I can say with the poet,

“O glorious hope! O best abode
We shall be near and like our God.”

Brethren,—is there not enough embraced in the Christians hope to stimulate us to action, or to endure hardness as soldiers? Shall we shrink at the cross when the crown is so soon to be given? Oh! no, says every humble believer, for the Lord of hosts hath promised in the day when he makes up his jewels, that he will spare us as a man spareth his own son that serveth him; yet this is not all; we shall then discern between the righteous and wicked. Although the proud are now called happy, yet soon we shall distinguish between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not, because the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, &c. But unto those that fear his name will the Son of righteousness arise with healing in his wings. O! let us be ready to hail the King of glory with shouts of loyalty when he comes. Bro. Miller and Buckley were with us last Saturday and Sabbath on their way to Canada.

Bro. S. I. Roney, Chateaugay, N. Y., Sept. 23d, writes:—I have recently visited the brethren at Caldwell's Manor and Stanbridge, (C. E.) Champlain, N. Y. The brethren are strong in the faith giving glory to God. I think the advent cause was never in a better condition than at present in that section. Some fifteen or twenty on the Manor have recently been brought into the fold of Christ, and as many more have received ed the ordinance of Baptism at the hands of our beloved Bro. Dudley. Praise God for salvation. Our Camp-meeting in Clinton was one of deep interest to many precious souls. The signal blessing of our father attended the meeting. It proved a benefit to many. Brn. Wyatt, Adrian, Dudley, Sutherland, and Sawyer, were present to preach the word, and give the reasons of our hope, and sound the trumpet of alarm to warn the wicked of approaching danger; which had a good effect. Between 30 and 40 were brought to know the sweets of redeeming grace. Some were reclaimed, some brought in that never before tasted the good word of God. Glory to his name, salvation is yet free in these last hours of time. Sinners may yet have mercy, if they will.

Our brethren in different places spared no pains to get to the meeting. Some of them came 60, 70, and 80 miles; for which they felt amply compensated. They could return, revived in the spirit of their minds, their hopes brightened and confirmed, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. We parted, feeling the assurance that we should soon meet again.

Bro. L. D. Fleining, Newark, N. J., Sept. 20th, writes:—There is an increasing interest among the brethren, and many are looking with longing solicitude for the consummation of the hope of Israel. May the Lord direct our judgment concerning His coming kingdom, and give us such views of the truth as shall ultimately be justified, is my ardent prayer.

Bro. Morley writes from Pomfret, Sept. 20th:—I am glad to see you taking good heed to the sure foundation on the subject of time. I think we must not be much elated with months or days. I trust you will not be moved by those who are over-zealous on days or hours. Let us be patient with them, treat them friendly, and hope for the Lord's appearing even before their days come. I feel no disposition to put that day far away, I love to bring it nigh. We must watch and pray if we would be ready.

The Empire of Queen Victoria.

The Queen of England is now sovereign over one continent, a hundred peninsulas, five hundred promontories, a thousand lakes, two thousand rivers, and ten thousand islands. She waves her hand, and five hundred thousand warriors march to battle, to conquer or to die. She bends her head, and at the signal a thousand ships of war, and a hundred thousand sailors, perform her bidding on the ocean. She walks upon the earth, and a hundred and twenty millions of human beings feel the slightest pressure of her footstep. Come, all ye conquerors! and kneel before the Queen of England, and acknowledge the superior extent of her dependent provinces, her subjugated kingdoms, and her vanquished empires. The Assyrian empire was not so wealthy; the Roman empire was not so populous; the Persian empire was not so extensive; the Arabian empire was not so powerful; the Carthaginian empire was not so much dreaded; the Spanish empire was not so widely diffused. We have overrun a greater extent of country than Attila, that scourge of God, ever ruled! We have subdued more empires, and dethroned more kings than Alexander of Macedon! We have conquered more nations than Napoleon in the plenitude of his power ever subdued! We have acquired a larger extent of territory than Tamerlane the Tartar ever spurred his horse's hoof across.—Finch, Boundaries of Empires.

Singular Phenomena at Deerfield.

The following is received from an authentic source, and may be relied on as strictly accurate. Mr. Editor:—During the last twelve years, certain curious, not to say alarming phenomena in the town of Deerfield, N. H., have excited the fears of the inhabitants, and we think should ere this have attracted the attention of the scientific. These are reports, or explosions in the ground, apparently of a volcanic or gaseous nature. When first heard they were attributed to the blasting of rocks in Manchester, a new town some ten miles distant; but from the frequency of the reports at all hours of the night, as well as the day, from the consideration that they were so loud, and were heard in all seasons, winter as well as summer, it was soon concluded that they had some other origin. The explosions, if they may be so called, commenced on a ridge of land running S. E. and N. W., some five miles in length, and principally on that portion called the South Road. They have, however, extended, and are now heard in a northerly direction. The sounds have become louder, and during the last fall and the present spring and summer, as many as twenty have been heard in one night. Many of them jar the houses and ground perceptibly, so much so, that a child whose balance is not steady, will roll from one side to the other. They are as loud as a heavy cannon fired near the house, with no reverberation, and little roll. Last fall, some of the inhabitants were riding in a wagon, when an explosion was heard, and they saw the stone wall over on one side of the way, and a second after upon the other. The stone wall of an unfinished cellar also fell in. This can be attested by many witnesses. There is no regularity in these reports, as they are heard at intervals of the day, a week, and sometimes of months; but for the last year they have become very common, and are heard almost every week, more or less.—Portsmouth Journal.

Summary.

IRELAND.—The distress and destitution consequent upon the failure of the potatoe crop is really awful. The law for affording employment to the people is being carried out with alacrity by the government and landed gentry of the kingdom.

Serious riots had occurred in the county of Waterford, Ireland, on the 29th ult. large mobs having attacked bakers' shops for the purpose of obtaining bread. Two of the people had been killed by the dragoons ordered to disperse the rioters, and much excitement existed at the last advices.

SCARCITY OF GRAIN IN GERMANY.—The apprehensions of scarcity are not less serious than in France. In the Northern States, rye and potatoes, which constitute the principal food of the inhabitants, have completely failed.

DISEASED TURNIPS.—It is announced that the turnips in England and Ireland are infected with disease similar to that of potatoes; and as this vegetable is raised in large quantities, and much depended on for food, its failure is regarded as a serious calamity.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, by order of the Privy Council, had issued a form of prayer for relief from threatened famine.

There has been another severe shock of an earthquake at Smyrna, but unattended with any particular calamity.

The disease among cattle has broken out afresh in Poland, to such an extent that the exportation of cattle has been prohibited.

The French newspapers state, that almost all the fish have this year quitted the coast of France, and betaken themselves to that of Scotland.

Incendiary fires still cause much alarm in several of the French departments.

Ten thousand Russian Jews are expected to arrive in the Holy Land to settle there. This number will add about a third to the present Jewish population in Syria and Palestine.

The Banker's Circular states that the spread of the potatoe disease has been signally arrested, and a much larger proportion of the crop of potatoes in Great Britain, and we suspect also in Ireland, will, we trust, be preserved than any man dared to hope a few weeks ago.

EDUCATION.—It is stated that in the United States one child in every four goes to school—in France one in twenty—in Poland one in seventy-eight—in Russia one in three hundred and sixty-seven, that one being a noble. In Prussia, every child is educated to some extent, though they are instructed in a variety of errors in addition to the use of letters.

"Behold! I Come Quickly!"

I rejoice, I rejoice,
At my Savior's sweet voice—
Behold I come quickly, my reward is with me,
To adjudge every man
As his work shall stand;
And the holy in heart, in peace, shall God see.
A glad time, a glad time,
For the Savior divine
Is soon coming down with great glory and power;
And though storm and cloud
Old earth now enshroud,
Rejoice! for full soon shall they cease to lower.
The 'same Jesus' shall come,
A bright glorious form,
And change the vile bodies of all holy men;
In beauty and bloom,
Shall raise from the tomb
His sleeping ones; and all in triumph ascend.
And by all in 'the way,'
Shall be said on that day,—
'Lo! this is our God! we have waited for Him!'
And while upward we crowd,
We'll rejoice aloud
In his salvation: he will save us!—Amen.
My glad soul doth rejoice,
For a still small voice
Is bidding me look to Immanuel our king,—
And wait for a home
Where Death cannot come,
Where Sin shall not blight, nor Sorrow e'er sting—
But where Jesus shall reign,
Over all the domain;
While the music of hearts in soft symphony,
Shall sound the sweet praise
Of the Ancient of Days,
And of Jesus our Savior, eternally, I P.

The World to Come.

BY MRS. A. C. JUDSON.

Air.—There is a Happy Land.

There is a world to come.

Blessed and pure;

It is the Christian's home,

Long to endure.

O, 'tis a world most bright,

No death, nor wo, nor night:

Faith views it with delight,

Knowing 'tis sure.

There Jesus Christ will reign,

All glorious King!

There music's rapturous strain

Ever will ring:

Saints, who, in ages by

Suffered, and dared to die.

There, in sweet harmony,

Anthems will sing.

O, 'twill be Paradise,

Eden restored;

All beautiful in their eyes

Who love the Lord:

The wastes that now are drear,

Will be a garden fair,

The rose shall blossom there;

As saith the Lord.

There Life's unfading tree

Will bloom most fair;

And Immortality

Its leaves shall bear:

A stream so pure will flow,

A joy no mortals know

Will to each soul bestow,

Who enters there.

O, that bright world to come!

Tongue cannot tell

How blessed is the home

Where saints will dwell:

Turn then from sin away,

The word of God obey,

Then at the last great day

All will be well.

THE JEWS' RETURN.

BY J. B. COOK.

The following thoughts on the subject of the Jews' return, embrace several points not usually, if at all, noticed. They seem to me, important:

We may reach the subject of the Jews' RETURN,—through the analogy of nature, and the plain declarations of Holy Scripture. We may thus reach "the root of the matter." Through the first principles of nature and grace, we may obtain a conclusion which will stand; but a conclusion that does not harmonize with the rudiments of our holy religion, cannot be worthy of reliance, because not true.

We know that the natural laws, governing matter, extend to all matter. The law of gravity, for instance, governing one portion of the earth's surface, governs all other like portions, for the same reason, and for a like necessity.

If some convulsion of nature should throw off a portion of matter, beyond the earth's attraction, it might come within the attractive sphere of some other orb, and with that orb, it might travel on through trackless space; but it could never again exist, or move, within the earth's orbit, without being first restored to the action of the original law, from which it was wrested—the law which once bound it in harmonious movement, with the other matter of our globe.

There are primary moral laws, based on and growing out of our relations as accountable creatures to God and each other. These laws are, supreme confidence in, and love to God, and a subordinate love to every fellow creature with whom we associate, equal to that which we cherish for ourselves. By a moral conclusion, a portion of the intelligent creation may be thrown off, beyond the controlling law of love, which is essential to the harmony and happiness of an holy Universe, as gravity is to the continued union of the particles composing earth. The portion thus thrown off, cannot be restored, but by bringing each, and every individual of it, back to the ruling influence of the original moral laws—faith and affection. The unhallowed, unnatural power that alienates sinful creatures from Jehovah, must be broken or they will proceed toward "the blackness of darkness forever." They must, from the necessity of the case, be brought back, under the sweet, divine law of love and reliance, or they cannot exist under the government of God, in harmony with his antecedent, obedient subjects. The redeemed of earth will think and feel, speak and act in perfect and eternal harmony with all righteousness. They will love the Supreme Being supremely, subordinate beings they will love subordinately, according to their several grades, or spheres of existence. The divine brotherhood is one, into which no mortal can be brought, or bound, without bowing, unhesitatingly and perpetually in every fibre of his being, to the divine law of love and confidence.

The means ordained to bring fallen men into this blessed brotherhood, is the Gospel of Christ. It is "the power of God unto salvation, to every one who believeth." It is the powerful means, which he employs to restore men to the power of the original laws. They are absolutely essential to a holy universe. Thus Abraham was elevated and sustained above the mass of mankind. Gal. 3: 7, 9. He believed the gospel; he loved its Author. Faith, and holy affection became the leading elements of his moral being. Of his eight sons, only one enjoyed the distinction, conferred by "the promise." His children, after the flesh—his mere natural descendents, float down the stream of time, age after age, and constitute no part of the Israel of God. These children of the Father of the Faithful, may be compared to the old loose bark of a walnut tree, which falls off and constitutes no part of the whole. Year after year, a mass thus peels off, and is never more a component part of the tree. Just so in the history of Israel, we find the illustration verified in their several successive generations. Elijah was cheered, amid the apostacies around him, to learn that there were 7000 who were in the "the good olive tree." All the rest peeled off, to perish.

The apostle said, in his day, that there was "a remnant according to the election of grace." This election of grace, conveys the idea of sovereignty in human salvation; but the election is both wise, and worthy of God. It is his choice, through mere favor, of all believers, constituting them his people,—his household—the children of promise. They are all those who may be attracted, by Jesus and his cross. Such, and such alone are His.

The reason for faith and affection is thus apparent. The necessity for these features of moral character in Abraham, and the seven thousand,—in Paul and the remnant according to the election of grace, is as imperious now, in relation to every descendant of Abraham, as to the Gentiles; for no man, nor angel of God, can live in harmony with the Divine government, without perfect and perpetual submission to the primary laws, which are alike adapted to all intelligences, in all parts of the Divine dominion. It is in this respect, that there is "no respect of persons with God." All must bend to the same eternal law of holy beings, or never share their blessedness.

Seeing that the "gospel (alone) is the power of God to salvation, to the Jews first, and also to the Gentiles"—then when Jesus comes, every one who loves Him will not be "accused." 1 Cor. 16: 22. This restoration by faith,—the revival of faith and love must take place before He comes. This seems plainly typified in the old Covenant with Israel. They were all brought out from Egypt into the Divine presence at Sinai, and there the Covenant was established. Why shall not "all Israel" be brought back to the required trust and love, before our Lord shall (at his coming to "raise up the tribes of Jacob and restore the preserved of Israel") make a New Covenant with them? The prophecy and promise of God relative to the New Covenant, both embrace "all Israel. Does it not follow that all of Abraham's posterity, and all others who are not, by the attractive power of Divine mercy, in the gospel of Christ, drawn within the sweet, heavenly law of love and confidence, must be left like Esau, with "no place of repentance?" Can they be the Israel with whom the New Covenant shall be established? Is not the New Covenant a confirmation of Israel in the love, the virtue or piety, to which they had been wooed and won by the Saviour's attraction? Will not their affection be from that point, perpetuated by the bands of everlasting confidence? Jehovah will be their God, and they shall be his acknowledged people. The cross being the attracting, restoring power; do we not perceive the greatest propriety, in the Divinely revealed purpose to the New Covenant, with all these drawn within the governing power of the divine law of love, 'at the end of the age?' After ancient Israel had terminated their bondage in Egypt, Jehovah publicly entered into covenant with them—avouching them to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all people. So at the end of the world, the end of this dispensation, will not Israel's King and Lord establish with him an "everlasting Covenant?" Will he not declare them His, before the universe, and bring them to his throne by the sweet bonds of everlasting love and confidence! So much for the primary laws, which we can but briefly touch.

Next, we notice the first principles of revelation, relative to the restoration, or return of Israel.

1st. NATIONAL BLESSINGS ARE CONDITIONAL.

Do not start. Let us look at this point. In order to secure your confidence, I'll admit my full belief in the promises made to Israel, Judah and Jerusalem. My only desire is to reach the loftiness of these promised glories, by the way of unquestionable truth. The movements of the mind are in one respect like those of the body, a step at a time. To see that the principle on which Jehovah administers His government over the nations, is stated correctly; read Jer. 18: 9, 10. "And at what instant, I shall speak concerning a nation or concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant, if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherewith I said, that I would benefit them." Thus far, the history of the world, Jew and Gentile, evinces the truth of this annunciation by the prophet of God, Deut. 28: 1-15, all blessings are promised on condition of obedience, all imagined curses are denounced on them, in case of disobedience, till they 'should be destroyed.'

The Jewish nation has most signally failed to obey God; consequently the nation has FORFEITED the promises made them in their national capacity. It is true, however, that Israel and Judah shall be restored; but not in defiance of this primary law of God's government. We must not make God contradict God! We can get an intelligible idea of these promises, from the scriptures, without supposing that Jehovah will forget this absolute declaration, the principle on which he has always acted.

2d. The house of Israel to be restored, embraces, 'all the seed'—'the whole house of Jacob,' and not merely a portion of them. All the fullness of covenant favors, shall be poured around them, at their restoration; therefore Israel needs be ALL there. The ISRAEL OF HISTORY, includes only the posterity of Jacob who may be alive, at the time contemplated, because history records the actions of living agents. The history of the Jews, given us in the Old Testament, does not relate to those who were unborn; to those who might live in after ages; nor to those who had lived. It relates to those THEN on the stage of life. But the ISRAEL OF PROMISE includes all who come within the scope of its merciful provisions, of all ages, down to the final restoration. 'In the Lord shall ALL THE SEED of Israel be justified and shall glory;' Isa. 45: 25, 59, 20. Ro. 11: 26.

3d. 'The tribes of Jacob' to be raised up, and 'the preserved of Israel to be restored,' are to be raised up and restored by Jesus. This merciful purpose of the God of Abraham, is not to be accomplished by a general Providence. It is to be done by a determinately revealed agency, by Jesus Christ; Isa. 49: 6; John, 6: 37, 45; Mark, 13: 26, 27; Gen. 49: 10; 2 Thess. 2: 1; 1 Thess. 4: 13, 18; Dan. 12: 1; Ezek. 23: 24; Joel, 3: 16, 21; Jer. 23d and 33d chapters.

4th. This gathering includes the resurrection at the 2d advent. The above passages prove this. 'He will swallow up death in victory; and the REBUKE OF HIS PEOPLE shall be taken away from off all the earth—and it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God, we have waited for Him. We will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.' Isa. 25: 7, 9. This text is applied to the resurrection in 1 Cor. 15: 51, 56. The resurrection was the hope of the promise made of God to the fathers. Acts, 26: 6, 7. The hope of Israel, Acts, 28: 20. The hope of the apostle Paul, Acts, 23: 6, 24, 24, 11. If this be so, then no one can correctly apply the promises merely to the national Jews restoration.

5th. This 'hope of the promise,' is not applied to any; save those who sustain the character of Israel. It does not apply to mere natural descendants, for 'the just shall live by faith.' 'The righteousness of God without the law, is manifest being witnessed by the law and the prophets—Rom. 3: 21. 'THE CHILDREN OF PROMISE are counted for the seed; Rom. 9: 6, 8; Gen. 21: 14, 25: 5, 6. The proper name, 'Israel,' must comprehend all the descendants of Jacob, who like him, have had 'POWER WITH GOD, AND HAVE PREVAILED.' These come with the 'hope of promise.' These are 'accounted for the seed,' all the rest peel off from 'the good olive tree,' like Ishmael and Esau, to perish.

6th. To apply the term Israel and Judah to the natural descendants now living, we must leave out 'the just'—'the election of grace,' now resting in 'hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers;' therefore that CANNOT be the true application of the term; Rom. 4: 11, 13; Gal. 3: 26, 29. All of Abraham's believing children, must be included in 'the seed.' They are 'heirs according to promise.'

The theory which clearly conflicts with the above, or like plain, positive, first principles of revelation, cannot be true. Jehovah's servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, is the 'righteous branch' of David. It is Jesus; Jer. 33: 15; Luke 1: 33. Judah shall be saved, and Jerusalem dwell safely.

The gist of the whole matter seems to be this. In the promised gathering and glory of Israel, national, as well as personal identity will be preserved. Abraham and the patriarchs individually will be personally present, because they were personally subjects of 'the promise.' Israel and Judah collectively, will be there, because they are in their collective capacity, subjects of 'the promise,' as we read of the Patriarchs, 'Abraham, Isaac and Jacob,' who are to be individually seen in 'the kingdom of God;' so we read of 'the nations of them that are saved' in the restitution. Israel is the prominent one in the promise, and in the prophecy of this blessed state.

Mark this! 'All the seed of Israel' are to be justified and glory in the Lord. 'The children of the promise alone, are 'counted for the seed' of Abraham. Now, how can we avoid applying the proper name Israel, to all the children of promise? It must apply to some one class or people, in distinction from all others. Why then, when speaking of the nations of the saved does it not apply primarily and properly, to the believing descendants of the friend of God? Thus it is applied in Rom. 9: 6, 8. To them the 'glorious things spoken of Zion the city of God,' primarily belong. They will inhabit that Jerusalem which will constitute 'the throne of Jehovah.' Those who were 'Levites,' will there officiate as we learn in Jer. 33: 21, 26. That will be in 'the better,' the heavenly country; Heb. 11: 12, 16. Believing Gentiles will be fellow-citizens' of Zion with the saints. All 'the nations of the saved, will walk in the light,' of this habitation of the Holy One; but identity, personal and national will be preserved.

No mortal can wrest Abraham from his promised seat, no more than Jesus from his throne. Abraham himself must fill it, or Divine faithfulness will fail—the pillars of his throne fall! For the same reason, Israel in contradistinction from other nations of the saved, must inherit his promises. Those, like Isaac, who are the children of promise, are, in the purpose of Jehovah, 'counted for the seed.'

Thus may we believe that the promises will be fulfilled, according to the true import of both the Old and New Testament. Why need we so apply the promises to Israel in the Old Testament, as to contradict those in the New? Or so understand those in the New Testament, as to abolish those found in the Old? The terms Israel and Judah, are proper names, designating the subjects of a special divine Providence and promise. To them the promises will be fulfilled in their true import, embracing all Israel. 'Ephraim will not envy Judah, nor Judah vex Ephraim.' Peace and praise will be abroad; happiness, holiness and heaven will reign.

If this be the right application of the scriptures, we will not seek the lost ten tribes to find 'Israel,' nor the scattered Jews, to find 'Judah.' The children of the flesh are not the children of God, nor of promise. This 'first principle of the oracles of God' is not only asserted in the New Testament, but it is fully established in the fact that only one of Abraham's own eight sons, was 'counted for the seed.'

Thus we avoid the necessity of contradicting the plain declaration that national blessings are conditional. We need not deny that if the unbelieving and disobedient Jews are, as a nation, blessed as if they were the people of God, it would be in apparently direct violation of Jer. 18: 9—10, and other scriptures, already quoted. 'If thou wilt not hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all his statutes,' then, 'all these curses shall come on thee,' in the family, field and city. Deut. 8: 15. Now seeing the Jewish people fall in THIS age, as they have in other ages, should God especially bless them? He would do just contrary to this expressed purpose.

These remarks do not apply to those characterized as Israel, 'the children of promise.' They are 'of faith,' and must be 'blessed with faithful Abraham.' According to the same promise made to the Patriarch, and for the same reason they will be absolutely unconditionally and eternally 'blessed.' With them the New Covenant, will be formally, gloriously established in the 2d Advent. When he shall gather together the remnant according to 'the election of grace.' 'For the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and to them that turn from transgression in Jacob.'—'So, all Israel shall be saved.' The reason is given; 'for the gifts and calling of God, are without repentance,' or change of purpose. He has never wavered in his purpose, to pour the full blessings of his covenant of promise on the whole of the promised seed—the house of Israel. He has not repented that He let Ishmael depart with Hagar the symbol of old Jerusalem—nor that He let Zimraw and Joshua, and Medan and Midean and Ishbak and Shuah all go 'Eastward toward the East country,—nor that He chose Isaac, and his believing posterity to be the children of promise. His 'gift or calling' was to let all who treat 'the birthright' as did Esau, from the good olive tree, peel off and perish. It is to take all, who love the blessings of promise as did Jacob—all who have 'power with God, and prevail,' and enroll them as 'the church of the first born'—as 'the chosen, the called and the faithful.' Amen.

On these, the blessings of the covenant concentrates. To them the Divine 'gifts and calling' are unchangeable, He will say; 'when the earth casts out the dead, come my people enter into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee for a little moment, till the indignation be overpast, for, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity.' This Divine visitation in judgment and mercy, will be, saith God, to Israel, 'according to the days of thy coming out of Egypt. I will shew him marvellous things. The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might.' 'The weak shall be as David, and David as an angel of God;' thus 'the nations will be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of Israel. Thus said the prophet of Jehovah, 'thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn to our fathers from the days of old;' Micah, 7: 15, 20.

This scriptural view is adapted to dissipate the prevailing notion that we shall be spirits, or ghostly, in the resurrection. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all indicated by the proper name 'Israel' will be there. Matter of fact persons, not lost in the living mass of 'the General Assembly and church of the first born;' but each, with perfect and perpetual identity, filling the place for which natural and moral endowment, and Divine discipline, may have qualified them. All the promises belonging to Israel and Judah will, to them, be eternally verified. 'Jerusalem shall dwell safely,' under the dominion of David their prince, Jehovah will be their God and they will be his people. The blessings in reserve for the Gentile believer must be learned definitely from those promises, or prophecies, which name them distinctly. The vague notion that they will all be mixed up like a dish of chowder so that no soul can tell who is who, or what is what, should be given to the winds. The scriptural view must be cherished, if we would as commanded, 'grow in knowledge and in grace.'

This view of perfect identity, enables us to understand what is revealed, as to the agency of both the just and the unjust amid the scenes of final judgment. Each class will act their part; each will act fearfully or gloriously in their proper characters, the nations will see God's favors to Israel, and to all the righteous. The righteous will see 'when the wicked are destroyed.' Thus it was at the deluge—in the judgment on Egypt, and also on Jerusalem.

One word on time. The world was warned of impending judgment at the period when the wise and worthy of this and other countries believed prophetic periods would end. God by his Providence concurred to give the warning most marvelously. Now we have had several periods of definite expectation,—the watches, the writing out of the vision, going forth of a people who believed, tarrying, midnight cry, dispersion of the virgin band, and their subsequent exclusion from access to the community, and the closing up of most hearts as well as houses to this crowning event of revelation, and thus the snare set for 'all them that dwell on the earth,' at least we have had events just like those, and we must be marvelously sceptical, who do not recognise God's Providence, fulfilling his word, amid the closing scenes of prophecy. Now seeing that from 'the baptism of John,' to the consummation of Christ's work at the first advent, three and a half years elapsed, may it not be that this is the period which shall elapse between the proclamation of the hour of Judgment in '43, to its actual occurrence? It is the period from the 'midst of the week' when Messiah was cut off, to its close. The probable period, for the date of this brief space of time, is the spring of '43; if so, and we have made the right application of the events of our time, then it follows that the awful events of Judgment are just impending over us.

To 'look for' and 'love' the Saviour's glorious appearing—to wait, watch, pray and groan for redemption, is to come up on ground occupied by holy men of old. The awful grandeur, and terrible splendor of 'the day of God,' cannot be lightly regarded except by the profane. Those who watch the events of Providence, in the light of revelation, and see what scripture has been fulfilled in the advent movement, giving out the truth in its season, and striving to be 'ready' to 'stand before the Son of Man,' live as they are required by their coming Judge to live. Such will not incur Jesus' withering frown. Of all the thoughtless myriads of earth, they will rejoice to 'open to Him immediately,' and say 'Lo this is our God,' we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation. Amen.

P. S. One objection has reached my ear. 'If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.' Certainly, Abraham is 'the father of many nations; but it does not touch the fact Israel and Judah are proper names, and apply to a class of people exclusive of all others, viz: the believing descendants of Jacob and Judah. Rom. 2: 28. 9: 6-8. In Rom. 4: 17, Abraham is a father to believers of other nations than the Jews, even 'many nations.' Israel must certainly be one of them. Rom. 11: 25-26.

To Ministers of the Churches.

You are placed on the watch tower of Zion, by God, to watch and warn the people of approaching danger; or else you have usurped your position and stand before God where you have no right to be. If the latter, you ought to stand aside, and give place to God's true watchmen. If the former, you are under the most solemn obligation to God—an obligation from which you cannot free yourselves—to watch constantly, with an eagle eye, the signs of the times; and especially hear carefully the words of God, and thereby be always ready to answer the inquiry, 'What of the night?' Have you obeyed your solemn obligations? and can you answer now, 'What of the night?' If not, it is your own fault, and you must answer to God for your negligence.

You might know that 'the abomination of desolation,' spoken of by Daniel the prophet, was 'set up' by Clovis and his council of 43 bishops, in A. D. 54. You might know that, thirty years later, to wit: in A. D. 541, 'the saints' were 'given into his [the pope's] hands,' by the Justinian code, at the cessation of the Consular power, and he was to wear them out for a time, times, and a dividing of time, or 1260 years. You might know that this 1260 years extended to 1801; and also, that, from the time that the abomination that maketh desolate was set up, it should be 1290 years; which would also extend to A. D. 1801; and that then 'they' should 'take away his dominion.' You might know that in July, 1801, 'his dominion,' was 'taken away' by Napoleon Bonaparte, through the instrument called 'the Concordat,' or 'Code Napoleon.' You might know that at the end of 1335 years, (see Daniel 12th chapter, where all these numbers are brought together,) the resurrection should take place, and Daniel should stand in, or for his lot, after having rested 1335 years; from what time? 'From the time that the daily [or pagan abomination] shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up.' (verse 11.) And you might know that these 1335 days end in 1846. I say you might know these things; for the angel told Daniel respecting these numbers, 'the wise shall understand;' and Christ, referring to this same prophecy, said, 'whoso readeth, let him understand.'

You might know, also, that 'those days' (the 1260 days which, according to Daniel, the saints should be given into the hands of popery, and it should 'make war with them,' and 'wear them out,' and which, according to Matthew, should be a time of 'great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor ever shall be,') should be 'shortened for the elect's sake.' You might know that, although 'those days' did not end till 1801, they were 'shortened' by the influence of 'the reformers,' especially Martin Luther, so that there was no general persecution after 1700. And you might know, that 'in those days, AFTER that tribulation, (i. e. between about 1700 and 1801) the sun should be darkened, and the moon should withdraw her shining—Mark 13: 24. You might know that in that time it was so done, viz: June 12, 1780, there was a supernatural darkness of the sun, and the moon, on the night of that day—although it was full, gave no light. You do know that the next sign was the falling of the stars, and that this was fulfilled on the night of Nov. 13, 1833; and that if this did not fulfil the prediction it never can be fulfilled. You know that the next thing to be looked for is the shaking of the powers of heaven, and the coming of the Son of Man, &c. You might know when you see 'these things begin to come to pass,' the redemption of the righteous 'draweth nigh.' You might 'know of your own selves,' when you see these things come to pass, that the coming of the Lord is 'nigh—even at the doors,' as well as you know when you see the trees put forth their leaves, that summer is nigh; and that 'this generation shall not pass away till all these things be done.' You might know that Christ did not mean the generation he spoke to, by referring to Matt. 12: 39, and 16: 4. Mark 8: 12. And you might know by believing the word of God, and receiving the signs he promised to give—that this is the generation—commencing with 1780, that should not pass away till the Son of Man should be seen coming in the clouds of heaven, &c.; and that if Psalms 90: 10 presents the length of a Bible 'generation,' that event must take place before 1850.

This is what many, who have 'searched diligently, what, or what manner of time the spirit of Christ which was in the prophets did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow,' believe these things to mean. Now if popery was set up in 511, the 1335 years from that time will end in 1846; and if it was not set up in 511, and the saints were not given into its hands in 541, and its dominion was not taken away in 1801, when were these things done? Tell us; for they are all in the past, and you may know. You do know that popery has been set up—that it has worn out the saints, and that the 'power and great authority' it once had, has been 'taken away;' and if we are wrong in our calculations, you as 'watchmen' ought to know how it is, and tell us 'What of the night?' for all these things that I have mentioned we are commanded to 'know;' and 'whoso readeth let him understand'—and it is said, 'the wise shall understand.' As they were given to be known and understood, we know we cannot be far from right. It is impossible to remove the dates, which, in prophecy are applied to the 'abomination that maketh desolate,' far from where we fix them; therefore, we know the end is 'nigh, even at the door,' and that it is your duty to know it too, that you may 'give meat in due season,' and warn the people of the coming sword, by crying, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh—go ye out to meet him. Fear God and give him glory, for the hour of his judgment is come;' and not be saying in your hearts, nor words, 'My Lord delayeth his coming;' nor be crying 'peace and safety' when 'sudden destruction' is coming so near.

'Well,' say some of you, 'suppose it is so near as you think it is, what is the use of preaching that particularly?' Strange that any should be so blind! The fact that such a message is contained in the Bible ought to silence every such plea. What is the effect of the strange silence and astonishing indifference of those who profess to declare the whole counsel of God? Let us suppose that the doctrine of the advent nigh is true—had every professed minister of the Lord preached it faithfully, ever since their minds were first called to the subject, scarcely one sinner in all Christendom would now be unprepared for the event. You wield a mighty influence; but instead of using it to awaken sinners to a sense of approaching danger, you have used it to lull them to sleep; and now if Christ comes this fall, to judge the earth, you will drag to hell hundreds and thousands each! Millions will be lost, who, had you warned them faithfully that the sword was coming upon them, would have shunned the danger and fled to Christ for safety! Awful thought! How can you hear the dreadful curses that will be heaped upon you by these hundreds and thousands of your congregations, in that day?

'But,' say you, 'I would not give much for repentance that would be drawn out under such circumstances as those.' Ah! then you will keep them in darkness for fear that, if they should see the light, they would be led to repentance—and that repentance possibly might not be sincere, because they were influenced by fear! A miserable plea indeed. Is not the fear of God the beginning of wisdom? Was not the repentance of the citizens of Ninevah at the preaching of Jonah, acceptable to God? Shall not he who comes in at the eleventh hour receive as much as he who came in early? Are not you more to be blamed that sinners are not converted, than they are themselves, when you reject the truth and deal out to them the soporific poison of your own fancy, or preach yourselves instead of Christ? If the sword comes upon them and you do not warn them, will not God require their blood at your hands? You may shut your eyes to light and truth, and sleep soundly on the walls of Zion; but you cannot, by so doing, shun your responsibility.

You may see the truth if you will. If the word of God is true, you ought to know and understand it. All the prophecies have been fulfilled and the events which they shadowed forth, by which the end could and should be known, have transpired; and there is no excuse for men, in these days, for being ignorant of this most important crisis. Oh, that you would redeem the span of time that remains! Alas for the world that lies in wickedness through the influence of careless watchmen! Alas for the lump that has no leaven in it! Work while the day lasts.

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, NOVEMBER 11, 1846.

Their Cause is Hopeless.

There is not a sect of professed Christians, now in existence, who are not looking for the speedy triumph of the principles of their creed, and the glorious commencement of their long looked for millennium. That the cause of all is entirely hopeless, we have the most startling facts to prove. Their cause cannot triumph only on the principle of the gradual suppression of crime, and triumph of virtue, by the influence of a preached gospel. According to their own acknowledgements, the former is on the rapid increase in our own country and world. Hence, their cause is hopeless. The 'Christian Herald,' which, soon after '43 had passed, rejoiced that their fine ship had escaped the 'Hurlgate of Millerism,' and was then expecting fair winds, and a 'smooth sea,' in her sure trip to her millennial glory, now says, in speaking of

"THE MORALS OF BOSTON."

"It is a fact well worthy of serious consideration, that about in the same ratio that the cause of experimental religion declines in any community, immorality and vice in every conceivable form increase.—This general truth, which speaks so loudly in behalf of the gospel, is painfully illustrated by the astonishing increase of crime in Boston.—Tippling houses, Gambling rooms, Brothels, and Theatres, are on the increase, and crime in every form, especially among the young, is daily multiplying. This state of things has become so glaring and apparent, that the good people of Boston have taken the alarm, and a great meeting has been held in Faneuil Hall, and kept up by adjournment from week to week, to consider what shall be done to check the increase of crime in Boston. . . . Dea. Grant stated that crime and pauperism had increased upon the hands of the city authorities so fast, that several of the city institutions are now full and can accommodate no more. The House of Reformation for Juvenile offenders, he remarked, was full to overflowing, and could take no more. Several had been refused for want of accommodations.

Father Taylor, the Seamen's preacher, remarked that he was well acquainted with Boston, had passed the most of his life as one of her citizens: he esteemed her the Queen of cities; the best city in the world; but Boston was degenerating—he never saw so much drunkenness in the streets, and never heard of so much crime among the people as now exists."

Will the Herald of the Christians, with those facts before it, change its point of compass, set its helm for the true port of glory? It is evident, according to its own acknowledgement, here made, it is now out upon a squally sea, and no prospect of a clear sky, and a pleasant harbor before her.

The same account says that meetings similar to those held in Boston, and for the same purpose, are being called in different towns at the east. Truly, 'iniquity like a flood' is rolling its deadly waves deeper and deeper over our land and world; and will not our ministers and religious editors see and understand what it all indicates? O God, open their eyes, that they may discern the portentous signs of these fearful times!

Dr. Cox, a delegate to the late World's Convention, speaking of the temperance principles of the ministry of England, says:—"The clergy, the ministers of religion, here, of all denominations, in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, are, as a rule, behind the age, draggers instead of leaders in this great national reform. Those of them who love the cause, and lend their influence and their example to its furtherance, are the few and not the many, the exceptions and not the ordinaries—just as it is not in America. This is, I think, very bad and disgraceful, and heavy will be their account in the end, except they repent. They see the black rot of drunkenness ravaging among their flocks, and while they denounce it in the pulpit, occasionally and feebly they sanction the process by their example."

Knapping money, leading an uncontrolled influence over the vast empire of the proud British queen, and daily becoming more and more dissipated in their habits! and still looking for the world's conversion, and, in a great measure, through their agency!—Alas, what blind infatuation! We close these remarks for this week, by giving a withering rebuke to the temporal millennialists, from the 'Scientific American' for Oct. 31. The Editor says, under the head,

"INCREASE OF CRIME."

"It is admitted by all parties that crimes of the most outrageous and unprecedented character abound throughout this country, and probably throughout the world, to a degree wholly unparalleled. Crimes which cannot even be named in a respectable newspaper, appear to be of every day occurrence, in addition to multitudes of murders, arsons and robberies. And there appears not the least prospect of reform, or improvement of public morals, notwithstanding all the popular preaching of an approaching temporal millennium of universal righteousness, when every body will join the churches and live in harmony."

Truly, the cause of the sects, or of a temporal millennium of universal righteousness, is hopeless.

Questions & Answers.

"Are the doctrine and practical teachings of Heb. 10: 25 designed for the Hebrews in Paul's day? or has it its direct application to Christians in some other particular age of the world? Is it not designed for those that should see (by the signs of the times) the day approaching? If so, is there not just as 'good evidence' that the 36th verso belongs to the same Christians, and in the same particular age of the world?"

The first text which our brother quotes reads—'Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another: and so much the more as ye see the day approaching.' We think this text has been applicable to all Christians since it was written: for at all times it has been their duty to 'assemble themselves together,' and to 'exhort one another.' They have also (if in the light) been able to see 'that day approaching.' Abraham saw it and was glad; so have his children, in all ages, by the fulfilment of prophecy belonging to their times, seen the approach of 'that day.' And these sure evidences of its approach have afforded strong reasons, or motives, for comforting and exhorting one another to faithfulness in the work of the Lord. With the strictest propriety could it be said to Christians of all ages, —'Exhort one another, and so much the more as you see the day approaching.'

The other verse which our brother quotes reads—'For ye have need of patience; that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise.' We can conceive of no age when this instruction would not be strictly applicable to Christians. Of course, those of this age would not be exempted.—It certainly will be safe for us to receive our share of the good instruction which both texts impart. Indeed these and all similar scriptures, though evidently of general application, should be obeyed by us as cheerfully and implicitly as though given exclusively for our benefit.

Another brother solicits an exposition of Matt. 26: 64. That part on which light is called for reads—'I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.'

We frankly admit that this and several other similar texts seem to warrant the inference, that the just and unjust will be raised at the same time, or that there will be but one resurrection, at which time all will see the Lord coming in the clouds of heaven. But as these texts do not positively favor such a doctrine, and as there are other texts which positively prove the resurrection of the dead in Christ first, a first resurrection, of the blessed and holy; we feel justified in giving a meaning to the text under consideration, and similar ones, to harmonize with those about which there can be no doubt relative to their import. This we think is a safe principle of exegesis to follow.

Though Matt. 26: 64 seems to favor the doctrine of but one resurrection, it does not however directly afford proof in favor of such a doctrine: all the evidence for this purpose it affords, is at best inferential. The inference is this—Christ told the High Priest that he should see him coming in the clouds of heaven; that High Priest is supposed to have died a wicked man, and of course, in order to see Christ come in the clouds the priest must be raised at Christ's coming, and not a thousand years after; and, as a matter of course, if one wicked man will be raised when Christ comes in the clouds, all will be, and consequently the doctrine of but one resurrection is established.

Though this inference appears quite plausible, we think it incorrect, because, as before stated, it comes in direct collision with texts, about which there can be no dispute, which prove a first resurrection, in which the blessed and holy only will have a part while the rest of the dead will not live again until a thousand years after.

We might infer, though it is not very probable, that the High Priest died a good man. If so, he will see Christ come in the clouds; for 'many of the priests became obedient to the faith,' after the ascension of Christ. But the probable meaning is, that the High Priests, who reject Christ, and who are alive at his coming, will see him come in the clouds, and to their everlasting confusion acknowledge his power and glory. It was a national tribunal whom Christ addressed. Should we not, therefore, look for the fulfilment of his prediction, not in the identical individuals who then composed the court, but, in the same court or council which will be found in existence at his coming? An affirmative answer we think would be safe, inasmuch as it will do violence to no plainly revealed doctrine of the Bible, but perfectly harmonizes with one that is clearly taught in that Book, viz; the doctrine of the resurrection of the righteous, at the coming of Christ, in the first resurrection, and of the wicked a thousand years after.

Time of the Advent.

Comparatively, we have said but little recently on the time of the advent. The main reason for our silence has been, we could see but little to say that had not already been said; and to keep repeating the same things over and over again, we thought would be unwise in us, and unprofitable to our readers. But now the precise definite time at which some of our good brethren looked for the Lord, has fully passed, we deem it our duty to speak once more upon this highly important subject. Our remarks at present however must be brief: at a future day, if permitted to see it, we purpose to review this whole question. All we can now say, is,

1. That the passing of this last time, viz; '46, should not lead any one to the conclusion that the time of the advent, in any sense, is not revealed in the Bible: a thousand mistakes and disappointments of ours would not justify this conclusion. Never let the Bible suffer on account of any error of ours: its truth must be sustained to the sacrifice of the most labored and correct conclusions of erring mortals. The Bible does speak about the time of cleansing the sanctuary—the time of the end—the time when Daniel shall stand in his lot—the times of the Gentiles—the times of restitution—the fullness of times, &c., and that the wise shall understand.—Let us plant our feet, more firmly, if possible, than ever, on these immutable truths, and never failing promises. They will not disappoint the fondest hopes of those who understand and confide in them.

2. While we cleave with unyielding tenacity to the prophetic word, or that portion which relates to the time of the advent, we should suffer our minds now to look impartially at that portion of the positive words of Christ, which makes the precise time of the advent a matter beyond our power to know. We should also suffer our minds to be open to receive the undeniable fact, that there is a degree of uncertainty thrown around the precise commencement of every prophetic chain of events, on which we are to depend to bring us to the time of the advent, consequently the same uncertainty must exist about the precise time of their termination. These facts cannot understandingly be denied. And they should have their due influence on our faith in the time of our Lord's coming.

3. These facts, with the plain teaching of Christ relative to the day and hour not being known, settle the matter most conclusively that God did not design that the precise time of the advent of Christ should be revealed. This is the only reasonable conclusion that the facts in the case will justify.

4. From the best light we have been able to obtain from the prophecies, historical and chronological, the signs in the natural, moral and religious world, we are not only constrained to believe without a doubt, that the coming of the Son of man is at the door, but to proclaim this solemn truth to a perishing world: the opening scenes of the great day of his coming may commence the next moment.

5. We have no expectation that the time will be any more definitely understood than it now is. It is as definitely known as the Father of lights designed it should be: sufficiently so to produce all the practical good that would be effected by a less or more definite revelation. The revelation is just right, and when we are all sufficiently wise, to not be wise above what is written, then we shall understand what to us may now be dark and difficult in this subject. 'The wise shall understand.'

6. With this view of the subject, there is divine perfection, force and harmony, seen in all the evidences on the time of the advent. It lays a sure foundation for our faith and hope, admonishes us to constant duty, and to make, and keep made, the necessary preparation to meet our Lord at any moment. In short, it is the sure foundation, and will not disappoint the fondest hopes of those who build their eternal all upon it. Let us never abandon it.

A Little Mistaken.

Our good brother at Cobourg, C. W., will pardon our delay in noticing his criticism on Matt. 25th, and some other scriptures: our frequent absence of late to attend different conferences, has caused the delay. We think our brother mistaken in the application of the word 'then,' in the first verse of Matt. 25. He thinks it refers to the faithful and unfaithful servants in the last of the preceding chapter; and that the meaning is this,—'Then [when? At the time when the faithful servants are giving meat in due season, and the unfaithful are smiting] shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins,' &c.

Not a few have made this same mistake, which we feel very confident all can be made to see in a few words. The coming of the Son of man is the leading doctrine of the discourse of the Savior, in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew. In ch. 24:44 we read, 'Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.'—All that follows, to the close of the chapter, is a parable, which is thrown in merely to illustrate the last point of discourse.

"Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, he shall make him ruler over all his goods. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken: the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

You see it is a parable: the word 'lord' does not commence with a capital, which shows it to be a parable. In chap. 25:1, a direct reference is had to the coming of the Son of man, named in ch. 24:44, and the true meaning is evidently this,—'Then [at the coming of the Son of man] shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins,' &c.

This interpretation will bear the strictest criticism, and of course destroys at once all the numerous fancied theories which have been built upon the parable of the ten virgins, making it the history of the advent movement. O how blessed it is to know your feet rest upon the truth. O, that all would stand upon that imperishable rock, especially those who are looking for the return of their Lord, and profess to take his word for the man of their counsel, or rule of doctrine and faith in all things.

Our good Bro. R's lengthy article on Mark, 13th chapter, is so incorrectly written that we cannot publish it without transcribing—and this is a thing we never do, especially with lengthy, doctrinal communications.

An Urgent Call.

An efficient minister, or one who understands the doctrine of the appearing of Christ and his kingdom, and is able to teach it to others, is most earnestly solicited to visit Ulster, Bradford Co., Pa. Call on C. F. Sweet, who makes the request. Bro. Sweet is, or has been a class-leader and exhorter among the E. Methodists; has seen and embraced the light of the coming of the Lord, and needs help. Who will go to his, and the aid of others associated with him?

We deeply sympathize with Bro. Sweet in his trials: hope that however severe they may be, they will not retard him from duty. God wants faithful witnesses for the truth in this degenerate age. And it is far better to obey Him, though imprisonment and death be the consequence—than bow to error with the applause and pleasure of the world for our portion. It is through much tribulation that we can enter the kingdom. John saw none robed in white but those who had come out of great tribulation. Let us all cheerfully suffer with Christ, that we may reign with him. Fear not, Bro. Sweet, with your Bible in your hand, and the love of God in your heart, nothing can harm you; the victory will surely turn in your favor.

Friendly Caution.

A good brother says he has faith that the Lord has power and will raise up the sick in the 19th century, &c. No doubt of it when it will be for his glory to do it; this he has ever done in all ages. But that the power of working miracles, as in the days of the Apostles, is to be restored to the Church in the 19th century, we no more believe than that Christ in his first advent—the Apostles in their first work—the day of pentecost—the giving and confirming the covenant with many for one week, are all to be restored to the Church. Brother, we have 'cavassed this subject' again and again, not only recently, but years since, and feel not only confident that we have the truth in this matter, but throw out the friendly caution to all, to beware how they receive and propagate a sentiment which has ever led its adherents into hurtful delusions.

SISTER E. D. BARRY.—We are happy to receive a cheering letter from sister Barry. Her health is good, and her faith unwavering in the precious truths of the gospel, which her lamented husband faithfully proclaimed to the world. She has recently visited her mother at Providence, R. I., and the brethren at Portsmouth, N. H. In the latter place Bro. Barry had formerly bestowed his labors as a minister of Jesus; and first heard, embraced, and proclaimed the doctrine of the near coming of Christ. Consequently, sister Barry's visit to this place was highly interesting. May it prove a blessing to the saints there. And may the Lord still bless with his presence our sister, in all her lonely hours here, and with a joyful meeting in the immortal world, with her departed companion, and all the redeemed.

BRO. WELLS' ADDRESS TO MINISTERS, on another page, is timely, and the general sentiment it inculcates is according to truth. It has many invulnerable points: and indeed we see but one that is vulnerable: that, we fear, will be attacked by an arch foe, and also will prevent the communication from doing all the good, to the enquirer after truth, that it would, were it less positive, or just as positive as the plain word of the Lord warrants. The weight or force of the plainest testimony is not unfrequently destroyed, by an arch Attorney, by hiding if possible from the jury the truth, by keeping before their minds the absurdity of the doubtful or false testimony in the case. A few plain unimpeachable witnesses, in any case, civil or theological, are far better than many, if but one or two of them are of a doubtful character.

If the testimony in the case warrants us in being as positive as Bro. Wells is, in some parts of his communication, then the Lord will most certainly come this year: there can be no mistake in the matter. This is more positive, we think, than the word of the Lord justifies, and also than what is expressed in other parts of Bro. W's article. The former says, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man,' &c., and the latter, 'We know that we cannot be far from right,' and 'we know the end is nigh even at the door.' Had this qualification been observed throughout our brother's article, it would have been invulnerable. As it is, we hope it may do some good.

We admit there are very many things relative to the time of our Lord's coming which we should most confidently believe, or know in the sense of unwavering faith. But there is nothing connected with this subject which we should know more perfectly, or that the wise should understand better, than the Savior's plain and often repeated words, which teach us that the precise time, day and hour, of his advent are not known. How can we be considered the wise, in the fullest sense, until we know or understand such plain instructions of our Lord? We cannot.

"Hard Work to be a Christian."

Thus talk some professors at the present time.—or say it virtually by their practice. Some think that now at least it is harder to live a Christian life than formerly; but does the word of God justify this idea? Jesus says, 'my yoke is easy and my burthen is light.' John says, 'His commandments are not grievous.' David says, 'great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them.' The wise man says, wisdom's ways are pleasant and peaceful. With these testimonies, the scriptures generally agree. What say those who faithfully serve God, of their labors and sufferings? Jesus says, 'it is my meat and drink to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work.' John and Peter 'rejoiced' when they were beaten—Paul 'gloried in the cross of Christ,' and all his afflictions counted light. Mark the sentiments of God's servants, whose testimony is recorded—and this is the spirit of them all.

But why was it that they who anciently endured such cruel mockings, bonds and imprisonments, hunger, torture, wild beasts, exile, and almost every form of trial and persecution, endured it with such joy—still calling the yoke of Christ easy, and delighting in his law? Ah, the eternal weight of glory, they saw by faith, would be the end of their course. They 'loved him who first loved them,' and died to purchase so great a reward for them. They counted it 'a faithful saying if they suffered with Him, they should reign with Him.' For the joy which was set before Christ, he could despise the shame, and endure the cross. He could 'suffer' that he might enter into that 'glory which should follow.'

Do we say that now our trials are greater, and hence it is harder in this perilous time to live a Christian? Let me ask my Christian friends, is not God the same? are not the motives of the gospel increasingly glorious? is not the beloved city just at hand? are we not on the very borders of immortal Canaan? are not all the children of God soon to be gathered into it, and dwell forever more in the society of Jesus and angels? Have we not almost six thousand years in the future to cheer up our souls? Has not God said too, 'As thy days so shall thy strength be?' What then should we fear? 'If he is for us, who can be against us?' Why then does the way of obedience seem hard? Are you not attempting to serve two masters? No wonder then that the burthen is heavy. Get down low at Jesus feet—learn of Him—give up all for His sake—and you will find it sweet service to follow one who is just and true in all his ways! and when he shall appear, he will bid you welcome to share in his blood-bought joys. G. W. BURNHAM.

Be Patient.

How reasonable and well adapted the caution of the Apostle James is to us all. James 5: 7—"Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." He then presents us with the patience of the husbandman of Judea to get his crop: "waiting" for the "latter rain," and hath long patience until he receive it.

Now if a temporary good, such as receiving a harvest, would inspire patience in the breast of a husbandman, should we not be patient, (notwithstanding the failures of our set times, '43—4,) when we have such an unearthly and immortal interest before us! Most certainly, we should be as 'wise as the children of this world,' in this respect. But it is not so with us; we are like the restless steed, when the clarion blows for battle, anxious to witness and mingle in the grand scene, and raise the "shout of victory over death and the grave."

But, says one, it does not mean you disappointed and anxious ones, exclusively, but all the protestant world. I would answer, they are not impatient to have Christ come and cure the evils of which the righteous complain, (see verse 4 and 6,) but are trying to do it themselves. I admit that there are times when they are quite out of patience; it is when we present evidence that they cannot get over, that the Lord is at the door.

But there is a class that are impatient to see the Lord. He says, Isa. 62: 6, that he has set watchmen on the walls of Jerusalem, who shall never hold their peace. The passing of the time has not stopped their mouths, but increased their cry more fervently. "Ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence, and give him no rest until he establish and make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

But says an objector, this Scripture is as applicable to the churches as to you. But, I reply, that there is no such thing among the sects as making mention of the Lord in reference to his coming. They believe a temporal millennium must come before the coming of the Lord; and when he does come, if ever, that he will destroy or annihilate this world, instead of making Jerusalem a praise in the earth. This scripture, therefore, cannot apply to the sects. Moreover, there is no importuning of the sects, or of giving "him no rest" relative to those things.

The pen of inspiration marks our folly—after '44, (James 5: 8,) where the kind admonition is repeated—"Be ye also patient;" (when the minds of so many were unsettled.) He adds, "establish your hearts." "For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." As much as if he had said, you will be wonderfully shaken and tried, so much so that you will, some of you, give up the faith, while others will say, the Lord has come; and this conflicting of views, will lead to sensoriousness and cruel "grudging one against another," and thus many will be condemned. Where are our brethren that we used to take sweet "counsel with," and go with them to the house of God? Alas! the pride of opinion would not let them confess their mistakes! Their moorings were cut, and they were all afloat; some have floated to the shakers, and others to the spiritualists. O that they were "wise and understood this!" Must they perish like Israel, in sight of the land of rest? Let us all take the caution, for the judge stands before the door. Watch, watch.

I. R. GATES.

P. S. Macknight's version is, "Groan not one against another," lest ye be condemned. Now we can tell a spiritualist if there is one in the congregation, for they will groan at you. I have observed this all through my late tour.

Letter from Bro. C. R. Griggs.

Bro. Marsh:—Time is yet rolling on, and we are waiting upon the borders of the goodly land, expecting soon to receive the everlasting reward. I believe with all my heart, that the last note of time's farewell will soon be heard, and then God's ransomed host will enter their harbor, and safely rest with Jesus in their home. Now we are tried and tempted. Sorrow and bitterness is mingled with every cup, and sigh after sigh from the heaving breast cries out, "Here is no rest."

If ever I longed to be free of earth, it is at the present time. If ever I felt that earth was ripe and ready for the harvest, and the wickedness of man was great, it is while I am writing these lines. O that men would open their eyes to see, their ears to hear, and not go headlong down to hell. But so it is. The storm is gathering; the heavens are blackening; the thunders are rumbling; the lightning is flashing; earth is groaning, and still they slumber on, and I expect they will till the clarion of God shall sound and call them to the judgment.

"Then they'll cry and want to be Happy in Eternity."

This is the state of the world, as a world, and it is true of the nominal church as a church. Now I am led to ask, How is it with professed Advent believers? Brother you have learnt and so have I, that there is a vast difference between professors and possessors of religion. I have no "new test" to bring. The word of the Lord endures forever. By it the world must be judged, and by it condemned or acquitted; for says Jesus, "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." He says to the Jews, "I judge no man, but the word I speak the same shall judge you at the last day." I understand the bible to be our judge; for it is God's word. I understand it to be the transcript of God's mind, given to us, and when the Bible speaks, God speaks. But how few realize that when they read the word of the Lord, that God is talking to them. But is it not so, dear brother or sister? Settle this question, and then hear the word of the Lord.

You say you are looking for the Lord, and when "Ho" shall appear you expect to appear with him in glory. To the word of the Lord—"Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure." How pure was Christ? Pet. 2: 22. "Who did NO SIN, NEITHER WAS GUILE FOUND IN HIS MOUTH." Did he not sin a little? God says, "no sin." Were not the "seeds of corruption" in his heart after all? The Lord says "No sin." Did he not engage in light and trifling conversation? "No guile was found in his mouth." Now dear reader, and traveller with me to the judgment, in the name of my Master Jesus, I ask, are you living like him? Here is the standard; now square your life by that; for it will judge you at the last great day.

I fear, as said Paul, that "many are walking who are the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose god is their belly, who mind earthly things, whose glory, [after all they do and say,] is in their shame," and "whose end is to be burned." Remember, that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord," and to be holy is something besides a name to live. It is to live like Jesus every day, and unless we do thus live, we are not christians, and we give God the lie if we say we have this hope when we have not the witness that "Enoch" had, that our "ways please God."

I have found a few who enjoy this blessed witness; but, alas, the number is very small, and it seems that it grows less and less. While in a very few places the number of faithful souls are increasing, in others they are diminishing. This is the state of things which I find as I pass from place to place.

I visited the brethren in Northfield, Mass., and found some of them in a good condition, while others had wandered from the Lord. In Irving, there are a few who have not bowed the knee to Baal. The preacher of the place was in to hear what I had to say about the Lord's coming. I endeavoured to show that Christ would come; the manner of his coming; the time of his coming, and what the state of the world would be at his coming. At the close the preacher wished to ask a few questions. Permission was given. He asked, "If I did not know the definite day and hour, how could I know any thing about it?" I answered him according to the words of Jesus, Matt. 24. He said he believed there would yet be thousands of years, and millions of souls converted. I pitied his soul, and left him till the judgement.

In Hawley there are a few who love Jesus, we had a happy season. They need help. Will not some of God's ministry call that way? I baptized three, and they went on their way rejoicing. From there I went to Troy, N. Y., spent last Lord's day, and had a comfortable time, especially in the evening. In East Troy, I am informed, there is a bad state of things. Their meetings on Lord's day are thrown aside, and but few attend the prayer meetings on week days. May the Lord send some one that will do them good. I am now in Jefferson Co., at Lorain, where there has been a happy company. But a bad state of things exist among the people, some are trying to live, but many are cold and destitute of vital godliness in the soul. I expect, the Lord willing, to remain in this vicinity a short time to preach the truth.

Letter from Bro. J. Weston.

Bro. Marsh:—In my travels in this State, I have fallen in with the 'Voice of Truth,' of Oct. 7. In it I see an article from Bro. J. Pearson, Jr., about me. He says 'I was very much surprised at the want of Christian courtesy and brotherly-love manifested in the late communications of Bro. J. Weston, in the Voice of Truth.' The article to which he alludes, I wrote because of the difficulties in the minds of many dear brethren and sisters, who could not as well as some of us, search out the time. Though I have not the articles at hand to which I alluded, I have a strong impression that they spoke quite positive of their time. For this I do not blame these brethren—I only wanted a 'strait path for our feet, lest that which was lame, be turned out of the way.' If I said anything wrong, the Lord forgive me; my desire was to benefit the work.

I have no time nor desire to review the article by Bro. J. P. The words look to me strongly put together. God grant that Bro. J. P. and myself may have humble, meek and quiet spirits, which is in the sight of God of great price. Further I say not.

J. WESTON.

Hallowell, Me., Oct. 13th, 1846.

P. S. The harvest truly is plenteous here, and the laborers are few. There are many places where they have never had any lectures, and many of the people are willing to hear. I have just been laboring in a place where they have never heard anything before. Many of the dear souls were greatly rejoiced to think the Lord was coming so soon; and I trust that many in the great day of the impenitent, will be saved through my poor feeble labors. I firmly believe we shall see the Lord soon—and much looks as though we should see him this autumn.

Letter from Bro. E. Hoyt.

Bro. Marsh:—Bro. Morley says in a late communication, 'that Bro. Hoyt is expected to give an account of the Jamestown Conference.'

I would say in answer to that expectation, that I wrote a brief account of the meeting, and directed it to the Voice of Truth, at an early period. I suppose it may have been miscarried, as I have not seen the letter acknowledged. The preaching of Br'n Porter, Morley and Wilson, together with exhortations and prayers of other brethren, proved a great blessing to those who came from different parts to attend. There was one case of conviction and repentance, and four baptised. Let me say to those dear brethren, hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

I have visited the brethren at Northville, Detroit and Troy. Those brethren in the two latter places who have fancied themselves in the new world or age or kingdom, are becoming more sober in their reckoning, and, I trust, are disposed, or will be, to reject the blasphemous assumption that the Saviour has made his second appearance—in Ann Lee or any other mortal.

Other brethren are steadfast in their blessed hope, waiting for 'grace to be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus Christ.' Please say that my address is Farmington, Oakland county, Michigan.

Yours &c.;

E. HOYT.

Farmington, Mich., Oct. 12th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. I. R. Gates.

Bro. Marsh:—I feel thankful to the Lord for his sustaining grace in enabling me to attend to the many calls of my brethren in Canada East and Vermont. I attended between seventy and eighty meetings in eight weeks—and visited more than thirty advent congregations, the most of whom were spiritual and prosperous. The kindness of the brethren, together with their deep devotion to God, has endeared them to my heart; and I hope soon to reign with them in the glorious Eden of God.

On my return home I spent one Sabbath at Sugar Hill (Lisbon) where Bro. Shipman ministers. The whole village are adventists, with one or two exceptions. The congregation was large and all appeared to take a deep interest in the Lord's immediate coming. A few backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners appeared quite solemnly impressed with the need of salvation. Bro. Shipman is well engaged, and is highly esteemed by all, both friends and foes. Last Lord's day I spent with the brethren at Manchester. The interest there is great to hear about the Lord's soon coming. There were about 20 arose for prayers.

Yours waiting for the promise,

I. R. GATES.

Exeter, N. H., Oct. 6, 1846.

Bro. W. G. Proctor, Rays Hill, Pa., Sept. 28, writes:—Through the kindness of our Heavenly Father, I still live and enjoy usual good health, for which I hope I am thankful, and trust that the Giver of all good seeth in me a heart disposed in gratitude to enjoy his loving kindness, so often bestowed. You have been apprized however, that my condition in some respects, has been a suffering one, for more than two years past, because of the change that had occurred in my religious views. But I still think I am right in believing in the sleep of the dead—both righteous and wicked; and in the end, the resurrection of the righteous to everlasting life, and the wicked to die again, to be no more for ever. These sentiments connected with the doctrine of the regeneration of the earth, exhibits such a glory in the second coming of Christ, that his advent becomes doubly and dearly interesting; consequently, I like the message, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and am trying to be ready that I may be among them to whom he will say, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom, prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Then "the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." His right it is to reign, on the throne of David, to order and establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even forever. Isa. 9: 7. The kingdom will have no end: Luke 1: 33. There will be no death there, neither sorrow, nor crying; for the former things will pass away. Rev. 21: 4.

It was God's pleasure to give Adam (the man formed of dust) a kingdom; though he was made a little lower than the angels, he was crowned with glory and honor. Heb. 2: 7. But the pleasure of the Lord did not prosper in his hand, neither has it in the hand of any man since—Solomon not excepted. Though God accepted his prayer, and promised to establish his kingdom for ever, it was on condition of faithfulness. 1st Kin. 9: 5. He departed from his God, and consequently, the kingdom was rent from him. 1 Kin. 11 chap. But God's Son endured the cross, despising the shame, and all for the joy that was set before him. Heb. 12: 2. Therefore the kingdom is his: he, as the nobleman, went away to receive it. Luke 19: 12. The prophet Daniel saw it. See Dan. 7: 13, 14. Blessed be God—he will come again! and in view of the overwhelming testimony on the subject, I can with the utmost confidence or faith, say in prayer, "Thy kingdom come!" Then will the second man (in dominion) reign; the last Adam will see his seed all happy and prosperous in the new earth, with its new heavens, no more to die. Is it too much to rejoice because these things are nigh even at the doors? Certainly not. Thank the Lord—I can still say, "Come Lord Jesus" and come quickly.

Bro. R. Burnham, Exeter, N. H., Oct. 7th, writes:—I have just come from the conferences held in Sutton and Tuftonborough. Our God has sweetly blessed us in both of those meetings. We found many good, honest souls, in both of those places, who loved us in word and deed, and abundantly paid all of our expenses. Those, the most of them, who have been in the door-shut theory, are coming along right now. They are the most of them, I think, good honest souls. Finally, the cause in this State is prospering, and is likely to prosper, till the Master comes.

ICELAND; ERUPTION OF MOUNT HECLA, AND EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS.—A letter from Copenhagen of Sept. 21st has the following intelligence:

We have just received news from Iceland to the 18th, and from the Ferroe Islands to the 25th ult. Never in the memory of man has there been a more disagreeable summer than the present. Torrents of rain and storms succeeded each other without intermission. The measles and the dysentery carried off almost the fourth of the inhabitants, especially on the coasts, which caused the cultivation of the land to be paralysed, and the fishery, which would otherwise been most abundant, to be neglected. The bad weather prevented the Danish, German, French, Belgian and English savans from pursuing their researches into the state of Mount Hecla, but they have decided on passing the winter in Iceland, in order to profit by the cold and dry weather to carry on their investigations. Toward noon on the 22d ult. there was a sudden and violent eruption of Mount Hecla, the commencement of which was accompanied by several shocks of earthquake, extending to a radius of about three miles, (seven French leagues.) The eruption lasted about 40 minutes; the flames rose to an immense height, and all the country round the volcano was covered with a thick layer of ashes.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Says the National Intelligencer—"The foreign journals give fearful accounts of the scarcity prevailing in various parts of Europe, with statements of actual famine in some quarters. While the potato crop has failed in the British dominions and elsewhere, the rye crop, much depended on in Germany, has failed there. In France great apprehension is felt with regard to subsistence. A riot occurred in Paris on the last of September in consequence of a rise in the price of bread. The shops of the bakers were attacked."

A London journal, the Sun, of October 1st, gives a more distinct picture of the sufferings experienced in some parts of Ireland:

"Unhappily, the patience of the unfortunate Irish is at length exhausted. We have now before us that most appalling spectacle of national agony, a people driven to desperation by the pangs of hunger, and braving a violent death rather than endure the bitter torments of a more lingering dissolution. After sustaining the direst woes of starvation with a most noble fortitude, after pining in their hovels under an accumulation of all human misery, penury, inanition, neglect, and despair, and after bearing these extreme sufferings with a meekness and a tranquility beyond all praise, the laborers of Ireland have been tasked to the uttermost limits of endurance, and have now risen against their more affluent neighbors. Towards the conclusion of last week, a slight glimmer of the approaching insurrection was observable in the vicinity of Crookhaven, where a vast concourse of the emaciated peasantry assembled together in the village of Golen, to proclaim that their wretchedness was no longer endurable.

"The sullen anguish depicted on every one of these melancholy faces is described by an eye-witness to have attested sufficiently the extremity of their distress. A more appalling spectacle could not be witnessed," writes one correspondent. Want and despair was the pervading characteristics of the multitude. That dark promise of violence and insubordination has been fulfilled. At the very commencement of this week, namely, on Monday morning, the peasantry at Dunganin assumed such a threatening aspect, and congregated together in such dangerous numbers, that the military were called out, several shots were fired upon the mob, many of the starving rioters were wounded, and on Tuesday two of them died from mutilation. By the context of this miserable intelligence from Waterford, we are informed that brickbats and other missiles were hurled at the dragons; and that, notwithstanding the recent discharge of musketry, a dwelling-house at Cappa was assailed, and that knots of insurgents were scattered over the country intervening between that locality and Cork."

EARTHQUAKE AT TRINIDAD.—Letters of a recent date from the Island of Trinidad, state that twelve or fifteen shocks of an earthquake had been experienced in that island within the last few days, some of them more severe than any that had been felt there for many years. Much damage had been done to buildings, and even the ground was cracked in several places. Two of the shocks occurred during divine service, and one while the people, or a portion of them, were assembled at the theatre. In one of the churches a very large stone fell from the roof or tower directly into the midst of the congregation, but providentially no person was hurt. A general consternation prevailed among the inhabitants on account of the number and violence of the shocks, and an apprehension that they might again be repeated. As yet no lives had been lost.

Lowliness of mind is not a flower which grows in the field of nature, but is planted by the finger of God in a renewed heart, and learned of the lowly Jesus.

"SEA AND WAVES ROARING," TERRIBLE GALE ON THE GULF OF MEXICO.

The most terrible gale that was ever witnessed on the Gulf of Mexico, is reported to have taken place Oct. 11th. Says a writer in describing the terrors of the storm:

I was on board the revenue cutter Morris, about one mile from Key West, at anchor with one hundred and fifty fathoms of chain, with yards down on deck, and every preparation made for the storm.

At 4 P. M., the air was full of water, and no man could look to windward for a second; houses, lumber and vessels, were drifting by us; some large sticks of timber were turned end over end by the force of the current, and the sea was running so high, that as it broke over us, it brought lumber, casks, &c., on board, and carried them across our decks. At 4½, the water was up to our lower half ports, on board, and guining upon us, when our starboard chain parted and we commenced dragging, we knew not which way, as our compasses flew round in such a manner that they became useless. Now our fears were that we should go out over the Reef into the Gulf, and that before we got into the Gulf the vessel must strike and bilge; but fear would not save her. At this time, we cut away our foremast, when a sea struck us, knocking the schooner on her beam ends, carrying our bulwarks, cranes, larboard post, quarter houses, swinging boom and every moveable, off decks; and to right the vessel, we hoisted the lee guns overboard, and knocked out the ports, all hands expecting momentarily to go to the bottom. We were in this suspense for one hour, when we struck on some reef unknown, our larboard chain parted, and we made preparations to scuttle the vessel. The hurricane gradually subsided, although at 12, midnight, we were striking heavy, and blowing a gale from S. E.

On the morning of the 12th, the scene was anything but agreeable. We had drifted about 3 miles and a half of that distance over a shoal, with only two feet of water on it at ordinary times. This was the depth of water around the Morris when I left her. Around her lie wrecks of all descriptions; one ship on her beam ends; three brigs dismasted; also three schooners; three vessels sunk in a small channel, and four vessels bottom up. How many persons attached to these vessels have been drowned I am unable to say. We have picked up only two, and one of them a young man, I knew intimately. The light ship at the North West Pass had gone from or sunk at her moorings. The light-houses at Key West and Sand Key were washed away, and Key West is in ruins.

A white sand beach covers the spot where Key West light-house stood, and the waves roll over the spot where Sand Key was. Fourteen persons were either killed or drowned at Key West light-house, and not a soul escaped to tell the tale. The only vestige of the light-house to be seen is a portion of the iron posts of the lantern and some pieces of soap stone, which were washed one hundred yards from the spot where they fell. At Sand Key six persons were killed or drowned, most likely the former, as the general impression is, they flew to the storm light-house for refuge, the Key being very low. Poor old Captain Appleby, (I know him well,) he has told me the first hurricane would sweep all to destruction; and alas! his prediction is verified.

At Key West the tide was 5 feet high, and running six miles an hour through the centre of the town. The citizens fled to the back part of the town, which is rather higher than the rest, into the bushes, laid down and held on, expecting every moment the waves would reach them. Parents were separated from their children, husbands from their wives, and all was confusion, terror and dismay. The island trembled to its very centre; a few hours more and a white sand-beach would have covered the now desolate remains of Key West. The occupants of the Marine Hospital were expecting every moment to go into eternity. It is a large stone building, and being surrounded with five feet water running by six miles an hour, cutting the sand out from the foundation, the situation was awful. Thirty feet of the stone washed away from one corner, fifteen from the other, and the roof blown off. All of the wharves are washed away or injured; not one warehouse escaped the fury of the storm; wood and stone seemed all to be going one way—to destruction. There is not more than six out of six hundred houses, that are not unroofed or blown down. Three hundred are estimated to have been blown down.

The public buildings at the fort, as well as the wharf, are all gone, and the fort is a mass of ruins. It is estimated that the government alone will lose about $200,000. The Custom House is most injured, but the United States Barracks at the east end of the town sustained no injury, and are occupied by the crew of the brig Perry, and revenue cutter Morris, and by the collector of customs and whose houses have been blown down. The streets and roads are impassable, being filled up with lumber and the ruins of fallen houses. Some large sticks of lumber from the fort are up in the middle of the town."

"Valiant for the Truth."

BY JAMES MONTGOMERY.

Fight the good fight;—lay hold
Upon eternal life;
Keep but thy shield, be bold,
Stand through the hottest strife;
Invincible while in the field,
Thou canst not fail,—unless thou yield.

No force of earth or hell,
Though false with men unite,
Truth's champion can compel,
However prest, to flight;
Invincible upon the field,
He must prevail,—unless he yield.

Apollyon's arm may shower
Darts thick as hail, and hide
Heaven's face, as in the hour
When Christ on Calvary died;
No powers of darkness, in the field,
Can tread thee down,—unless thou yield.

Trust in thy Saviour's might,
Yea, till thy latest breath,
Fight, and like him in fight,
By dying conquer death;
Then rise to glory from the field,
And with thy sword thy spirit yield.

Great words are these, and strong;
Yet, Lord, I look to thee,
To whom alone belong
Valor and victory;
If God be for me in the field,
Whom can I fear? I will not yield.

"Day of Wonders!"

Day of judgment! How certain, and unavoidable! Day of wrath! Day of vengeance! Day of destruction! Day of final retribution! Day of Decision! Day of wonders, indeed! How awful! how sublime, and yet how glorious! How grand, and conspicuous will be the day of adjudication! Ah! yes, that day with all its scenes and exhibitions, transactions and decisions, is certain, conclusive, and unavoidable! The commencement of that day, will end the drama of this world's career; and with it will commence the endless day of eternity! O! Eternity, day of eternity near! Day of judgment near; and O how few prepared to meet it! Awful truth! Overwhelming thought! Day of wonders near! My God is it so? Are we standing on the very threshold of eternity? Are we to witness soon the exhibitions of the Day of Wonders? Are we in a few days or months at most to hear the mighty voice of the Son of God, saying, "Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment?" Yes! We may answer with emphasis, YES! the day of eternity is about to dawn! The evidences of its nearness I need not here give; they have been given time and again, through the press and from the pulpit, by abler pens, and more powerful intellects, than mine. Yes, the alarm has gone forth into all the world; it has echoed, and re-echoed from hill top to valley; it has sounded from east to west, from north to south. It has gone with railroad speed from city to city, from village to village. It has crossed the briny deep, and gone to the land of our fathers, where it has been reiterated from kingdom to kingdom, as on the wings of the wind. And finally, it has gone from the 'river unto the ends of the earth.'—

Where, let me ask, is the Nation, Kindred, Tongue, or People, that has not heard the sound thereof? All nations will be left without an excuse. And soon, yea, very soon, they will be called to an account for the indifference and contempt with which they have treated the truth of a coming Savior. Ah yes, the world, and professed Christendom, that are singing the syren song of peace, dreaming of the world's conversion, and looking for a thousand years of prosperity and peace, this side of the coming of Christ, will soon be aroused by the mighty thunderings of the trump of God. Oh how astonished will they be! How disappointed! How mistaken! What horrors will seize their guilty souls, while the wonders of the GREAT DAY begins to unfold to their astonished visions! The Son of God comes, the time of trouble commences, and every eye now beholds Him, seated on the great white throne, in dreadful majesty! The heavens have departed, and rolled together as a scroll, and the kindreds of the earth now see, through the long vista of space, the insulted Son of God, descending on his azure throne, attended by the bright retinue of celestial hosts for his escort! His voice is heard; it shakes creation from centre to circumference: the dead in Christ come forth, changed from death to life; from corruption to incorruption; from mortality to immortality. The living saints changed in a moment, and caught up together, meet the angelic hosts. Saints and angels meet in the middle air—the vaults of heaven ring with shouts of victory! Victory! and Triumph over Death and the grave; while legions of angels make the courts of heaven resound with Alleluias to God and the Lamb! But on the other hand, what is going on among those left on the earth? ah! they begin to pray for rocks and mountains to hide them; shrieks of despair; wailing and weeping is heard resounding through their astonished ranks! 'Day of Wonders,' truly!—Mortal man is too feeble to paint the scenes of that day! O sinner, (should this meet your eye) stop and think, before you further go! Ponder, for a few moments, in your mind the scenes of the judgment which you soon must meet, and then prepare to meet them. O careless professor, awake from thy slumbers, and prepare for the judgment!

O, ye heralds of a coming Savior, where are you? Are you still on the watch-tower, sounding the alarm? Stand to your posts, cry aloud, and spare not! Have you in any degree slackened your exertions? Arouse your energies, and put forth ever effort to save souls from impending danger! The conflict is short; the victory will soon be won!

Where are those Brethren and Sisters that can wield the pen in the cause of truth, and feed the household of faith with meat in due season?—Let us hear from them. Where are those brethren that have plenty of this world's goods? Are they doing what they can to herald the truth abroad? See to it, my brethren. Let us all come up to the help of the Lord, and do what we can; and soon we shall be rewarded: Yes,

A day without night,
We'll dwell in his sight,
And eternity
Will seem but a day!

Faint Not.

"Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."—Gal. 6: 9.

How exceedingly appropriate is this injunction at the present time. And how encouraging the assurance "we shall reap," if we fulfil the condition, "faint not."

In view of the promised inheritance, we have, as it were, girded ourselves for the race. We have determined to lay aside every weight; to overcome every obstacle. We were not at all discouraged by counting the cost, nor dissatisfied with the conditions; though we found them presented thus: "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." "A rich man shall hardly enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." "Sell that ye have, and give alms." "Ye shall be hated by all men for my name's sake." "In the world, ye shall have tribulation." All that will live Godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." We replied let us have the Kingdom; we will subscribe to the conditions, be they what they may. "All that the Lord hath commanded, will we do, and be obedient." And although, when we have done all, we are unprofitable, and present no claim on the ground of merit, yet, a glorious recompense of reward is freely offered; and to this, like Moses, we had respect. It runs thus, "Every one that has forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life." "The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land." "The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Having these promises, we endeavored to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and to perfect holiness in the fear of God. But our faith must have a trial, that it might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Still we judged him faithful that had promised, and submissively bowing to the will of our Heavenly Father, we said, "though the vision tarry, we will wait; and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Well, what now? Have we become almost exhausted, and ready to faint? Have trials new and unexpected beset our way? Trials severe, and long and continued? And do we sink in despondency, and faint by the way? Or in the midst of our discouragement and perplexity, do we seek to find some new direction, or promise, which will support our sinking spirits, and guide our doubtful steps. Do we bow at the feet of the Savior, and with the same submissive spirit with which we at first yielded up our life, cry, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Here, then, we have both the direction, and the promise, "Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Have we forsaken all we hold dear for Christ's sake? Have we relinquished the allurements of the world? the society of the world? the maxims, customs, and spirit of the world? Have we sacrificed our worldly interests? consecrated ourselves and all our possessions to the Lord? Let us not be weary in well doing; but remain separate, pilgrims, and strangers. And let us keep back no part of the price, which was voluntarily surrendered. Read Acts, 5: 1-4.—Deut. 15: 7-11. Prov. 21: 13; and 1 John, 3: 17.—How we cheerfully endured scorn and persecution from a wicked world? Let us not be weary; but esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than any earthly treasure; for in due season he will confess us before his Father and the holy angels, and then we shall reap, if we faint not. Are we suffering meekly and patiently the most bitter malice, and torturing cruelty, from parents, or brothers; partner, or children; friends or relations; in return for our kindest endeavors to promote their comfort and happiness? Let us not be weary in well doing, though the trial be continued day after day, and month after month; but remember that even hereunto were we called, i. e., to endure grief, suffering wrongfully. Therefore "rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." Beware, lest you become weary, and faint in your mind. "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin." Therefore, "despise not the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when rebuked of him." O, beware of being overcome thereby; or of becoming weary of exercising that meek and forgiving temper, on the exercise of which, your own forgiveness is suspended. Be not weary in well doing; ye shall reap, if ye faint not, and in due season too.

Again, does a brother misapprehend our views, or misjudge our motives; and to defend his own favorite theory, or his own course of conduct, does he either publicly, or privately give a false, and injurious impression concerning us? Let us not be weary of the restraints which the gospel imposes, but instead of being overcome of evil, let us overcome evil with good. Does the adversary tempt us to sloth, pride, or self-indulgence? Does he renew the attack though often repelled? Does he ever assail us where we least expected, and therefore least guarded? Does he tempt us to negligence in the active and social duties; and especially in the secret duties of self-examination, watchfulness, prayer, reading the word? Let us gird on the armor anew, and fight the good fight of faith. The shout of victory will soon resound from all the faithful, who patiently endure. Yea, the next struggle may be the last. But if not; if others still more severe should succeed, let us not be weary in well doing; the promise is sure, "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." C. Srowe.

"Search the Scriptures."

Judging from the tone, spirit and downward tendency of the literary, philosophical, political and religious productions which have lately appeared on the 'Jew question,' in connection with things as they exist, in these 'last days,' we cannot help thinking that this business has proved a 'profitable speculation' to some who 'serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the heart of the simple.' We are aware that by comparing the 'great and precious promises, which are all yea and amen in Christ Jesus,' within Bible limits, and excluding those from any participation, who have excluded themselves by pride, unbelief, ingratitude and daring rebellion against God; that the plena indignation and abhorrence of the Pharisees, the Sadducees, Scribes and Doctors of this generation will be aroused; but we fear not the revilings nor reproaches of those whose mantle of charity is in their own estimation ample enough to cover over the crying sins and abominations of the 'whore' and the adulterous brood, who have deeply drank of her cup of fornication. No—no, to God's dear people the voice from heaven now is, 'come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, for her sins have reached unto heaven and God hath remembered her iniquities.' Rev. 18: 4, 5.

Says God's anointed one, the sole heir of David's throne in the redeemed earth, which the meek shall inherit: Mat. 5: 5; Psa. 37; Prov. 2: 21, 22, 'Behold I will make them of the synagogues of Satan, which say they are Jews and are not, but do lie; behold I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee—because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold, I come quickly! hold that fast which thou hast that no man take thy crown. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God—and I will write upon him my new name: Rev. 3: 9—12. Think, dearly beloved, on the glory that awaits the conqueror, and buckle on the armor afresh, and fight the good fight of faith till Jesus comes and set us free. And O think on this, ye dear souls, who still linger about the outskirts of the doomed city, Babylon, and haste! escape for your life! ere the consuming fires of the last day are lit up by the breath of the Almighty to burn up and consume the proud and all that do wickedly, so as to leave them neither root nor branch.

But again, after quoting from Gen., chapters 13 and 17, in a former communication, we said, 'it is asserted in relation to the Abrahamic covenant, that the descendants of Abraham, according to the flesh, have already possessed Canaan, and will most certainly and permanently inherit it in the latter days—the Jews are then to be restored to Palestine,' &c. Now to one who has 'obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you,' (the apostles) Rom. 6: 17, and is led by the spirit of all grace, to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world, and has moreover, been taught by historic prophecy, Scripture chronology, and the given signs, to know that the advent of Christ, is now specially nigh, even at the door—such language seems outlandish and heathenlike in the extreme, though coming from the lips of a professed Christian. In the name of sound reason and common sense, leaving faith out of the question, is there aught more tenure of the land of Canaan, in the case of the ancient Jews, than a very faint semblance of the fulfilment of the covenant made with Abraham, the father of the faithful? And would the restoration of the modern infidel Jews to Palestine, with the original curse, of course, resting heavily upon it, be one jot more like a fulfillment? we trow not. Plainly, the latter is the antetype of the former, and as sure as the literal Jews possessed the earthly Canaan, so surely will the true Israel—the children of faith, and the heirs of the promise, have the redeemed earth—the true inheritance, for an 'everlasting possession. Gen. 17: 8.

But, again, if entire sanctification and the abiding earnest of the spirit in the heart, comes thro' belief and obedience, we may be sure that those who neither believe and obey God, need not hope to enjoy his favor. To the church at Ephesus,

Paul writes, 'In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; on whom also after that ye believed, (mark, not before) but after ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory,'—Eph. 1: 13, 14. In the same letter he thus admonishes the believers: 'Grieve not the holy spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption, &c. To the Thessalonians, who turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus who delivered us from the wrath to come, the apostle says, 'Quench not the spirit, —despise not prophesyings—prove all things—hold fast that which is good—abstain from all appearance of evil, and the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. When one reads the word understandingly, how plainly doth it appear from the Scriptures of truth, that the coming of the Holy and Just one, is uniformly held forth in the Bible, as the only powerful motive to stimulate the people of God to renewed obedience—diligence in duty, and a consistent unwearied practice of all that is good, pure and lovely, that so they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior. And it is not equally plain that the visionary theories and 'Jewish fables' of these 'last days,' such as the world's conversion, the temporal millennium, and the restoration of the natural Jews to Old Palestine, have through the instrumentality of an unrighteous, self-loving, worldly-minded priesthood, banded together the whole camp of the prince of darkness, against the blessed doctrine of the Lord's second advent from heaven, at, or about this time.

How painful to think that this originated, and is now carried on by those who claim to be chosen and called by the Holy Spirit to act under the commission of the Great Head of the Church, with the contents of which all Christians are or ought to be acquainted. But why does the nominal church submit so tamely to the spiritual domination of these 'humbugs'? Is it not because they have resisted, grieved, quenched and done despite to the Holy Spirit, till they have come under the doom of those to whom Isaiah was sent, G: 9—13. See also Mark, 4: 10—12. Acts, 28: 23—28. Certain it is, that in this Bible land, all might know who have access to the blessed volume, that the ancient Jews were amazingly destitute of true faith, without which it is impossible to please God. Isaiah, whom they call the evangelical prophet, thus addresses them by divine authority—'Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil—learn to do well; seek judgment—relieve the oppressed—judge the fatherless—plead for the widow.' 'If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land—but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Isa. 1: 16—19. They refused to obey, and continued to rebel against the Holy One of Israel, till the neck became stiff, and the heart hard as adamant so that neither mercy nor judgment could reclaim them. And when their long promised Messiah 'came to his own, his own received him not.' On the contrary, they combined and conspired against him, and slew and hanged him on a tree, 'because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets, which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.'

Thus the ancient Jews filled up their cup of iniquity. 'This is the heir,' said they, 'come let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours.' 'We have no king but Cæsar.' Hence the kingdom of God was taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. Now, the unalterable reward of all is clearly defined, Rom. 2: 7—11. 'To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality—eternal life; but unto them that are contentious and obey not the truth, but obey unrighteousness—indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile;—but glory, honor and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile—for there is no respect of persons with God.' There, that is certainly enough, to satisfy those who will bow to divine authority.

Brethren beloved in the Lord, let us hold fast our profession without wavering—for faithful is he that hath promised—and in due time he will fulfil every jot and tittle of his word to the everlasting joy of your heart. Soon the New Jerusalem will descend from heaven and will unfold its pearly gates, that the righteous nation that keepeth the truth may enter in. Amen.

JOHN MOFFATT.

Ellicotts Mills, Oct. 7th, 1846.

Sundry Thoughts.

There were always two classes of the Jews or Israel; the whole were never subjects of promise, especially, future promise. The 24th chapter of Jeremiah illustrates this fact. The good figs represent obedient Israel, who were sent into captivity for their good; but they were promised to be acknowledged, and returned no more to be pulled down, nor to be plucked up. This promise is still future, or it has failed. For they have since been scattered among every nation on earth by the Romans. But there was a general promise to Israel, good and bad, that they should return from that captivity at the end of 70 years; which promise was fulfilled by a general decree granted by Cyrus, King of Persia; the Jews or Israel represented as bad figs, were the rebellious house of Esau. It was true of Israel, that they were broken off the vine that the Gentiles might be grafted in. But it was only the rebellious part of the house that were broken off, and it is only the obedient part of the Gentile house that is grafted in, and they are exhorted to take heed while they think they stand. The Gentiles as a whole, are no more grafted into Christ, than the Jews were; there has always been a rebellious portion of both, and by far the greatest portion, but among them both, there has been a remnant according to the election of grace, that has stood by faith; destroy this position, and universal salvation must take the place of it.

The scriptures are an infallible guide to ruin, as well as to glory; they teach with the same certainty the one as the other; and when the obedient house, out of every nation on earth, is prepared for the glory that remains to be revealed, the disobedient house will also be prepared for destruction, and both will plead the word of God in justification of their course. But, beloved, while one pleads it in the pride of his heart; the other will plead it in the humility of his soul. And between the two, there is a vast gulf, which is widening every moment. While the scriptures of truth are a pillar of fire to one; they are at the same time, a cloud of darkness to the other.

My brethren and sisters, we have been disappointed in our hopes; once, twice, and three times. What then? While our very disappointments have prepared us to endure trials; have they not also prepared the rebellious house for the awful consequences of trampling the hope of Israel underfoot? Most certainly they have. One of two things is true; the eye of God is not upon all His works, and He does not discern the end from the beginning; or He has directed the advent movement, and it will finally appear clear to every glorified saint. Who will rise up and say, that all this mighty movement, which has shaken all christendom; has been the work of the adversary of souls? Is it his policy to alarm men about such things? or to quiet their fears, and compose men into a profound slumber? Most certainly the latter is the case, and while God in His infinite goodness and mercy, has sent His angels to fly through the heavens, and to declare to dying men and women that He was coming to judge the world; the arch enemy has succeeded in destroying its effect, and the great portion of the human family are already prepared for his snare. Judge ye, whether the first or the last has been the work of an enemy. We have always moved upon the best evidence we had upon the time, when our great Deliverer would come. This has always been right. Our faith and works have thereby been made fully manifest to the world, and will finally condemn it. God is never displeased at such manifestations of obedience. We chose the earliest date of chronology, and its very obscurity may teach us that God designed we should do so; this should never be questioned; it has better prepared us to meet the event looked for, than we could otherwise have been.

Our present position; the light we now have on time, was never more satisfactory than at this moment; who can say, the morrow will not place the matter in a position to be gain-sayed no more? O be watchful, be humble, be patient, perfecting the latter grace in fear, nothing doubting. What God has promised, He will assuredly perform.

One thing is always true of fallen human nature; it is always more willing to say amen to what has been, and to what is yet to take place, than to the things that now are. Men never appreciate the present. The heart of man is so selfish, that it seldom receives admonition, and is more easily led to believe that others should suffer than itself. Yet in its selfishness, it is always willing to receive all the benefits of suffering whether it merit them or not. The scriptures abound in illustrations of this point; how often when the prophets of the Lord rose faithfully admonishing the people, they replied, the evil will not overtake nor prevent us. Who among all the people could be made to believe the Babylonian captivity would take place in their day, notwithstanding there had been so much said about it by the prophets of God? A little observation will show, this has ever been the case, and that it is true at this time.

Another thing is true; false prophets always quieted the fears of the people. The true prophets always declared the whole truth faithfully, however painful it might have been. It is the whole truth unadulterated, that will bring us safely to the great point, prepared to meet it.—Let us then receive what is written cheerfully, examine it carefully, and faithfully, looking into the perfect law of liberty and light, to see if it is according to that unerring rule. To err, is human; but to forgive is like God.

What has this generation done, that proves in its behalf, that had the Prince of Life visited earth for the first time at this day, he would not by wicked hands have been crucified? Has not this generation done all, said all, and so far as the spirit of the age will permit, are they not ready to execute what was done? Can we not all witness to the fact, that when the glorious tidings of the second coming of Christ to redeem the purchased possession, was first sent through the land, the people listened with gladness?—Was it not true, that when it was first announced, that a Savior was born in Bethlehem, the people hailed the news with joy and gladness, also? Is it not true, that while the first inquired, "do the rulers believe on Him?" the latter also inquired,

"have our great and good men believed these things?" Is it not true, that because the rulers despised him, the people rejected him also? And does not the sin lie at the door of the great ones of the earth, that his glorious second appearing is despised at this time? Was it not true, that, had the Messiah proceeded immediately to restore all things according to their expectation, the Jews would all have gladly believed and entered his everlasting kingdom? And would not this have been the case, with the sects had he made his glorious appearance in 1842? Is it not true, that thirty years trial of patience, up to the commencement of Christ's ministry, had so destroyed, by the influence of the rulers, all belief of his being the Messiah, that when he began his ministry, spake as never man spake; performed such acts as were perfectly astounding in their character; the people had become so hardened that they cried out in their anger, we will not have this fellow to reign over us? Is it not true, also, that the same causes have produced the same effects upon this generation, and were not the same causes necessary to produce that effect?—And are they not saying in their hatred and contempt, where is now the promise of his coming? Was it not true, that because they pursued such a course, that all the great and important results connected with his mission, were forever hid from their eyes? Is it not also true, and has it not grown out of the very position we now occupy, that the vastly accumulated importance resulting from his second mission, are about hid forever from the eyes of this generation? Could or did, the wilful ignorance and wickedness of that people, stay for a single moment the terrible consequences of their conduct? Can this generation escape the awful penalty of rejecting the glorious things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began? In short, was not the whole of the one, a perfect type of the whole of the other, and the latter under circumstances of peculiar aggravation? Did not the Jews plead ignorance? Did they not claim that they had punctually observed the law of Moses; and practically performed every necessary sacrifice in the temple of God, and thereby looked for deliverance at the hand of God, when the hour of trial came? We answer, yes. Were they delivered? We answer again, no. Will not the Gentiles also make the same plea? Claim to have observed his ordinances, and to have kept them? Yea more, will they not look for deliverance, and plead what they have done, and are doing for the conversion of the world, forgetting also, that they too have exclaimed in anger—We will not have this man to reign over us? Will they be delivered? No. No. My brethren and sisters, God deals with sin as he ever dealt with it.

But another thing is true; before God punished that degenerate people the Jews, he led his little flock away from evil. And he has promised that if we keep the word of his patience, we shall abide the fiery trial, that is to come on all the world, to try them that dwell on the earth. He has also promised, saying, "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie, behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee." Has this scripture ever been fulfilled?—We think not. When, in all the history of the people of God, have the enemies of his people, who called them out casts, come and worshiped at their feet? This portion of God's word evidently finds a fulfillment during that hour of temptation which is coming on all the world to try every man's work. It shall then come to pass, that in all the land, where it was said unto them, ye are not the people of God, there shall ye be called the Sons of the living God. O be careful in this matter, dear brethren and sisters, for we are approaching a crisis. It can only be compared to a lesser body approaching some powerful centre of attraction. At first its movement is slow; but as it nears the point its velocity is increasing, and soon the two bodies meet with a tremendous concussion. This we see fully verified in the history of God's dealing with the human family: In the days of Noah, it took 120 years to warn a guilty world that God had determined to destroy it. After crucifying the Prince of Life, the Jews had about thirty-five years to complete their preparation for destruction. Here we see the ball has greatly increased in speed; but how is it now? What in the days of Noah required 120 years, required only 35 in the days of the Savior; and now can be accomplished in a still shorter time!

This is the day of the Lord's preparation, and things are maturing fast; the vehicles of communication seem like the torches, and run like the lightnings; many are running to and fro and knowledge is increasing still upon the great subject of Israel's consolation, and must be understood perfectly; and if one agent stand still, God will assuredly raise up another to press the light before his waiting people, to thoroughly furnish them for his use. The time in which we live, every moment of it is big with events; strange indeed would it appear if there was nothing written for every step we have yet to take, as well as what we have taken; the time, and the events connected with it, in which we live is too important, to suppose for a moment that a dormant space can be found in our history; press forward, therefore, pray earnestly, and be careful for nothing, for the Lord is indeed at the door.

ROCHESTER, NOVEMBER 18, 1846.

The Evangelical Alliance.

Some have thought that this body was a subject of particular prophecy, and is to be classed among the signs of the last days, sure precursors of the end of all things at the door. Though we have not been able to find any specific prophecy which relates to the Alliance, exclusively, yet we think its acts form the cap of the climax of the sins of the church of the last days, to which the prophetic Word repeatedly and clearly alludes. Whether we are correct in our conclusion or not, one thing is very certain, viz; that the acts of this body on the subject of Slavery are of the darkest die, the deepest stain,—nothing, in the history of the church of the 19th century, that is more corrupt; or more strikingly exhibits the lack of moral honesty in the very sanctuary of the church.

It is admitted on all hands, we believe, that the wisest, purest, and best ministers of the sects to which they belong, composed the Alliance. These good men, so called, saw the evils of sectarian divisions, and met professedly to do them away, and unite in the holy bonds of Christian union, as the gospel directs. But as good, as true to their trust, as these apostles of the 19th century were, they could suffer the sin of slavery to go unrebuked, and sacrifice at its bloody shrine, the holy principles of Christian union, which they had solely met to consummate. The act being committed by the influence of the American delegation, and they not being slaveholders, but the very cream of the ministry of the non-slaveholding churches, most clearly and painfully shows that the church generally, not excepting its purest branches, is fallen: that her best ministers will disgrace their high calling, and sacrifice any and every principle of the holy religion they profess, for fear of displeasing 'men-stealers,' or sundering the unholy ties of brotherhood that exist between them and these men of oppression and blood. Truly, these are perilous times, such as were to exist, and do, in 'the last of the days.' There is no redeeming principle in the church—her cup of iniquity is full to overflowing, and soon with a deceived and sinful world, she must meet the reward of her doings at the hand of her insulted Lord.

The following facts relative to the Alliance will be read with much interest by our readers, and will confirm the truth of the foregoing remarks. We first copy from the Baptist Register.

"The discussion was continued dispassionately and courteously. In the end, however, the excitement becoming warm, the whole subject was referred to a large committee.

On Saturday afternoon, the following was reported by the committee as a compromise, and adopted:

"In respect to the necessity of personal holiness, the Alliance are of opinion that it is recognized in the article of the basis—on the work of the Spirit; and in reference to various social evils existing in countries within the circle of this Alliance, such as the profanation of the Lord's day, intemperance, dueling, and the sin of slavery,—they commend these and similar evils to the consideration of the branches; trusting that they will study to promote this general purity and the Christian honor of this confederation by all proper means. And in respect especially to the system of slavery, and every other form of oppression in any country, the Alliance are unanimous in deploring them, as in many ways obstructing the progress of the gospel; and express their confidence that no branch will admit to membership slaveholders, who, by their own fault, continue in that position, retaining their fellow men in slavery, from regard to their own interests."

On further consideration, however, the American delegates felt that they had yielded too much, and the subject came up again on Monday morning. Says the Patriot:

"The Conference has just assembled, and the American delegates, who have been breakfasting at Spring Gardens with Sir Culling Smith, have made their appearance. Care rests upon every countenance. Depressed looks and anxious faces are seen on every hand. It is quite evident that the settlement of Saturday night was not the decision of calm and cool reflection, so much as a hasty compliance, for union's sake, under intense excitement, with that which involved compromise and concession. Sir Culling is pale and restless, the secretaries grave and full of foreboding: while the leaders of the three sections are all earnest in conversing upon the evident course affairs must take during the sitting. Nothing could be more unfortunate than the present position of affairs. It is thought that the Alliance must be broken up: and the protest* shows the strong feelings of the main body of foreign delegates.

These all deplore the introduction of the question of slavery at all: and though the resolution was adopted almost unanimously, it is now the determination of the Americans to re-open the subject.—This attempt, it is believed, Sir Culling will strenuously resist; but there is little doubt the question will be recommitted for a second report."

Dr. Cox soon rose and remarked on behalf of the Americans, that with one exception, (Mr. Himes,) they were all agreed; they thought, upon mature reflection, that the question of slavery must be left in abeyance.

Mr. Justice Crampton then moved to rescind the vote of Saturday; but on motion of Hon. & Rev. B. W. Noel, seconded by Dr. Beecher, the whole subject was referred to a new committee.—On their report, the next day, the vote excluding slaveholders was formally rescinded by a small majority. Of this the Patriot says:

"The result is most unfortunate. The Alliance has been compelled to retract its condemnation of slavery, and to refer the whole subject of the admission of members to a future meeting of the Alliance, to be held at such time and place as may be agreed upon hereafter; leaving the American branch to admit or exclude slaveholders, as they may think proper, and the British to consider and determine in the meantime whether they can concede the point."

*A protest against the report respecting slavery, adopted on Saturday, was entered by John B. Adger, and thirty-nine others, mostly of the American delegation.

Speaking on this subject, the Religious Herald, of Hartford, Ct., justly remarks:

"We have two things to say in reference to this matter.

First, we do not understand why the American delegation, as a body, should have been regarded by the Alliance, and should have regarded themselves (which they evidently did,) as personally touched, just as soon as the subject of slavery was introduced. Immediately after Mr. Hinton's speech on his motion to exclude slaveholders, the Chairman, Sir Culling E. Smith, called the attention of the meeting to, "the silence and calmness manifested by the American brethren."—(Which silence and calmness, we are sorry to say did not last long.) But why should they not have been calm and silent? Not one of them we believe was a slaveholder, and nearly all of them were from states which have no more to do with slavery than England herself. There was no reason whatever (unless they chose to have it so,) why they should have been identified in any way with slaveholders.—But the most of them did choose to have it so. They resisted most strenuously any condemnation of slavery or even allusion to it. They "refused an inch of compromise," and by their efforts it was, that the very moderate disapproval of slaveholding contained in the minute above quoted, was finally stricken out. Their course on this subject will be differently viewed in this country by different individuals; we enter our humble protest against it.

Second, our belief is that by this false step on the subject of slavery, the Alliance is ruined.—Perhaps it was unnecessary and unwise to introduce the question at all, but this having once been done, it was worse than unwise for the Alliance to allow itself to be driven from a deliberately assumed position, by the volunteer attorneys of the slaveholders from this side of the Atlantic. The British people, hating from their inmost hearts the whole system of slavery, will have no fellowship with a body of men who have been guilty of this weakness, and American abolitionists, to a man, will turn their backs upon them. With the London Patriot, we say, that so far as the interests of the Alliance are concerned, "this result is most unfortunate."

The following account from the Boston Liberator, published in Boston, is to the point. Mr. Garrison, the writer, and editor of the Liberator, was present at the Alliance, and of course knows whereof he affirms. He says:

"In fact, the whole movement has ended in a manner justly calculated to excite the ridicule and contempt of all Christendom. There is not even a fragment left of it. It has not even an isolated existence. What a fact to circulate in the nineteenth century, that a body claiming to have been divinely suggested, and composed of the holiest men on earth, crumbled at the touch of the Slave Power, and vanished into thin air, so that it is no longer visible to the eye, or palpable to the touch! Heavenly harmony reigned, until a proposition was made to stigmatize theft as a crime, and to declare that a man-stealer was one who gave no satisfactory evidence that he had been 'born again'—and, therefore, ought not to receive the hand of Christian fellowship. This was going too far! It was secular as well personal in its bearings! It had something to do with this world, whereas the next is the all-important subject of consideration! Our American delegates, Beecher, Cox, Patton, Kirk, Emery, Morse, Olin, &c.—could not restrain their indignation! They felt wounded, defrauded, insulted—and declared that they never could submit to such dangerous interference! In their judgment, indiscriminately to put slaveholders beyond the pale of the Christian church was to cut off the members of Christ's body, and to crucify him afresh! In some cases, (what cases were not specified,) slaveholding was a damnable act—in others, it was a religious duty! Some Slaveholders deserved to be sent to everlasting burnings—others were worthy of the highest seats in the kingdom of heavenly bliss! It was the Garrisonian abolitionists who deserved to be treated as infidels, and any amount of condemnation bestowed upon them was just! It was impossible that they could be actuated by good motives, and it was certain that they had put back the cause of emancipation at least two centuries!

Well, they sat in secret conclave, not daring to let a single spectator be present, and forbidding any one to report their proceedings. They sighed, and groaned, and complained, and threatened, and waxed warm, and hinted at an explosion; the heavens were as brass over their heads; thick darkness was around them; they prayed, and prayed, and prayed, but either their god was asleep, or had gone on a long journey, for he heard them not. Finally, they broke up in confusion, and all their professions of brotherly regard and Christian principle were thus demonstrated to be hypocritical and impious in the extreme."

Exposition of Isaiah lxxv 17-23.

A correspondent requests an exposition of this scripture. It is not always our duty to comply with such requests: for sometimes they are so numerous, it would require a great portion of our time should we comply with them all. We do not object to such requests being made, provided those who make them will be satisfied to leave it optional with us to answer or lay them aside. We are disposed to answer the request before us, because in so doing we shall not only gratify the individual who made it, but hope to subserve the cause at large. We will first give the text.

"Behold! I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.

But be ye glad and rejoice forever, in that which I create: for, behold! I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy,

And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.

And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

They shall not build—and another inhabit; they shall not plant—and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

And it shall come to pass, that before they call—I will answer; and while they are yet speaking—I will hear.

The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like a bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."

The temporal millenarians suppose this text favors their cause, but in this they are greatly mistaken; for it clearly shows when it will have its fulfillment, that the 'voice of weeping shall be no more heard in Jerusalem, nor the voice of crying.'—v. 19. This happy state of society can be experienced only in the immortal state, where there shall be no more death. No one contends that the people will not die during the supposed temporal millennium, but the text under consideration speaks of a state of society where there will be no crying, consequently no death; for it always produces crying; hence the text refers to the immortal state.

Again, the text says, 'The lion shall eat straw like the bullock, and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.'—v. 25. This state of things can never be witnessed until the 'restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began,' takes place. Then the destructive nature of the now ferocious brute creation, will be taken away; and, as before the fall, they will devour one another and man no more. This state of things no one, we believe, contends will be witnessed in the supposed temporal millennium; but just such a state of things did exist before the fall, and will be restored when Christ comes again; hence the text must refer to a state of things not anterior but posterior to the second advent of Christ.

The 'new heavens and new earth,' named in verse 17, which the Lord promises to create, are the same which are mentioned by Peter and John. The former, in 2 Pet. 3: 7, says, 'The heavens and earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.' Verse 12,—'The heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.' V. 13,—'Nevertheless we according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.' And the latter, in Rev. 21: 1, says, 'And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea.' By an examination of the context, it will be found that both these apostles make the creation of the new heaven and new earth posterior to the second advent of Christ. Indeed this is one very important object of his coming: the earth has been cursed for man's sake, defiled by man, and long man's destroyer; it has waxed old as doth a garment. It needs to be cleansed, made new, and suited to the eternal felicity of man, or restored to its primeval perfection: this, according to the prediction of Isaiah, under consideration, the Lord will do at his second advent. Then the new earth will be so perfect, so full of the glory of God, that this old crazy defiled earth will not 'come into mind,' or as the margin doubtless more correctly reads, 'come upon the heart: it will not be desired.

Verse 18th speaks of the everlasting joy which the immortal saints will have, in the new creation. Their rejoicing 'forever,' shows that it must be in the immortal state. This verse also predicts not only the creation of new heavens and a new earth, but speaks of creating 'Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy,' John, in vision, saw the literal fulfilment of this prediction. In Rev. 21st chap., he gives an account of the new heaven and new earth, of the 'holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God,' to become the metropolis or capital of the new earth, and of 'the nations of them that are saved' walking in the light of this holy city. This is to what Isaiah alludes in the expression, 'I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.' When this glorious prediction is fulfilled, then, as Verse 19 reads, God 'will rejoice in Jerusalem, [for his throne shall be there, Rev. 22: 3] and joy in his people, [for they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads, Rev. 22: 4] and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying: for, as John says, Rev. 21: 4, 'God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.'

Verse 20. 'There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days.' Where? not in this mortal state, even in the highest state of perfection of the fancied temporal millennium: for no one contends that there will be no infants there: it is thought that man will propagate his species more perfectly and numerously than ever before. Neither is it contended that there will be no old men there. Where then are we to look for this state of things? Evidently in the new earth. 'For the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.'

This last part of the verse is an explanation of the first part. In reference to children in the new earth it is said, as such, there will be none there. Why? 'For the child shall die an hundred years old.' Die where? Not in the new earth: for there will be no death there. Where then? In this world of death, of course. Though they die here in their infancy, they will be raised in manhood, and there, in the new earth, possess the intellect and stature of a saint who died here a hundred years old.

In reference to sinners in the new earth, we are taught in this verse that they will not be there. The sentiment appears to be this,—'An old man [that is a sinner] that hath not [by reason of his own sins] filled his days,' shall not inherit the new earth: for 'the sinner being an hundred years old [when he dies] shall be accursed,'—shall not be saved. If the sinner, by his temperate habits, prolongs his life to a hundred years, and is then accursed, most certainly that one will be accursed or excluded from the new earth, who, by his intemperate and sinful life has not filled his days, but is brought to a premature grave.

That the true meaning of this text is in a measure hid by an incorrect translation, will not understandingly be denied. But we do not question the correctness of King James' translation of it, as the only means of removing the difficulty in our way.—We believe the true meaning may be learned from the context, and other plain portions of Scripture which speak on the same subject. This we think we have given. But that it may be seen that the passage is obscurely rendered in our version of the Scriptures, we give the following evidence from a recent number of the Advent Herald. The writer says:—

"When in New York, we had free access to the valuable collection of Bibles in the rooms of the American Bible Society. Among them was one which pleased us, from its simplicity and expressiveness. It is called the Geneva Bible, having been translated at Geneva, in Switzerland, by Independent English divines, who fled thither, from religious persecution in their own land. The edition we saw was printed in 1580, during the lifetime of Theodore Beza, and but 16 years after the death of John Calvin,—32 years before the publication of King James' Bible. We do not wish to underrate the common version, but the king's sanction confers no critical skill or theological knowledge. The Geneva Bible had the sanction of Beza, (the associate and successor of Calvin,) who was, for many years, Greek Professor at Lausanne, an accomplished scholar, whose controversies with the most learned men of the day evinced his extensive learning, and his zeal for Protestantism. But his translation found small favor with wavering King James, for its tendency was too democratic to suit him, or the prelates of his time, who were not quite free from the remains of Popery. The king instructed his translators to copy the phraseology of the Bishop's Bible, (translated in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, his predecessor,) unless fidelity to the original required a variation from it. Hence it is easy to see, that they would not be likely to depart from it, in difficult texts, where the meaning was not clear to their own minds. In such texts, we think the authority of the Geneva Bible is quite as good as that of any other made in that age. It is accompanied by brief marginal notes, made by the translators to elucidate, more fully, their understanding of texts which might otherwise seem obscure. Here is the verse, the first half of it being Lowth's translation, and the part in italic, with its notes, from the Geneva Bible :

No more shall be there an infant short lived, nor an old man that hath not filled his days : for he that shall be an hundred years old shall die as a young man, (a.) but the sinner, being an hundred years old, shall be accursed. (b.)

(a.) Meaning, in this wonderful restoration of the church, there should be no weakness of youth or infirmities of age, but all should be fresh and flourishing, and THIS IS FULFILLED IN THE HEAVENLY JERUSALEM, when all sins shall cease, and all tears shall be wiped away.

(b.) Whereby he showeth that the infidels, and unrepentant sinners have no part in this benediction.

We are not dependent, however, on Beza and his pious and learned coadjutors for the statement that this text is to be fulfilled in the Heavenly Jerusalem. The Holy Ghost, in the words of the apostle Peter, seems to us to prove that fact, in the quotation of the promise of the new heavens and the new earth, which is not given, in plain terms, any where in the Old Testament, except in this chapter.

All the seeming difficulty is removed, when we remember that Isaiah's prophetic vision took in the events of all ages from his own times to the blissful period when he who sitteth on the throne shall say, 'Behold I make all things new.' John describes the new Jerusalem more minutely than Isaiah, but let any one compare the 60th of Isaiah with the 21st of Revelation, and he will see that both must be understood of the same things. In the three verses preceding the text, the prophet said, 'For behold I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind ; but ye shall be glad and rejoice forever, in that which I create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy, and I will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people, and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying.'—John, speaking of the same period, in Rev. 21: 3, 4, says, 'And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes ; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying.' Isaiah sees the same result, but he sees death intervene, as he stretches his prophetic gaze over the wide landscape of the future. He sees, however, that, as the righteous emerge, in the resurrection, from the dark valley, they are changed, having left behind them alike the infirmities of age and the weakness of infancy. He also briefly adverts to the fact, that the sinner, though he may die in venerable age with great honor, can have no part in the transcendent glories of that heavenly kingdom, for he will 'die accursed.'

To Correspondents.

We can see it duty to publish only the conclusion of Bro. C—'s lengthy article on the 'hour of temptation,' &c. We admire the candor and Christian spirit of the writer, but cannot think he is correct in the application of very many portions of scripture he has quoted. Should we publish the whole article, it would require more time on our part, and room in our sheet, than we could think it duty to devote, to set the whole matter right before our readers. If the sentiments entertained by Bro. C— were held by many, or likely to become the sentiments of any considerable number of our brethren, then it would be investigated in our columns. But as this is not the case, we think it wisdom to let them rest, at least for the present.

We admire the sentiments expressed in Bro. G—'s letter, designed for the benefit of his 'friends and relatives east.' It needs, however, correcting and transcribing, in order to fit it for the printer, and this we cannot spare time to do.

Correspondence of the English Mission.

BIRMINGHAM, Oct. 3d, 1846.

Bro. Hutchinson will give you a statement of his progress in Scotland ; he says :—

In giving an account of what I am doing in Scotland, I cannot do better than transcribe my private journal. I commence my present communication where my last terminated.

Friday, Sept. 11. Called upon the minister of the Free Church, Barrhead, at his request, but he was called away. Bro. Cochran has had several successful combats with him. In the evening I opened to a few of the Scriptures concerning the kingdom of God, especially removing seeming objections to the sentiment that the kingdom comes at the second Advent. Felt my spirit much refreshed in explaining the passage, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." Those who listened, clearly perceived that the promise was fulfilled in the transfiguration scene, and that therefore the transfiguration scene was a miniature exhibition of the Son of man coming in his kingdom, at the end of the world.

Saturday, Sept. 12. Conversated much on the faith which we preach.

Sabbath, Sept. 13. In the morning went to the Free Church, and in the afternoon and evening preached in "Cowan's Hall," Barrhead.—In my first discourse, I exhibited the promised inheritance of the saints, and in my second, I gave a synopsis of the evidences that the saints will soon, very soon, receive the inheritance.—Felt at home in my subject. Indeed the Bible reads to me in these lands just about as it used to read in America. Truth is truth all the world over. Some intelligent young men came to hear me, who had not come before. Their attention was evidently arrested. They said to Bro. Cochran, after the meeting, that it was made clear to their minds, that we are living on the end of the fourth kingdom. They desired more light, and inquired for publications on the subject. Also some who always went to Brown's Commentary to settle all their theological difficulties, have, since I came, laid it aside, and are now searching the Scriptures, to see whether these things are so; and are finding that they are so. Thus, while the majority are rejecting and despising this last message to the human family, some are embracing it, and are being profited by it.

Monday, Sept. 14. Having previously received a letter from a gentleman in Paisley, informing me that I might obtain a certain hall in that town, I went to secure it, and publish some bills. But found upon my arrival, that it had passed into other hands. The gentleman now controlling it, asked me what I lectured upon : when I replied, "On the second advent of Christ," he said, "As this is a religious matter, I cannot, as a Christian, let you have the hall, till I know whether you preach the truth." He asked me if I had not my views in print. I gave him my recent pamphlet on "The Kingdom of God." He said he should need some time to examine it, and he would give me an answer on the following Wednesday. I was next directed to a hall occupied by the "Congregational Methodists." Some of the official members consulted together, and declined letting me have it, saying that I might advance something which would disturb the sentiments of the church worshipping there. A noble minded bookseller, who felt no interest with the Advent, yet seeing their narrow mindedness, said, "If I had a hall, I would let Beelzebub have it, if he applied for it. I would give even him an opportunity to say what he could for himself." He took my pamphlet into his store to sell. I used to say about "'43," that "I had rather have to do with Caesar than the Pope," by which I meant, that I had rather have to do with the professed men of the world, than with most professors of religion. And I say so still. I endeavored to scatter a few rays of light in the place through our publications, and then walked to Barrhead, a distance of 4½ miles, feeling some cast down.

Tuesday, Sept. 15. Received a letter from William Lee, Lynwood, containing the following cheering words : "We are glad to know that you have arrived in Scotland. May the Lord prosper your way while here, in the conversion of souls. We welcome you with our whole soul, wishing you should come here as soon as possible. We are few in numbers, but are willing to give as the Lord prospers us. The Lord has given you an open door, and none can shut it." In the evening I commenced a short series of lectures in the Independent Meeting House, Neilston. Had a very good congregation.—They gave excellent attention, and I enjoyed considerable liberty in presenting the Nature of the Kingdom, and showing that it will come at the second appearing of Christ. Bro. Cochran thought the people were disappointed at my not at once taking up the evidence of the kingdom being nigh at hand, which I take up on the following evening. I think it best, generally, to begin at the foundation. To-day I welcome the perusal of the "Advent Herald," and "The Voice of Truth." Among much encouraging news relative to the cause in America, I am pleased to see by a letter of Bro. Buckley's, Aug. 19, that he was going, in company with Mr. Miller, to Canada East, and that Bro. Mansfield is going on a mission to the West Indies. I can sympathize with him in going to a land where Adventists are "few and far between."

Wednesday, Sept. 16. Devoted the day to an examination of some main points of our faith, and in the evening lectured again in Neilston. Explained the first two visions of Daniel, in the use of the "Chart." I think I never made the subject plainer. The subject evidently created a deep interest. An aged Christian remarked after, "I wish the Infidels had been present, and they would have seen that the prophecies have been fulfilled." Yes, the Advent system of interpretation is still the great antidote for infidelity.—Sold a few books after the lecture, also gave some. The minister was present, of whom I have some hope.

Thursday, Sept. 17. Went to the dedication of a new Meeting-house of the Free Church, Barrhead. Dr. McFarlan, of Greenock, an aged minister, preached a sweet sermon from Eph. 2: 20-22—He showed that the true Church is built upon the word,—that the Headship of the church is with Christ, and that the spirit dwells in the members individually and collectively. He remarked that the Free Church in Scotland will not answer the end of its Creator, unless it should be found a habitation of God through the Spirit. His discourse, however, was defective, as he did not advert to the hope of the Church, only in his prayer, he prayed that they might "raise a superstructure which will bear the searching fire of the day of judgment, which is fast approaching ;" and the Church might obey God in his ordinances, "till the second coming of Jesus Christ."—They terminated the services of the day with a Soiree in the church, which continued to a very late hour, and which was, I understand, distinguished by much frivolity, the ministers keeping the people in a roar of laughter. This shows a sad state of things, just as the Great Master is about to return. It will need more than freedom of State Patronage, to continue a church that the King will delight to honor, when he comes in to view the guests. In the evening I lectured again at Neilston. Subject, the Abrahamic Covenant. Other meetings concurred to make the congregation smaller than on the previous evenings. Usual interest. Closed my lectures there, at least till the following week, to give me an opportunity of trying to open halls in Paisley and Glasgow. The gentleman in Paisley did not write to me about the hall as soon as he promised. While few help me, many hinder me.

Friday, Sept. 18. Replete with toil. Went to Paisley. Saw the gentleman who had promised to write me. He had mailed a letter the evening previous. He said that he had read my pamphlet with much interest, and desired the privilege of paying for it. However, he said letting the hall would interfere with his educational arrangements, but that he had no objection to the subject. I then, in company with Bro. C., after some trouble, succeeded in obtaining the best hall in the town, for Sunday, Sept. 20.—Then got bills printed, which required a good many for this large town (it would be called a city in America), of 60,000 inhabitants. Went to Glasgow to feel my way in relation to lecturing there,—had some combat on the Jewish question, and returned to Paisley in the evening. It requires extraordinary effort to arouse public attention in this country. The question arose, "What can I do more than publish bills, to bring my appointment on the coming Sabbath into notice?" Well, I read on a large bill, that Mr. Hamilton, of London, was to lecture that evening in the "Exchange Rooms," on Phrenology, and examine the heads of noted persons. Said I to myself, "I'll go there and make a beginning." I took my seat not far from the lecturer. After the lecture, he proposed to examine a number of heads. After three respectable men had been examined, and a vacancy presented, I went forward a perfect stranger, the audience manifesting in their looks a desire to know more about me than the Phrenologist could tell them. So after he had given me a rather respectable head, I said, "If the audience will come to the large hall, Abercorn Buildings, 20th inst., at 2 in the afternoon, and 6 in the evening, they will find out a little more what I am. And if there are any infidels in the place, I shall be glad to see them present." This experiment had a happy effect, and created an intense interest to know the nature of my theme; and I expect will bring me many hearers.

Saturday, Sept. 19. After getting out the bills, and making other arrangements for the Sabbath, I walked to Barrhead, where I enjoyed a few hours repose. Received a cheering letter from Canada, containing consent to my remaining in this land during the winter. My companion says, "The question you have asked me is not unexpected, and were I to consult my own inclinations merely, you might readily know what would be the answer. But I feel to say as heretofore, Lord, direct. Thy will, O Lord, not mine, be done. Watch the leadings of Providence, and be convinced, if possible, whether God would have you remain, or return; and let not the persuasion of friends, neither here, nor in England, lead you out of the path of duty.—You know that I have long since learned to sacrifice my own feelings on the altar of duty; and if the Lord directs you to remain, I have not one objection to offer, although we may never meet again."

Sabbath, Sept. 20. A very rainy day.—Walked, in company with Bro. Cochran and Pollock, to Paisley. At 11 o'clock heard a sermon in the Free Church—a good practical discourse, but not a word about the Coming One. At 2 went to my "own hired house." Had an encouraging congregation, considering the wetness of the day. Had a precious time in dwelling on the Promises to the Fathers. In the evening the audience was large—seats full—all classes present. I went fully into the 2d and 7th chapters of Daniel, and gave a brief sketch of the 8th and 9th. I found the "Old Chart" very useful. I keep it not for "the good it has done," but for the good it does now. I had the very best attention, and a good impression was evidently made. The infidel had an opportunity of seeing that the Bible is the "Book of God." The collection met nearly half the expenses of the hall, and dear Bro. Cochran paid the rest. One came forward after my first discourse, and invited me to tea. But the people in these lands have about altogether overlooked what Paul says, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels." My trial in America has generally been, that too many have said at the close of meetings, "Go home with me." After the evening services, we walked to Barrhead. The night was very dark, and very unpleasant under foot, in consequence of heavy rains. When I got to B., I was hungry and tired, but found both food and rest under the kind roof of the widow. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

Monday, Sept. 21. I feel a great desire to lecture in Glasgow, but there are none that will extend a helping hand, and it would require more means than I have at present. Also Bro. Lee, Lynwood, urged me to go there. I have concluded to go Wednesday, 23d. This seems to be the line of duty.

I may add, that my general health is good, only I have had a perpetual cold since I came to this northern region.

Since the above, Bro. H. has sent us a note, saying:—

Never had I better prospects of doing good than in Hawick: there is the deepest interest in this place; the congregation was large last night, and my soul was full in presenting the truth—it was like '43. The meeting more than meets its expenses, and there is every prospect of raising a large and intelligent band here.—Yesterday I received an urgent letter from Selkirk, which is about 11 miles from this: indeed, this whole region seems to be open. I have some prospect of opening the way in Edinburgh. The pre-millennial Advent is becoming a subject of much controversy in Scotland. Rev. D. Brown, of Glasgow, has written an elaborate work, advocating the spiritual view: I have seen it; but he goes on the supposition that those who hold the literal view, all hold probation of the Advent; and he proves there is no probation after the Advent.

Letter from Bro. L. Gelpin.

Bro. Marsh:—The weekly visits of the Voice of Truth, tend much to strengthen the true believer; for certainly it comes freighted with much precious truth; but few papers seem to occupy the high and fearless ground in the dissemination of truth that the 'Voice' does. Much that it contains is fitly adapted to the present state of the advent cause. Its communications are mostly from those whose hearts are deeply imbued with the spirit of their mission, made warm by the truth which seems burning there; and which they in all the ardour of their souls, fired with a sense of the shortness of time and the momentous events of the coming day, are striving to get before the people. The Voice of Truth is but a channel for all such communications to flow from heart to heart; and thus while its correspondents are cheered on their way, thousands of its patrons are kept by its weekly visits from falling into a state of indifference and stupidity, at this fearful time, when all the motives of the world and of the enemy of souls are directed to throw the child of God off his guard, and cause him to be found sleeping on his post when his Master shall come. This effect is much prevented by the burning truths kept constantly before the mind by the weekly visits of the Voice of Truth. No greater work can the mind conceive of than that of aiding the tempted child of God to stand firm amidst the perils of the last days; a work which demands all the energies of the soul, aided and strengthened by the spirit of God; a work for which few are fully prepared—but a work which has for its reward, an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away—reserved in heaven, ready to be revealed in the last time. Truly all who are engaged in this arduous work, would fall if they were dependent alone upon human aid for success, and if their reward was to be found in the fleeting things of earth; but heaven holds out the reward, high above all the tribulations of this life, and bids the tempted and tried souls, to 'cast not away confidence which hath a great recompense of reward.' And truly when the reward appears so nigh—when Christ in all the glory of his Father shall appear, to 'recompense rest to those that are troubled'—then should the laborer rejoice that his work is nearly done; and yet, if he truly feels for those for whom he is laboring, and views them as they are, exposed to all the buffetings of Satan, and living in that age of the world when all the motives of earth and hell, coupled with the perils of the last days, are, with redoubled energy, dragging their victims down to the depths of wo,—he will plead, as it were, for one day more of probation.

Oh what a fearful time is the last days for the children of God! Soon the blessed Saviour will descend the parting skies, to fix with absolute certainty the eternal doom of the whole human family! Then will he say to all who are vainly hoping for eternal life, and do not love his appearing, and will not listen to the truths on this momentous subject: 'Depart ye workers of iniquity—I know you not!' Oh what an awful delusion! to dream of eternal life, while they do not love his glorious appearing! never will Christ administer the crown to any such. What! give the crown to his enemies? no, never. And are not those his enemies who do not love his appearing? In what other light can he regard them? and how can it be that they do not love his appearing, if he is to them the chiefest among ten thousand? Never could I see how they could help loving his appearing, if they loved him with all the heart; and surely they have no acceptable love to God unless it be with all the heart. This he requires, and he will accept of nothing less than this. Then if we would expect to be crowned with glory, honor and immortality, we must love his appearing.

Dear friends, you who treat the truth of the advent near, as being unworthy of your attention, let me beseech you to examine yourselves with reference to this one point. Remember that all of your pretensions to love, and acts of charity, will avail you nothing, if you cannot find within you a heart to love his appearing. Say not as most do—that you 'believe in the doctrine of the second coming of Christ at some time; for the Bible teaches it. All this you may do without the least emotion of love for his appearing. How many impenitent sinners believe in the doctrine of endless punishment, and yet have no heart to love the Saviour. Do not suffer yourselves to be deceived upon this important subject—for awful indeed will be the deception. Shrink not from an examination of your hearts—for soon Christ will come,—the awful day of eternity is about to dawn, with all of its fearful realities! and while fiery indignation and wrath will be visited upon the ungodly—a crown of immortality and eternal life will be the reward of the righteous.

Letter from Bro. P. Livingston.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—We have been delayed much longer than we expected; but it has been providential that we did not sail, as the weather has been very stormy at sea, many disasters to vessels as a consequence. The Lord's name be praised for all his goodness and watchful care over us. May we shew forth our gratitude to him, by serving him faithfully. The more I think of the West India Mission, the more I think the Lord would have us to go and present the glorious truth of the speedy coming of the Lord to the poor down-trodden colored people.— I rejoice to say, that there is a good spirit kept up among the adventists here; their faith seems unwavering, and indeed their trials seem to have the effect to strengthen their confidence in the belief that God has sealed the truth on their hearts.

It is my solace, my consolation amidst all my trials. I anticipate opposition, and even mockery and scoffing, but I am willing to take up my cross and follow my master; knowing that he will not forsake me if I only have faith in God's promises. I think our Lord will soon convince his little ones that their faith has not been in vain in the Lord. We sail to-day for Antigua, from thence we shall probably go the Island of Jamaica, if it be God's will. I need not tell you, that we need your prayers. I am, dear Bro. looking for the blest consummation.

This Generation.

If the departing of the heavens as a scroll, be the same event as the shaking of the powers of the heavens, then the events which follow show the shaking to be in the closest connection with the appearing, to wit: the moving of mountains and islands out of their places, the hiding and praying of every class of the ungodly, because "the great day of his wrath has come," and the King sits on the throne; but why should they see him then? Nothing to hinder him; these visible heavens which were made when this earth was, will pass away with a great noise. The curtain which intervened, will fall with the velocity of lightning, and every eye will behold him.

But when will these things be? Before this (last) generation passes away. The word, this is the defining word, and in this case means last or latest. When our Savior said, "All these things shall come on this generation," he meant the last. At the end of which the Romans took away their place and nation. Jesus Christ, as a man, belonged to "that generation" and would have been about 70 years of age at that event, and as the "generation had a definite beginning and ending, so had the destruction happened earlier or later than it did, the prediction would have been a failure; but the man of 70 was there, as well as the infant, which was eaten by its mother in the siege. Whatever be the length of the generation in the 23d chapter, such we may suppose is the length of the same term or phrase in the 24th. That was the last in the Jewish nation, and was complete; this is last in probation and will not pass away until the saints are gathered. This being the last event in the series which commenced in 1780, at which time, or perhaps previous, began "this or the last generation."

Could our Saviour have said, "this generation shall not pass" &c., if it had not been in existence during the passing of every one of these events? From this we see the generation is a given number of years, which is not to pass until the command is given, "Gather my Saints."

SEA AND WAVES ROARING. TERRIBLE GALE AT HAVANA.

Correspondence of the New York Tribune. HAVANA, Oct. 14, 1846.

Horace Greely—Dear Sir: Our beautiful Bay is covered with wrecks. Mast-heads and spars are projecting in every direction over its surface. Yonder spars indicate the whereabouts of the "Rapids," sunk "nine fathoms deep." At the entrance of the port lies, like some whale's carcase, her blackened ribs exposed to view, the bright "Mudarra." Every where are wrecks and ruin, fardas of tobacco, bales of cotton, boxes of sugar, floating hides; the wharves are strewn with the remnants of all the vessels which lined it on the 10th, during the night of which day a heavy rain storm commenced which in the morning became a furious hurricane, to which that of '44 was only a gale; it was moreover accompanied by a slight shock of an earthquake. The consequence has been that hundreds of houses have been prostrated; and the havoc is frightful to behold.

Nothing could resist uninjured the violence of the wind and the subterranean shock united. Some of the strongest buildings have yielded. Two churches and numerous yard thick old Spanish walls have crumbled and sunk, crushing in their fall the adjoining houses and burying some of the inhabitants. The amount of damage is incalculable. This city is thickly dotted with old, ill-constructed convents, the walls of which every where have fallen, or menaced the neighbors with ruin.

The Captain General is very active, but nothing short of "free trade," for a certain time can alleviate the unlimited distress which will be the inevitable consequence of this fell disaster, and needy Spain must gripe her annual millions. Accounts shower in from the country equally appalling to the scenes we behold. The French fleet is much injured, one vessel they say lost; Spanish fleet in the same condition. The coast steamboats utterly destroyed, together with a vast amount of shipping. I send herewith papers by which you can see the names of American vessels lost. The hurricane lasted from 2 in the morning till mid-day.

The fact of the shock of an earthquake is not generally known, but it is nevertheless certain, and is no doubt produced by the same subterranean movement which was felt some time ago at Boston and elsewhere in the United States. The English steamer rode out the storm uninjured! Business is every where suspended, and not half of the misfortunes is yet known. The rain continued for sixty hours, so that the buildings which had been weakened by the hurricane became saturated, and many have since fallen, or are falling. Of the two theatres one is a heap of ruins (the opera house) and the other much injured."

Remarkable Phenomenon.

The sea at a short distance from the coast here, has presented some remarkable appearances during the present week. On Tuesday last, about four o'clock in the afternoon, about low water, the sea, for about thirty yards from the shore, and along the coast from the Covo to the Bay of Nigg, appeared of a purple color, and continued to darken as the afternoon advanced. Our informant who, with a large number of fisherman, observed the appearances, thinking it might arise from reflection of the sky, went out in a boat and examined the water. To his astonishment he found the boat actually in a sea of purple, and the water of a glutinous nature, containing so much coloring matter that it actually dyed red whatever object it touched. No effluvia could be perceived arising from the water. As the tide rose the colored water packed closer in shore, and continued to become darker and darker. Next afternoon the same appearances were observed to occur, but not to such an extent. We wish some of our scientific friends would afford us a clue to the cause of this phenomenon. Nothing of the kind seems ever to have been observed in this quarter before, although, perhaps, in other places such appearances have been witnessed. We may state that on Monday the fishermen, between this and the Covo, observed the sea at about seventy or eighty yards from the shore breaking out in dark spots, which may be supposed to have multiplied and magnified till they presented the appearance above mentioned.—Aberdeen Herald.

The Diamond Crown.

It falls in the lot of few to wear the crown of this world. And they who do wear a crown, often find it a burthen, a troublesome and sometimes dangerous appendage. Some have lost their heads because they wear a crown. In other cases, it has cost the conflict of armies, and seas of blood to keep one crown on a human head.— Yet strange as it is, many enormous crimes have been committed, and outrages perpetrated to pave the way to a crown, and vast treasures have been expended to maintain the crown on the head of him who wore it. Nor is it less strange that men should think so highly of an earthly crown, and so little of a heavenly crown, which fadeth not away.

"The crown of glory," placed upon the saint's head is not composed of fading flowers, but of jewels more durable than gems and diamonds.— When the thousand ages are rolled away, the crown is as fresh as if it had never been worn, the spring as full as if it had never been tasted, the treasure as ample as if a drachm had never been touched.

Eternity! the glory of those, and the triumph of all there! There angels may, perhaps, enumerate all the stars of the milky way, and the sands scattered throughout the sea shore, and they may be able to give us the total sum of them multiplied together—but though they could do all this, and even number all the drops of rain that have fallen from the beginning of the world to the present day, and drain the ocean dry by minute drops, and then assign the total amount of all, yet they cannot assign the duration of a saint's happiness."

KINDNESS IN CORRECTION.—The way to make people forsake their errors, is to treat them kindly. Speak to them in a calm and gentle manner. Harsh words should never be indulged in, thinking to reform any one. If a person wishes to correct me of any fault, he must do it kindly and affectionately, or I should be much worse for his interference. Remember that kind words cost but a trifle, and the effect, even upon our own disposition, amply repays us for any exertion we may make.

Words of Cheer.

BY MRS. D. F. THOMAS.

Be firm and be faithful;
Desert not the right;
The brave become bolder
The darker the night;
Then up and be doing;
Though onwards may fall,
Thy duty pursuing,
Dare all, and prevail!

If seem he thy portion,
If hatred and loss,
If stripes and if prison,
Remember the cross!
God watches above thee,
And He will requite;
Desert those that love thee,
That never the right!

"The Stars of Heaven fell unto the Earth."

The following testimony to the fulfillment of the above mentioned "sign" I copy from an Astronomical work, called "The Geography of the Heavens," by Elijah H. Burrett, A. M. I never have seen it in the "Herald" or "Voice." It is indubitable evidence to my mind that we are many years past the last sign prior to the "Heaven's departing as a scroll," and "the great day of His wrath." Oh unhappy, deceived Church and world. "Poor, miserable, blind and naked," yet knowing it not! She cannot "see these things come to pass," nor will she sound the alarm; and while the latter continue to say "all things continue as they were," testimony to the contrary from their own lips, recorded by their own pens, will rise up in judgment against them! The account says, in speaking of

"FALLING OR SHOOTING STARS:"

"The phenomenon of shooting stars, as it is called, is common to all parts of the earth; but it is most frequently seen in tropical regions.—The unerring aim, the startling velocity, and vivid brightness with which they seem to dart athwart the sky, and as suddenly expire, excite our admiration; and we often ask, "What can they be?"

But frequent as they are, this interesting phenomenon is not well understood. Some imagine that they are occasioned by electricity, and others, that they are nothing but luminous gas. Others again have supposed, that some of them are luminous bodies which accompany the earth in its revolution around the sun, and that their return to certain places might be calculated with as much certainty and exactness as that of any of the comets.

The number of shooting stars, observed in a single night, though variable, is commonly very small. There are, however, several instances on record of their falling in "showers," when every star in the firmament seems loosened from its sphere, and moving in lawless flight from one end of the heavens to the other. As early as the year 472, [the reader will observe that all on record here save this one, have fallen since the darkening of the sun and moon 1780], in the month of November, a phenomenon of this kind took place near Constantinople. As Theophanes relates, "The sky appeared to be on fire," with the corruscations of the flying meteors. A shower of stars, exactly similar took place in Canada, between the 3d and 4th of July, 1814, and another at Montreal, in November, 1819. In the year 1810, "inflamed substances," it is said, fell into and around lake Van, in Armenia. On the 5th of September, 1819, a like phenomenon was seen in Moravia.

The commissioner, (Mr. Andrew Ellicott,) who was sent out by our Government to fix the boundary between the Spanish possessions in North America and the United States, witnessed a very extraordinary flight of shooting stars, which filled the whole atmosphere from Cape Florida to the West India Islands. This grand phenomenon took place the 12th of November, 1799, and is thus described: "I was called up" says Mr. Ellicott, about 3 o'clock in the morning, to see the shooting stars, as they are called. The whole heavens appeared as if illuminated with skyrockets, which disappeared only by the light of the sun, after daybreak. The meteors, which at any one instant of time, appeared as numerous as the stars, flew in all possible directions, except from the earth, toward which they all inclined more or less, and some of them descended perpendicularly over the vessel we were in, so that I was in constant expectation of their falling on us. The phenomenon was grand and awful."

Mr. Ellicott further states, that his thermometer which had been at 80° Fahr. for the four days preceding, fell to 56° about 4 o'clock, A. M., and that nearly at the same time, the wind changed from the south to the northwest, from whence it blew with great violence for three days without intermission. These same appearances were observed, the same night, at Santa Fe de Bogota, Cumana, Quito, and Peru, in South America; and as far north as Labrador and Greenland, extending to Weimar in Germany, being thus visible over an extent on the globe of 64° of latitude, and 94° of longitude.

The celebrated Humboldt, accompanied by M. Bompland, then in South America, thus speaks of the phenomenon: "Towards the morning of the 13th Nov. 1799, we witnessed a most extraordinary scene of shooting meteors. Thousands of bolides, or falling stars succeeded each other during four hours. Their direction was very regular from north to south. From the beginning of the phenomenon there was not a space in the firmament, equal in extent to three diameters of the moon, which was not filled, every instant with bolides or falling stars. All the meteors left luminous traces, or phosphorescent bands behind them, which lasted seven or eight seconds."

This phenomenon was witnessed by the Capuchin Missionary at San Fernando de Afiura, a village situated in lat. 7° 53' 12", amidst the savannahs of the province of "Varinas"; by the Franciscan monks stationed near the cataract of the Oronoco, and at Marca, on the banks of the Rio Negro, lat. 2° 40' long. 70° 21', and in the west of Brazil, as far as the equator itself; and also, at the city of Porto Cabello, lat. 10° 6' 52", in French Guiana, Popayan, Quito, and Peru.—It is somewhat surprising that the same appearances, observed in places so widely separated, amid the vast and lonely deserts of South America, should have been seen, the same night, in the United States, in Labrador, in Greenland, and at Isterstadt, near Weimar, in Germany!

But the most sublime phenomenon of shooting stars, of which the world has furnished any record, was witnessed throughout the United States on the morning of the 23th of November, 1833. The entire extent of this astonishing exhibition has not been precisely ascertained, but it covered no inconsiderable portion of the earth's surface. It has been traced from the longitude of 61°, in the Atlantic ocean, to longitude 100° in Central Mexico, and from the North American lakes to the West Indies. It was not seen, however, anywhere in Europe, nor in South America, nor in any part of the Pacific ocean yet heard from, (this book was published 1838.)

Every where, within the limits above mentioned, the first appearance was that of fire works of the most imposing grandeur, covering the entire vault of heaven with myriads of fireballs, resembling skyrockets. Their corruscations were bright, gleaming, and incessant, and they fell thick as the flakes in the early snows of December. To the splendor of this celestial exhibition, the most brilliant skyrockets and fireworks of art, bear less relation than the twinkling of the most tiny star, to the broad glare of the sun. The whole heavens seemed in motion, and suggested to some the awful grandeur of the image employed in the apocalypse, upon the opening of the sixth seal, when "the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken with a mighty wind."

One of the most remarkable circumstances attending the display was, that the meteors all seemed to emanate from one and the same point, a little southeast of the zenith. Following the arch of the sky, they run along with immense velocity, describing in some instances, an arc of 30° or 40° in a few seconds. On more attentive inspection it was seen, that the meteors exhibited three distinct varieties; the first, consisting of phosphoric lines, apparently described by a point; the second, of large fireballs, that at intervals darted along the sky, leaving luminous trains, which occasionally remained in view for a number of minutes, and, in some cases, for half an hour or more. The third, of undefined luminous bodies, which remained nearly stationary in the heavens for a long time.

Those of the first variety were the most numerous, and resembled a shower of fiery snow, driven with inconceivable velocity to the north of west. The second kind appeared more like falling stars—a spectacle which was contemplated by the more unenlightened beholders with amazement and terror. The trains which they left, were commonly white, but sometimes were tinged with various prismatic colors of great beauty. The fire balls were occasionally of immense size.—Dr. Smith of North Carolina, describes one which appeared larger than the full moon rising. "I was," says he, "startled by the splendid light in which the surrounding scene was exhibited, rendering even small objects quite visible."—The same ball, or a similar one, seen at New-Haven, passed off in a northeast direction, and exploded a little northward of the star Capella,

* If this body were at the distance of 110 miles, from the observer, it must have had a diameter of one mile; if at the distance of 11 miles, its diameter was 52 feet; and if only one mile off, it must have been 18 feet in diameter. These considerations leave no doubt, that many of the meteors were bodies of a large size.

leaving, just behind the place of explosion, a train of peculiar beauty. The line of direction at first was nearly straight; but it soon began to contract in length, to dilate in breadth, and to assume the figure of a serpent, SCROLLING itself up, until it appeared like a luminous cloud of vapor, floating gracefully in the air, where it remained in full view for several minutes.

Of the third variety of meteors, the following are remarkable examples:—At Poland, Ohio, a luminous body was distinctly visible in the northeast for more than an hour. It was very brilliant, in the form of a pruning-hook, and apparently twenty feet long, and eighteen inches broad.—It gradually settled towards the horizon, until it disappeared. At Niagara Falls, a large, luminous body, shaped like a square-table, was seen near the zenith, remaining for some time almost stationary, emitting large streams of light.

The point from which the meteors seemed to emanate, was observed by those who fixed its position among the stars, to be in the constellation Leo; and according to their concurrent testimony, this RADIANT POINT was stationary among the stars, during the whole period of observation; that is, it did not move along with the earth, in its diurnal revolution eastward, but accompanied the stars in their apparent progress westward. A remarkable change of weather from warm to cold, accompanied the meteoric shower, or immediately followed it. In all parts of the United States, this change was remarkable for its suddenness and intensity. In many places, the day preceding had been unusually warm for the season, but, before the next morning, a severe frost ensued, unparalleled, for the time of year.

In attempting to explain these mysterious phenomena, it is argued, in the first place, that the meteors had their origin beyond the limits of our atmosphere; that they of course did not belong to this earth, but to the region of space exterior to it. The reason on which this conclusion is founded is this:—All bodies near the earth, including the atmosphere itself, have a common motion with the earth, around its axis from west to east; but the radiant point, that indicated the source from which the meteors emanated, followed the course of the stars from east to west; therefore, it was independent of the earth's rotation, and consequently, at a great distance from it, and beyond the limits of the atmosphere. The height of the meteoric cloud, or radiant point, above the earth's surface was, according to the mean average of Professor Olmsted's observations, not less than 2239 miles.

That the meteors were constituted of very light, combustible materials, seems to be evident, from their exhibiting the actual phenomena of combustion, they being consumed, or converted into smoke, with intense light; and the extreme tenuity of the substance composing them is inferred from the fact that they were stopped by the resistance of the air. Had their quantity of matter been considerable, with so prodigious a velocity, they would have had sufficient momentum to dash them upon the earth; where the most disastrous consequences might have followed.

Various hypotheses have been proposed to account for this wonderful phenomena. The agent which most readily suggests itself in this, and many other unexplained natural appearances, is electricity!! But no known properties of electricity are adequate to account for the production of the meteors, for the motions, or for the trains, which they in many instances, left behind them. Others, again, have referred their proximate cause to magnetism, and to phosphorated hydrogen; (!!) both of which, however, seem to be utterly insufficient, so far as their properties are known, to account for so unusual phenomenon.

Professor Olmsted, of Yale College, who has taken much pains to collect facts, and to establish a permanent theory for the periodical recurrence of such phenomena, came to the conclusion, that—the meteors of November 13th, 1833, emanated from a nebulous body, which was then pursuing its way along with the earth around the sun; that this body continues to revolve around the sun, in an elliptical orbit—but little inclined to the plane of the ecliptic, and having its aphelion near the orbit of the earth; and finally, that the body has a period of nearly six months, and that its perihelion is a little below the orbit of Mercury. Subsequently, he has said, "The meteors are inferred to consist of combustible matter, because they are seen to take fire and burn in the atmosphere. They are known to be very light, because, although they fall towards the earth with immense velocity, few if any, ever reach the earth, but are arrested by the air, like a wad fired from a piece of artillery. Some of them are inferred to be bodies of comparatively great size, amounting in diameter to several hundred feet, at least, because they are seen under so large an angle, while they are at a great distance from the spectator. Innumerable small bodies thus consisting of extremely light, thin, combustible matter, existing together in the space far beyond the limits of the atmosphere, are believed to compose a body of immense extent, which has been called the 'nebular body.' Only the skirts or extreme portions of this are brought down to the earth, while the entire extent occupies many thousand, and perhaps several millions of miles. This nebulous body is inferred to have a revolution around the sun, as well as the earth, and to come very near to the latter about the 13th of November, each year. The zodiacal light, a faint light that appears at different seasons of the year, either immediately preceding the morning or following the evening twilight, ascending from the Sun in a triangular form, is with some degree of probability thought to be the nebular body itself, although the existence of such a body, revolving in the solar system, was inferred to be the cause of the meteoric showers, before any connexion of it with the zodiacal light was even thought of."

This theory, at least accommodates itself to the remarkable fact, that almost all the phenomena of this description, which are known to have happened, have occurred in the two opposite months of April and November. A similar exhibition of meteors to that of November, 1832, was observed on the same day of the week, April 20th, 1803, at Richmond, in Virginia; Stockbridge, Massachusetts; and at Halifax, in British America. Another was witnessed in the autumn of 1818, in the North sea, when, in the language of the observers, "all the surrounding atmosphere was enveloped in one expansive sea of fire, exhibiting the appearance of another Moscow in flames." Exactly one year previous to the great phenomenon of 1833, namely, on the 12th of November, 1832, a similar meteoric display was seen near Mocha, on the Red sea, by Capt. Hammond and crew, of the Ship Restitution.

A gentleman in South Carolina, thus describes the effect of the phenomenon of 1833, upon his ignorant blacks:—"I was suddenly awakened by the most distressing cries that ever fell on my ears. Shrieks of horror, and cries of mercy, I could hear from most of the negroes of three plantations, amounting in all to about six or eight hundred. While earnestly listening for the cause, I heard a faint voice near the door calling my name; I arose, and taking my sword (?) stood at the door. At this moment, I heard the same voice still beseeching me to rise, and saying, "O! my God, the world is on fire!" I then opened the door, and it is difficult to say which excited me most—the awfulness of the scene, or the distressed cries of the negroes; upwards of one hundred lay prostrate on the ground —some speechless, and some with the bitterest cries, but with most their hands raised, imploring God to save the world and them. The scene was truly awful; for never did rain fall much thicker, than the meteors fell towards the earth; east, west, north, and south, it was the same."

It will be perceived by the reader, that all attempts to account for the above "sublime, and wonderful phenomenon," only as its being a fulfillment of the word of God, are but suppositions, conjectures, and inferences, &c. Oh, it is a sure sign of the coming judgment, and yet the world heed it not; "none of the wicked shall understand."

The poet, Pollock, speaking of these signs, with almost prophetic voice, says:

"The race of men, perplexed, but not reformed,
Flocking together, stood in earnest crowds,
Conversing of the awful state of things.
Some curious explanations gave, unlearned;
Some tried affectedly to laugh; and some
Gazed stupidly; but all were sad, and pale;
And wished the comment of the wise. Nor less,
This prodigy, occurring night and day,
Perplexed philosophy: the man tried—
Meth, a name not seldom given to fools,
In the vocabulary of earthly speech—
They tried to trace them still to second cause;
But scarcely satisfied themselves, though round
Their deep deliberations grooving came,
And wondering at their wisdom, went away,
Much quieted, and very much deceived.
The people, always glad to be deceived,
These warnings passed—! they unregarded passed, &c."

"Let now the astrologers, the star-gazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up and save thee from these things which shall come upon thee." Isa. 47-13. When ye shall see all these things, know that He is near even at the doors. Behold, the Judge standeth before the door. And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Behold I stand at the door and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him, and he with me.

Reader, can you bid him welcome? have you on the "wedding garment?" Are you ready to sup with the Lamb at his "marriage supper?" Are you holy? Soon, very soon, the bridegroom will come, and they that are ready will go in with Him to the marriage, and the door will be shut" forever!! D. T. TAYLOR, JR.

Extraordinary Efforts Necessary, IN THESE PERILOUS TIMES.

Mr. Editor, as an observer of the "signs of the times," the state of the world, and that of the nominal churches, I have been led in a train of reflection to meditate upon the words of our blessed Lord, as recorded by Luke, 13: 24—"Force your entrance through the strait gate; for many I assure you, will request to be admitted, who shall not prevail." (Camp. trans.) If the piety of the age in which we live, be compared with the standard of the word of God, we are at once led to exclaim with the disciples, "Who then can be saved?" That salvation is desired by all who profess the religion of the Savior, is readily admitted. But that few possess the witness of the Spirit, and live free from condemnation, which is both the duty and privilege of every man—is a lamentable fact, known and read by every spiritual observer; and what adds to the alarming situation is, that although many, and perhaps the most who are in this lukewarm state, acknowledge they are not what they ought to be; yet they do it with all that seeming indifference that they would acknowledge that a drop of mud had fallen on their garments; and apparently are apprehensive of no more danger from the one than from the other! This state of society has in most cases been caused by the half-hearted, (not to say ungodly,) lives of the old professors of religion. For almost 30 years which I have been a professed disciple of the Lord Jesus, I have apprehended more danger from an association with the generality of professors, than from an occasional interview with the opposers of God's holy religion. In the company of the former, we have anticipated help from example and precept; but while in company with the latter we are led to be on our guard, to watch and pray always, that we may be "kept by the power of God through faith. For some years past, I have seen when persons have passed from death to life, they would soon have to backslide from God, lose their first love, in order to sympathize with the current religion of the day. Hence instead of obeying the apostolic injunction, "Grow in Grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ," they have soon become at "Ease in Zion," and have necessarily been obliged to adopt the common, almost universal saying, "I don't live as I ought." If God judges such out of their own mouths, they must be damned to all intents and purposes.—Has God fixed the standard to which his disciples must come, and will he lower it to accommodate any man or set of men? No, by no means.—"He is not a man that he should lie." He has said, or rather says, "without holiness no man shall see the Lord"—Heb. 12: 14. Then we may rest assured, that we must come to that standard of piety or make our calculation to be found where there shall be "wailing and gnashing of teeth." Oh, that men would remember, that God means what he says, and that when he says, Amos, 6: 1, "Woe to them that are at ease (margin, secure) in Zion;" that the woe of God is upon them already, and must remain forever, unless they repent and do their first works. Also, that when he says, Rev. 3: 16, "So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." It will most certainly be so, unless they become "zealous and repent."

It is truly alarming to see how men trifle with the word of God; and especially in these last days, when every moment we may expect the time alluded to, by Paul—2 Cor. 15 ch. when "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," the trump of God may sound; and every man's fate be sealed forever. Now, if even, we should carefully heed the injunction of the Savior noticed above,—"Force your entrance through the strait gate," for the moral atmosphere which we breathe is infectious—pride, love of the world—seeking the honors that come from men—covetousness, unbelief, and lukewarmness—with their train of evils abound on every hand, and we need the heavenly compass, and a heavenly pilot, to avoid the rocks and quicksands by which we are surrounded, and in the midst of which we are sailing; yet blessed be the Lord, there is a narrow channel in which we may keep, by Grace, until we arrive where where are no rocks or quicksands upon which to founder forever." There all the ship's company will meet, who sailed with the Savior below. But remember, my brethren and sisters, no one will be permitted to remain on board unless they "obey the orders of the ship." The negative orders, as contraband goods are—pride, anger, covetousness, unbelief, &c.—Gal. 5: 19—21.

"No chilling winds nor poisonous breath Shall reach the heavenly shore:"

If we are found with all consecrated to God and his blessed cause—"doing good of every possible sort, and as far as possible to all men;" then and only then, may we expect to hear it said, "well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Many, it is to be feared, entertain hopes of a better world, while they are perfectly conscious they are unfaithful in the "unrighteous mammon." We see them fostering pride, by their superfluous ornaments, rings, necklaces, gold watches, guards, &c., with perhaps hundreds of dollars worth of superfluous furniture, that seldom come in actual wear, and that only to follow a pernicious custom of the age,—and keep pace with some of their ungodly neighbors, who like

"Fools never raise their thoughts so high—Like brutes they live, like brutes they die."

And yet, in many instances, wonder why they do not enjoy religion! Such may be told that God requires a sacrifice of that treasure laid up against a rainy day, (as says the world.) They should remember and know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich—2 Cor. 3: 3, that God requires them to have the "mind that was in Christ Jesus," and to walk as he walked. John tells us, "Herein is our love made perfect, that we have boldness in the day of judgment; because, as he is, so are we in this world." Again, "That when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed at his coming." O, my brethren, souls are perishing for lack of knowledge. This knowledge God has given to the Millerites, so called, some of its professed friends have the means of spreading the same; and they are saving their money, or laying it out or up when the last dying cry is being heard, "come over to help us." May God give them eyes to see, and hearts to feel. Amen.

Some good ministers of Jesus Christ are obliged to work with their hands, to supply themselves with life's necessities for their families, at this moment, when all the dreadful realities of eternity are ready to burst upon our world; and yet treasures enough among the professed lovers of Christ's coming to supply their wants, and to send their ministers as flaming heralds through the country, to cry, "Behold He cometh;" and may there not be in these brethren a fearful distrust of God, and like most of the ministers of the present day, who want their pay before they do their work, or well secured by promise. I tell you brethren, that he is a good pay master who pays after the work is done. May we, dear brethren, prove it better to trust in God, than to put confidence even in princes. God is faithful and our reward is sure. O that we may be found giving meat in due season, when the master shall come. Amen and Amen.

THOMAS SMITH.

New Castle, Me. Oct. 26th, 1846.

"Keep Thyself Pure."

How much we need this admonition at the present time; and especially those who are looking and expecting the return of the Nobleman. O, my brethren and sisters, are your garments 'pure?' are you ready to meet your Lord in judgment? are your affections cut loose from all earthly things and set on 'things above?' is your conversation in heaven, from whence also you look for the Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ? are you watching and praying always? O, my brethren, of 'like precious faith,' let us get all ready—our garments 'pure' and our 'loins girt about with truth, and our lamps trimmed and burning, like men that wait for their Lord.' How can it be said we are in a waiting position unless we are ready? Let us see that our work is done, and 'well done.' Let me say to those that are ready, 'keep thyself pure.' Beware that you are not 'overcharged with the cares of this life, so that day come upon you unawares.' 'Love not the world nor the things that are in the world.' I fear too many that have gone out to meet the Bridegroom, too often cast a lingering look behind, or have a desire for the world or the things that are in it. 'My little children, keep yourselves from idols,' says an apostle,—and Paul in one instance calls 'covetousness' idolatry. Let us beware of this enormous sin. Oh! how many are heaping together treasures for the 'last days;' and some I fear, even among those that are expecting the Lord's return soon! And how many poor servants that God has called to go forth and sound the alarm, and leave their dear families with tears in their eyes, not knowing that they will return to them again in this world or not. But he leaves them with a good Father, and travels through cold and heat, wet and dry—meets with the scorn of the cold professor, and the derisions of the world, and the buffetings of Satan, to preach the word of life, (feeling that 'woe is me, if I preach not the gospel,) wearing out his life for his fellow-men, and to feed the flock and give 'meat in due season,' while too many tell him to 'depart'—be ye warmed and filled, and 'give him not those things which are filled.' My brethren, you that are stewards of the Lord's money, and are rich in this world's goods, have you done all you can to promote the cause of truth? have you made good use of the Lord's money? have you made your faith 'perfect by works?' How can a man have a lively faith when his works do not correspond with it? 'Faith is dead being alone.' How can those brethren that are worth their hundreds and thousands, withhold from doing all the good they might do in these last hours of time? (believing as they profess to, that the 'end of all things is at hand,') by sending the truth to hundreds that are unable to read on the subject in consequence of their pecuniary circumstances? 'He that soweth sparingly will also reap sparingly.' Have we done all of our duty so that our conscience is clear, and we feel justified before God? O let us see to it, my brethren, that we may not have it said to us in the day of reckoning, ye knew your duty and did it not. Let us be 'rich in good works, ready to distribute—willing to communicate—laying up in store for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come, that we may lay hold on eternal life.' 'I will be myself pure.' We must be careful or we shall see our garments stained and spotted with the sin of this world, and with the love of money. I am led to exclaim many times with one anciently, 'how hardly shall a rich man enter the kingdom of God.' Jesus is soon coming to reckon with us all! then let us act in reference to that day. I have not written these few lines to hurt the feelings of any of my brethren. No, no. I have the kindest of feelings towards all,—but I want to stir up your minds by way of remembrance, and I therefore use great 'plainness of speech'—and I am also near the judgment. Brethren do what you can,—send in your notes, and relieve the embarrassments of our brethren that toil night and day at the press to feed us with 'meat in due season.' You will soon be rewarded. S. I. RONEY.

Overthrow of Spiritualism.

When the farmer reaps the first sheaf of the harvest will he have any fears, that when he gathers in all the sheaves, they will differ from the first? Certainly not. So Christ has shown us a sample of the children of the resurrection; not a spirit, nor a shadow, but a body with flesh and bones. Just the same body, which lay down in the grave, came up again; for the wounds, which he received in his body on the cross, convinced doubting Thomas after his resurrection. Christ eat and drank with his disciples after he rose from the dead. So will his children, according to his promise, eat and drink with him at his table in his kingdom.

My faith never rested more on the plain word of God. I believe that the time is in the Bible, and that all, who are willing, may understand.—I am glad that unscriptural doctrines are not published in the Voice of Truth, nor do I wish they should be. In the word of God alone is there safety.

ROCHESTER, NOVEMBER 25, 1846.

REMOVAL OF OUR OFFICE.

We have been unexpectedly under the necessity of moving, on a few hours' notice, the location of our office. We are now permanently located in Taber's Block, opposite the Arcade, Buffalo street. Enquire for the office of the Daily American.

Bills of Account.

We are sorry to find it duty to send out bills of account to any of our subscribers again.

1. Because in doing it we are subjected to labor and an expense which would not have been called for had all kept their accounts square with our office.

2. Because we do not like to greet our kind patrons, (to speak in plain English) with a duo. It is always very unpleasant to us to give such a salutation to a friend, a brother, or a sister; and not unfrequently quite disagreeable to them to receive it.

3. Because mistakes will occur. In a list of some thousands of subscribers, their names being entered at different dates, payment made at different times, and of various sums: business letters also, not unfrequently, very unintelligibly written, and deficient in giving names of persons, their Post Offices, and not correct in telling to whom the money sent should be credited—taking all these things into account, it would be a small wonder, in sending out over a thousand bills, if no mistake should be made. With all these liabilities however to make mistakes, when made, they not unfrequently cause unpleasant feelings, and sometimes give offence to subscribers.

Taking all these things into account, we are always reluctant in deciding to send out bills to any of our subscribers; but still it becomes necessary for us to do it occasionally—

1. That our subscribers may know how their accounts stand with this office. Many do not pay because they have forgotten what their indebtedness is; when they are informed they will make payment.

2. That we may know occasionally something how our accounts stand with our subscribers. Frequent settlements are made by understanding business men, and which are more likely to preserve friendship between the parties doing business, than long delays in adjusting their accounts.

3. That we may receive a part, if not all, of what is honestly our due, from some of those whom we have imperfectly, yet faithfully served, and are still incessantly laboring.

These are the reasons which have induced us to send out bills to many of our subscribers at this time. We wish it remembered that we have sent no bills to those who are not indebted for any past volumes, or for volume twelfth only of our paper, nor to those to whom it is sent free of charge.

In conclusion all that seems necessary to be said is,

1. Let all who receive a bill at this time, make payment of all or a part of what is due just as soon as you conveniently can. You must be your men judge now of your ability to comply with this request. Let the decision be honestly made; the judge standeth at the door.

2. If any one to whom we now send a bill is not able to pay, if they will inform us of the fact, we will cheerfully credit them in full for all past accounts; and if they will continue to read the paper, and desire us, we will most gladly continue to send it to them free of charge. Will such ones freely tell us their circumstances? They should do it. It is no disgrace to be poor. The highest pleasure of all our toil, in reference to pecuniary matters is, to benefit the honest and the poor. The poor must have the everlasting gospel preached unto them; and blessed are the poor of this world if they are rich in faith, they are now 'heirs of the kingdom,' and soon will inherit it forever and ever.

3. If bills have been sent through mistake to any one who has received the paper free, or has paid for it—or if the amount due is over-rated—or a mistake in any other way may, escape our notice, when informed, all shall be rectified to the perfect satisfaction of the one, or ones concerned.

With these already extended remarks, we submit the case to our God and those directly concerned in the matter. Let each act in strict reference to the day of final reckoning, when every man's work, of whatever sort it may have been, will be judged righteously, and each one will be rewarded according to the merit of his doings.

Bro. Himes and Brown's Return.

We are happy to learn that those brethren have safely returned from their long and arduous mission to England, to the bosom of their families and friends again, in this their native land. Thousands of their old and tried brethren will greet them with a hearty welcome, to their warm fellowship, undiminished friendship, to their former stations in the church of God, and fields of their useful labors.

We thank God that he has protected these brethren from the devouring storm and roaring billow, but more especially for the blessing which has attended their labors in the proud kingdom of Great Britain; especially for the noble defence Bro. Himes was enabled to make for the truth, the cause of the down-trodden slave, in the World's Convention. We would not flatter Bro. Himes—God forbid. The fact that God made him an instrument to defeat the wicked designs of the combined wisdom of the ministry of the church of the nineteenth century, should greatly humble our brother, at the feet of his Lord. We trust he will give God all the glory, and ever stand in defence of the truth though the whole world should be against him.

Letter from Bro. Himes.

ATLANTIC OCEAN, off Nantucket Shoals,
Nov. 15th, Sunday evening, 9 o'clock.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—We are now within twenty hour's sail of New York, and having a good wind, we hope to be there safe, by the blessing of God, in that time. We left on the 31st of Oct., at 5 o'clock, P. M. We had six days rough and stormy weather, but the rest of the passage has been fine. I have been sick about ten days of the passage, but am now in health, ready to go into the field again on my return home.

Bro. Brown is very well, and has been, the entire time of absence. Bro. Hutchinson is well and doing well. He will remain till spring to prosecute the work. When we left, doors were open to us in Scotland and Ireland, which we did not look for. Indeed the whole country would receive us and our message extensively, if we only had laborers to enter the field. Our views would be preferred to Literalist views by the people, just as in the U. S. The Literalist system is a system of death in England, just as in our own country.

We have a few good congregations in England, and the ground is prepared for many more, if we only had men to gather the people and take charge of them. Our mission has been a successful one, more so than we could expect. But I can write no more now; the motion of the ship makes it difficult. I hope to see you ere long face to face. My love to all your dear family and brethren and sisters in Rochester. Yours,
J. V. HIMES.

New York, Nov. 17.

P. S. We arrived in this city Nov. 17th, at 10 o'clock, P. M.; making the voyage in 16 days and 10 hours. We are quite well—go to Boston this evening.

Ann Lee.

An admirer and defender of Ann Lee and her impious pretensions, called on us recently, through our privilege to call on Bro. J. B. Cook through our columns, to "favor the readers of the 'Voice of Truth' with good substantial evidence, clearly showing what the impetuosity of 'the impious Ann Lee' consisted in." Bro. Cook made this or a similar charge against 'mother Ann' in his letter published in our sheet for Oct. 21st.

Bro. Cook will have the opportunity of complying with this request, if he shall think it advisable to do so. We will however take the liberty to say that we think the charge is fully sustained from the fact,

1. That she blasphemously, and impiously pretended to be the Son of God—or that Christ had made his second appearance in her, a woman! Oh what depravity and presumption in her who made such pretensions; and what ignorance, folly and madness in any one who will be deceived by her delusions.

2. Her doctrines impiously oppose the plain commands of Christ. He says a man shall 'leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh. Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.' Mat. 19: 5, 6. But impious Ann and her deluded followers, teach that the husband and wife should separate.

3. She was immoral in her character. Says the Enc. Rel. Knowl. in the article of 'Lee (Ann)' 'As to the moral character of mother Ann, Reuben Rathbun, who was once a Shaker, testifies that he once saw her come to hard blows with William Lee. He adds, 'It appears to me that the mother, at that time, was very much overcome with strong liquor.' He considered her also as well skilled in profane and indecent language. But whatever might have been her moral deportment, it is one of the deplorable facts, of which the history of the world is full, evincing the blindness and depravity of man, that rational beings should yield their minds to her blasphemous religious pretensions.' New York Theol. Mag. 1. 82; F. Rathbun's Hints; D. Rathbun's, Taylor's, West's and Brown's Account of Shakers.—Allen.

If these facts do not stamp the impious author of Shakerism with impiety, than no acts of blasphemy, and impurity could do it.

C. E. Gillett.

The young man of this name passes for a second advent lecturer among our brethren; but we fear he is unworthy of this high profession,—for we hear of his imprudencies in many places where he has been; and besides Bro. Wm. Peabody, of Scottsville, has just told us that he is informed by the woman herself, that in passing a few days since from Scottsville to Rochester on a canal boat, that Mr. Gillett being aboard—having lectured in Scottsville a day or two before—behaved imprudently towards her,—requesting her to sit on his lap, &c. We are told by Bro. Peabody that the woman is married, and a person of truth and respectability, and was highly indignant at the treatment received from Mr. Gillett.

Mr. Gillett has gone west, and we think our brethren should be apprised of these things. We wish him no ill—would not have said a word about him, had it not been that the precious cause is likely to suffer from his imprudences. May he reform; then it will be our highest pleasure, and also of all the pure in heart, to extend to him the hand of Christian fellowship; but as the case now stands we cannot do this.

'It is our duty to hold communion with all who hold communion with Christ. Little party differences should never prompt us to deviate from Christian fellowship with each other.'

Bro. Pearson Sick.

We have (Nov. 28th) just called on Bro. J. Pearson, Jr., and found him quite sick. His complaint seems to be a disease of the kidneys, nervous and a general bilious affection. He was very sick last night, but more comfortable this morning, but worse this afternoon. We do not however apprehend him to be dangerously ill. We think with good attendance, and the blessing of the Lord he will soon be restored to his usual health. The Lord grant that our hopes may not be disappointed, and may we all soon enter that world, where the inhabitants will no more say I am sick.

To Correspondents.

We kindly thank our brother for his article on the kingdom, but think it not sufficiently guarded and critical for a subject of this magnitude, and for public criticism. Many can talk out their sentiments much better than they can commit them to paper. All have not the same gifts. Practice however does much towards qualifying any one for either a correct speaker or writer. We should improve in both all we can.

The series of articles on the Events of the Day of the Lord, which we commence publishing this week, promise to take a different view of this subject from that generally entertained by our brethren. As Bro. Heyes, the writer, speaks with candor, is not lengthy in his first article, and probably will not be in his succeeding ones, we give him a hearing. We think however that he is mistaken; for all the saints in that day, are to be caught up to meet Christ in the air; while all the wicked, of course, will be left on the earth, to be destroyed in flaming fire as Paul teaches. This doubtless is what Christ refers to when he says, 'one shall be taken and one shall escape.' The meaning of which evidently is, the wicked shall be taken in the fiery snare of that day, while the righteous will escape it by being changed to immortality, in the twinkling of an eye, and caught by angels away from the devouring fire to meet the Lord in the air. May we all, whether found in the bed or at work, in the mill or field, or in any other position, escape the doom of the ungodly in that great and terrible day. Be ready! O be ready, every moment!

Any deficiency in this week's paper, especially the editorial department, must be excused; for our time has been so much occupied in changing the place of our location, that we have had but a few moments for writing. By the blessing of God, we mean soon to bring some precious truths, new and old, out of the treasury of our Lord, for the good of our readers; and the time of his second coming, we now think, will not be neglected in our labors.

Signs of the Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., Oct. 3d, 1846.

It does seem as though the simple, honest, and praying servants of Christ must begin, ere long, to see that God is not with them in their hopes, aims, and efforts; from the midst of so much darkness and confusion they must hear the admonitions of his voice. How has the Almighty always, for years, plead with the earth, and with his people. Think of that scourge, the Asiatic cholera, baffling and mocking the skill of the whole medical world, sweeping like an avalanche from east to west, burying multitudes in its desolating course; turning this fair earth for a season into a charnel-house, and spreading every where terror, mourning, and death! The cattle have been visited with extensive plagues. The fish have been washed ashore in a dead, or dying state. It is now stated that a great mortality prevails among the hares, large numbers being found dead in the fields or estates, where the game is very numerous. Several of the Canary fanciers of the neighborhood of Lancaster have lost their most valuable birds during the last few days, by a sort of spasmodic cholera, the symptoms being similar to those observed in the human subject when laboring under that terrible disorder. The potatoe crop has failed in Ireland, Scotland and France, and a famine must follow. At Wainybroch the bees and wasps recently congregated together, from the east, west, north and south, and engaged in deadly warfare. They appeared in swarms as far as the eye could see, and the ground for a large space underneath, was covered with the dead, mostly wasps.

Very lately, off Aberdeen, (Scotland,) the waters were discovered to be of a darkish purple color, and of a glutinous nature: and experiments were found to turn every thing which they touched into the color of purple. The same phenomenon was witnessed by the fishermen out at sea; they represented it as the sea breaking out into dark spots. It continued through the day with the same appearance, excepting it seemed more compact with the rising of the tide. In London, during a bright moonlight, a few nights since, a meteor passed over the metropolis, leaving a tail, or stream of light, 20 or 30 degrees long—the stream finally divided, leaving a long and short end—the former assuming a serpentine form, and the latter a semi-circular form: the whole lasted for 30 seconds.

Thus by pestilence, famine, signs, accidents, earthquakes, fires, the Almighty is pleading with his creatures. We know we shall be put down as weak-minded and superstitious, in giving any importance to what some may call the freaks of nature, or only the ordinary circumstances of time. But has God at length forsaken the earth? Have sin and sinners ceased from among men? and has He ceased expressing his displeasure at what has heretofore provoked his judgments? Shall we turn infidel, and endeavor to account for every wonder on philosophical principles? Is there famine and death in the city, and God has not done it? Does not even a sparrow fall to the ground without his notice: and shall man and beast, and fowls, and plants, the sea, the sky, shall all protest—God is not! O where is there a parallel to such stoicism, unless it be found in the ignorance and hardness, and heathenism of Egypt! Alas, we have become familiarized to the judgments of heaven. Where is there any serious thought, any hearty confessions, any public fastings and supplications, any reformation of life, any turnings unto God? Nineveh will rise up in the judgment and condemn us! Add to the above melancholy picture, the death of piety,—that greatest of all calamities—the inroads of error, the prevalence of vice and profligacy, and last of all, the utter contempt with which the warning cry is treated—'Behold he cometh.' Ah, there is no language that can justly depict the blindness, folly, and madness of this generation. How many, it is to be feared, of those even who have professed faith in the events of which the above are all harbingers, will finally be startled with the sudden appearing of the Bridegroom, to find that their lamps are gone out! Of all disappointments, these must be the most awful. Let all who read these lines inquire if they are now ready to meet the Judge. No excuse will be accepted if we are then unprepared.

Events of the Day of the Lord.

*One shall be taken and the other left.—COMMON TRANSLATION.
*One shall be taken and the other shall escape.—CAMPBELL'S TRANSLATION.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—For some time past my mind has been exercised with the contemplation of certain scriptures, relating to the scenes and events of the day of the Lord. After pondering them over in the mind, and comparing scripture with scripture—examining and re-examining, I feel a conviction amounting to firm assurance that many of us have been, and still are resting on a false view of the beginning (to say the least) of the crisis. I am not speaking rashly or giving a hastily formed opinion. I have seen evil effects, as have my brethren in the field, resulting from notions espoused and presented without due consideration. Hence some, and not a few, have found it necessary, yea their bounden duty, openly to discard what a few weeks or days before they had promulgated as important and blessed truths. The experience of the past ought to cause all who write or speak, to weigh well their subjects before presenting them, lest they become (as many have already), instruments of evil, instead of teachers of righteousness.

In laying before my brethren certain portions of the inspired word having an immediate bearing upon the advent, I feel satisfied that if they will look at them candidly and free from prejudice, they will derive good; not perhaps a temporary effervescence of spirit, such as we oft have witnessed, but profit and lasting benefit. Thus far having proficed, I proceed by stating at the outset that the idea that 'the first thing the saints, (i. e. those remaining at the Lord's coming) will know, will be that they are with Christ in the air, glorified, is false. This notion has been the result of an imperfect and very superficial study of the scriptures pertaining to the developments of the day of God. One taken and the other left—the saints caught up to Christ and the wicked left on the earth to destruction—such appears to have been the general view taken by the advent body.

But the fact is that he who is taken is the ungodly sinner, and he who is left, the blessed—the saved. Campbell's is the correct rendering, 'one shall be taken and the other shall escape.' Taken in what? Ans. The snare! The other shall escape the snare! 'For as a snare shall it, (meaning the day) come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.' Campbell renders this passage, 'For as a net shall it enclose all the inhabitants of the land.' In the snare or net the unprepared will be caught, but the righteous will escape. This view harmonizes other scriptures which are hard to be solved with the common opinion. For example—Mat. 13: 30, 'Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn.' And 40—43 vs. 'As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.'

In my next, I shall produce evidence to show that God's people will be on the earth while the judgments are executed on the wicked. Meanwhile let all heed the counsel, 'take heed lest the day come upon you unawares.' It will be an awful day and 'a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation.'

Yours in hope,

H. HEYES.

The Day of Perplexity.

It is a day which the prophet Micah spoke of, for it is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity. Micah, 7: 1, 5, 6. The day of thy watchmen and thy visitation cometh—now shall be thy perplexity. Trust ye not in a friend—put not confidence in a guide—keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom; for the son dishonoreth the father, the daughter riseth up against the mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law: a man's enemies are the men of his own house.

That day has arrived, for we know not who is our friend. Where do we witness that sincere and undisssembled friendship that we have seen in former years? Jeremiah says, 'Take ye heed every one of his neighbor or friend, and trust ye not in any brother—for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbor will walk with slander; their tongue is as an arrow shot out—it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbor or friend with his mouth, but in heart he layeth his wait. Shall I not visit them for these things, saith the Lord?' A guide, one who is a minister or teacher, put not confidence in him, to think that he will guide you in the way of truth, for he is an erring mortal. Jesus says there shall be false prophets and false teachers among you, and if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect. Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God or not, because many false prophets are gone out into the world. 'If they shall say, lo here, or lo there, go not after them nor follow them—for as the lightning that lighteneth out of one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be in his day.' There are those who profess to be guides, who stand as watchmen on the walls of Zion, who are crying peace and safety, putting far off the day of the Lord—saying the world is just in its infancy—the Christian religion is hardly developed—and the world will be converted before the Lord comes. But such teaching is an evidence that the end is near; 'For when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape.'

Ezekiel says, 'because with lies ye have made the hearts of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad, and strengthened the bands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life,' (instead of giving him meat in due season.) God has pronounced his judgments on those shepherds, who to the shepherds of Israel, that feed themselves; should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed; but ye feed not the flock.' 'They be blind leaders of the blind; and if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.'

Keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom, for a man's enemies are the men of his own house; for there shall be five in one house divided, three against two and two against three,—and ye shall be betrayed both by parents and brethren, kinsfolks and friends, and ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake; but there shall not a hair of your head perish; in your patience possess ye your souls.' 'For men shall be lovers of their own selves: covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.'

In this time of perplexity, God is trying the faith of his children. 'Many shall be purified, and made white and tried. He will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried; they shall call on my name, and I will hear them; I will say, it is my people—and they shall say, the Lord is my God.' 'Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.' Then let us say with Micah, 'Therefore I will look unto the Lord, I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will hear me.' If we look unto the Lord, he will guide us in the way of truth; for his word is truth. And they that put their trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion that shall not be moved. 'Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.' Then if enemies rise up against us, we can say, 'Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy—when I fall I shall arise, when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me.' 'The Lord is my light and my salvation, who shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?' 'In God have I put my trust, I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.' If the Lord is on our side we need not fear; for more is he that is for us than they that are against us,—for Christ says, 'blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.' 'Consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.' 'Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you—but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy! that the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ.' 'And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.' 'Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming'—'when he shall come to give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear my name, small and great, and destroy them which destroy the earth.'

In this time of perplexity may the Lord help us to be steadfast in the faith, abounding in the work of the Lord—forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, and press towards the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. It is said, 'to him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am sit down with my Father in his throne.' Amen, even so—come Lord Jesus.

Letter from Bro. F. G. BROWN.

Dear Bro. Bliss:—I speak in this place this evening, also on Lord's day. Bro. Hutchinson has been before me, and awakened a deep interest here on the coming of the Lord. He is now about ten miles from this place; I expect a letter from him to-morrow. God is opening the door for him, and greatly blessing his labors. In one instance, a whole church have invited him to come and deliver a series of discourses. The Scotch are proverbial for their cautiousness in the reception of new theological tenets, so that, we must confess, we apprehended some difficulty in getting a hearing; but the Scotchman is a Bible student; and here we have the advantage—it is the Bible we bring him. God is by no means without his witnesses in Scotland, as well as England and elsewhere, as you will see by our next. I shall hasten to look into Ireland, to learn about the ground there. I tell you the fields are truly white for the harvest. O what a glorious work is here: how many of the dear brethren in America would rejoice to reap the harvest. I wish my little family were here, and I don't know when you would see me again. I long to see them, and all the dear friends in America; but I shall leave the field here with sorrow. We only want the men able to speak, in order to see the truth advancing throughout the whole kingdom. It is easier to get access to the people than we apprehended: and there is more thought, and preached, and written about the coming of the Lord in Great Britain than I had supposed. Oh this work is of God! and Jesus is coming!

Yours in the hope,

F. G. BROWN.

Hawick, (Scotland,) Oct. 16th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. W. Watkins.

Our number in Baltimore is small: we are, emphatically, a little flock; but we are strong in faith, giving glory to God. We are looking and waiting with patience for the speedy consummation of the christian's hope; and though we may not, possibly, realize it as soon as many reasonably anticipate, yet, as steadily as the needle keeps to the pole, are we determined, through the grace of God, to keep the eye of faith upon, and conform our lives to, the salutary lesson inculcated by our coming King: "No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." We are of those who feel that they are pilgrims and strangers on the earth; who love the appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ, and who are trying to "watch and pray always, that they may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." My brethren I tell you, with us, the die is cast; we have counted the cost, and, to this hour, we have experienced no regrets, save on account of our unworthiness and unprofitableness. We have cut loose from the world, while, at the same time, we give heed to the apostolical injunction:—"Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." We have, for the Son of man's sake, laid our reputation in the dust, and voluntarily encountered the contempt and scorn of the proud, pharasaic professor, and the rude jeers of the scoffer and infidel, know that "if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him," and that if we suffer much, we cannot suffer long. "I reckon," says Paul, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us."—But, my brother, do we realize nothing but suffering in this life? "If in this life only we have hope in Christ," then, I admit, "we are of all men most miserable." But what is the true state of the case? Let the experience of every Adventist who is living up to his profession, who is following the Lord wholly, answer. Such a one cannot, in this degenerate age, be otherwise than happy. Hear the word of the Lord:—"Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy, for behold your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets." In these circumstances, we cannot but rejoice always, more especially, as we see, in the light of a sunbeam, accumulating and unequivocal evidences of the near approach of the "KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS." Yes, at this awfully momentous period in the history of our world, while the sea and waves are roaring, and men's hearts have been failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, we hear, and know, and obey, the voice of our returning Lord: "Look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—"Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

O ye persecutors of the people of God!—

Lukewarm professors of religion! Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God! the day of your visitation is rapidly drawing to a close, and that terrifically dark and endless night, in which none can work, in which he that is filthy shall be filthy still, and he that is holy shall be holy still, is casting its ominous shadows around us.—O be warned of your imminent danger, before the sign of the Son of man in heaven, shall announce the catastrophe of our globe, and your undone condition through the annals of eternity.

WM. WATKINS.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 5th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. S. Everett.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—You have been afflicted in your family and health, but more in reference to the fanaticism, spiritualism, and divisions among the brethren. But you are not alone: we all sympathize together, and pray for each other. God is with us, and he gives us comfort according to our afflictions. See 2 Cor. 1: 3-6. The little bands of brethren in this vicinity, have been, all more or less, blest the summer past, and the present fall. We had a good meeting at this place the last of June. Northfield Farms, New-Salem, Whately, and Ashfield, have, with this place, been the sphere of my labors chiefly. I can meet them only once a month or six weeks. But they hold meetings generally on Lord's days, and are glad to receive visits from faithful laborers. Bro. W. Pratt, and four other young brethren, took a circuit among us, much to our comfort, and I hope, sanctification. We love to see the young brethren full of faith, and the Holy Ghost. The Lord bless them, and their self-denying, and faithful labors. Let us all watch, and pray, take good "heed to the word," "prove all things," "hold fast that which is good," and "love one another with pure hearts, fervently," and exhort one another, and so much the more, as we see the day approaching." I think our work will soon be done, though we may have to stay one winter more. Let us remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, it is more blessed to give than to receive, and also his injunction, "Hold fast till I come." Yes, brethren, let us "Hold fast that profession of our faith, for he is faithful who has promised." Yet, a little while, and he who cometh, will come, and will not tarry." Then we will go with him, and, in "due season," we shall be welcomed into the everlasting kingdom, as our inheritance forever.—Amen. "Let us be very cautious and not receive error for truth, for I am sure there is considerable error held and published by good brethren with much truth; let us use the fine sieve of God's word constantly in reading all the papers. "For what is the chaff, to the wheat, saith the Lord." "The word of the Lord abideth forever."

I am, yours in love,

SAMUEL EVERETT.

North Leverett, Mass., Oct. 29th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. J. D. Johnson.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I would say for the encouragement of those who want to be among the wise, who understand, Hosea, 14: 9, and win souls, (for "he that winneth souls is wise."—Prov. 11: 30,) and the comfort of those who pray for the prosperity of God's cause, that there are a few here who are now rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, and who, a few weeks ago, were in the gulf of bitterness—bonds of iniquity. Since our grove meeting, last summer, a band of some 20 or 25, have been in the habit of meeting on Sunday, at the usual hours of service, for mutual edification—believing, that we are to be "sanctified through the truth"—John, 17: 17; not through fancy or the traditions which make the word of God of none effect." Although scattered within a compass of some 4 or 5 miles, yet love seems to bind them together. Some have been believers for years in the Advent doctrine, and, some have lately come into the faith. Meetings are now held every Sunday, at the house of sister P. Blood, Manlius.

When we look at the prophetic scripture, and see them fulfilling, we may feel, truly, that we have a firm foundation for our hope of soon gaining the kingdom, "if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of the hope, firm unto the end"—Heb. 3: 6. Rollin, in his history, written about 1730, says, "The four parts of the metallic image, Dan. 2: and the four beasts of Dan. 7, represent, by universal consent, the four great empires, Babalonian, Medo Persian, Macedonian and Roman," (which has been said by all the commentators of note of the past age,) "and they are to be succeeded by the eternal kingdom of Jesus Christ"—and, Daniel's interpreter says, they are "four kingdoms that shall arise, but the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom under the whole heaven forever: even, forever, and ever." Now, if the four kingdoms were on this earth, which none will deny, then the fifth kingdom must also be on the earth. If Babylon was not "beyond the ethereal blue," and Greece "beyond the starry sky," and the Roman kingdom "beyond the bounds of time and space"—then the kingdom which "the saints are to possess forever, even, forever and ever," will not be there, but on earth, and the prayer will be answered, "thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and, the oath performed, "But truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord"—Num. 14: 21.

We know that the kingdom of God is near; for we have seen all these things fulfilled, Lu. 21: 31, which were to be previous to the coming of "the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick, and the dead, at his appearing and kingdom"—Tim. 4: 1.

Yours, in hope of the glory of God,

JONAS D. JOHNSON.

Manlius, N. Y., Oct. 28th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. J. Y. Butt.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—The cause of our coming Redeemer, is worthy of the espousal of the noblest minds, inasmuch as it is the cause of Him, who is exalted far above principalities and powers, by whom all things were created, "that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers." Well might the apostles say, in view of the exalted character of its author, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." This is the language of every pious mind, and when scripturally informed, the hope of the soon coming of our blessed Lord to consummate the victories of the cross, is a theme upon which they delight to dwell: one that is cheering, and full of glory.

As the mariner nearing his native shore, is animated by the prospect of the enjoyments of home, so the christian, navigating the stormy sea of time, hails with pleasure, the harbingers, or signs of the dawn of that millennial day, in which Eden will be restored, with all its peace, harmony, and joy; when David's throne will no longer lay in ruins, but he, whose "right it is," will have come to reign.

But is it true, that the heavens and the earth have waxed old as doth a garment, and that they will soon be changed? Yes, this must be so, or what means those frequent convulsions of nature, bespeaking the presence of those increasing, internal fires; also the derangement of our atmosphere, manifested in its sudden changes, if the heavens and earth are not waxing old. The Lord by Moses, says, "A fire is kindled in my anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains."—(Deut. 32: 22.) This is in process of fulfillment. The "foundations of the mountains" are already, on fire, and soon the liquid flood will burst from earth's bowels, which together with the heavens (atmosphere) on fire, will encircle the earth with the flames of the last conflagration.

But does this great motive to repentance, and holiness, as presented by Peter 2 Epistle, 3: 11—"Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness," influence our hearts? Have we our loins girded about, and our lamps trimmed and burning, in view of that day, which "shall burn as an oven?" My brethren; let us not sleep as do others, but be ever upon our "Watch tower," that with the wise, who, it is said, "shall understand," we may exclaim when our blessed Lord appears: "This is our God, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

Many are the evidences proving that the "Judge standeth before the door." The near fulfillment of the connected chains of prophecy, prophetic periods, and signs, all speak in trumpet tones, "The great day of the Lord, it is near, and hasteth greatly." Yes, the angel flying through the midst of heaven, "Having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters," is rapidly fulfilling his mission, and soon his work will be done, and the destinies of earth sealed forever. O! what horror will fill the souls of those that are left to realize the dread realities of that day. May the contemplation of this, stimulate us to renewed exertion in the work yet before us, that we may at last receive the welcome applaudit, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Yours in the blessed hope,

JONAS Y. BURR.

Cold Run, O., Oct. 21st, 1846.

Bro. D. T. Taylor, Rouses Point, Oct. 26th, writes:—Say to the brethren, scattered abroad, through the Voice, that although darkness covers the mass of the people and probably will to the end, still the Advent cause is prospering in this northern section. In a space of 70 miles extent along the line, east and west of this place, within the last three months, under the labors of Bro. Dudley, Adrian, Wyatt, Southerland and Roney, about 60 souls have been converted and reclaimed, and as many baptised; About 30 were converted at the Camp Meeting, in Clinton, Sept. 13th. Bro. Wyatt, Southerland, Roney, Adrian, and Dudley, ministers, were present.—It was a great meeting for the times. The mass are unmoved, but a few are brought in. Jesus will soon come.

Bro. M. Whitaker, Shumla, Oct. 31st, writes:—Where are those brethren and sisters who have written such soul-stirring and heart-cheering communications? Truly, they were like cold water to my thirsty soul, in this hilly country. May the Lord help them to gird on the armor anew, and wield their pens and tongues in defence of this glorious doctrine, till they are crowned in the glorious kingdom, which I believe is at the door.

Bro. Morley preached and broke bread to us last Sabbath. We are still looking for that blessed hope—the glorious appearing of the great God, and anxiously desire and groan with the groaning creation, that the Redeemer will come this year. Even so—Amen.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION IN FRANCE.—The hope of the friends of civil and religious freedom, which rest on the dynasty of Louis Phillippe, have but a poor basis. There can be no doubt of his zealous devotion to Catholicism, nor of his purpose to aid the present revival of it in his dominions, by the might of the civil arm. Catholicism loves such an auxiliary—it cannot brook a rival faith, when it has power to suppress it.

A correspondent of the 'Evangelist' writes thus:—"I have told you from the beginning that the French Government, contrary to all others, was going backwards towards the establishment of Catholicism as the religion of the State. I am myself at this moment a living proof of it. Would you believe that since I left France, at least two months ago, they have begun and ended a suit against me for having preached the gospel to the Roman Catholics? Would you believe that I am condemned, without even having been cited to appear before my judges? and this in 1846! this under the charter proclaiming religious liberty! Such is now the exact truth, and in a few hours I shall depart in great haste for France, to oppose the judgment which condemns me to a fine, and to the closing of the church in Mansle."—N. Y. Recorder.

THREATENED REVOLUTION IN GERMANY.—Rev. Dr. Baird, says in a recent letter:—"The times are ominous of great evil in Germany. A storm is gathering which will sweep over that country. There is need, therefore, that all that can be done should be, to scatter the seed of truth; for it alone can save the horrors of a bloody revolution. Indeed, I think all continental Europe is going to be shaken to its very centre before many years pass away."

UNION OF PRESBYTERIANS.—The Presbyterian Herald gives information of an effort making to unite the Associate Reformed, the Reformed, the Seceder and Covenant Churches, into one ecclesiastical body. A convention for this purpose has lately been held, and a strong feeling has been manifested in favor of a united Presbyterian church.

CATHOLIC MISSIONS.—The 'Univers de Paris,' of the 11th August, states that twenty-one monks and friars have embarked for the United States, under the direction of three missionaries, natives of Tryol, and of the order of the Premonstratenser, with instructions to establish convents and nunneries in the western part of the United States.

The same journal says that two fathers of the holy Dominican order have embarked for the United States for the same purpose. The Univers rejoices in anticipation to see the first convent of the holy order of St. Dominico erected in the United States.

THE IMMORALITIES OF THE DAY.—The tragical events of the day, says the Sun, crowd upon us every hour, displaying in the most frightening colors, the wretched consequences of unbridled passion. Seductions, murders, assassinations and suicides, have become so frequent as to deaden the public sensibilities to their horrors. Unbridled passion appears to be the great vice of the American people. No principle of restraint seems to be acknowledged by a great portion of the people. A terrible deficiency in the moral education of the young, appears to be manifest. Where lies the fault, and what is the remedy?

IRELAND.—The state of Ireland continues to be most distressing—alarming in the extreme. O'Connell is at Derry Nane. There have been numerous riots in Ireland, in which many lives have been lost. Want of food was the cause. The suffering peasantry were goaded on by despair.

The Famine in Ireland.

On the whole, the accounts from the disturbed districts are less threatening. Although destitution is extending, there has been altogether less turbulence in the popular demonstrations. In some parts, public works have commenced, and employment will henceforth become general.

At Skibbercen, on the 5th inst., the day on which the General Relief Committee met, an attack was apprehended. From eight hundred to a thousand of the laboring population of Caheragh were seen marching ten abreast, and armed with spades, towards the town. The shops were closed in great consternation, and the military called out; but, luckily, through the exertions of Mr. Michael Galloway, the Rev. Mr. Fitzpatrick, Dr. Donovan, Mr. Downing, and several influential gentlemen, the people were induced to halt outside. To an inquiry from Mr. Downing, the answer made by the spokesman of the people was—"We have come because we are famishing; because we have no food of any kind. We could suffer death from hunger ourselves; but can we look upon our children and wives dying of hunger? and we are ready and anxious to work for bread, if we can only get as much as will give us one good meal a day. But it is not 8d a day will give our families a meal, and Indian meal 1s. 10 a stone." "The truth and force of this distressing appeal," says a local writer, "could not be resisted;" but Mr. Downing, Mr. Fitzpatrick, and Mr. Donovan assured them, that it was to the government they should attribute the price of food; and upon whom the maledictions of the hungry multitude were poured in unmeasured terms. During this conversation, Mr. Galloway, again and again called upon the people to disperse, and at length proceeded to read the Riot Act. But a universal shout was raised, "We might as well be shot as starved; we have not eaten a morsel for more than twenty-four hours." Mr. Downing then besought the people to follow him out as far as the work-house, and that he would procure them bread as far as the town could afford it; which after much solicitation they did, and regularly encamped on the rising ground outside the work-house; where they remained until Mr. Downing returned with 50s. worth of biscuit, which he and Rev. Mr. Webb assisted by the Messrs. Levis, distributed in the work-house yard; and about 4 o'clock, the multitude moved on for their dreary homes, yet sullen, discontented and unhappy, saying—"That while a stack of corn remained in the country, they would not allow their children to starve," and denouncing in the strongest manner the government. The military were then withdrawn.

The Galloway vindicator gives the particulars of an opposition to the removal of provisions from Galloway to Tuam. Ultimately, by the strenuous exertions of the Rev. Mr. Roche, Mr. John Connor and about thirty other gentlemen, forty cart loads of meal and flour were conveyed out of town. Shortly afterward, however, a lamentable accident took place at Bohicbeg, one of the outlets of Galloway.

"It appears that the men of this street having proceeded to the cross road at Bohernmore to arrest the carts which the Rev. Mr. Roche and the other parties forming the escort induced them to permit to pass in safety, the women determined upon stopping any which in the mean time might come that way; and accordingly, when four or five other carts laden with flour and meal were proceeding through Roberbeg, the women, frantic with hunger and the cries of their famishing children, rushed upon the provisions and endeavored to plunder some of them. In doing so, we regret that one of the starving creatures, whom we have been credibly given to understand, had nothing but one meal a day and a half previous, met a violent and untimely death. She laid hold of the head of one of the horses, exclaiming that she would have some of the meal or lose her life. The driver at the same moment struck the horse with his whip; the result of which was, that the unfortunate woman fell, when the wheel of the cart passed over her throat, killing her on the spot.

A letter from Shinrone, Tipperary, says, 'A report has reached Shinrone that a young girl has died at Kilcommon of starvation. Several families at the lower end of Kilmurry parish have been living on cabbages and turnips these few days, without any other description of food.'

At Borrisoleigh many were living on one scanty meal during the 24 hours, and the forbearance of the sufferers was amazing. A letter from Dungarvon of the 19th inst., says, 'The condition of the people is truly heart-rending. They are starving! One of the dragoons, a very intelligent man, gave a most deplorable account of the sights witnessed by them as they came along today by the houses of their prisoners.'

They were followed by fanatic-looking women and children half naked, whose cries were unlike anything human—being husky, broken and quite feeble, from starvation. In the course of a sermon, delivered at Newry on Sunday, the 18th inst., the Rev. Dr. Butler specified two cases of death from starvation in that neighborhood.

Our Dublin correspondent, writing on the 24th says: 'There are again most heart-rending accounts of destitution from various parts of the country, and social disorganization is prevailing far and wide. Although the Board of Works have, up to this day, slated no less a sum than £700,000 for public works, there are still complaints in many counties, either that works have not yet commenced, or that those in operation are totally insufficient to give employment to the crowds of destitute beings who prowl about, seeking the means of keeping body and soul together.'

It is as impossible for a person to draw near to God with the confidence of faith, while he lives in the love and practice of sin; as it is for a person to come to you and go from you at the same instant of time.—Ebenezer Erskine.

A WHOLE SERMON.—Beloved Brethren: The Scripture tells us that the wages of sin is death. Now, my advice is, that you leave off sinning and strike for higher pay.

Remarkable Account,

Concerning our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. By Theodosius, a Jew, who lived in the time of Justinian, as related by Suidas.

In the reign of that most religious emperor, Justinian, there lived a certain man, a ruler of the Jews, whose name was Theodosius. He was very well acquainted with many of the Christians, and among the rest, with the emperor before mentioned. About the same time there was a certain Christian, called Phillip, by trade a silver-smith. This person knowing the concerns of Theodosius, and, by a constant familiarity with him, having gained some influence on his temper, took upon him one day to exhort and persuade him to become a Christian: wherefore this said Phillip found an opportunity to discourse with Theodosius after this manner. 'Sir, (said he,) I would willingly know the reason why you, (who are a wise man, and one who exactly understands what both the law and the prophets have spoken concerning our Lord Christ,) believe not in him, and become a Christian? For I am persuaded that it is not for want of knowledge in the inspired writings, which have foretold the coming of our common Lord Jesus Christ, that you refuse to turn Christian. Be speedy then, and save your own soul, believing in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, lost by a continuance in your infidelity you subject yourself to a severe judgment at the last day.' The Jew hearing what was said by the Christian, gave his approbation and thanks for his kind admonition, and returned him this answer: 'I very well approve of your love to me towards God, because you are so careful of my salvation, and endeavor by your good exhortations to convert me to the Christian faith; for which reason, as I am in the presence of God, who sees and knows the secrets of the heart, I will speak to you with no manner of guile or dissimulation, but with all imaginable truth. That therefore Christ, who was spoken of by the law and the prophets, and whom you Christians worship, is already come I am firmly assured, and frankly confess it to you, who are my sincere and loving friend, and one who is so studious of my welfare; but human reasons overcome me, and hinder me from turning Christian; and in this I condemn myself; for as to my present circumstances, I am a chief among the Jews, I am in high honor, presented with the richest gifts, and want nothing this world can afford to make my life easy and pleasurable; for suppose I was made the patriarch of the catholic church, and you should dignify me with higher offices and larger command, yet I presume I should not meet with greater respect and reverence than I do now in my station as a Jew. Therefore that I may not be deprived of the seeming pleasures of this life, I neglect that which is to come, and in this I do evil. But to set before you my true reasons for the sake of your love towards me, I entrust a mystery with you which is kept secret among us Hebrews, from which we know for certain, that this Christ, who is adored by you Christians, was he who was foretold by the law and the prophets. Nor are we persuaded of it by what has been written in old times only, but by what is committed to writing and kept secret among us; which secret is thus: In ancient times, when the temple of Jerusalem was building, it was a custom among the Jews to constitute as many priests in the temple as there are letters in our alphabet, which are twenty-two, whence likewise we reckon twenty-two books which are divinely inspired. There was a book laid up in the temple, in which were written the names of the twenty-two priests, together with the names of the father and mother of each of them. Now as soon as one of the priests was dead, the rest were convened in the temple, and there by a common suffrage, chose another to supply the room of the deceased, so that the number of twenty-two might be complete; and in this book was set down the day the priest died on, and who was his father and who was his mother; so likewise the name of him who succeeded, and who was his father, and who was his mother.

This custom having obtained among the Jews, it happened about the time that Jesus dwelt in Judea, one of the two and twenty priests died before Jesus had made himself known to the world, and taught people to believe in him: wherefore the rest of the priests met together in order to substitute another in the place of the deceased. Now when every one by himself had nominated a particular man whom he thought worthy of the priesthood, the rest did not approve of him as being deficient in those virtues which ought chiefly to recommend a person in so holy an office; for allowing him to be a wise and discreet man, of approved life and conversation, yet if he had not a competent knowledge in the law and the prophets, he was by no means judged worthy of the priesthood. Wherefore after this manner many priests being put up to the vote, and all disapproved of, one among the rest rose up, and standing in the midst, spake thus: You see that many who have been nominated to the priesthood have been found incapable, give me therefore leave to name one, who on all accounts may very fitly supply the room of the deceased; and I am of opinion that there is not one among you who will not freely give in to my determination. The rest of the priests having granted him liberty of speech, he went on: I would have said he, Jesus the son of Joseph, the carpenter, chosen in the room of the deceased; as for his years indeed he is but young; but his youth is set off with eloquence, a good life, and unblameable conversation; and I verily think of all the sons of men none was ever yet like him for probity and religion; you who live in Jerusalem are eye witnesses of this, which is beyond all exception. When the rest of the priests heard this, they received the man he had nominated, and confirmed their vote by a decree; by virtue of which Jesus was elected, as one in all respects capable of the priesthood. Notwithstanding some objected that he was not of the tribe of Levi, but of the tribe of Judah, supposing him to be the son of Joseph, for such he was taken to be by the Jews. Now they all bore witness that Joseph was descended from the tribe of Judah, and not of Levi. And for this reason, because he seemed not to be of the Levitical tribe, they would have hindered him from the office of the priesthood. But the priest who had nominated him first, answered them, that his race was a mixed race; for in ancient times there had been a mixture of the two tribes, and hence was the stock of Joseph derived. When they had heard this, they all concurred in the approbation of their former decree, and in their public assembly they were pleased to declare Jesus successor to the deceased. But because it was a custom to write in a book, not only the name of the priest elect, but the names also of his father and mother, one of them cried out, that his parents should be first sent for to give in their names, and to know of them whether he was their son, who was chosen into their society. This they all consented to; but he who had named Jesus to the priesthood, told them that Joseph, the father of Jesus, was dead, and that he had none but a mother living. Wherefore they all agreed that his mother should be sent for to appear before the council, that they might hear from her own mouth whether she was the mother of Jesus, and whether she brought him forth, and knew the name of her husband by whom she had him. This took with them all, and therefore they sent for the mother of Jesus, and said unto her,—whereas one of our priests is dead, we are willing to place your son Jesus in his stead; but according to custom, we must write the name of his father and mother in a book; tell us therefore if Jesus was your son? and if you brought him forth?

When Mary had heard this, she answered the priests thus: I confess that Jesus is my son, for I brought him forth, and of this both the men and the women who are now alive, and were in the room when I was delivered, can bear me witness. But that he had no father upon earth, if you please I can prove by undoubted testimony. For when I lived in Galilee, in a state of virginity, an angel of God, while I was broad awake, and not inclined to sleep, coming into the chamber where I was, brought me the glad tidings that I should bring forth a son by the Holy Ghost, whose name he commanded me to call Jesus. After I had seen this vision, being then a virgin, I conceived, and bore my son Jesus, and have remained a virgin to this very day, even after I had brought him forth. When the priests had heard these things, they immediately sent for some faithful midwives, and commanded to inquire diligently whether Mary was truly a virgin at this time.

Upon which the matrons being satisfied by matter of fact, in which they had certain knowledge, affirmed her to be a virgin. Besides, there came certain women then living, who were present at her delivery, and bore witness that Jesus was her son. The priests being astonished at the speech of Mary, and the testimonies concerning the birth, said unto her, Tell us freely, that we may hear it from your own mouth, who was the child's true father and mother, that we may write him down accordingly in our tables? For whom you say are his parents, them will we write down, and none other. Mary replied, and told them, Of a truth I brought him forth, not knowing any father he had upon earth, but I heard from the angel that he was the Son of God. He is therefore the son of me, who am called Mary, and the Son of God; and having never had knowledge of a husband, I am still a virgin. The priests hearing her say so, took the table book, and wrote down accordingly. On such a day died the priest, who was the son of such a father and such a mother, and by our common suffrage, Jesus, the son of the living God, and of Mary the virgin, was chosen priest in his stead. Now this book was carefully preserved by the chief men among the Jews at the time of the taking the temple and Jerusalem, and it is laid up in Tiberias.

This mystery is known among a very few, and those the faithful of our nation. Wherefore it was revealed to me, as a governor and master of the Jews. For we are fully satisfied, not only from the law and the prophets, that Christ, who is worshipped by you Christians, is the very Son of the living God, who came upon earth for the salvation of the world, but from that writing, which is preserved and kept at Tiberias to this very day. When Phillip the Christian had heard all this from the Jew, being moved with a zeal for God, he says to the Jew, we will immediately hasten to the faithful and pious emperor, and relate to him what you have told me, that he may send to Tiberias, and publish the book which you mention, to convince the Jews of their infidelity. At which words the Jew replied to the Christian, What, have you a mind to bring judgment upon your own soul? Should you inform the emperor of this you would be never the nearer obtaining what you wish for. For if such a thing should come to pass, a war must necessarily ensue, and blood and slaughter would be the consequence of it. And then besides, when the Jews perceived themselves hardly pressed, they will assuredly set fire to the place where the book is lodged, and so our labor will be to no purpose, and our wish not answering, we shall be the authors of so much bloodshed. I have made these things known to you, because you are my loving friend, and I will assure, that it is not for want of knowledge that I embrace not Christianity, but merely out of vain glory and love of the world. The Christian hearing thus much from the Jew, and believing what he said was certainly true, did not make known to the faithful emperor, Justinian, what he had heard, lest that great monarch, stirred up with zeal for God, should cause a vast effusion of blood, and not obtain his ends: but he told this discourse to several of his friends and acquaintance, which we had from those who had it from the aforementioned Phillip, the silversmith, and therefore we took no small pains in searching into it, being willing to know whether that description of the Jew might be depended upon. We found therefore that Josephus, the historian, who wrote the siege and taking of Jerusalem, (and of whom Eusebius makes frequent mention in his ecclesiastical history,) plainly affirms in his commentaries of the destruction of Jerusalem, that Jesus sacrificed in the temple with the priests. Which when we found related by Josephus, a man of antiquity, and one who lived not long after the apostle's time, we did our utmost endeavor to find whether this account might any ways be confirmed by the authority of the Scriptures. Upon reading, therefore, we found in the gospel according to St. Luke, 4: 16—18, that 'he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up; and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias; and when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, 'The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor;' &c.

Wherefore we argued within ourselves, that unless Jesus Christ had some sacerdotal office among the Jews, it was not likely a book should be delivered to him to read in the audience of the people. For it is not lawful among us Christians for any one who is not in holy orders to read in the church before all the people the books of the inspired writers. We know then, both from the writings of Josephus, as also the narration of St. Luke the evangelist, that Theodosius, the Jew, did not feign or invent the above mentioned account to the said Phillip the silversmith, but that he confidently, and from the bottom of his heart, revealed that hidden mystery to him, as an old acquaintance, and loving friend.—Spiritual Magazine, London, July, 1827.

"Heirs of Promise."

First: What is the promise? This seems to be the first question that would naturally arise. I answer—the same that was made unto the fathers: and now let us search the divine will, and see what the promise consists of that was made to the fathers. Let Paul explain: Gal. 3: 18. 'For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise.' We find then, according to Paul, that the promise consists of an 'inheritance.' Now let us turn to Gen. 17: 8, and read the promise—'And I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger—all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.' Here we see what constitutes the promise—a 'possession' or 'inheritance' to which Abram and his seed are heirs. Paul defines the inheritance contained in the promise, to be the world. (Rom. 4: 13.) 'For the promise that he should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.' The world, or Eden restored—the 'purchased possession' redeemed from under the curse—rescued back to the rightful owner. When he that sits upon the throne, will make all things new, and the great restitution takes place, and Paradise that was lost by the fall of Adam, will be restored by the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, and brought back to its original beauty—then will appear the inheritance promised to Abraham and his seed, in all the grandeur and glory it was in when it first came from the hand of its Creator, who called it good. Then there will be no more extremes of heat and cold—no more pestilential blasts or ruinous hurricanes; no more will its inhabitants feel the piercing cold of a wintry storm; no more will be seen the black cloud rising in the western horizon, darkening the sun at noon-day, and making every thing wear a gloomy aspect, while the forked lightnings nimbly play through the atmosphere, darting now and then to some tall pine, or building, making known its power to destroy, while peals of loud thunder echo and re-echo, from hill-top to valley, frightening poor timid mortals at its dreadful roar, and sudden claps that seem to break but a short distance over their heads. No, there will be not a vestige of the curse remaining; all the former things will have passed away, and they will no more be 'remembered nor come into mind;' no more might remaining, but one eternal day! It will also be beautifully adorned with the trees of life, and the celestial city of our God, as the great capitol of the kingdom, or inheritance. This is the glorious inheritance promised to the heirs! Who would not like to be an heir of this inheritance? Who would not like to range those blissful fields?

Secondly: Who are the heirs of promise? I answer—they to whom the promises were first made. We will find by examination that the promise was first made to Abraham's seed. (Gen. 12: 7.) 'And the Lord appeared unto Abram and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land,' &c. So the promise was first made to the seed of Abraham, and the seed of Abraham are the true heirs of the promise or inheritance. Who are Abraham's seed? Let Paul answer. Gal. 3: 16. 'Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds as of many—but as of one, and to thy seed, which is CHRIST.' Christ is the grand heir then of the promises. With this agrees also another testimony of Paul: Heb. 1: 2, 3—'God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things.' When God created the earth and the things that were therein, he gave Adam dominion over them all, and the first Adam was the figure of the second; so says Paul in Rom. 5: 14. Consequently he must take the first Adam's place in the new creation, or Eden restored. Daniel saw in the night visions one come like the Son of Man, and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, &c. What dominion is to be given to Christ at his second coming? Let the prophet Micah answer: Micah, 4: 8—'And thou, O tower, [Christ] of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion,' &c. What is the first dominion? Why, none other than was given to the first Adam who lost it by transgression; it will therefore be restored, and given to the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, 'whose right it is.' But, says a reader, will Christ inherit the promised possession alone? No, no; he will not. There are joint-heirs with Christ to that inheritance. But who are they? 'But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.' The joint-heirs then, must believe in him, and be adopted into the family of God by faith. 'But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law. For what? To redeem them that were under the law.' For what purpose? 'That they might receive the adoption of sons.' 'And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son in your hearts, crying Abba, Father.' 'Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.' Then the true heirs with Christ are the household of faith. 'Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.' 'The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God! and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.' 'Now if any man hath not the spirit of Christ he is none of his;' 'implying that those that have the spirit of Christ are his: 'And if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.' Who, then, does not want to be adopted by faith into the family of God, and be a brother or sister to Jesus Christ, and an heir to that 'inheritance' that is 'incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away? None can enjoy this blessing without faith in the Savior of mankind—and that faith must be a lively, active, saving faith; a faith made 'perfect by works.' My brethren, let us examine ourselves, and see whether we be in the faith, and are not 'reprobates.'

Thirdly: When are the heirs to be possessors of the inheritance? We can know nothing about that, says the objector; that is one of God's secrets. What! nothing said of the time? No, not a word. Is not the resurrection of the just, and the second coming of Christ, a subject of revelation? O, yes. Is not the time of his coming a subject of revelation also? O no! nothing said about the time. Has God given the heirs, a good deed or title to the inheritance? Yes. And no time specified when they shall take possession? No, that is a secret. Would such a deed or title be a perfect one? Dear reader let me bring a familiar comparison. Suppose you were to purchase a farm of me,—I make out the deed or title, but specify no time when you are to take possession of said farm; would you receive such a title? No, say you—I would not. But why not? Because it has no time stated when I or my heirs shall come in possession of the farm; it is an imperfect title. A very good reason. Well, has not God given the heirs of promise a perfect title? One of two conclusions you must come to; that God has revealed the time of Christ's coming, or he has given the heirs an imperfect title. Reader, at which of these conclusions have you arrived? O, say you, that question calls for an answer that is very repugnant to my feelings to give! Why so? Because I see I am in a kind of dilemma; for if I say the title is an imperfect one, then God has left his work imperfectly done, and he is therefore an imperfect God! this I cannot—I will not admit. And if I come to the conclusion that time is revealed, or is a subject of revelation, then I must make a good many hearty confessions; for I have used all the sophistry and arguments, and said all I could against it; and therefore I shall have to confess, and this would be very crossing to my feelings, and very humbling to my pride; I should also lose my good name, besides being numbered among the despised and down-trodden company that are looking for the Lord, and I shall have all the stigmas of the world and the anathemas and scorn of the lukewarm professor heaped upon me. How could I bear it all? Why, to confess is honorable—it is right. 'He that confesseth and forsaketh shall find mercy.' And your pride, of what use is that to you? better get rid of it,—'God knoweth the proud afar off.' And if it is a good name you are after—take care! there is a woe pronounced upon such: 'Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you.' Jesus became of no reputation; are you better than he? Are you unwilling to be numbered with the despised, and to suffer reproach for Christ's sake? If you are, you are not 'worthy of him.' But I am digressing from the point at issue; pardon me. God has given a perfect title; and the time when the heirs shall take possession, is a subject of revelation. This I need not stop to prove, for it has been proved over and over again by different writers, to the satisfaction of every unprejudiced mind. I therefore leave the point to make an inquiry—

Fourthly: How long will the heirs possess the inheritance? This question seems at first thought to be useless, but a right answer (which is easily given) will sweep many of the 'cob-web' theories that are taught at the present day. God promised Abraham and his seed the land for an 'everlasting possession.' But says one, Abraham has possessed it. What says Stephen? He says that 'God did not give him so much as to set his foot on.' Acts 7: 5. Is not Abraham dead? Yes. How could his possession have been 'everlasting' then? What says Paul about it? He says Abraham 'sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country'—'looking for a city which hath foundations,' and desiring a 'better country, that is an heavenly.' But were Abraham and a great number of his progeny dead in Paul's day, without having received the promise? Yes. 'These all died in faith not having received the promise.' But says another, the Jesus, Abraham's natural seed, will possess it before Christ comes. Then Abraham, Isaac and Jacob must be raised from the dead before Christ makes his second advent, and all that have died in the faith—for God has nowhere told us, that a part of Abraham's seed should inherit the promise, while the rest lie in their graves;—no, no. And even if they did, their possession could not be everlasting, because the present state of things is mortal and temporal; and when the heavens and the earth pass away, the possession would also pass away, and therefore have an end. 'But the saints will take the kingdom and possess it forever—even forever and ever.' Then it must be in the immortal state. Jesus will 'reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.' O, yes—the heirs have got an immortal life lease of the inheritance, and that has no end to it. That is long enough,—glory to God! O ye 'heirs of promise,' lift up your heads—your redemption draweth nigh! soon you will leave these mortal shores of contention and strife, of pain and sorrow, of disappointment and grief, of temptations and afflictions, of sin and gloom—and exchange them for an immortal abode of peace and quietude, of ease and joy, of love and glory, of righteousness and bliss. Ah, yes! the last enemy will soon be conquered, and the heirs left to take possession without fear or molestation. The conflict is almost over,—glory be to God!

"A few more days or months at most,
My troubles will be o'er;
I hope to join the heavenly host,
On Ganaan's happy shore!"

A Want of Love for the Appearing of Christ.

I would not wantonly engage in an unholy crusade against the churches, however vile and destitute of all the Christian graces they may be. I do not consider that I have any just grounds for any such attack; but when circumstances occur which are directly calculated to develop the true state of mind with respect to any truth, and if we find its professed adherents manifesting a want of love thereto, the inevitable conclusion is that something is radically wrong, and if after a full and fair investigation of the subject, we find them still to reject the light, to point out their errors in Christian inebriety, cannot be wrong, but should be regarded as the discharge of an imperative duty by all who love the truth.

From a knowledge of the truth, obligations are enjoined, responsibilities are imposed, and none that tremble at the word of God will for a moment refrain from the discharge of all such obligations, even though the anathemas of an indignant party, or the odium of an outraged public sentiment, are incurred thereby. The truth and truth alone, is the foundation on which they stand, and for truth's sake they will endure all the scandal that may be heaped upon them, trusting in the Omnipotent power of truth, and the guardian care and protection of Him who is the author of it. Such I believe to be the character of many who are now, with longing eyes, and buoyant hopes, looking for the coming of Him in whom all their affections centre. They are firm and undaunted advocates of truth; and while the burning truths which they present, truths with which the Scriptures so much abound, have such a melting and subduing influence upon their hearts, it is not only met with cold indifference on the part of the church and the world, but is the cause of an apparent combination thereof, to resist the power of truth. The latter by the interposition of mobs—and the former with a cold contempt and burning indignation, together with a clear development of that state of mind which shows an utter want of love for the coming of Christ. I shall therefore attempt to show from fixed and established laws of mind, that no such development could possibly occur except in the absence of such love. And while I do this, let no one feel that I am actuated by a disposition to wantonly attack the Christianity of the church; it is with no other than feelings of deep regret to me that the church has shown itself to be destitute of love for the appearing of Christ, and while I feel to demonstrate this from the established laws of mind, I feel to deplore most deeply the condition into which she has fallen. To contemplate a church, having no sympathy with the appearing of Christ is truly painful.

Before I proceed farther, permit me here to meet the only excuse which the church vainly offers. She excuses herself by saying, We do not reject the doctrine of the advent of Christ, for we believe the Bible teaches that he will come some time; but it teaches at the same time that we cannot know when he will come. Admit for a moment that all this is true, does it excuse you for not loving his appearing, and desiring from your inmost soul that he would come? and may it not from this admission be expected that you should daily look for his return? for certainly if the Bible teaches that we do not know but that he may come to-morrow, it is reasonable that we should be constantly looking for him. If the Bible teaches the occurrence of any other event before the advent of Christ, then certainly we are to look for that first; but as you say it teaches that we cannot know when he will come, it therefore teaches that there is no certainty of there being any other event anterior to his advent. Again, suppose the Bible does teach that we cannot know when he will come, are you therefore excusable in saying he will not come this year? Should you not be as unwilling to express a belief that he will not come as you are that he will? should you not be as willing that he should be looked for this year as any other? and should you not as studiously avoid every attempt to show from the Bible that he will not come as you do that he will? In short, are you not as much 'entering the cabinet of heaven' in every attempt to show that he will not come at a certain time, as you would be in attempting to show that he will come at a certain time? we think you would. If the Bible teaches the uncertainty of which you speak, this conclusion is inevitable. And every day you shut out from your hearts a love for Christ's appearing, you are exposing yourselves to the awful doom of the servant that 'says in his heart my lord delayeth his coming.' But I am to show an utter want of love to his appearing, on the part of the church—and

First: It is an established law of our being, that we delight to be in the company of those we love, and we are more or less pained when separated from them—and just in proportion to our love for them will be our desire for their return, when absent from us. See the tender wife as she watches with deep anxiety the return of her absent husband, thus manifesting to all around, her love for his return. Is she told that he will be at home on a certain day—how her longing heart leaps for joy, especially if she finds nothing in his epistles to show that he may not come at any day; and even if the intelligence of his return is incorrect, she nevertheless believes it true, until in her disappointment she is constrained to believe it false. But does she then rejoice that she has been thus disappointed? or does she not rather feel to weep over her disappointment, and lament that her lord has not come? The latter is the case. Now this principle holds as good in religion as it does in domestic relations. How shall we then account for the unwillingness on the part of the church to look for her absent Lord? for that willingness to believe all reports that he is about to return, to be false, and that too even without examination? How shall we account for that triumphing and rejoicing, when disappointment befell those who most ardently expected him? The answer to the whole is, a want of love for the appearing of Christ.

Second: We love to be in the society of those who are friends to those we love. We love to hear them speak of our friend, and portray to us the excellencies of his character. How sweetly every word falls upon our ears; and if our friend is absent, how we delight to have them adopt as the theme of their conversation, the evidences of his soon return. How is it now in reference to the coming of Christ? does the church love to go among the friends of her absent Lord, to hear them praising his exalted name, and rejoicing in the prospect of soon seeing him? or, does she not rather spurn those warm friends from her embraces, close her doors against them, and treat them as fanatics and as heretics? The latter is the painful fact; and I ask if it does not show a want of love for the appearing of Christ? It evidently does.

Third: We always in the success or prosperity of our friends, feel to rejoice, and are careful to show our attachment to them in lending them all the aid we can in the various enterprises in which they engage. But how is it with the church with respect to those who love and look for the appearing of Christ? Does the church rejoice in their success in the spread of the truth, and voluntarily lend her aid in the good cause? No—she opposes it! The devoted followers of the Lamb, spend their time, talents and all, resorting to various methods to get the truth before the minds of their fellow-men, to prepare them for the coming of the Lord of lords and King of kings; but the church meets them by her stern and unyielding opposition. The cause in which they are engaged is denounced—the truths which they present are declared to be falsehoods; a fixed and settled hatred is manifested towards those who are engaged in the glorious cause of their soon coming Lord; those too with whom the opposing ones have had no personal acquaintance; of whom they have never known any evil, and perhaps have never seen, but against whom feelings of indignation are excited upon the bare mention of their names! Why this opposition, this falsifying the truth? Why this indignation so easily excited? Why this withholding of support, and refusing to rejoice in the success of those who are spreading the truth? Plainly because of a want of love for the appearing of Christ!

Fourth: From the constitution of our minds, we always hate the efforts which tend to promote the interests of our enemy. We are very apt to ridicule the measures which he uses to advance his cause—to question the purity of his motives, and find fault with all he does. If he manifests anything like zeal, it appears to us like enthusiasm and madness. Witness the conduct of the church towards those who are daily looking for the coming of the Son of man. If efforts are made to promulgate the truth upon this subject, the church will oppose the good work, and speak evil of those engaged in it. Politicians may call together large masses of people—of men, women and children, at an enormous expense, and may join in their foolish shouts to their party leaders, and in the eyes of the church all is well enough; but let even one-half the effort be made to awaken a slumbering world to a sense of its approaching doom, and the church is ready to cry aloud against it, and call the whole enthusiasm and downright madness. Is it because politics are of so much more importance than the salvation of men that the church act thus? or because no such efforts are necessary to save mankind from the impending wrath of God? There is reason enough why such efforts should be made, and the church know it well—and her opposition arises from a want of love for the appearing of Christ. Again: From the constitution of our minds, we easily believe an evil report concerning one whom we hate; if a man hears evil of an enemy he believes it on the slightest testimony. He eagerly listens to every word of slander—gives the most unqualified credence to every falsehood that serves to blacken his reputation. How frequently do we see this law of the human mind developing itself against those who are looking for the near coming of the Son of God, and that too on the part of the church. It is amazing to see their enmity manifesting itself to such a degree that often there is nothing too absurd and ridiculous and contradictory for them to believe about those of whom they know nothing, save that they are Adventists. And is not this the very ebullition of a heart at enmity against the glorious appearing of Christ? so it appears to me. It cannot be from any personal enmity—for how can that exist against one of whom they have no personal knowledge? it therefore must arise from an opposition to the coming of the Lord.

The above are only a few of the many proofs that may be drawn from the established laws of mind, to show that the church is wholly destitute of a love for the appearing of the blessed Jesus; and while it tends to demonstrate an utter want of that love, it equally tends to demonstrate an entire want of love for him—for how can they love him with all their heart, and not love his appearing? this cannot be, until the laws of mind are entirely changed.

With all these facts staring the church in the face, standing out in such bold relief on the very head and front of her experience, how can she suppose herself to have any acceptable love to God? Oh, what blind insatiation! The church is enshrouded in the most impenetrable darkness, and from her blind attachment thereto, I fear that nothing but the light of the day of God will cause her to see her sad condition—a light which will soon burst upon her in all its solemn and awful realities. O, will not the church arise and trim her lamps, before her doom shall be forever sealed! Long has she deceived herself with her own vain imaginings, until she has become proud, disdainful and supercilious. Every semblance of true piety is gone from her fashionable courts or temples, and nothing is left but proud parsons, gilded canopies, polished sermons, sleeping congregations, sublime organs, and a worship that Satan himself would call a very decent affair, classical, literary and in good taste.

CHARACTER OF OUR PRAYER MEETINGS.—The character of our prayer meetings must not be overlooked, if they are to become the means of invigorating the power of religion in the hearts of those who attend them. At present they are, for the most part inexpressibly dull and lifeless. Every man goes the round of devotional topics, and thinks nothing whatever of what is appropriate, and what is fitted to rouse. We want less form, and more power; circumlocution, and more heart devotion. We pray too long, and with too little unction. A few warm and stirring petitions proceeding from a heart full of love, are of more value to the life of a church, than a thousand lengthened addresses to the Deity, where devotion dies upon the lips of the suppliant, and where all long for the close of an unedifying service. It is life, and power, and unction, that we want to our social prayers; something to rouse, to animate, to cheer, and to fill the heart with love and joy.—London Evan.

AFFAIRS OF OUR OFFICE.

Upon an examination of our books, we were not a little surprised to find our accounts standing as they do. We did not suppose there was so much due as there is, from professedly paying subscribers; and we are greatly disappointed to find so large an amount due from those whose papers have been discontinued, without payment being made. There is a deplorable lack of moral honesty somewhere!—Our accounts, for papers the past year, stand thus:

Now due from professedly paying subscribers,	$1205 23
Due from those who have stopped their papers, without paying for them,	600 75
Amount for papers sent 'FREE,'	370 50

This account, it should be remembered, embraces the amount for free papers, and those discontinued without payment being made,—for the past year only.—These two sums added make $971,25, which, if time continue will doubtless be swelled to over one thousand dollars before the close of this volume of our paper, the time to which this estimate extends.

For some weeks past, with the exception of one or two weeks, our receipts have been short of our current expenses: they are still light. We confidently think, however, with these facts before our kind patrons, and after having received their bills of account, that they will do the thing, in this case, that is just and honorable, without further delay.

Exposition of Isaiah lxx, 17--25.

(Concluded.)

Verse 21. 'And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them.'

Should an objection be offered to a literal interpretation of this text? There should not, unless other plain portions of Scripture teach a different doctrine. Instead of this being the case, the literal rendering is justified by many plain Scripture texts. The heavens are to retain Christ until the times of restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began. Acts 3: 21.

'Restitution,' then, is what we are to look for at the coming of Christ. Restored to what? At least the happy condition of our first parents before their fall and ejection from Eden. As they eat then, we conclude they will also eat in the restoration, and as Adam was told to dress the garden, we cannot see why in the restoration man may not do the same, or, as the text reads, plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them.

The three men, or angels, named in Gen. 18: 8, 'did eat' of the meat prepared by Abraham; the 'two angels' that went to Sodom (Gen. 19: 1, 3) 'did eat' of the 'feast' which Lot prepared. After the resurrection of Christ, the apostles 'gave him a piece of broiled fish, and of an honey comb, and he took it and did eat before them.' Luke 24: 42, 43. Before his crucifixion Christ said, 'I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.' Luke 22: 18. And, 'I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.' Matt. 26: 29. To his disciples Christ made this promise, 'I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me: that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.' Luke 22, 29, 30. The 'tree of life,' in the immortal world, will 'bear twelve manner of fruits, and yield her fruit every month,' and they who do the commandments of the Lord here, will be blessed with a 'right to the tree of life,' in the world to come.—

Rev. 22: 2, 14.

Relative to 'building houses' in the immortal state, we believe the New Testament says nothing: the Old does, however, plainly say that this will be the case. And indeed it would be repugnant to every law of beauty and perfection by which all the works of God are governed, to have a world, however perfect in every respect, without a habitation on it. It is more reasonable to suppose that in the new world there will be habitations than that there will be none. Then, as verse 22 reads, 'they shall not build—and another inhabit: they shall not plant—and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.' Blessed state of quietude and safety: nothing shall disturb or destroy there.

Verse 23. 'They shall not labor in vain, [as in this life, and another possess their labors] nor bring forth for trouble: [for they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Luke 20: 35, 36. If the bringing forth in the text has reference to child-bearing, this testimony of Christ shows that in the immortal state they will not bring forth for trouble, for the very good reason that they will not bring forth at all: there will be no propagation of the human species there; for they neither marry nor are given in marriage in that state of being,] for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.' The righteous and their godly children, and their offspring which have died in infancy, will be made immortal, and joyfully enter the world of glory, the New Earth, forever to enjoy its untold blessings.

Verse 24. 'And it shall come to pass [which shows it to be a prophecy] that before they call, I will answer: and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.' This glorious state is yet future: for it has not yet been realized, unless it was by our first parents a very short time before the fall; then God held personal communion with his children; in the restitution, he will do this again. Then his children will see his face, and he will be with them personally as before the fall: for 'blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.' Matt. 5: 8. And, 'behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.' Rev. 21: 3, 4.—Blessed state indeed: when it shall be enjoyed by the pure in heart, then the prediction will have its fulfilment, 'before they shall call, I will answer,' &c.

Verse 25. 'The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.' And we fully believe he is able and will fulfil, to the spirit and letter, this glorious prophecy, and many other like it, or of the same import. And why should it be thought a thing incredible for God to do it? Let infidel unbelief tell why, if it can. Faith joyfully says it can and will be done, by him who will soon come and restore all things lost in the fall. Before that sad calamity came upon the world, man was head, lord of this globe: every living thing was submissive to his will, and lamb-like peace reigned throughout the animate world.—The now ferocious beasts did not devour one another, nor did any enmity exist between them and man.

God has promised to restore the world to this heavenly state, and he will most surely do it. For 'truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with my glory.' Num. 14: 21.

We are not insensible of the fact that this view of the subject will be too gross for the spiritual or visionary views of very many professed Christians of this age. They have been taught, and suppose they have very good reason to believe, that God has no identity, is 'without body, or parts, or passions,' that 'his centre is everywhere, and his circumference nowhere,'—that man, in his immortal state, will not in fact be a real man, but a ghost, a vapor, a spirit, a transparent indefinable something, no one can tell what. With these views of the being of God, and the character of the immortal saints, no wonder that a place, a heaven, 'beyond the bounds of time and space,' instead of this earth made new, should be found for man's everlasting abode. But when we understand that God is a being possessing form, as well as locality, and that man will be changed from mortality to immortality, and still be a real being, possessing all the component parts of a real man, then it is easy, and altogether consistent, to believe in the literal restoration to their Eden state of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began. Faith rejoices in view of the speedy accomplishment of these things, and cries out, 'Thy kingdom come, and thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.'

Signs of the Time.

For a few years past, the attention of all classes has been turned to the frequent observance of the most singular and unaccountable phenomena in the earth, heavens, air, and seas, which the world ever witnessed before. At first the entire community seemed to be alarmed, and admonished by these signs that some fearful event was soon to follow. But now they pass unheeded by the great mass, who have become callous to these warnings of a long-forbearing and most merciful God. Though the signs now are not as visible to the great mass as at first; nevertheless the watchful Christian they present sure indications that the end of all terrestrial things is at the very door.

Our atmosphere is the region where the most startling signs are now (not seen by the mass, but) detected by scientific men in every part of the world. Reason, if not Revelation, teaches us that when (as the following account from the Scientific American for Nov. 21st says,) 'THE MOST EXTRAORDINARY IRREGULARITIES AND APPARENT CONVULSIONS OF THE ATMOSPHERE, EVER RECORDED, OR PROBABLY WITNESSED,' take place, that then the great crisis in the earth's history is most surely drawing near to a close. When the seventh vial is poured out 'into the air,' or atmosphere, a voice comes out of the temple, saying, 'It is done.' We do not suppose that this text has a direct reference to the present state of our atmosphere: we only quote it to show that as the atmosphere is the locality of the last plagues, so it may be the locality of the last signs of our Lord's coming. And certainly reason teaches us most conclusively, that when such 'apparent convulsions of the atmosphere' are generally witnessed, it is a very sure indication, (when taken in connection with other infallible evidences on the same subject,) that the end of all things is at the door. Let us heed these kind warnings, and be constantly ready to hail with joy our returning Lord.

"ATMOSPHERIC PHENOMENA."

"Those who are accustomed to making meteorological observations report the most frequent occurrence within the last three or four months and especially within a few days of the most extraordinary irregularities and apparent convulsions of the atmosphere, ever recorded or probably witnessed. On the 23rd of October these extraordinary indications were noticed in Florida, New York, Flatbush, Syracuse and Montreal. These peculiar indications of the thermometer and other instruments have been such at times as to induce apprehensions of approaching earthquakes, but nothing has yet occurred more serious than the universal prevalence of storms and tempests in all parts of the globe. At the time of this writing the storm continues, which has prevailed about three weeks, inasmuch that people are becoming curious to know what kind of weather we shall have next."—Scientific American.

"Holding the Winds."

We think that the angels named in Rev. seventh chapter, are yet holding the 'four winds'; but does not the following intelligence indicate that the time during which they were to be held, is on the eve of expiring? And, indeed, are the winds, (so far as a friendly alliance between England and France is concerned) any longer held? It seems they are not: for there is an 'end' to that alliance. Says the account:

"The Paris papers are still discussing the consequences of the marriage of a French Prince with a Spanish Princess. A letter-writer from Paris, speaking of the marriage, says:—

'It is now what in diplomatic jargon is called un fait accompli. The French Government has gained a great triumph over English diplomacy, and perhaps, it may be added, over English interests. In gaining it, however, it has put an end to the English alliance, which for sixteen long years has been its sole dependence.'

English Works.

Bro. Himes will accept our sincere thanks for the English works just received by the Express. We have only had time to look at their titles and tables of contents, with a hasty sketch of Micklewood on the Apocalypse. We prize them very highly, and design, as opportunity presents, to favor our readers with the privilege of reading at least some of their rich contents.

Legitimate Conclusion.

Our brethren generally admit, and justly too, that 2 Tim. 3: 1-4 has a special reference to the last days, in which we live. They also admit, and correctly too, that the church of the last days, which will then have the 'form of godliness, but denying the power thereof,' will cause the perils of which Paul here speaks. Admitting these things, and with a correct understanding of other parts of the instruction here given by Paul, we cannot see how any one can for a moment retain his standing with the church which causes these perils, or discountenance others in leaving her: for we are plainly told, 'from such turn away.' To stay in the opposing churches, we must knowingly live in direct violation of this imperative command, or take the ground that this prophecy does not relate to the church of the last days, or that the last days have not come. To one of these conclusions we must unavoidably come, provided we hold our standing with the opposing sects.

We fully believe that the prophecy directly points out the character of the formal and powerless, as to godliness, church of these last days, and specially and unequivocally commands all, who love the appearing of the Lord, without respect to persons, profession, standing, circumstances, sect or party to which they may belong, to 'turn away' from these proud, unbelieving, truth-bating and world-loving churches. Paul, under the inspiration of the Highest, know better than we ignorant mortals can, what we should do in these perilous times. It is true he has given us but a few words of instruction connected with this prophecy, and it is therefore reasonable to suppose that it is of the utmost importance that we should strictly heed what little he has said,—and we find nothing more plainly said than—FROM SUCH TURNS AWAY.

We have fully, understandingly, and joyfully obeyed this commandment, and others like it, and have never seen a moment when we desired to retrace our steps, or be re-instated with the body from which such requirements called us to come out.—The sickly, cold, unbelieving, and almost lifeless condition of many of those who never left their church; the continued settled hostile attitude of the sectarian churches to the glorious doctrine of the near appearing of Christ and his kingdom, their late action on the slave question in the World's Convention, and their rapid increase in, or winking at, nearly if not quite every other crime of which man is guilty; and the infallible assurances, daily increasing, of the coming of the Lord being at the door—these things confirm us beyond the shadow of a doubt, that it has been and now is, the will of God that his true children should separate themselves from the infidel, corrupt, and fallen churches of the last days.

☞ We are happy to say that Bro. Pearson's health is so far recovered, that we entertain strong hopes that he will in a very short time be able to resume his labors. In noticing the date of his illness last week, we should have said Nov. 18th instead of 28th.

C. E. GILLETT.—Bro A. Norton, of Parma, N.Y., has informed us that Mr. Gillett recently spent some days in that place, lecturing, &c. He came there, according to Mr. Gillett's story, by Bro J. Pearson's and my recommendation; which is untrue: we neither counselled nor recommended him to any place. Mr. Gillett succeeded in getting a letter of commendation signed by Bro A. Norton and C. D. Riggs, and not some others. Bro Norton wished these facts stated in order to counteract the use that might be made of this letter, so far as his name is concerned, and we presume Bro Riggs joins in the same request. Mr. Gillett, we are informed, endeavors to work upon the sympathy of the people where he has an opportunity, by telling them about the loss of his trunk, which he values at five hundred dollars. The facts we suppose are, he lost a valise, worth with its contents, (with the exception of some of his old manuscripts) not over twenty five dollars: this is according to his own estimate in this city where the loss was sustained. Half that sum probably is more than the whole was worth.

The Last Earthly Examination.

That there will be an internal searching of heart, or examination of the guests especially, just prior to the marriage of the Lamb, and to finish the great work of preparation for that interesting and joyful day, is evident from Dan. 12: 10, "Many shall be purified, made white and tried." Here the last thing taught as a qualification for the "end of these wonders," the last of which is the glorification of the righteous; is their trial. In the "time of the end," every sealing truth, every degree of grace, every grace and fruit of the spirit, and also every gift and conquest of the spirit must be put to the test of a fiery ordeal. "For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep, that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day."—Ezek. 34: 11-12. It will be necessary for God to search and try his people in order to bring them out of all places or sectarian bodies, and errors in doctrine, spirit and conduct, "that they all may be one as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us." Into this holy, happy unity of spirit, they must and will be brought to be "presented to the Lord as a glorious church without spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." "O Lord, thou hast searched and known me." Says David, "thou hast beset me before, and laid thine hand upon me." The spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: But rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.—1 Pet. 12: 13-17. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God." Take, my brethren, says James, the prophets who have spoken unto you in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering, afflictions, and of patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure.—Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." Says Jesus, "because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold," but he that shall endure unto the end the same shall be saved.

If the Philadelphia church in Rev. represents the true church reaching to the end of time, and the Laodicean, those who apostatize from them in the closing conflict of which there is considerable evidence, then the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth, refers doubtless, to the last mighty efforts of Satan to gain our souls in the furnace of purification. The next verse, he says, "Behold I come quickly." When his coming is quickly, or "even at the door," then this hour of temptation will come upon all the world. The present must be the period referred to in the text according to this application; for the signs teaching us when he is "near even at the door," have all been seen by the present generation, as we know from the very best authority; and it shall not pass away till all these things (embracing the Son of man coming in the clouds) shall be fulfilled. But thank God there is a most encouraging and precious promise appended to the hour of temptation;—"I will keep thee from the hour;—that is, from entering into and falling under its decisive power. "Behold I have refined thee, but not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction. For mine own sake, even for my own sake will I do it, for how should my name be polluted? and I will not give my glory unto another."—Isa. 48: 10-11. The design of God in this struggle with their own corruptions and the powers of darkness, is here most clearly stated. It is for their own purification, and the glory and honor of God. Worthy objects indeed. Worthy of God and kind heaven. O then may I with my brethren and sisters endure. Says Job, 23: 10, "But he knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." For the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins." The firing-pot is for silver and the furnace for the gold; but the Lord trieth the hearts.—"Prov. 17: 3. Mal. 3: 3, 4, 5. "And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years—and I will come near to you to judgment." It is sufficiently evident from the scripture quotations, that a singular and fiery trial will be experienced by the virgins, when the day of the Lord is at the door, and God has come near to us 'to judgment.'

Let us now inquire into the character of this trial. It is a trial of our faith. Faith gives character and strength to all other graces of the spirit. Hear the apostle: "that the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire;" "knowing this, that the trial of your faith worketh patience." All affliction and temptation more or less affects our faith, either directly or indirectly. We walk by faith; by faith we live, stand and overcome the world. It is clearly intimated by James in his address to the last generation of brethren, that our trials and afflictions would be similar to those of Job and the prophets. 'Ye have heard of the patience of Job,' says he, 'and have seen the end (or design) of the Lord.' We shall need the patience of Job to endure them; but what was the nature of his temptations? Satan's object was evidently, to prove him a hypocrite; and to accomplish this design, he directed every temptation. 'Put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face.' Job, 1: 11. God permitted Satan to tempt Job; his temptations were long and severe,—consequently, the furnace of affliction was extremely hot and trying. So also will be the trial of God's people in their last trial of purification. By divine permission the devil will be one great instrumental cause in the closing conflict of the dear saints of God. Then will the broad seal of heaven be placed upon them, and the spirit and power of the coming kingdom reign within them.

D. B. W.

Bro. D. B. W. is doubtless correct in supposing that God will test, try, and purify his people, just before the coming of the Lord; but that he will do it any more at that than at any previous time, we do not believe. It has been just as necessary to purify and try the saints in one age of the world as another, and there is no evidence to show that it is otherwise taught in the Scriptures. Again, we do not think our brother is justified in making the applications he does of very many of the texts of scripture he has quoted. They relate, it is very true, to the temptations and severe trials of the saints, but it is not true that they exclusively relate to the trials of the saints in these last days. The principle of interpretation that would make this application of every text, with an exception or two, quoted by our brother, would apply exclusively, the whole Bible to this age of the world.

We kindly, but earnestly, entreat our brother, and all who may feel interested in this matter, to examine his article by the Bible; it is not necessary for us to do it for you. Turn to every text Bro. W. has quoted, and carefully read it with the context, and we confidently believe, without an exception, we shall be all agreed that our good brother has been mistaken in the understanding of certain portions of the inspired Word.—Ed.

Letter from Bro. O. Irish.

Bro. Marsh:—I think it would have done your soul good to have been at our meeting last evening. I feel to praise the good Lord for once more pouring out his blessed spirit among us.—Believers are awake again; backsliders are being reclaimed, and one poor sinner was broken all down last evening, and begged for mercy, and went home relieved, praising the Lord. We have a good faithful brother here at present, from the state of Maine, brother Turner. The Lord is blessing his labors here: there is no mistake, he is giving us meat in due season. Quite a number of the different churches come out to hear him, and go away convinced that he has got the truth, and proclaims it according to the word of God. Some have been converted into the second advent doctrine, and are about leaving their churches, which I think will cause a considerable stir again here. We are strong in the faith that the Lord will come within 12 or 14 months; the signs of the times show it. I will here give you a statement of a letter written by the Rev. Dr. Baird, than whom no American has of late had more free access to great ones in Europe. He says,

"The times are ominous of great evil in Germany. A storm is gathering—there is need, therefore, that all that can be done should be, to scatter the seeds of truth, for it alone can save the horrors of a bloody revolution, which threatens to sweep over all that country. Indeed, I think all continental Europe," he says, "is going to be shaken to its very centre, before many years pass away." But he cannot give his reasons for so believing!

The above letter I took from one of the Boston political daily papers of late, which goes to show that the great ones of the present day are looking for something more than common to come upon the earth; but cannot give their reasons. But I believe these are the signs of the last days. OTIS IRISH.

Letter from Bro. D. B. Wyatt.

Bro. Marsh:—It will doubtless be interesting to you and the readers of the 'Voice,' to hear from the camp-meeting held in Clinton, N. Y., in September last. It was a blessed time, and the results were glorious. The scattered and despoiled virgins of our coming Lord were on the ground with burning lamps, waiting and looking for the Bridegroom.

Our tried brethren, Dudley, Adrian, Southerland, Roney and Sawyer were present as heralds of the Lord. The word of the Lord was quick and powerful on this occasion. The brethren and sisters suffering, many of them, under the inward, fiery conflicts and temptations of the subtle adversary, in his last desperate efforts to gain their souls, were awakened, purified and filled with the spirit and excellent glory of the coming kingdom of God. A deep sense of the worth of the soul moved and subdued almost every heart. A spirit of labor and travail for the birth of souls was generally felt among the brethren. Sinners were 'pricked in their hearts,' and cried out, 'men and brethren what shall we do?' came forward to the mourner's seat, sought and found pardon. Conversions were as clear and sound, apparently, as any I ever witnessed. The converted and reclaimed I should judge, amounted to about 50. Thirteen were baptised at the meeting and eleven since.

Many are leaving Babylon in this town, and she 'trembles for fear of her loss.' God grant that all the saints within the fallen city yet possessing life, may escape immediately before her final doom.

The town of Burke has recently been visited with a blessed revival of the work of God, principally under the labors of Bro. Southerland. I preached to them last evening. Eleven were forward for prayers, and some found peace, we trust, in believing. Fourteen have been baptised and gone on their way rejoicing. The Lord is opening the eyes of his people here to the condition of the sects, and the immediate coming of the Lord. The spirit and power of Elijah has turned the 'hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers,' and they are bowing together before the Lord. I trust a few precious souls here will be 'purified, made white and tried,' and then sealed in their hearts with the Holy Spirit of promise to go up with a shout at the crisis which must shortly come to pass.

Evidences of the end of all things are thickening around us on every hand. I could but observe in the recent conversions, the mighty struggle on the part of the church and penitent, necessary to carry them truly through the ordeal of regeneration. More labor and power to bring in a few scattering ones than was exercised in '43 and '44 to assist a multitude through the trials and pangs of the new birth. This should teach us the solemn lesson that the work of saving souls, which is the 'glory of the ministry,' is almost to a close. The sealing time is almost ended, and the four angels will soon let go their hold on the four winds, and the now angry nations will engage in the mighty and decisive battle of the great day of God Almighty. The mass are evidently now beyond the reach of the ordained means of salvation, while the few are rapidly passing the line of demarkation, and the strongest efforts of the spirit of God and of his people, can only reach and move them. May God have mercy upon the sinking world—Christ have mercy!

D. B. WYATT.

Letter from Bro. J. L. Payne.

Brother Marsh:—The evidences never were clearer to my mind than now, that we are in the true time of the Lord's coming, though I have comparatively but little feeling upon the subject to what I formerly have had; this I find is a complaint among many. I fear sometimes that I shall sleep as do others and come short, still I trust I have not yet lost my garment. The present world with its riches and honors has no more attractions for my heart now, than when I first believed the Lord was coming. I have no doubt but that the wailing will soon be heard, "alas! alas! for in one hour, so great riches is come to nought."

We have had but two general disappointments—we are now close upon the third point of a definite time. I think probably we shall have to pass on a little beyond it; if so, I trust we shall talk together, and still continue to communicate to each other through our papers, as we now do, till Israel's chariot shall appear.

Many of our brethren do not seem to have a clear view of the judgment. Tradition, together with our imaginary views, we all must confess, have been very great barriers to our receiving the simple truth. We remember our former views of heaven; we thought it far above all worlds, but when we received the simple truth as revealed in the word, we saw that the saints reward consisted in the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham and his seed, to be realized under the whole heaven. So with regard to the judgment: tradition teaches us that all the dead, righteous and wicked, will come forth in one great mass before the Lord's bar, as criminals in our courts, not knowing what their doom will be till the judge reads their sentence from the great Book. Now what is the Bible truth on this point? Paul says, Christ will "judge the quick (or living) and dead at his appearing and kingdom;" and Jude says, he will come to convince all, and judge all. John says, at the sounding of the seventh trumpet, the time will come "for the DEAD to be judged."

The judgment of all certainly takes place at the appearing of Christ. If all the dead are raised at the appearing of Christ and judged, how could it be said in so many places in scripture, that the dead are judged then? There would be no dead to judge if all were then raised, for all would be living. When Christ appears the eternal decision between all the living and all the dead takes place; such among the living and such among the dead as are judged worthy of eternal life, are gathered by the angels; but all those who are not gathered (either living or dead) by the angels, are judged unworthy and are left behind; the living wicked to be destroyed with the world, and to be numbered with the wicked dead, to live not again until the thousand years are finished; after which they will be gathered and destroyed, as we read, but no further judgment upon them. I wish the brethren who do not see this subject clearly would always bear in mind, that the DEAD are judged—the righteous DEAD are judged worthy of life, before they are raised, or they would not be raised.—My soul loves the plain simple Bible truth—we are apt to think that it is wrapped up in some dark mystery, but it is generally simple, and lies close to our feet, and when we find it we wonder that we had not seen it before.

Yours in the blessed truth, J. L. PAYNE.
Salem, Mass., Nov. 1st, 1846.

Letter from Bro. A. Hurrix.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—The "Voice of Truth" is still received by me, and is read with no little pleasure and profit. Your course as an editor I much approve; and trust that the brethren are not unconscious of your anxiety and labors, to make the "Voice of Truth" what is needed by them. Said Christ, (Jno. 15: 8,) Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit. This do I believe to be your motive, or aim. And if this be your purpose, a rich reward awaits you. Be not discouraged; for your labor is not in vain in the Lord.

The indifference the generality of professed christians manifest, in this, the christian's hope, to me is surprising. O, that they would awake; but they will not till the seventh trumpet shall sound, and then it will be too late. Then will they cry, "Lord, open unto us." But he will reply, "I know you not." How responsible must that preacher be, who publicly scoffs and ridicules the second Advent of Christ at hand.—Yet such there are: and it is a prominent sign of the times. Sudden destruction is near, for they begin to loudly cry, "peace and safety." But let us, not only cry aloud, and spare not, but "declare the whole counsel of God." Let us do what we can to prepare our fellow-men for that great, and fast hastening day. May the blessing of Almighty God, rest upon you, and enable you rightly to divide the words of truth, and give to each a portion of meat in due season. Yes, as you have, as it were, in your charge, the care of all the churches—the power of doing much harm, or much good; O, may you be kept in the path of wisdom. My prayer is for you.—Yes, I remember you always in my prayers, knowing your peculiar situation, and your fearful responsibility.

ALLEN HARRIS.

Chapinsville, N. Y., Nov. 2d, 1846.

Bro. R. T. Haskins, South Waterford, Me., Oct. 25th, writes:—Our conference meeting at Poland last week was very solemn and interesting. Many hearts were melted down in love to God, for the one more privilege of meeting together in unity, where we formerly met in conference before the 10th day movement. The good Lord was with us and quieted our hearts by the out-pouring of his Holy Spirit. Our ministering brethren moved forward, rightly dividing the word of truth—administering comfort to the little flock, by exhorting one another. The spirit of meekness seemed to prevail over all difference of opinion throughout the meeting. To God be all the glory that the time has come when the saints know what it is to love each other, with pure hearts fervently. My prayer is that we may all profit by past errors; that in the little time we have left to fight the good fight of faith, we may be wise as serpents and harmless as doves. Soon very soon, I believe Jesus will come and take all of his children home to glory.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

TERRIBLE GALE ON THE LAKES.—Accounts continue to bring the news of the sad effects of the late terrible gale, (Nov. 10th,) on our Lakes. Not far from twenty schooners, sloops, Steamboats, &c., are already reported as ashore or wrecked, and many lives lost. Sixteen dead bodies have been washed ashore at Barcelona, and loss of life is reported to have occurred at other places.

Accounts from Geneva state that the recent elections have terminated in favor of the liberals, which has caused great alarm to the Roman Catholics. Indeed their position in many parts of Switzerland, is becoming very critical, and serious outbreaks are entertained by them.

The subject of subsistence continues to attract serious attention in France, and has acquired increased interest in consequence of the devastations produced by the recent floods.

Accounts from Portugal, represent the insurrection as making rapid progress. Coimbra and Braga have followed the example of Oporto. The officer and soldiers dismissed in 1842 are recalled into service. The Duke of Terceira has been arrested and confined in the tower of the port. The Junta of Oporto has declared for Don Pedro V., and declared the Queen excluded from the throne.

The cholera had passed the line of the Russian quarantine on the borders of the Caspian Sea, and was raging throughout all the Tartar villages of the districts of Sulgan and Loukoran.

The accounts from Alexandria state that the Puelm was still there, but would soon depart for Cairo. The Nile had risen 24 feet and made great ravages. The harvests of maize were entirely destroyed, and those of cotton much damaged. More than six villages were flooded, and yet the waters did not subside; it was feared that Lower Egypt would be converted into one immense lake.

News from Circassia to the 27th of August, states that Dellisen, a Russian deserter and officer in the Circassian army, had made a successful razzia on the Russian territory. The enemy being attacked suddenly, made a feeble resistance, and cannon and large quantities of ammunition fell into the hands of Dellisen. Several native tribes which had formerly submitted to Russia, elated with this success, revolted in a mass, and abandoning the Russian possessions, fled to the mountains of Maalen Dagh, about forty miles from the frontier. The Russians subsequently attacked them and took some two hundred prisoners, who were murdered by order of the commanding general.

Great distress prevailed in Ireland. The want of food was felt severely. But the Government is active in its endeavors to ameliorate the sufferings of the poor. Employment has been provided for large numbers, and the Government mills are kept constantly at work to supply food for the destitute.

The famine in the Highlands of Scotland was even more pressing than that in Ireland. But the benevolent were adopting active measures to furnish relief.

INDIA.—Intelligence by the mail which left Bombay Oct. 1st, has been received in England. An insurrection had broken out in Cashmere, fomented by the Lahore Durbar; and a force sent against the insurgents by Ghooliah Singh had been defeated with some loss. Several English officers who were visiting the country had been seized, and would be detained as hostages, though no fears were entertained for their safety. Cholera was still raging in Scindo, and provisions were so enormously scarce and dear, that an absolute famine was apprehended. A volcano had appeared on Saddle Island, in the Red Sea.

FRANCE.—In consequence of the inundation of property and life has occurred. The Loire has overflowed its banks, and desolated towns and villages. The Rhone, the Duranco, and other rivers and their tributaries, have also inundated the adjacent country. By the rise of the Rhone, 150 houses were destroyed at Roanne on the 10th October, with 270 boats loaded with merchandise. Among the victims of this disaster were the Councillor Merle and his son, who were drowned. At Tarrascou, Andreuxieu, the destruction of life and property was great. A Bordeaux journal says that at Feurs, a diligence with eleven passengers was swept away by the flood, and all but three drowned. At Amboise, 20 persons perished. In one of the Faubourgs of Tours, the water was nine feet deep. A Paris paper, the 'National,' says:—

"It appears that every scourge has this year fallen on our unfortunate country. Incendiary fires, lighted by unknown hands, have carried desolation into several departments, the dearth of provisions has increased the distress, and at present the rivers are overflowing, and the inundations ravage what had escaped the fires. Entire villages have been swept away; bridges, viaducts and considerable buildings have fallen to pieces. The loss is not yet ascertained, nor is the number of victims yet known; but the letters received from the scene of desolation are filled with lamentation." The devastations caused by the overflowing of the Loire have been dreadful.

In Paris there is great distress and stagnation of business, and scarcity of money; the pawn-brokers' shops are thronged with customers. Failures are of daily occurrence; the Savings Banks are nearly empty, and the hospitals are full, and the prisons are full. The number of paupers in the city is estimated at 115,000.

REMARKABLE IS TRUE.—The Liverpool Standard of the 20th ult. quotes the following item of news from the Dublin Statesman, relating to 'a projected alliance of all the Episcopal churches in the world, which is said to be now set on foot at Rome, under the influence of the present liberal pope.' The idea, says another journal, seems to be, to abate the papal supremacy nominally into a more patriarchate, and to make a few doctrinal changes or explanations, for the satisfaction of the various Episcopal churches of the East and West, who are to be combined. The Dublin paper questions the statement, but says, 'We live in strange times, and the idea has not been altogether overlooked by the tractarian party, so that if such a project do turn up, we shall not be taken by surprise.'

Extraordinary Discoveries at Nineveh.

Mr. Layard, an English gentleman, has, for the last twelve months been pursuing the track—first laid open by M. Botta—at Nimroud, near Mosul, on Tigris. His excavations have not only settled the precise position of Nineveh—the very existence of which had become little better than a vague historic dream—but have brought to light some of its building, sculptures and inscriptions. According to accounts received at Constantinople, some months since, and communicated in the Athenaeum of Saturday last, Mr. Layard had discovered an entrance formed by two magnificent winged, human handed lions.

This entrance led him into a hall above 150 feet long and 30 broad, entirely built of slabs of marble covered with sculptures. The side walls are ornamented with small bas reliefs, of the highest interest—battle sieges, lion hunts, &c.; many of them in the finest state of preservation, and all executed with extraordinary spirit. They afford a complete history of the military art among the Assyrians; and prove their intimate knowledge of many of those machines of war whose invention is attributed to the Greeks and Romans—such as the battering ram, the tower moving on wheels, the catapult, &c.

Nothing can exceed the beauty and elegance of the forms of various arms, swords, daggers, bows, spears, &c. In this great hall there are several entrances—each formed by winged lions or winged bulls. These lead into other chambers, which again branch off into a hundred ramifications. Every chamber is built of slabs covered with sculptures or inscriptions, whence some idea may be formed of the number of objects discovered—the far greater part of which, in fact nearly all, are in the best preservation. Mr. Layard's excavations have been hitherto confined to a very small corner of the mound under which these antiquities have for ages been buried; it is impossible to say what may come out when they can be carried forward on an adequate scale.

It is estimated that over five hundred thousand foreigners have emigrated to our country this year, three-fourths of whom are Roman Catholics.

G.'s communication because we are opposed to the sentiment it advocates, but because it is commencing the investigation of a question in a manner different from what we would have it commenced in our paper. Bro. G.—on a moment's reflection will see that many of our readers would be entirely ignorant of the bearing of some parts of his article, from the fact that they have not seen the "questions and answers" to the Herald to which he refers. To get the subject intelligibly before our readers, it would be necessary in the next place to publish these questions and answers, which we wish not to do; still we should do it before suffering the answers to be reviewed in our columns.

The better way is for Bro. G., or any other writer who may be desirous of reviewing any communication published in the Herald, to do it in that paper; and if he wishes to speak through our columns on the intermediate state of the dead, destruction of the finally important, or any other scripture doctrine, let it be done independently of what has been said in the Herald, unless it shall refuse to give you a candid hearing, which we presume it will not do; its columns will, we presume, be open to a reasonable investigation of all subjects which pertain to our blessed hope.

We state here, not only for the benefit of Bro. G.—but for all writers, that you should never crown your letters, words, or remarks. We generally lay a communication aside which has either of these defects. Bro. G.'s letter, however, (though two lines are crowded where there should be only one) is not laid over on this account, but for the reasons before named. We had much rather pay the postage on an extra sheet than to strain our eyes and tire our brain in trying to read a communication too closely written.

The World to Come.

BY MRS. A. C. JUDSON.

Ain—There is a Happy Land.

There is a world to come,
Blessed and pure;
It is the Christian's home,
Long to endure.
O, 'tis a world most bright,
No more death, nor wo, nor night;
Faith views it with delight,
Knowing 'tis sure.

There Jesus Christ will reign,
All glorious King!
'There music's rapturous strain
Ever will ring.

Saints who in ages by,
Suffered, and were called to die,
'There in sweet harmony,
Anthems will sing.

O, 'twill be Paradise!
Etern restored;
All leauteous in their eyes
Who love the Word.
Wastes, that are now so drear,
'Like the rose shall blossom' there,
And be a garden fair;
An saith the Lord.

There Life's unfading tree
Will bloom most fair;
And Immortality
Its leaves shall bear;
While a pure stream will flow,
And, a joy no mortals know
Will to each soul bestow,
Who enters there.

O, that bright world to come!
Fongue cannot tell
How blessed is the home,
Where saints will dwell:
Turn then from sin away,
And the word of God obey,
'Then at the last great day,
All will be well.

Jamestown, N. Y.

The following article was handed us sometime since by a worthy brother, for publication in our columns, but other matter has hitherto excluded it. It is copied from the Advent Herald for July last, and is worthy of being read with care and an unprejudiced mind by every lover of truth.

"The Conversion of the World."

There is an article in 'Zion's Herald' of May 13th, bearing the title above. I wish to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good. I know of no other way to get truth, but to bring all doctrines to the touch-stone, and try them. If they stand the Scripture test, embrace them; if not, reject them. I wish to make the 'Herald' a medium of a few comments on the texts of Scripture quoted to prove that the Bible promises this great work in this dispensation. We are referred to ten passages to prove the position. The first is the old stereotyped one in Ps. 2: 8: 'Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.' The connection is left out of course, for it does not sound well, if we wish to prove the conversion of the world, to have this explanation: ver. 9—'Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel.' This taken in connection, would seem to teach anything but their conversion. But what rule of interpretation do men make 'dashing to pieces,' a conversion? It would be as consistent for me to say the Saviour would convert the devil, because he has promised to 'bruise his head,' as for any one to say the Lord will convert the world, because he has said he will 'dash the nations to pieces like a potter's vessel.'

We are next referred to Ps. 64: 9—'And all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God: for they shall wisely consider of his doings.' 'All men shall fear.' Fear what? It does not say whether they shall fear God, or his judgments. This can easily be decided, and the text put in its true light, by inquiring, When do 'all fear?' Ans. ver. 7—'God shall shoot at the wicked with an arrow: suddenly shall they be wounded.' v. 8. 'So shall they make their own tongue to fall upon themselves. All that see them shall flee away.' What! does God shoot, or reward the wicked for persecuting the saints before the judgment? Certainly not. When will the tongue of the wicked fall upon themselves? Not till every man is judged out of his own mouth. Luke 19: 22. When do all flee away? Let the prophet Isa. answer (24: 17, 18) 'Fear, and the pit, and the snare are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth. And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake.' Who would think of applying the text, when read in its connection, to the world's conversion? To apply it this side of the coming of our King to judgment, saying nothing about the power of God, men greatly err, not knowing the Scriptures.

I may be met by the objector, that 'All that fear declare the work of God;' and that this they would not do, unless they were all converted, and possessed filial fear. We will not be too hasty in drawing our conclusions, till we look at it in the light of Scripture. In Rom. 14: 11, we find a passage that Paul quotes from Isa. 45: 23, to prove a general judgment, viz: 'As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.' If the wicked all then bow, and confess, will they not declare God's wonderful works, as well as their abhorrence of sin? Does this confession amount to anything towards saving them, at this time? Indeed it does not. This scripture ere this, in Isaiah, would have been brought forward to prove a millennium, no doubt, if Paul had not interfered and spoil the inference. In Rev. 11: 13, we read when judgment comes, 'A remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.' Did this save them, by their declaring the glory and works of God at this last hour? Rev. 19: 21, you will find an answer. 'The remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth,' &c.

The next text referred to, is Ps. 145: 8—11—'The Lord is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and of great mercy. The Lord is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works. All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; they shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power.' This language was breathed from a full heart, while the Psalmist was contemplating the kingdom of God. To show this has particular reference to the kingdom, I will quote the 13th v.—'Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations.' Admitting that it does apply to this dispensation, is there anything that looks like the world's conversion in this text? I see not a particle of proof. Perhaps those that find the doctrine in their creed, can easily see the world's conversion in the expression, 'The Lord is good to all.' If God's goodness is to save all in the temporal millennium, so called, why not all from creation? Has his goodness increased? or will he have more respect to persons at that time? Does the phrase 'all men' mean a part only? Who will tell us? The same principle that will prove the world's conversion, will prove the salvation of all men since creation. This looks like handling the word of God deceitfully.

We are next referred to Isa. 9: 9, 10—'And all the people shall know, even Ephraim and the inhabitant of Samaria, that say in the pride and stoutness of heart, The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stone: the sycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars.' I see nothing here to the point at issue. The text says, 'All the people shall know, even Ephraim.' Know what? Ans. 8th ver.—'The Lord sent a word unto Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel.' I should as soon think of referring to—'Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone.'

Again we read, Isa. 25: 6—9, 'And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees; of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away all tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away from off all the earth—for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord—we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.' Some happy souls are waiting for this glorious state of things. Not for the conversion of the world however, but for the coming of their Lord; and they will say, as the prophet declares, 'It is our Lord, we have waited for him,' &c. When does this take place? We say, when our king comes. Our opponents say, when then world is converted. Which is right? Says Paul, in 1 Cor. 15: 54—56, 'So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.' Where is it written? In Isa. 25: 8, and in no other place. Paul believed in an immortal, and incorruptible millennium, to commence at the resurrection. Paul places things in their right place; and he did not revolt at the idea of having all that Isaiah speaks of, in this earth after the resurrection.

Again we are referred to Isa. 66: 23, 24—'And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.' If this has reference to a future state, and it appears by its connection that it has, it must be when the wicked are receiving their punishment after the resurrection. This view is confirmed by our Saviour's using this language to represent the punishment of the wicked in the world to come. Mark, 9: 44. If it is before the resurrection, where do the carcasses come from? If all that live are converted, there will be no carcasses till after the resurrection, to be punished.

Next in course is Dan. 2: 35—44. All that are not familiar with it can read it carefully. I cannot apply this to the first advent, on account of its chronological order. The stone smote the image on the fert. It is a sudden work. If applied to the first advent, it is a gradual work, and has been smiting for nearly two thousand years. The effect of the stone smiting the image is unlike a conversion. It breaks the kingdoms of the earth to pieces. The wicked that constitute the kingdoms become 'like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor, and the wind carried them away, and there was no place found for them.' This takes place according to our Saviour's testimony, at the coming of Christ.—Matt. 3: 12, 'Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.' Hosea's testimony (Hos. 13: 3) is to the point: 'Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away, as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, as the smoke out of a chimney.' This does not look much like the effect of conversion. Earthly kingdoms are then demolished. This is not done till the King of kings comes personally in the clouds, and rides triumphantly through the earth. Rev. 19: 11—21; 11: 15—19. Read the passages referred to, and you will see the kingdoms of this world are not converted before the coming of Christ, but are destroyed at his coming. Christ's kingdom is the fifth universal kingdom, and succeeds all others. Therefore when the fifth kingdom, or Christ's kingdom is set up, all others cease to exist. This kingdom is never to be destroyed. If this scripture is to be applied to the modern millennium, we have one that will never end.

The last text we are referred to, to prove the position, is Dan. 7: 13, 14, 17, 18—'I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.' 'These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth. But the saints of the Most High shall take the Kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever.' This kingdom is Christ's kingdom, to stand eternally. If such language as 'not pass away'—'not be destroyed'—'forever, even forever and ever,' does not describe endless duration, and is only a temporal millennium, we shall have to relinquish the idea of finding any eternal inheritance in the Bible for God's people. In the 13th verse, Daniel says: 'One like the Son of man came.' How? 'With the clouds of heaven,' &c. John speaks of the same person, coming in the same manner, in Rev. 1: 7—'Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him,' &c. Our Saviour says, in Mat. 24: 30 'And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven.' These are parallel texts, as all must admit. Then at this time, 'when the Son of man comes,' this kingdom is set up,—not before. Then 'all people, (the wicked being cut off, 2 Thess. 1: 7—10) nations and languages shall serve him,' &c., or as John the Revelator has it, (5: 9, 10) they will be 'redeemed out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and made unto our God kings and priests, to reign on the earth.' 'This is the time when all nations will serve God. In no place can you find 'that all nations serve God' this side of the new earth. In support of the position, that 'It is promised,' &c., the article says there are 'many other places, both in the Old and New Testaments.' Where? Did our Lord preach such a doctrine? No. He preached that the 'tares and wheat would grow together till the harvest; and the harvest is the end of the world.' He tells us that 'as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of man:' that 'as it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man.' Our Saviour gave us an outline of this world's history; but in no place is mention made of this long time of peace before the judgment. Did Paul preach such a doctrine? He says, 'In the last days perilous times shall come,' &c.—men 'shall wax worse and worse'—they 'will not endure sound doctrine'—will 'turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.' When he gave his reasons to the Thessalonians why the Lord would not then come, he gives but two: 'the great falling away,' and the revelation of 'the Man of Sin,' 'whom the Lord will destroy by the brightness of his coming.' If Paul believed in the world's conversion, he must have been very absent-minded not to allude to it. Yet he was so confident that he preached the truth, and the whole truth, that he says, 'If any man or angel from heaven preach any other gospel, let him be accursed.' James was ignorant of such a doctrine. He does not mention it, but is very particular to direct the minds of the brethren, when oppressed, defrauded and condemned, to our Saviour's return; and he exhorted them to be patient unto the coming of the Lord.' Peter expressly declares that in the 'last days' scoffers should come, saying, 'We see no 'promise' of the 'Lord's coming;' 'all things continue as they were from the creation.' But he passes over any time when all are to be converted, and reign a thousand years before that day.

Poverty and Crime in Boston.

Says the Editor of the Christian Register, for Nov. 28th: We have just been reading a sermon by Mr. Parker; and if it has given us no new light on the subject, either as to the magnitude and character of the evil or the method of removing it, it has served to confirm the impression which we had previously received. The sermon is a vivid, and, in some respects exaggerated, yet in the main a true picture of the actual condition of things among us. It has, at least, no palliation of the evil, and throws no disguise round it, to conceal or half obscure its deformity. It follows the poor child from its birth to the State Prison. It points out his temptations.

"Now consider the moral temptations before such a man. Here is wealth, food, clothing, comfort, luxury, gold, the great enchanter of this age—and but a plank 'twixt it and them. Nay, they are shut from it only by a pane of glass thin as popular justice, and scarcely less brittle! They feel the natural wants of man; the artificial wants of men in cities. They are indignant at their social position—thrust into the mews and kennels of the land. They think some one is to blame for it. A man in New England does not believe it God's will he should toil forever, stinting and sparing only to starve the more slowly to death, overloaded with work—with no breathing time but the blessed Sunday. They see others doing nothing, idle as Solomon's lilies, yet wasting the unearned bread God made to feed the children of the poor. They see crowds of idle women elegantly clad, a show of loveliness, a rainbow in the streets, and think of the rag which does not hide their daughter's shame. They hear of thousands of baskets of costly wine imported in a single ship, not brought to recruit the feeble, but to tickle the palate of the strong. They begin to ask if wealthy men and wise men have not forgotten their brothers, in thinking of their own pleasure! It is not the poor alone who ask that. In the midst of all this, what wonder is it if they feel desirous of revenge; what wonder that stores and houses are broken into, and stables set afire! Such is the natural effect of misery like that; it is but the voice of our brother's blood crying to God against us. I wonder not that it cries in robbery and fire. The jail and the gallows will not still that voice, nor silence the answer. I wonder at the fewness of crimes, not their multitude. I must say that, if goodness and piety did not bear a greater proportion to the whole development of the Poor than the Rich, their crimes would be tenfold. The Nation sets the Poor an example of fraud, by making them pay highest on local taxes; of theft, by levying the national revenue on persons, not property. Our Navy and Army set them the lesson of violence, and, to complete their schooling, at this very moment we are robbing another people of cities and lands, stealing, burning, and murdering, for lust of power and gold. Every body knows that the political action of a nation is the mightiest educational influence in that nation. But such is the doctrine the State preaches to them—a constant lesson of fraud, theft, violence and crime. The literature of the nation mocks at the Poor—laughing in the popular journals at the poor man's inevitable crime. Our trade deals with the poor as tools, not men. What wonder they feel wronged? Your city missionary may dawdle the matter as he will; tell them it is God's will they should be dirty and ignorant, hungry, cold and naked. Now and then a poor woman starving with cold and hunger may think it true. But the Poor know better; ignorant as they are, they know better. Great Nature speaks when you and I are still. They feel neglected, wronged and oppressed. What hinders them from following the example set by the nation, by society, by the strong? Their inertness, their cowardice—and, what does not always restrain abler men, their fear of God! With cultivated men, the intellect is often developed at the expenso of conscience and religion—with the poor this is seldom the case.

The misfortunes of the poor do not end here. To make their degradation total, their name infamous, we have shut them out of our churches. Once in our Puritan meeting-houses, there were 'body seats' for the Poor; for a long time free galleries, where men sat and we were not ashamed. Now it is not so. A Christian society about to build a church, and having $50,000 does not spend $40,000 for that, making it a church for all, and keep $10,000 as a fund for the poor. No, it borrows $30,000 more, and then shuts the Poor out of its bankrupt aisles. A high Tower, or a fine-toned Bell—yes Marble and Mahogany are tho't better than the presence of these little ones whom God will not to perish. I have heard ministers boast of the great men, and famous, who sat under their preaching; never one who boasted that the Poor came into his church, and were fed body and soul! You go to our churches—the poor are not in them. They are idling and lounging away their day of rest, like the horse and the ox. Alas me, that the apostles, that the Christ himself could not worship in our churches, till he sold his garment and bought a pew! Many of our houses of public worship, would be well named,

CHURCHES FOR THE AFFLUENT. Yes religion is more to the poor man than to the rich. What wonder then, if the Poor lose self-respect, when driven from the only churches where it is thought respectable to pray!

Now this class of men are perishing; yes, perishing in the nineteenth century; perishing in Boston, noble, charitable Boston; perishing contrary to God's will—soul and body; and perishing all the worse because they die slow, and corrupt by inches. As things now are, their mortality is hardly a curse. The Methodists are right in telling them this world is a vale of tears—it is wholly so to them; and Heaven a long June day, full of rest and plenty. To die is their only gain—their only hope. Think of that, you who murmur because money is 'tight,' because your investment gives only twenty per cent. a year, or because you are taxed for half of your property, meaning to move off next season; think of that you who complain because the Democrats are in power to-day, and you who tremble lest the Whigs shall be in '49; think of that, you who were never hungry, nor athirst, who are sick, because you have nothing else to do, and grumble against God, from mere emptiness of soul, and for amusement's sake; think of men not, if wise, daring to raise the human prayer for life—but for death, as the only gain, the only hope, and you will give over your complaint, your hands stopping your mouth!"

"Let thy Words be Few."—Ecc. 5: 2.

The wise man has given us, at least two reasons why our words should be few: 1. 'For God is in heaven and thou upon earth.' 2. 'In the multitude of words, there wanteth not sin; but he that refraineth his lips is wise.' This, my brethren, to me, is an important subject, and one upon which of late, I have reflected much. And who, I ask, can read and reflect upon the following language of the Son of God, and regard it as unimportant? His language as recorded in Mat. 12: 36, 37 is, 'But I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment; for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.' Let me cite your minds also to the counsel and instruction given us by James upon this subject. He says in chap. 1: 19, 'Wherefore my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath.' And he asserts (vs. 2, 6), 'If any man among you seem to be religious and bridled not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.' In the next verse he tells us what pure and undefiled religion is, viz: 'To visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world.' In chap. 3d, ver. 2d, he says, 'If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.' Please read the whole chapter. Oh! may God embue our minds richly with wisdom—that wisdom which 'is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy.'

In James 2: 12, he says, 'So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty.' Also in chap. 4, ver. 11, he exhorts us 'not to speak evil one of another.' Let us consider also the exhortation or counsel of the apostle Paul in Eph. 4: 2, 9—32: 'Let no corrupt communication proceed out of thy mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace to the hearers; and grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.' The same apostle in his epistle to the Philippians says, 'Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ,' &c.

Finally, my brethren in Christ, let us henceforth employ our tongues in praising God, giving thanks, praying, and according to the scriptures, exhorting one another, rather than in 'foolish talking and jesting which are not convenient.' Oh! 'the great and terrible day of the Lord is near—it is near and hasteth greatly;' therefore, my brethren, let us 'be holy in all manner of conversation and godliness'—let us as 'strangers and pilgrims abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul—having your conversation honest among the Gentiles—that whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.' WESLEY BURNHAM.

The Death of Herod.

The Voice of Truth of Nov. 4th, contains an article from the Scientific American, wherein the writer says the death of Herod, 'according to Josephus, was thirty years after the battle of Actium. The same thing is advanced by Bro. Hale, in his Harmony of Prophetic Chronology, pages 57, 58. He says, 'the eclipse which determines the date of the battle of Actium, enables us also to determine the latest possible date for the death of Herod. Josephus tells us that Herod reigned 37 years from the time he was made king at Rome, and that the battle of Actium took place in the 'seventh year of his reign.' Supposing half of his seventh year to have passed at the time of the battle, which is the most that can be supposed as it was after a most dangerous winter's voyage, with the hazard of his life, and loss of his baggage—he arrived early in the spring at Rome, and tarried there only seven days at the time he was made king, there would remain thirty and a half years of the thirty-seven, after the battle of Actium. That took place Sept. 2d, B. C. 31. Thirty years beginning at that date would extend to Sept. 2d, B. C. 1. The remaining half year would extend to March of the next year, A. D. 1. The eclipse that marked the death of Herod could not therefore be earlier or later than B. C. 1.'

From the above it appears that Bro. Hale would have us believe that the seventh year of Herod's reign is to be reckoned from the time he received the kingdom at Rome, and not the time of the taking of Jerusalem by Herod, and the death of Antigonus. And this too he would have us believe on the authority of Josephus. Having in vain looked for the evidence to support Bro. Hale's opinion, I deem it essential to call the attention of the readers of the Voice of Truth to the matter, since it is upon this point the question of the commencement of our Era turns.

Josephus having given the history and marked the death of Herod with so much clearness, it would seem that no mistake need be made in reference to the matter; and it would have been much better had Bro. Hale given without any assumption of his own, the historical facts according to Josephus, which render any mistake impossible. Josephus says, Ant., Book 14, chap. 14: 5, 'That Herod obtained the kingdom at Rome on the 184th Olympiad. Ant., Book 15, chap. 5, the same author informs us that the battle of Actium fell in with the 187th Olympiad. Again, Ant., Book 14, chap. 16: 4, we are told that 'the taking of Jerusalem by Herod, and the death of Antigonus was on the 185th Olympiad.'

How Bro. Hale can make the seventh year after Herod was made king at Rome, fall in with the battle of Actium upon this evidence, I am unable to discover; and indeed it would require a new and improved system of arithmetic, entirely differing from the one now in use to accomplish it. There are two Olympiads complete, 185th and the 186th, comprising eight years independent of the other two, the 184th and the 187th, upon which the two events happened, viz: Herod declared king by the Roman Senate some where in the 184th Olympiad, and the battle of Actium occurred some where in the 187th Olympiad. From this it is evident that when Josephus says the battle of Actium took place in the seventh year of Herod's reign, he does not reckon from the decree of Roman Senate but from the taking of Jerusalem and the death of Antigonus. Again, that he did so reckon from the death of Antigonus is evidenced by his own words—Ant., Book 17, chap. 8. 1, wherein he says Herod 'died the fifth day after he had caused Antipata to be slain, having reigned since he procured Antigonus to be slain 34 years, but since he had been declared king by the Romans 37 years. Accordingly the battle of Actium took place in the 10th year after he was made king at Rome, and the 7th year after the taking of Jerusalem and the death of Antigonus, and leaves 27 years after the battle of Actium, which is ascertained to have been B. C. 31, Sep. 2, and reaches before Christ 4, and marks the eclipse of that year as the one referred to by Josephus—occurring shortly before Herod's death. It also establishes the opinion of Ferguson and others that our Saviour was born 4 years before the vulgar era. C. F. STEVENS.

Duty to the Poor.

In view of all that Jesus has done for us—his sufferings upon the cross, his bloody sweat, his dying groans, his poverty; who though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich—in view of his great love to us, how ought we to love one another—not in word and in tongue, but in deed and in truth. If we see a brother or a sister have need, and say to them, Be ye clothed and fed, and do not administer to their wants, of what use to them is our faith? O, my brethren and sisters, let us launch out upon the word of God; he says Prov. 19: 17, 'He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that that he giveth him will he pay him again.' Do you believe it? are you willing to trust the Lord when you have his note for it? I certainly think that many of our dear brethren have been too slow to lend their money to the Lord. While some of the dear servants of Christ have left all and gone forth to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom, pressed down with the wants of a family, looking to Him for support—I say while they have labored with all their powers of body and mind to preach the good news of the kingdom, and to throw light upon the Scriptures, how little many times has been their compensation from their brethren! Not that they will lose their reward! no, no—the Lord will reward them; but have not we who hear something to do? I speak not of all—some perhaps have done all that they could—but there are others that might do more. The Lord has made us stewards and all we have belongs to him—but yet he has been pleased to say that he will pay us again, if we give to the poor. Let us then, brethren and sisters, be as self-denying as we can, so that we may be enabled to put all we can into the Lord's saving bank. SARAH THAYER.

QUESTIONS.—When was Christ called the Son of man? was it at his birth? If so, what was the sign of the Son of man? A star came and stood over where the young child was,—'We have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him.' If a star was the sign of the Son of man when he was born, will something else be the sign when he comes again? Who will answer? H. TANNER.

The Church at the First and Second Advents.

That the Jews, their land, their city, Temple, rites and ceremonies, and all that pertained to them as the church of God, were typical of something under the Gospel dispensation, and in the New Earth, all will admit who properly understand the nature and design of the Old and New dispensations.—What the rebellious Jews did, and what consequently befel them, in the wilderness, Paul tells us, 1 Cor. 10 11, that 'all these things happened unto them for ensamples, [types, marg.] and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come.' Our object in this communication is, to show in some few instances, wherein the Jewish church at and soon after the first advent, was typical of, or sustained a very striking resemblance to the Gentile church, near and at the time of the second advent of Christ. And, if on examination it shall be found that such resemblance does really exist, then the inspired counsel given to the saints under the type will be strictly applicable to those living in the days of the anti-type: or, the instruction which seems specially adapted to the circumstances of the early or first Christians will strictly be applicable to those living in these last days. It will also furnish additional evidence that the end of all things is at the door. With these preliminary remarks, we will proceed to enquire wherein the Jewish church, at the first advent, was typical of or resembled the Gentile church at the second advent of Christ. And

1. The Jewish church at the first advent was popular. Its Priests, Scribes, and doctors of the law, held an uncontrolled influence over the common people. Notwithstanding these proud and oppressive leaders were profoundly ignorant of the prophecies and their own favorite law, yet they loved to be greeted in the markets with the honorary titles of Doctor, Rabbi, or Master, and to stand in the most public streets saying their long prayers to be seen of men. In short, the offence of the cross had then ceased: it was an honor to belong to the church. The same may justly be said of the Gentile church in these last days. The advent message found her exalted with pride, rich in wealth, strong in numbers; holding an influence which no opposing power could resist. It was honorable to be a member of her body: the offence of the cross had ceased, and does not now exist among the sects. The great men of the world are her most prominent members. The most dignified, honored station to which man can now be raised is that of a minister, a Rev. D. D. of the church. Such men, though grossly ignorant of the word of the Lord, boast of their knowledge in the sciences, sacred and profane, hold an uncontrolled influence over the faith and acts of the great mass, and love to be called and to call each other by the empty names and vain titles with which this degenerate age abounds.

2. At the first advent the Jewish church possessed great wealth. Long uninterrupted national peace over the world, had left man undisturbed in his eager pursuit after riches. Many of the Jews had amassed large fortunes; and a love of worldly possessions was one of the chief ruling passions of that age. It had become so predominant in the church, when Christ told a certain rich young man to sell all he had and give to the poor, the young man went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions: and when the Lord said that a rich man should hardly enter the kingdom of heaven, there were so many rich ones in the church, that the apostles, filled with astonishment, cried out, Who then can be saved? These things are strictly true of the Gentile church of these last days. The world has long been at peace: the winds of bloody strife have been held, and very many of the ministry and members of the church have improved this time of peace to heap together for themselves treasures against the last days. They have been successful in their schemes of speculation—have become rich in this world, and so engrossed with the cares of this life as wholly to disqualify them for the reception of the glorious truths relative to the appearing of Christ and his kingdom. They love this world; consequently the love of the Father and of the appearing of Christ, are not in them. In a word, according to numerous predictions relative to the last times, it is a worldly age, as it was in the days of Noah, and Lot, a time of eating and drinking, and of the love of pleasure more than of God. As a general remark, the church and world in these things are alike.

3. At the first advent the Jewish church made high professions of benevolence. But chiefly what they did in this way was done to be seen of men. They sounded a trumpet before bestowing their scanty gifts on the poor: and the Savior instead of approving their hypocritical benevolence, charges them with robbing widow's houses, the very persons perhaps who were objects of charity. No one will understandingly deny that there is a complete counterpart to these things in the Gentile church of this day. She has trumpeted from pole to pole her contributions, gifts and bequests for charitable institutions, benevolent objects and the conversion of the heathen; when at the same time her own poor at home have been suffering for bread, and perishing in their ignorance; the down-trodden slave has been neglected, only as his Christian (!) master for worldly interest has tightened his fetters, stinted his scanty allowance, restricted his privileges, and more severely applied the lash to his already deeply scarred and sun-burnt back—and the systems of getting wealth in all their deceptive and oppressive bearings practiced by the world, are now followed with covetous zeal by the great mass of the Gentile church of these last days.

4. At the first advent the Jewish church was tenacious for forms and ceremonies of her law.—She paid tithes of mint, and anise, and cummin, but omitted the weightier matters of the law: had the form but not the power. Such, Paul predicted would be a prominent trait of the Gentile church in the last days: it was to have the form of godliness, while destitute of the power. This is strictly true of the church now. She is swallowed up in useless forms and vain show, but is powerless in true godliness. The type and anti-type perfectly agree.

5. At the first advent the Jewish church was divided into different sects. So it is now with the Gentile church: she no more resembles the one body or church of Christ, than the body of a man torn into a thousand fragments resembles a living, healthful and perfect man.

6. The Jewish church at the first advent possessed great worldly wisdom. She could, as well as the Gentile world, boast of her profound knowledge of the sciences taught in those times. These things (the truths of the first advent) were hid from the wise and prudent, but revealed unto babes, to publicans and ignorant fishermen: hence, to the learned Jew, Christ became a stumbling block, and to the scientific Greek, foolishness. Yet with all their worldly wisdom, the very Doctors of the Law were called blind guides. They were ignorant of the prophecies, their law, and could not discern the signs of their own times. Paul predicted that one prominent characteristic of the Gentile church of the last days would be, 'ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.' And how strictly is his prediction fulfilled in this our day.—The church could never boast of such perfection in the sciences as at this time; and never has she considered herself blessed with more and sounder expositors of the Bible than now. Indeed it is emphatically an age of science, yet it is of that kind which throws the thick veil of ignorance over the minds of teachers and people, relative to a correct understanding of nearly every fundamental doctrine of the Bible, and especially of the prophecies. That these things are painfully true of the church now no one will understandingly deny.

7. The Jewish church at first generally received the glad tidings of the first advent. Nearly the entire community so believed it as to submit to John's baptism; but when the scorching truths of the Savior began to expose their love of the world, hypocrisy and deep corruption, they rejected his message, and pursued him in their malice and revenge until they imbrued their hands in his innocent blood. How was the proclamation of the second advent received by the Gentile church of these last days? All well know that at first it met with a general favorable reception, but when the love of the world, wide departure from the simplicity of the gospel, and the deep and acknowledged corruption of the churches, were faithfully proclaimed, and many of her best members left her polluted assemblies, that then she closed her eyes, ears, heart and doors against this truth, and to this day as a body will hear no more on this glorious matter. They have rejected the counsel of God against themselves. In short, the similarity in the type and anti-type is most striking.

Christian Alliance.

The more we read, hear and reflect about the doings of this body, the more are we confirmed, that the fundamental principles on which it exists, if indeed it now has a being, are anti-scriptural and corrupt.—Elder P. Church, a member of the Alliance, a few evenings since, delivered a discourse in this city, chiefly in defence of the doings of the Alliance. We went to hear him expecting as a matter of course to hear the best evidences set forth that could be presented in favor of the acts and future prospects of that body. We suppose the speaker did the best he could for his cause: he spake with ability and considerable interest to his hearers, yet we think many, or some were led to look upon the Alliance less favorably than before hearing the discourse.

What little we have to say about the discourse must be said on those parts of it which had a direct bearing on the Alliance: for it is its doings and not Elder Church, which calls forth these remarks.—One prominent object of the discourse was, to show that the Alliance would ultimately accomplish the union for which it professedly was called together. The evidences in the case were—

1. The great numbers of the different denominations represented in the Alliance: 20 or 25 in all, it was stated, were represented. And one of that number (a minister from Ireland we think) was deposited on account of deciding to become a member of the Alliance. This was going without the camp to suffer for Christ, and in the estimation of the speaker seemed to stamp the whole body with the self-sacrificing character of this devoted man!—Query. Was going to the metropolis of the world to sit in one of the most honored ecclesiastical bodies ever assembled suffering without the gate or camp? We think not. From all accounts, instead of a time of suffering, it was more a time of honorary greeting, of sumptuous living in splendid palaces and at full tables, than of disgrace and suffering.—And besides, the number of sects represented is no evidence that the cause of the Alliance is either a good one or will ultimately triumph; for truth has always been found with the few, or minority, the flock of Christ has always been small.

2. The character of the delegates was considered as another evidence that the cause of the Alliance would finally triumph. Here the speaker gave a long list of honorary titles (common to these corrupt times) borne by many of the members of the Alliance. On this principle there is more evidence that Catholicism will triumph than the cause of the Alliance: for the former can boast of more talent, and higher and more blasphemous titles than the latter. But as precious as the character of the delegates was, they could and did, to a man, ('with the exception of one or two Second Adventists,) sacrifice character, and the truth at the bloody shrine of Slavery. And such was the character of the delegation that a basis of character could not be had!! This, Elder Church acknowledged and regretted, under his 5th specification.—The beer and wine cups and aristocracy of the English, and the slave fetters, whips, and thumb screws of the American ministry, were in the way of making a basis of character! yet with Elder C. the character of the delegates was an assurance that the cause of the Alliance would prevail! Oh what blindness!

3. A spirit or feeling of prayer being stirred up in all denominations to 'pray and labor for union,' was urged as another evidence that the cause of the Alliance would prove successful. Facts show that the speaker was greatly mistaken here: for with the exception of the time during the session of the Alliance there has been no more praying among the sects for union than at any other time; and as for their laboring for this object the reverse is the fact: the sects were never more zealous in strengthening and holding on to their party distinctions than now. It is true that Elder Church (Baptist) on his return from London entered a Presbyterian pulpit to speak on the Alliance, and that Prof. Dewey (Presbyterian) in presence of the audience gave Elder C. the hand of fellowship, and welcomed his return, &c. But will they eat the supper of their Lord together?—We presume not. Doubtless their boasted union would disappear at the sight of the table of the Lord. If we misjudge here, when Elder Church and Prof. Dewey, by practical demonstration, convince us of our mistake, we will most cheerfully correct it.

4. The delegates, during the session of the Alliance, endeavoring to avoid all litigation, &c., was another evidence in favor of its cause. Supposing this was the case, many other reasons might have induced them to do thus. It is not an infallible evidence that men are saints, prophets or apostles, or engaged in a good cause, because they do not come to blows, or harsh or angry words during their discussions. But if we are rightly informed by different accounts, and according to Elder Church's own admission, there was some very squally and boisterous times during the meeting, caused by warm, if not angry litigations.

5. So many (20 or 25) denominations uniting on a basis, was considered good evidence with Elder Church of the success of the cause of the Alliance. The 'basis' was not a creed, was not a test of Christian character, and was not a number of good things; but what it was or is, was rather difficult to define: it was a basis of the union of the Alliance, and that was the best definition the speaker could give of it. To show its character, the ordinances, which are among its specifications, were referred to. The speaker in effect said that the basis required faith in baptism, but it did not define what baptism was; but left each member to give his own definition to this ordinance; and so with every thing named in the basis. It defines nothing, but leaves each 'evangelical sect' to put its own construction upon the doctrines named in the basis. It does not call upon them to give up the least doctrine, spirit or practice which separates them from each other and constitutes them independent sects. Hence the union which that basis proposes is nominal, just no union at all; consequently an agreement of 20 or 25 sects in such a basis is no agreement for union, but one to confirm their already unholy divisions.

Another object of Elder Church's discourse was to show some of the obstacles in the way of the speedy triumph of the principles of union adopted by the Alliance.

1. A false or erroneous philosophy was one serious obstacle. The doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked was becoming very prevalent in the evangelical churches in England, the continent of Europe, and especially in Germany; and seriously threatened to defeat the objects of the Alliance: for one of the items of the basis is, an avowal of faith in the unscriptural and heathen doctrine of the ceaseless duration of the existence and misery of the finally impenitent.

2. A want of faith in the Sabbath, as a day more holy than any other day, was another serious obstacle in the way of the Alliance.

3. A difference in social life was another serious difficulty in the way of the success of the Alliance. While the American church is connected with slavery, the English church has its aristocracy, and is tenacious for a union of church and state. How to unite these conflicting elements, was a difficulty yet to be solved. The lax principles of the indefinable basis were not sufficiently loose or elastic to embrace in the bonds of one brotherhood these widely separated sectarian elements. Yet it was hoped that the difficulty, and all others however great, would be overcome by the power of faith, and the glorious objects of the Alliance yet be attained.

While on this point the speaker in substance said, that the American delegation admitted that slavery was a sin, yet they would not suffer it to be rebuked by the Alliance, while the aristocracy of the English delegation was suffered to pass unnoticed. We were 'determined,' said Mr Church, 'to vindicate our own country.' This tells the story—reveals the secret of the whole dark affair. These ministers of the benevolent Jesus, the cream of all the 'evangelical churches,' so called by themselves, were actuated by national selfish principles instead of being guided by the pure and disinterested principles of the gospel of Christ.

The faithful and worthy part occupied by Bro. Himes in the Alliance, on the subject of slavery, could not be suffered to pass unnoticed by Elder C. He admitted slavery was an evil, a sin, yet it was no place to touch it in the Alliance! All the American delegation, (about 80) to a man, were united on this point, 'with but one or two exceptions, and they were Adventists, who knew how to touch the English sympathies; but I will not judge them harshly,' said Mr C. This allusion to the sympathies of the English was very ungenerous: it was indirectly questioning the sincerity or honesty of our brethren,—and his trying to cover over the wound he designed to make by this thrust, by saying he would 'not judge them harshly,' leaves his own honesty in the same light in which he evidently designed to present that of the 'one or two' hated Adventists, who so troubled and held in check the wicked course of the Alliance.

Strange Inconsistency.

Taking all things into account, some strange things took place in this city, Sabbath evening, Nov. 29th. In the First Presbyterian Church a great crowd assembled to hear Elder P. Church, a delegate to the late World's Convention, defend the doings of that body; and in St Paul's Church the 'Greys' and 'Cadets,' armed and equipped as for the Battle-field, with colors flying, and a band of music playing, assembled with another dense crowd, to hear (Rev. Dr. Van Ingen) deliver a 'military sermon!' which for some years has been annually preached to the military of this city.

Now, some of the inconsistencies of the case are these—All the sects believe in a temporal millennium, when wars will end, and the sword and spear be converted into implements of husbandry. The object of the Christian Alliance, and of Elder Church's meeting in this city, was to aid in accomplishing this work: and what has already been done, is thought to be the sure beginning at least of that long-looked-for day. While a part of these millenists were rejoicing in the speedy triumph of their cause, in one house, in another, in the same city, on the same sacred day and hour, another part, of the same faith, were not only suffering their holy Sabbath, and their holy house to be profaned by the performance of the military, but were rejoicing in those acts, and actually devoting their Sabbath, their house, their praise, prayers, sermon and benediction, not only to cheer on in duty the soldiers present, but to give the sanction of the church to the murderous system of war, which the supposed peaceful temporal millennium contemplates soon to annihilate!

Certainly, these are strange inconsistencies, unless the church thinks that the sword of steel and blood is to be equally efficient with the sword of the spirit and love, in the work to be accomplished: for she pays equal deference to both!

Another strange inconsistency we noticed on the same evening was—the loss of 20 or 30 lives on the steamer Atlantic, a few days since, was announced by Prof. Dewey, with the appearance of heartfelt sorrow by him, and doubtless many of the congregation. But hundreds may be murdered and murder each other on the field of bloody strife, and at the same time hundreds more may be torn and mangled in the most horrible manner, and the church are dumb on the heart rending affair! She has no sighs to heave, no tears to shed in a case of such cold-blooded butchery! and no rebuke to give to that system, and those rulers and leaders which bring such things to pass. And how can she do these things! She cannot consistently: for she gives her whole influence to uphold them. It is true that Elder Church in his discourse, speaking prospectively of our country, necessarily had his eye turned to the acquisition of Mexico to our territory, and as a matter of course he had to look in the face the bloody scenes recently acted there. And, as it seemed, to pass the matter off as easily as possible, he said he regretted (or words to this effect) to hear the wail which came from that quarter, in consequence of the numbers slain in recent battles there; yet the whole affair was a sure indication of the future increase of power and greatness of our own already powerful nation! We are aware that his discourse did not necessarily lead him to speak of the hundreds that have been slain in the unjust Mexican war. Neither did the circumstances of the occasion necessarily call upon Prof. Dewey to speak of the loss of life in the wreck of the Atlantic, but he did it doubtless because he thought the nature of the painful case demanded it. And had the heart, the soul, the Christian philanthropy of Elder Church been on the side of truth and justice, love and mercy, as is the case with every true minister of the lovely Jesus, relative to the Mexican or any other bloody war, he could not have even named the subject without showing his decided disapprobation and utter abhorrence of such things. Oh my God! what strange times have fallen upon us! If the church is not reformed and perfected in corruption, then we know not how she can be in such a state. And O that every child of God might fully understand her true character, and free themselves, and keep free, from her high-handed sins, lest they share in the bitter and woful portion of her cup.

Letter from Bro. J. V. Himes.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Since my return, I have averaged one address a day to good congregations, in South Reading, Haverhill and Worcester, where I now am. I find a very cordial reception among the advent people, and a very healthy and happy state of things. I have rarely witnessed such humility, prayerfulness and zeal as is now manifest among them. The state of things is highly encouraging, and I trust our lamps will be kept burning brightly, until he who is our life shall appear.

But there is another encouraging aspect in our present state: there is deep interest manifest for the salvation of others. The exclusive and selfish spirit that once affected some, has given place to gospel philanthropy, that seeks with untiring zeal, the salvation of all within its reach. This is the right state of feeling, as well as action. We have need of this spirit and action for our own good, as well as the salvation of others.

I intend visiting the West as soon as practicable. I have but six months to spend in this country, before leaving again for Europe; and you in Western New York shall have a part of my labors. I will give you due notice. Bro. Brown will accompany me if possible. His labors in England were of great service to the cause—and he is now doing much to advance it in this vicinity. The conference at Haverhill and in this place, just closed, are said to be among the best we have ever had,—may we be thankful to God.

Yours as ever,

J. V. HIMES.

Worcester, Nov. 30, 1846.

Letter from Bro. B. Morley.

Bro. Marsh:—Perhaps some of your readers are beginning to inquire, 'Where is Bro. M.?' I would reply, I have been enduring some of those 'light afflictions,' which 'work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.' 'While [this is the condition] we look not at the things which are seen,' 'but at the things which are unseen and eternal.' I am persuaded that no one ever bore afflictions, yielding at the same time to the condition here expressed, without being made richer by them,—as though God had suspended a pair of 'balances,' with one end over 'the present world' and 'the other over the world to come,' and then, while our tribulations and afflictions are multiplying and filling up here, and we enduring them with the eye of faith steadily fixed on eternal things, he is balancing the burden with 'a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory' in the world to come. Who would not bear afflictions patiently? 'Those who do not stand in their own light—they operate against their own best interest. Now since the Lord has said, 'As many as I love I rebuke and chasten,' and 'what son is he whom the father chasteneth not,' and 'If ye endure chastisement God dealeth with you as with sons'—I feel humbly and thankfully to acknowledge myself on the way to the kingdom of God—an heir to that inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away.

Next to this which I consider of the first importance, I wish to confess my unwavering faith in the Advent doctrine, viz: that Jesus Christ will soon make his personal appearing in the clouds of heaven, at which time all then living, together with all those who 'sleep in Jesus' will stand before his judgment seat, that they may receive according to the things done in the body, whether good or bad. To this general confession I wish to add a few specifications:

1. That I believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God—that he never possessed and never claimed a higher character; (see John 10: 36.) but that in his real character he stands in the grade of being next to the Most High. Since the Word was made flesh, I believe he never has and never will make a spiritual Advent. The memorable and glorious Advent of the Holy Spirit on the day of pentecost, was in the name of Jesus Christ, but not in his nature, person or character. As a guide, comforter, reprove, &c. he has taken his place until the return of 'this same Jesus.'

2. I believe that when man lieth down in death he knows nothing until his resurrection.

3. That when the wicked shall have received their punishment, according to the deeds done in the body, they will then be as though they had not been.

So I understand the Bible, and wish to profess and live out this faith before all men. 'Truth and not policy'—the motto of a dear departed brother, I wish henceforth to make my own. This same brother once remarked to me that there were three questions which he could never answer satisfactorily to himself until he embraced the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked. I will here insert them for the serious consideration of those who may read this article:

1. If God only hath immortality, does man possess it?

2. If life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel, can those who reject the gospel obtain them?

3. If immortality must be sought for by patient continuance in well doing, can those who do not thus seek for it obtain it?

I feel no disposition to judge others by my views of truth, and shall expect the same from those who differ from me, if they are Christians. To the Bible command, 'Buy the truth and sell it not,' I yield a hearty Amen! But O, may I not hold it in unrighteousness. I desire to advocate the truth with the 'meekness of wisdom,' and I should be much grieved if I should ever know that this humble expression of faith had emboldened any one to cavil or brow-beat on these solemn subjects.

BUTLER MORLEY.

Yorkshire, N. Y., Nov. 18, 1846.

Letter from Bro. T. Smith.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I am still 'expecting and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God, in which the heavens being set on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements burning shall be melted;' and believing this event 'is nigh, even at the door,' I am laboring to warn every man and teach every man in all wisdom, that they may be presented in the day of the Lord's coming, perfect in Christ Jesus.

O how valuable, exceedingly valuable are these precious moments! Time rapidly flying! eternity approaching! probation closing! the angel of Revelation about to place his right foot upon the sea, and the left foot upon the earth, and lift up his hand to heaven, and swear by him that liveth forever and ever, who created heaven and the things that therein are, that there should be time no longer! and how anxiously should every professed disciple inquire, 'What must I do to be saved?' and this inquiry should not only refer to our own personal salvation, but to the salvation of every man and woman on the earth, whom God commands us to love as we love ourselves. If, then, the first and great command be written on our hearts, 'Love God with all your heart, soul, mind and strength,' the effect will not only be love to our neighbors, and a hearty obedience to God's commands, but a deep solicitude for the happiness, present and eternal, of all those who with us are hastening to the judgment seat of Christ. How can any one hope, on the great day of separation, to be found on the right hand of the coming King in his glory, who now is not consecrating time, talents, influence, property, &c., to God and his blessed yet suffering cause? He cannot justly do it? The world and almost all the professors of religion, are most certainly at 'ease in Zion,' and unless awakened to a sense of their situation, must perish eternally. On whom then does the duty devolve to sound the alarm to awaken them, but on such as see the Saviour coming? and

'Shall we, whose souls are lighted by wisdom from on high, Shall we to men be lighted, the word of life deny?'

No, no. If indeed we believe we are treading on the last sand of time, God's ministering disciples will be ready to go every where, preaching the word; and those of the same faith and family of God, who have this world's goods will be ready thus to preach the word, to the extent of their ability, without thinking of 'laying up treasures on the earth' to be devoured by the fires of the great day of the Lord, just about to burst upon our world. Methinks I hear the great Captain of our salvation, saying, 'The Father expects every man to do his duty.'

In examination of Matt. 25: 31 to the end of the chapter, we may learn that those only who have 'fed the stranger, clothed the naked, visited the sick and entertained strangers, to the amount of their ability, will be found on the right hand, and hear the King say, 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom.' Well may we reiterate the words of our Saviour, Luke, 12: 15—'Take heed, beware of covetousness.' Men who can preach the word are working with their hands, while those who profess to believe in the speedy coming of the Saviour have abundant means to help these into the vineyard of the Lord, to pluck souls as brands from the burning! How will they account for their covetousness in the great day of the Lord? Lord help them to answer now.

Yours waiting for the adoption,

THOMAS SMITH.

Letter from Bro. E. Miller, Jr.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I have recently returned to my parents from northern Indiana, where I have spent the past season; laboring in company with Bro. P. B. Hoyt to warn men of the speedy coming judgment. We attended two conferences, one at Jackson, Mich., the other at Stillwell, Ind. They were both meetings of interests, and I trust of much profit. It was truly a commendable zeal that brought the brethren and sisters together, from such distances as many of them came—and the meetings were indeed seasons of refreshing. But from these you have heard. We hope soon to renew the acquaintance there formed, in the kingdom of God. In some of the north-eastern counties of Indiana, viz: Steuben, Lagrange, De Kalb and Nobles there had been no preaching on the subject of the advent, except two brethren who passed through in '42 or '43, speaking only once or twice in a place. We found doors open, and a people ready to hear in many places, enough to occupy all of our time—and more than we could attend to. It is a field where good may yet be done.

The effect of presenting the evidences of our faith in this community was to produce, without the excitement of '43, a deep, genuine conviction of the truth of the doctrine, and the final results were, a few would be led to receive and confess the truth, while the most would soon become indifferent to the subject—some by saying 'If I am only prepared, that's enough,'—others by saying 'I'm not capable of understanding it.' Not all the people however, could be induced to hear; many had heard and rejected in '43 while living in Ohio and other places east—and others prejudiced by reports, had decided without hearing and could not be reached.

Thus while we have labored with interest and have rejoiced to know that some were benefited by the truth, the conviction has been forced upon us that the most of men will be ignorant of the coming of Christ, let all be done that can be; and with this conviction the importance of doing all that can be done—of laboring with zeal the short time we now have for labor. Strange that any should reason that our work is done, because our labors in presenting the truth produce but little effect. The redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth forever—Ps. 49: 8. If it requires double the exertion now to bring one to submit himself to God, let us make that double exertion if possible.

The brethren generally in the section where we travelled, are in a good state, having a firm, intelligent faith founded upon the word of the Lord. A few, through the influence of the 'shut door' theory, were shut up from labor for the public for some months but all except six or eight that we visited had become free from that influence and were consistently laboring in the cause of God.

On my return I spent some days with the brethren at Bloomingville and at Norwalk—found them steadfast, with an increasing interest on the subject of the time of Christ's coming. Their minds are directed with interest to the present fall as the time—some saying, I believe he will come this year—others while they acknowledge the preponderance of evidence is toward this year, yet think there is not sufficient positiveness in the testimony to justify faith. May the Lord give us all wisdom and guide us into the truth, and help us to watch and pray always. This is truly a time when we should continually watch for the coming of our King—but by no means a time when we should neglect the evidences which point to the definite time. The prophetic periods were given for our profit—let us learn what is revealed by them, about when our Lord will come. Yours waiting for redemption,

E. MILLER, JR.

Letter from Bro. R. V. Lyon.

Bro. Marsh:—I wish to say a few words through your valuable paper, to the children scattered abroad, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

Dear Brethren:—It is as clear to my own mind as that 2 and 2 make 4, that this blessed Jesus is very soon to come in all his glory and loveliness, to raise the righteous dead and change the righteous living, and then redeem the earth from under the curse, by bringing it back to its Eden state. The everlasting kingdom of God will then be set up under the whole heaven—the throne of David restored and given to Christ, and he reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Then shall the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven be given to the saints of the Most High, and they shall possess it forever, even forever and ever. Then shall the great city, the holy Jerusalem, come down out of heaven upon the earth, and form the capitol of the kingdom, and in it the marriage supper of the Lamb will be celebrated. The river of life will proceed out of the throne of God and of the Lamb, and on either side of it will stand the tree of life, yielding her fruit every month. Then violence will no more be heard in the land, wasting nor destruction within its borders. The glory of God will then fill the whole earth, as the waters now cover the sea. The redeemed will have palms of victory in their hands as they range the eternal hill of Zion, and strike the high note of glory to God and the Lamb forever and ever. And what now animates our hopes is—

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We'll have no less days to sing God's praise,
Than when we first began."

Children, do you realize that the Christian's hope is very soon to be consummated? that the evidences are incontrovertible that time cannot continue beyond the present or coming year! Are you ready for the grand crisis which is right upon you? Is your lamp trimmed and burning? Are you living righteously, soberly and godly in this evil world? are you like the ancient worthies, pilgrims and strangers on the earth—looking for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God? Are you giving the note of warning to all around you, that within a few days, or months at the longest, man's destiny will be fixed either for weal or woe? Answer to your God.

O children be watchful—become thoroughly acquainted with your Bibles—visit your closets often—let your conversation be in heaven, from whence you look for the blessed Saviour, who will change your vile bodies, that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Again I say be faithful—see to it that the blood of souls is not required at your hand. Lay hold by faith on the throne of the Eternal, until you shall come into possession of immortality and everlasting life, and wave the palm of victory as you range the hill of Zion, where death will be no more forever. Amen and amen.

Your brother in the faith that Jesus will soon come.

R. V. LYON.

Hampton, Ct., Nov. 5, 1846.

P. S. A word in relation to the cause in this region. I have never known the children to stand better than they now do. I have been trying to preach the word almost daily, and sometimes three discourses a day, ever since the middle of August last—have seen a large number of backsliders reclaimed—some souls hopefully converted to God—have baptised a number, and, like the eunuch, they are going on their way rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, that is soon to be revealed at the revelation of Jesus Christ. There are many calls that I cannot attend to. O Lord, continue to thrust in the laborers into the field till angels shall be sent to shout the harvest home.

Among all my ramblings I happened to ramble into a Methodist camp-meeting, on the last day of its session—and in the evening, after the close of the services at the stand, some advent brethren who owned a right in one of the tents, invited me to preach, and I readily accepted, and gave them three sermons—one on the Christian's hope, one on the kingdom, and that it was very soon to be set up, and one from this text—Dan. 10: 19. 1st. I noticed what constituted Daniel the beloved of the Lord. 2d. The advantage of such a character. Under the first head I endeavored to show that Daniel was what the nominal church and the world would call a 'Millerite.' Many were enabled to hear the truth, and it is my prayer that it may find a lodgment in their hearts. I will assure you that I take a deep interest in the 'Voice'—adieu.

Under date of Albany, Nov. 8th, Bro. T. M. Preble writes:—'I baptised five in this city a few weeks since, and I expect to baptise one or more in Troy to-morrow.

Bro. M. D. Moore, Albany, Nov. 5th, writes:—'There are many in Albany whose hearts beat with a quick pulsation of joy, in view of the increasing rays of light that the present times afford for the encouragement of all that are expecting a crown when the chief Shepherd shall appear. I say the present times, because they are just what our blessed Lord said they should be at the time of his coming. And indeed so plain are the tokens of the coming storm that is fast gathering to desolate this world, that its rich men and merchants, its chief captains and mighty men, together with a hireling priesthood, are perplexing themselves to find some satisfactory cause for those dark omens that seem to thicken at every point of the compass in the moral, political and commercial heavens—but all in vain. They have been content to seek for the riches, the honors and wisdom of this world, while God's messengers have been flying through the midst of heaven, crying 'fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, the sea and the fountains of waters.' But many we fear have rejected his message, and he we fear has rejected them. But by those that have chosen to suffer affliction with the little flock, these tokens are the harbingers of the approaching king, who will soon come forth in all his beauty, grandeur and glory, to take away the reproach from off his people—to break every yoke and chain of the oppressor—to destroy them that destroy the earth—to give reward to his servants the prophets, and crown all them that love his appearing. O glorious hope! we shall have a joyful day, when the King of kings comes. My prayer is that I may be in the exercise of faith to-day—that I may do the work he has given me to-day—that I may receive my daily bread, and so live by the day until Jesus comes.

Bro. Adrian is laboring with us at present—the Lord grant his labors may not be in vain in the Lord.

Bro. D. S. Pitcher, Ellicottville, Nov. 10th, writes:—'There is but a very small number of us in this town who are of like precious faith, waiting for our adoption, to wit: the redemption of our bodies. We have been deprived of many precious privileges that the brethren and sisters enjoy in other places; being poor as to the things of this world, we have not had an opportunity of attending any of the conferences, and of commemorating the dying love of our dear Saviour, which has been a great trial to me. If any of ministering brethren can make it convenient to come this way and give us a lecture, it would doubtless be refreshing to our drooping spirits; but if the good Lord orders otherwise, we must be still, knowing that He will take care of his own children, in all places and under all circumstances.

QUESTIONS.—Do not physiology and natural philosophy teach that the brain is the cause and instrument by means of which the mind performs its various functions? If therefore matter is the cause and agent, and mind the effect, how is it possible for the mind to have an operative existence without the aid of that organization which is the cause of the mind?

Are not the following paragraphs of Scripture, in unison with the sentiment that mind and matter are indissoluble?

"Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish."

"For the living know that they must die—but the dead know not anything: also their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished."

MISCELLANY.

An Auction Scene.

In the winter of 1840 and '41, having business in Western Virginia, where the peculiar institution flourishes in its mildest form (be it remembered at this time I was opposed to anti-slavery principles,) December 25th, I found myself in Martinsburg, the county seat of Berkley. About 10 o'clock of the aforesaid day, I observed a crowd congregated in the public square, in front of a suspicious looking building, which had very much the appearance of a jail, as it proved to be. On inquiry of my landlord concerning the cause of the meeting, he said it was 'a hiring'—in other words a negro sale—as I afterwards found a number were hired for life. I walked down to the market, and to obtain a better view, I mounted a large wagon in the street, directly opposite to the stand of the auctioneer, who had commenced his work. He was a large man, dressed in aristocratic style, with a profusion of ruffles, gold finger rings, watch seals, and last, and not least, a large whip, called by drivers 'loaded whip.' The hiring I understood to be of a number of slaves of a certain estate, who were hired out from year to year to the highest bidder, for the benefit of the heirs. These sales take place between Christmas and New Years, the holidays, quite a recreation for the slaves who are to change masters.

After a number had been disposed of this way, the crier announced that he would offer for sale six slaves. He then put up two, father and son. The old man was nearly sixty years of age, and a cripple; the son was about twenty-three, a perfect specimen of a man. There were present two Georgia soul-drivers, who bid eight hundred dollars for both. When the crier remarked it was a small bid for both, the Georgian replied, he would give eight hundred without the old man, as he was of no account. The young man gave the bidder a look that would have shamed the devil; the old man wept bitterly. This son was sold at the bid, and the father was sold for sixty dollars to an old farmer who had never kept a slave in his life. The father and son were separated. The next case was that of a girl, fifteen years of age. (These slaves had been hired out to different individuals the past year.) She was brought crying upon the stand. With an oath he bid her to stop her 'blubbering,' and then proceeded with the sale. After enumerating her qualities, he stated that the prospect was good for an increase of the property, saying which, the brutal wretch placed his whip beneath her apron, and raised it above her head, exhibiting to the enlightened multitude, the spectacle of a girl fifteen years old far advanced in pregnancy! She was sold for one hundred and fifty dollars.

The next case was that of a young white woman, sixteen years old, with a young child. I saw white woman, because the auctioneer said, she was only one-eighth black, and I have seen many of the fair girls of Ohio who could not boast of as fair complexion, or as good figure or features. She came upon the stand with her infant in her arms, in the deepest misery. A gentleman, who had taken his seat beside me, observing I was very interested, remarked he thought I was a stranger in that country. I answered that I was. 'These things look odd to you.' 'They do.' Said he, 'you see that man in the crowd,' pointing to one within a few paces of the stand—that is Dr. C. He hired that girl last year, and that child is his! The Georgian bid three hundred dollars; some one bid four: the Georgian bid four fifty; the girl cast a piercing glance at the crowd, her eyes rested on Dr. C., who instantly averted her face. She gazed one moment, then burst into a torrent of tears. She was knocked off to the Georgian. Thus the fiend saw his child and its mother sold into Southern bondage. My God! thought I, is it possible? I was cured of my pro-slavery principles.—Cincinnati Herald.

Winter—Remember the Poor.

BY GEO. MOORE PAYNE.

Come brother, sister, friend, come one and all, and take a walk with me, let us look round among our acquaintances, or the circle of our common walks.

Winter is fast approaching, it is just at our heels, the hoarse winds of November begin to sound; already the northern latter rain, the harbingers of ice and snow, is falling. Now let us see whose cup of bitterness is well nigh full, in view of 'winter setting in.' Stop, let us enter this untidy cottage, ah! it is the drunkard's cell; well here is work to do; we have no time to spare; that wife made worse than widow, and those little children must be fed, and clad, and sheltered; perhaps, by a little kindness, that fallen man may be recovered—perhaps, he may be brought to feel his worth and his responsibility; cannot we find him some employment? Now a little further on, see that emblem of want; let us speed our way; there lies a husband and father, a wife and mother, or a child on a bed of languishing. We'll inquire whether they have clothing and bedding, food and medicine for the comfort of the sick; let us not forget the wants of those in health, while they administer to the sick, we'll administer to them.

But onward, see yonder habitation! something whispers comfort has fled. 'The cause we know not, we'll search out: Here is a widow, here are fatherless children; have they warm clothes? have they good beds? have they shoes? Let us look down cellar! Is the meat barrel full or empty? Look for the potatoe bin, the garden sauce, the butter pot, the closet stores—now look up garret or into the store-room—is there meal in the barrel? Don't let us forget the wood-pile, neither forget to see whether the house is guarded against frost. Time is precious to-day, we must haste along, we must speak to those children, one is in rags, one has no shoes, another is weeping, they are orphans, we'll not pass them by, no, no!—we'll take them to our homes, we'll place them in good families—they will make men and women worthy of the name.

Brethren, sisters, friends, one day well spent in 'searching out the cause we know not,' will do more good, than to talk about temperance, slavery, war, licentiousness, or benevolence an age. While we are talking, the drunkard is dying, the poor are starving or freezing; but while we are doing as well as saying, we are blessing bodies and saving souls. It may be necessary for us to take another walk this winter, and should we attend to it, when spring opens, if you and I live, I will take another walk with you and gather in our pay, for I 'have respect unto the recompense of reward.'—Christian Herald.

I AM—I AM.—Who ever conceived a more beautiful illustration of a sublime text than the following by Bishop Beveridge? 'I AM.' He doth not say, I AM their light, their guide, their strength, or tower, but only that His people may write under it what they please that is good for them. As if he should say, 'Are they weak? I AM strength. Are they poor? I AM riches. Are they troubled? I AM comfort. Are they sick? I AM health. Are they dying? I AM life. Have they nothing? I AM all things. I AM wisdom and power; I AM justice and mercy; I AM grace and goodness; I AM glory, beauty, holiness, eminence, supremacy, perfection, all-sufficiency, eternity! JEHOVAH, I AM! Whatsoever is amiable in itself or desirable unto them, that I AM. Whatsoever is pure and holy; whatsoever is good or needful to make them happy, that I AM.'

'THE 'CAMEL' AND THE 'NEEDLE'S EYE.'—Lord Nugent, in his recent publication, 'Lands, Classical and Sacred,' has given an application of the words which at once proves the fitness of the expression for the object our Saviour had in view. Lord Nugent describes himself as about to walk out of Hebron through the large gate, when his companions, seeing a train of camels approaching, desired him to go through 'the eye of the needle;' in other words the small side gate. This his lordship conceives to be a common expression, and explanatory to our Saviour's words; for, he adds, the sumpter camel cannot pass thro', unless with great difficulty, and stripped of its load, his trappings, and his merchandise.

MILLERISM OUTDONE.—A new sect of fanatics has appeared in Cincinnati. There are about sixty of them, more than half the number being females, and they are followers, says the Commercial of that city, of a big, burly, half-Indian, half-Negro, formerly a Mormon, who has proclaimed himself Jesus Christ! He showed his disciples, one day last week, the wounds of his hands and limbs, received on the cross! He does miracles with a golden rod, and professes that he was the cause of the destruction of Natchez by a whirlwind. He has already organized several apartments to his kingdom; a new Peter, Paul, &c. The members of this new religion are solemnly enjoined to secrecy, and hold meetings nightly.

To render good for evil, is God-like; to render evil for good, is devil-like; to render evil for evil, is best-like: which, reader, do you do?

APPOINTMENTS.

Bro. Marsh—The following is an old hymn, with the exception of the last verse, which I have altered. It is expressive of my sentiments. A. H.

Mercy's Free.

1. By faith I view my Savior dying,
On the tree, on the tree,
To every nation he is crying,
Look to me! look to me!
He bids the guilty now draw near,
Repent, believe, dismiss their fear:
Hark! hark! what precious words I hear—
Mercy's free! mercy's free!
2. Did Christ when I was sin pursuing,
Pity me! pity me!
And did he snatch my soul from ruin!
Can it be! can it be!
O yes, he did salvation bring,
He is my Prophet, Priest and King!
And now my happy soul can sing,
Mercy's free! mercy's free!
3. Jesus, the mighty God, hath spoken,
Peace to me, peace to me!
Now all my chains of sin are broken,
I am free, I am free!
Soon as I in his name believed,
The Holy Spirit I received,
And Christ from death my soul retrieved—
Mercy's free, mercy's free!
4. Jesus my weary soul refreshes,
Mercy's free, mercy's free!
And every moment Christ is precious,
Unto me, unto me!
None can describe the bliss I prove,
While through this wilderness I rove,
All may enjoy a Savior's love,
Mercy's free, mercy's free!
5. Till Christ shall come I'll still be crying,
Mercy's free, mercy's free!
And tell poor sinners who are dying,
Mercy's free, mercy's free!
Yes, till the last loud trump shall sound,
And we Christ's judgment seat surround,
I'll sing till we by him are crowned—
Mercy's free, mercy's free!

The Bible a Sufficient Creed.

A Sermon, by Charles Beecher—preached at the Dedication of the Second Presbyterian Church, Fort Wayne, Ia.:

On occasions like the present, when societies have met for the purpose of consecrating an edifice to the worship of God, it has been generally deemed appropriate to exhibit some of the leading views by which such societies profess to be governed.

The custom is peculiarly appropriate to our present circumstances.

There may have existed in some minds a degree of uncertainty as to the complexion of our sentiments, as well as to our ultimate chances of success; and while Providence seems smiling upon us, in the latter particular, it is fit that we should do away with any prejudice that might result from the former.

This is emphatically a Protestant Church. Disregarding, therefore, the details of systematic theology, upon which Protestants may differ, I have thought it advisable to set forth that in which they ought to agree. In other words, I propose to explain and to defend the fundamental principle of Protestantism.

To this end, I have selected for my text, the following words:

ALL SCRIPTURE IS GIVEN BY INSPIRATION OF GOD, AND IS PROFITABLE FOR DOCTRINE, FOR

REPROOF, FOR CORRECTION, FOR INSTRUCTION IN RIGHTEOUSNESS; THAT THE MAN OF GOD MAY BE PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.—2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.

I shall endeavor to maintain, as here taught, the following propositions:

I. The Bible is a Creed, sufficient, under God's blessing, to regulate the belief, experience, and practice of the whole Christian World.

II. The substitution of any other Creed, for either of these purposes, is one step in APOSTASY.

The text mentions four things for which the Bible is profitable, previous to the orderly examination of which, we will ask, How far is the Bible profitable? As any other book might be? Or to some surpassing degree? This our text fully declares.

The Man of God, that is, Pastor, Presbyter, or Bishop, (words in the New Testament, convertible) is the one whose office in the Church, being most responsible, involves the most wants; nay, in a manner, all the wants of the whole Church. For every want which the humblest follower of Jesus feels, the Pastor feels, besides those especially arising from his position. The needs and spiritual poverties of the Church, centre in him. Whatever, therefore, is his thorough furniture for all good works, is, a fortiori, the thorough furniture of that Church, in all its parts, and as a whole. It is to him our text declares, how, and how far the Bible may be profitable.

Not so profitable as to supersede study. The context commends Timothy for having known the Scriptures from childhood. The perfection of a book is to reward, not supersede study. The Bible possesses no magic virtue, to penetrate thro' paper and binding, into his fingers, and so imbue his system; the Bible is no talisman, as ghostly fathers taught, to frighten fiends withal; the Bible must be profitable, if at all, by being treated as books were designed to be treated, according to the laws of book-nature, that is, by being read, studied, obeyed.

Not so profitable, either, as to supersede the use of lexicons, commentaries, and traditions. The Man of God may use these, according to his means, provided he use them rightly. How use them? As authoritative interpreters? God forbid! This transfers inspiration out of the Bible into tradition; and the question then is, Who shall interpret tradition? Shall he use private judgment to interpret tradition? If we answer 'Yes,' then how comes it that private judgment, thus innocent when applied to tradition, is so hurtful when applied to the Bible? If private judgment be a safe guide through an interminable swamp, why not upon an open highway?

If we answer, 'No,' private judgment must not be trusted either in the Bible or in tradition, the question returns, Who shall interpret tradition? The Man of God must get a second authorized interpreter for that; and as it will not do to exercise private judgment in explaining the second any more than the first, he must get a third authorized interpreter for that; and a fourth for the third; and so on by a similar necessity; and as he can never arrive at a point where private judgment will be any safer than it was at the first step, or at any step after the first, he will require an infinite series of authorized interpreters, which is absurd. Therefore, the plain meaning of the text, (divested of Jesuitical cobwebs,) is this: Let the Man of God use his Bible as a Book ought to be used, employing lexicons, commentaries, and tradition, as servants to collect evidence, remembering always that the strongest evidence lies in the text itself. And when all the evidence is gathered which can be come at, let him decide in the fear of God. In so doing, the Holy Spirit, by the mouth of Paul, declares, he shall find that Bible, for the uses presently to be considered, profitable to such a degree that there-with alone he may esteem himself PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.

This is an estimate placed upon his word by Almighty God: not to be whittled down by any device of hardy criticism. It is His three-ply, triple-folded defiance to every art of subtle quibbling. Once ascertain what ground is fairly covered by the four specifications, and then, upon that ground, you know that the Man of God is 'PERFECT'; and if that should by any possibility be misunderstood, you know that he is 'THOROUGHLY FURNISHED.' And if desperate ingenuity should begin to say 'suppose' this, and 'suppose' that emergency under these specifications, it is added finally—'UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.'

What then, are the four specifications, and what ground do they fairly cover?

I. 'FOR DOCTRINE.' This specification fairly covers the whole ground of the teaching of truth—truth on all subjects to make wise unto salvation. The word 'didaskalia'—here rendered 'doctrine'—embraces all truth proper to Revelation, and useful to the Man of God, as a teacher—all truth which he will be ever called on to understand himself, or to exhibit to others, whether relating to 'doctrines,' technically so called, or to ordinances, forms, facts, &c. I maintain that the usage of the New Testament writers, fairly includes within this word the whole of truth necessary to the edification of the body of Christ; and it means—not only that the Bible is a repository of all such truth, but—that when fairly admitted to the mind in the manner already explained, it 'is ABLE,' by an omnipotent energy, 'to MAKE WISE UNTO SALVATION;' the Bible is a TEACHER.*

But here an objection is started. Truth, it is said, is one; and therefore the fact that honest minds do differ on every side, proves that the Bible is not a sufficient teacher.

To this I reply: Never was there a more Jesuitical fallacy. You might as well say, Medicine is one; and therefore, unless men all take the same dose they never can be cured. The fact is, truth, like medicine, if it be one, is yet multitudinous; and minds, like maladies, are various. Hence it is an utter impossibility to create absolute unity of belief. Even on what we are pleased to term fundamental truths, there must exist different modes of seeing; different grades of believing; different forms of expressing; and the only unity that ever will be attained before the Resurrection of the Just, on earth, will be a unity of thinking differently, in love.

You might as well attempt to compel seven men, with seven glasses, each with a particular hue of the rainbow, to see all things of the same color, on pain of excommunication, as to compel all minds, of ten thousand diverse mental optics, to behold all things of one catholic, leaden hue.

*NOTE.—I remark here, that in speaking of 'the Bible alone,' I wish to be understood as including those influences of the Holy Spirit, which are solemnly pledged to attend its diligent and careful study.

You might as well attempt to pack cannon-balls in a box, so tightly as to leave no space between, as to pack minds in a Church, I care not by what Hierarchical lever you screw them, so tightly that they do not differ, and yet think. Leadon balls may be compressed so as to touch all round—so may heads, of the same material.

Consequently, of all the immense delusions that ever bestrode the mind of man with a waking nightmare, that of a Church, with an absolute unity of opinion, is the most astounding; and of all usurpations of Divine prerogative, which have ever desolated the Church, that of testing Church-fellowship by OPINION, instead of by experience and practice, is the most ruinous.

Minds differ like faces, like forms, like every thing that God ever made, or the devil ever marred; and the crowning glory of God's word is that it will, out of its multitudinous, inexhaustible store of truth, fit to each mind that can be saved, that particular truth, yea that particular shade of the same fundamental truth, necessary to save that mind. The only thing that can, the only thing that does, prevent the Bible from having this effect on every one of you this day, in this house of God, is, you do not wish to be saved by it. You find nothing in it. On you it has no influence, no chance to have any. This is fatal. God's blessed Spirit is so solemnly linked with that word, by covenant and in actual fulfilment, that that word is able to give the docile student true views of God, of self, of expiation, reconciliation, life, death, resurrection, and the world to come—views which, though they differ from mine, are true; and differ from mine only because his mind differs from mine.

Oh! be it forever understood, that the only unity of faith, possible to us now, is the unity of RELIANCE on Divine testimony, with the unimpeded exercise of each mind, irresponsible to the mass, in making estimate of that testimony. In this view, the Bible is a living miracle among us. It does save men while disputing concerning fundamental truths. The constitutional diversity of minds is so great, the knowledge possible to us so limited, the themes in question so vast, our logical medium so imperfect, that it is probable good men often rank on opposite sides of apparently fundamental questions, when God sees that as to what is really fundamental, they agree.

I can well conceive, and I rejoice in the thought, that the love of our Lord Jesus Christ, whose name be forever blessed, has been kindled like a pure altar-flame, never to be extinguished to all eternity, in hearts of men, whose intellects could never agree in rendering a philosophical account either of his person or his work. They may have thought their theories fundamental, and have achieved long renown in battling therefor, while their God saw that the things they learned of Jesus, that made them love him, although so simple as to be quite overlooked in the arena, were eternally fundamental.

Hence, the grand work of the Man of God is not so much to elaborate truth from the word of God, and present it in systematic form for the acceptance of his flock, as, coming all glowing from the study of the precious word, unfolding its holy beauties, to kindle in their careless hearts a similar ardor, and lead them to the same central sun of life and light.

The Bible, then, on all subjects, personal, pastoral, ecclesiastical, which he may be called to handle, is, to the Man of God, so boundless a repository, so superior an instructor, that therewith alone, he may regard himself as PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.

FOR REFUTATION. This specification fairly covers the whole ground of the prevention, or extirpation of error. In familiar language, the keeping the Church pure from heresy. That this is the force of the term 'Elenchon,' will be perceived by any one who will compare the New Testament usage on this word, and its parent verb. The Bible will not only teach truth—it will kill error. It may not kill every thing that you and I may consider error. It certainly will, when used rightly, extirpate what God regards as such, and be it ever remembered that He alone is to pass that sentence. That the Bible will have this effect, follows of course from the first specification, for truth and error cannot exist together. They are as fire and water. The more truth is taught, the more error dies. This also follows, because the word of God is constructed with direct reference to the cardinal errors of the human mind, by a divine reasoner, with such tremendous ability, that those errors cannot live under a conscientious study of that word. This also follows, because the Scripture is self-interpreting, self-rectifying, self-vindicating. And the sure way of testing an error claiming scriptural support, is: call it to the spot where it claims parentage, and call in the rest of the scripture to testify. In this way, erroneous interpretations must die, and do die. And if there be any interpretation that will not die so, then in God's name, let it live.

Whether, therefore, in a private Christian, or a Pastor; whether in the Church, or any other ecclesiastical body, God's estimate of His Bible is, that for the keeping out of heresy, with that alone, the Man of God may consider himself PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.

How nearly, then, they agree with the mind of God, who think that to have no other test but the Bible, is to swing loose from wholesale restraint, judge ye.

For my part, I seem to see the stamp of Divine displeasure, broadly and crushingly fixed upon any other test, or barrier of error, besides the Bible alone.

3. FOR CORRECTION. The third specification naturally covers the entire ground of Church discipline, including the whole fabric of Church government, whether of members or of ministers. This is the usual signification of the term. There is not an offence against Christ, nor against his cause, whether in the Church simple, or aggregate, which cannot be brought to conviction, just as far by the use of the Bible alone, as God ever intended to have it convicted; and if there be an offence which cannot be thus committed, it is not an offence against Christ, but against a human figure, and such an offence—let it be committed.

For such purposes, then, with the Bible alone, the Man of God is PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.

4. FOR INSTRUCTION IN RIGHTEOUSNESS.—This fourth and last specification fairly covers the whole-ground of training, or schooling, or education in personal holiness, commonly called, experimental religion.

God's estimate of the Bible is that when used according to its own requirements, it will develop all Christian growth—patience, faith, hope, love, joy, meekness, gentleness, integrity, purity, practical morality.

What book is best to put into the hands of a child? Whose words best for infant voices to repeat? 'The words of the Lord are pure words.' Can you find any simpler words than those of Him who said 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven?' Can anything more happily fashion the minds of your children, intellect, imagination, taste, feeling, principle and all, than the holy strains of David? And why should it not be so? Cannot He, who is the Father of us all, attemper his language to the wants of those little ones, whose angels in Heaven do always behold the face of our Father which is in Heaven? And whom will you trust to tell them the story of our Lord's sufferings and death—their cause and their results? Suppose Jesus, as of old, a wayfaring man, should enter your house, and, drawing your child to his arms should tell him of that last supper, of that garden agony, of that mock trial, of those insults, buffetings, scourgings; those final scenes of Calvary, those three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, bending, the while upon the breathless listener, those fascinating eyes of tenderness, would you dare to interrupt him? Would you dare to caution your child what doctrine he should find there?

Parents of this congregation, try the power of God's words upon the pliant natures of your children. Plant those living words deep. Govern them the while; LIVE Christ before them; and when you are old and grey-headed, you shall surely see them following Wisdom's ways, which are pleasantness, and all her paths which are peace.' Infidelity cannot entangle them; vice cannot fasten her fangs upon them; or if they do, you will see them escape again, like a bird from the snare of the fowler.

The Bible can never be out-grown. Other books that please our infant ear, fall off, and grow stale to our maturer age. Not so with God's words. Precisely the same passage that charmed the child of seven, will charm the grey-haired sage of seventy—yea, open to him depths of meaning, childhood could not fathom.

Christian, commencing divine life; inquirer, just ready to begin, let me tell you, Christianity is growth, not petrification. The Church is the branch of a vine, and that vine is Christ the Word. If you then would be grafted into Christ, I assure you it will not be without diligent, private, original searching of the Bible. In conclusion, then, see what God's own estimate is of his Bible.

For the inculcation of all truth necessary to salvation; for the refutation of error and extirpation of heresy; for the conduct of discipline, whether of presbyters or laity; for the education of children and adults in personal holiness, and practical morality, the Bible is so far profitable that therewith the Man of God is PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.

This, men and brethren, is the estimate that, with all lowliness, we accept and verify. This is the fundamental principle on which this enterprise was commenced, avowed from the very first, on which every advancement has been made; on which, under God's blessing, our future success is to depend. If you seek to know the doctrines, the spirit, the characrier of this enterprise from afar, by some human mark, or badge, or insignia, you will surely be at a loss what to think of us. But if you are a student of God's word; if you know what it is to subject your intellect to the mind of God; if you have ever been taught how to read, and think, and believe only at first hand, from God's beloved word; if, believing, you have obeyed, and if you ever then come within the sound of the services of this temple, you will know at once where you are and what you are. Your heart will leap to us by the mighty response of a kindred nature, and you will be to us a brother.

Brethren! This is, shall I say, PROTESTANTISM? Nay; there is a nobler word, CHRISTIANITY! The principle I have this day exhibited, is the foundation of all Christianity. The realization of this principle is our Life. For no other principle is it worth our while to contend; but for this, 'THE FAITH ONCE DELIVERED TO THE SAINTS,' let us contend earnestly. Let us hold up our standard on high. Let us send abroad our watchword upon the wings of the wind! Let us make it known, and felt, and believed, that the Bible, as God wrote it, every man his own interpreter, responsible only to God, is our rule, our only teacher, and that therein, for all truth to be inculcated, all error to be extirpated, all discipline to be enforced, all holiness to be attained, we, as a people and a pastor, do deem ourselves PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS.

Selfishness Inconsistent with the State of Pure Love.

The affection of love has its laws of origin. Love, originating in faith, tends to restrain and regulate the other passions. The soul can love only one object supremely. Man is selfish when his love centres in himself as its supreme object, —selfish also when his love centres in other beings inferior to God—God alone the proper centre of love. When supreme love exists, all other principles will be properly regulated; assured or perfect faith, the true source of purity or perfection of love.

Love is not a passion, which can properly be called accidental. In any and every being that has the capacity of loving, this benevolent affection will arise and increase, and decline according to its own law of origin and progress: and if we have a right view of the subject, it is one of the laws of its origin, that love always rests upon faith as its basis. If we have faith in the creature, exclusive of faith in God, then our affections will centre on the creature. If we have faith in God, then our affections, either in whole or in part, will take a different direction—attaching themselves to God as their object, and being more or less strong, according to the degree of our faith.

2. In the last chapter, the position was taken that faith subdues that selfishness, which is the great evil of man's nature, in part at least, by an indirect action, viz: by giving origin to love. We had occasion to make the general remark, to this effect: that the natural tendency of love to God is to regulate and restrain all unregulated and unrestrained love of that, which is not God. This view is so important, that we think it necessary to delay upon it in the present chapter.

3. Additional to the general law, that love rests upon faith, there are other permanent principles or laws, which it may be proper to refer to here. And one is this: Of the various objects, to which love is directed, it will always be found, that those objects will not all be loved alike; but some will be loved more and some less. Of two objects or of many objects which essentially differ in their attractions, in other words, in their power of exciting love, it can never be said that the soul loves them both, or that it loves them all in an equal degree; the love of the object will be in proportion to the attracting power of the object, considered in relation to the soul.

4. And in accordance with these views, it may be said further, that among the various objects there will be some one on which the love of the soul will rest and satisfy itself in the highest degree—in a degree which may be expressed by the term supremely. The soul, in the exercise of its affections, must necessarily have a centre of love some where, viz: in the object which is most beloved; and that object will be the most beloved and will constitute the centre of love, which possesses for the soul the highest attractions. The love of other things which have less attractions for the soul, cannot fail to be subordinate. It is true, that the soul may take a degree of satisfaction in those objects which are inferior or subordinate in its love; but it is in the supreme object of its affections, and in that central and supreme object alone, that it will rest and delight itself with supreme satisfaction. It is there, emphatically, that the heart is—there is the centre; and it is infinitely important that every man should know what that centre is in his own case.

5. The centre of man's love (we do not say his love, but the centre of his love) must be either in himself, or in other creatures, or in God.

He may love all in different degrees, and he may love all in that manner at the same time—but he cannot have a centre or supremacy of love in all at the same time. He either loves God supremely, or he loves other beings which are inferior to God supremely, or he loves himself supremely. There does not seem to be any other supposition to be made in the case.

6. Our first remark, in connection with what has been said, is this: If a man's love centres in himself as the highest or supremest object of his affection, which it must do, if it do not centre in some other being, he is of course a selfish being—and as such he cannot be regarded as a truly holy being. If he thinks for himself, acts for himself, lives for himself—as he must do if he himself be the highest object of love—it must be sufficiently obvious without any comment upon it, that he cannot be otherwise than selfish, and cannot be otherwise than unholy. All such love, which thus centres in ourselves, is wrong, and is not acceptable in the sight of God—because it is not proportioned to its object, and is inordinate. It may be proper to add this remark here, that pure love or holy love, is that love which is precisely appropriate to its object; being such, neither more nor less, as the object is precisely entitled to, so far as we are capable of understanding what the object is.

7. A second remark is this: If our love centres in creatures inferior to God, and becomes supreme in them, it is necessarily selfish, as really so—though not so obviously so at first sight—as if centred in ourselves. It is entirely obvious, that the motive for loving inferior beings in the highest degree, for loving them supremely, cannot be founded in their own characters; it is not a love to which they are justly entitled. It is not right to love them in this manner. And if the motive of this love is not founded in their characters, and is, therefore, not based upon moral rectitude—it is founded, and must necessarily be so, in some selfish modification of our own feelings. The only active principle in man which is antagonistical to rectitude, is selfishness in some of its modifications. Whenever a moral being deviates from the right, in any and all cases where he has a perception of what the right is, it will be found to be through the influence of self. In all such cases, if a being is loved otherwise than it ought to be, and is therefore loved wrongly, selfishness will always be found at the bottom. It will sometimes be very secret and almost hidden; but it will always be there.

8. A third remark is this: God alone is the proper centre of love. God alone, in consequence of the exalted nature of his perfections, is the object to which our highest affections can properly attach themselves. If God is not loved supremely, something else is, because the nature of love is such as to require some highest object. And if God is the centre, (an expression which implies that our love is essentially, if not absolutely proportioned to its object,) then he is so in such a degree and manner, that all other beings are regarded and loved in their relation to him. Being not only the highest or supreme object, but being so beyond any and all comparison with other objects, he is properly the centre of centres. Consequently, receiving all our springs of action from him, as the great object of our affections, we shall regard objects, so far as we are capable of understanding their nature, just as he regards them, we shall love what he loves, hate what he hates, rejoice in what he rejoices in.

9. The moment we get into this great and true centre, every thing else falls into the right position. We love ourselves, and we love other beings just as God would have us; for we can neither approve nor disapprove, neither love nor hate, except as we receive the spring of movement from the great source. In any other position of mind, the influence of self-will is felt; but in this, as the mind operates in perfect coincidence with the will of God, a will that never deviates from perfect rectitude, it can give no countenance to selfishness, which is always at variance with rectitude. The life of God in the soul and the life of self in the soul are entirely inconsistent with each other. Where God exists, as the supreme object, self is, and must be, cast out—sensuality ceases. All our appetites and all our propensities and affections of whatever degree will, in that case, be properly regulated; and the grace of sanctification or holiness will pervade the whole inner man.

10. It is proper to add here, in accordance with what was intimated at the commencement of the chapter, that the love, which being supreme, makes God its centre, never exists—and it is not possible that it should ever exist except in connection with and as the consequent of a faith, which has the same centre, and exists in the same degree. Faith is the foundation—faith is the deeper principle; although it must be admitted, that love is a state of mind, which, generally speaking, is more distinct in our consciousness, and is more obvious to common apprehension and remark. When, therefore, we have faith, we have all that is necessary for us, provided we have all the faith, which God requires us to have.—Life of Faith.

Bible Chronology.

The following remarks of John Hooper, Albany, England, on Bible Chronology, are valuable. They are taken from the correspondence of the English mission, published in the Advent Herald for Dec. 2d, 1846:

“In regard to the chronology of the Bible, however correct, there must be some little uncertainty in our present ignorance in tracing its exact fulfilment down to our present time; the least variation in our computation affecting, through the long lapse of years, materially our conclusions. There is also much difficulty in fixing the exact time when the reckoning should begin: as, for instance, in the great prophetic number of Daniel's 2300 years. And I know of no other satisfactory way of ascertaining the exact time when the Prophecy commences, than that adopted by me in the exposition of that prophecy as given in the last part of the ‘Word in Season,’ which I have sent you. The vision in the 8th and 9th chapters being unquestionably the same, we arrive at the commencement of the prophecy by reckoning backward from the crucifixion, and thereby ascertain the year when the sanctuary shall be cleansed, which brings us to the year 1847. Therefore the Lord will appear the next year to his Church—supposing that we are living in A. D. 1846. But this, as you are aware, is a disputed point. The Duke of Manchester, for instance, has endeavored to prove in a late publication (a large thick 8 vo. volume,) that the Christian era is dated too early at least by four years. Thus, though we have adopted the best mode of computing the Prophecy of Daniel's 2300 years by dating from the Crucifixion, there is still an uncertainty whether it will receive its fulfilment in the next year; because our calculation rests on the chronology of the New Testament. But I do not think that the commonly received opinion that we are living in A. D. 1846, is far from the truth, and therefore that the Lord is near at hand. And that there should at this very time arise a question that it seems so ordered of God, that we may be led to speak with greater diffidence as to the exact year, in order that we may be kept in continual watchfulness. But of the seasons of our Lord's Advent there can be no doubt—and though we are so near what we call 1847, the Lord may come before that year.”

ROCHESTER, DECEMBER 16, 1846.

The Church at the First and Second Advents.

8. The Jewish church, or its leaders, not only rejected the message of the first advent, but prevented all they possibly could of the common people from receiving it. Hence Christ charged them with the sin of taking away the key of knowledge, of not entering the kingdom of heaven themselves, and preventing others from entering. How true to the spirit and letter has this been of the Gentile church relative to the second advent message, in this our day. The common people, the lay portion of the church, with a very few exceptions, at first were favorably disposed towards the advent message; and doubtless very many would have gladly received it, and this day been rejoicing in hope of the soon appearing of their Lord, had they not been prevented by their ministers, or the leading influences of the church. No pains have been spared by the ministry of the church, not to enlighten themselves and their hearers relative to the true merits of the question, but to prejudice their minds against it; and the success with which this fearful work has been carried forward, is without a parallel, excepting in the type, the Jewish church.

9. At the first advent the Jewish church possessed a proselyting spirit. This was one of her prominent characteristics when the Savior charged her with compassing sea and land to make one proselyte. And after the ascension of Christ, in the apostolic age an untiring zeal was manifested on the part of the Judaizers, to turn away the disciples of Christ from the faith, to Judaism. To prevent this sad work was one, and we may say the chief object of Paul's epistle to the Galatians, and of his letter to the Hebrews. Relative to the Gentile church at the commencement of the proclamation of the advent message, all acquainted with her character then, know, that without an exception she possessed a proselyting spirit. The mainspring of action, or ruling object of action, of all the sects was an increase of numbers. Protracted and extra efforts were made, not so much to save souls as to swell the number of the church, to see who could boast of the largest number of converts to their peculiar creed. This unholy proselyting party spirit has effectually compassed sea and land to make proselytes, and its success has been the very bane of all gospel order and true evangelical holiness in the Gentile church: for it has gathered into its fellowship, its very bosom, men of the world, unconverted, unsanctified, unholy men, women and children, until such members hold the balance of power. They give character to the church, and place it, we fear, beyond the reach of the redeeming and saving power of the gospel.

But this is not all—the Gentile like the Jewish church, seemingly, has done all in her power to turn away the disciples from 'that blessed hope,' and the 'faith once delivered to the saints.' She has taken advantage of their disappointments and sore trials to aid her in causing them to return to the bosom of the church again. And, we are pained to say it, with few exceptions, those who have gone back to the church have soon partaken of her spirit, lost their zeal for the cause of Christ, their love for his appearing, and, we fear, their inheritance in the everlasting kingdom of God.

10. The Jewish church never had an external show of greater purity than at the first advent, yet according to the scorching truths of Christ, she was never more corrupt than then. Her cup of iniquity was full to overflowing. She was ripe for any and every crime, and for destruction. John charged the church, yes, the church of God, the most highly favored people of God, which ever lived, with being a generation of vipers. Christ viewed them, though his own people, in no more favorable light. He called them hypocrites, whited sepulchres, children of the devil, and said, How can ye escape the damnation of hell.

Let it be remembered that this was the corrupt character of the powerful, wealthy, and proud pharisaic church at the first advent of the Lord. He came to his own people, and they received him not—they rejected and crucified with wicked hands their Lord and Savior. No one now doubts these painful things; but they wonder how the church, yes, the church of God, could become so fallen and corrupt to commit such high handed sins. But was the church, at the time of the commission of these crimes, by the mass, viewed in this light? Certainly not. The multitude was blinded by the self-righteousness, out-side show and hypocrisy of the church. They considered her holy, the pure church of God; and as a matter of course, all who presumed to question her purity were, by the deceived multitude, considered invaders of the holiness of the true church.

What is the character of the Gentile church now? Like the Jewish church at the first advent, she is deeply corrupt, though her outside show has the appearance of great sanctity. She has become corrupt in her doctrine, has turned aside unto fables; in her worship, has left the simplicity of the gospel for a worship which consists in vain forms and a pompous show, more pleasing to a proud heart, than honoring to God; has imbibed a worldly spirit, and fallen into all the reprehensible practices of a proud and sinful world. As the Jewish church rejected the first advent, so has the Gentile church rejected the second coming of her Lord. In short, there is not a sin named in the sacred oracles, but that the Gentile church is now guilty of habitually committing.—Let any one show to the contrary, and we will cheerfully confess our mistake. This charge, and offer, we have repeatedly made for a few years past, but no one has yet ventured to appear in defence of the church; and for the very good reason, we think, because it is known that the charge is just and can be sustained.

That the Gentile church is now corrupt, ripe, or nearly fitted for destruction, as was the Jewish church at the first advent, is absolutely certain, or we are not living in the last days, the perilous times spoken of by Paul, and the days of corruption of the church predicted by him and other inspired writers. Or, in other words, we are not living near the time of the second advent of Christ: for the corruption of the church was to form one of the most prominent characteristics of the times just before that event. This, no second advent believer will question, nor any one who understands his Bible. And no one acquainted with the painful facts in the case will deny that these predictions are strictly fulfilled; hence the conclusion is, that there is not only a perfect agreement, in this respect, between the type and antitype, but a sure evidence is furnished that the appearing of Christ will soon be witnessed.

11. The Jewish church, in consequence of its apostacy, unbelief, and deep corruption, was rejected by the Lord. When he had delivered to his chosen people his message of love and mercy, confirmed the truth of its divinity with numerous miracles, signs and mighty wonders, and they still closed their eyes and ears, and hardened their hearts against the truth, and were in their blindness and madness about to shed the blood of the merciful Jesus, he cries out in the sympathy and boundless love and compassion of his spotless soul, 'O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate!!' The divine presence then departed from the Jewish church, the church of God, and his once holy temple. In view of these things, Christ exclaims in another place, 'If thou hadst known in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace, but now they are hid from thine eyes!!' They judged themselves unworthy of eternal life, and in consequence of so doing, says Paul, 'Lo, we turn to the Gentiles!'

Sad and painful indeed was the condition of the once chosen people of God, when once finally and forever (as a people) rejected by Him; but no more painful than the condition of the Gentile church, the anti-type, when thus rejected! Here we shall be met with the strong prejudices of the times. From a thousand voices coming from half that number of selfish and wrangling sects, it will unanimously be said, let the comparison close here: we admit the Jewish church was rejected, but this never can be true of the Gentile church: there is not a fitness in the comparison here—God must yet be with the Gentile church, never will withdraw from her his divine favor; and has great blessings yet in store for her, &c. So reasoned, and still reason, the Jews: but eighteen hundred years of the displeasure of their rejected Lord, show their blindness and folly. What the future will develop in the case of the Gentile church we leave for the future to determine. But judging from her own often repeated testimony relative to her spiritual death; her corrupt, cold, lifeless and unbelieving condition; the plain predictions of the inspired writers relative to her character in the last days, and having the strongest assurance from the prophetic Word that we are now in the last days—we say, from these evidences we are forced to the conclusion that the divine favor is withdrawn from her. There may be, as in the case of the Jewish church after its rejection, individuals and some small bodies, yet enjoying the divine favor, but as a whole, as an organized body, as the church of God, she is a broken off and rejected branch. The Jewish church, through unbelief was broken off from the true olive tree, and the Gentile church was admonished by Paul thus,—'Thou standest by faith,'—and if she, like the Jewish church become unbelieving, would not be spared. She has become unbelieving, and therefore must, like the Jewish church, have fallen, and be rejected, or cast off. See Rom. 11: 19–21. If these things are true, it is highly important for our own and the salvation of others to know it, and faithfully, but in self-abasement, tears of sorrow, and true philanthropy, proclaim it to all who will hear: that if by any means some, who are now deceived by the church, may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Finally, the Jewish church, after a long abuse of heaven-bought blessings; deep ingratitude to God their kind benefactor and faithful protector; repeated rebellions against his righteous laws; willing and wilful unbelief in his most precious promises; rejection of the glorious truths of the gospel: crucifixion of the son of God, and the commission of every crime of which they were capable; we say after thus falling into the deepest corruption, they were destroyed from any longer being a distinct nation. And dreadful indeed was the avenging and devouring rod of the Almighty, when stretched out against his once chosen and holy people. And is not their awful doom, their dreadful destruction by Titus the Roman conqueror, typical of the sure but more terrible destruction that awaits the fallen and corrupt Gentile church at the revelation of the Lord of glory? We think it is. But whether there is anything typical in the case or not, we know from the plain word of the Lord, that so far as the Man of Sin, the Catholic church, the leading or controlling power or influence in the Gentile church, is concerned, that everlasting destruction awaits her at the appearing of Christ. See 2 Thess. 2nd, Dan. 7th, and Rev. 18th chapters. No Protestant, not tinctured with Puseyism, or German Neology, will dispute this. And how any one acquainted with his Bible can doubt that the same fate awaits other corrupt branches of the church is a matter of surprise to us. The sin of fornication with the kings of the earth, a union or mingling of civil and ecclesiastical matters, is what stamped with corruption the mother of harlots. (Rev. 17: 2) If the daughters have committed the same offence, do they not sustain the same character of their apostate mother, and are they not liable to share in the destruction that will soon come upon her? Most certainly.

Just as sure as the doctrine of the world's conversion, or of a temporal millennium, is not a doctrine of the Bible; just so certain as the Bible predicts that the Gentile church will be unbelieving, worldly and corrupt at the appearing of Christ; and just as certain as the advent of Christ is near—just so certain is the terrible and everlasting destruction of the Gentile church and a sinful world at the door!—The very nature of the case forces us to this conclusion. There is no medium ground on which we can consistently stand. Destruction, the most fearful and final, will soon fall upon the proud and corrupt Gentile church, and a guilty world, or, the doctrine of the soon appearing of Christ and his kingdom is erroneous. That it is true, we have not a doubt, and we think we have the very best evidence to prove. Then, destruction will inevitably come upon the Gentile church and a sinful world! And in view of their awful doom, we cry out in anguish of soul, 'O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end!' For to the Lord 'belongeth vengeance, and recompence; their foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste!' O God, may they escape to thee for refuge while thy long forbearance is extended toward them.

The Cause at Oswego.

We have a few tried precious brethren in Oswego; and they need help from our efficient brethren in the ministry. Cannot Bro. Pinney go to their aid?—There is no place where in our judgment he could do more good for a few weeks. We name him because we see he is 'again in the field,' with improved health, and well engaged in the blessed work of doing good. To give Bro. Pinney, and others concerned, a more perfect knowledge of the state of the case at Oswego, we make public the following private note, just received from Bro. Oliphant. He will pardon this liberty we take with his letter.—Under date of Oswego, Dec. 7th, he writes:

Bro. Marsh:—You know not what trials we have been called to pass through, though you have had some bitter experience. Our once powerful band has dwindled down to a handful, who meet on the Sabbath morning at our house for an interchange of sentiment and social worship, and in the evening at Bro. Houd's. To say that I am pained every day when I witness the alienation in the band which once knew no feeling but brotherly love, and no interest but that of a common Parent and a common Savior,—to note the hostility and rancor on the part of those we loved and still love, is painful—is enough to make the heart bleed at every pore. Heavy was the dividing wedge—He sundered and distracted a company of friends which then numbered over 150—many of whom have been driven back into the world by his pernicious doctrines; and I hardly know of an individual who followed him out but now denounces him as a bad man; and still they say the Lord has led them, in all their errors! Oh! poor human nature!

I said our meetings were held at Bro. Houd's and at our house: but we have hired the Tabernacle, and mean to fit it up again as comfortable as we can, and try to get the scattered children together once more—that is, as many as we can; for many will never return.

Oh! my brother, you cannot know, and I cannot tell you, how much I loved this company. It was a feeling of affection more ardent, more pure, than I ever cherished for my own relatives by the ties of consanguinity. I would willingly have made sacrifices for them: I have made some; but of that no matter. But all has been unavailing—an enemy has torn us to pieces, and then to confirm his own rottenness and putridity, has united with the Shakers.

When I see you, I will tell you all about it, and I know you will sympathize with us. Do you think Bro. Pearson could visit us if we should invite him? Would it be possible for you to come? How is our dear Bro. Galusha? It is not impossible for me to call on him when I visit you.

Remember me most kindly to Sister Marsh, Bro. Pearson, and all the rest of our friends, and believe me, as I am, Your friend and brother,

R. OLIPHANT.

Bro. Pearson's health though improved is yet poor, We are confined to the cares of our office—hence it will not be practicable for either of us to comply with Bro. Oliphant's request now. Bro. Galusha must speak for himself,—he doubtless stands ready to do all he can for the cause in every place where ever duty calls him to go, but whether he could now visit Oswego is doubtful. We hope Bro. Pinney will be able to attend to this Macedonian cry immediately.

Terrible Disasters on the Waters.

The number of shipwrecks on our Lakes and on the Ocean, for a few weeks past, is without a parallel in the history of our world. One Steamer, we now forget her name, in crossing the Atlantic recently fell in with six, we think, wrecks, such a thing as was never witnessed by any one ship's crew in one voyage. Fifty are reported to have perished on the wreck of the steam boat Atlantic, in Long Island Sound—and as many more in a recent collision on the Mississippi River. Near one hundred crafts, of various descriptions, in the recent gales, are already reported wrecked or stranded. Consequently the number of lives lost must be great.

To say nothing about these things being signs of the final convulsion and destruction of the present natural world, they most certainly furnish conclusive evidence that God has either withdrawn his providential care, in a great measure from this rebellious world, or he is speaking in earthquake and tempest tones to fallen man to repent of his numerous and high handed sins. We doubt not that these wild, fearful, and often repeated freaks of nature, are sure precludes of her final convulsion. Let us be ready for the terrible crisis—it is liable to commence any moment.

Events of the Day of the Lord.

NUMBER II.

Bro. Marsh:—You would have heard from me sooner, but I felt uncertain whether you would decide to publish my articles on this subject; and until I ascertained this, I thought it best to save the time and expense, lest it might be labor lost. This morning I received the paper, and find my communication inserted, and a remark of your own upon it. I know that Paul teaches the saints will be caught up to meet Christ in the air in that day; in this, you and I, and all who rest on the plain declarations of Scripture, are agreed. But it does not follow that at the first moment of the revelation of Jesus Christ, the saints will be glorified; or rather, this will not be the first event of the day of the Lord. Hear a little further, —and, if you please, spare remarks, until I have entered more fully into the subject.

Keeping before the mind the Scriptures quoted in my article of the Voice, Nov. 25th, in which it is plainly declared that the tares are first gathered; look at Matt. 13: 49. The first work of the angels is to sever the wicked from among the just. But here I shall perhaps, be met with an objection, drawn from Matt. 24: 31. This, however, does not necessarily involve an objection. The fact that the angels do gather the elect, does not disprove our Lord's declaration that the wicked will first be gathered. Mark, the mourning of the tribes of the earth is mentioned before the gathering of the elect: As the ungodly were taken away in the day of Noah, so will the unprepared be taken when the Lord comes. Luke, 17: 31, &c.—'In that day, he which shall be upon the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back. Remember Lot's wife. Whosoever shall seek to save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life, shall preserve it,' &c. Brethren! consider well these words of the Lord: It will be just so when the Son of man is revealed.

In Daniel, 12th chap., we see the time of trouble is mentioned before the deliverance of those written in the book. Now turn to Psalm 91—'He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty; surely he shall deliver them from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence. He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler. Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day—[Glorious promise! not only shalt thou escape, but in the midst of all, thou shalt not fear!] nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand—but it shall not come nigh thee. Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold, and see the reward of the wicked,' &c. &c.

Isa. 24th: Has this chapter had its fulfilment? I hardly think a single adventist can be found, who will say it has. We here are told that the inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left. Joy is darkened and desolation and destruction are all around. But 'when thus it shall be in the midst of the land among the people, there shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. They shall lift up their voice—they shall sing for the majesty of the Lord—they shall cry aloud from the sea.' vers. 13, 14—'But fear and the pit and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth! The chapter concludes with the reign of the Lord of Hosts, and the following one with a song of praise to God for His righteous judgment, and the triumph of his people. Let me entreat the reader to look into this portion of the surh word of prophecy.

As you prefer short articles to long ones, I will conclude for the present, by just offering a hint. Some have told us this was our especial duty, and some that at this moment. But hear Christ, —'And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness,* and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.' Brethren! if

*What a mercy it is that it has ceased to be the custom of professing Christians, to invite the visitor to the intoxicating beverage. How many of us might in an evil moment have been thrown off our guard.

one prayer more than another is given us to use and that unceasingly, it is here. In another communication I may say something about abiding the Son of man's appearing.

Yours truly,

H. HEYES.

A Word on the Above.

We can see no good reason why we should 'suspend remarks' until Bro. Heyes has 'entered more fully into the subject.' As truth is our object, we think the better way to arrive at a correct knowledge of this case is to have our objections to Bro. Heyes theory accompany his articles. This is fair for the writers, and safe for the readers.

The parables in Matt. 13, to which Bro. Heyes refers, directly relate to the kingdom of heaven, or this world, the territory of the kingdom. Hence it is perfectly consistent with this view of the matter, to speak of the gathering out of the kingdom or out of the world the tares, or wicked, casting away the bad fish, or the wicked, not before the righteous are changed in the twinkling of an eye and caught up to meet the Lord, but before the righteous will shine as the sun in the kingdom, or renovated earth. It is a mere inference to say that the wicked are destroyed before the righteous are taken from the earth, but the plain meaning of these texts seems to be that they will be destroyed before the righteous possess the kingdom.

Matt. 24th settles this question. The Savior is there speaking, not directly of the territory of the kingdom, but of his coming, and what he will do with his saints and the living wicked, at his coming. The wicked wail at his appearing, while the righteous will be caught away by angels, to meet their coming Lord: they escape the snare, while the wicked are taken in it. The wicked will doubtless wail, but not be destroyed before the righteous are caught away: the wailing we think will commence on the appearing of the sign of the Son of man; then the righteous will be caught away, and then the destruction of the wicked will follow. This, Matt. 24 and other plain portions of the New Testament clearly teaches.

Admitting the texts Bro. H. quotes from the Psalms, Isaiah, and Daniel, refer to the coming of the Lord, they must be harmonized with the plain teachings of the New Testament; or shall the New Testament be expounded by the Old? The former is the safe position to take. Abiding by this rule, these texts are easily understood: they teach the errors, not the order of events of that day. The order we must look for in the New Testament; and all who are acquainted with the plain teachings of that Book, it does appear, will readily admit the correctness of the view we have taken of this subject.

Parable of the Supper.—Luke, 11: 16—21.

From verses 12 to 15, it may be readily seen what gave rise to this parable. Observe our Saviour's instruction to such as make a dinner or supper. 'Call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsman, nor thy rich neighbors, lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee; but when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee. For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.' Mark the saying of one of his disciples, 'Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.' Their minds appear to be directed to the marriage of the Lamb—see Rev. 19: 7; 'Then said he unto him, a certain man made a great supper, and bade many, and sent his servants at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come, for all things are now ready. And they all, with one consent, began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and seoit; I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them—I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. So that servant came and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry, said to his servant, go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the Lord said unto the servant, go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled, for I say unto you that none of these men which were bidden, shall taste of my supper.' This parable is perfectly simple, and as easy to be understood. The servants went into the highways bidding to the marriage for more than 1800 years. This parable simply states, that many had been bidden, and at Supper time. Mark the expression, the servants were sent to those that had been bidden. It was not their mission to bid to the marriage, but to say to such 'Come to supper,' or in other words present the prophetic scriptures, that had been sealed up until the time of the end, (see Daniel 12: 4, 9,) to the professed church of God, showing the end of their faith, nigh which should according to Luke 21; 28, 31, have caused them to lift up their heads with rejoicing, and to know that the Kingdom of God is nigh—but alas, how disappointed the servant. Many of the bidden loved this present world, although they professed to be Christ's chosen out of it, yet the ground that they had purchased, the oxen bought, and the many schemes of an earthly nature choked the word, and but a little fruit brought to perfection, this unlawful perfection with the world. Fornication or defiling of garments, as it is termed in the Revelation, entirely unfitted the church for such a call, but according to the engagement, they could only wish to be excused. So that servant showed his Lord these things—was justly offended, and said to his servant, 'Go out quickly, into the streets and lanes of the city and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.' This, we think, was accomplished in the quick move in the Fall of 1844; we, who were engaged in that work, had mostly left all church organizations that had caused carnal divisions among us, and came together unitedly, believed alike, and drank into one spirit, and the typical argument was applied to the then present chronology, and all arose and gave the cry. The whole work was performed in about three weeks. A multitude of papers containing the arguments were scattered broadcast over the land. Brethren and sisters going from house to house with their papers, and earnest entreaties effected a great gathering of people of every class, and a solemn assembly was called. But we were disappointed, probably as much as our Father Abraham was in the sacrifice of his son, the Lord did not come, and the servant said, 'Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.' Though many have since declared that Christ did come, the door shut and no room. But we would sooner believe the servant crying there is yet room. But hear now what the Lord says, 'Go out into the highways and hedges and compel (or as in the margin of some Bibles, by an earnest and continual urging) to come in, that my house may be filled, for I say unto you, that none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.' The highways and hedges refer to that portion of the country where the message has not reached, or the people had an opportunity of hearing. But mark the solemn declaration. None of the bidden (Nominal Church who has heard and wilfully rejected God's word,) shall taste of his supper; showing clearly that the call is decisive. Rom. 11: 21. 22: 'For if God spared not the natural branches, (Jews,) take heed lest he also spare not thee.' Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God, on them which fell severity; but towards thee goodness; if thou continue in his goodness, otherwise THOU SHALT ALSO BE CUT OFF. If this be a correct application, then we see that our former disappointments have caused this fulfilment. To some this may appear strange; they are ready to say that there is nothing in the advent faith, or movements, because the first calculations on the Time, proved incorrect. Our disappointments have to us proved to be trials. God's people have always passed through trials and disappointments before deliverance, the time is given in Daniel, chaps. 8 and 12. But first we were to run to and fro, increase knowledge, and the effect is to be purified, made white and tried (disappointed,) but the wicked would do wickedly, and not understand, scoff at and deride the subject, while the nominal Israel have said, 'The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth.' But the promise to us is, at last we understand, 'Tell them saith God, THAT THE DAYS ARE AT HAND AND THE EFFECT OF EVERY VISION.—Ezek. 12: 22, 24. By this we know what the command of God is, and our duties to our fellow-creatures—the latitude and longitude that we are in. Nearly two years have elapsed since we passed this last land-mark, and from the proportion of the foregoing movements, should we not conclude ourselves near the Haven of Rest? Brethren and sisters in the Lord, let us maintain our watch for the end, with our lamps trimmed and burning. Sinner take the warning lest the snare come upon you, for the spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him take the water of life freely.

C. PENNOYER.

Seneca Falls, 1846.

Remarks on the Above.

Bro. Pennoyer's comments on this parable we think are incorrect for the very good reason that he has offered no valid evidence to justify his view of the matter: he has merely given his opinion in the case. We readily admit as a general remark that what he has said relative to the advent message, the churches rejecting it, and their sad condition, is painfully true; but that the parable under consideration has a direct application to these things we do not believe, because, as stated in a previous paper, there is no fitness in the case, and second, because there is no evidence that it was designed to be thus applied.

We give our brother a hearing because his was one of the articles which called forth our recent remarks on the parables, and because, agreeably to our offer at the close of those remarks, our brother now requests a hearing in our columns. Truth, and not our imperfect opinions, will abide the day of the Lord. Let us cleave to the truth.

Letter from Bro. L. E. Bates.

Beloved Brother:—In my late tour West, I formed many pleasant and happy associations—and though my health was miserable the most of the time, which tended greatly to unfit me for labor, still I was enabled by the help of God to visit the scattered flock in different places, and present before them the evidences of the Bible, bearing upon the speedy coming of the Lord, together with those plain and practical truths bearing upon Christian character, which constitute the important requisites and qualifications necessary to prepare us for the coming of the Lord, and without which all other knowledge and faith 'profiteth us nothing.' I have long been satisfied, not only by experience and observation, but by the clear and searching truths of God's holy word, that a mere intellectual faith in divine truth will never save us—and that unless our hearts are sufficiently influenced by the truth to lead us to live holy, watchful and prayerful lives—our profession and faith instead of saving us, will only tend in the day of righteous retribution, to augment our misery, and add a millstone weight, to sink us in the depths of hell! The reflection then, that we have professed attachment to the cause of God and faith in his word, will be of the keenest character when compelled to listen as we stand without, to the voice of our insulted Savior, saying, 'I never knew you!' That this will be the character of many in that day, when the secrets of all hearts shall be known, is evident from the language of our Lord, when he said, 'Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name—and in thy name have cast out devils—and in thy name done many wonderful works?' That reference is here had to professors of religion, is evident from the fact, that the openly ungodly, who lay no claims to Christianity, are never heard to cry, 'Lord, Lord;' neither do they profess to teach in the name of Christ. That the fond hope that all is well, will be indulged by the class here designated, is evident from the plea put forth in their own defence in that great day. Here they will settle upon their lees, satisfied with a form of godliness, until to their utter astonishment, the voice of him in whose name they have professed to perform such mighty wonders, will be heard to say, 'I never knew you! depart from me ye that work iniquity!'

Never did I feel a stronger desire than now, that the dear people of God, who have rendered themselves singular in the eyes of the world and obnoxious to the great mass of professed Christendom, by the faith in the doctrines of the primitive church—should avoid the rocks and quicksands upon which thousands have been decoyed, and whose wrecks now lie at low ebb, exposed to the storm of vengeance which is fast gathering, and will soon sink them in the sea of perdition. I know of no other way by which to avoid the fate of this great number, than by a constant application to our chart, (the Bible) and by keeping our eye constantly upon the beacon light held out to cheer us—by thus doing, we may be enabled at last to out-ride the storm, and cast anchor in the broad bay of God's everlasting kingdom.

Your brother in Christ,

LABAN E. BATES.

Lowville, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1846.

P. S. I wish to say to those beloved brethren and sisters with whom I was permitted to labor, in my recent Western tour, that I remember them with emotion of love and gratitude, and it is my earnest prayer to God that they may ever love their Bible, and have grace and wisdom to enable them to follow its pure and holy precepts. Love not the world neither the things that are in the world. Crucify the desire of the flesh—deny yourselves and take up your cross daily and follow Christ. Let your lives be written epistles read and known of all men, that others seeing your good works, may be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven.

L. E. B.

Letter from Bro. J. C. Bywater.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Agreeably to appointment I left Attica on the 5th of November, for the Cuba Conference;—arrived at Arkade the same evening; found the brethren there strong in the Lord. It was thought that our conference there a few weeks since, had done, and was still doing much, for the cause of truth—especially in removing prejudice from the people; may the Lord bless his truth, and give it a resurrection in their minds—Amen. On Friday morning, the 6th, I started in company with Bro. Tilden, the travelling being so bad we did not reach Cuba until near evening. On arriving, we found the brethren in anxious suspense, looking for us. Bro. Crawford of Chautauque county, had just arrived; Bro. Morley arrived the same evening, though not in time for the evening meeting. On Saturday, Bro. Robins in company with the Baptist minister of Friendship and some others came in.

This Conference, like many others I have recently attended, was accompanied with the divine blessing. Saints were quickened, and wanderers were reclaimed, who confessed that they could not live in the churches, and resolved on leaving them. The brethren all fearlessly declared their faith on the positive time of the Lord's coming, viz: at the termination of the 2300 days or years, or 1847 years from the birth of Christ, and think they know that it is nigh even at the door. The Baptist minister of Friendship, Bro. Holiday, declared his faith unequivocally in the general doctrines of the advent, as we believe and preach them, and declared himself with us on the subject.

We closed our Conference on Monday evening, and on Tuesday evening I preached at Friendship in the Baptist house. I here had the privilege of visiting with my good brother and true yoke-fellow, B. F. Robins and family. His health is rather better than it was a year ago, but is unable to preach much. On Wednesday evening I preached at Nile, in the Seventh Day Baptist house. The people seemed quite interested; one of their ministers, Bro. Green, one of their first men, Bro. Robins told me, had recently embraced the faith of Christ's speedy coming.

Bro. Morley left us at Cuba, and returned home on the account of sickness in his family.

Leaving Friendship, in company with Brn. Tilden and Crawford, we reached Spring Mills on Thursday evening. On Friday, at 2 o'clock P. M., our meeting commenced. Bro. Selden and a few brethren from his vicinity came in, and a number of brethren and sisters from Bingham. Pa. Bro. Davis was with us on the Sabbath. This Conference was truly one of interest to all, and of salvation to many. We had only to open our hearts and mouths to God and they were filled; indeed we had only commenced our meeting by prayer, when the Holy Ghost came down upon us, as it did upon our brethren at the beginning of the preaching of this good tidings. We closed our meeting on Tuesday evening. I baptised 12 at this Conference, and doubtless others will go forward soon, should time continue. Those who were recently converted, as well as all that went forward, came out of the water strong in the faith, and rejoicing in the blessed hope of soon seeing the King of Glory.

I am satisfied, my brethren, that while we tarry here, we have something to do; and I am further satisfied from the parabolical teaching of our Savior, from the 25th of Matt. and the 14th of Luke, that in the fulfilment of the gospel, we have got as far towards the kingdom and the accomplishment of our work as the highways and hedges, and there we shall be found when the house is filled and the Savior comes. Now is the compelling message—yes, and I bless and praise my heavenly Father that I feel the power of this message in my soul. But do you ask what is the power of this message? I will tell you: it is simply faith, based upon the immutable character of God, and which lives upon every word of God. Yes, I want you to understand that I have become just fool enough and fanatic enough (if I am tho't so) to believe that God means just what he says; and I must acknowledge, to the honor of God and his truth, that I have never felt so much of the power of God upon me as I have for the last few weeks; and I do praise God with all my soul for the advance in my faith.

I will now give you a little account of our conference at Hornby, which we closed on Monday, the 23d. After leaving Spring Mills and travelling about 50 miles, through the mud and rain—over hills and through valleys, we reached Bro. Pond's just at dark, on Thursday evening. On Friday our meeting commenced. We had indeed a refreshing time; the saints were truly hungry for the bread of life, and we truly felt that it was good to give the household their portion of meat in due season. We found a band here of 12 or more who were strong in the faith of the Lord's speedy coming, and are resolved to contend for the faith once declared to the saints.

Bro. H. H. Johnson was with us at this meeting. He was formerly a Methodist minister, but left them to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom. He lives in Bath, and has now gone to attend or answer the call of Bro. Sweet of Penn. I hope the brethren and friends where he goes, will see that his wants and those of his family are supplied.

Yours in hope,

J. C. BYWATER.

Hornby, Nov. 20th, 1846.

Letter from Bro. W. Silk.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Through the kindness of one of your subscribers, I have been privileged with the reading of your paper for some time, and must say I have often been comforted in perusing its columns. There are some points of doctrine contained in it, which I never as yet, have been able to see clearly—yet there are others which seem to comfort my soul. The latter is the literal kingdom of Christ and its locality—the former, the time of its establishment.

1st. The time I never concluded on. I however never have had any disposition to have the Lord delay his coming; for when he appears we shall be like him—for we shall see him as he is; and the sooner he does appear, the sooner will we appear with him in glory.

2d. The Kingdom of Christ and its locality. The kingdom.—There appears to be something more than a mere imaginary dream here. The kingdom. A kingdom implies that there must be certain parts to constitute it a kingdom, viz: a king, territory, subjects, capital. If the kingdom of God be literal, then it of necessity follows that these different parts must also be literal, real, and not spiritual or imaginary. How widely different is this from what we have been, and multitudes are now taught from the cushioned pulpits, by Doctors of Divinity, &c. in this and other lands. I see nothing in either reason or revelation, calculated to make such impressions on the minds of an intelligent people,—yet it is so. But glory be to Jesus! there are things in reserve for us beyond the philosophy of our collegiate educated D. D's—something real, substantial, eternal!

Nevertheless, we according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, where-in dwelleth righteousness. The apostle was looking forward to the final abode of the saints of God, and surely he did not mean that they should be carried to the skies, far beyond the innumerable worlds which revolve through immensity of space! Verily nay. The old world that then was being overflowed with water perished. The heavens and the earth that are now, are reserved, not for another deluge, but unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. Then there will be no ark built, such as was in the days of Noah; for if it were so, and even a few preserved in mortality, sin would after all have an existence; but one mighty sweep will be made by Jehovah, which will root up all things that offend; then notwithstanding, the old (anti-deluvian) world perished—and notwithstanding this world is reserved unto fire—notwithstanding it shall be burnt up and the things that therein are—notwithstanding the heavens and earth may pass away, and no place be found for them, yet, after all, we (simply) according to the promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. I have heard it urged that it would be a degradation to our Lord to reign on this earth. To this objection, however honestly it may be urged, I respectfully reply. He (Christ) thought it no degradation to assume human form—to live in a manger at Bethlehem—to linger a term of thirty-three years in privation, tribulation, and was betrayed, falsely accused, condemned and crucified as a malefactor; and think you, he would think it any degradation to him, to come as a mighty conqueror, to sway his sceptre from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth? would it be a degradation to him to fulfil his engagements with his Father, viz: to remove the curse and its effects? Nay: that will be not the least act of his, for which praise and glory, and honor shall be ascribed to him. How pleasing the thought, when we reflect on the coming glories of God's people—when all bodily infirmities will be for ever unknown; no sickness, no sorrow, no pain, no war, no slavery—no more shall be heard the sale of those for whom Christ died, for earthly corrupt gain; no—a King shall rule in righteousness—righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins; then shall we see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets, and apostles, and all the holy martyrs, who sealed with their blood their fidelity to truth. It is truly cheering to think of the society in the kingdom with Christ, the great benefactor in all his fulfilment glory, in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, before his ancients gloriously.

God grant, that when he appears, we may also appear with him in glory. W. SILK.

"The World is Growing Better."

I have not much to say to the man who fears not God, and makes no profession of religion, when he utters the above sentence. But if any one claiming the name of Christian thus speaks, he is either grossly ignorant, or a scandal to his profession. Just look at one sin, which, whoever commits, is as vile and guilty before God, as the thief or the murderer—the sin of taking the name of God in vain. The extent to which this breach of God's holy law reaches, is overwhelmingly awful. Two-thirds of the male population of this country are swearers, excluding infants. We cannot estimate them at a less proportion. Thus this number of beings are as atrocious sinners as so many thieves, adulterers, or murderers. Thousands of oaths per day are uttered by single persons, men and young boys. Their damnation slumbereth not!

As a Snare.

If our Master should come on some of the days which are now passing away, would not 'that day' be 'as a snare' to all! some perhaps are looking forward to the spring in such a manner as to neglect the present, some are looking back and doubting and wondering about the past; while many are not looking at all. But how blessed will be the condition of those good and faithful ones whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching. In the language of the hymn, let us say to ourselves—

"My soul be on thy guard,
Ten thousand foes arise;
The hosts of hell are pressing hard
To draw thee from the skies."

'Well,' says some fearful soul, 'I will try to be on my guard—but how shall I try?' Shall I say, only believe? The reply, perhaps, from some would be, 'That is too simple, and yet too hard.' The Lord says, 'If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established,' (Isa. 7: 9) and 'If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.' Mar. 9: 23.) O, words of comfort, full of spirit and life! 'Have faith in God.' 'And, says Jesus—'Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you.' Amazing condescension! as though he would breathe away all our troubles and fears, by his divine simplicity and kindness;—'I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.' Even so, come Lord Jesus! B. MORLEY.

MISCELLANY.

THE CENTRE OF THE UNIVERSE.—Dr. Mæder, of the Dorpat Observatory, in Russia, announces that the discovery of the grand central star, or sun round which our sun, with all its planets, and the other suns with theirs, if they have any, revolve. It is the star Alcyone, one of the Pleiades. It has long been known to astronomers, that the fixed stars have a proper motion. Guided by the observations of the elder Herschell, as to the figure of that stratum of stars to which our sun belongs, Dr. M. has been led to look for a star which would fulfil the conditions required by the observed motions as a centre, and has satisfied himself that the star Alcyone fulfils the conditions better than any other.

According to the doctor's rough approximation, the distance of the great centre is thirty four million times that of the sun, and the time of the sun's revolution is 18,200,000 years. Light, traveling at the rate of twelve millions of miles per minute, would be five hundred and thirty years coming from the great centre.—Chronotype.

Evangelical Alliance.

At a meeting held at Edinburgh, in Dr. Brown's church, last week, for the purpose of hearing a lecture from the veteran, Dr. Chalmers, on the education of the working classes, the Doctor spoke as follows, relative to the Evangelical Alliance:—

"I have no thought that the Evangelical Alliance will keep together; for a thousand Christian ministers have been sent up to London to pray for union, while, notwithstanding all their prayers for such a consummation, they have separated without making one single effort by way of fulfilling the last injunction of our Savior, by 'going into all the world and preaching the gospel to every creature.' I am for something of a substantial nature. If it could have been reported that they had agreed to a particular course of action, that would have been something gratifying; but no such report was ever furnished. If the sixteen ministers who went up to London from this city had returned warm from the Evangelical Alliance with some plan of action for their respective congregations, in uniting together in one great and common effort for Christianizing the people around them, I say this would have been a trophy. If it is all to be mere speechifying, I predict that it will be a perfect futility."

A London Correspondent of the New York Recorder, a Baptist paper, says of this famous Convention, 'My present conviction is, that the Alliance is at an end;' and again, 'One of the most distinguished Englishmen in the Alliance, and the most popular preacher in London, has at last been constrained to pronounce the Evangelical Alliance—a humbug.'

Dr. Davidson, of the Lancashire Independent College, has withdrawn from the Evangelical Alliance, and has published a letter in the London Patriot, assigning the reasons of his retirement.

He objects particularly to the eight and ninth article of the basis of union, the former of which excludes the Quakers and Plymouth Brethren from the Alliance, while the latter asserts the immortality of the soul, and the eternity of future punishments.

RETROCESSION.—Saxony, the cradle of the Reformation, is now the centre of Rationalism in Germany; as Geneva, the city of Calvin, has become the focus of Arianism and semi-intidelity with respect to all the Protestant countries which speak the French language. Thus, too, the most corrupt of modern cities in Christendom is the same Rome whence the gospel, in primitive times, was propagated to the West. Should not all this teach us to put no trust in "the things which are seen and temporal," but to look to Him only who sits above the heavens, and is the Author and Finisher of our faith?—Prot. Witness.

M. RONGE.—M. Ronge, the founder of the German Catholic Sect, was some time since condemned to one month's imprisonment for having preached in public at Lahn, though prohibited from doing so by the authorities. He has just received full pardon from the King of Prussia. M. Ronge continues preaching in the different towns of Silesia, and attracts large audiences.

THE THREATENED FAMINE IN EUROPE.—All the religious denominations of the British Island have appointed services and prayers suitable to times of famine. The Scotch and other dissenting churches are holding fast days—the Episcopal churches are using a form of prayer drawn up by the Archbishop of Canterbury—the Catholic churches all have special services—the Jews are using a prayer issued by Rabbi Adler, and all other sects in their aspirants to Almighty God, to avert the horrors of famine which now threaten the nations of the old world.

We say valuable, because it is not only what its title purports it to be, but it highly interests the tender and untutored minds which it is designed to benefit. We think it not only worthy of an introduction into families where there are small children, but a valuable accession to our Sabbath School Libraries.

The Music of Heaven.

BY GOODWYN BARNBY.

The holy prophets say that heaven will be a singing choir;
I reverence the prophets' tongues are lit with fire;
And when they say that heaven will be an orchestra wide,
I feel a song within my heart, and strike my lyre with pride;
For oh, I ever pray the prayer, by blessed Jesus given,
"Thy will be done, our Father, on earth as 'tis in heaven."

This earth will be hinnoma; this earth will be a psalm,
When all the discords of our hearts are harmonized in calm;
This earth will be a concert as of myriad angel throats,
When Love, the great musician, plays on willing human notes;
When life is music then the truth that prophets forth have given,
Will be; for earth will then become a harmony, a heaven.

Not that, O Lyre! thy tones can rise no higher than the earth,
But that the poet-child must sing first at its place of birth.
Then travel forth as troubador, thro' countries and thro' years,
As thou, O Earth! doth mingle with the music of the spheres;
For they must be prepared below to whom gold harps are given,
And have deep music in their souls to join the choir of heaven.

Time of the Second Advent.

BY T. R. BIRK, M. A.

FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND.

In the previous chapters it has been shewn, by clear and full evidence of Scripture, that there is a time, still future, of holy blessedness to the Church of God here below. Whether we confine this hope to the period of the millennium only, or extend it, which is the juster view, to the ages that will follow, in either case the general doctrine continues firm and unshaken. The lips of prophets and apostles, from the beginning have assured us of its truth. They announce, with one consent, a time of restitution of all things, when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the seas."

An inquiry of deep interest still remains; and one which involves great and important lessons to the whole world. Is the coming of our Lord, that great hope of the Church, to introduce this time of blessedness, or only to follow, after an interval of at least a thousand years? On this important question the views of pious people differ widely at the present hour. And yet we shall find, I am persuaded, on examination, that the evidence of Scripture is clear, decisive and full; and points, in every part alike, to the same conclusion.

There are two remarks, however, which appear necessary to clear the way for this important inquiry. And first, it is a question totally distinct from all reasonings or conjectures as to the precise date of the Lord's advent. That day and that hour may remain, even to the last, partially concealed; though doubtless increasing light will be given to the Church, in proportion as the end is drawing near. But the light may never, perhaps, be so full as to enable Christians to assign the year or the day, until the very eve of our Savior's return. The inquiry relates simply to the place of the advent in the wide outline of God's dispensations. Are a thousand years, or are they not, certainly to intervene before the Son of Man is revealed from heaven? This is clearly a lawful subject for earnest inquiry. It seems to be the bounden duty of every Christian, since he is commanded to be waiting for his Lord, to search whether the Scriptures have anywhere revealed to us so long a period of delay. Till this great question is decided, we cannot interpret aright, and therefore cannot rightly obey, an oft-repeated commandment of the word of God.

Again, the form in which the question is often stated is the following. Will the Second Advent be pre-millennial or post-millennial? But since the millennium, as such, is mentioned in one passage only, it seems desirable to express the alternative in a more general form. Let us assume only, as an admitted truth, that, whether for a short or long period, there is a future time of blessedness here on earth, the subject of repeated promises in Holy Scripture. Is the Advent of our Lord to introduce this time of blessedness; or to follow long after it has begun? Such is the real nature of the alternative; and it remains for us to examine the evidence which the word of God, almost in every part, supplies for its decision.

I. First, let us consider the passage itself where the Millennium is expressly revealed. Rev. 19: 20. The future blessedness of the Church is there set before us with greater chronological distinctness than in any other place. And where, in the context of this vision, do we find the advent of our Lord introduced? The answer to the inquiry is very plain. A full and distinct narrative of the Lord's appearing from heaven is detailed by the prophet, just before the millennium, and forms its immediate introduction. On the other hand, after the millennium there is not found one syllable in the prophecy expressive of such an advent. The testimony of this fundamental vision is decisive and complete.

It may be affirmed, no doubt, that the Advent in chapter 19 is figurative only, and that a real advent occurs after the millennium, when Satan has been loosed, and the fire descends from heaven. But the stubborn fact remains unaltered, that the vision expressly reveals an advent in the former place, and in the latter passes it by in silence. To maintain the theory we have to commit a double violence. We have to explain away the advent where it appears openly, and in plain terms, in the prophecy, and we have to introduce it where the Holy Spirit gives no token of its occurrence. It is difficult to see how any interpretation could be censured, with more justice, as both adding to, and taking away from the words of the prophecy.

Let any Christian read the two chapters in question, laying aside every previous notion, and with a simple desire to hear the voice of God's Spirit, and I see not how he can escape from the evident conclusion. The Second Advent of our Lord, as described in the latest prophecy of Scripture, does not follow, but precedes, the millennial kingdom.

II. A second argument of great force may be drawn from the silence of the New Testament. Probably more than a hundred passages occur, where the return of our Lord is held out to the eye of faith, as the great object of expectation to the church of God. And yet in no single passage do we find any intimation that a thousand years of joy and blessedness were to intervene. Is such a silence credible, if the millennium were in reality to precede the Advent? On the other hand, if the Advent be pre-millennial, the silence on this point will be simply and easily explained. The hope of the millennium will then be included as a part within the whole, in the expectation of the Advent itself, and of that glorious kingdom of our Lord which is afterwards to ensue.

Indeed the whole character and tone of the promises which relate to the Second Advent is entirely opposed to the existence of any such interval of earthly blessedness. Their uniform announcement is, trial and affliction until the Lord shall appear; and then, deliverance, glory and honor to all His true servants.

III. The descriptions which are given us of the state of the true Church, until the Savior returns, are another powerful argument for the same view. It is described as a little flock, and a remnant according to the election of grace. The gate is straight, and the way is narrow that leads unto life. Through much tribulation the followers of Christ have to enter into the kingdom of God. The rest of the Church from trouble is only "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed with His mighty angels." The age in which they live is called "the present evil age," one from which Christ has died to deliver them. Their privileges, in "the present time," are joined with "persecutions." And in several places the heaviest afflictions seem to be announced at the last, before the coming of the Lord.

Now, if all the glory and peace of the Church follow on the return of the Lord, these various declarations are clear and consistent. No force requires then to be put upon them, to reconcile them with the millennial hope of the Church.—On the opposite supposition a large part of the New Testament must be superseded, and be no longer applicable to the experience of the Church, long before the dispensation of grace has been closed by the appearing of the Lord.

IV. Let us now consider more in detail, the passages in the Gospels which refer to the same subject. Every hint which these furnish will be found to point, uniformly to the same conclusion. None of them imply, and several of them appear to exclude a millennium of rest to the Church before the return of the Savior.

1. In the sermon on the Mount, we have one of the first allusions to the day of Christ, (Matt. 7: 21, 22.) And it is instructive to observe the truths with which it is most nearly connected.—It is prefaced by our Lord's declaration that the way of life is straight and narrow, and by a solemn warning against false prophets. So far as the context warrants any inference, it shuts out the prospect of general holiness, or any triumphant extirpation of false doctrine, until that day of Christ shall appear.

2. The parable of the wheat and the tares, (Matt. 13: 24—30, 36—42) leads us clearly to the same view. The intermixture continues unbroken and undisturbed, till the "end of the age," when the angels came forth as the reapers.—There is no intimation that the corn-field of the Church will be cleansed or purified long before the separation in judgment.

3. The promise of our Lord to his apostles, (Matt. 19: 28) points, not obscurely to the same truth. A regeneration, or time of renovation to the world is there predicted. But this will not be fulfilled, until our Lord himself shall sit upon the throne of his glory. There is no room, therefore, left for a millennium or regeneration of the world, before his appearing.

4. The prophecy on the Mount of Olives, (Matt. 24) bears with equal plainness on the same inquiry. Comparing the words in St. Luke, we see that the course of events is continued, through the times of the Gentiles, down to the troubles of the last days, and a tribulation which is immediately followed by the coming of the Lord. There is no room whatever left in the prophecy for a long millennium of peace and rest to intervene. Jerusalem does not cease to be trodden down till the signs appear in the firmament, which announce the presence of the Son of Man. The same remarks apply to the prophecy as it occurs in all the first three evangelists. In each of them the times of affliction are described to us as immediately followed by the Lord's advent.

5. The instructions to the Church, in St. Luke (12: 31—46,) import evidently the same truth. The followers of Christ are there described as a little flock, even till their Lord returns. They are exhorted to be in that continual readiness for his coming, which is inconsistent with the knowledge that a thousand years would intervene. The bare impression of a certain and long delay is treated as at once a cause and an effect of apostasy. The whole passage shuts out the expectation of universal holiness, to last for a long period before the Lord shall come.

6. The words of Christ to the Pharisees and the disciples, (Luke 17: 20—28,) are of similar import. Two events only are specified, out of those which precede the Advent—the sufferings and rejection of Christ among the Jews; and a time, like that before the flood of Noah, of prevailing ungodliness in the world. The whole tenor of our Savior's warning forbids us to introduce an event so entirely contrasted in its nature as a thousand years of spiritual prosperity.

7. The parable of our Lord, (Luke 19: 11—24) on his last approach to Jerusalem, is even still more distinct and clear. It was spoken with the express design of clearing away false impressions from the minds of his followers. Yet it teaches us, in plain terms, that the hatred of the citizens will continue until the King returns and enters openly on his dominion. No interval of rest and holiness for a thousand years can here be inserted without entirely reversing the impression of the whole.

8. The parting words of Christ concerning St. John the beloved disciple, (John 21: 22,) are perhaps too obscure to form a basis of distinct argument. Yet, indirectly, they seem to furnish a confirmation of the previous remarks. Whatever their precise import, one thing is clear, that our Lord, when he uttered them, designed to keep alive the expectation of his own speedy return till the very close of that apostle's lifetime. But to suppose that the millennium, revealed so plainly to St. John in the Apocalypse, was before the Advent, would completely reverse and destroy the former lesson. And, in strict accordance with this remark, for many centuries after the Apocalypse was given such an exposition of the millennial vision appears never once to have been proposed.

Thus every passage which bears on the subject in the Gospels leads naturally to the same conclusion, and forbids us to look for the promised millennium of peace, till He, who is the Prince of Peace, shall himself return to establish his own kingdom. (To be Continued.)

We need not care how short our passage out of this life is, so that it be safe: never any traveller complained that he came too soon to his journey's end.

Watchfulness.

"I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and watch and see what he will say unto me."

There is a great day fast approaching, and a mighty storm fast gathering, to be poured upon a guilty world! An army of 'mighty ones,' clad in that bright equipage of heaven's armory, are soon to be commissioned to gather the 'harvest' of the world—the 'wheat into the garner,' and the 'tares in bundles to be burned.'

Dear reader, come, and let us take a walk around the watch-towers of the professed Watchmen of Israel's camp, (just before this host of 'mighty angels' are 'revealed in flaming fire,' to 'take vengeance' on an unbelieving world) and see how many of the watchmen are Habakkuk-like, standing upon the watch-tower. I will accompany you first to the 'great Babylon' (nominal Christendom) of the 'last days'—that has 'waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies,' and see where we will find her watchmen. Let us visit the several departments, divisions, and sub-divisions of this 'great city,' and view the several conditions and employments of the professed church of Christ, and see if we are not warranted by the pen of inspiration, to expect such a state of things in these last days of perilous times. See her numerous synagogues, with their steeples towering heavenwards, like 'Babel's' tower,—modern heathenism! See those splendid mansions—sumptuous apparel—shining equipage! But stop! we must not stop to describe the outward appearance of the city, but let us enter through the gates (if peradventure we can be admitted without the 'mark' or the 'number of his name'—we can, doubtless, if we do not want to 'buy or sell,') and take a hasty view of its inmates—their employments, transactions, &c. Come, let us first ascend those flight of stairs to the top of this mighty wall, and visit yonder watch-tower and converse a few moments with the watchman. But it appears to be vacated! Oh! verily, it has been forsaken many days—the trumpet laid aside, and all is solitary! Let us go on to the next. This is also forsaken! And to the next. No watchman here! Let us go to another. What mean those stones, clubs, and brickbats, scattered about here? Ah! methinks this watchman has been compelled to leave the wall of this 'Babylon,' because he saw the sword coming, and gave the alarm! He has been smitten and driven off, by his fellow-servant, that did not like to hear his cry! He has gone to give the alarm to those that will heed his warning voice.

But are there no sentinels on the walls of this great city? Not one! Where are they? Let us descend, and go through the streets and lanes of the city, and see whether we can hear any tidings from them. See! the streets are thronged with crowds, making their way to that splendid synagogue! What is to be done there? Let us go and see. Ah! there is a 'pic nic party' assembling to raise a 'donation' for the minister, and to partake of the rich viands, with which their dinner tables are spread! Let us step in a moment and behold the scene. See the professed followers of Christ, mingling with the worldlings! How shall we distinguish between them? by their dress? Nay, verily! there is no distinguishing mark there! Does the world dress in gay apparel? the professor follows in the train! Is the world proud and haughty? so are they! Can we tell them by their conversation? No, no! they have become so amalgamated together that it is about impossible to tell them apart! Methinks were Paul to step in and look at them, he would say they were guilty of all the sins mentioned in his second epistle and 3d chapter to Timothy. Are the ministers there? Yes! they are at the head of the company—they 'overpass the deeds of the wicked,' and were the prophet Isaiah here,

I apprehend he would rebuke them sharply, and call them all greedy dogs, which can never have enough—and they are shepherds that cannot understand—they all look to their own way, every one for his gain from his quarter. Come ye, say they, I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink, and to-morrow shall be as this day and much more abundant.'

But let us leave this scene, and go on a little farther. Here we find in another part of the city, the streets thronged with multitudes. And where are they going? Why, they are going to hear the 'funeral sermon' of what they call 'Millenarism' preached. That servant that was stoned from the wall, created an excitement before he left, and the 'blind watchmen' are going to put out the 'wild fire,' to put down this 'fanaticism,' and to preach its 'funeral sermon!' Let us go and see their congregation in a few moments. Of what are they composed? Of cold professors, liars, drunkards, thieves, robbers, fornicators—all the wicked rabble of the land! 'They are a rebellious people—lying children—children that will not hear the law of the Lord, which say to the Seers, see not, and to the prophets, prophesy not unto us right things; speak unto us smooth things—prophesy deceits.' The prophets are ready to preach to them deceits and smooth things, and cry 'peace, peace'—the 'world must be converted'—the 'Jews return,' &c. &c., and deal out their poisonous opiates, to quell the fears of the guilty, and rock them in a profound slumber on the brink of woe! What think you would Paul say, were he to speak? Ah! methinks he would thunder in their ears, 'sudden destruction cometh!' Well might the prophet Isaiah say, 'His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant, [willingly] they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.'

But we must leave this scene of scoffing, and pass on to another division. Let us take a walk to the parade ground—see! here is a man bearing the title of 'Rev. Captain,' training his men all the week to fight, and take the heart's blood of their fellow-men; then on the Sabbath, pretends to teach them how to use the 'armor of light!' Horrid abominations! trying to make the spirit of war and the spirit of Jesus, reign in the same bosom!

Come, let us hurry to another division, that composes this 'great city,' and behold another scene. Oh! say you, don't go any farther! I am already sick at heart because of the wicked abominations which I have seen! I don't wonder you feel misgivings at the sight of such horrid crimes. But this is not all. Let us just step to the market—see! the auctioneer has mounted the stand. Something is now to be sold at public auction. What is it? Oh! horrors! a human being! What! to be sold as a slave? Yes, sold to the highest bidder, just as any other articles of merchandise, or beasts of the stall are sold! See the heavings, and hear the sighs and groans, and witness the tears and bitter sobbings of that tender mother, as she is torn from the tender embrace of her children, and the endearing ties of conjugal affection are severed—and the poor victim is hurried off under the smarting lash of those cruel monsters! Ravenous wolves! Murderers! Man-stealers! &c. &c. 'But stop sir,' says a religionist, 'you call our Christians hard names.' Christians! did you call them? Blasphemy! they act more like the inhabitants of the infernal pit, than followers of Christ! Bearing the sacred name of 'Christians!' Tyrants! disgracing the holy religion of Jesus! They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity. Trafficing in 'slaves and souls of men!' How exactly has the 'beloved disciple' described the 'Babylon' of the 'last days.'

We must not tarry within her walls any longer, to enumerate her sins, transactions, &c. We have said quite enough, without saying anything about the political strife, of her appointed fast days, &c.

Come, let us hurry out of this sink of iniquity—this 'hold of every foul spirit, and cage of every unclean and hateful bird.' Now where are the watchmen, that were placed upon the walls to sound the alarm? Have they not come down from the watch-tower, and made a compromise with the world? Do they not sacrifice the truth to gratify their own desires and lusts? Are they not trying to gain a high reputation, and loud sounding titles? Who, that is in any degree acquainted with the present condition of the different denominations and their clergy, can answer in the negative? But why are they in such a cold, lifeless condition? I know of no better reason, than 'where their treasure is, there will their heart be also.' And to use the language of Paul concerning Moses, reversed, 'esteeming the riches of the world greater treasures than the reproach of Christ,' they have become Demas-like, having 'loved this present world,'—they have turned away from the truth unto fables.' Let this suffice at present. We must leave them, and see if there is any watchmen any where, that can give us the time of night and fearlessly declare the truth.

See on the wall of yonder little city, that watchman with the trumpet in his hand, sounding the alarm, and watching continually. Let us draw near and salute him, and have a few moments' conversation with him—

Visitant—'Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?'

Watchman—'The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye—return, come.'

Vis.—'Why do you stand continually on the wall night and day?'

Watch.—'Because, my master has 'left his house, and gone into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return; and he gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work—and commanded the porter to watch.'

Vis.—'Are you expecting his return soon?'

Watch.—'Yes; every hour, I expect to hear the rumbling of his chariot wheels.'

Vis.—'What reasons have you for such an expectation?'

Watch.—'He left on record 'signs' of his return by which we can know when he 'is nigh, even at the doors.'

Vis.—'Have those 'signs' been seen?'

Watch.—'They have! and the next thing we may expect, is the appearance of the Bridegroom.'

Vis.—'Has yonder 'great city' heard the news of his coming?'

Watch.—'Yes; I was once numbered among her watchmen, and while looking over the records that were left me by my master, I read there the signs that were to precede his return. I also found prophetic numbers, at the termination of which, his return might be expected, to establish his kingdom, and slay all his enemies. I saw that those periods were about ending—the signs were fulfilling—and I accordingly sounded the alarm—'Behold the Bridegroom cometh!'

Vis.—'What was the result?'

Watch.—'Why they were willing to hear awhile, but they had got so immersed in the world, and the master had been so long absent, that the news of his return was a very unwelcome sound in their ears; and they soon fell to beating their fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, and cry 'my lord delayeth his coming, &c., and I was scoffed at and ridiculed, and finally I was excommunicated, and cast out as an evil-doer.'

Vis.—'But is there any safety or promise for those that are cast without the limits of their protection?'

Watch.—'Yes; read Isa. 66: 5—2 Cor. 6: 14—18—Rev. 18: 4, &c.'

Vis.—'But have you not lost all your reputation?'

Watch.—'Jesus become of 'no reputation'—am I better than he?'

Vis.—'But you have lost all the honor and applause of the world!'

Watch.—'I care not for that. Jesus has said, 'If any man serve me, him will my Father honor.'

Vis.—'But you are subjected to the cold rains of adversity, and the furious storms of persecution,—you are a mark for the enemy, and a by-word and gazing stock for the multitude, &c.'

Watch.—'Well, I have also 'exceeding great and precious promises.' 'I glory in tribulation;' and the assurance that if I am faithful a 'little while,' and 'endure to the end'—give to each their 'portion of meat in due season'—to watch and pray always,' I shall be made 'ruler over all my master's 'goods,' and that I shall be a king in his kingdom, and 'inherit all things,' cheers my drooping spirit, and arouses my drowsy powers, and gives a new spring to my joy! I am determined to stand unmoved until Jesus says, 'it is enough—come up higher!' Amen.

O my brethren, let us be like the watchman on the tower—continually watching. Let us remember the admonition, 'Watch ye therefore—lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping.' 'And what I say unto you, I say unto all—watch.'—'The night is far spent, the day is at hand,' 'Therefore, let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober.' We see the awful condition and danger those are in, that have rejected the glorious truth of a coming Savior! they are now slumbering on the last end of earth's great drama; and soon will their doom be fixed to all eternity. Let us avoid the fatal snare, and be on our watch. S. I. ROSEY.

Qualifications for the Kingdom of God.

Matt. 7: 21—23: 'Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many shall say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity.' From these words we learn, that many when Christ shall come to establish his kingdom, will be shut out, who were fondly expecting to gain an entrance. Not, however, because they had not exerted themselves, and labored for salvation—for we are told, that in pleading for an entrance, they would hold up their many prayers, exhortations and wonderful works they had done in the name of Christ, as though they would reproach him with disregarding his promises, for shutting them out the kingdom, after all their efforts and labors in his cause. Agonizing indeed must be the situation of that individual, who had supposed himself safely on the way that leads to life, to find himself at last disappointed, and the Lord of glory refuse him an entrance into the kingdom of God, whom he had supposed that he was serving.

Christ has told us that many shall be in this awful situation at his coming—he has told us of this fact that we may take heed and beware, lest we also be among the number. But he has not left us to wander through this world in darkness; he has given us a test by which we may know whether we shall gain an entrance into the kingdom of God: It is doing the will of his Father in heaven.

One of the great errors of the present day, is substituting happy feelings as evidences of true religion, instead of obedience to the will of God.

A great effort is made to get up an excitement, to arouse the careless; and when sinners begin to cry out for mercy, they are taught that when the burden is removed, and joy and peace flow into the soul, this is conversion. Thus they oftentimes pray and labor for a long time, to obtain these happy feelings—and when obtained, are looked upon as certain evidences of conversion. Under such circumstances, it is not to be wondered at that Satan should transform himself into an angel of light, and pour into their minds joy and peace, without their ever submitting to take upon themselves the yoke of Christ. Thus they go on from year to year, feeding their hopes upon feeling. If their feelings wane, they think themselves on the decline—but if they feel happy, they are sure of heaven.

From such revivals as this, have the ranks of the nominal churches been filled. Having never taken the yoke of Christ, of course they do not walk in his commands. To be sure, joy and peace are some of the fruits of the spirit; if we obey God fully in all things, joy and peace will certainly follow. But joy and peace without perfect submission to God's will, and implicit obedience to all his commands, are the devils counter-parts. In proof we will refer to Gal. 5: 22. 'But the fruit of the spirit, is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance—against such there is no law.'—Thus we see that the first exhibition of conversion is love. Now there is spurious as well as true love; how shall we know then which of the two is the genuine? By the word of God we have an unerring rule by which to measure all pretensions to love,—as love is the crowning grace of all, all the others will of necessity follow.

As sure as water will seek its level and the law of gravitation will draw falling matter to the earth, so sure will genuine love produce all the other fruits of the spirit. John, 14: 21—'He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me—and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him—I will manifest myself to him.' Judas not understanding his meaning, saith, 'Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?' 'Jesus answered and said unto him, if a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him.' The Lord explains his meaning, by teaching his disciples that those who exhibited their love toward him by keeping his commandments, his Father would love, and they would come and make their abode with them. Now this coming of the Father and Son to abide with his children, can be none other than the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the new earth—when the tabernacle of God shall be with men—when the throne of God and the Lamb shall illumine the city of the New Jerusalem. In this then consists the joy of the Christian—the hope of the glorious reward that awaits him, at the second coming of Christ. Instead then of joy and peace and happy feelings being evidences of abiding in Christ, we find them but the fruits of obedience. The evidence of love being obedience, and joy called into exercise by the promise of the love of God to be manifested towards his people at his coming. Christ teaches us farther in ver. 24, 'He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings.' By this rule we must decide that all who keep not his commands, do not love him. 1 John, 3: 6—'Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not—whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him:' also, 5: 2—'By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments.' Christ told the Jews on a certain occasion that he did not judge them—that is he would not then do it, but the words that he spoke should judge them at the last day. Thus we find that the words or commands of Christ, will be the test by which every individual must be tried: no professions of love or zealous labors in the cause of Christ, will avail anything, unless it can abide this trial. This is the truth that Christ wished to teach by the words we have taken as the head of this subject; none but those that do the will of his Father, can gain an entrance into the kingdom of God.

Dear brethren and sisters, who are looking for the Savior's coming, how is it with you? Can you stand this test? I greatly fear that some who profess to be looking for the return of their Lord, will be among that multitude, who will meet with such bitter disappointment; because their love will not be the genuine, cannot stand the trial of that unerring rule—obedience to all the commands of Christ. Your minds have dwelt much on the evidences of Christ's speedy coming—the evidence warrants you in believing that it is nigh, even at the door; you expect soon to receive the inheritance of the saints—but have you as earnestly sought for light from the word, to learn whether you were fully prepared for an entrance into the kingdom of God, as you have to learn that it is nigh, even at the door? Surely this was one great thing Christ referred to, when he commanded us to watch and pray always—or why did he hold up as a motive, that we might escape those things that are coming on the earth and stand before the Son of man? He knows the danger and has warned us to beware. Yes, there is a feast prepared, an inheritance just ready to be revealed—but what will it avail us, if not qualified to receive it?

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, DECEMBER 23, 1846.

The Church at the First and Second Advents. (Concluded.)

Having shown in some previous articles the striking similarity between the Jewish church at the first and the Gentile church at the second advent of Christ, in conclusion we will say—

1. That there is a striking similarity in the character and condition of the first Christians, or believers in the first advent, and those who have been and still are believers in the second advent of Christ.—We cannot go into a minute detail of the points of similarity; a bare reference to some of the prominent facts in the case will be sufficient to convince every understanding unprejudiced mind that the resemblance is very striking.

In both cases, at first, converts in a short time became numerous; but disappointments and trials soon reduced their numbers. Holiness of life, purity of doctrine, simplicity of worship, strong faith, true benevolence, commendable zeal, disinterested love, strict observance of the ordinances, diligent study of the Scriptures, and a joyful hope were prominent characteristics in both cases. Their treatment from the nominal church and the world has also been similar. In a word, with the exception of certain gifts and miracles necessary for confirming the truth of Christianity at its first proclamation, the early Christians, and those who are now looking for the appearing of Christ, in point of character and condition, very much resemble each other. We do not say that the first are typical of the second, but inasmuch as their circumstances are similar, it affords an evidence that the latter are in the truth, and, that certain instructions given to the first may with strict propriety be imparted to the last.

2. There is a striking similarity in the political condition of the world in the two cases. Near the first advent, universal peace prevailed among the nations of the earth, or to that degree that wars offered no impediment to the universal proclamation of the 1st advent. No national barrier has been thrown in the way of the proclamation of the 2nd coming of Christ. The angel having the everlasting gospel to preach to 'every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,' has performed and is performing his quick and important work, and nothing of this kind has intervened to hinder his heavenly flight. To facilitate this last work of love and mercy for a perishing world, the winds of bloody national strife have been held by the irrevocable decree of the Almighty; and will be restrained until the servants of God are all sealed, or the work of redemption is finished. The similarity is striking indeed; and we doubt not that the hand of God has made the two cases so much alike.

3. We will now look at the instruction given to the early Christians, and its peculiar adaptation to those who are now looking for the soon return of their Lord. We admit that there is instruction in the New Testament that specially if not exclusively belongs to the early Christians: that some counsel was given for the benefit of Christians of the last days; that the greater portion of the divine teaching is suited and was designed for the good of Christians of every age—these things we readily admit. But that the Bible does contain certain instruction which was given to the early saints, relative to their duty to the Jewish church, which is specially suited to the wants of the humble Christian now, relative to his duty to the Gentile church, we think is quite certain. A small portion of this last named instruction we will now notice.

We will commence with Paul's letter to the Galatians. We must first understand the design of the epistle—what was it? It was to prevent apostasy from Christianity to Judaism. In the Savior's day, as has been shown in a previous article, the Jews possessed a wicked, or selfish proselyting spirit. The same principle actuated them in the days of Paul, and the primitive saints. It seems that it was not only attempted to bring the disciples fully over to Judaism, but an effort was made to do it in part, to amalgamate parts of the Jewish law with the Gospel. What does Paul do in a case like this?—Does he tell his brethren if they are yet in the Jewish church peaceably to remain there if they can only enjoy their liberties? Or does he enter into a compromise with Judaism on any principle whatever? Let him speak for himself.

Gal. 1: 6-9. 'I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel, which is not another, but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached, let him be accursed.'

The gospel, the glad tidings of the first advent, was something, everything or nothing with Paul: it was everything, and Judaism was not only nothing, or abolished, but he who preached it subverted the gospel, and was liable to be accursed when the Lord should come. It is so with the second advent message: it is something, everything, or it is nothing, worse than nothing. We fully believe it is everything, or the great, glorious, and crowning truth of the Bible, while the opposing doctrines of the Gentile church are fables, and tend to subvert this heavenly truth.

Gal. 4: 17. 'They [the Judaizers] zealously affect you [Christians] but not well; yea, they would exclude you, that ye might affect them.' Chapt. 6: 12, 13. 'They [the Judaizers] constrain you to be circumcised; only lest they should suffer persecution for the erors of Christ. For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law, but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh.'

This is faithful dealing, characteristic of a true servant of Jesus Christ. The whole secret is told—and the deception of the Judaizers is fully exposed. They were zealous, it is true, for their cause in proselyting to Judaism; but the object was the gratification of sectarian selfishness: 'that you may affect them,'—may add to their numbers, wealth, influence, &c. They wish to glory in your flesh, the influence of your person, more than rejoice in the salvation of your soul. This is sectarianism to the life in these last days, and no one will dare deny it. And we should shun all of its baneful deceptive and dangerous influences wherever we may meet them.

Chapt. 5: 2. 'Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing.' Verse 4. 'Christ has become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace.' Verse 8. 'This persuasion [Judaism] cometh not of him that calleth you.'—Verse 12. 'I would that they were even cut off which trouble you.'

What! if they went back to Judaism, or had anything to do with it, would Christ profit them nothing, become of no effect to them? So talks the faithful and inspired Paul. And more, such an act would be considered evidence that they were fallen from grace. And a doctrine which would effect a work like this was denounced as not being of Christ. And those who propagated it the apostle wishes were 'even cut off.'

Though poor finite erring mortals, however holy and guided by the truth now, cannot and should not presume to exercise apostolic power over those who 'trouble' the saints with deceptive and subversive doctrines of the Gentile church, yet it is their duty we believe to faithfully show the disciples of Christ, the pernicious tendency of those doctrines; the selfish motives by which their advocates are actuated, in propagating them; and the sad consequence of embracing them after being enlightened by the truth.

Said Paul to his Hebrew brethren, 'If we sin wilfully [apostatize to Judaism] after that we have received a knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries—It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.' Heb. 10: 26-31. Fearful for apostates, but joyful to the true Christian.

But why could they not be renewed again? Because they had 'trodden under foot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith they were sanctified, an unholy thing, and had done despite unto the spirit of grace.' They had rejected Christianity, with all of the evidences of its divinity. No more convincing evidences of its truth, than had been already offered, could be given; the highest motive to be a disciple of Christ had been presented received and then rejected. An inspired apostle could do no more for them, or present a higher motive and more convincing evidence than he had already offered; hence it was impossible to affect, or renew them again.

Is not this fearful warning peculiarly suited to the condition of those who apostatize from the true advent faith? We think it is. They have had set before them the highest motive to be ready to meet their Lord, which the word of inspiration can present—and the most weighty evidence which can be offered, has been set before them of the truth of this doctrine. They have heard and believed, and those who rejected the message, apostatized, are now unmoved by it. It seems impossible to arouse them to faith and action again. Their condition is fearful.

—and oh, what a fearful thing it will be for such ones to fall into the hands of the living God!

Though the Gentile church may hold out the strongest inducements in her power, for us to apostatize from the true faith and hope of the gospel, the soon appearing of Christ and his kingdom, and to come under her banner, let us take heed to the divine warning, and 'stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage,' remembering 'if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.' May we not be of those 'who draw back to perdition, but of them who believe to the saving of the soul.'

Bro. J. B. Cook's Article.

The general sentiment advocated by Bro. Cook, in an article from him on another page, we fully endorse, with the exception of the wrong application of the parable of the ten virgins. To make that parable a history of the advent movement, we must do, as Bro. Cook has done, make the work of the 'breaking up of the band,'—'of heaven.' Now the advent band, so called, was, before this breaking up took place, a band of brothers, united in the holy bonds of love and truth. WAS THIS UNION OF HEAVEN OR OF MEN? It was of heaven: it was just such a union as Christ taught, loved and prayed for, and without which we are nothing, like a sounding brass or a noisy cymbal. Now, to say that the breaking up of such a union as this was from heaven, we cannot, we dare not do it. The plain teaching of the word of the Lord shows that instead of such a work being from heaven, it is from beneath, from the pit. It is our duty to mark those who cause divisions—they are compared to wolves, not sparing the flock, and the woe of the Lord is against them.

Bro. Cook, we think, has a correct understanding of the general features of the doctrine of divine providence, but in the detail, if we are correct, he is not perfect. The second advent movement in the aggregate, doubtless is of heaven; the sure word of prophecy repeatedly proves this. But in its minute details, or the errors, false doctrines, fanciful and wild theories, notions, dreams and visions; delusions and fanaticisms; bitter wranglings, unholy divisions and dark corruptions of any of those who were once honestly and truly in this movement, we cannot attribute to divine guidance, or providence. No, no, an enemy hath done these things. But to make the parable of the ten virgins a history of this movement, places all this work under the doctrine of divine providence.

Let not these remarks destroy in the esteem of any the blessed truths contained in Bro. Cook's article. In the main it is truth, and of the most momentous character; which we fully believe will soon be justified by the actual appearing of the Son of man. All we design, is, to correct a mistake into which it appears to us Bro. C. has fallen.

Conference at Buffalo.

A general attendance is solicited at this Conference, which is appointed to commence Dec. 24th, and continue one week or longer, as duty may seem to demand.

By a letter from Bro. Porter we are sorry to learn that in consequence of sickness Bro. Miller will be unable to attend. It is not said that he is dangerously ill: we presume he is not, and it is not impossible he may yet be able to be at this meeting.

Bro. Himes writes to Bro. Porter 'there is some prospect of his being at this meeting towards the close.' A similar intimation we see is given in the Herald for 16th inst. We hope he will not disappoint the expectations which this encouragement will create. We think he will not attend: for a conference is appointed to commence on the same date in Boston.

Bro. E. R. Pinney is urgently requested to be at this conference.

We shall try to attend during the first part of the meeting. Bro. Pearson thinks if he attends at all it will be towards the close of the meeting.

May the salvation of precious mortals be the happy fruits of this meeting; for which let us all earnestly pray and faithfully labor.

West India Mission.

We are happy to learn by a letter from Bro. Mansfield, which we publish in this number, that himself and those with him were safely and in health arrived in St. Johns, Antigua, W. I. They have done but little yet in introducing their heavenly mission among the people; the prospect however, of soon having a favorable hearing is encouraging. May an effectual door be opened to them for doing good.

The Lord's stewards will look at Bro. Mansfield's reference to, and directions about pecuniary matters, and do their duty in this case. We shall leave the facts as stated by Bro. Mansfield, to make appeals to your benevolence.

Book for Children.

We have a supply of this valuable juvenile work now on hand. The price, instead of 50cts as noticed in our last week's paper, is 38cts per single copy, and 15 per cent discount, wholesale.

Those who wish to interest and benefit their children by useful reading, will do well to obtain this work. It may be had of T. M. Preble, the publisher, Albany, N. Y., or at this office. It cannot be sent by mail.

The reason we do not remark on certain points in Bro. Wells' article, in this number, is, we shall, the Lord willing, soon commence a review of the whole question of the time of our Lord's coming, then those points on which we think our brother a little mistaken, will be duly considered. We wish not to detract in the least from the true merits of Bro. Wells' communication: it contains many valuable truths, which we hope will soon be proved true, by the actual appearing of the Lord.

Our first article is the commencement of a series of articles, from T. R. Birks' work on the prophecies—one of the valuable English books recently sent us by Bro. Himes.

"The Abomination of Desolation."

If any man have an ear, let him hear.—Rev. 13: 9.
Who so readeth let him understand.—Matt. 24: 18.
The wise shall understand.—Dan. 12: 10.

There are only three places in the Holy Scriptures where the desolating power of popery is singly made a subject of prophecy, to wit: in Daniel, the Gospels and Revelation; and in each of those places, one of the injunctions, as quoted above, is given. Nothing of the kind, I believe, is enjoined in any other prophecy, except the voice of the 'Spirit to the Churches,' in Revelation. Daniel was told personally, to 'know and understand' certain prophetic numbers that were to seal or make sure the vision of 2300 days, which reach to the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of Christ; and Christ commanded us to know of our 'own selves,' when we saw certain things come to pass, that the coming of the Son of man 'is nigh, even at the door,' in like manner as we know, when we see the trees put forth their leaves that summer is nigh; but these injunctions are not so general in their application, and so often emphatically repeated as those which refer to the power that was to 'wear out the saints' and 'blaspheme against God' and all holy things.

They are—'If any man have an ear,' and 'Who so readeth, let him understand'—for, as the word of God is true, 'the wise shall understand.'

Why is it so emphatically and particularly made the duty of every one—who has either ears to hear or eyes to read—to understand about it? All prophecies are of course, given to be understood, as near as can be; but why this so particularly? Why is the injunction made so emphatic, by being added every time the thing is spoken of? The reason is obvious—because it is the only thing by which the year of the coming of Christ could be clearly understood. The time when the coming of the Son of man would be 'nigh, even at the doors'—confined within the limits of one 'generation'—was to be known by certain signs from heaven; yet there would be great chance to doubt the character of those signs, were not the time that they were to take place, marked by the 'abomination of desolation,' spoken of by Daniel the prophet. Our faith is greatly strengthened in the signs, when we understand that it was actually 'in those [1260] days, [spoken of by Daniel the prophet,] after that tribulation,' that 'the sun' was 'darkened, and the moon' withdrew her shining'—yet, by these, we can only know that all shall be fulfilled before one generation shall have passed. But, if we have a proper understanding of 'abomination of desolation,' we may know as certainly in what year Christ will come, as we may know, by the signs, in what generation he will come.

It comes in place now, Bro. Marsh, for me to digress a little, and attend to your objections to my address 'to ministers of the churches.' I did not intend to convey an idea of certainly, neither do I think the article did. The sum of it was: they might know that certain prophecies were fulfilled at certain dates named—or, if they were not, they, (ministers,) ought to know when they were fulfilled, as their fulfillment was in the past. The other part of your objection I would not find fault with, if you would quote the whole sentence of which you quoted a part, to substantiate your objection, and would make it appear, either by reason or Scripture, that it is properly applicable, as you apply it. I can find no Scripture, nor reason, that seems to warrant me in applying it as you applied it, but exactly the reverse. The quotation to which I refer, in our version reads: 'But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.' That would not make me any more ignorant of the time than the 'angels' and 'the Son'—besides there is a difference of opinion, among learned men, as to what the true rendering of that passage is. I am well satisfied 'the Son' is not now ignorant of the precise time alluded to—no, nor ever was. If the Father knew, the Son knew also—for 'the Word was God,' and 'I and my Father are one'—'In him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily'—that is, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, Christ was. But 'that day and hour' I never professed to know—not if they are literal. However, I can see no sense in Rev. 3: 3, if we shall not certainly know the 'hour,' in the sense that Christ uses, if we will 'watch.' And if the 'days' in Daniel are literal years, what shall hinder us from knowing within one year the time when Daniel will stand for his lot, or have his resurrection, and every one written in the book shall be delivered? As they are years, their fulfillment, thus far, as that, unquestionably establishes.

'The abomination of desolation' and the other prophecies which we have applied to popery, describe a power of such character as no power, but popery, that ever has yet existed, has borne; and if popery is not that power, some other power must yet arise, precisely like popery, to fulfil those prophecies—and that dreadful, desolating scourge of the saints—popery—has not been a subject of prophecy! (In describing that power, the Hebrew marginal reading of Dan. 11: 38, is—'But as for the Almighty God, in his seat he shall honor, yea, he shall honor a god whom his fathers knew not, etc.' Compare this with 2d Thess. 2: 3—8, and then apply it to him who claims to be vicegerant of God, and to hold the keys of heaven and hell!) If these prophecies refer to popery, then it has been 'set up' and 'the saints' have been 'given into his hands'—and 1290 years after it was set up, and 1260 years after the saints were given into his hands, his 'dominion was taken away.' And if his dominion was taken away in 1801, it was certainly set up in 511, and at the end of 1335 years from the time it was set up, Daniel will have his resurrection. And if the taking away of the dominion of popery was no farther back than 1801, there need be no mistake about the date; and as certainly as we have a correct understanding of those prophecies, the resurrection and its concomitant events will take place before 1336 years from 511 are completed. As there is no shorter period than a year given, there is no propriety in expecting that Daniel will certainly stand in, or for his lot precisely 'at the end of those days.' But there is propriety in expecting that he will stand up after those years have really ended, and before another year has ended—every moment of that time till the event happens. There appears to be no certainty that they are, or will be ended, before the end of the present Jewish year.

One of two things must very soon be proved, if I have any power of reason, viz: by the transpiring of the events which mark the end of the '1335 days,' that we are right in our expositions of those prophecies, or, the passing of time will prove us wrong—for all who have written on those numbers which are applied to the 'abomination that maketh desolate,' in the 12th chapter of Daniel, have been unavoidably led to adopt the same exposition of them, which must, necessarily, lead them all to the same conclusion, viz: that if the taking away of the dominion of popery by Bonaparte in 1801, marked the termination of the 1260 and 1290 days, then 45 more must bring the termination of the 1335 days. I cannot discover the least possible chance for a mistake in our calculations; and therefore I believe, with the utmost confidence, that the end is now just upon us. This appears to me to be sure data, from which we may calculate nearer and nearer, as each day passes, the time of our deliverance. It is to me the twilight of the approximating morning—and very soon I expect to see 'the glory of the Lord cover the earth as the waters cover the sea,' and righteousness dwelling in it. I do not say I cannot be mistaken; but I should as soon expect to mistake dark night for bright noon-day. Even this might be, for aught that I know; but it certainly is not probable. 'Nevertheless, shall the Son of man find belief of this in the land when he cometh?' [Campbell's translation.] The number of believers will undoubtedly be few—even among the Advent brethren. I fear; because they too much fear disappointment.

Conclusion—The sum of the whole matter, as I understand it, is this: 'The abomination and other prophecies in Daniel, Revelation, and the Gospels, which have been understood to apply to popery, do describe all the principal features of popery so clearly that no unprejudiced mind can fail to discover their proper application to it. That is the only power that ever has yet fulfilled all those predictions—and that power has fully. I challenge the whole world, learned and unlearned, to contradict this, and I will clearly maintain my assertion, or acknowledge myself a bombastic fool. Perhaps some may call this a bold position for me to assume; but the thing is easy, and I fear not the result. Now, the taking away of the dominion of popery by Bonaparte in 1801, proves, (what was pretty certain aside from that) that the saints were given into the hands of popery in A. D. 541, and that it was set up in 511; and all these things prove positively, that the 'time, times and a half,' or '42 months,' or '1260 days,' and the '1290 days,' are so many years; and so if the '1335 days,' and that these days end in A. D. 1846; or, counting the years as they were counted when the prophecies were written, they will end before next April, and the events which are to mark the termination of the 1335 years, must transpire before another year is added to make them 1336. If this is not the case, the time has not yet arrived when 'the wise' can 'understand' these numbers and their application, of which it is said in the Scriptures as quoted at the beginning of this article. But the probability in the case is, that those grand and glorious events will be witnessed in a few days! Brethren, be prepared for it. 'Blessed is he that waiteth,' etc.—Dan. 12: 12. You must be ready before you can be waiting. Holiness and faith are the preparation. Oh! for that unlimited love to God which his goodness and unbounded mercies demand. All glory be to God, forever—Amen.

I had intended to have made a final conclusion with the foregoing remarks, but I feel as though I ought not to close without penning a few thoughts on our Savior's words—'Whoso readeth let him understand.' I said above 'if this is not the case the time has not yet arrived when 'the wise' can 'understand,' etc. I do not believe there ever was a time, since Christ uttered those words, when the prophecies, concerning the 'abomination of desolation,' could not, by a proper attention to them, be understood; except it may be 'what manner of time the Spirit of Christ, which was in the prophet, did signify'—and even that might have been understood so soon as popery had been 'set up,' more than 1290 literal days. I believe so—

1st. From the perspicuity of the prophecies in foretelling the manner of its commencement,—what should precede its commencement—the way and cause of its coming into existence—and its progress, from its incipient stage to its maturity—and thence on to the establishment of the everlasting kingdom.

2d. From the words of Christ—'Whoso.' This includes every intelligent being, from the time it was spoken, to the end of the world. 'Readeth' or hath 'an ear.' If he be blind he should hear—if he be deaf he should read. 'Let him.' If He give the commission, what shall hinder but negligence on the part of him who receives the commission? 'Understand.' How much? A part? What part? There is no discrimination. If any part, just as much all other parts—the whole. Is the whole now understood? It appears to me it must be, judging from the foregoing premises, if 'any man' has sought diligently, honestly, and with all his heart to 'understand.' This I believe I have done. Does any other one believe he has? and does he differ from me? If so, one or both of us have not sought thus. Lord help us to know ourselves and thee, and to understand thy revealed word and will, and to act strictly according to them. So shall we glorify thee and save ourselves and others. R. W. WELLS.

Elmira, Nov. 3d, 1846.

The Baptism of John;

WHENCE WAS IT? FROM HEAVEN, OR OF MEN?

From heaven first—because he bore the divine credentials. He came to them 'in the way of righteousness'—sought not 'his own glory, but the glory of Him who sent him;' therefore, on the principles stated by the 'Greater than John,' he was 'true'—a divinely commissioned messenger of truth—John 7: 18.

2d. The fruits of his labors were most beneficent—bad men became good men, Matt. 3—a corrupt tree could not bring forth such 'good fruit'—Matt. 7: 20.

3d. There was in Jehovah's revealed purpose, a harbinger of Messiah—a voice crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord. Isa. 40—Mal. 3.

4th. The time had then come for Messiah to be manifested; consequently, there could be no occasion to doubt that this 'voice' was from heaven. The time having arrived for the manifestation of Messiah, it was the precise time for his precursor to appear.

The certainty that there could not be a counterfeit 'voice in the wilderness,' or deceitful messenger, going before Messiah, at the right time, bearing the divine credentials, was as absolute as that there was a God, whose providence governs the world. If it were possible, it would destroy the very foundation of our faith in God. But notwithstanding, the case was too clear to admit of a rational doubt, the scribes and priests would not acknowledge it because of its bearing on their reputation. In the face of heaven, they dared to 'lie,' rather than commit themselves to the truth. True, they were reputed wise and holy men, yet their case was more hopeless than that of 'publicans and harlots.' Having rejected John and his heavenly mission, they could not then believe, till they had 'repented' of that sin—having disobeyed God, they could not then obey without repenting. But seeing that repentance is the result of conviction—seeing that conviction of guilt is produced by an admission of the truth—and seeing that they would sooner perjure themselves than admit the truth essential to conviction, there was no hope for them. Nor is there now for ministers who act on their principles, in relation to the second advent at hand.

They could not believe Messiah, till they had believed in John's baptism—because, in God's published plan, that 'voice,' calling them to baptism and preparation, was to introduce him. Having taken a wrong position relative to this preparatory messenger—the baptism of John, they could not advance a step toward the kingdom, in that direction. They were shut up to repentance—they were under an imperative necessity to change their position or perish.

The importance of repentance is seen from the fact, that those religious teachers were reined right up to it, under the penalty of a doom more dreadful than that of 'publicans and harlots;' also, from the fact that Jesus repeated it twice—v. 28—31. The wilful boy could not, after taking a wrong position, obey his father till he repented—nor could those Pharisees believe till they 'repented' of their rejection of John's baptism. This principle applies to all who assume a wrong position. It is common sense as well as Holy Scripture.

From our point of observation, we see that John's baptism was from Heaven; but to us the admission involves no cross. It is now no test of inward rectitude. Then it was a test—the truth admitted, would have lifted them out from their stations of honor or profit; for this they had no heart, no sufficient moral principle or piety; hence, they 'loved and made a lie' to evade the truth and preserve their places of profit. Thus the reputedly pious of that age sold their 'birth-right for a mess of pottage'—they perished, while repenting publicans were saved. Those Pharisees who did come to John's baptism, were suspected and reproved by him. He seems to have thought them only half-hearted, and they were afterwards ashamed enough, when John was imprisoned and beheaded, and Messiah did not take the kingdom as they expected, when the tide turned they were the last men in the world to hold on to their faith. The light beaming from the prophetic page, does not compel assent, no, it never did, however clear it may now seem to us. John's baptism was regarded about as the 'advent movement' has been in our age. It was attended by power divine, awakening 'Jerusalem, Judea, and the region round about Jordan;' but public expectation not being realized, it was doubted, given up, and finally John himself doubted. Being disappointed he doubted—Matt. 11: 3.

Let me change the form of inquiry—The Advent movement: is it from Heaven, or of men?
With all the confidence of my soul, I answer, from Heaven—

1. Because the Second Advent is the crowning doctrine of revelation. It was the principal burden of prophecy in both testaments. It was wrought into the typical service of the Jewish high priest—Hab. 9. It is distinctly recognized in the ordinances of the Christian church, also in the Christian's calling—the Christian's hope, and the Savior's name: therefore, it is incredible that God should have given up his truth, and those who love it, to be the sport of Satan's wiles. Furthermore, those who announced it, bore the divine credentials. They like John, spoke of Him that should come—they sought his glory, knowing that they should be despised by both the church and the world. Jno. 7: 17, 18.

2. They witnessed all the beneficent results of their labors, that followed the labors of John. Thousands were converted from open infidelity—tens of thousands were led to read their Bibles, with diligence and prayer as never before. It led none into but all out of the world. It led them to take the position which all Christians are required to take in view of Christ's coming. Luke, 17: 42-46; 1 Thess. 1: 9, 10; Titus, 2: 11, 14.

3d. There was to be a scene like that which has been witnessed in the Advent movement, to introduce the second advent of Christ. As John's ministry was in Scripture, and in fact preparatory to the first advent—so such a time of preaching and expectation of our Lord's coming is, in Scripture, prior and preparatory to that event: hence it must be so in fact—the history must in its outline, agree with the prophecy: Matt. 24: 46, 50; Rev. 14: 6, 7; Hab. 2: 1-4; Matt. 25: 1-10.

4th. The time having come to expect the Lord, it is the exact time for this movement. All classes have been constrained to look for a crisis at about this time. The prophetic times are confessed about expiring—therefore, this movement has come at the precise point of time allotted it in Holy Scripture. It never occurred prior to '43, with its predicted circumstances—therefore, it must have been realized since, as certainly as the Lord's coming is 'at hand'—as certainly as 'the Scripture cannot be broken.' It is as impossible that such a movement should be counterfeited at the right time, as that John's baptism should have been. John came at the predicted crisis of the 1st, as this movement has at the crisis of the 2d advent! It is utterly incredible that the Bible doctrine of Providence can be true, and yet, such a movement be counterfeited. The preaching of the Lord's coming by the 'faithful servant,' the writing out of 'the vision'—the annunciation of the judgment, and the consequent calling out of a spiritually-minded people—the tarrying—the midnight cry—the subsequent dispersion of the waiting band, and the clamor about the door has occurred. The fulfillment is so far, true or false—God's prophecy has become history, in these particulars, or else his distinctly described people have been given up to some unhallowed spirit, which has by them got up a mock fulfillment. If so, in taking heed to the Scriptures, we have not done 'well'—in praying over and preaching the plainest and most important portions of Divine truth, we have done Satan 'service!' we have 'mocked' the Holy One with our deluded and deluding worship, and he has so far 'forsaken the earth!!' To admit this, is, in my humble opinion, to turn so far outright infidel. The scene in advent history is composed of various agencies and events. It is not a single event, but a series of events, which has occurred in the exact order of succession, represented in Holy Scripture: going forth—tarrying—cry at midnight, and breaking up of the band. If this be of Heaven, then we have the strongest confirmation of our main position and exposition, that God can give us this side 'the sign of the Son of man.' Let no one looking for Jesus say that you 'cannot tell.' Is the advent movement with the 'faithful' and 'evil servants'—the 'wise' and 'foolish virgins,' each acting in character 'of heaven or of men?'

If it be of heaven, then none of those who have slighted and rejected it can believe, till they repent! Their sin accounts for the withdrawal of divine influence from them. They seem more and more hardened—the prospect of their repentance is less than that of the Jewish priests. Their guilt is greater by so much as their light exceeds that enjoyed by the scribes and elders whom our Lord addressed.

These fulfillments crowd us close on the awful events of the Judgment—'Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus!' J. B. Cook.

Mansfield, O., Dec. 10, 1846.

In the Field Again.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—By the blessing of my heavenly Father, in the use of the medicine recommended by the Apostle, James 5: 14, 15, I have been strengthened not only in the inner but also and more especially in the outer man, whereby I am again in the field, and enabled to preach the gospel of the Kingdom to them that are in the regions of Onondaga, Jefferson and Lewis counties. I spent the sabbath, Nov. 8th, with the brethren at Syracuse. I found a few there steadfast in the faith, and abounding in the work of the Lord—who had passed unscathed through the fiery trials of these last days, and still stand on the faith of the gospel, "looking for the blessed hope, viz: the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." They seemed to be comforted with the assurance that the "Lord himself" would descend from heaven with a shout," &c., and gather them, and soon their hope would be consummated in glory, when they should receive a kingdom and enter into rest. The church at Syracuse has been dreadfully mangled and torn by Peavyism and Fentonism, and many good brethren have been led away from the truth, and to embrace their delusive errors, and practice them, by reason of which the way of truth has been evil spoken of.

From Syracuse I went to Lorraine. I spent the Sabbath, (Nov. 15,) and remained with them until Wednesday, preaching evenings. I found Bro. Griggs here faithfully laboring, giving meat in due season. The peace and harmony that once characterized this band, making them terrible as an army with banners to the wicked, was in a measure destroyed by the extravagancies of Peavy and Rhodes. But my heart was made glad to hear some before I left confess their errors and take their former stand on the Bible. Some however are still clinging to their "door shut" views, though very much modified. Their present position, as near as I could learn, was that sinners could be saved if they would repent—and they believed the mass by rejecting the truth had shut the door against themselves. Now this has been the case always; this is the faith of all, and yet they pretend to justify all their movements since they left their brethren. Oh, that they could see that all there is in their way, is just to rush into the arms of their brethren, for they are now with them in sentiment very nearly if not quite, and then all that love and peace would again be enjoyed by them. We had some precious meetings with the dear saints at Lorraine, and I humbly trust some good was done.

Wednesday, (Nov. 18,) we arrived after a very muddy ride of 26 miles, at Copenhagen.—I think I never saw the going worse. At this place we found some twenty or thirty souls who are decidedly on the Lord's side, and are rejoicing in the assurance of the speedy consummation of their hopes. I found here as in most places, the line drawn, and most of the people settled in their positions for and against our faith, much more so than I anticipated. I remained there two weeks, preaching the glad tidings of the reign of God at the door. The first week was so very muddy and stormy that but little was accomplished, but during the last week there was a good attendance and good attention, and some seed I hope has fallen into good ground and will spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God. In fact we saw the fruit—some who had been formerly indifferent to or opposing the truth, came out and confessed the truth. And I cannot but believe several others will—but oh, those soul destroying sectarian influences that bind them down so that when they see the truth they dare not confess it. I do believe that one of the greatest blights on the cause of God and his truth is sectarianism.—I conversed with some who in private conversation would confess they believed the end of all things was near—they saw no way to avoid the conclusion, but yet they would not confess it before the world, and settle down, and the impatient stumble over them into perdition. Oh, that they might see and realize the fearful responsibility that rests upon them, and awake and warn others to prepare for the Judgment.

There was a stillness and deep solemnity pervading our meetings at Copenhagen, (although sometimes crowded to overflowing,) that betokened good, and I can but believe that good will result in the awakening of some more who will prepare for the Judgment. Bro. Wendall, who brought me from Syracuse, is with me, and has been laboring some in this section, and to good acceptance. Bro. Bates met me at Copenhagen, whose faithful labors in this region have been abundantly blessed, and many souls will rejoice in the day of Christ's coming, who but for his warning voice would have slumbered on to perdition.

I am now at Martinsburgh, and am waiting for the storm to subside so that we can commence labors here. There is some prospect that a door may be opened at the east village which will be almost like breaking new ground. Pray for me, dear Bro., that the Lord may sustain me and bless my labors in this region. I have feared I should go beyond my strength and get down again, having been so long confined, and my system so much prostrated, but God has sustained me remarkably—praised be his holy name. I preached at Copenhagen every evening but two, and three times on the Sabbath. The weather has been extremely unpleasant, and the roads very muddy ever since I left home, and yet the meetings have been well attended.—Farwell.

E. R. PINNEY.

West Martinsburg, Dec. 4th, 1846.

Bro. J. Fowler, Salisbury, Mass., Dec. 3d, writes:—The cause in this section, for 20 miles around, was never more prosperous than at present. The brethren and sisters are steadfast, settled and grounded in the present truth, looking for the blessed hope. The conference at Flaverhill was attended with great satisfaction; the brethren were all of one heart and one mind, and we were blessed with the presence of Bro. Himes one day. Our preaching brethren were Brn. H. Plummer, E. Burnham, and I. R. Gates—who preached with power from on high, and to the edification of the saints present. The last meeting closed at 10 o'clock, Sabbath evening. It was hard parting; but we parted in full hope of soon meeting, where congregations ne'er break up, and Sabbaths never end. Bless God for such a hope! Some little trials we have had since '43, but mostly from the churches—but we like the watchful sea-bird, bow down our heads and let the white foam go over us, and rise again on the back of the rolling billow, with heads erect and hearts panting for glory.

Bro. J. D. Merriam, Westminster, Mass., Nov. 1, writes:—The saints are still waiting for the redemption of their bodies, at the coming of our blessed Lord and Master. It is a time that we need a great deal of patience to endure the reproach of Christ, and the blessed hope of his appearing; but be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord—for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Sister H. A. Parks, Johnstown, W. T., Oct. 29th, writes:—Our meetings in this Territory have been small in consequence of sickness,—there are scarce well ones enough to take care of the sick. Bro. Chandler and Bro. Daniels have both been sick most of the fall, but are now getting better. My health has been unusually good through all the season. While I could scarcely see an individual around me enjoying health, I have been enabled to administer help to the needy. I thank the Lord most heartily for this blessing; but O, I sigh for that land where the inhabitants will never say, I am sick. I expect soon to see it, when the wicked are cut off. That rest will be sweet to a weary pilgrim!

Correspondence of the West India Mission.

St. Johns, Antigua, W. I., Nov. 13, 1846.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—We reached this island after a passage of nineteen days, in safety and in good health, for which we feel grateful to God. We have been in this place nearly a week, but have not yet been permitted to speak to the people. A brief account of the place, people and of our position, I doubt not, will be interesting to our numerous friends; and as it will be absolutely impossible to write to all our particular friends in person, I will endeavor to be as minute in my narrative of facts, as time and circumstances will allow.

This Island is twenty miles in length, and about ten or twelve in breadth, containing a population of thirty thousand, which consists of whites, chiefly from the British dominions—some however, from the United States—colored people, and blacks—which latter class compose by far, the largest portion of the population. It will be remembered that the slaves of this Island were liberated at once, without any apprenticeship, as in Jamaica; we are, therefore, in a free country, and in a position to observe the effects of emancipation. We have not yet however, had sufficient time to do so properly. I had some conversation with the Wesleyan preacher, who expressed the opinion, that although the emancipated people had improved in worldly interests, yet he thought that in moral and religious things, they had not improved. I think the statement true, as well from my own observation, as from the confidence I have in the testimony of the clergyman referred to, whose opportunity of observing are very extensive, and whose interest and integrity would induce to speak truly in reference to the matter. From the limited observation which I have made, it is evident to me that the reasons why the moral and religious condition of the blacks has not improved since emancipation, are themselves, they become involved in a covetous spirit, and I must say that I never met with a more avaricious class of persons, than the blacks here, who exact the highest prices for every office performed by them, with carts, drays, boats, &c.

1st. Being put in possession of their liberty, and having an opportunity to make efforts for

2d. Being permitted to use the largest liberty now, after suffering under the restraints of masters so long, they naturally fall into the habit of thinking themselves free to do anything they please, right or wrong—and in many cases fall into habits of idleness and intemperance; however, intemperance and other vices are not so open as formerly. It is astonishing to see the large number of persons engaged in hawking things about the streets—lounging upon the grass, or selling all manner of eatables in the market; probably ten times more are thus occupied than is needful to do the business which is daily accomplished. Every thing here is done in a slovenly manner, which is probably owing to the influence of the climate.

The people are extensively connected with the various churches in the Island: Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, and Moravian, which have large chapels in the city. The Episcopalian cathedral, however, is now being rebuilt—the original one having been thrown down by the earthquake in 1843. But with all the profession made, there is manifestly very little real godliness—a cold and cheerless formality prevails and very little genuine purity of heart presents itself anywhere. You see then, we have much to do, and we feel to cast our case on Jesus, who cares for us, and who has promised to be with us 'to the end of the world.'

We have met with very kind treatment on the part of many excellent people here. We feel grateful to God and to them for it. Board is so high here, that although we only intend to stay in this Island a few weeks, we have hired a house, and several persons all strangers to us previously (with the exception of Mr. Miller, superintendent of the schools established by the charity,) and some who are strangers still, have kindly loaned us some articles of furniture, with which we are made comfortable. Some persons of reputation have interested themselves in us, and also are much interested in hearing upon the subject. A member of the Legislature has expressed much interest in hearing, and being a trustee of Court House, which is a commodious edifice, has given consent to occupy it for lectures, and I presume will be able to obtain the consent of the only remaining trustee, who has not yet been consulted. This gentleman showed me a copy of 'The Voice of Elijah,' published by Bro. Hutchinson in Mantree, which he had carefully laid away—however, he did not adopt those views. It is probable we shall commence public lectures on Sabbath next, and continue them so long as it seems duty.

Our expenses here are heavy, even in the economical way in which we are living—but not so heavy as in boarding at public or private houses, which would amount to about $140 per month, exclusive of incidentals. Travelling here by hiring horses, is almost out of the question—a carriage to English Harbor a distance of 12 miles, costs, I am told, a doubloon, or $16—and it would be presumptive to attempt to walk on foot much under a broiling sun with the thermometer at ninety. But we hope by kindness of some friends to be able to get about the Island after the course of lectures in the city.

I will say before closing, that the people here have manifested more interest in hearing upon the subject of the Lord's coming, than in any place in which I have recently been; what the result will be God knows—but he has promised to be with us to the end.

Our health is yet good—our hearts fixed to do

God's will—and our determination to do all to his glory. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters. Remember to address me, care of Bro. Ide, 111 Wall-st., N. Y.—and remember too, that our stay here and usefulness, depend much upon your devotion to the cause in contributions.

Farewell—Yours in Christ,

L. D. MANSFIELD.

Obituary.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Death has come into my family and has taken from me my dear beloved companion; she sleeps in Jesus! She died the 29th of October. I feel that my loss is great, but it is her gain. I feel it is mine to sink into the will of God, and to say in my heart: O God, thy will be done—not mine; and while I do this, I find great peace in believing in Jesus! O yes, brother Marsh—I am happy while I know I love Jesus! I love his people—I love his appearing—and how I long for his kingdom to come! but I will by the grace of God have patience and wait; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

We have had no advent preaching in Spring-water for some time. I wonder where the good brethren are who have been in the habit of feeding the little flock here with meat in due season? I hope they are doing good, and proclaiming the coming of the Lord. We should be glad to see them once more. May the Lord direct their feet this way. Yours in the blessed hope,

Children of God! Ye who expect ere long
The second advent of the King of kings
To this our fallen world, and hope to reign
With him in glory on the EARTH RENewed;
Be girded—clothed—equipped, with all the bright
Array of gospel armor—And, still more,
Put on the robe of CHARITY, the best,
And loveliest of all. Let it be seen
In every effort,—in your daily walk
And conversation; so that those 'without'
Shall feel indeed the power of heavenly truth,
And honor Him from whom it emanates.
Yea, 'love your enemies.' Let no harsh word,
No 'railing accusation' through your lips
Find entrance ever; but true gentleness,
And words of kindness fall upon the ear
Of Christ's opposers, that, perchance they may
Be woo'd and won to this blessed gospel faith,
Thus will you honor Him, and be prepared
More fully for that glorious, solemn day
So near at hand!

Time of the Second Advent.

V. In the Acts of the Apostles, beside other intimations of a more obscure and distant kind, there is one passage which bears directly on this inquiry, and which demands an exact and careful review. This is the address of St. Peter to the Jews, after healing the lame man at the beautiful gate of the temple, (Acts, 3 : 19.) The words of the sacred text, in the most literal and exact version, are as follows :—

"Repent, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, that there may come times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and that He may send Jesus Christ, which before hath been slain by you : Whom the heaven must receive until times of restitution of all things, of which (times) God hath spoken by the mouth of His holy prophets since the world began."

It appears evident from this inspired statement, that the return of our Lord will introduce the period, foretold by the prophets, the restitution of all things. This agrees with the conclusions already derived from other parts of Scripture.

But here a critical objection has been raised. The word restitution, it is urged, may be rendered, accomplishment or fulfilment, and the relative cannot refer to the restitution itself, but must relate to the word all things, which is the immediate antecedent.

Now it is true that the term (apokatastasis) itself might be explained by accomplishment, in the sense of a filling up, or completion. But it is equally clear that it does not bear the sense of a close or termination. Neither usage nor derivation allows us to ascribe to it the latter meaning; and hence the proposed variation, in the only sense allowable, leaves the scope of the passage quite unaltered.

But in truth the most exact and precise version of the Greek term is, restoration or restitution. This will be clear when we compare all the passages where the verb from which it is derived occurs. (Matt. 12 : 13 ; 17 : 11 ; Mark 3 : 5 ; 8 : 25 ; 9 : 12. Luke 6 : 10 ; Acts 1 : 6 ; Heb. 13 : 19.) In all of these the meaning is evidently, to replace a person or thing, after some defect or loss, in its proper integrity and completeness. Such, therefore, beyond all reasonable doubt, is its real significance here also.

Again, the relative may, in point of grammar merely, be referred either to the times, or to the word all things. But the sense forbids the latter construction. For in this case the relative clause would not be explanatory, nor form a distinct assertion, but would define and limit what things were to be restored. Now the meaning which results from this rendering is plainly untrue; for all things of which the prophets have spoken from the beginning neither will nor can be restored. The clause, then, must be referred, for its antecedent, to the times of restitution, and the resulting sense will be simple and free from perplexity. Those times, we are here taught, have been one main subject of prediction to all the prophets of God from the earliest age.

The conclusion to be drawn from these words of St. Peter is now evident! Since the return of our Lord to usher in the times of the promised restitution, the millennium cannot precede, but must follow His appearing.

VI. The Epistles furnish us with copious evidence of the same truth. Let us begin with those to the Thessalonians, as probably the earliest in order of time.

In the former of these epistles, every chapter ends with a direct reference to the coming of our Lord. It is set before the church as the great and continual object of earnest hope and joyful expectation. Yet not a single word is to be found in the whole, from which it could be suspected that a long season of peace and happiness was to intervene. The whole tenor of the Apostle's exhortations entirely precludes the supposition that such a hope as that of the millennium was present to his view, before the coming of the Lord.

Two replies may be attempted to this weighty argument. It may be alleged, first, that the millennium was not yet clearly revealed, even to the apostles; and next, that on any supposition eighteen centuries were to intervene, of which no hint is given in the epistle. But these remarks do not meet the real difficulty. For the long delay in times of trouble and apostacy, was not revealed to the apostles, and the numbers which announced it were expressed sealed. But though the millennium was not yet revealed in its precise length and minuter features, the fact of a blessed restitution, to continue for many generations at least, was expressly foretold in countless passages, and the apostles neither were nor could be ignorant of the truth. Unless that restitution had been understood to follow the return of our Lord, it seems quite incredible that St. Paul should here have passed it by in a total silence.

But the second epistle yields a still more decisive, and indeed an invincible argument for the same truth. The declarations of St. Paul concerning the nearness of the advent had been misunderstood. He writes a second letter with the express design of unfolding the doctrine to the Thessalonians more clearly. He states very plainly that there was still to intervene a period of growing apostacy, undetermined in its length. But, far from revealing a further delay in a thousand years of millennial blessedness, he asserts the very contrary in the plainest terms. The close of the apostacy is to be marked and defined only by the personal appearing of the Lord Jesus. 'And then shall that wicked one be revealed, whom the Lord will consume with the breath of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming.' No words could be more destructive to the hypothesis of a millennium to intervene before the coming of the Lord. The same truth appears also from the previous chapter. For there the afflictions of the Church are declared to last until the Advent. Then, and not till then, shall affliction be changed for rest, happiness and joy.

To cut this knot, and reconcile the words of St. Paul with the modern hypothesis which places a still future millennium before the advent, it has been suggested that a figurative, not a personal coming, is here designed. But to refute this notion it is enough to read the epistle carefully from beginning to end. It is clear that the apostle throughout speaks of one and the same Advent, when the troubled and afflicted saints shall find rest, (i. 7.) when their enemies shall be visited with fiery judgment, (i. 8.) when the people of Christ shall be gathered into his presence, (ii. 1.) when Antichrist shall be destroyed, (ii. 2.) and the day of Christ manifestly has dawned in the brightness of the Lord's appearing, (ii. 2, 3, 8.) If this conclusion be denied, it is hard to see how any doctrine whatever can be certainly gathered from any part of the word of God.

Let us now turn, as next in order, to the first Epistle to the Corinthians. And here, besides the closing chapter, there are several scattered texts which, if not conclusive in themselves, all however point in the same direction. The Corinthians (i. 6.) were waiting, not for a millennium of peace, but for the coming of the Lord, as the one great and immediate object of desire and expectation. They came behind in no gift of knowledge, and yet were clearly quite ignorant of any such period of triumph to intervene. Again we are told that 'on us the ends of the world are come,' (x. 11.) a description which at least is far less emphatic, if the advent be removed to the further distance of a thousand years. The state of the Church is described by five stages, apparently successive, of sin and apostacy, and the type of the last is that murmuring of Korah, when there was a miraculous judgment of the transgressors by fire. The natural inference from this type is distinct and plain. It leads us to expect the Advent of the Lord and a fiery judgment, before any season of millennial peace and glory.

But it is in the xvth chapter, that we have the most full description of the events connected with our Lord's advent. The passage which chiefly bears on it is the following :—

1 Cor. xv. 22—26. 'For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward (epita) they that are Christ's at his coming. Afterward (eita) cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. As the last enemy, death shall be destroyed. For he hath put all things under his feet; but when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subjected unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.'

This important passage yields us two or three evident conclusions, which all confirm the arguments that have been already adduced. First, the apostle is professedly explaining the order of the resurrection. He begins with affirming it as an universal truth—'in Christ all shall be made alive'—and then adds the special statement, 'every man in his own order.'

Next, in the revelation of this Divine order he specifies three events, separated by two marks of sequence in time. There is the resurrection of Christ, the first fruits; an event prior by at least 1800 years to the second advent. There is afterward, at the coming of Christ, the resurrection of them that are his. Afterward there cometh the end, when all rule and authority shall have been put down, and the last enemy, death, shall have been destroyed, at the final resurrection. The terms of order naturally imply an interval, like that between the resurrection of Christ and his Advent, to ensue between the Advent itself, and that end in which death is to be destroyed.

The next passage which throws light on the same subject is Romans xi. What does the apostle, then, teach us here, concerning the relative order of the Advent and of the restoration? In verse 26, we have a simple and conclusive answer. 'The Deliverer shall come from Sion, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob.' It is the coming of the Lord, returning from the heavenly Jerusalem, which is to be the signal of the p. omised blessing. If any doubt could arise whether the second Advent is here designed, the prophecy in Isaiah must surely remove it. (Isa. lix. 17—20.) Every phrase in the description corresponds with the advent in glory, and with that alone. Then, when the Lord has thus appeared for the redemption of his people, the glorious promise is fulfilled—'Arise and shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.' The whole of that magnificent description, it thus appears, does not precede, but immediately follows, the coming of Messiah in glory.

In the other epistles of St. Paul several passages of the same general tendency are found. Such is the address to the Philippian Church—'Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we are looking for the Lord Jesus; who shall change our vile bodies, that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body.' Such are the statements to the Hebrew Christians—'Christ was once offered to bear the sin of many; and to them that look for him he will appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation.' 'Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and he will not tarry.' The same inference naturally flows from the connection and train of thought in the second epistle to Timothy. For, after describing the times of infidelity, the apostle proceeds at once, without suggesting any intermediate delay, to the appearing and kingdom of Christ, and the blessing reserved for all who love his appearing. 'To suppose an intervening millennium, beside the total silence concerning it, breaks and destroys all the moral unity of the admonition.

The writings of St. Peter, St. James, and St. Jude, all conspire in leading us to the same view. Not only are they entirely silent concerning a millennium before the advent; they supply many clear marks for its exclusion. Thus from St. James, (ch. v.) we may infer that as soon as the latter rain of the Spirit descends, the harvest of the Church will at once be reaped. And clearly neither the type, nor the example of the former rain in the apostolic age, can warrant us in extending the latter rain here promised through a space of many years. The whole passage also implies that the covetousness of the visible Church, in the last days, will be cut short by the appearing of the Judge. This excludes totally a millennium before the advent.

St. Peter, in his second Epistle, confirms the same doctrine. He describes, in successive order, the covetousness of feigned teachers of religion, the corruption and blasphemies of open scoffers, and then the coming of the day of Christ. 'There is no place left for a millennium to intervene. The very supposition destroys the unity, the power, and the moral connection of the passage. The same remarks will apply, with equal justice, to the Epistle of St. Jude.

Thus every indirect allusion, or direct statement, in the Gospels, the Acts and the Epistles, leads us alike to the same conclusion, that no millennial rest intervenes before the coming of the Lord. Some passages are more, and others less distinct, but all tend, with uniform consent, to the same conclusion. Not one grain of counter evidence is to be found; not one hint, from first to last, of a thousand years, or indeed any period whatever of rest, pence, and prolonged triumph, before the return of the Lord Jesus. Every part concurs with that view of the Advent which results at once from the natural and unforced meaning of the vision in the book of Revelations (xix. 19—21.)

Qualifications for the Kingdom of God.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven."

We have already considered the great truth taught in this passage by our Savior. That is, that those only who do the will of God can ever gain an entrance into the kingdom; no matter how high may be their professions of godliness—their prayers many and their labors abundant—still if they lack that evidence of genuine love, obedience to all the commands of God, the gates of the New Jerusalem must be forever shut against them. If obedience to the will of God is of such high importance, as to be the only passport into the kingdom of God, surely we are not left in darkness as to what is the will of heaven. None who have the Bible can plead the excuse of ignorance concerning the will of God, for the Word has made it so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool need not err therein. But it is now as it always has been—'men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.' There are multitudes, who have the word in their hand and read it daily, and think themselves walking in the ways of righteousness, while at the same time they are violating many of the plain commandments of heaven—and why this inconsistency? Because, like the Jews of old, they make void the law of God by their traditions.

No class of men ever existed, who supposed themselves so much the favorites of heaven, as did the Jews in the days of Christ, yet Christ condemned them as hypocrites, as a generation of vipers, who could not escape the damnation of hell. With the law and the prophets read to them every Sabbath-day, they fulfilled them in their treatment of the Son of God. The Jewish law, with its rites and ceremonies, were typical of the Christian dispensation and the sacrifice made by Christ for sin—so that we can justly expect that the Christian dispensation will end as did the Jewish. In fact the Jewish church in the days of Christ presents a perfect parallel to the nominal Christian church, at the present day. They had more regard for the expositions of the law by the learned rabbies, than the plain word itself. So at the present day, the great mass of the nominal church rest with firm assurance on the interpretation of the word of God as given by our learned men; so that they are resting their hopes of heaven upon the opinions of man, instead of the plain, simple word of God. As a natural consequence, at the great day of the Lord, they will find themselves awfully disappointed. Let us then take up the word of God and examine his commandments—laying aside all prejudice—let us look above to the spirit of God for our guide into the truth.

The commands of God may be divided into two classes—negative and positive. Those things which we are forbidden to do, each one of which will exclude the person guilty, from entering the paradise of God—and those things we are commanded to do, as evidences of our love to Christ. We will first consider the negative commandments: 1 Cor. vi. 9—'Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. Gal. 5: 20—'Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like, of the which I tell you before, as I also have told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.' Col. 3: 5—'Mortify therefore, your members which are upon the earth: fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness which is idolatry.'

The first of these sins which we will notice is covetousness; because of the general prevalence of this sin. We find that the covetous man is ranked with the vilest characters, and will as certainly be shut out of the kingdom of God as the murderer, or drunkard, or adulterer, or idolator; for Paul calls it idolatry. There can be no dispute but that the covetous man cannot inherit the kingdom of God. But the point to be settled is, what is covetousness? If we cannot learn from the Bible its nature, we must remain in ignorance of it. But we have light on this point. It seems to me that Christ's teachings are very plain and explicit on this point. On a certain occasion, (Luke, 12: 13,) one of the company said unto him, 'Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me.' The Savior administered a cutting rebuke, by replying—'Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?' He then takes the opportunity of cautioning his disciples to 'take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.' The reason assigned to take heed and beware of covetousness, explains in part the nature of this sin: It is a desire to possess an abundance of this world's goods—this is covetousness. He not only represents it as sinful to covet a desire for an abundance of worldly possessions, but as entirely useless, actually to possess them. He also cautions us to take heed and beware of this sin, as though it required great carefulness to shun its seductive influences. He then proceeded to relate a parable. Christ always related parables in elucidation of some truth. From what precedes and follows this parable, we must conclude that it was given to explain more fully the nature of this sin.

'And he spake a parable unto them saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully; and he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do? because I have no room where to bestow my fruits. And he said, This will I do—I will pull down my barns and build greater, and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods: and I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?"

Now what is the sin charged upon this rich man? It was not that his grounds brought forth plentifully, for this came to him as the bountiful gift of God. It was not that he used of these fruits for his own sustenance. It was because he purposed in his mind to hoard up these fruits of the earth—he needed them not for himself or family at the present time—he purposed to store them away for future years, thereby distrusting that beneficent hand of Providence, that had filled his house with plenty. If this then was the sin of this rich man, surely the laying up of this world's goods, more than we need for present necessities, is covetousness. We must be led to this conclusion, when we take into consideration the application of this parable by the Savior, ver. 21—"So is he that layeth up treasures for himself, and is not rich toward God." I do not believe that Christ meant to teach any such doctrine as is advocated by the nominal churches: that is that a man may be rich toward God and lay up treasures for himself—that covetousness consists not in laying up treasures, but in setting the heart upon them. I think Christ meant to teach us that a man that lays up treasure for himself, is not and cannot be rich towards God. In agreement with this is the command of Christ: Matt. 6: 19—"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," &c.

The way this command is evaded, is by considering the laying up treasures upon the earth to consist in setting the heart upon them; while we may accumulate thousands upon the back of thousands without sin. Now what are the treasures of earth? Evidently they are those things which constitute in the eyes of the world a rich man. It must be money or its equivalent. Can there be found a man who is engaged in accumulating property, but what considers it something worth laboring for—worth laying up? Certainly then, it must be a treasure. For him to say he cares but little for that property that he is spending the best energies of both body and mind to accumulate, is downright hypocrisy. That Christ means the real treasures of earth, is evident from the fact, that they are of such a nature that the moth and rust can corrupt, and thieves steal them. The command not to lay up such treasures, is just as plain as any other command in the Bible. A process of reasoning that will pervert the plain meaning of this command will apply as well to every command of God.

We are plainly told, that where your treasure is, there your heart will be also. Men may live in plain violation of this command, adding property to property, accumulating many stores for many years, still at the judgment they cannot plead in extenuation, that their hearts were not upon them. If they did not love to lay up property, why did they do it? A man will not do that thing which he dislikes to perform, unless compelled by necessity. It is a law of the mind, that when circumstances will allow a man to act freely, he will pursue the course that best suits him. No one that lays up property can say he is compelled to do it against his will; he does it because this is his choice: therefore his property is his treasure, and his heart is upon it—this world is his god—he is guilty of covetousness—is an idolater. The exhortations and commands that follow this one we have been considering in Mat. 6 chap., is the same as follows the parable in Luke, 12th chap., which taken together, shows most conclusively that covetousness consists in laying up of this world's goods more than we need for present wants. But, says one, by this course we shall tempt God, by neglecting coming emergencies, by not laying up something against a wet day. The Savior has met this objection: Luke, 12: 22—"And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you (wherefore did he give this command? Because he that layeth up treasures for himself is not rich towards God, is, like the rich man, guilty of covetousness.) Therefore take no thought for your life what ye shall eat, neither for the body what ye shall put on; the life is more than meat and the body than raiment. Consider the ravens, for they neither sow nor reap, which have neither store-house nor barn, and God feedeth them; how much more are ye better than they?" 6 ver.—"Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings? and not one of them is forgotten of God. But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows." The argument is plainly this: if God feeds the fowls, which are of no better value, although they have no store-house to lay up food for future wants, nor even sow nor reap, yet when hungry he hears them cry, and provides for their wants, how much more will he provide for and feed his children when in want. If he exercises such especial care over the least of his creatures, how much more will he tenderly watch over those he has redeemed by the death of his well beloved Son. If he has so loved his children as to send his Son to die for them, how much more will he give them their necessary food.

Verses 27—28: "Consider the lilies how they grow; they toil not, they spin not—and yet I say unto you, Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. If God then so clothe the grass, which is to day in the field and to-morrow is cast into the oven, how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith! And seek not what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind, for all these things doth the nations of the world seek after, and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things; but rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." One of the great distinguished features between the man of the world and the child of God, is that the worldling toils and labors to hoard up a supply of goods for future wants, while the child of God will give his surplus goods to feed God's poor children, and trust in him for all future supplies.

To this agrees the teaching of Paul, 1 Tim. 6: 8—10: "And having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich, fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. A man is not always to be condemned because he is rich. He may have received it by inheritance, or acquired it before his conversion. There is a duty for him to perform—there is a channel through which he can use his super-abundant possessions to the glory of God. But the man that will be rich or strives for the acquisition of property, falls into that snare that will drown him in destruction and perdition: 'For the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.' Having a sufficiency of food and raiment, we are to be content; if we desire or covet more, we err from the faith. But says one, what shall I do with the fruits of my labor, above what is sufficient for food and raiment and other necessary wants? The word of God points out the duty in this case, but we must leave it for another time to consider.

If the position I have taken is correct, we see what a multitude of the nominal church are, in the sight of God idolaters—with all their efforts for the conversion of the world, they are themselves Christianized idolaters, rolling in wealth and luxury! their treasure is on the earth; therefore they cannot have the inheritance of the saints.

How is it now with the Adventists? Are they all free from this sin? Is all the surplus property of advent believers devoted to that purpose that God requires? Are any hoarding up that property which belongs to God? If so, let our ranks be clear of this sin, lest some of us at last be shut out of the kingdom of God.

The English Mission.

Our work in Europe has been commenced—the foundation has been laid—and, if time continues, glorious results may be reasonably looked for. We design returning to that field of labor in the coming spring, should Providence permit, to prosecute the work that has already been so propitiously commenced. In the mean time, Bro. HUTCHINSON, who is now in England, will labor in the field; and, from his zeal and perseverance in the cause, we are even now prepared to hear of the most encouraging results.

We have commenced, in London, the publication of a paper, called the "European Advent Herald," which is partly sustained by its sales. It is a neat paper, rather smaller than the one from which it receives its name, and will be published monthly so long as our means will permit. Its contents so far (four numbers have been published) have been of a valuable character, and it bids fair to accomplish the object designed by its publication.

It is also contemplated to hold a General Conference in London, next summer, or autumn, as will be seen by the following notice, from the last No. of the London 'Herald':

Advent Conference in London in 1847.—If it should please God to continue the present dispensation until next year, we hope to see a gathering of faithful watchmen in London. The object of the meeting would be, if it should be held, to consider, among others, the following questions:—1. The Personal Advent and Reign of Christ. 2. The Prophetic History of the Church and World, traced down to the Second Advent. 3. Where are we in the Prophetic History, and what events are we now to look for before the Second Advent? 4. The Prophetic Destiny of Popery. 5. The Prophetic Destiny of the Unbelieving Jews. 6. What do the Signs of this time indicate—the Conversion of the World, or the Advent of Christ? 7. Duties of the Ministry and the Church, consequent upon the present indication of Divine Providence.

We shall be glad to correspond with those friends, in any part of the world, who favor this object. Letters may be directed to Joshua V. Himes, 31 Bucklersbury, London, or 9 Milk-st., Boston, U. S. A more full and perfect development of the plan and arrangements will be given hereafter, if, upon further consultation and correspondence, it should be decided to hold the Conference as proposed.

Elaborate essays on the above questions will be submitted for the consideration of the Conference, and published in a Report of their deliberations, and circulated in every part of Europe, and elsewhere as extensively as possible. This being done, the object of the English Mission will, to a great extent, have been accomplished, viz: a wide diffusion among the inhabitants of the earth, of the evidences concerning the speedy advent of the 'King of kings.'

It will be seen by the above, that there is much to be done, both abroad and at home. And if it be God's will that we should prosecute it to a successful result, there will be union in our prayers and counsels, and liberality in our contributions for its support. For the present we leave this matter, submitting it to the wise disposal of Him, whose will we desire to do.—Advent Her.

Time of the Second Advent.

Some honest, conscientious minds will doubtless think it useless to say more on the time of the Lord's coming. But we think differently, and therefore commence once more the investigation of this highly interesting and important subject. Very many have believed, and not a few still hold, that the Bible is not silent on this question. It is our desire to know, and we believe the desire is lawful, whether this belief is founded in truth or error. If in truth, certainly at this time of doubt, it is of the highest importance to know it. If in error, it is also important that we should understand it, that the mind may no longer be troubled with a false and perplexing doctrine, and again settle down upon the safe and joyful foundation of truth.

This question, the time of the Lord's coming, is fairly before the church and the world. We, Second Adventists, so called, have taken a very conspicuous part in the investigation. Though our opponents have been utterly unable to show our mistakes, or in the least invalidate the strength of our evidences, and force of our reasonings, yet we most frankly confess that time, in a certain respect, has done these very things. And now we cheerfully and boldly say that we have no disposition to yield the point and retire from the field in silence, and for fear of reproach, or for any other cause, make no acknowledgement of our mistakes when stubborn facts say that, at least, some have been made. Neither do we wish through any selfish or wrong motive to attempt to keep up the appearance of faith, on a particular point, when there is no valid evidence in the case. In a word, inasmuch as we came into this faith honestly and honorably, have taken a conspicuous part in its defence, have had no selfish or sectarian, or party ends to subserve; and inasmuch as it involves a question of the highest moment—therefore, we are resolved, by the grace of God, to act the fearless and honorable part in this affair, by acknowledging and forsaking error, whenever we may detect ourself in it; and by receiving, proclaiming, and following the truth, whenever and wherever we may find it, fearless of the consequences.

After meeting with repeated disappointments, it must be admitted, that we are better prepared to look at this question, than when the light first broke upon our minds, and we were highly elated with the joyful expectation of soon meeting the Lord. We have, or should have learned from our rich experience of a few years past, that human opinions, inferences, visions, impulses, and notions, weigh nothing in the scale of truth: that however wise, holy, and sincere may be their author, or authors, they neither change the nature, nor hasten the fulfilment of the immutable purposes of God. Knowing these things, we think we as a people can now examine our Bibles on the question of the time of the second advent, with our wills in perfect submission to the will of God; with no other desire than to know the truth, the Bible truth, on this matter.

It may be thought superfluous by some, in this enquiry, to investigate the very familiar and often decided question—

IS THE TIME A DOCTRINE OF REVELATION?

But on a moment's reflection we think all will admit that this is the first step to be taken, in order to enter upon our work understandingly: we must first know whether the time of the advent is revealed in the Bible, before enquiring when it will take place. Then, we will, in the first place, briefly examine this point.

Our opponents have strenuously contended that the time of the advent is not a doctrine of the Bible, have repeatedly presented their scripture proofs to justify their position—and our mistakes, on certain points, have not only greatly confirmed them, in the supposition that they are correct, but have produced unbelief in some who were once believers in the time, and doubts in others on the affirmative of this question. Well, if our opponents have been right, and our brethren have just cause for doubts and unbelief, when convinced of it, we will say, amen.—But before admitting this, we must carefully look at these texts of Scripture which are thought to justify these doubts and unbelief. Then we shall be better prepared to decide in the case.

Deut. 29: 29 is a text which our opponents have sometimes used to prove that the time of the advent is not revealed. Or, rather, they have quoted a part of it, which reads, 'The secret things belong unto the Lord our God.' This no one will dispute; but then the question is yet so settled whether the time of the second advent is or is not one of those secret things. The text is silent on this point; consequently it affords no proof that the time of the advent is one of those unrevealed secrets of the Lord. The other part of the text reads, '—But the things which are revealed, belong unto us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of the law.' Some of our brethren have supposed that this last part of the text furnishes very good evidence that the time of the advent may be known; but it is neither directly nor indirectly named in the text or context, no evidence is afforded either against or for the time of the advent being known. By both sides of the question, in the heat and zeal of the moment, this and other similar texts have been wrested from their true meaning and forced to support a doctrine which they do not teach: they prove nothing about the time of the advent.

As this subject is, in the estimation of many, rather uninteresting, old and stale, we shall begin it with short articles: hoping thereby to obtain for them a general and careful reading, without wearying the patience of those who may peruse them. We consider this number nothing more than an imperfect introduction to the subject before us. In our next we will try to enter directly into the merits of the case. In the mean time let each enquirer after truth, the present truth, make those texts which will next claim our attention, subjects of special investigation, that each may be the better prepared to appreciate the force of our comments upon them, or more readily detect our errors, should we fall into any. Those texts which we purpose next to examine are recorded in Matt. 24: 36, 39—12, 44, 50; 25: 13. And perhaps the corresponding passages in Mark and Luke's gospels.

Let us all search with disinterested motives for the true import of these words of our soon coming Lord and King. Let us commence the work as impartially as though we had never committed ourselves on the advent question, had never heard nor read on the subject before. In short, let the glory of God be the sole object of our researches, of our re-examination of this whole question. If we enter upon the work with this motive to guide us, and if we persevere with untiring diligence in our studies, until we shall know as far as we are capable, its length, breadth, height and depth, as measured by the infallible word of the Lord, we venture to say that we shall be richly compensated for our labor.

State of the Dead.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I wish you would give us your views upon the subject so much agitated at this time, viz; the state of the dead. I would like to know whether there is or is not a Catholic purgatory, or Hades, where the souls of the righteous and the wicked are confined until the resurrection—whether we have any Bible for such a view of the subject.—I do not think that you are afraid to give us your opinion at least. Yours in hope, B. N. CHILDS.
Worcester, Mass. Dec. 14. '46.

RESPONSE TO BRO. CHILDS.

Certainly, Bro. Childs—we have no fear in giving our 'opinion' on this or any other subject, only should our opinion be erroneous, and others be led into hurtful errors by receiving it as the truth—on this ground we and all should fear and tremble, and repent so far as we have been guilty of doing such things. Our opinions should never be thrown into the scale of truth to decide any question relating to the faith of Christians. Neither should a work of this sacred nature and vast moment, be attempted by the alone testimony of uninspired men, or human inferences, drawn from parables, figures, &c. Nothing but the plain truth of the inspired word should or can settle questions of this character. Where the Bible is silent, we should not presume ourselves nor attempt to compel others to speak for it; nor torture its plain words into a meaning which their prime, most easy and literal import does not imply.

Well, as the Bible, in this light of the matter, is silent on the Catholic purgatory, or Hades, of the character of which you speak, we, as a matter of course, do not believe in the existence of any such place, only as it exists in the mythology of the heathen, the Alcoran of the Mohammedans, the adulterated theology of the Christians, and in the minds of the admirers of these human systems. In these localities we find that a great variety of such places exist, very minutely described, &c., &c. But as before said, as the Bible reveals no such place, or places, and provides no sentient beings either bodied or disembodied to people such a place or places, we of course have no faith in their real existence.

We would not in the least degree treat with disrespect our brethren who differ from us on this point: they will not construe our freedom of expression into anything like contempt or disrespect for them or their sentiments. We award to them the same privilege which we claim for ourself, viz: to read, think, believe, talk, write and act, according to the light we have, on this or any other subject, without giving or receiving offence, or marring our christian fellowship.

The final destiny of the wicked, is no new subject with us. We thoroughly investigated it in the early days of our ministry, about twenty years ago—we then had our set discourses on their final destruction. Hence in the late investigations on this question, we have not felt that interest we doubtless should, had the subject been new to us. We have considered it not the all-important doctrine which should now engage our attention. Like many other doctrines, we look upon it as of minor importance to that of the appearing of Christ and his kingdom.—This should be our watch-word, our rallying point, our bond of union which no consideration should be suffered to sunder or impair. But it is right that brethren should express their honest convictions on all doctrinal points, and investigate them, to a certain extent, in the spirit of love and forbearance.—We therefore now say a word on this at present greatly exciting question, viz; the State of the Dead. And in conclusion we will give the following reasons for not believing in a place of any name or description, where the disembodied spirits of the just and unjust, either together or separately, exist or remain, between natural death and the resurrection. And

1. The Bible is silent on this subject, or it affords no direct proof in favor of such a doctrine.

2. The Bible nowhere teaches that the resurrection will be a re-union of soul and body, one coming from Hades and the other from the grave; but the clear and uniform testimony on this point is, that the man dies, goes into the grave, and there remains until awakened by the trump of God in the glorious resurrection morn: this is true not of a part but of the whole man.

3. The true original import of the word Hades according to the best critics on the original Hebrew and Greek, does not signify a place of conscious existence. It literally means, hidden, invisible, or obscure. See A. Campbell's Notes, No. 21, on the New Testament. Such a place is the grave, a place where 'the dead know not anything.'

4. The doctrine of a Hades for the abode of disembodied spirits is of heathen origin. On this point, in the above note, Mr. Campbell says:—"Before the Captivity, and the Macedonian and Roman conquests, the Jews observed the most profound silence upon the state of the deceased, as to their happiness or misery. They spoke of it simply as a place of silence, darkness, and inactivity. But after the Hebrews mingled with the Greeks and Romans, they insensibly slid into their use of terms, and adopted some of their ideas on such subjects as those on which their oracles were silent. Hence the abodes of Elysium and Tartarus became familiar amongst the Jews; and as the Greeks and Romans had their gardens and fields of delight in hades, and their tartarus in the same region; so the Jews assimilated to them, and had their garden of Eden, or Paradise, and their Tartarus, all within the boundaries of Hades. So Abraham's bosom, or Paradise, was the abode of the happy separated spirits, and Tartarus was the abode of the wicked."

These are a very few of the many reasons we have for not believing in a Hades for the abode of disembodied spirits. We may offer more, as occasion may require; but we mean to have no strife, no controversy with any one on this question. The Devil would divide us on this point if he could. Let us guard against his devices, love as brethren—endure unto the end, and soon we shall meet in the kingdom of God, where our mental darkness will forever vanish before the clear light of eternal day and glory. Let it be our chief aim to possess the spirit and character that will ensure to us an admission into that better country, and glorious city whose builder and maker is God.

NOTE.—Relative to the Catholic purgatory, speaking of the reign of Pope Clement VII, in the thirteenth century, D'Aubigne, in his history of the Reformation, Book 1st, says:—"The philosophers of Alexandria had spoken of a fire in which men were to be purified. Some ancient doctors in the church had received the notion. Rome declared this philosophic tenet the doctrine of the church; and the Pope, by a bull added purgatory to his domain." Hence, according to this popular historian, the Catholics' purgatory had its origin in the vain philosophy of Alexandria.

A Bad Matter made Worse.

Elder Hazen, an Editor of the Christian Palladium, makes a bad matter worse, in the Palladium for Dec. 16th, in endeavoring to clear himself, and his committee, from our recent charge, that 'my faith in the coming of the Lord was the cause, the moving cause,' why the conductors of that paper wished my connection with it dissolved, &c. He contends that the committee, in their minutes of their meeting for Oct. last, did not say that my 'simple faith' was the cause, but my being 'so deeply engaged in the subject of the Savior's advent in '43,' was the cause. Neither did we say 'simple faith,' but we said FAITH, meaning, as everybody must know, not only a simple faith (as Elder Hazen evidently wishes to be understood,) but all that belongs to a practical faith, one that is not dead, but alive, active, made perfect by works. For this faith we say we were cast off by the conductors of the Palladium, and the people called Christians. This the committee of Oct. last acknowledge, this is clearly inferred from Elder Hazen's note under consideration, and this is the truth of this part of this unpleasant affair.

The Lord forgive my erring brethren, and show the same pardoning mercy towards us wherein we may have erred in this matter. We have none but the kindest feelings towards them, but we cannot sacrifice truth and justice to secure their lost friendship.

A Proposition.

Before naming what it is, we will tender our hearty thanks to those who have recently responded to our call for cash. They have done well, worthy of the cause in which we are unitedly engaged. Those who would but cannot pay, and have freely told us their circumstances; their faith and hope; the joy and strength they derive from the weekly visits of our paper, also have our thanks and sympathies: the poor must have the gospel preached unto them. Others who have not yet paid, but mean to, and will do it soon, or as soon as they can, also have our thanks for their honest determinations, and as soon as they shall be able to, and do really carry into practical effect these good resolutions, we will thank them again. But

—THE PROPOSITION—

We propose, the Lord willing, if all who are indebted will do what they can to pay up past arrearages, for the Voice of Truth; and if our patrons will increase its subscription list a few hundreds—then we propose to increase the size of our sheet, and improve its character what we can, without any addition to its present price. We do not think of changing the character of the paper, only as it may be changed in making it more perfectly what it now professes to be.

Those who favor this proposition will let us know as soon as practicable, that we may in due season make the necessary arrangements for entering upon this work. It can be done with united action on the part of our present subscribers. Some, we fear, have been rather inactive for some time past. It is high time to awake from our slumbers again, and go to work in good earnest, in giving our fellow beings a knowledge of their rapidly approaching doom, if out of Christ. Awake! awake! drowsy soldier: the crown is about to be given to all who shall not be found slumbering at their posts, but faithfully doing their duty when the Master comes.

To Correspondents.

We are much pleased with the very christian spirit manifested in the letter from Bro. M— of Cobourg, C. W. Let all possess the same spirit, and small differences of opinion would not impair their christian fellowship. The Lord bless Bro. M., and may we all soon enter that world of bliss where we shall not see through a glass darkly, but face to face, or alike, and correctly, on things on which we now differ.

Our good brother's articles on 'the final triumph of the just at the better resurrection,' 'the approaching judgment,' &c. &c., we are very sorry to decline inasmuch as we have a high regard for their author—much labor also has evidently been bestowed on them, and besides they breathe a christian spirit and advocate good and wholesome doctrine. But they are very difficult to read, and besides they are deficient in object or point. The original idea or doctrine designed to be advocated is not unfrequently lost sight of or covered up with a train or flow of words which rather bewilder than enlighten the common reader. A proposition clearly stated, with a few plain and distinct evidences to prove it, is the most successful way to propagate the truth.

To Ministers.

'Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word.'

1 Tim. 3: 1—This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, [episkopos, overseer] he desireth a good work.

2 A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach:

3 Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not contentious;

4 One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity:

5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?)

6 Not a novice, (or, one newly come to the faith—margin) lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach, and the snare of the devil.

Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight [episkopountes] thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind: neither as being lords over God's heritage; but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Query—Do the so called bishops, of the present day, possess this description of character? Will those who do not 'feed the flock of God' receive the crown of glory?

1 Tim. 4: 12—Let no man despise thy youth [how shall young ministers prevent this? by becoming popular? No.] but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

13 Till I come, give attendance to reading, exhortation, to doctrine.

15 Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear all.

16 Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee [Blessed assurance! Who will realize it?]

But thou, O man of God, flee from these things [lusts before mentioned] and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness! Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, &c.

2 Tim. 2: 3—Thou, therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

15 Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

16 But shun profane and vain babblings; they will increase unto more ungodliness:

22 Flee also youthful lusts: but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that on the Lord out of a pure heart.

23 But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes.

24 And the servant of the Lord must not str but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient,

25 In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth.

3: 14. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them:

15 And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith, which is in Christ Jesus.

16 All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness;

17 That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

4: 1 I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;

2 Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine.

5 But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, make full proof of thy ministry.

Titus 1: 7. For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre;

8 But a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, holy, just, temperate;

9 Holding fast the faithful word, as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

2: 1. But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine:

7 In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works; in doctrine shewing incorruptness, gravity, sincerity,

8 Sound speech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

I would exhort all the young ministers, especially whom God has called to feed his flock, to make these scriptures the daily pattern of their lives; and I would exhort the flock to receive and encourage none unless they possess in some degree the above qualifications. A neglect to take heed to these things, is the cause of the fall of the former, and the sore disappointment of the latter.

I would humbly thank 'the great Shepherd' for the preserving power of his grace and truth in my own case—for 'my feet were almost gone; my steps had well nigh slipped.' If any are lifted up, let them come right down before they fall; and if any are out of the way, let them return back—for we have an advocate, even Jesus—Amen!

BETLER MORLEY.

Yorkshire, Dec. 12th, 1846.

Answer to Berean.

We would inform Berean, that if the brain is the MEDIUM, or INSTRUMENT by which the mind acts, there must be something that acts by that medium; consequently, the mind that acts by that medium, must be independent of that medium. 2. Because the mind acts on matter only through the medium of matter, it does not follow that to act on mind, it must be through the same medium. To claim that it does from such premises, would be reasoning from unlike to unlike, putting more in the conclusion than is found in the premises, which will never do.

Figures of speech in the Proverbs must never be made to contradict the plain teachings of the Savior. Nor must any figures of speech. If the phrase, 'They devour widow's houses,' was to be interpreted according to your exegesis, you would see that it would involve an absurdity.—Advent Herald.

REPLY TO THE ADVENT HERALD.

The above remarks are regarded in the light of an causation rather than as an answer. Even if the questions had been offered in the form represented in those remarks, the answer would have been far from satisfactory.

Berean does not make use of the term medium, and why the brother added it to the word instrument? By fixing it in the manner it is, to instrument, does it not change the meaning of that word? If the propounder of those questions had desired to give instrument the meaning of medium, he would have done so himself. The question is, Do not physiology and natural philosophy teach that the brain is the cause and instrument, not [medium or instrument'] by means of which [not through which] the mind performs its various functions. There is quite a difference between cause and instrument and 'medium or instrument.' In the sense of those remarks, (a correct definition) the word medium means, the space or substance through which a body moves or passes to a point. The word instrument in the questions, or in itself will not bear such a definition; but by attaching medium to instrument, as 'medium or instrument,' its full significance is given to instrument, and the design of the question at once evaded, and their position almost entirely changed.

Instrument, especially as used in the questions may be defined: a substance by which an effect is produced. The effect, is mind. When this instrument is in operation, the mind is performing its various duties; when this instrument ceases to act, there is no effect—NO MIND!

Thus, the reader will at a glance notice, that by calling instrument, medium, the writer of the above is enabled to assume a position the questions do not permit as they are, and makes the mind something perfectly independent of matter, not necessarily or absolutely subject to the life and action of the brain to perform its functions.

Will the Proverbs contradict the teachings of Christ?

Is the following passage from the prophecy of David a figure of speech? 'Put not your trust in princes, nor in the Son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.'

The questions in the 'Voice' of Dec. 9th, may be answered either in the affirmative or negative, but let them be answered according to their spirit and meaning.

BEREAN.

Letter from Bro. P. Alling.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I am happy to say the brethren generally in this vicinity, manifest no disposition of giving up their hopes, because our expectation of deliverance has not been realized. All we can say is, evidence appeared to centre around the autumnal months as the time of our redemption, and we honestly held up the light we had to the world, giving unto all a reason for our hopes; and as God in his wise Providence sees fit still to defer the time, I think it becomes us to submit to his will, knowing that he doeth all things well, and in due time we shall reap if we faint not. Our trials only tend to sweeten the promises and lead us out farther and farther from the world. We have recently been favored with a visit from our beloved Bro. Cook, who came richly laden with the glad messages of salvation. The truths he brought out and the spirit manifested, harmonized sweetly with the spirit and word of the living God, and was truly meat in due season to the household of faith. He preached, I think, thirteen discourses in Norwalk and vicinity—twelve of which I heard and think I never listened to the same number of discourses, upon such a diversity of subjects in which I found less to except to than in his. The brethren and sisters were greatly blessed under his labors, and I do not recollect of hearing an exception to the doctrine and sentiments advanced; but on the contrary, all seemed to approve and respond with a hearty amen. There appears to be a life-giving power in the truths he advocated, peculiarly adapted to the wants of the brethren in this time of trial, to strengthen their faith and increase in them the Christian graces. He holds God and his word up together, and shows the former is ever mindful of the latter, and carefully superintends its fulfilment at the time appointed, and in the manner prescribed. When this fact is once riveted in the mind and heart of the child of God, there is no difficulty in believing that 'at the time appointed the end shall be,' and also we can see that God has been in the advent movement in all its parts, and has himself stood at the helm and directed events, and nothing has come to pass without his notice.

In public he said nothing about the shut door, but in private conversations he contended that his published views upon this point were correct. But when interrogated as to what he really meant by 'the shut door,' he defined his position just as the Voice has often done, viz: 'That in consequence of the preaching of the great truths of the speedy coming of Christ to judgment, and those truths having been rejected by the churches and the world, the Lord had withheld, and is gradually and rapidly withdrawing his spirit from off the earth, and now the door of access which we had to the people prior to the autumn of '44 is closed. Yet if any has an ear to hear let him hear, and will come to Christ, he can and will be saved.'

He preached two discourses in a neighborhood where there had never before been a lecture upon the subject. The truth seemed to have some effect upon the hearts of those who heard. He also baptised one young sister about twelve years old, upon the profession of her faith, who gave good evidence both to Bro. C. and all others acquainted with her of her acceptance with God.

I have been thus particular in my remarks, on account of the wrong impressions and prejudice that exists in the minds of many of the dear brethren against Bro. Cook, and the doctrines he preaches; and my desire is to induce them to lay their prejudices aside and candidly listen to him, as did the brethren here, and see if the Lord will not in like manner pour out his blessing upon them.

Yours in the faith of speedy redemption,

P. ALLING.

Norwalk, O., Dec. 5, 1846.

Letter from Bro. B. Morley.

Bro. Marsh:—In my recent visit to Pomfret and Laona, Chautauque county, I met with Mr. C. E. Gillett. I had received the 'Voice' a few days before, in which his unchristian conduct was exposed. Some expressed their fears that the exposure was premature, and the offence too trifling to warrant it; but as I had formed a slight acquaintance with him three years ago in Rochester, and had heard when in Steuben county, fifteen months ago, (where he had labored) of his improper conduct, I was somewhat prepared for the blow. But how could it be so! I had read accounts of revivals under his preaching, and of his having baptised several in different places. I hoped (until I saw your remarks) that he was a good man. I was present, when the paper containing the exposure was first presented to him; and I must say that his remarks and spirit were entirely unsatisfactory to my mind. We labored with him faithfully, but I fear it was all in vain. I could state other things if it were necessary, but your readers should not be too curious to know things which will do them no good,

Without a humble confession and a hearty forsaking on his part, I could have no hope of his doing any good in the world. I do not think that Mr. Gillett has laid himself liable to human laws—neither would the supposed case in Matt 18: 15—17, necessarily imply a breach of human laws; nay, a person might be guilty of nearly the whole catalogue of sins mentioned by Paul in 2 Tim. 3: 1—5, and not be thus liable.

On my return from Laona, I stopped a few days with Bro. Jacob Hooker, who lives about 6 miles south-west of Lodi. I held four meetings in that town, (Perryburgh.) A few who had never heard much on the subject, were considerably interested, and were ready to confess that the doctrine appeared consistent. The young people were generally giddy and vain; but there was one whose heart the Lord had touched. She wept at the mention of being ready for his appearing, and I trust not without hope. She has read your paper with considerable interest for some time. May she be found among the precious jewels in the great day that cometh, when all the proud shall be burnt up.

A brother Austin, member of the Baptist church, attended the meetings—invited me to his house—conversed freely, and said he could find no scriptural objection to what I had preached.

At Lodi, I found Bro. Grannis, still grounded and settled in the faith and hope of the gospel. There are few others there, but they have no meetings. In Collins, the leaven of spiritualism is still working—but I am inclined to think the lump will soon become so sour and loathsome, that some of those who have long been tasting, will sicken and turn away, that they may once more feast their famishing souls upon the words of God which are pure—for they 'are spirit and life.' Indeed I am informed that the Lord recently arrested one of them, with these words—'As ye have received Christ Jesus, so walk in him; at which he turned about, and said he would go back to where he first began in religion. I hope I am not misinformed: I pray that he may not be again entangled—but that others may follow his example. There is forgiveness with God, that he may be found—there is salvation in none other. The counsel of wisdom is, 'Forsake the foolish and live'—'Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts.'

I held two meetings in Collins; found Bro. Hanchett, Judson, and their wives, and a brother Richmond, sufficiently engaged to travel three miles through the mud to attend an evening meeting. The grace of God has enabled them to continue in 'the faith,' although spiritualizers have anathematized, and sectarians have remonstrated with them, and invited them once and again to turn back to them, instead of 'away' from them, as Paul directs. There are others in that region, who are faithful in defending the truth, and opposing 'vain visions and flattering divination.' I preached in this place and at Arcade yesterday, (Sabbath.) A few seemed to be affected by the truth: I hope they will soon learn to look up, and see their redemption drawing nigh.

Yours, 'rejoicing now in earnest hope,'

BUTLER MORLEY.

Yorkshire, Dec. 14th, 1846.

Bro. J. M. Stoddard, Montpelier, Vt., Dec. 8, writes:

It is a low time in religion here. Darkness prevails—bigotism and superstition abound, and infidelity stalks abroad at noon-day. But blessed be God, there are a few scattered among the green hills of Vermont who are looking for the speedy coming of our blessed Savior. The churches are in a doleful condition, following in the same track of the old Jews; promising the wicked better times and days of reformation, and fighting the advent with all their might. But do not be discouraged—God will soon deliver his children.

Sister P. Blood, Manlius, Nov. 27th, writes:—Our numbers in this place are small and scattered; still we have sustained meetings every Sabbath since our grove meeting in June. Bro. J. D. Johnson has been with us a part of the time, but has now been absent five Sabbaths, and we hear nothing from him. I fear he is sick. This office is his place of address, and he has many letters and papers waiting for his return. We esteem him truly a man of God, devoted to his Master's service. We are a despised little company, and are obliged to meet in a private house, because we are not popular enough to be admitted into the established places of worship; but we feel happy, because our Savior has said, 'Blessed are ye when all men shall speak evil of you for my sake—rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven—for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.'

Bro. G. Hill, Guilford, Ct., Dec. 8th, writes: Dear Bro. Marsh:—The Voice of Truth is a welcome messenger to all our hungry souls in these trying times. The Christ-like spirit it breathes, and the wholesome doctrines it advocates are food to my soul. It is read by twenty in Guilford, seventeen of whom are in the churches. I pass it from one house to another, till it goes through eleven families, and they are all poor except one, but none so needy as myself; but I believe I am doing the will of my heavenly Father in scattering the truth. I grow stronger and stronger in the faith of the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

When I view the end so nigh as it appears to be, and looking round upon the professed part of the community, preachers and people, I am astonished at the insensibility and stupidity of what is called the Christian Church. Blindness is come upon them, and they will not open their eyes that they might see. Your remarks in No. 10, to those that are still in the churches, referring to 2 Tim. 3: 1—4, are true, and my prayer is that some in this place will heed them, and come out of the churches.

Bro. Kent was in this place the last of August, and preached four evenings—B. O. S. C. Chandler the last of Sept. and preached three evenings, and the few that went to hear were revived and blessed. To God be all the glory. This is all the preaching we have had since the spring of '43. When Bro. K. left here we commenced our prayer meetings again, and we now hold them once a week, and the Lord is with us and that to bless. Our prayer to God is that he will again send some of his chosen servants into this place to proclaim to us the gospel of the kingdom of heaven at hand, for we feel very hungry for the bread of life.

Bro. I. R. Gates, Epping, N. H., Nov. 29th, writes:

My labors have been confined principally to this State for the few past weeks. Our meetings are increasing in interest all through this country. The advent ministers generally are well engaged and are laboring successfully for God's souls. Our conferences recently held at Lee, Exeter, New Durham, and other places, have been attended with great good. Yesterday (Sabbath,) I spoke three times at Manchester; the word was attended with the power of God; a number of backsliders returned to their Father's house, and a number of the impenitent came forward and bowed to seek for pardoning mercy—some of whom were blessed. Our meeting continued until 10 o'clock, and all seemed to say—

"We are loth to leave the place,

God is yet gracious, and Jesus is still willing to save; and our brethren in Manchester are willing to let him. They have the true revival spirit.

Bro. W. D. Cook, Sodus Point, Dec. 6th, writes:

The few in this neighborhood who have believed in the near coming of Christ, remain firm in the faith holding fast to the word of God, as the only sure staff to support us through the perils of our pilgrimage in these last days. What a wonderful instrument is that Word! not only a staff to support, but also a light to guide, and a sword to defend us. Oh! how blind were we in our sins, and how blind is the worldling and the hypocrite now, not to discover and appreciate the wonderful properties of this Book of books. How appropriate the remark of Bishop Horne, (on the Psalms) when applied to the whole Bible: 'The fairest productions of human wit, after a few perusals, like gathered flowers, wither in our hands, and lose their fragrant; but these unfading plants of Paradise become, as we are accustomed to them, still more and more beautiful; their bloom appears to be daily heightened, fresh odors are emitted, and new sweets extracted from them. He who hath once tasted their excellencies, will desire to taste them yet again; and he who tastes them oftenest will relish them best.'

Bro. J. W. Goodwin, Edenboro, Pa., Dec. 5th, writes:

The Voice of Truth is a welcome messenger to a few in this place. The present truth it contains, based upon the immutable word of God, is like cold water to a thirsty soul. We like time as it is revealed in God's word. Simple Bible truth, in all its harmony, is food for all those that desire the sincere milk of the Word, that they may grow thereby. There has been no lecturer through this part of the country. We say to the brethren, if it be possible, 'come over and help us.' We truly need some one to wake us up in these parts. I am sure that the present manner of preaching will not do it.

'How long, O Lord and Savior,
Wilt thou remain away?'

Bro. J. P. Teats, South Westerloo, N. Y., Nov. 25th, writes:—Our little company of brethren here stand fast in the faith once delivered to the saints, expecting daily to receive the kingdom, and see all the glorious realities promised in the blessed word.

Bro. J. Read, New Hartford, N. Y., Nov. 28, writes:—I have a room fitted up at my own expense, and I wish Bro. Galusha or Bro. Pinney would come this way and make an effort to wake up this sleeping community. We are as cold here as 'Greenland's icy mountains!' Come if possible.

Bro. C. R. Griggs, Mannsville, N. Y., Dec. 8, writes:

The good Lord is at work among his people in this place, and good is being done. Backsliders have been reclaimed and the unhappy divisions that have been among this people have fled, and the spirit and love of the blessed Jesus have taken its place—for which praise the Lord!

C. E. Gillett.

The brethren in this place wish to inform their brethren generally, that Mr. C. E. Gillett recently called on us, preached three times on the Sabbath, and administered the supper. He then called for a letter of commendation as an advent preacher. Some of us gave him one, all not being present, for which we are very sorry. For he stayed in the place eight or ten days, and his conduct was not such as is becoming a civil man, let alone an advocate of our blessed hope. If the particulars are called for they will be given.

An Auction.

While travelling at the South, a short time since, one day, as I was passing through a noted city, my attention was arrested by a concourse of people upon the public square. At first I queried as to the cause, but beholding a liberty pole in their midst, with a long flag of stripes and stars unfurled by the breeze, and remembering that it was the thirtieth anniversary of a celebrated battle, fought on that very ground, I was not long in deciding that they had met to commemorate the event, and sing the prowess of the American arms. But judge of my surprise, when, alighting from my horse, and crowding my way to the centre of the group, I soon satisfied myself that it was to be a Southern auction. Here is quite a contrast, thought I, an auction to sell the liberty of one or more native born citizens, on the very ground, where our fathers spilt their blood in a struggle to defend their liberties! And as I had never witnessed the sale of a human being, I thought I would stop until it took place.

There being no one within the ring around the stand, I thought I would inquire the cause of the sale. Turning to a man in black, with rather a calculating mien, I was promptly informed that a merchant of the city had failed in business. The stranger said the merchant owed him a large amount, and he had attached his property, and 'among other things, his beautiful domestic.' He said the owner had been to great expense to educate her, and had rendered her every way interesting; and with emphasis, he added, 'that slave shall now be mine.'

Soon I saw two men coming through the crowd attended by a female. They entered the ring around the stand. The sequel showed them to be the auctioneer, the unfortunate merchant, and the more unfortunate young lady, for slave she could not be. The auctioneer stepped upon the stand and ordered her to follow. She dropped her head upon her heaving bosom, but she moved not. Neither did she weep—her emotion was too deep for tears. The merchant stood near me. I attentively watched his countenance. 'Twas that of a father for the loss of an only daughter. Daughter he had not; but I understood that he had intended to adopt her, who, instead of being now free, was doomed to perpetual slavery. He appeared to have a humane heart. With tears in his eyes he said, 'Helen, you must obey—I can protect you no longer.' I could bear no more—my heart struggled to free itself from the human form. I turned my eyes upward—the flag lay listlessly by the pole, for not a breeze had leave to stir. I thought I could almost see the spirits of the liberty martyrs, whose blood had once stained that soil, and hear them sigh over the now desecrated spot.

I turned around and saw two veterans of that eventful day, tottering over their staves a few feet from me. They had come from one of the free States to spend that anniversary on the ground of the spilt blood of their brothers. While they looked upon the scene before them, tear answered to tear. With shrivelled hands uplifted toward heaven, the elder broke the silence by exclaiming, 'O, my country! my country! How fallen! Has the angel of liberty taken her departure forever? O, weeps she not over crushed humanity?'

I turned to look for the doomed. She stood upon the auction stand. In stature, she was of the middle size; slim and delicately built. Her skin was lighter than many a Northern brunette, and her features were round, with thin lips. She was the most fair albino that I ever saw. Indeed, many thought no black blood coursed in her veins. Now despair sat on her countenance. O! I shall never forget that look. 'Good heavens!' ejaculated one of the two aged fathers, as he beheld the features of Helen, 'is that beautiful lady to be sold?'

Then fell upon my ear the auctioneer's cry, 'How much is said for this beautiful, healthy slave girl—a real albino—a fancy girl for any gentleman? (!) How much? How much? Who bids? 'Five hundred dollars,' 'eight hundred,' 'one thousand,' were soon bid by different purchasers. The last was made by the friends of the merchant, as they wished to assist him to retain her. At first no one seemed disposed to raise the bid. The crier then read from a paper in his hand, 'She is intelligent, well informed, easy to communicate, a first rate instructress.' 'Who raises the bid?' This had the desired effect. 'Twelve hundred'—'fourteen'—'sixteen,' quickly followed. He read again—'She is a devoted Christian, sustains the best of morals, and is perfectly trusty.' This raised the bids to two thousand dollars, at which she was struck off to the gentleman in favor of whom was the prosecution. Here closed one of the darkest scenes in the book of time.

This was a Southern auction—an auction at which the bones, muscles, sinews, blood, and nerves of a young lady of nineteen, sold for one thousand dollars; her improved intellect, for six hundred more; and her Christianity—the person of Christ in his follower, four hundred more.

The Voice of the Sea.

Seldom has it fallen to the lot of the conductors of the press, to record so many disasters by the stormy deep, as during the past autumn. Since the terrible gale swept along our coast on the 7th, 8th and 9th days of September—putting an end to the burning heat of our protracted summer—tidings, in rapid succession, have been borne to us, of gales and storms, of tempests and hurricanes, of perils and wrecks on almost every sea and shore.

We have not forgot the equinoctial in which the Great Western was brought into such awful jeopardy and forlorn hope, and in which so many less-favored vessels went down at sea, or were thrown upon the rocks, with the loss of hundreds of precious lives. The stranding of the Great Britain in Dundrum Bay immediately followed; and shortly after the almost unparalleled hurricane in the Gulf of Mexico, so destructive to property and life, especially at Key West and Havana. Along the line of our great lakes the storms of heaven have raged with scarcely less fury and frequency. No portion of the morning print has so painfully interested the mother, the wife and the children of the sailor, and the voyager, as the "Marine List." Bark after bark has gone down, or been cast upon a lee-shore, when the simple and unvarnished record has been—"No tidings of the crew and passengers!"—"All on board perished!"—"Sixteen bodies found!" A morning paper of the 7th inst., observes—"From all quarters we receive accounts of violent storms, causing great destruction of life and property. North, South, East and West, there seems to have been a series of perfect hurricanes."

Among the disasters, none have so deeply and painfully interested the whole community, as the loss of the Atlantic, with nearly fifty of her passengers and crew. We had been kept in distressing suspense for the safety of the Great Britain, and of many lesser ships, freighted with the lives of valued friends; but we had no fears in relation to our steamers on Long Island Sound, or at least in relation to the Atlantic. We had no conception that the blow would fall upon us from that quarter.—And when it came, we were held in mute amazement. We could scarcely credit the first report; and refused to believe, until the bodies of the dead, and the bleeding, bruised forms of surviving friends compelled us into grief.

A disaster, so unexpected and so dreadful, calls up anew the painful memories of other days. We seem once more to see the majestic "President," putting forth from her moorings, speeding her way to the ocean, and in the blackness of a midnight tempest engulfed with all her terrified inmates in the depths of the sea. Once more we seem to see the flames kindling in fury upon the "Lexington," and driving her terror-stricken passengers into the waves to perish in the deep, or by the piercing, freezing blasts of winter.

From all these wrecks and terrors of the present and the past, there comes a voice of solemn and awful remonstrance—the voice of the sea—crying in every ear, "Prepare to meet thy God!" Taught by these distressing providences, and recognizing the voice of the Almighty in these storms, it becomes us to pause—to consider our ways—to look to our hopes—and to ask, "Am I prepared to die?"

The voice of the sea is the voice of God. "The sea is his and he made it." "He commandeth and raiseth the stormy wind which lifteth up the waves of the sea." It was God who heaved that rocky island from the depths, who filled the deep with billows, who raised that stormy wind and marked its course, who lashed the bosom of the sea with his mighty tempests, who cast that frail bark as a weed upon the rock, who summoned those immortal beings into his awful presence, and tolled their funeral knell with his dreadful blasts. He is a great and a terrible God. He it is whose whose judgments are calling us to repentance. Let us hear his awful voice and tremble.

Hath he smitten thee with his rod—bereaved thee with his tempests? It is to save thee. Hath the sea, in its fury, swallowed up the dear son of thy love, the husband of thy youth, thy honored and tenderly-beloved parent? Oh! it was not the sea, it was God. The sea is but his servant—the winds but his messengers. "Be still," he says, "and know that I am God." Go to his throne of grace, and, as in anguish thou liftest up the cry—"All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me" cast thyself into the everlasting arms and thou art safe; "for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee."

Art thou unprepared to meet him? Tremble before so great a God. Trille not with his offered mercy. "The sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea." The God of the sea is ringing an alarm in the ears of the careless. Hear it, ye thoughtless, ye unconverted souls—hear it and live. Presume not on his forbearance. Spurn not his gospel. Grieve not his Spirit. "Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little." "Acquaint thyself with him and be at peace." Listen to that Savior who died to redeem thee, and waits to wash thee in his blood. Yield to that Spirit, whose love you have so resisted, and who is now speaking to thee in the storms of the sea. Go on bended knees to that gracious Father, who waits to welcome the prodigal, and say to him—"Father! I have sinned: my guilt forgive; my soul renew; and make me thine forever!" Go, ere you sleep; go now, and trust no more the uncertain future.

"Moments seize;

Heaven's on their wing: a moment we may wish,
When worlds want wealth to buy."

[N. Y. Evangelist.]

Psalm 137th.

"By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down,
We thought of lost Zion, heretofore and alone,
We hung'd our harps in the midst on the willows—
We wept, and our tears were lost in the billows!

The spouters that did us to captivity bring,
That desolate made us, required us to sing
One of Zion's sweet songs—Oh! how can we when brought
'Mongst foes, and with sorrows our bosoms are fraught!

Oh Salem, thou lamented! our hearts dwell on thee:
To see thee again, how we sigh to be free!
If thy merr'y e'er from this bosom be severed,
My tongue become mute, my right hand be withered!

Great God of Jerusalem! O hasten the hour,
When Edom and Babel shall fall by thy power;
When our bondage shall cease, and our mourning be o'er,
And thy Zion arise to sorrow no more. H. HEVKS.

BY T. R. BIRKS, M. A.

FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND.

VII. Let us now return to that holy prophecy, and examine more fully its testimony on the same subject. Besides the closing vision, it presents to us many other proofs that the Advent is pre-millennial. This doctrine is strongly implied even in the opening chapter. The coming of the Lord is there presented to us as the immediate hope of the church. Tribulation and patience, not joy and triumph, are to be the experience of the faithful until the Lord himself shall return. But the prophetic visions yield us more distinct and copious evidence.

1. In chapter vii. we have a vision of the heavenly glory, and a distinct allusion to the feast of tabernacles, and the ingathering of the church. But although this appears at the close of a full and detailed prophecy, we have no mention of a previous millennium. On the contrary, warfare, famine, pestilence, martyrdom, political convulsions, and the sealing of an elect remnant out of an unbelieving world, are the only events which are described to us before this celestial triumph and reunion of the people of God.

2. In the series of the seven trumpets a succession of judgments are clearly predicted, to fall upon the Roman world. During their course, it is very plain that no millennium can intervene. But the seventh or last trumpet is clearly the signal for the Advent of the Lord himself. Almost every phrase of the description (xi 15—19) bears witness to this truth. 'The kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of the Lord and of his Christ.' And thus the words of our Savior's parable are then fulfilled—'when he returned having received the kingdom.' (Luke xix 15.). A reign forthwith commences which is to be everlasting; a reign, in contrast to the previous time of patient waiting. Vengeance is then inflicted on the angry rebellion of the nations. 'The time of the dead is come, that they should be judged'

—words that evidently denote a resurrection. The reward is then given to the prophets of God, which can only be fulfilled at the Advent—as St Paul declares, 'Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, will give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing.' The destroyers of the earth will then be destroyed. And this clearly answers the words of the same apostle, 2 Thess. i 6. 'And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from Heaven with his mighty angels; in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel.'

The same truth appears from the further character of this time, that it is the seventh, or last trumpet. For this is the very term of distinction used elsewhere to denote the era of the resurrection. 'We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet: for the trumpet shall sound; and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.'

Nor is this merely, as some have thought, a verbal correspondence and nothing more. On the contrary, it is one of the clearest links of connection which the Spirit of God has revealed in the whole word of prophecy. That we might not mistake the reality of the connection, it is confirmed to us by another mark of direct reference. The apostle introduces his statement with that emphatic clause—'Behold, I shew you a mystery.' And in distinct allusion to his words, under the sixth trumpet we have this announcement, made with an oath by the Lord himself—'That in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall surely be finished, as He hath proclaimed the glad tidings to His servants the prophets.' Thus, even by the oath of Emmanuel, the seventh trumpet in the Apocalypse is fixed as the time of the long delayed resurrection. The dead shall then be raised incorruptible, and the living shall be changed.

Nor is the force of these remarks to be avoided by the suggestion that the trumpets, in Revelation, are symbolical, and the last trumpet, named by St. Paul, literal and open. There is no reality in the contrast. The ministry of angels is actually employed through the whole series of the Divine judgments. Their real agency is constant—and their loud warnings are heavenly realities from the first. But as the crisis advances, they become more sensible to the eyes and ears of the unbelieving world. And hence we might naturally infer that the seventh trumpet, which crowns and completes the whole, would be conspicuous and audible—that the angelic ministry, and the blast of judgment, would at length pierce through the sluggish atmosphere of the senses, and become a manifest signal of the Lord's Advent, to the church and even to the world.

3. In chap. xii—xiv, we have another series of prophecy, which, like the former, clearly includes no era of millennial triumph. Yet its close, as before, is attended by the plainest marks of the Lord's Advent. One like unto the Son of man is seen upon a white cloud, and reaps the harvest of the earth—a constant figure to denote the ingathering of the church at the resurrection. The same meaning of the emblem is here confirmed by the spiritual first fruits described in the same chapter. The ingathering of the saints must therefore ensue immediately on the fall of Babylon, and introduce, instead of following, the millennial kingdom.

4. The same doctrine results, with equal evidence, from the next vision of the seven vials. These clearly precede and introduce the millennium. Yet under the sixth vial we have this distinct and express warning, given by our Lord himself, and interrupting the course of the vision, 'Behold, I come quickly! Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments.' There is thus another express declaration, from our Lord himself, that his second coming is to precede the millennium; and a plain command is here given to His church, that they be ready to welcome and receive Him.

5. Another proof may be drawn from the close of the first explanatory vision (Rev. xix 1—10.) There, immediately on the fall of Babylon, the proclamation is made. 'The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his bride hath made herself ready.' But this metaphor every where denotes the union of the church with her Lord in the day of the resurrection. Till the bridegroom returns, her state is one of widowhood, but then the cry is made;—'Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet Him.' And thus we have another convincing proof that the Advent must precede, and not follow, the millennial reign.

We have thus reviewed, briefly, the testimony of the New Testament on this great subject. From first to last the consent and harmony is unbroken. There is not one single passage which implies a long period of rest and triumph before the Lord's return; there are many, very many, which exclude it, and prove it to be impossible. The distinct and full prophecies of the Apocalypse confirm and ratify the conclusion drawn from the more general statements of Holy Scripture. There is no balance, no division of evidence on this point: it lies entirely, and without exception, on one side. Its tone and spirit throughout may be summed up in the words of St. Paul, 'Yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry.' Or in the warning of our Lord himself, 'Behold, I come quickly, blessed is he that watcheth.'

The only way to avoid the weight of these arguments is to expound all the above passages of a figurative, and not a personal advent. But it is well to consider first the necessary consequence of such a systematic violence done to more than a hundred passages of the word of God. The result will be, that the Scriptures give us no proof whatever of a personal Advent to come. The texts where the Second Advent is announced without any note of time, are not stronger in expression, and they are fewer in number, than those which need, on this hypothesis, to be explained into a mere figure. And where, then, is the Scriptural evidence for any real advent of the Lord whatever? An invincible argument would be thus supplied to the scoffers of the last days; and the voice of an infidel philosophy would be seconded by the reasonings of a false theology, in their boastful challenge—'Where is the promise of his coming?'

The evidence of the Old Testament would naturally come next in order; but it seems almost needless to unfold it at length; and the subject of the following chapters will partly include it. One remark alone is conclusive as to its real nature

The whole nation of the Jews, though blind to the doctrine of Messiah's sufferings, have always held firmly, both the hope of their own restoration, and of Messiah's Advent in glory, to judge and to reign. What then is their view, drawn from the Old Testament exclusively, of the order of these two great events? In every age, and without exception, they have held that the glorious advent of Messiah precedes that promised restoration. Surely this alone is a decisive proof, that the evidence of the prophets leads clearly to the same view which has been derived already from the evangelists and apostles, and which is confirmed by their unvaried testimony in every part of the New Testament.

Indeed it would be easy to show that in almost every passage where the prophets, from Isaiah to Malachi, have announced the future restitution, it is prefaced by some token, more or less distinct, of the coming of the Lord; and this too an Advent, not to suffer, but to execute judgment, to conquer and to reign. It may be enough to refer simply to four passages—Isa. xi. 34, 35; lix and lx, and Zech. xiv, which are among those most frequently adduced as promises of the millennial glory.

If we turn from the direct evidence of Scripture to the history of the Church, it will be found to confirm, rather than to oppose, the conclusions already drawn from the fountain of inspired truth. Three leading theories, in succession, have prevailed. During the ages before Constantine, the great majority of Christians looked, first, for the coming of Christ, and next, for a millennium then to ensue. In the fourth century, when the marks of growing apostasy were multiplied, a different view of prophecy expelled that which had hitherto prevailed. The coming of the Lord was still viewed as at hand. But the millennium was transposed, and expounded of a thousand, or less than a thousand years, to elapse from the first Advent to the coming of Antichrist just before the final judgment. The creed was almost universal from that time till the Reformation; and has been held since by nearly all Roman Catholic divines, and a large proportion of Protestant Christians in the two following centuries.

Within the last two hundred years, however, a third opinion, distinct from both the former, has obtained wide currency in various branches of the Protestant Church. The millennium is viewed as still future, but is placed before the Second Advent. Many pious Christians, little versed in history, have even come to imagine this to have been the general and constant faith of the Church from the beginning. A greater mistake as to a question of fact was never committed. This hypothesis, of all the three, is far the most recent in its birth, and has had by far the shortest continuance, and has also never obtained so decisive a prevalence as the two others in succession have enjoyed. The second view has still been maintained by nearly all Roman Catholic writers, and not a few Protestant Divines. A large number, also, in the Reformed Churches, among whom are many of the leading expositors, have adhered firmly to the view of the early Church. And, besides its disputed prevalence even in its own day, this third hypothesis lies under another adverse presumption. Arising as it has done, in the latter times of the gospel, and sixteen centuries after the prophecy was given, it has the fatal defect that it compels the Church to delay the hope of the Advent to a distant period; and seems thus like an echo, in the last times; and to the words of the evil servant, 'My Lord delayeth His coming.'

Viewed in this aspect, the new-born theory of a spiritual millennium still to come, before the Advent, is far inferior to that which it has replaced. The certain delay, thus interposed, of a thousand years, nullifies the warnings, and frustrates the commands of Scripture, 'Be ye always ready, for at such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh.' It seems thus adapted to encourage and justify the world in a careless neglect of the approaching judgment.

This evil tendency of the theory may, however, in many cases be counteracted by the instincts of a spiritual mind, and a deep impression on the conscience of eternal things. In another aspect, also, the view may claim a superior truth. To fix the millennium, as was done by the second theory, amidst ages of gross idolatry, was a violence to the healthy instinct of true faith and holiness, and opened a wide door for the pretensions of superstition and the worst delusions of Antichristian pride. Even in the holiest minds, this prospect of future judgment, unrelieved by any hope of the earth's redemption, tended to generate a harsh, austere, and ascetic spirit, and to blight and destroy all the gentler graces and social virtues of the Gospel of Christ. On the other hand, the doctrine of a spiritual millennium to come, before the judgment, has a powerful influence to cherish a spirit of active benevolence, and to open a wide field for the exercise of the purest Christian affections, in thoughts, and prayers, and labors of love, for the progress of Christ's kingdom here below. Thus Christian piety tends to assume a more cheerful, hopeful, and active form, and to look with an eye of joyful anticipation upon a world where truth and righteousness are shortly to prevail.

Such are the practical benefits due to the truth which the system contains. But there are also serious evils which flow from its one great error. The supernatural and divine is sunk and lost in that which is natural and human. Outward means eclipse the Divine sovereignty. The violent glosses which Scripture prophecy is made to endure, blunt the edge of Christian faith, and the distance to which the Advent is removed, lowers the solemn impression of eternal things. Expediency overruns the Church; and even Christian benevolence, divorced from the energy of a simple faith, and the lively hope of the resurrection, may thus assume a fatal resemblance to the spurious and godless philanthropy which marks the infidel systems of the last days.

On the other hand it must be confessed that the sounder view of the first ages was often mixed, in the infancy of the Church, with puerile conceptions, and sometimes, by Cerinthian heretics, perverted into an unnatural union with sensual errors and delusions. Even among orthodox Christians, it was held perhaps rather as an isolated fact, than with an enlightened view of its harmony with the whole course and object of the Divine dispensations. And this made it more easy for it to be set aside, when, in the fourth century, the intellect of the Church was rapidly developed, at the very time that its pure and simple faith had begun to decay.

And what then is the practical conclusion from this review? The duty of Christians, in the present day, is to collect from the past history of the Church these various elements of truth, and to guard themselves, by the lessons of dear-bought experience, from their attendant and parasitic errors. From the consent of the early and middle ages, we must learn to renounce that delusion of the last days which would justify the language of the evil servant, 'My Lord delayeth his coming,' and, against all the evidence of Scripture, would interpose a millennium before that coming of the Lord, which He now proclaims to us under the sixth vial as near at hand. By the harmonious witness of the first ages and the last, we must reject the cold negation of that theory which sees nothing in store for our earth but annihilation in a fiery judgment; and shuts its eyes to the numerous and joyful promises of a rich and full triumph of peace, righteousness, and holiness, on this very planet, which the Incarnate Savior has hallowed with his own sacred footsteps, and which he has ransomed by His sacrifice from the dominion of vanity and sin. By the mature experience of successive ages, unfolding more clearly the mystery of God, we must purify the millennial hope of the first Christians from all the sediment it may have contracted in earthly minds; and thus unfold it in its high and spiritual beauty, and in all the grandeur it assumes when read in the mirror of God's eternal counsels. Then will the Church, enlightened by a Scriptural hope, combine in her experience the most various elements of Divine grace. Looking for the sure redemption of the earth, every social affection will be called into lively exercise, and a cheering impulse be given to all the devoted labors of pure benevolence and Christian love. But waiting also for the coming of the Lord, and the promised resurrection, her faith and love will be raised above the blighting infection of an infidel age, and assume once more their supernatural dignity. Her hopes will no longer be confounded with the vain dreams of ungodly philosophers, but will be anchored within the veil; and all her desires and anticipations will be fixed on that day, when the Desire of nations shall come; when His blessed feet, which for our sakes were nailed to the cross, shall stand once more on the Mount of Olives, and 'the Lord shall build up Zion, and appear in His glory.'

The Day and Hour not known.

Rev. iii 3—'Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.'

Some suppose that this text proves that those who watch, will know the sixty minutes in which the Savior will appear; but from its use in four other places in this book, it clearly means a period, or space of time. Chap. iii 10—'Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.' xiv 7—'Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.' xvii 12—'And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.' xviii 19—'And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas! that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.'

They also suppose that Matt. xxiv 37 proves the same. It clearly means that it shall be as it was in the days of Noah, just so far as he then states, or it shall be the same in every respect. If the latter, we must yet build an ark, and gather into it all the saints, and two of every kind of beast and fowl! for which I think there will neither be faith nor time. Matt. xxiv 43 is quoted to the same purpose. 'If the good man had known what watch of the night the thief would come, he would have watched;' but as he did not, he had to watch all night. In both the verse preceding, and the verse following, it is said, 'Ye know not,' which is proof positive that the 'good man' did not know the watch in which the thief would come; and, therefore, had to watch till he did come. V. 42—'Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.' 44: 'Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh.' Luke xii 37, 38—'Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching: verily, I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them. And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, that is watching, 'blessed are those servants.' Matt. xxv 13 I think settles this matter. 'Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.' Ye: who? the virgins living at that time.

It is to be observed, that God usually speaks to his people,—ye, you; or possessively—my, mine, while he speaks of the wicked,—they, them, those. Ye, therefore, the wise virgins, know neither the day, nor hour, wherein the Son of man cometh. It would have been a lame motive to the saints 1800 years ago to watch, because the last generation of Christians would meet with a disappointment in the vision appearing to tarry. Matt. xxiv 40—42: 'Then,' (when? when 'so shall the coming of the Son of man be,' v. 39,) 'shall two be in the field,' 'two in the bed,' 'two in the mill,' (through both hemispheres, it being day in one and night in the other,) 'the one shall be taken, and the other left. Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.' If they did know, they would not be either in the bed, field, or mill.

But we are to 'know that he is near, even at the doors.' When one is on the opposite side of the street, he is near; but when he is 'even at the door,' another step and he stands before us! We do know that Rome has been divided between ten Barbarian kings; that three of them were subverted; that the Papacy arose upon their subversion, and that it signed away its power to coerce the saints in the first year of this century, 1260 years after receiving it. Who will believe or leech, that either of those events must take place again? We do know that the sun and moon have been preternaturally darkened. And who believes that 400,000,000 of people must spend another sleepless night, to see the stars fall like a fig-tree casting her untimely figs, before the Son of man shall be revealed? We do know that all the signs are passed but the sign of the Son of man. Christ, then, is even at the door: the next step is the throne of fire in the heavens! Every intervening night, or day, or hour, is a mystery. O, if I had a body of iron, lungs of steel, and a tongue of brass, how would I climb the Palisades and cry, 'O, Earth: prepare for the great and terrible day of God, which hasteth greatly!' Amen, come Lord Jesus.—Advent Herald.

"Open thy Hand Wide to the Poor."

Ye that possess the world's goods—who 'confess that you are pilgrims and strangers upon the earth—seed of Abraham—children of God, and followers of the benevolent Jesus, listen for a few moments again, to the claims of that being who is the sole proprietor of earth and all its treasures—of our bodies and spirits—to His just demands on us for a kind and wise use of temporal goods, committed to our trust. The God of Jacob changes not; the heart's principle that was acceptable in the first of his dispensations with man, he requires now. Obedience, promptly and unreservedly rendered up to him, is better than all the empty and do-nothing professions in the universe.

Let us refresh our memory with some Scriptures on the duty and privilege of saints to relieve the poor, and as we pass along you will notice the working of faith and labors of love, and a plain showing forth that this world is not the home of such as obey from the heart, to the glory of God, the injunction heading this article.

Deut. xv. 7—11, the first of which reads thus: 'If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren, within any of thy gates in thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him,' &c.

Let us hear what God's servant Job says on this subject; you have read with delight his glorious hope in his afflictions: he was a second advent believer of the practical kind—he groaned not for the restoration of his temporal possessions when they were taken from him; no—he longed for an immortal part with his Redeemer at the latter day upon the earth! Well, how did he show his faith? hear him—Job, xxxi 16 and onward—'If I have withheld the poor from his desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail, or have eaten my morsel alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof; if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering, if he were not warmed by the fleece of my sheep; if I have lifted up my hands against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gates; if I have made gold my hope, or said to the fine gold, thou art my confidence, &c., then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone.' Are our consciences thus clear? our faith thus genuine? our hope thus steadfast, in the coming of that same blessed Redeemer of whom Job speaks? Remember he will now speedily stand upon the earth in all his glory, and will very soon reckon with his stewards.

David, in the 37th Psalm, speaking of the meek, their inheritance—its duration—when they shall see it, &c. gives us one characteristic of their faith in that blessed inheritance. 'They are ever merciful and give to the poor,' &c. Again he says, xli, 1—'Blessed is he that considereth the poor.'

Let us hear a word from the wise man: 'Honor the Lord with thy substance—say not unto thy neighbor go and come again, and to-morrow I will give, when thou hast it by thee.' Prov. iii 6, 28. Again, xi 24—26: 'There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself.' xix. 17: 'He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again.' xxi 13—'Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself but shall not be heard.'

Let the man of God with the loud trumpet of truth to his lips, proclaim Jehovah's acceptable fast. Isa. lviii 7: 'Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house: when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?' Is this the way we are fasting in the absence of the Bridegroom? Do not put this subject away from you ye stewards of the Lord: he will take nothing as a substitute for obedience—his eye is upon you—his judgment carries but a step before you—the sighs of the poor are filling your ears! God grant their wants may fill your hearts, and your hand be open wide to give them.

Do not, I entreat of you, forget the judgment throne of the King of kings at his appearing! when he shall say to the righteous, 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom,' &c., 'for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me drink, I was a stranger and ye took me in, naked, and ye clothed me, I was sick and ye visited me, I was in prison and ye came unto me.' But to the wicked he will say, 'Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire,' &c. for I was in the above named situation of want and suffering, 'and ye did not minister to me!' Matt. xxv 34—46. Read it as you sit down by your blazing fires, and let your eyes flow in tears, as the cold stormy winds sweep by your comfortable dwellings, bringing as it were the cries of the almost houseless poor to your ears: O, then, to do good, and communicate, forget not. Let the bowels of your compassion flow out to those subjects of want and suffering within your reach. 'Give, and it shall be given you'—if not before, at the resurrection of the just, ye shall be recompensed.

Why, O why is it, my fellow companions to the kingdom of immortal glory, that you should require so much entreaty—so many heartfelt, tearful exhortations of the servants of God on this point of duty? you who have confessed that this world of sin is a wilderness state, and here you have no rest—no abiding home: why hold on so fast to every inch of your great farms? why so thoughtful of every particular in your domestic concerns that relates to comfort and convenience of self? why so disturbed when this subject is urged by the servants of God for your consideration? when by them you are charged to be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate—to lend your money to the bank, and take usury! when God saith, Give to my poor, lend it to me? But says my well supplied brother, 'I would cheerfully do more than I now do, if I was free from debt. What! possessing ample means to pay those debts, and yet neglecting to sell one inch of land or to dispose of any portion of the property, which you do not really need—the avails would not only free you from debt, but would furnish something for the suffering wants of the poor. You have no just cause for pleading inability to assist God's servants who labor for your spiritual good, or any other class of the laboring poor. My God! are these things true of any who profess to believe they shall shortly stand in the presence of their judge? we fear they are.

My brethren, in the name of our common Master, Jesus—if indeed Jesus is our Master—let me exhort you to see to this business immediately—prove yourselves true men—show a real joy when the call from any quarter of real need comes home to you; then take joyfully 'the spoiling' of that laid by treasure; cast it out with a Christian benevolence on the waters of human suffering, that in the day of ingathering you may find eternal life—an eternal inheritance! worth more than six thousand years' conception of riches, happiness and glory, has ever been able to estimate—Amen.

Desires for Holiness.

O dear brother or sister, let us not be satisfied with any attainment here, but strive to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, going on unto perfection. O for that holiness of heart that characterizes the apostles and primitive Christians,—and yet Christ is our pattern whom we should aim to follow, and who says to his followers, 'Be ye holy, for I am holy.' O, what an attainment, to be accounted holy in the sight of a holy God—to be able to stand before him at the judgment day, having that faith in Christ's blood that shall cleanse us from all sin, that we may be able then to stand without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, in the robe of righteousness, (i. e. faith in Christ) that we shall have put on. O, for more holiness of heart and life, to be more conformed to the image of Christ, that when he shall appear we may be made like him! O, glorious thought! to be made like Christ—to walk the streets of the city of God with the prophets and apostles! O, how happy shall we then be, when we shall hear Christ say, 'Come ye blessed of my Father,' &c. and to see that he smiles upon us! O, may God grant that such may be our happy lot! let us pray and watch—watch and pray.

ROCHESTER, JANUARY 6, 1847.

The Old and the New Year.

Another year of our frail life has closed; and how have I spent it? should be the solemn and impartial inquiry, while we welcome the commencement of the new year.

Sinner—you know you have been unhappy the past year; a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, has tormented your most quiet moments. Your sins have made you wretched, and, unless forsaken and forgiven, will prove your final ruin. Begin the work of repentance now, if you would be happy. This year may be your last. O, improve the present moment in securing the untold blessings of eternal life.

Backslider—you were once happy; Christ was your theme—his service, his saints, and his word were your delight. All is not well with you now. You know your sins are of the most aggravated character, and will sink you to irretrievable ruin unless forsaken soon. Reflect on the increasing backslidings and keen remorse of the last year; and ob be resolved to improve the present moment in returning to your Father's house, and in making amends, as far as possible, for your prodigality.

Nominal professor—your profession is as high and as holy as that of the most devoted Christian; but have your spirit and acts the past year been worthy of your calling? Nay. Instead of the spirit of Christ, you have possessed a carnal spirit. What duties you have coldly and reluctantly performed, have been done more for religious appearances than to glorify God. The widow, the orphan, and the needy poor, have not shared in your bounty. The church and minister's expenses have received but a scanty, if any support from your purse. Your Bible is not read, secret and family devotion are omitted. The prayer and conference meeting have lost their interest, and if you attend on Sabbath worship, to your disgrace you not unfrequently convert the house of God into a sleeping room! Oh ye blinded and hypocritical professors, you are weighed in the balance, and every true quality of the Christian is found wanting. Awake from your deception, before it shall be said to your eternal confusion, 'Depart, for I never knew you!'

Lovers of the world—your love of money is strengthening as your years pass away. The past year has been marked with increased efforts to add to your wealth. Still you are unhappy. Will you suffer yourselves to be deceived any longer in seeking happiness in uncertain riches? or will you try the true riches? Make the latter your wise choice.

Lovers of pleasure—we most affectionately ask, have either or all your vain amusements the past year filled the soul with holy peace? You know they have not. But in the height of your enjoyments, the solemn thought that for all these things you must soon be brought to judgment, has filled you with trembling fear. Then be advised to forsake the ways of the foolish and live.

Fathers and mothers—have peace and righteousness reigned in the domestic circle the past year?—If not, what is the cause, should be your earnest inquiry. Have you been unkind and untrue to each other? have the duties of the Christian been a stranger to your dwelling? has the religious instruction and training of your children been neglected? and has your spirit been vain, your conversation unholy, and your example sinful? Then, the reason is obvious why happiness does not reign in your dwelling. It never will preside there until you walk in the ordinances of the Lord blameless, until you train up your children in the fear of the Lord. Oh how great the responsibility of parents! We tremble in view of the final doom of many. The present is the time to set in order the morally disordered affairs of your house. The work is great, important, yet glorious in its results. Improve therefore the present moment in doing it, lest tomorrow be forever too late.

Churches in general—Faith, purity, union, and holy zeal become the house of God. Have you sustained these principles the past year? or does corruption, division, and a cold unbelief and apathy reign in your midst? With some the former is the happy condition; and prosperity has crowned their labors the past year, and they are ready to enter upon the duties of the new year fully prepared for doing good. May an abundant harvest, and the crown of life in the everlasting kingdom, be their rich reward ere the present year shall close. But with others, the latter, we fear, is the unhappy case. Let every member of such cold, weak, corrupt, or divided bodies, who is yet on the Lord's side, commence the year with new faith and zeal in the service of God, and he will pour out a divine blessing and will fill your borders with praise.

Brothers in the ministry—have we cleared our garments the past year from the blood of souls, or are they polluted with the world? Have we retired from the field because we did not receive a competent support? and are our brethren now famishing, and sinners perishing, for want of the bread of life, which it is in our power to impart? Alas, what an account such faithless and worldly ministers will have to render in the final day! It will avail nothing with stern justice for them to plead, that they were poor and therefore hid their Lord's money in the earth. It is through much tribulation that we enter the kingdom of heaven. Like many of the faithful servants of God who have fallen the past year, shall we soon have suffered our last deprivation, and fought the last battle. May we gird on the armor with new courage at the commencement of the year, and be resolved if required to do it to lay down our lives in the glorious field of battle, where to die is eternal gain and glory.

Finally, may our kind patrons, one and all, share richly in the free mercies of our Beneficent Creator,—live more holy and devoted to the service of God than any former year,—be thankful for past favors, and hope for future good,—and whether we live another short year, or die before its termination, or be called to meet our soon coming Lord, may our chief concern be to glorify God, that we may be His.

Time of the Second Advent.

No. II.

Agreeably to promise made last week, we now notice certain passages of Scripture recorded in the New Testament, which have a direct bearing upon the time of the second advent.

Matt. xxiv. 36. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father. Mark, xiii 32, adds, 'Neither the Son.'

42 Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

41 Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh.

xxv. 13. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

Mark xiii. 33. Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.

35 Watch ye therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at cock-crowings, or in the morning.

Luke xxi. 35. For as a snare shall it come upon all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. These texts speak directly to the question of the time of the advent. The following texts, though connected with those already given, have only an indirect bearing on the same question.

Matt. xxiv. 40. Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left. Two shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

Luke xvii. 34. I tell you in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

xii. 39, 40. And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not suffered his house to be broken through. Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not." The same sentiment, and in nearly the same words, is expressed in Matt. xxiv. 43, 44.

From these and some other similar texts in the gospels, it is indisputably evident that the Savior has freely, clearly, and fully discoursed on the time of his second advent. But the precise design of that conversation is a matter of dispute.

1. One class contend very strenuously that the Savior in this conversation meant unequivocally to teach that his second advent would, in every sense of the word, be a profound secret to saint and sinner. That they would have no more admonitions, warnings, signs, or knowledge of his coming, near that event, than a long period before. This conclusion they think the plain testimony in the case, such as, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man,'—'Ye know not when the time is,' &c., warrants.

2. The second class, to avoid the conclusion of the first, contend that the testimony, such as, 'Knoweth no man, Ye know not when the time is, &c., must be interpreted in the present tense, and be exclusively applied to the disciples before the day of pentecost. It is thought that the disciples, angels, and even Christ did not then know, but after the ascension, Christ received the promise of the Father, and the knowledge of the time was not only communicated to him, but on the day of pentecost was made known to the disciples, or they then received power to know it. The main proof to sustain this point is found in Acts i. 6-8. It reads, 'When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.'

Another evidence, on which much reliance is placed, in this case, is drawn from the fact, that after the ascension of Christ, 'God gave unto him,' and Christ gave unto his angel, and by his angel 'he sent and signified unto his servant John,' the 'Revelation of Jesus Christ,' in which the time of his second advent is supposed to be revealed. Rev. i. 1. In this revelation it is thought that men, angels, and the Son were informed relative to the time of the second advent.

3. The third class consider the foregoing views the two extremes in the case. The truth, they think lies between these widely opposite views. They believe inasmuch as the evidence in the case, such as 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man' &c.—'Ye know not when the time is'—was given in neither symbolical, metaphorical, nor parabolical language, but in the plain words of the Savior, that it means just what it says. They think it applicable to all, from the time it was given, to the actual time of the advent; especially the last generation: for this part of the discourse of Christ was particularly designed for this generation. They fully believe that the precise time of his advent will not be known by any one previous to its actual occurrence. They do not think however, that the testimony is designed to teach that near the time of the advent cannot be known; because the Savior's words do not necessarily warrant this conclusion, and besides they find in connection with the evidence under consideration, testimony equally positive, which tells us that when certain signs are seen, to 'know that he is near even at the doors.'—Matt. xxiv. 33. They cannot suppose that in the same discourse, or at any time, the Savior has contradicted himself; or in one breath taught us to know when his advent is nigh even at the door, and in the next breath told us we could know nothing about the near approach of that time. Therefore, this class believe that near the time of the advent is clearly revealed, and that this is as definitely as it is or ever will be made known, until the actual scenes of that great day open to the astonishment of a guilty world,

These are the three general opinions on this highly important and deeply interesting subject, and the object of our inquiry in the next place will be to decide which hypothesis is correct, or is justified by the word of the Lord.

That the first hypothesis is incorrect, will be readily seen by a careful examination of the context, in which the supposed proof for it is found. After giving the signs of his coming, and naming that event, in Matt. xxiv. 30, 31, the Savior says, 'Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so, likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it [or, he] is near, even at the doors.' These are plain and positive words, about which there can be no mistake. And that they most clearly convey the idea that the Savior's advent may be known as near as 'nigh even at the doors,' no one can understandingly deny. Any other view of the subject would make the signs named in the conversation worse than superfluous; for instead of guiding the watchful Christian, in looking for the fulfilment of his Lord's predictions, they would only serve to perplex and bewilder. Moreover, the parable of the fig-tree, and the Savior's application of it, viz; that when the signs were seen, his children might know that his coming would be near, would also be superfluous. Hence the hypothesis that we can know nothing about the time of the near advent of Christ, has no foundation in truth.

Give these texts their most literal signification, (which should be done) which say, Of that day and hour knoweth no man, &c., Ye know not when the time is—and their most rigid meaning will not in the least clash with the testimony which clearly and positively says, When ye see all these things, know that he is near, even at the doors. This principle of interpretation makes a perfect harmony of the Savior's testimony under consideration, while any other view we have seen taken of it, throws it into confusion, and makes it conflict with itself.

Luke xxi. 20. Speaking of the signs which were to precede the destruction of Jerusalem, the Savior says, 'And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee.' &c. That the disciples saw and understood these signs, and timely escaped from Jerusalem, before its destruction, all acquainted with the testimony in the case will not deny. How then can any one doubt that the children of God may know by the signs when the second advent is near: for nearly the same words are used in both cases. Relative to Jerusalem it is said, 'Then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.' Of Christ's coming it is said, 'So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.' Luke xxi. 31.

Nothing but blind unbelief can doubt in a case so clear. We may know when the return of our long absent Lord is near. And at this momentous crisis, let us take heed to ourselves, lest there be in us a heart of unbelief on these things. The Lord is at the door.

Other equally interesting points will claim our attention next week. Let each one thoroughly test what we communicate, by the unerring Word, that your faith may not stand in the opinions of men, but in the immutable truth of God.

Buffalo Conference.

This conference, up to the time when we left, was one of deep and joyful interest. Quite a good state of things had been witnessed in the congregation for some time previous to the commencement of this meeting. Some few we believe had embraced the faith, and the ordinance of baptism had been administered to several, and the church was very well engaged; hence there seemed to be a very good opportunity for doing good at the commencement of our meeting. And we rejoice to say that before we left a deep feeling of conviction seemed to pervade the assembly, and several had found peace in Christ, and others were seeking redemption.

If brethren who call for a conference, or help from abroad, would see that all is right among themselves first, greater blessings doubtless would be the fruit of such meetings than are the result when all is left to be accomplished by visiting brethren. If time continue long, we do hope that we as a people shall not fall into that fatal error that a church cannot be blessed with a revival of pure religion without the aid of a conference or protracted meeting. Such a faith, or rather unbelief, has left the blight of death upon the fallen churches around us. Such meetings, however, are right at suitable times: but a church that cannot live without being constantly under their influence, is far from being what it should be.

We were glad to meet Bro. G. Needham and family at this meeting. His labors in Michigan and Ohio, for some time past have been untiring and a great blessing to the cause there. He is just recovering from a severe sickness, which has been very prevalent in the Western States the past season. He designs locating somewhere in the vicinity of Cazenovia, N. Y. He will visit some of the churches on his journey, and preach the Word as strength and opportunity may admit. The Lord make him a blessing wherever he may labor, and may those for whom he shall work duly remember their duty to him.

We found Bro. Porter's health much improved, and himself well engaged in the word of his calling. Several ministering brethren were expected to attend this meeting before its close, none however had arrived on Tuesday morning, when we left, excepting those already named, and Bro. E. R. Pinney, who came the evening previous. We were glad to find his health much improved, and himself deeply devoted to the cause of God. We hope to hear that a glorious blessing attended the last part of this meeting.

The following letter from Bro. Miller will not only explain the reasons why he did not attend this meeting, but it will be a rich treat to all who may read it, who are 'looking for that blessed hope.' It was not designed for publication—i. e. the spontaneous fire side production of his soul—shows what the author is every day at home, and is too good to be lost. He will therefore pardon the liberty Bro.

Porter has taken in consenting to have it made public.

BRO. MILLER'S LETTER.

Dear Bro. Porter:—I am truly sorry that I cannot comply with your request. Nothing would gratify me more than to visit the dear friends of Jesus in your vicinity; but the Providence of God has so ordered that I have not been able to give one lecture in seven weeks, and I can hardly leave my room. My disease is a general debility, with an erysipelas and dropsical complaints—all combine to keep me confined to my house. Traveling has a bad effect, and to stand and speak an hour, takes away entirely what little strength I may possess.

I have thought it would be the rejoicing of my heart to visit the brethren in the West. I remember many of them with deep gratitude, for they have suffered with me in tribulation, in disappointment and hope deferred; yet I have great reason to be thankful to God—he has as yet left me a strong consolation, in having a sound mind, an unwavering faith, a good and blessed hope—and thus being armed I can forsake the alluring fascinations of the world, and look forward with an increasing interest, to that eternal inheritance beyond the tomb. The promises of God, oh how glorious! they are my meditation day and night. The blood of Christ, how free! it is a fountain to cleanse from all sin. The righteousness of Christ, how spotless! it will cover up all shame. The mercy of God, how full! it will forgive all my sins. The grace of God, how strong! it will deliver from all temptations. The word of God, how pure! it will sanctify and prepare us to be like God. His love, oh how faithful! it is everlasting. His wisdom, how great! it comprehends all things; no contingencies or accidents can prevent the accomplishment of the divine plans. His requirements, how easy: it is present happiness to obey. His Christ! is to us all we need! for whosoever has Christ has the gift of 'all things.' And he that has true faith has Christ; and he that has Christ in him, has the hope of glory, and will bring forth much fruit, and that fruit is love.

If any should inquire for 'Father Miller's' creed, tell them that the 1st article is 'Christ'; the 2d art. is 'Jesus'; the 3d art. is 'Christ Jesus'; the 4th art. is 'Jesus Christ my Lord'; the 5th art. is like all the rest, and so on to the end of all my creeds. My doctrine is, Christ was, and is, and is to come. They call me a man of one idea—let that be Christ, and I will say amen. I want but one Lord, faith, and baptism. They may have their Lords many, faiths innumerable, and their baptisms to suit all men, and devils too if they please—I choose one which will include the whole man from head to foot, and this surely will be one idea, to follow and please Christ: Therefore, when they my enemies try to bring reproach and dishonor upon me, God is able to make their works prove and manifest their own shame, disobedience and dishonor to God. They pretend to be men of many ideas; true they have many broken cisterns which can hold no water, but I would not find fault with them, but advise them as did the Savior, 'pluck the beam out of their own eyes, and then they might see clearly to take the mote out of their neighbor's eye.'

I would be glad, if my health should be restored, my life spared, and Christ should not come to visit the west in the spring. Yet the first two ifs are very doubtful, and the last I do hope will prevent the occasion, and I may meet you all in a better country before then.

I have no definite time in my faith now but today, and I think this is a safe position. Be ready every day until he comes; keep our garments unspotted from the world, have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather improve them, and if it be possible, pluck wicked men as brands from the burning.

I pray God you may have a good meeting, and my spirit and prayers shall be with you if God will. Give my love to all who love Jesus. Remember me in a special manner to Bro. and Sister Tanner.

I am by the grace and mercy of God still looking for the blessed hope.

The Resurrection.

Much has been said and written on the doctrine of the resurrection. The old prophets while looking with the prophetic vision down to the resurrection from the dead, have with expressive and soul-cheering language, stood in the defence of this glorious doctrine. Hear the prophet Isaiah, in the most eloquent strains, declare, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise; awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out her dead." (Isa. 26: 19.)

While in affliction and suffering, Job in view of a literal resurrection of his body could cry out, "Though, after my skin, worms destroy this body; yet in my flesh shall I see God."

David, who many times was in the midst of sore troubles, surrounded by enemies, and in his old age while tottering over the narrow confines of the tomb, could lay his flesh down to "rest in hope;" feeling the assurance—"Thou shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth." (Psa. 71: 20.)

Heroic Paul, who left his high standing in Jewish church, and counted all things but loss, that he might win Christ, that he might know him, and the power of his resurrection, was willing to "conform to his death, if by any means he might attain unto the resurrection from the dead." See him, surrounded by the philosophical religionists of his day, defending, with the most ardent zeal, the most clear and cogent reasonings, the most powerful, convincing, and incontrovertible expositions of the Scriptures, "opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead;" the blessed doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, both of the "just and the unjust;" which called forth the scolds, and jeers of the Sadducees, Stoics, Epicureans, &c.; "Some mocked, others said, we will hear thee again of this matter."

There have been bold advocates of this truth in past ages, and in this age there are some who are willing to bear the reproach of the Sadducean teachers of this day, and set forth in the most glowing colors the foundation of the Christian's hope. Some tell us the resurrection is past already. Others, that there is no literal resurrection of the body: another class say the first resurrection is regeneration, &c., &c. The first class deserve no attention: the idea that the resurrection is already past is too erroneous and absurd for any to believe who have the Bible to read. The second class I need say but little about. Their views of an ethereal, immaterial, spiritual something, nobody knows what, have been reviewed and tested by the infallible rule, the "Word," and sound reason, by Bro. S. Bliss, and others. The third class are teaching a doctrine that is, I think, very deleterious and destructive to the Christian religion, and the true science of interpretation of the Bible. "Because (as it has been remarked, and justly too) the system of interpretation, that would make the first resurrection mere regeneration; would make the second coming of Christ spiritual, and spiritualize away the very foundation of the Christian's hope." This manner of wrapping up the scriptures in a cloak of mysticism and leaving their plain literal meaning, is what has caused so much contention, and division among the professed disciples of Jesus. Now, if the first resurrection in Rev. 20, means regeneration, who are those of whom it is said, "They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years?"—Are they those who were believers before they lived and reigned, or are they unbelievers that are caused to live and reign with Christ at regeneration or conversion? Are they not those who had been regenerated prior to their living and reigning with Christ a thousand years? Most certainly, because they had suffered for the "witness of Jesus, and the word of God." Therefore, this life, into which they are brought at the commencement of the 1000 years, cannot mean conversion or regeneration from the fact, that when they are brought to life, they sit "upon thrones, and judgment is given to them."

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power." What is the second death? Why, the first death (according to the spiritual view) is being spiritually dead, therefore the second death must mean being literally dead.—Therefore those that are regenerated at the first resurrection, cannot die under a thousand years; and if the first resurrection is mystical, or allegorical, the 1000 years (by the same rule) must be also, and for aught I know, may run on to time indefinite! And this would prove to much; for there has been no man however good, that has lived to the age of a 1000 years in this world after he was conceived!

"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." But who are the "rest of the dead?" According to spiritualism, it is the rest of the unbelievers: and if the first resurrection is mystical and allegorical, so is the second, by the same principle of interpretation. So when we have made this out, we have proved, that the literal resurrection as taught in the Bible is a fabulous and infidelity is true that "death is an eternal sleep!" O, when will men leave off robbing the saints of their hope, and God of his glory? When will they cease to "pervert the right ways of the Lord," and cleave to the plain, simple, unadulterated truth?

Brothers, let us strive to be numbered among those, that will have part in the first resurrection.

S. I. RONEY.

The Penalty of the Divine Law.

Bro. Marsh:—From an intimation in your notes to correspondents, I learn that your columns are open to the consideration of the penalty of the Divine law. No one from the Bible can doubt that the penalty is 'Death,' for 'the wages of sin is death'—'The soul that sinneth it shall die.' But the question is whether this and similar terms, are always used as a figure of speech? The church once sung, as do the expectants of Jesus' coming still—

"His own soft hand shall wipe the tears
From every weeping eye,
And pain and groans and griefs and fears,
And death itself, shall die."

This is based on the simple declaration that 'there shall be more death,' &c. Rev. xxi 4. But still the question recurs, is this the language of truth? We answer, you must alter both your Bible and your hymn-book to avoid this sentiment, that death means death—that there is a time coming when death shall cease. The hymn-book says it shall 'die,' or cease to exist—the Bible says it shall be 'no more'—'there shall be no more death.' I argue that it is literal, because it is as literally expressed, as that there shall be a 'New Earth.' The apostle makes the facts of creation—the existence of the old world—the deluge, the heavens and earth, which are now 'reserved unto fire against the day of judgment'—the highway over which he would lead our faith forward to the promised 'New Earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.' The great facts of creation and Providence for six thousand years, are surely somewhat more than a mere causeway to pass off, and flat out into a figure. As certainly then as the new earth will be a reality, so certainly will 'there be no more death' or sorrow; because 'the former things shall have passed away.' Death was induced by sin, and sin by Satan. When Messiah shall have achieved his conquests and destroyed the works of the devil, there ought not to be any 'more death.' These are the things called 'the former things.' They shall then have 'passed away,' and no mortal can find a pretext for giving 'death' a resurrection, after God shall have made 'all things new.' Should pain and death, sorrow and crying exist, the former things would not have 'passed away'—'the works of the devil' would not be destroyed—Christ's predicted achievements would be a failure; but no, this cannot be—the honor of Jehovah, the veracity of the Spirit, the power of Christ, and the hopes of a groaning world, all, all forbid! Amen.

Again, if 'Death' be a figure of speech, meaning misery, as is generally believed, and the wicked are to advance in vice, while their woes shall increase with their accumulating guilt, then there would be more and still 'more death,' through all the untold cycles of ceaseless ages. The idea contradicts God. The prevailing sentiment, or the Bible, (and the hymn-book to boot) is wrong. Both cannot be true, for there is an utter contrariety between them. I characterise the popular doctrine then, as a great libel on the Holy Ghost. In the light of Rev. xxii 15, I call it 'a lie,' which many 'make and love,' to flatter poor mortals into the belief that they are immortal. Satan said that the first offenders against heaven should be 'as Gods;' how this arch apostate and all his priesthood, puff up poor sinners, o dream that they have 'immortality'—and are so far like God—as Gods! It is a falsehood forged by Satan to disparage our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom alone we can regain 'immortality.' 'The gift of God is eternal life thro' Jesus Christ our Lord.

The doctrine of the soul's immortality by creation rather than by Christ—of its going to its reward in Paradise or perdition without a resurrection, is sheer heathenism. Providence directed me to the historic facts on this point last summer, in a manner that I shall never forget. Socrates, about 2300 years ago, argued the immortality of the soul, and its reward at death. His arguments 'are nearly the same as are made at this day.' Rol. An. Hist. vol. 1, p. 469. The historic fact is confirmed by a delegate to the world's convention. Ministers cannot believe nor teach the truth on this subject, till they renounce heathenism and their love of the world.

The word death signifies the opposite of life, the extinction of life, or the cessation of the vital powers; when a man dies, he is dead. How strange that the religion and the wisdom of the 19th century should look on us as fools or fanatics, for not believing a man is alive after he is dead. It is not more surprising however than that they should believe the 2d advent is to be the 4th. Those who cannot count two straight—whose brain grows giddy in solving the vast problem, involved in adjusting the numbers 'once' and 'the second time,' may believe that 'none are really dead.' They may believe that when Christ comes all will be alive, and none so much alive as those who have been longest dead! When Paul spoke of those who are 'alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord,' in contrast with those who 'sleep,' are 'dead' and shall be 'raised first,' does he speak in parables? Is it a kind of spiritual 'conundrum' to puzzle the wits of the wise ones, whose business it is to please the followers of Jesus? No, indeed, death is not life—it is neither more nor less than death. It would be eternal, but for the resurrection at the coming of Jesus. But seeing that 'the second death' is to be the portion of all not found 'written in the book of life,' and that there is no resurrection from that death, it will be eternal death. Get the idea conveyed by the word death: it is the extinction of life—then put eternal on it, and you have a distinct idea of eternal death. So of the phrase 'everlasting destruction,' which is employed to express the end of the wicked; in order to understand this, we should ascertain the import of the leading term 'destruction.' It is not preservation, but directly the opposite; then add the qualifying term to indicate its duration. It is destruction final and forever—not in figure but in fact. Amen.

The word 'punishment,' Matt. xxv 46, in its etymology and import, conveys the same shade of thought, 'excision everlasting.' The antithesis is perfect as presented in most parts of Holy Scripture: 'The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will be destroyed.' 'These shall be cut off and destroyed, with no promise or prospect of restoration forever. Those shall be preserved with an assurance that there shall be no more death or destruction forever.—Amen. The antithesis is life and death, preservation or destruction; not in a puzzle, but in simple verity. A learned clerical professor wrote me that death means 'that agony which perpetually endures, which scathes the being forever—dying, yet never dead.' The antithesis of this would be, a life forever—living, yet never alive! If the wicked are never destroyed, how can we expect the righteous to be preserved? The two ideas are correlative; if the destruction or death be imperfect, why shall not the life or preservation be alike imperfect? If one be a figure of speech, why not the other? If facts and figures are all thus mixed up, without rhyme or reason, we do indeed need 'mother church,' or the Pope, or some one to relieve an upright mind from the responsibility of believing anything on the subject, except as they tell us.

Is it not clear from Rom. ii 7, that we sustain the same relation to 'glory and honor' that we do 'immortality'? If so, then all who fail of glory and honor, must of necessity fail of immortality. If mortal, then die they will, and die they must at the 2d death, with no after life; consequently, the last enemy death will be destroyed. Its empire, its subjects, will end: thus there will be 'no more death—neither shall there be any more pain!' Amen and amen.

There are certain qualifications for immortality, which none but believers enjoy; consequently all unbelievers must fail to attain it. In Luke xx 35, it is affirmed of those who shall be 'accounted worthy'—Rom. viii, it is the class having 'the spirit of Christ'—in 1 Cor. xv 23, it is 'they that are Christ's at his coming.' 'The rest 'sow in the flesh, and shall of the flesh reap corruption.' They shall, as the chaff, be 'burned up' with unquenchable fire. 'The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away.' Ps. xxxvii 20. Of a class it is said that they 'shall be as though they had not been.' Obd. xli.

The most marvellous of all marvels is, that a few Adventists, (I am glad that they are but few) should stumble at these positive statements, just as the anti-adventists do at some of the plainest truths connected with the 2d advent. It is a clear case with me, if in either case anything can be found to contradict the plain passages, it would destroy the truth of Scripture: a witness who contradicts himself is a false witness.

Yours waiting for Jesus,

Letter from Sister M. A. Seymour.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Since the passing of some of the periods in which we have looked for the Savior with much confidence, my mind has been strongly impressed with the frequent commands of the nobleman, to watch for his return, after having seen the fulfilment of the promised signs. 'These have been witnessed, and now how many are watching? not those who are saying, 'my lord delayeth his coming,' at least a thousand years; neither that class who admit he may come any time, for no one knows anything about it. He who watcheth for the morning, does it with expectation, and so do they that watch for the Lord. Elisha watched Elijah—saw him ascend, and was blessed with a double portion of his spirit, and the cloak fell upon him, while the sons of the prophets who watched none at all, received no portion of his spirit. While all men were in expectation of some great event, Simcon waited for the consolation of Israel; and when the child Jesus was brought into the temple, he embraced him in his aged arms and said, 'Now let thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.'

I for one hope to be found watching and waiting for the return of my absent Lord—and the precious promise is, that they who wait for him, never, no never, shall be ashamed.

I have been deprived of the privilege of laboring in the cause of the Lord for more than two months by the western fevers, and when all human means failed, and he that has the power of death was determined to lay me down in silence, the Lord heard prayer, and raised me to health again, and loosed my tongue, and now I am endeavoring to speak plainly of his coming and kingdom, with power and great glory. The broad basis on which we have stood and looked for God's Son from heaven, still remains unmoved, though winds have howled and floods foamed.

We are now at Nashville, speaking to large and attentive congregations. The Lord is with us—praise his holy name. Mr. Seymour joins with me in sending love to dear friends and brethren in the different States. May the good Lord preserve you and us blameless unto the heavenly kingdom; I am confident it will soon come.

Yours in anticipation of a glorious rest,
MARY A. SEYMOUR.

Sister S. Rogers, Little Falls, N. Y., Dec. 7th, writes:

There is not a day passes but that I am reminded of the fulfilment of prophecy. I think the world is ripe for destruction. I am very deeply interested in this great subject. It has been very near my heart for four or five years since I embraced the advent doctrine. I feel to thank the Lord that he has opened my eyes to see and believe the blessed truth of the advent near. I find in my heart no disposition to turn back, although I have left a dear church of which I was a member many years. I believe God called me out of it—and I trust it is my chief desire to do his will, whatever sacrifice he may require of me. I think he has especially called his children to this work. I know there are many who have fallen off, and I fear gone back like Lot's wife; yet I feel to pray for them that they may return to the fold again. I feel very anxious to hear from some of the brothers and sisters that we used to hear from so frequently: Bro. H. F. Hill and Bro. Hays, they have been silent for some time.

Sister C. Allen, Forestville, N. Y., Dec. 6th, writes:

I feel to give my testimony with others of like 'precious faith,' that it is good to trust in the Lord. 'They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion which cannot be moved, and abideth forever.'

How it will calm every rising fear and perplexing anxiety, to feel to say 'the Lord's will be done' I have thought perhaps that many of my sisters as well as myself have not been able to meet the small trials and petty annoyances which beset us in life without feeling disturbed in their mind, and lessening their spiritual enjoyment; I have always found it necessary to breathe a silent petition to heaven for assistance. It gives us much strength to overcome them.

Bro. D. Platt, Wolcott, Ct., Dec. 6th, writes:

There are a few in this place who appear to be holding on to the blessed hope of soon seeing the King of kings; striving to live in constant readiness for that glorious day. This blessed hope has such a strong hold of my heart, that it would be the last thing that I could give up. I am strong in the faith giving glory to God.—Amen.

The Throne of Israel.

Gabriel said to Mary that her Son should be great and called the Son of the Highest; that the Lord God should give unto him the throne of his Father David; that he should reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there should be no end. Luke i, 32, 33. David being a prophet and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne.' Acts ii 26—36: also Ps. lxxxix 33—37; 2 Sam. vii 10—16. Now if David had a literal throne and reigned over a literal people on a literal earth, and was a successful and victorious conqueror, so will Jesus Christ reign, (David's son and the Son of God, Heb. i chap.) or the prophecies concerning him will fail. Before he reigns upon that throne and in his kingdom, to order and establish it, he is to sit at the Father's right hand till his enemies are made his footstool. Ps. cx I; Matt. xxii 44.

This exaltation to God's throne before he takes his own (that is David's) throne, was perplexing, yea, an unanswerable question to the Jews, who were looking for immediate, worldly exaltation, at the first advent of Christ, just as the true throne of Christ is perplexing to those who are now looking for worldly exaltation without Christ. 'He spake a parable because they thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear.' See Luke xix 11—27. The nobleman is Jesus Christ who is now gone, but is to return, having received the kingdom; and on its reception is to 'reward every man according to his works.' For 'when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom.' Matt. xxv 31—34. When he 'shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom.' 2 Tim iv 1. Then will he be prepared to give an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. (2 Pet. i 11.) to his children. 'To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame and am sit down with my Father in his throne. Rev. iii 4.

Now, unless God's throne is David's throne, how can Christ now have the throne of David, (as most of the sects believe) in the true sense? There is scarcely any subject more often referred to in the Scriptures than this, but one that is very little understood by the professed followers of Christ. Surely we ought to know the character and offices of him whom we follow, lest we follow something or some spirit beside Christ and his truth. When we 'consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession' as represented to us in the above quoted passages, and many others of the same class, we see the great foundation error of the temporal millennium, spiritual coming and spiritual reign of Christ. This subject in all its bearings on the personal appearing and literal kingdom of the Son of man, and the literal resurrection of the inheritors of his kingdom, should be understood, and may we not say it will be by those who 'grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth.' How can we have true faith unless we know what to believe? Peter thought that a knowledge of Christ was of much more importance than many at the present day. 2 Pet. i 2—11; iii 18. Let us then 'know the Son,' not only in theory but in heart, and 'honor him even as we would honor the Father; he that knoweth not the Son knoweth not the Father that hath sent him.' John v 23.

In expectation of the speedy exaltation of Christ to the throne of David,
 JONAS D. JOHNSON.

—Be Diligent that ye may be found of Him in Peace.

MY BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—The present is certainly no time for us to be idle. 'The great day of the Lord is near—it is near and hasteth greatly, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat: the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.' Now that we may be ready for that great and terrible day of the Lord, there are important duties which we must attend to. My object in writing at this time is, that I may, as a servant of Christ, remind you of some of these duties, and exhort you to diligence and perseverance in the performance of them. And

First. It is our duty to 'search the Scriptures.'

There are several important reasons why we should search, and like Timothy, 'know the Holy Scriptures.' And 1st. Our Master commands us to do so; and we are not 'his friends,' unless we do what he commands us. 2d. The Scriptures are able as Paul told Timothy 'to make us wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus.' They teach us how to be ready for Christ's coming and the 'world to come.' 'Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it.' 3d. We should 'search the Scriptures' that we may derive comfort therefrom. 'They contain exceeding great and precious promises,' with which we ought to be familiar, and in which it is our privilege to rejoice. 'For whatsoever things,' says Paul, 'were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope.' 4th. We are required to 'have faith in God;' and it is evident, that the more we study the Scriptures with right motives, the stronger and the more unwavering our faith will be. 'So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.' Let us therefore be diligent in 'searching the Scriptures,' remembering that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.' Who can estimate the value of the Bible, as a source of life and comfort?

Secondly. Let me remind you of the importance of watching, for thus our Savior, and the Apostles have specially counselled us. We cannot lay too much stress upon the word watch. There are several things in relation to which we ought to watch; and 1st. Our hearts, that we may keep right in the sight of God. 2d. Our conduct, that we may not bring the gospel into reproach. 3d. For opportunities to 'do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.' 4th. We must guard against whatever will 'grieve the Holy Spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption.' 5th. We are taught by the Apostle Peter to 'watch unto prayer;' and our Savior also, when he counsels us to 'watch,' includes praying. Therefore, my brethren, let us 'pray always, with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints,' 'that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.' O, be encouraged, ye children of God, to 'call on the Father,' for he hath declared by the mouth of the prophet Joel, that it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered, and it will be so—yes, blessed be his name, while 'the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, his ears are open unto their prayers.' Our Savior has taught us how we should pray in Matt. vi 5—15. Let us not pray as do the hypocrites and heathen, but like Christians, pray in faith; and if we do those things that please God, he will hear us. Pray, O pray! my brethren to the God of Daniel, and, like him, confess your sins, 'that ye may be hid in the day of the Lord's anger,' for behold! it cometh!!

6th. I must remind you of the importance of watching for 'the coming of the Son of man.' If I understand the Bible rightly on this point, only such as watch, or look for Christ's coming, will be saved when he comes. Is it not so? How important then that we are found watching! Hear the words of the Son of God: 'Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching; verily, I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.' 'If therefore thou shalt not watch,' he says again, 'I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.' And again he says, 'Behold I come as a thief! blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.' Paul declares that, 'unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation.' Let us then diligently watch and pray, 'that we may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.'

Finally—Let us be diligent to observe and do all things, whatsoever our blessed Master has commanded us, and to 'keep ourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.' If we continue in the faith a few days longer, and are diligent to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity, we shall be delivered from this evil world, and have an entrance ministered unto us abundantly, into the eternal and most glorious kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Depend upon it, my brethren, that the time is near, very near, when God will command his angels to gather his saints together; those that have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. O! let us be diligent, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless.

WESLEY BURNHAM.

Concord, N. H., Dec. 12th, 1846.

Condition of England.

Says the New York Herald for Dec. 17th:— 'The present position of the English government is very remarkable. At no former period of its history had it so few enemies; never was political tranquility more assured; never such an abatement of party rancor and opposition. Seldom, perhaps, were ever its foreign relations more peaceful, or on a better footing, while there are no financial difficulties to harass and perplex; and yet, with all this, seldom if ever was the English government in greater difficulties, entanglement and perplexity, than the present government. What to do, it knows not. The wisdom of politicians is confounded, philosophy and philanthropy are abashed at their want of resources and political economy is in despair with all its theories. Ireland is the main point of the difficulty. The people are starving, and yet there is no lack of food or money; every wind that blows brings vessels laden with provisions into the ports, and still they are coming; money and food are distributed in Ireland; the people there are making money; the deposits in the saving banks in the most starving districts are increased beyond former years; and yet the famine, the suffering and the outcry, destitution, violence and despair, go on augmenting, and it is discovered that, after every thing is done that men can do, nothing is done—the evil increases. Such is the real state of the case—such is the perplexity.'

MEETINGS IN ROCHESTER.

Psalm xciii.

BY H. HEYER.

The Lord Jehovah reigns Begirt with might;
 Saints raise your loudest strains—
 He dwells in light!
 Great Source of being! great Beyond compare!
 Beyond the grasp of thought
 Thy glories are!

Of old Thy faith the world's Foundation site
 According to Thy will
 It shall endure
 Ere time began its years,
 'Thou God alone,
 Above the heaven of heavens
 Didst set thy throne.

The floods lift up their voices
 And loud they roar—
 Jehovah speaks the word,
 'They rage no more!
 Thy testimonies firm,
 'Till endless days,
 Shall stand, and all Thy works
 Resound Thy praise.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE GREAT IMAGE.

DAN. II. 34, 35.—"Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors: and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them."
 VII. 9-11.—"I beheld, till the thrones were planted; and the Angel of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels like burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him:
 the judgment was set, and the books were opened. I beheld, then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld, even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame."
 VII. 26.—"And they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times, and the dividing of a time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

The fulfilment of the visions has already been traced, in historical order, from the time of Daniel to the days in which we live. Here it was needful to pause, and before launching into the undiscovered future, to examine the nature, and ascertain the broad outline, of those hopes which the word of God elsewhere reveals to us on the coming kingdom of our Lord. Such has been the object of the three foregoing chapters, and the following are the conclusions to which we are led by a full induction of Scripture evidence. First, there is still in prospect, and immediately before the church, a time of millennial peace and blessedness here on earth. * * * * * And finally, the second advent of our Lord precedes the millennium, and introduces the promised restoration of all things. Not until the Prince of peace shall appear, will righteousness and peace begin to triumph; and not until the great Head of the Church is revealed, will the Church be freed from the cross, and have her brows incircled with the diadem of glory.

Here then, with these truths to guide us, we resume the course of the sacred visions. From our actual place in the last times of the fourth empire we look abroad on the wide range of Divine providence. Not Moses, from the top of Pisgah, had so magnificent a prospect spread before him as is here laid open to the view of the Christian. Backward, we gaze on the fulfilled history of four mighty empires, predicted from the first in the word of God, and involving the destiny of millions upon millions of immortal souls. Around us, we behold the kingdoms of the fourth empire, where the weakness of clay and the strength of iron are strangely blended; and see the little horn, once all-powerful, and now wasted by severe judgments, but struggling still for supremacy, and mighty and terrible even in its decay. We see the distant ends of the earth brought together by political changes, and facilities of intercourse unparalleled in all past ages; as if in silent warning of some great and universal change that is now near at hand. Before us, with the lamp of inspired prophecy, we gaze on an immeasurable vista of glory; a kingdom of righteousness that will last forever, and will people a holy and happy world with the countless generations of the redeemed. The imagination is overwhelmed with a spectacle so vast and magnificent. We feel our own littleness, and the littleness of things around us, when once the veil is removed from these Divine counsels; and learn to join once more in the apostolic exclamation, 'O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.'

An inquiry must now arise of deep interest. By what steps is the church to be conducted from her present state into the good land of promise which lies before her? What are the events in immediate prospect, and how will the present system of worldly power be exchanged for the eternal triumph of Messiah's kingdom? To this inquiry an answer has been in part supplied by the previous chapters. But the visions before us exhibit the same truth in close connection with the great empires whose history has been already described. They reveal to us a sudden and mighty change, in which the image shall be broken and swept away, and a new and holier kingdom be established which shall last forever. It is these important elements of the prophecy which have next to pass in review. They are full of the most thrilling interest; for they involve the immediate destinies both of the world at large, and of the whole church of God.

And first, let us realize, by the light of prophecy, and actual course of the world's history, past present, and to come. When the visions were revealed to Daniel, Babylon was still in the height of its power. Then Cyrus arose, the promised deliverer of Israel, and the kingdom of Persia, on Belshazzar's overthrow, attained the supreme dominion. Under that mighty empire, which reached from the borders of India to the shores of Greece, a signal type was given of the whole mystery of Providence, in Haman's pride and fall, and in Mordecai's exaltation and greatness. But when Xerxes had stirred up all Asia against the realm of Greece, the tide of dominion was rolled back; and Marathon, Thermopylæ, Salamis, and Platæa, names conspicuous in classic fame, accomplished the predestined sentence of Persian decay. Then Alexander, the mighty king arose, and with the swiftness of a winged fowl overran the East, and, by diffusing the language of Greece, prepared the way for the rapid triumphs of the Gospel. Next, after the wars of Hannibal, Rome, succeeded to power; and Phillip, Antiochus, Perseus, and all the kings of the East, sank rapidly and in succession beneath its iron sceptre. The Prince of Life then appeared, and was rejected by His own people. Messiah was cut off, and the Jews, rejected for their unbelief, were given up to the Roman armies, and led away captive into all nations. The arch of Titus still remains in the eternal city, an affecting memorial of that solemn hour of judgment.

And now a fresh era of Providence was begun. The proud and iron Empire, seeking to crush the faith of Christ, and to root out the Church of God, was crushed and broken in its turn. Its iron strength was mingled with the weakness of clay. Barbarian levies were mingled with its armies. Division and jealousy weakened the sinews of its strength. The East and West were parted asunder; and at length the fierce barbarians of the north broke in like a deluge on the Western Empire, and, on the ruin of the prostrate monarchy, ten separate kingdoms, as here predicted, arose. In the midst of these there arose also another power, diverse from all the rest. Small in its territory, and stealthy in its progress, by degrees it assumed the sovereignty over the European kingdoms, and blended them once more into one firm confederacy of idolatrous corruption. The Papacy of Rome, small in the size of its possessions, vast and unbounded in its spiritual claims, rose at length into supreme and triumphant dominion, and for long ages crushed and persecuted, even to death, the faithful witnesses of God.

This mysterious Power, for more than twelve centuries, has practiced and prospered amidst the commonwealth of European nations. At length the time, times, and a half, drew toward their close. The storm of infidel violence was then let loose on the papal kingdoms, and Rome itself sunk and was buried for a time beneath the hurricane. A new era of liberty and equality, with orgies like those of hell, proclaimed that the solemn hour of God's judgment was begun. But before the final consummation, there was to be a pause of delay. The dominion, partly consumed, like the power of Egypt under Pharaoh was to recover for a time, and to muster all its strength, before the great and decisive overthrow.

Such is the view of the past, and what is the prospect of the future? The word of God gives a blessed answer. The kingdoms of the world shall be the kingdoms of God and of his Christ. The receiving of Israel shall be as life from the dead. 'The Lord will build up Zion, and he will appear in His glory.' 'All the ends of the earth shall turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Him.' 'The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom.' Glorious in the beauty of the resurrection, the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace. Then, after a thousand years of prevailing righteousness, for a short season the scattered elements of evil will unite in one last assault on the beloved land of Israel, and the city of God. Afterwards will ensue the judgments of the unbe-ieving dead, and the final extinction of all the powers of evil. Death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed. The new heavens and the new earth shall then be manifested in their eternal beauty. The Church of the first-born shall reign for ever over a redeemed world; and the nations of the saved shall walk in the light of the heavenly city. From age to age, throughout the thousand generations of the world to come, the promise to Abraham may then be fulfilled; and new heirs of glory may be training on earth to share in the fuller blessedness of the redeemed above. Perhaps even from our planet, honored above all worlds by the incarnation of the Son of God, the streams of grace may then flow forth to distant regions of the universe; and distant worlds be awaiting their destined possessors from the race of Adam, now fallen, but then forever redeemed.

And thus, through perpetual ages, the glory of God and of the Lamb will be more and more fully revealed. The hosts of saints and angels will themselves be lost in wonder and admiration at the stupendous vision of Divine goodness. They will adore for ever the riches of God's love; and the virtue of that one sacrifice, which could turn even the depths of ruin and misery into such a weight of glory, far surpassing in its greatness all that the heart of man or angel could ever conceive.

Such is the retrospect behind us; such also the delightful and wonderful prospect which now opens before the Church of God. And how will the transition be made? Will it be a smooth and gradual progress, by which the fallen world shall slide into happiness, it knows not how; and after the storms of six thousand years, like a cradled infant, rock itself to rest? Is it by the common efforts of Christian zeal, so that the Church militant of our day may be able to take up the boast of the Assyrian, only of a nobler triumph, and say, 'By the strength of my hand have I done it, and by my wisdom, for I am prudent?' No, such is not the lesson of past experience; nor are such hopes confirmed by the true sayings of God. A great work indeed is allotted to the Church, but of the first fruits, not of the harvest, of preparation, not of the full triumph. The redemption will be assuredly complete, but it will dawn in righteous judgments. It is through a dark cloud that the bow of the covenant will shine forth in its brightness on a fallen world. Before the stone shall become a mountain, and fill the whole earth, the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and gold, must be broken to pieces together, and be driven away like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor. The Son of man must first appear in the clouds of heaven, and his true saints and servants be gathered into his presence, to render their account, and then to receive their kingdom.

These truths, drawn from the clear testimony of the present visions, as well as from all other prophecies, are thus fatal to many expectations prevalent in the Church of Christ in these latter days. We are not sailing, on the smooth current of worldly ease and of liberal philosophy, into the haven of rest. The world will be regenerate, not by the might, or wisdom, or virtue of man, but in spite of his resistance, and by the triumph of righteous judgment over his rebellion. Even to the last, the Church must set her face against the stream, and renounce the vain dreams of safety and worldly peace, if she would secure the blessing which God has promised.

But besides the danger of a false peace, and hopes which, being without warrant in God's word, can lead only to presumption or delusion, there is an opposite danger against which we should be equally on our guard. It is true that the word of prophecy here reveals to us the prospect of judgment, and a dissolution of worldly power by the coming of the Lord. But even this truth, when divorced from others, may be corrupted into a dangerous error. It is not designed to destroy the charities of life, or to weaken our reverence for the powers ordained of God, or to dim one tender emotion of interest and affection toward our fallen world. No, its true purpose is the reverse. There are other doctrines with which this prospect of the judgment must be combined, if we would neither be hardened into selfish and unfeeling pride, nor weighed down into melancholy or despair. Not until the last elements of truth and righteousness have been separated from the mass, will the Stone smite the Image, and shatter it to the winds. Not until the saints are raised from the tomb, will power be given to them over the nations. Now, on the contrary, their office is to labor in hope, and to suffer with patience. Like the angels in heaven, they are to rejoice over even one sinner that repenteth. And when the fruits of the Gospel fall short, as they do continually, of their heart's desire, they are to take refuge in the covenant, and in the assurance that the work, too mighty for them alone, will be completed by the Lord himself, when he shall visibly appear. Even in the prospect of that most solemn day, they are to find comfort in the promise, 'Mercy rejoiceth against judgment.' 'Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever'—the same on the throne of glory, as in agony and on the cross. They who can enter into the secret of His presence, in the most solemn hour will find peace in the confidence of the patriarch, 'Shall not the Judge of the whole earth do right?' He who died for all men in bitter anguish when the veil is removed from the eyes of his people, will be found to be most gracious, even amidst his severest judgments.

The stone which is to smite the image is cut out without hands. These words relate, in the first place, to the miraculous conception and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. But they include also the spiritual renewal and resurrection of his people. In this view they open to us a field of holy meditation. The true people of Christ, however forgotten or despised, are yet the destined inheritors of the earth. The conquerors of this world are only like meteors, that glare for a moment in the sky, with a baleful light, and then suddenly disappear. The meanest believer is a star, to be planted hereafter by the hand of God in the firmament, and appointed to shine, with a peaceful and blessed light, for ever and ever. Amidst the changes of the four great empires, a secret work has been carried on, unknown to the world, and overlooked by the proud conquerors of the earth. It is the excision of the mystic stone. One servant of God after another is called out of a sinful world, trained by affliction and trial, and then rests in the grave, awaiting the resurrection. The number will at length be complete. When the last shall be gathered in, the trumpet shall sound, and the mystic stone shall be completely separate from a world of corruption. Then will the Lord appear and all his saints with Him, and the prediction be fulfilled—'The Lord shall be king over all the earth; there shall be one Lord, and his name one.'

Now this truth reflects a clear light on the true nature and perfection of kingly dominion here on earth. When we see the future consummation, we learn the true standard towards which kings and governors ought continually to aspire. How monstrous is the notion that the risen saints will exercise their dominion, as if the children of men were only brutes that perish! So monstrous it is really, in God's sight, to maintain that rulers and statesmen are to govern without any reference to the truth of God, or to the immortal welfare of the millions entrusted to their charge. It is a blindness, due to ignorance of the word of prophecy, which alone could seduce pious and holy men into so enormous a falsehood. No, the true standard of royalty and dominion shines out before us in the triumph of the mystic stone, when it swells into the lofty mountain. Now, the believer is separated by the Holy Spirit, that he may be prepared for the high office he will fulfil in the kingdom of God. The work of Satan is to shut God out of the government of His own universe. The aim and desire of the Christian is to have every thought and action brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Such will hereafter be the kingdom of the mountain; and such ought to be the kingdoms of the world even now. To renounce, as rulers, the authority of divine truth, and profess neutrality between light and darkness, is boldly to take our stand with the image that will be broken in pieces, and to renounce all part and share in that kingdom of the mountain that shall stand for ever.

But the same emblem reveals to us further the close and intimate union between Christ and His people. They will be joined with their Lord in unbroken fellowship. 'To him that overcometh will I give power over the nations, even as I received of my Father.' 'If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him.' How vividly is this truth implied in these sacred visions, when one and the same figure denotes the exaltation both of the Lord himself, and of his faithful people!

The iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, are to be broken to pieces together. This great and momentous change is described in many other prophecies, as for instance, in the following: (Isa. ii. 10—22; xi. 4, 5; xiv. 1—4; xvii. 12—14; xxx. 27—33; xxxi. 4—9; xxxiv.; lxiii. 1—6. Jer. xxv. 30—33; xxx. 11 17. Ezek. xxxviii. Joel iii. 1—15. Micah iv. 11—13. Zeph. iii. 8. Zech. xii, xiv.) * * * * * Vain equally, and still more vain, will have been the hopes of infidels and anarchists, to rule in the whirlwind of popular rebellion, and regenerate a world by the wild fury of democratic rage. All these things will have passed like a dream; and while the chaff of the broken image is swept before the winds, the mystic stone will be seen, exalted in its heavenly grandeur, and will fill the whole earth with a dominion of peace and holiness as glorious as it is everlasting. How unlike the poor and blind calculations of mere human wisdom are the sure and blessed hopes which these prophecies reveal!

Before the final change, 'the thrones are planted,' and the Ancient of days enters on the work of judgment. The books of past history, with their long record of crime, are open before him. While the dominion of the little horn is taken away, unscen to the eye of the world, this review and judgment is fulfilling the presence of God. How small a part of history is that which the eye of sense can discern! It can trace only the outward changes; but their secret causes and springs are in the sanctuary above. And thus we may well believe that while the storm of infidel violence was desolating the kingdoms of the West, events still more solemn and momentous were passing, unscen, in the upper world. The sins of Christendom for ages and generations were there unfolded before the eyes of the supreme Judge. Innumerable hosts of angels stood waiting, in deep suspense, the commission of judgment, and beheld, with wonder and admiration, the infinite patience of the God of heaven, and the wild passions of ungodly multitudes on the earth below. And even now, though the pause of Divine forbearance may still continue a season longer, could the veil be removed from our eyes, as from those of Elisha and his servant, a scene more surprising and glorious might open to our view on the very confines of our fallen earth. When the last vial, poured into the air, shall remove the mists of sensual blindness, the mystery of God will be finished, and the unscen glory of that celestial judgment will dawn upon the senses of an unbelieving world.

Such are the prospects of coming judgment on the four empires, which these visions, compared with other parts of Scripture, seem to open before us,—a solemn and magnificent close to the long and weary course of violence and ambition, of covetousness and vain glory. How different will every event of past history appear, when read in the light of this wonderful consummation, the light which streams from the dawning of the Sun of righteousness! How vain the triumphs of mere ambition! How empty the boasts of infidel deceivers! How truly will all wisdom then appear to be folly, save 'the wisdom of the just,' who have looked on this life only as a pilgrimage, and have anchored all their hopes, and fixed all their desires, on the salvation then to be revealed, and the unspeakable joy and blessedness of the world to come!

"The Powers of Heaven shall be Shaken."

Much has been said and written concerning the fulfillment of this last sign, and many theories have been advanced not exactly in accordance with reason. Some have supposed that the powers of heaven were shaken when the stars fell, and was the cause of that sublime phenomenon. To cause the meteoric showers, the powers of heaven must have been first shaken, and this would be reversing the beautiful order and harmony of Scripture; for this sign is not to precede but follows those falling stars, the only ones that could fall to the earth and be appropriately likened to unripe figs. Others have supposed that it had its fulfillment in the tremendous convulsions and revolutions among the nations of the earth, towards the close of the last century, and during the career of Napoleon Bonaparte. This view would also reverse the order of the signs; besides, the above mentioned commotions among the nations might more properly be termed the shaking of the powers of the earth, which has always more or less occurred since the world began. Again, Luke gives us to understand that the shaking of the powers of heaven would cause the sea and waves to roar; and how either wars or falling stars could bring about results, creating an unusual roaring of the sea and waves, I am not able to determine. Others have made the shaking of the powers of heaven, and the shaking and passing away of the heaven itself synchronous. This cannot be, for admit it, and you at once destroy the sign.

With all due respect for the opinions of brethren who entertain dissimilar views from my own, I would say that I have no desire for controversy, my only wish is to arrive at the truth. I have anxiously waited for some time, hoping that some one more competent than myself, would observe the late developments of and investigate this sign. I believe it will be understood and considered perfectly, and that no part of the word of God will be left for His children to guess at its meaning. I understand the shaking and final dissolution of the heavens that now are to follow, and be the result of the shaking of its powers or elements, both a fulfillment of the sure word of Jehovah. I understand the shaking of the gaseous powers of the heaven to be the natural results of its increasing age and the curse, (for God hath said it shall devour the earth,) and that the heavens with the earth are to 'wax old as doth a garment,' and finally be 'folded up' and 'changed.'

To preserve the order of the signs, we must look for the fulfillment of this last one, subsequent to the falling stars in 1833. The powers, forces or elements of, or in heaven, are to be shaken, disordered and convulsed. I would first inquire, he powers of what heaven? Says Brown, 'the Hebrews acknowledged three heavens—the air, or aerial heavens; the firmament, in which the stars are supposed to be placed; the heaven of heavens, or third heaven, the residence of Jehovah. The Bible plainly distinguishes between these three. The third heaven is brought to view in many places, but the following are sufficient: Deut. x. 14—'The heaven of heavens is the Lord's.' 1 Kings viii. 27, also 2 Chron. ii. 6, and vi. 18—'the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee.' Isa. lxxvi. 1: also Ps. xi. 4—'Thus saith the Lord, the heaven is my throne.' Matt. vi. 9—'Our Father, which art in heaven.' Jesus is there; see Acts i. 11 and iii. 21, and Heb. ix. 27. The city is there; see Rev. iii. 12 and xxi. 2—10. The angels are there; see Matt. xviii. 10 and xxii. 30. The spirits of the just are there waiting to be made perfect; Heb. xii. 23, and the souls of the martyrs; Rev. vi. 9. It was the third heaven up to which Paul was caught; whether in the body or out of the body he could not tell. Will anything or powers in that heaven be shaken as a sign to the inhabitants of the earth of the coming of Jesus? Certainly not.

Descending lower, we find the starry firmament called heaven; see Gen. i. 14; Ezek. xxxii. 8; Gen. xxii. 17; Rev. vi. 13, and Ps. viii. 3. Could the shaking or destruction of the celestial luminaries cause a distress of nations on earth, and the sea and waves to roar? Assuredly not.

Descending lower still, we find the atmosphere called heaven. See Gen. i. 20; vii. 11; viii. 2; xxvii. 28; Deut. xxviii. 12; 1 Sam. iv. 9; Dan. iv. 15; Isa. lv. 10; Acts xiv. 17; James v. 8, and in many other places. It is often named in the plural number; see 2 Peter, 3d chap. It entirely surrounds the earth, penetrates every vacuum, and extends above it at every point about 45 miles. It contains within itself the seeds of its own dissolution, and is the only heaven whose powers can be shaken, and cause the predicted results. It is to be dissolved and pass away with a great noise at the coming of Jesus, and the final conflagration of the earth.

The first sign was in the sun; the second in the moon; the third in the stars, and the fourth must be in the heaven or atmosphere, and its effects be seen upon the earth. 'And,' says one, 'our atmosphere is the region where the most startling signs are now, not seen by the mass but detected by scientific men in every part of the world.' Says Luke, 'there shall be upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for (or because) the powers of heaven shall be shaken.'

What are the powers of the heavens, or atmosphere? I answer, its constituent parts, the principal gasses composing it, which are oxygen and nitrogen. The air we breathe is composed of 20 parts of oxygen and 80 parts of nitrogen, to every 100 by volume. Oxygen is the principle which supports life and flame. Either of these gasses alone, will not support life. Destroy their equilibrium and the most disastrous consequences would follow. May not this be the office of the angel mentioned in Rev. xiv. 18, having power over fire? A similar phrase is found in Heb. vi. 5, where the apostle speaks of some who have tasted of the powers of the world to come. What is the world to come? I answer the kingdom of God. What is the kingdom of God? Not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. These are some of the elements of the kingdom, and the only ones of which we could taste, but which we may taste here, bless God. Thus the powers of the heaven or atmosphere are its elements, the gasses. These are to 'wax old' like a garment, or an aged person, and be shaken, weakened and convulsed prior to the end, and finally be 'changed' and made new in 'the time of restitution of all things.' That we have arrived at that period in the history of the world when we should look for the fulfillment of this sign, all must admit. That stubborn, well known facts, demonstrate its partial or entire fulfillment, I shall attempt to prove, and in presenting the evidence I shall only have to compile and rehearse in a condensed form, facts which have been published before, and which unintentionally establish my position.

1st. Within the past year more than 20 earthquakes have occurred in different quarters of the globe, probably caused by the oxygen coming more in contact with the internal fires of the earth, now rapidly approaching its surface. Says a writer for a recent number of the Journal of Commerce, 'The great number of earthquakes which have been experienced within the last eight months, has been wonderful—our atmosphere has been singularly affected, as you will see by the extensive and very minute records of the Municipal Gazette.' A distinguished geologist has stated that they predict some great change.

2d. The unusual blight which for a few years past has fallen upon nearly every vegetable substance, especially the potatoe, causing it to 'rot under the clod,' in a manner hitherto unknown, creating a mourning and distress of whole nations, is admitted to have its origin in a diseased and disordered atmosphere. The poisonous blast which passed over Ireland in August last, turning every green thing black for many miles in extent, evidently shows that the powers of the heavens are being shaken, and no longer subservient to the end for which they were created.

3d. The strange and unaccountable spontaneous combustion of the green willows, on the banks of the River Thames, which ignites and is soon consumed even to its roots by the fire of its own kindling, shows that the equilibrium of the atmospheric gasses is being affected, and the powers shaken. Oxygen when burned with hydrogen produces a most intense heat, which will consume iron or copper, and the most infusible substances with nearly the same facility that a candle will consume a cotton thread. The green willow is a most difficult wood to burn, and could only have been consumed by some unaccountable combustion of the oxygen.

4th. Unprecedented storms, tornadoes and hurricanes, within a few years past, have swept over every part of the globe, causing the sea and waves to roar to an unparalleled degree, and to the destruction of hundreds of lives and vessels, and thousands of dollars worth of property—men's hearts on land and ocean have failed them for fear. Changes too, from heat to cold and from cold to heat, in the short space of a few hours, of an unprecedented number of degrees, have been of unusual and frequent occurrence. These convulsions and sudden freaks, these hectic flushes and death-like chills of the atmosphere, show that its powers have 'waxed old' and are being 'shaken.'

5th. The following testimony, coming from the source it does, is invaluable. Says the Scientific American for Nov. 21st:

"ATMOSPHERIC PHENOMENA."

"Those who are accustomed to making meteorological observations, report the most frequent occurrence within the last three or four months, and especially within a few days, of the most extraordinary irregularities and apparent convulsions of the atmosphere, ever recorded or probably witnessed. On the 23d of October, these extraordinary indications were noticed in Florida, New York, Flatbush, Syracuse and Montreal. These peculiar indications of the thermometer and other instruments have been such at times, as to induce apprehensions of approaching earthquakes, but nothing has yet occurred more serious than the universal prevalence of storms and tempests in all parts of the globe."

How the atmospheric gasses can be affected so as to produce the above results, I am unable to decide, but I hesitate not in saying that the atmosphere will be the locality of the last signs of our Lord's coming, and that they who watch the progress of the above sign will perceive its development more and more, until 'the day cometh that shall burn as an oven.' Strange and startling things will continue to take place. The gasses powers in the heavens will continue to be shaken and convulsed, causing the predicted unusual roaring of the sea and waves, and failing of men's hearts for fear. The present distress of nations shall soon end in a time of trouble such as never was, and in that day the heaven and earth will both be shaken as the following texts prove:

Isa. ii. 19—'Shake terribly the earth;' xiii. 13—'I will shake the heavens; Joel iii. 16—'The heavens and the earth shall shake;' Hag. ii. 21—'I will shake the heavens and the earth;' Hag. ii. 6—'Thus saith the Lord yet once it is a little while, I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea and dry land, (Heb. xii. 27,) and this word yet once signifyeth the removing of those things, when 'the heavens shall be dissolved'—'rolled together as a scroll'—'pass away with a great noise'—and be no more'—'Nevertheless, we according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.' Amen.

Oh what an earth are we dwelling upon! Creation is audibly groaning and travailing in pain under the curse of the Almighty. A subterranean ocean of fire is undoubtedly consuming its bowels, with hundreds of volcanoes on its surface like huge sores, disgoring the morbid matter within! A reservoir of destruction is but a few miles above it, ready upon the least contact with electric fire to envelop the world in flames! Elements of deadly destruction are within and all around it! The Prince of the discordant powers of the air is at work, knowing that his time is short. In view of all these things we need not wonder that that great day will be ushered in with roaring thunder and vivid lightning, with great hail and a mighty earthquake, fire and voices high above all the ring and echo of the archangel's trump! The earth is given into the hand of the wicked. (Job ix. 24) and methinks it is high time that He whose right it is to reign, should come and see to the affairs of His usurped kingdom. He will come soon and gather his ransomed ones home. He will come in awful glory, seated upon a throne of fire, with burning wheels. A river of flaming, celestial fire will come forth and devour before him; myriads of angels will minister unto him; ten thousand times ten thousand stand before him. The judgment will set, the books will be opened, and the doom of eternity will hang on his word! Oh! who will abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth! Reader, are you ready? What I say unto you, I say unto all—WATCH!

Unity.

The only unity that ever will be attained before the Resurrection of the Just, on earth, will be a unity of thinking differently in love.

We know not who said that—but it is a golden sentiment, and worthy any true protestant's head or heart. God never meant that all men in this world should think and act alike. This would defeat all the variety that gives beauty or elicits truth before the world. But he did design that men should love one another, even in the very midst of their differences. And to this high virtue we are called by our christian profession. He who hates his brother because he worships at another altar, is no Christian, no republican, no friend of God's designs or of human rights. What an Eden this world would and might be, if we would agree and practice upon a 'unity of thinking differently,' and of doing this 'in love.' Brethren, let us all strive for this perfection.—Charles Beecher.

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JANUARY 13, 1817.

Time of the Second Advent.

No. III.

In our number for last week, we think it was clearly proven that the hypothesis is incorrect, which teaches that no knowledge of the second advent being near, can be obtained from the Scriptures. Our next object is to notice the second hypothesis, viz; that the day and hour of the advent may be known. It is thought that the texts, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man'—'Ye know not when the time is,' &c., instead of opposing, favor this view of the subject. It is supposed the Savior meant to be understood that the day and hour were not then known by any but the Father; but that he will at a future day make them known, they think they are justified in expecting from the following considerations.

1. It is contended that the original Greek will justify this rendering of the text, viz; 'That day and hour no man, nor angels, neither the Son, maketh known, but the Father.' Then it is inferred that the Father will make them known. Admitting that this is the true meaning of the text, which is contended to be the case by Griesbach, Macknight, Mr. A. Campbell, and other Greek scholars, it will not prove that the day and hour will be known any length of time before the advent takes place: for this part of the Savior's discourse was specially designed for the last generation, or that generation that should witness the signs, and behold the actual appearing of Christ. This every consistent Bible student will admit. Then the Savior speaks thus to the last generation, even to us who are looking for his immediate coming, that day and hour no man, nor angel, neither the Son knoweth, or maketh known, but the Father; and ye know not when the time is, &c. To say that the generation living when these words were spoken was exclusively meant, is inadmissible: it is adopting a principle of interpretation which if carried to its legitimate conclusion, will throw confusion into the most plain and harmonious portions of the inspired word. It will lead those who follow it to take different parts of a plain discourse, the whole of which refers to one and the same age or generation, and apply them to ages near two thousand years from each other, just as the nature of the theory or fancy of the expositor may dictate.

2. It is contended that the evidence which is supposed to prove that men and angels do not, or will not know, or make known, the day and hour, proves the same of Christ. This with many is inadmissible, inasmuch as it conflicts with their favorite views of the supreme Deity of Christ: they cannot admit for a moment that Christ is limited in knowledge. They will admit however that he might not, at the time he spoke this discourse, have known, or had not power to make known, the precise time of his advent, yet they think it cannot be true of him now. To this mistaken view of the subject, we ask, how can Christ's not knowing now militate any more against his supreme Deity than his not knowing, or having power to make known eighteen hundred years ago? It is all the same thing so far as the attributes of the Savior are concerned.

Irrespective of our favorite theories, and fearless of consequences, we should abide by the plain word of the Lord; and that unequivocally says, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.' Mark xiii. 32. This testimony is confirmed by Matt. xxiv. 36, which reads, 'but my Father only.' The same sentiment is conveyed in the Savior's words just before his ascension. Speaking of the time of the restoration of the kingdom, he says,—Acts i. 7, 'It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power.' That Christ did not know after his ascension into heaven, is evident from the fact that about sixty three years after, according to the chronology of our Bibles, God made a revelation to him on the time of the second advent of Christ. Hence it is said, Rev. i. 1, 'The revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him.' That the day and hour were not revealed in this revelation is well known to every one who has become familiar with its wonderful contents. The nearest this prophecy brings us to the day and hour of the Savior's advent, is, to the very short space of time called quickly. 'The second woe is past; and behold the third woe cometh quickly.' Rev. xi. 14. This is the most definite conclusion to which this prophecy anywhere brings us, and certainly it is not as definite as the day and hour; for, over three years already have expired since the time called quickly commenced. Hence there is no divine evidence that the day and hour have ever been made known to Christ, or to men or angels.

Before closing our investigations on this question it will be proper to say a word more on Acts i. 6-8. The disciples ask, 'Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?' The answer in part is, 'It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power,' meaning as it has been supposed, that it was not for the apostles to know then, before they received the power of the Holy Ghost to know. This sentiment it is thought is contained in the next verse, in these words, 'But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.' Power for what? 'To know the times and seasons, as a matter of course, which they did not then know, is the answer of some. That the apostles did have near the time of the advent revealed to them, we do not doubt; but we never have believed that the text under consideration promises any such knowledge to them, for the very good reason that the Savior's whole answer teaches no such doctrine. Then what does it teach? Hear it. "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; [and ye shall then know the times and seasons, or day and hour, as many have supposed? No. What then?] and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth,"—is the answer of the Lord. And the facts in the case clearly show that this is the true light of this portion of Scripture.

It was not the work of the apostles to proclaim the time of his second advent. Their duty was to be witnesses of the resurrection of Christ, and to lay the gospel foundation in all the world. It would fall to the lot of another class of servants to proclaim the time, 'the hour of his judgment'; hence it was not only not necessary for the apostles to be instructed on the 'times or seasons which the Father had put in his own power,' but Christ had plainly told them just before his crucifixion that the day and hour knoweth no man, &c.

There are other passages of Scripture which have a bearing on this highly important question, which will be considered in our next number. We are aware of having already stepped out of the beaten path of many worthy Bible students, and doubtless have waked up the prejudices of some, and the fears of others. To all such we will kindly say, hear us through before you decide either for or against the view we take on this matter. We have learned that there is safety in resting our faith on nothing but the plain word of the Lord; and hope others will if they have not already done it, learn this same important lesson. Then we shall have no prejudices or fears about following the truth.—Our feet will then abide on the immovable rock, secure against all the rude assaults of the enemies of our blessed hope. We most firmly believe the coming of the Lord is at the door, and our object in this investigation is, to settle the wavering faith of our dear brethren, on this immutable truth, that they may be found ready to meet the Son of man when he shall appear. May our labors not be in vain in the Lord.

"Holding the Winds."

"And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, all we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads." Rev. vii. 1-3.

About the general application of this very important prophecy, there can be no dispute. It doubtless relates to the alliance of the European powers, for the avowed object of preserving the rights and the peace of the nations of the globe.—It is called the Holy Alliance; "the league entered into by the Emperor Alexander of Russia, the Emperor Francis of Austria, and Frederick William King of Prussia, after the defeat of Napoleon in 1815, consisting of a declaration signed by them personally, that in accordance with the precepts of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the principles of justice, charity and peace, should be the basis of the internal administrations of their empires, and of their internal relations; and that the happiness and religious welfare of their subjects should be the great objects they would keep in view."—Enc. Rel. Knowl. Art. Holy Alliance.

England and France soon entered into this alliance, so that these combined powers, since the uncontrolled and devastating career of Bonaparte, have guided the destinies of the nations of the earth. No general war has been suffered to disturb the peace of the world. Local wars have been silenced at the word of the allied powers, and peace has been restored on principles of their dictation. In short, the allied powers, have been, since the fall of Bonaparte, the agents in the hands of the four angels named in the prophecy, in holding the winds of bloody, national strife, that the servants of God might be sealed. And during this time the glorious work of sealing, or of salvation from sin, has been carried on, without a parallel in the history of the gospel, with the exception of the work wrought in the days of the apostles. These winds are to be held until the servants of God are all sealed, then they will be loosed, and the Lord will come, as appears evident from the testimony in the following part of the chapter.

That the winds are being loosed, or the human agency or power by which the four angels are holding the winds, is being dissolved, appears very evident from the following testimony:

"The Paris papers are still discussing the consequences of the marriage of a French Prince with a Spanish Princess. A letter-writer from Paris, speaking of the marriage, says:—

"It is now what in diplomatic jargon is called un fait accompli. The French Government has gained a great triumph over English diplomacy, and perhaps, it may be added, over English interests. In gaining it however, it has put an end to the English alliance, which for sixteen long years has been its sole dependence."

According to this testimony the long friendly alliance, of sixteen years, between England and France is at an end. And if the following testimony may be credited, it appears that the bonds of national friendship are being sundered, which for a long time have bound England and France to Austria, Prussia and Russia. Says the National Intelligencer:

"The diplomatic world seems to have been surprised and shocked by the annexation of the Republic of Cracow to the Austrian dominions, by the consent of Prussia and Russia. The English and French papers consider this a violation of the compact of the treaty of Vienna. The London Times says:—

"The sensation produced by this event in France and throughout Germany has been deep and strong. Such acts of power are not wrought with impunity; such calamities are not endured in vain. The imperious violence of Russia, the timid craft of Austria, have combined to strike off one of the branches of the treaty of Vienna; and the weak and vacillating Court of Berlin, disapproving of the harshness of one of its accomplices and the baser practices of the other, has lent itself to sanction the work of encroachment and oppression."

England and France are separately protesting against this act of the three powers. France, in order to counteract this high-handed measure of the three powers, is suing for friendship with England, that their united protest may effect the desired object. England has been too highly insulted in the case of the marriage of the French Prince to a Spanish Princess, to listen to the proposals of France. What the result will be, we leave for the future to determine. But if we rightly understand the prophecy heading this article, then, these movements, this gradual yet certain dissolving of the bonds of national friendship and co-operation, among the powers of Europe, is a sure indication that we are approaching very near the fearful crisis, when the four angels will no longer hold the four winds; for the reason that the servants of God will all be sealed, and the time will have come for the nations to become angry, and for the Lord to come and destroy them which destroy the earth. O let us see that the seal of God is constantly upon us, that we may be hid in the secret of his tabernacle, when his indignation shall be poured upon this guilty and deeply corrupt world.

Note by H. Hryes.

DEAR BRO. MARSH—Your remarks upon my article in your paper of Dec. 16th induce me to ask you a question or two.

Do you think that immediately upon the appearing of the sign of the Son of man, the saints will be translated? Doth not Luke xvii. 31-33 teach otherwise?

Doth it not seem that the appearing of the sign will denote the commencement of the day of the Lord? Rev. vi. 16, 17.

You will not deem these questions trivial, I trust. My object is to get at the truth. I would just observe here, that when I commenced the articles, I had purposed to speak of the precursors of the Lord's coming, as well as the events subsequent. From the tenor of my first article, the caption which you placed, 'Events of the Day of the Lord,' was a proper one; but I don't wish to be understood to confine myself to the scenes following the appearing of the sign of the Son of man. In a future article I shall perhaps speak of the preceding tokens.

Yours, seeking a better country, H. HRYES.

ANSWER TO THE ABOVE.

We think the saints will be immediately translated at the sound of the last trumpet: for Paul says, 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52, 'Behold I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.' When will the trumpet sound? When the Lord shall descend from heaven: for Paul says,—1 Thess. iv. 16, 'The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up [being changed in the twinkling of an eye] together with them' &c. Hence the immediate change will take place, not at the appearing of the sign of the Son of man, but at the appearing of the Son of man. And as the powers of heaven will be shaken, and cause men to 'expire through fear,' and the sign of the Son of man be seen just before the actual appearing of Christ, it is reasonable to suppose that in the sudden shock and fright of the terrible moment, some will think of trying to save their earthly treasure or friends; hence the propriety of Christ's caution in Luke xvii. 31-33, to which you refer. From the shaking of the powers of heaven to the actual coming of Christ will doubtless be a very short time; we see no evidence to warrant the conclusion that it will be the length of many days.

To your second question we simply say, from the testimony of the evangelists, it seems clear that the 'commencement of the day of the Lord' will be marked by the shaking of the powers of heaven; then will follow in quick succession the sign of the Son of man, and the appearing of the Lord. But not so quick but that the tribes of the earth will have time to mourn, expire through fear, and call for the rocks and mountains to fall on them; and for some Christians, or professedly so, in the terror of the moment to think about returning from the field, or the house-top, to save their earthly treasure. But all will be in vain: the decisive hour will have come when all the vain treasures of this world, and those who supremely love them, must be consumed in the fires of that great day. May we be ready to meet it with triumphant joy.

HORRIBLE.—The Boston Post reports the recent marriage of one of the Mexican volunteers in that city. It says:

"In the forenoon, twenty men of this company, in uniform, attended the Rev. Mr. Taylor's church. The reverend gentleman availed himself of the circumstance to discourse eloquently upon the duties of patriotism, and at the close of the services he prayed that the young defenders of their country present, and their brethren in arms, might go forth to battle armed with the breast-plate of righteousness, and be sustained in the hour of their utmost danger by a sure hope in Christ."

Horrible! every feeling and sentiment of the true Christian revolts at this blasphemy and solemn mockery, uttered by a Methodist minister of the nineteenth century! Has the church so fallen into darkness as to suppose that men may have a 'sure hope in Christ' while murdering their fellow-beings! She has—and it is truly painful to contemplate her blindness and awful end.

BRO. G. NEEDHAM, the Lord will, expects in a few weeks to be located at or near Cazenovia, N. Y., and authorized us to say to the brethren at Oswego, that should they want assistance from him, as a preacher, they can probably obtain it, by addressing him a line at Cazenovia. Bro. Needham is capable, and worthy of his calling.

Parable of the Supper.

This parable seems to have been spoken at a dinner or supper, at a pharisee's house, at which time Jesus gave instructions whom to invite, when they made a feast, so that they might be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. 'And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said, 'Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.' Having now before their minds the resurrection, the kingdom of God, Jesus puts forth the parable: 'A certain man made a great supper, and bade many.' That Jesus intended here to speak of the marriage supper, will seem evident to every candid mind, for no other supper is spoken of in all the Bible for God's people but the marriage supper of the Lamb. The feast in Isa. xxv. so often misapplied, is shown by Paul to take place at the resurrection—the 2d coming of Christ. (Compare Isa. xxv. 6, 9, and 1 Cor. xv. 51, 55.

That the bidding here brought to view may have occupied all past time, I am not inclined to dispute; but that no other part of the parable could have been applicable until our day, (unless we admit that the kingdom would have been set up and the supper have taken place at his first coming, had the Jews received Him as their King,) seems evident from the chronological definiteness which Jesus gives—

1. To the message which the servant carries.
2. The time when it was sent; and
3. The individuals to whom the message was sent.

1. What was the message sent? Not invitation to supper—but time—the definite time of supper. 'Come, for all things are now ready.'

2. The time when the message was sent. 'At supper time.' We all know that neither morning nor noon would be supper time, nor any other time but about the regular time to eat the supper. We have often heard our good mothers exclaim on looking up at the clock, after having been busily engaged in some household affairs—'I must lay by my work and get supper—for it is supper time.'

3. The individuals to whom the message was sent: 'To the bidden ones.' This again shows that the message sent was not an invitation to supper, for 'the bidden ones' must have been previously invited to the supper, and previously have accepted the invitation without any definite time for the supper being attached to the invitation. This parable is now mostly a matter of history.

1. The message has been sent. This gospel of the kingdom—the definite time of supper, has been preached in all the world for a witness to all nations. 2. It was sent, and preached at supper time. 3. It was first sent to the bidden ones. By these, we can plainly see the Savior must have intended professors of religion, for no others have accepted the invitation to go to the supper. The time of supper being sent to the bidden ones, shows plainly that these must previously have accepted an invitation to the supper, at a future, indefinite period. Ask any professor of religion whether he does not expect to go to the marriage supper! He will answer you yes; but I do not know the time when it will take place. We know that when this message first went through the country, few, or no impenitent sinners were converted. The message was first to the bidden ones—professors of religion—the churches, and, as in the parable, 'They all with one consent began to make excuse.' Every church, of every denomination in the land, rejected the message—the time of supper; and from the very considerations named in the text: they were so worldly minded, and their hearts were so in love with the present and the future, that they did not, and could not believe that all things were now ready—that it was supper time. 'So that servant came and showed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry, said to the servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt and the blind.' But what is meant by 'the streets and lanes of the city?' A child might answer that. Ask a child whether the language in Rev. xii. 3 is to be understood literally or symbolically? he will readily answer symbolically. So here, a child would say it did not mean literally to go into the streets and lanes of a particular city; but ask him what then the expression could mean? he would answer, that the servant would now find multitudes of people to listen, as we find multitudes in the streets and lanes of a city. So we in our history, after the bidden ones had rejected the message, found multitudes flock to our meetings, which state of things continued up to the 10th of the 7th month. Mark! the multitudes were poor, maimed, halt and blind: Infidels, sceptics, libertines and the profane.

'And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled.' Ask that child what highways and hedges mean? he will answer, You will not find multitudes there as in the streets and lanes of the city, but only a few—only here and there a traveller. So our experience shows. We preached and believed that the Lord would come on the 10th of the 7th month; that time passed, and the Lord did not come; then many of us felt the sentiment of the words, 'Lord it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room,' if we did not see the applicability of this part of the parable to our situation and time. Since the 10th of the 7th month, we can nowhere get together a great number of the impenitent, nor need we expect it, for the parable teaches otherwise. But what does the term 'compel' mean? Certainly not coercive power against the will of the individual, but extra effort; or, as the margin of some old Bibles reads, 'earnest and continual urging.' We know that greater efforts must be used now to save one soul, than were necessary to save, instrumentally, a hundred, in 1843.

REFLECTIONS.

In view of this subject we learn—

1. That the preaching of '43 was according to God's appointment—for, from the teachings of Jesus, the definite time for the supper must have been preached.

2. The preaching of the 7th month, was as God commanded—'It is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.' This, as shown above, could not have been said while that time passed, nor could we, until after that time, have been, or received our commission to be, in the highways and hedges.

3. We learn that all found connected, at the coming of the Lord, with those sects who have not received the Advent message, will be lost: 'For I say unto you that none of those men that were bidden, shall taste of my supper.' Their doom, as bodies, is now as certainly sealed, as Jerusalem's was, when Jesus, on his last visit before his crucifixion, turning said, 'Behold your house is left unto you desolate.' But individuals are now having an opportunity to escape, as they did from Jerusalem before the final destruction.

God grant us all understanding hearts and laboring efforts—Amen and amen.

J. WESTON.

New Ipswich, N. H., Dec. 21, 1846.

A WORD ON THE ABOVE.

Bro. Weston will pardon the omission in the first part of his communication. As it has nothing to do with the exposition of the parable, and contains several expressions, and allusions, though honestly made by the writer, were calculated to wound certain feelings more than to enlighten the understanding, we have therefore thought it advisable to make the omission. Oh how careful we all should be to never substitute in the room of the spirit of kindness, brotherly love, and sound Bible evidence, an uncharitable spirit, hard words, and unwarrantable affirmations. These remarks are designed for the good of all who speak or write on controverted subjects.

Your exposition contains many truths which we hope the reader will not lose sight of. The point of difference between us lies in the application of the parable. That you give it a wrong application we have not a doubt. And

1. Because your view does not admit of your following one and the same principle of interpreting the parable. In a part of it you seem to lose sight of the fact that it is a parable, and talk about it as though it was literally to be understood; and a part of it you seem to remember that it is a parable, and speak of it as such. We should either give the whole a literal or a parabolic interpretation.

2. Some parts of the parable your exposition necessarily makes 'go on all fours,' while other parts equally important are unnoticed.

3. Some parts of your literal application do not agree with the plain words and doctrine of the parable. You say, the 'definite time of supper has been preached,' as though the time is a prominent point in the parable. In this you are certainly mistaken, which not our word, but the words of the Savior prove; for he says, 'And he sent his servants at supper-time—to say what? you seem to think, to preach definite time, but the Word says, 'to say to them that were bidden, COME, FOR ALL THINGS ARE NOW READY.' Luke xiv. 17.

4. Your principle of interpretation, if applied to the whole parable, would necessarily exclude from the kingdom all who were in the churches when the first message was given; for the parable says they 'all with one consent began to make excuse,' and it is said of them all, 'I say unto you, that none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.' verse 24. Now you and all of us believe that many who were bidden in the churches, will soon taste of the supper of the Lord in his kingdom.

5. There is not a fitness in the parable to the advent movement: the churches had not been bidden on time before the vision on time was unsealed; which must have been the case according to your principles of understanding it.

6. There is a perfect fitness of the parable to the Jewish and Gentile world. The Jews had been bidden by Patriarchs, Prophets, and God himself to the joys of the everlasting kingdom. Christ and the Apostles, at supper time, or in the last dispensation, gave the Jews the first offers of mercy, but as a nation they rejected the heavenly call, and consequently as such have been rejected, and will never enter the kingdom of God. Their national doom is forever sealed. Since their rejection of the gospel message, the invitation has been most graciously extended to the Gentile world. The apostles and early ministers went out quickly, into all parts of the habitable globe, to give the invitation of life to the fallen Gentile world. And in these last days of papal corruption, and gentile abominations, Luther and his coadjutors, every faithful servant of Christ since the Reformation commenced, and last, though not least, under the advent movement, God's servants have gone unto all classes and conditions of society (the fallen and woefully degenerate condition of which is fitly compared to men in the highways and hedges); and the highest motives which heaven could offer, they have presented before men, to induce them to turn unto the Lord. The general revival measures for years past, may fitly be compared to compelling power. The guests are nearly all gathered in, or the work of redemption is evidently drawing to a close. May we do our duty in trying to save our fellow beings, and be found worthy of an admission into the kingdom when it comes.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM BRO. B. MORLEY.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I take my pen at this late hour of the night, [12 o'clock] to inform you and your readers of the salvation from sin, of two precious souls, (young women and members of Bro. Tanner's family.) Within the present hour the Lord has put a new song into their mouth. Their language is—'My sins are all fled!—glory!—' 'I do feel thankful that I ever came into this house!—' 'may the Lord reward brother and sister Tanner and all the dear friends.'

Bro. Marsh, we are a happy company—language fails—we have to refer the story to angel tongues. O, wondrous grace! they lingered for several days, and but for the abounding grace of God we should have all fainted. We do feel to give God all the glory.

Now dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, may the Lord help you to banish the last vestige of unbelief from your hearts. Break right down! begin where you are! 'Have faith in God!' Soon we shall greet all the young converts in the 'world to come.' 'We shall return bringing our sheaves with us.'

BUTLER MORLEY.

FROM BRO. H. TANNER.

Bless the Lord O my soul, and let all the earth rejoice before God! Why not Bro. Marsh? for angels rejoice to-night before God, and we should and do rejoice also. You recollect Mary and Jane—they now rejoice in hope of the glory of God. I wish sceptics were here to-night, that they might see God's grace manifested in the salvation of souls. Eleven poor sinners have been saved by grace, since we commenced our meetings. O, blessed be God, what has he not done for us! Great things truly, for which we are truly glad.

Bro. Marsh, we are joyful in God, and wish the whole world could feel as we do now. It would be a millennium indeed! but soon the kingdom will come, and all the dear ones will then be gathered home. Praise God! O praise God, O my soul, and all that is within me praise his holy name. May we walk softly before God, and may his will soon be done on earth as it is now done in glory.

The good work is still progressing; five were baptised Sunday—one arose for prayers to-night, besides the two alluded to above. May God bless him, and may he find the peace others have found, is the prayer of my whole soul.

Your brother in the Lord,

H. TANNER.

Buffalo, Jan. 5th, 1847.

LETTER FROM BRO. G. W. BURNHAM.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I have just reached home from the conferences at Waterbury and Johnson, Vt. The meeting at Waterbury was of the real 'Heavenly Jerusalem' kind. Bro. I. R. Gates, Kimball, Cummings, and other lecturing brethren were present: the plain practical truths of the gospel were set forth in the spirit of love and meekness, together with the high and thrilling motives from the fulfilled Scriptures, showing that God means what he says, and that the 'Judge standeth before the door.' The disciples seemed to be generally of one heart and one soul. A spirit of prayer pervaded the hearts of many, and also a willingness to exhort and comfort one another with the blessed Master's words. Several wanderers, mostly of the youth, confessed with tears their sins, and resolved to return again to their injured Savior. Do nothing was not preached, nor the sentiment cherished, I think, among the brethren. At the close of the afternoon services on Sunday, about 100 friends of our long absent, but soon coming Redeemer, partook of the emblems of his broken body and precious blood, and parted with the strong hope of very speedily sitting down with him at his table in the kingdom of God, to part no more! glory to his name! The little company resident at Waterbury, I feel assured, were benefited by the meeting.

I attended two meetings in company with Bro. Gates, at his appointment in Johnson, 25 miles from Waterbury, which were interesting, but could not tarry till the close. My soul is revived—the gospel of the kingdom was never sweeter to me than now; I feel like being spent for the sake of him who gave up all for us. Take courage, dear brother, we shall soon surmount our last difficulty, and rest forever amid the Eden glories of the future world. The chief Shepherd hath an eye to all his flock—He knows them—He loves them, and will not forget them! and though the wild storms of heaven sweep over their pilgrim tents, and in angry murmurs seem to say to the sleeping ones, he hath forgotten you—my God will bring them up to inherit their own land, and one shepherd shall be over them forever—Amen.

G. W. BURNHAM.

Vergennes, Vt. Dec. 31st, 1846.

LETTER FROM BRO. G. NEEDHAM.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Since you left, I have been for the fifth time attacked with that dreadful scourge, the ague. I have not been up to meeting for the past two days, but understand they are still interesting. Four joyful and happy candidates took Christ upon them on Thursday, by being planted in the likeness of his death; believing they also will be in the likeness of his resurrection. Three more stand ready to follow Christ on Lord's day next. We have had thus far an interesting meeting, though the feebleness of my health has precluded my attendance on several meetings. All the converts I have heard speak, appear remarkably clear in their experience. O may the Lord preserve them until the day of Jesus Christ!

I want to say to our friends who may feel an interest in our welfare, (not a curiosity) that the God of our fathers and our God, has been with us and blessed us in our journey, and we are now three hundred miles on our way. Journeying, instead of prostrating me as I feared, has been a great blessing: I have gained fifty per cent. in strength since we started. All the rest of my family are well. O praise the Lord with me, for his goodness and mercy to us! I little thought six weeks ago, that I should be able to preach one sermon this winter—but glory to God, if our coming king does not release me from all labor soon, I hope to enter the field again, ere long. Why our Heavenly Father has suffered this affliction to come upon us, I know not now, but I shall know ere long. God neither chastises his children nor suffers them to be chastened, without somehow teaching them the reason. Some of the opposers of our hope told us last summer, God was sending judgments upon us, (advent believers) for our sin, in proclaiming and believing in the coming of the Lord. Poor souls! ignorant of God and his word. Why, God meant it for a great spiritual blessing, in some form. Certain it is, had we all escaped the general epidemic, we should have been likely to have thought ourselves heaven's favorites, and thus been filled with pride and self-righteousness. We should have been bastards and not children: and now if I need more, let my Father send it—only let me be an 'heir' with Christ—anything that God sends is welcome. All will 'work together for good to those who love God'; 'these light afflictions work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look at the unseen and eternal things.' Will the Lord enable us to be humble and faithful unto the end.

Yours in the blessed hope,

G. NEEDHAM.

Buffalo, Jan. 2d, 1847.

Bro. J. Woodworth, Croton, Ohio., Dec. 8th, writes:—DEAR BRETHREN, How precious is the Bible during these days in which we now live! While some are denying the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, some still indulging the vain, delusive hope that we are on the dawn of a temporal millenium, others that the resurrection is past already, and they in the immortal state; others having more confidence in men's calculations on the prophetic scriptures than in the prophets themselves, or the words of Christ and his apostles, having given up the blessed hope and renounced entirely all expectations of the Savior ever coming to reign upon the earth. But whoever faithfully studies the Bible with the temper and spirit therein directed, will there find these very sentiments accurately described—these very days accurately foretold—and the state and condition of the nominal church and of the world in general, at this very time fully described! We have every encouragement to read the Word of God. Watch the providence of God. Pray without ceasing for light and strength, and God will give us all needed grace. He will make us wise, and the wise shall understand.

Bro. H. Adzitz, Southwold, C. W., Dec. 15th, writes:

As a general thing the saints are strong in faith, waiting patiently for the glorious promise that our redemption is near, even at the door. The day is fast approaching, and soon the vision will speak and not lie. My faith was never stronger on time. I believe God has revealed time, definite time, in the prophecies of Daniel and John. In looking back to Volume VII, No. 13, page 461, you will find a communication written by Bro. Gross, on the 1335 days. He shows in that communication that the Justinian code was subverted by the Napoleon code on the 17th day of April 1802. I think the 1290 days ended at this very time, and I believe that the 1335 days will end before the eighteenth of April 1847. This is the faith of most of the brethren here with whom I have conversed. If you can give us any better light on the 1335 days or the 1290, we shall be happy to receive it.

Bro. E. Mitchell, Kennebunkport, Me., Dec. 4th, writes:

As it respects our religious condition, it is far from being prosperous; still there are a few that meet three times in the week for the worship of God, and his blessing attends them. They are looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior. Notwithstanding we have two Christian preachers within a quarter of a mile of the meeting-house, neither of them meets with us, or preaches anywhere.—They can not feel "wo is no if I preach not the Gospel."

Bro. J. W. Brittan, Northboro, Mass, Dec. 8th writes:

There are in this region quite a number of God's waiting people, and some in Northboro that I trust have not defiled their garments, who if faithful to the end, will walk with Christ in white. Blessed promise! It is good to trust in the Lord and wait patiently for him.

Massacre of the Nestorians!

Another most barbarous massacre of the Nestorians, by the Kurds, is reported to have been perpetrated in November last. Thirty-six villages, it is said, were made 'the scenes of the most harrowing wholesale murders.'

Two of the bishops of the Nestorians, if not more, were impaled, and several of the priests.—What impaling is, I suppose your readers to understand. But that was not the worst torture that was inflicted. Children were torn from their mothers' breasts, and in presence of their mothers, who were obliged screeching to look on, put in the most shocking manner to death. The mothers afterwards were sacrificed. The youths of both sexes underwent sacrifices which can not be mentioned, before their throats, in disgust and satiety were cut. The pen refuses to record more of these atrocities, though I might go on, and allude to abominations of cruelty, which call for retribution as nearly equal to their bestial ruthlessness in severity as can be inflicted. Three thousand of the Nestorians have perished in this massacre, on the lowest calculation! The most extensive slaughter took place at a large village or township, called Bias, where Beder Khan Bey was himself present. Here the two bishops were impaled, and from this place were sent the three hundred heads (pickled) to the pacha of Moussoul, with the insulting message, that if the Porte presumed to molest the sender, he would send to Constantinople, instead of Nestorian, Turkish heads enough to make a pyramid.

Whilst these things were happening, a council over which the Nestorian patriarch, who has escaped from Moussoul, presided, was held at a town called, if I recollect aright, Artchy, one of the principal Nestorian settlements. Here it was determined that, as resistance was vain, the whole people of the Nestorians should emigrate, without an hour's delay, into Persia, where a numerous body of their countrymen are settled on the banks of the Oroomiah. The execution of this design was however difficult, perilous, and disastrous.—The fugitives were obliged to leave behind them all their property; most of them crossed the mountains in straggling, frightened, wretched bands. But one corps of Nestorians, commanded, I am told, by the patriarch, was attacked on their passage by the soldiers of Beder Khan Bey. After an obstinate conflict, in which many fell on both sides, the Nestorians gained the victory.

But the whole mountain district of Kurdistan, on the Turkish side, is at this moment filled with houseless, famished wanderers, hiding themselves in dens and caves, under all the worst circumstances and guises of misery, from their pursuers. Beder Khan Bey swore, before he started on his expedition, with all the solemnities of his creed, before two Imams, that he would exterminate the whole Nestorian people; and all of them who have not strength enough to reach Persia, will certainly experience the full realization of his oath.—London Chronicle.

The Cholera in Asia.

The accounts of the ravages of the cholera received a few days since, threw the capital into a complete consternation. Advices from the eastern part of Asia Minor, of the 16th ult., state that the cholera had now positively advanced and spread throughout all that province. The mortality had been very severe, but those who adopt the exaggerated idea of its having amounted to 40,000 or 50,000, are certainly at a great distance from the mark. The latest intelligence certainly mentions the presence of that malady at Mossoul, Orfa, Diarbekir, Aleppo, Damascus, &c. From a letter of recent date from Teheran, it appears that from the 1st to the 7th ultimo, the mortality was so great that there was no time for the decent burial of the dead; they were brought out of the city in loads, to be thrown into large pits dug for the purpose. In Kernanshah the ovens and shops were closed, the butchers and bakers refusing to supply the city with provisions, and most families were by this reduced to such a state of famine that there were considerable apprehensions of a general revolt against the Government. In other parts of the country the population had fled to the mountains, after abandoning their families, goods, and property: and happy is the family indeed that has not lost one of its members. The statistics of the number of deaths in the large cities of Persia from this disease are as follows: Teheran, 14,000 to 17,000; Kernanshah, 9,000; Isphahan, 7,000; Reschid, 3,000; Hamadan, 3,700; Mehed, 2,000; Shiraz, 750.

Secession of German Catholics.

A very large and deeply interesting meeting was held yesterday afternoon at the Tabernacle, at which some two hundred German Catholics publicly withdrew from the Roman Catholic Church with which they have hitherto been connected. The movement, we understand, has been in progress for some months; but this was its first public manifestation. The congregation assembled was very large, and the proceedings were attended with deep and absorbing interest.

The pastor of the Seceding Church, whose name our reporter could not ascertain, made two addresses, one in English and the other in German—both setting forth the causes which have led to this step, and the articles of faith to which they now adhere. They reject the pretensions of the Pope, the tenet of priestly absolution, and generally all the distinctive features of the Roman Catholic belief. The pastor said they had met the bitter hostility of the Catholic priests and journals of this city, and that he had even been threatened in anonymous letters with assassination. He spoke with great earnestness and effect, and was listened to with the most intense interest. Our reporter has made an extended sketch of his remarks, but our limits will not permit us to print it. It was remarked rather by earnestness and feeling than by original and profound thought.—He spoke of the movement as a counterpart to that of Ronge, in Germany, and said that he himself had formerly been a Franciscan monk. In his German discourse, while denouncing the Romish doctrine of the celibacy of the clergy, he exposed the inconsistency of the Pope's claim to be the successor of Peter, who had a wife, as was shown by the recorded fact that Peter's wife's mother once laid sick with a fever.

Rev. Mr. Thompson made a few remarks upon the subject of this movement, and a collection was made for the purpose of aiding the new congregation in procuring a suitable place of worship.—N. Y. Courier & Enquirer.

Remember the Poor.

The following extract is from South's sermon on 'The Vanity of Good Intentions Merely.'—Some of your readers may be reproved, and others may be stirred up to save those that are ready to perish.

After exposing the evasive excuses of one that can give but won't, but promises to pray, he goes on:

Ah! thou hypocrite, when thy brother has lost all that ever he had, and is languishing and gasping under the utmost extremities of poverty and distress, dost thou think to lick him whole again, only with thy tongue? Just like that old formal Iacub, who denied a beggar a fathing, and put him off with his blessing.

The measures that God marks out for thy charity are these: Thy superfluities must give place to thy neighbors great convenience; thy convenience must yield to thy neighbor's necessity; and lastly, thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbor's extremity.

This the gradual process that must be thy rule; and he that pretends a disability to give short of this, prevaricates with his duty. God sometimes calls upon thee to relieve the needs of thy poor brother; before thou flyest to the old, stale, usual pretense, that thou canst do none of these things, consider with thyself that there is a God, who is not to be flamed off with lies, who knows exactly what thou canst do, and what thou canst not; and consider in the next place that it is not the best husbandry in the world to be damned to save charges."

A short time ago I saw an account of a meeting of colored people in the West Indies to promote a christian object. The first step was to adopt three resolutions, in effect as follows:

1. We will all give something.
2. We will all give as we are able.
3. We will all give cheerfully.

The offering of one was rejected because he did not comply with the second rule. He offered more, but grudgingly. This also was rejected. He became penitent, and gave liberally and cheerfully. May white christians better, or even follow this instruction.—Tribune.

The Promised Land.

BY WM. H. HYDE.

We have heard from the bright holy land—
We have heard, and our hearts are glad,
For we were a lonely pilgrim land;
And weary, and worn, and sad.

They tell us the pilgrims have a dwelling there—
No longer are homeless ones:
And we know that the goodly land is fair,
Where Life's pure river runs.

They say green fields are waving there
That never a blight shall know;
And the desert wilds are blossoming fair,
Where the roses of Sharon grow.

There are lovely birds, in the lowers green,
Their songs are little and sweet,
And their warblings gushing ever new
The angel harpings greet.

We have heard of the robes, the palms, the crowns,
And the silver band in white;
Of the City there, with pearly gates,
All radiant with light.

We have heard of the angels there, and saints;
With their harps of gold, they sing
Of the Mount, with the fruitful Tree of Life—
Of the leaves that healing bring.

The King of that country—He is fair,
He's the joy—the light of the place;
In his beauty, we shall behold him there,
And bask in his smiling face.

We'll be there! we'll be there! in a little while,
We'll join the pure, and the Blest;
We'll have the palm—the robe—the crown—
And forever be at rest.

Kingdom of the Son of Man.

BY T. R. BIRKS, M. A.

FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND.

DAN. II. 35.—"And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

41. 45.—"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof is sure."

vii. 13. 14.—"I saw in the night: visions, and behold, one like unto the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, that shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

15.—"But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever."

27.—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

The Holy Spirit, in these words, announces to us the last and most glorious truth of the whole prophecy. The previous history is a dark and gloomy pathway, but here we have the divine temple to which it leads. That truth is the future and eternal dominion of the Son of man. This was the great object of the divine counsels, when the heavens and the earth were framed in the beginning. With a view to this triumphant close, the course of the world has been sustained, for six thousand years, amidst sin, and misery, and rebellion. All the perplexed and countless changes of past history have only been preparing the way for this blissful consummation. And hence, of all subjects which can occupy the thoughts of an immortal being, this is one of the most wonderful and glorious. Herein the travail of the Redeemer's soul will be fulfilled. Herein the truth of God's promises and the depth of His counsels will be manifested for ever; and all His attributes of holiness and majesty, of love and wisdom, will meet in their most sublime display. A dim and feeble sketch only can be offered here: the truth itself is overwhelming and boundless. May He who searcheth all things, even the deep things of God, enable us in some measure to understand these mysteries of his word, hidden from ages and from generations; but which it is His gracious purpose to reveal, more and more fully, in these latter days! Let us first endeavor to ascertain by the direct evidence of God's word, the main characters of this future kingdom; and then derive from this hope some of those practical lessons which it supplies, in rich variety, for the whole Church of God.

The time of the kingdom here predicted includes the promised millennium, and reaches far beyond into the ages that will follow. That it must include the millennium, results clearly from the many testimonies of Scripture which have been already given. It appears with equal evidence, when we compare the description, Daniel vii. 11—18, with the similar prophecy in the book of Revelation. But the kingdom here announced is not limited to one thousand years: five times, in these two visions, it is declared to be everlasting. It reaches therefore far beyond the millennium itself, and comprehends those countless ages in which the Son of God and his ransomed people shall reign for ever. (Rev. xxii.)

Such is the holy dominion announced in the vision. Let us now search into some of the main elements which compose its Divine glory.

First of all, among the excellencies of this kingdom will be the personal manifestation of the Savior. Thus it is revealed in Daniel's prophecy. 'I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like unto the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven.' The same truth, in reference to the same time, is echoed by the beloved disciple: 'Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him.' And still more fully in the vision near the close of the prophecy. There, before this promised kingdom appears, we have the full description. 'I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness doth he judge and make war. . . . And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called the Word of God.' The same presence of the Lord in His kingdom is taught in the message of Gabriel to the Virgin,—'The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom shall be no end.' He is the nobleman who went into a far country, to receive the kingly dominion, and to return. And when He has received the kingdom, He will return according to His own promise. Then will be fulfilled his words to his ancient people, when his ministry among them was closed. 'Ye shall not see me henceforth, until ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.' The Church will then be widowed no longer. The cry will have been heard and answered, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.' The restitution of all things will have begun; and the heavens shall no longer detain the Lord Jesus. The Redeemer will have come from Zion, and will have turned away ungodliness from Jacob. All those glorious promises of the elder prophets will be faithfully and exactly accomplished. 'When the Lord shall build up Zion, He will appear in his glory.' 'Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for lo, I come, and will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord.' 'The name of the city from that day shall be, the Lord is there.' 'The Lord my God shall come, and all His saints.'

With the Lord of glory himself, His holy apostles will then be present also. Theirs will be the highest places in glory, and nearest to the Supreme King. Twice has this promise been sealed to them by his own lips. 'Ye which have followed me,—in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.' 'Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me: that ye may eat and drink with me at my table in my kingdom, and sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.' And the same truth had been announced, though less plainly, by the evangelical prophet; when, after the overthrow of the great oppressor, he proclaims to the Church, 'Behold! a King shall reign in righteousness; and princes shall rule in judgment.' A like distinction of pre-eminence glory is implied in the latest vision of God's word. 'The walls of the city had twelve foundations; and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.'

But not the apostles only will share in this dominion: all they that fear God, both small and great, shall then receive their reward. 'The kingdom, and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High.' So also the prophet Zachariah, in words which refer clearly to the same time, gives the distinct announcement, 'The Lord my God shall come and all his saints with thee.' All the other statements of Scripture are in harmony with this declaration, and teach us that all 'they who are Christ's' shall be raised 'at his coming,' and be partakers in the glory of his eternal kingdom.

Such are the main outlines of this future kingdom of our Lord, as they are revealed in the sure word of prophecy. To unfold them completely, it would be needful to transcribe a large part of the sacred predictions, from Isaiah to Malachi. To remove the various doubts or difficulties which at first sight may appear to rise, it would be further necessary to enter on a wide survey of the Divine dispensations, and of the deeper mysteries of revealed truth. Only by such a review could the entire harmony of this kingdom with the spiritual aspects of the Gospel be fully explained and confirmed. But the few remarks already offered, when joined with the reasoning and evidence of the previous chapters, may suffice to establish the general doctrine, and to show how deeply it is rooted in the testimony of the word of God.

They will thus supply, to those who follow, without bias, the teaching of the word of prophecy, a firm basis of enlightened hope, and a joyful expectation of the good things to come. We may now turn to those practical lessons, which the hope of this kingdom supplies abundantly to the Church of God.

1. And first, we are taught afresh, by the closing part of these visions, THE INTENSE REALITY OF GOD'S PROVIDENCE HERE BELOW. This truth, indeed, has beamed on us, with a steady light, from every part of these sacred prophecies. When we behold the rise, the dominion, and the fall of Babylon, Persia, Macedon, and Rome, so clearly portrayed, we are forced to the deep conviction, that 'there is a God that judgeth in the earth.' But the same truth appears, with still more impressive lustre, from the promise of this future kingdom. When we look on some finished piece of costly workmanship, some noble sculpture or beautiful work of art, we feel how close and unremitting must have been the attention of the artist by whom it has been brought to length to such perfection. The busy hand and the discerning eye must alike have been employed on it, in every previous stage, or never could art have achieved such an admirable triumph, nor the rude materials have been fashioned into such perfect beauty. So it is with the Providence of God to our fallen world. Once let us receive the promise, with a simple faith, that the earth shall be redeemed and all things restored, that the Son of man, with the saints of the Most High, shall take the kingdom over the whole heaven, and possess the kingdom for ever—and a flood of divine light is thrown backward on the whole range of history. Let us conceive that some blessed angel was permitted to gaze beforehand on Creation, as it stood revealed in its beauty on the first Sabbath in Paradise, and then return to watch the steps in its progress, when the Spirit of God was moving on the face of the waters. With what an accession of deep and wondering interest would he now watch these Divine operations! Each wave of the abyss would now seem a prophecy of the beauty and life to spring shortly from its bosom. He would feel that no floating atom, no surge of the dark abyss, was exempt from the control of that Wisdom, which was working, with steady progress, to evoke from it all the coming grandeur of the new-created world.

Now in the same spirit will the Christian, when once he has realized the promise here given, look upon all the various and complicated events of the present time. They are only the scaffolding to a structure still incomplete, but which far surpasses the highest efforts of the imagination in its divine and eternal beauty. Nothing can be unmeaning, nothing without a secret purpose, in that world where Immanuel is hereafter to reign; and over which the heavens shall be opened, and the angels of God be seen descending upon the Son of man. Every event will now assume a new dignity from its connection with the coming restitution. Never for one moment can the eye of God's Spirit be averted from that world, which he is preparing for such a triumph of love, and for the scene of such an everlasting dominion. Every part of the earth will have yielded some of its sojourners, to swell the number of those who will then reign with their Lord. Every year, as it passes by, will have seen accomplished its own share in that mysterious work, which is preparing our earth for this future consummation. Our thoughts are thus led, every moment, to realize the hand of God in all things, and to feel ever encircled by the tokens of His supreme and ceaseless dominion.

Viewed in this light, the words of our Lord in the sermon on the Mount receive a fresh emphasis; and the contrast which they contain opens out into an unsuspected harmony of truth. 'Neither swear by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, for thou canst not make one hair white or black.' No two allusions would seem at first sight, more alien and remote from each other; but, when unfolded by the light of these visions, the harmony between them will evidently appear. In the kingdom of the Son of man, 'Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord.' Repaired from its long desolation, it will then be the metropolis of a ransomed world, the centre and seat of a pure and holy dominion. 'It shall not be plucked up nor thrown down, from henceforth even for ever.' 'The name of the city from that day shall be, the Lord is there.' 'The sun shall be ashamed, and the moon confounded, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.' How will this title given by our Lord himself, amidst his most spiritual messages, 'the city of the great King'—then shine forth as with supernatural brightness! An oath by that sacred name will then appear evidently to involve a direct appeal to God himself, all whose attributes will be wondrously displayed in the destinies of Zion, when He shall have made the place of his feet glorious.

But while the name of God will be signally manifest in 'the city of the great King,' when, according to the promise, He shall 'extend peace to her as a river, and the glory of the Gentiles as a flowing stream,' it is revealed as truly, though less conspicuously, in all the steps of Providence which have led the way to that final triumph. The minutest events of this present time are secretly linked, in His all-wise counsels, with the glory which shall then be revealed. 'Neither shalt thou swear by thy head; for thou canst not make one hair white or black.' Why should an object so trivial be joined here with that august and magnificent hope, implied in the words—'the city of the great King?' To remind us that all Providence, in every jot and tittle however minute, is a prophecy of that full redemption to come. One verse supplies a telescope, the other a microscope, to the hand of faith; but the mysteries which each of them reveals are only various parts of the same plan. God in his infinite wisdom is directing all things, even the least, towards that joyful consummation. The falling sparrow, the leaves of the forest, the secret thoughts and projects of the millions of mankind, and the minutest changes of their personal history, in body or in soul,—all are so many links in the execution of His unfathomable counsels. And as the architect or artist keeps ever in view the great ideal at which he aims, and the place of every stone in the building, every stroke of the chisel or the pencil, however delicate or fine, is guided by this secret reference; so also the divine Savior, while he counts the steps of his people, or numbers the hairs of their head, keeps his eye ever fixed on that glorious kingdom, which is to be the final issue of all the changes of time. What an element of mystery and of life is thus infused into all things around us! What a gleam of bright and heavenly sunshine does the hope of this kingdom, as revealed to us in the Scriptures, shed on all the trials and experience of Christians here below!

Such, then, will be one effect of a lively faith in this divine prophecy. The hand of God will be realized, more fully than before, in the past and present history of our fallen world. It will seem no longer a mighty maze, without plan or purpose; that leaves our understanding bewildered, while we gaze on it, in practical atheism, as if the God of prophets and apostles had forsaken the earth. All things will be viewed with a deeper interest, as the steps, ordered from eternity, towards the future glory. We shall then look with a purer affection on the outward works of God. The taint of the fall, indeed, has passed upon them; but they are yet to be renewed, and the traces of God's providence, and local memorials of his goodness, even after their fiery baptism, may perhaps still survive in that world to come. Our Lord himself, on the throne of his glory, retains the marks of his deepest sufferings. So also this fallen world, when redeemed from the curse, may still wear inscribed upon it, in every part, the memorials of that wonderful Providence of which it has been the theatre for so many ages. Such thoughts, which are naturally suggested by the vision, must exercise a hallowing influence over the heart of the Christian believer. Every scene of nature and of providence will become an occasion of more close communion with the eternal God; when they are seen to be not only the channels of present grace, but also earnest and sure pledges of the kingdom of glory.

"Immortal"—"Immortality."

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

BELOVED FATHERS AND BRETHREN:—Being connected with you in the general principles of the Alliance, I take the liberty of freeing my mind, by addressing to you a few lines; and I do so with much respect and love. When I rose before you in Freemason's Hall, London, Aug. 25, to move that the phrase, 'The Immortality of the Soul,' should be removed from the Doctrinal Basis of the Alliance, I did so with feelings of hope—hope that you would readily perceive, and practically appreciate, the Scriptural character of the reasons which I assigned.

But as my expectations were not verified, I can only address you with feelings of sorrow,—sorrow that the apostolic injunction, 'Hold fast the form of sound words,' was not wholly observed in the formation of a basis intended for so many to occupy.

However, there are some considerations which administer consolation. First: I feel I did my duty in the matter. Second: Some of the most distinguished and thinking members of the Conference, both British and Continental, were with me. Rev. T. Binney, of London, rose and seconded my amendment, and assigned as his reason, that the phrase, 'The Immortality of the Soul,' savors rather of heathenism than of Christianity, or words to the same effect. Rev. Mr. Cunize, of Berlin, supported the amendment. He said that the phrase in question is, in Germany, almost peculiar to the Rationalists, and that the evangelical ministers there do not use it. Rev. Dr. Beaumont, a noble-hearted Wesleyan minister, gave his voice for the rescinding of the clause, and assigned as his reason, that there is such a variety of views among Christians on the point. Rev. Wm. Chalmers, of the Free Church, London, gave his influence in the same direction. He said to me after—'I voted with you, for you had the right of the question.' Also Rev. Mr. Kind of the German Church, London, remarked to the same amount. Others, of more or less note, wore with me, desiring that the Basis might not be encumbered with the clause in dispute.

Third: But my chief source of comfort is, that I am sustained by THE WORD OF GOD. And I am willing, if need be, to stand alone on such a rock. As I reminded you in the Conference, the term immortal is used but once in the Bible, and is applied to God—'Unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God.' (1 Tim. i. 17.) The word immortality is employed five times. [1.] It is applied to CHRIST—'Our Lord Jesus Christ—who only hath immortality.' (1 Tim. i. 14, 16.) [2.] It is mentioned as a blessing for which we are to seek—'Seek for glory, and honor, and immortality.' (Rom. ii. 7.) [3.] It is presented as something offered in the gospel—'Hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel.' (2 Tim. i. 10.) [4.] It is applied to the change which the saints will undergo at the sounding of the last trump—'This mortal must put on immortality.' Again: 'So when this mortal shall have put on immortality.' (1 Cor. xv. 53, 54.) These are the only passages in which the term 'immortal,' or 'immortality,' occurs, and therefore the above are the only senses in which it is used. The sum of the whole is, the term is applied to God, to Christ, and to the Saints when made like him at his coming; but never in the sense in which it obtains in the Doctrinal Basis of the Alliance. Thus, Scriptural immortality is the gift of God, through Christ, to them who believe Christ is all. 'HE ONLY HATH IMMORTALITY.' It is received from its great Parent Source through Him.

And while it might be well, as Dr. Cox, of New York, advocated, not to express the doctrinal principles of the union in the words of Scripture, yea, I appeal to you, it would have been well, in a much higher sense, not to have used a Scripture word in a way which seems to be prohibited by the Scriptures. Hence, I must record my solemn protest against the application of the term 'immortal' in the sense you have applied it in one of the Articles of Faith.

Let me also remind you, that the bringing forward of a certain passage by one of your number (Dr. Cox, of Hackney, London,) to prove the Scriptural correctness of the clause, 'The Immortality of the Soul,' ought to have excited your suspicions. The passage, as you are aware, was, 'This mortal must put on immortality.' Now if this passage proves anything as to the soul, it proves that it is at the present mortal, and that it will, at some future period, put on immortality. But then a slight consultation of the context will show, that the apostle is speaking exclusively of Christians, and is referring to the change which those who are living will experience at the sounding of the last trump, as their physical qualification to 'inherit the kingdom of God.' Another member of the Conference, to sustain the soundness of the clause under consideration, adduced the following verse: 'Our Savior Jesus Christ hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel.' But this does not sustain the clause: nay, rather, it sustains the contrary, viz., that 'immortality' is obtained through the interposition of 'our Savior Jesus Christ.' Its obvious sentiment is, that, as the blessed results of his death and resurrection, the Gospel brings the glad tidings of 'life and immortality.' The heirs of the kingdom of heaven are of two classes,—the dead saints, and the mortal saints; and the Gospel discovers 'life' for the former, and 'immortality' for the latter, and which they will actually receive only at the 'appearing and kingdom' of Christ.

Fathers and Brethren, 'How forcible are right words!' I trust that the phrase on which I have thus animadverted, may be re-considered by you, so that should you ever meet again before 'immortality is swallowed up of life,' you may be prepared to expunge it, or to give sound reasons for retaining it.

I remain yours respectfully and affectionately,
R. HURCHINSON.

Life and Death.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Being detained another day by the dreadful snow storm, I propose to employ a few leisure moments in penning some thoughts on 'Life and Death,' which I send you for publication. This interesting Bible subject, is thought by some, to be a forbidden one; but it is so intimately connected with the advent, that even if our advent papers were shut against every subject but the near coming of Christ, this ought to be admitted. We want to know, in connection with the coming of our Lord, what will be the reward of the righteous, and punishment of the wicked—else, how can we hold out the proper Bible motives?

The more I examine this subject, the more I am astonished at my own former blindness, although it is not entirely new to me—also the present blindness of some of my brethren.

I shall be obliged to define terms—terms having been employed by metaphysicians, which are antagonistical, both to themselves and to the truth and which serve to bewilder the mind. What then is life? Ans. Simple animated being. What is death? Ans. Just the opposite—extinction of being. In more than five hundred places in the Bible where the terms are used, I find only twenty-one, where they are used metaphorically, and in none of these, to signify what is called 'spiritual Death.' I find but one passage (1 Tim. v. 6) that in the remotest degree, favors the idea. In all others, the phrase 'Death' is used metaphorically to signify insensibility, unconsciousness, (or some kindred idea,) in the person, to the thing spoken of, or extinction of animated being. In all that I have ever heard spoken or seen written on the subject, I have never found one thus saith the Lord, for 'spiritual death.' The doctrine is not in the Bible! It is a mere humanism, repugnant to all the plain teachings of God's word.

What then is the meaning of those passages, which speak of us as dead? For instance: Col. iii. 3, 4?—'Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God,' &c. It surely cannot be spiritual, because these were Christians, and they are not in spiritual death or alienation from God. Not only so, but they are promised life or glory 'when he who is our life shall appear.' See 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22; 2 Cor. v. 14, 15; Rom. vi. 11; Eph. ii. 1—5; Col. ii. 12, 13, et. al. All these texts, I understand to teach this, viz.: That God looks upon the race of man as dead in Adam, and all who accept of Christ as their Savior, as alive in Christ. This is also clearly and abundantly taught in Rom. vi. 17—'For if by one man's offense death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.' I want, dear reader, you should examine every text named, and as many more as you please, and see if I have not given you the true doctrine of God's word. God had just brought Adam into existence—had animated him with his own breath or spirit, (not atmospheric air) put him in the garden with only one restriction as a test of his fidelity, and told him 'in the day he broke that command he should die.' Now what else in the universe of God, could untheologized, unmetaphorized, unsophisticated Adam—young Adam, just entered upon existence and knowing what that was, understood by that penalty but the opposite of protracted existence—Death. What could any unsophisticated mind? nothing. This was the penalty and no other. It is proved by Gen. iii. 17—19 compared with Rom. v. 12, 17 and other texts. Dare a man take the ground that Adam suffered two penalties for one transgression? This he must do—moreover that God legislated after the thing was done, or admit it was simple death. Surely God does not thus deal with his creatures—men do not. Who ever heard of a Legislature, legislating and punishing a man for a thing previously done? much less of God!

Another thing, 'death' did not 'reign' over Adam till after he sinned—when did it begin to reign? when did the virus enter? It is in us every one. 'In the day' he ate the fruit—it entered them. We are born dying men—death is in us—down to dust we must go unless life triumphs over death, till Christ 'our life'—the resurrection and the life' comes.

Once more: 'The death of Christ proves the doctrine. How can it be said, 'Christ tasted death for every man'—'that he bore our sins in his own body on the tree,' &c., unless he suffered what man must have suffered, without a remedial scheme? How can any one say, 'it is mere assumption' that 'death in Adam,' 1 Cor. xv. 22, is extinction of being? If it is not, what is 'life' in the same text? I am amazed that any one should take such ground.

Take this view, and how beautifully the remedial scheme comes in. 'Christ hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light,' &c. 2 Tim. i. 10—'And the bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.' Jno. vi. 51. Now man lives again before God. The righteous forever—forever to praise him. The wicked have a second probation given, as well as the righteous—they reject the author of it, and suffer as the penalty of such rejection, the 'second death.'

Your brother waiting for eternal life,

G. NEDHAM.

Buffalo, Jan. 8th, 1847.

Ann Lee.

BRO. MARSH:—I saw last evening for the first time, the request, that I should furnish evidence, for the allusion to Ann Lee's impiety. The reasons given in connection with the allegation, are quite sufficient. Several points you name are also enough for any one, who is not incapable of conviction. But take another, Jesus affirms "My doctrine is not mine; but His that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself; he that speaketh of himself, seeketh his own glory; but he that seeketh His glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him"—John 7. Ann had the effrontery to place herself on an equality with the Son of God; so far as the wife can be of the same grade, or on an equality with her husband, she reduced Jesus to her level, or exalted herself to His Heavenly Dignity, above that of "all the angels of God;" or else, Ann shows herself the vainest and most "impious" of mortals. She spoke of herself—sought her "own glory;" therefore there was neither truth nor righteousness in her. Those who dare to quibble to evade such plain conclusions from such palpable premises, only offered their absurdity to her impiety. John, 7: 16, 18; Heb. 1: 6 and 3: 6 and 5, 4, 5, "No man taketh this honor to himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron, so also Christ glorified not himself, to be made an high priest." He was the subject of distinct prophecy through thousands of years. Then those prophecies were strictly fulfilled, in his whole life, as well as in his person, work, death, resurrection, and ascension. Now mark! The "Jerusalem above" which is the mother of Paul and all his brethren, is also the subject of distinct prophecy and promise. Now in order to sustain Ann's claims, God's Providence and spirit should have evolved in her history all the prophetic, moral phenomena of the mother of Mount Zion—the Bride, the Lamb's wife. We know Jesus to be 'the Messiah,' by his wearing in his countenance all the prophetic features which were to identify Him as 'the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.'

It is sinful for us not to believe in Him, because the previous prophecy, compared with the accurate fulfillment, furnishes the firmest basis for faith and hope and holy love; without such basis for faith there would be no virtue, nor value, no reasonableness, nor righteousness in faith.—See Gal. iv 22, 31—'Abraham had two sons, one by a bond maid, the other by a free woman,' that 'was born after the flesh'—this 'by promise.' 'Which things are an allegory. For these are the two covenants;' the one 'answereth to Jerusalem' that then was, 'in bondage with her children; the other answered to 'Jerusalem which is above, the mother of us all.'

Mark! Has the prophetic view of 'the city, which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God,' been fulfilled in Ann Lee? Was Hager the representative of Jerusalem—the city where for ages Jehovah recorded his name, revealed his presence, and accepted the homage of earth's congregated piety; and shall 'Sarah' be found a figure of Ann Lee!! Have 'the nations of the saved' come to walk in the light of Ann Lee!! Are her gates not shut, and is there 'no night there?' Do the Shaker settlements find 'no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in' them? but enough. This much would not have been said, had I not seen some bewildered, and in need of a plain reason for believing that the impious Ann Lee, is the most impious of all poor impious mortals. Of her it might have been said emphatically, she 'speaketh of' herself—'seeketh her own glory.' To make her folly if possible equal to her impiety, she assumed that Jesus Christ in his 2d advent, had changed sex! or had made His 2d advent in her!!

Yours looking like Abraham, 'for a city which hath foundations.'

Voice of Truth & Glad Tidings

"The wise shall understand."

ROCHESTER, JANUARY 20, 1847.

REMOVAL OF OUR OFFICE.

Our Office is now permanently located in Talman Block, (3d Story,) Buffalo Street, opposite the Arcade,—under the office of the 'Rochester American.'

The Proposition Again.

We again remind our brethren of our proposition to enlarge our sheet, considerably, the Lord willing, when our stock of paper shall be used up, which will be a number of weeks first.

The conditions are, an increase of our list of subscribers, and settling up of old accounts by all of our present subscribers who are able to pay. Some have endeavored to comply with these terms; let others do what they can in the work, and the enlarged and improved sheet, at the same price of the present one, shall be issued.

When we say, let all pay who can, we do not mean that our claim may stand last on the list of all the necessary and unnecessary demands of this proud, prodigal, and degenerate age. We mean, when actual righteous and lawful demands are reasonably supplied, then our claim stands next, with the exception of the suffering poor. When these duties are discharged, then remember our demands.

When we say in our terms, 'Without charge to those who are unable to pay,' we mean just so. But we expect the poor will act prudently in the case, and where there are two or more living near each other, instead of each one calling for the paper, they will make one paper serve for them all. And besides such ones are expected to see that their papers do not lie idle, but are circulated where they may be read by others.

Again we think our rich brethren, at their own expense, should see that the poor around them are supplied with the paper. Some are mindful of duty in this case, while others we fear are not: they either let the poor go without the paper, or they order it sent to them at the expense of the publisher. Let each one do his or her duty, in this case, and we shall be blessed with the unspeakable satisfaction of knowing that the poor have the gospel preached unto them: shall see the good cause prosper until the Lord shall come, and then be greeted with the happy welcome, Come, ye blessed of my Father, enter into the joys of thy Lord.

Time of the Second Advent.

NO. IV.

Agreeably to encouragement given last week, we now notice other passages of Scripture, which some have thought favor the doctrine that the day and hour of the second advent of Christ may be known. We will begin with 1 Thess. v. 1-6. 'But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night: for when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of the light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.—Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober.'

The point in this text which we are called to notice now, is, the coming of that day 'as a thief' on the wicked, and not so on the righteous. These things are clearly taught in the text. Very well, says a dissenting brother, this is what we have always contended for, when meeting our opponents on definite time, and I do not see now why we are not here furnished with conclusive evidence that the day and hour may and will be known by those who are not in darkness, but are children of the day.—Your reasoning is good and your conclusions just, provided your premises are correct. But your premises being defective your conclusions are necessarily erroneous: and with your forbearance a short time we will try to convince you of your mistake.

You are mistaken in supposing that the expression—'Ye are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief,' means ye shall previously know the day, or precise time of the advent of Christ. This is not the meaning of the metaphor. What then does it mean?—Let the Word decide.—'The thief cometh not, but to steal, and to kill, and to destroy.' John x. 10. This is the character of a thief; and as he comes to kill and destroy, so will Christ come to destroy all the wicked, but the righteous he will come to save. Hence in this sense Christ or that day will not come on the righteous, but on the wicked, as a thief.

Again, there is another sense in which Christ will come on the wicked and not on the righteous as a thief, viz; unexpectedly. The righteous will be expecting his coming, while the wicked will not be looking for it. How will this be? Will the righteous be expecting that event because they will know the exact day when it will come, and the wicked not expect it because they will be ignorant of that precise time? No. What then? The Word must decide. Speaking of his coming, in Matt. xxiv., commencing with verse 40, the Savior says:

'Then shall two be in the field, and two in the mill, and one shall be taken and the other shall be left. Luke xvii. 34 adds, Two shall be in one bed, one shall be taken and the other shall be left. It is not very probable that saint or sinner would be found in either of these conditions, if they knew the Lord would come and find them there. In view of the Lord's coming being at just such an unexpected hour, as it will be, when men, indiscriminately, will be engaged at their common labor, or locked in the slumbers of the night, the Lord adds, 'Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.' The important doctrine is, if you shall know the hour, you will not be found in the field, mill, or bed; and, a knowledge of the hour would preclude the necessity of watching to be ready to meet it; but as you will not know, it will be needful that you carefully watch.

To illustrate the subject the parable of the thief is added. 'But know this, that if the good-man of the house had known in what watch [Campbell says, what time of night] the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.' This case presupposes that the good man had good reason to believe the thief would come some time during the night; but at what hour he could not tell. Had he known the hour, he would have watched that hour, but as he did not know the hour, he watched all night. That this is the true light of this parable is evident from the foregoing truths, viz; that two will be in the field, and mill, &c., at the time of the advent, clearly showing that they will not know the hour; and also, from the explanation which immediately follows the parable. It says, 'Therefore be ye also ready: [also, as the good-man in the parable, because he did not know the hour when the thief would come, was ready, watched all night, even so, because you, Christians, do not know the day and hour when Christ will come, therefore, for this reason, be ye also ready, watch all the time,] for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.'

The application of the whole is, Christ has given signs by which we are assured that his coming is nigh even at the door; all who heed those signs, though they cannot tell by them the day and hour of the advent, will know that it is near, consequently they will be found watching and trying to be ready every moment. They will also be expecting their Lord constantly, but at no one definite day and hour more than another. Being in this condition, should he come and find them in the field, at the mill or in the bed, his coming will not take them on surprise, or find them unprepared to meet him: he will not come upon them as a thief unexpectedly to kill and destroy. But those who do not heed the signs, do not watch, are not ready, that day or the Lord will come on them not only unexpectedly, as a thief, but will find them unprepared to meet him, and consequently will destroy them.

Rev. iii. 3, is thought by some to be strong evidence in favor of the day and hour being known. It reads, 'If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.' It is inferred by some that those who do watch will know the hour. If a literal hour of sixty minutes is meant, we might infer on as reasonable principles as the first inference is made, that the hour will not be known until its actual commencement. But we think neither of these inferences correct. To obtain the true light of the matter we must first understand in what sense hour is used in the text. As the context does not explain its meaning, we must look to other parts of this book for its true signification.

Rev. xiv. 6, 7. And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship Him that made heaven, and earth, and the fountains of waters.' All will readily see that hour in this case covers the entire length of time in which the everlasting gospel is preached 'to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.' Certainly, 'hour,' in this case is more than sixty minutes.

xvii. 12. 'And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet, but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.' No one supposes hour in this case to mean simply sixty minutes. It doubtless means that length of time when the ten kingdoms were leagued in supporting the papal beast.

xviii. 19. 'And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea, by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.' This symbolic hour doubtless refers to the short time (more than sixty minutes however,) of destruction which will come upon the world, and especially mystery Babylon, at the coming of Christ.

These are the only places in the Apocalypse, in which 'hour' occurs, and in the last three times it evidently means more than sixty minutes: a short indefinite time. This doubtless is the true meaning in the case under consideration. The sentiment we think is this: 'If therefore thou shalt not watch, [then the signs of the coming of the Lord being nigh will not be seen or understood by you: you will be in darkness on these things, consequently that day will come upon you suddenly, unexpectedly, and to your destruction. Or, as the text says,] I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.' But if you do watch, you will understand the signs, and although you will not know the day and hour, you will know the time when the coming of the Lord is nigh at the door, and be ready to meet him at any moment; consequently he will not come upon you as a thief, finding you unprepared and entirely ignorant of the time of his coming.

The true light of this deeply interesting subject must be deferred till next week. In the mean time let us remember the often repeated admonitions of our Lord, to watch: for he may come before the commencement of another week.

Intermediate State of the Dead.

I wish to enquire in what sense was 'the end of all things at hand,' (1 Pet. iv. 7,) eighteen hundred years ago? And how could our Lord say at that time, 'Behold I come quickly;' (Rev. iii. 11, with other similar passages,) only on the ground that no account was made of the so called intermediate state? With such views would not those passages be applicable to the age in which they were written as well as in all after ages, even down to our day—on whom 'the ends of the world have come.'—the end of the world?

T. SMITH.
Brewer, Me., Dec. 15, 1846.

ANSWER TO BRO. SMITH.

Though we have no faith in the existence of a place called 'hades,' or of any other name, for the intermediate state or conscious existence of the dead, we think Bro. Smith is mistaken in the application of the passages of Scripture to which he refers: we know not that the Bible warrants this application. His conclusions seem to be inferences drawn from his view of the nature of the case. A purely Bible question, a matter of faith, should never be settled on such principles, or evidence. And here, for the good of all, we would most seriously urge that we be exceeding cautious on this point, especially at this critical time, when different sentiments threaten to trouble if not to divide us. All will be harmony, and the blessing of God will attend our investigations, if we abide the alone decision of his plain word. But his displeasure will be against us if our inferences, or opinions, are made the rule of our faith. O, that our dear brethren would see these things, and timely shun the fatal rock on which those who have been blind to them have wrecked their eternal all. We refer to the sects: they have been guided by their opinions of, or inferences on God's word; have not taken it as it reads—each following his own honest but imperfect opinions. Hence as many wide doors as there are sects, have been opened to the broad road of error, false doctrines, strife, persecution, death, and every evil work; until the great mass of the church and world are lost beyond hope of recovery, in the fog of spiritual blindness and mire of moral corruption of their own creating.

Bro. Smith will not consider these remarks personal; they are not so designed. They are penned for the good of us all, at this fearful crisis: at this time when the enemy would 'sift us as wheat.' We do not fear but court the sifting of the Lord; or the closest scrutiny by his word, of our spirit, practice, and doctrine: but that sifting caused by the doctrines and commandments of men, or by any device of the devil, we dread, and from which we pray the Father of all our mercies to deliver us as individuals and as a people. But to Bro. Smith's questions.

The 'ends of the world,' which our brother seems to think means the end of the world, according to Macknight's rendering should read, 'ends of the ages.' The whole text reads, 'Now, all these things happened to them for ensamples, and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages are come.' 1 Cor. x. 11. We believe it is generally acceded by all Bible students that the close of the Mosaic and commencement of the gospel dispensations, or ages, are here meant, and of course, instead of referring directly to the end of the natural world, must have direct reference to the time in which the words were written.

1 Pet. iv. 7, according to Macknight's rendering, reads, 'Now the end of all things approacheth.—Be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer.' 'Ap. approacheth,' instead of 'at hand,' is used by Dr. Campbell in the following instances:—Matt. iii. 2. 'Reform, for the reign of heaven approacheth.'—iv. 17, 'From that time Jesus began to proclaim, saying, Reform, for the reign of heaven approacheth.' x. 7. 'And as ye go, proclaim, saying, The reign of heaven approacheth.' Luke xxi. 28. 'Now when these things [the signs of Christ's coming] begin to be fulfilled, look up and lift up your heads, because your deliverance approacheth.' What is it that approacheth? The reign, or kingdom of God.—How? It was the next kingdom in the great prophetic succession, and though not emphatically nigh at hand or at the door, it was most surely approaching, and would soon come, and hence it was fit to present this glorious truth as a motive to repentance, watching unto prayer, and holy living.

When the signs are all seen, then we are taught to 'know that the reign of God is nigh.' Luke xxi. 31. Matt. xxiv. 33 has it, 'know that he is near, even at the doors.' It will be seen from these quotations that a difference of expression is used in reference to the coming of the kingdom, which would not have been the case if the state of the dead, as brother Smith supposes, was referred to. It would have been just as proper in the days of Abraham and Balaam to have said the kingdom is nigh even at the door, as to say it is now, when all the signs of its being thus near have been seen. Relative to Abraham and the patriarchs it is said, 'these all died in the faith, though they did not receive the things promised: for seeing them afar off;' &c. Balaam said, 'I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh.' Num. xxiv. 17.

From these and other considerations, which we might name, it appears evident to us that the expressions under considerations must be understood to refer to the facts named, viz: the reign or kingdom of God, the end of all earthly things, &c., and not to the state of the dead.

Rev. iii. 11. Is in the address to the Philadelphia church, which evidently exists near the close of time. Hence the warning of the Saviour, 'Behold I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown,' is perfectly in accordance with the solemn facts in the case. A similar expression is found in chapter xi. 14: 'The second woe is passed, and behold, the third woe cometh quickly.' We are doubtless living on this fearful moment, this mere fraction of time, called quickly! It may expire the next instant! Let us take heed to ourselves, lest we fail in obtaining the crown.

The Disputed Circle.

It is well known by believers in the advent near, that it is a matter of doubt, embracing a circle of a few years, relative to the time of the commencement of the prophetic numbers, by which we have supposed we may arrive at the more accurate time of the second advent of Christ. A. D. 1843 and '47, (with an exception or two we believe) are the two extremes of this circle. We were justified in looking for our Lord when we first entered upon this disputed ground; and as we now have entered upon the last year of this circle, we have good reason to expect him every moment: especially, when in all the other numerous evidences in the case, there is a corresponding fitness, or unison of testimony that the day of the Lord is at the door.

We do not say that the Lord will come before the close of '47, but we do say that we can see no good reason why he will not; and that the infallible evidences in the case, warrant the most unwavering faith that his coming is very near, and may be witnessed before another week shall pass away! The following extract from the Advent Herald, on 'The Departed Year,' we fully endorse:

"To this year (1847) the eyes of many have been turned, as the year which shall witness great events—events no less momentous than those which shall be the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations. The names of Wilson, Campbell and Shimeall, and Brownlee, in our country,—men who would scorn to be identified with us,—and Pym, and many other writers in the Old World, who have written on prophecy, and who never anticipated any earlier period for the termination of the prophetic periods, have all designated this year as the time indicated by prophecy for their consummation. This is also the last year, in the circle of a few years, to which discrepant dates have pointed. While, therefore, we have no other time than to-day, and to-day, and to-day, until the end, yet there is a peculiar interest clustering about this present year, which renders it one of fond anticipation, and which we trust will not be dissipated, unless the passing of the year itself shall disappoint our hopes. That this year will pass, we have no evidence. That the Lord may come at any time, we have overwhelming evidence. That it cannot be long delayed, we have conclusive proof. If we are Christians, the thoughts of Christ's coming will be joyous to us, and not grievous. We argue, then, that with the evidence we have, and with the hopes the evidence of the near Advent excites, we cannot look to the present year with other than the fondest expectations. We will not look for disappointment, till disappointment comes. We will hope on, and hope ever, knowing that He that cometh, will come, and will not tarry. The coming of Christ would be the happiest event for the Christian that could transpire. This is what the great body of our readers hope and wish. In view, then, of the happiness which this event shall add to the year of its occurrence, we wish all our readers a happy New Year!"

Blindness of the Church.

A prominent doctrine of the nominal church is, the conversion of the world from the revengeful and murderous spirit and practice of war, to the merciful and peaceful spirit and practice of the gospel of Christ. Yet her leading influences are manifestly more and more in favor of war. Says the N. Y. Herald:—

"Rev. Henry Slicer was elected Chaplain, to-day, of the Senate. He is a democrat Methodist, dyed in the wool—a 54 40 man—goes for the message, and the whole of Mexico, and free trade and sailor's rights. He is the preacher who exhorted the volunteers, before leaving here last summer, to fight like Trojans, and stand by their flag, and carry it through or die in the trenches of the enemy."

Such a man as this receives the suffrage of our Senate; and of course the spirit of war which he possesses is sanctioned by that august body.—That the great mass of the people are equally deceived on this subject, is evident from the following statement of a correspondent for a recent number of the New York Evangelist. He heads his short note, "Bowie-knives & Bibles." Speaking of certain troops which recently left New York for the Mexican field of bloody strife, he says—

"But what struck me with more surprise than anything else, was the statement in regard to the equipments furnished to the troops by the kindness of friends. Beside the government supplies, such as blankets, swords, guns, bayonets, and ammunition, they were presented with Bowie knives and Bibles: the word of life and the weapons of death, the implements of destruction and the means of salvation. What a strange incongruity! What a mixture of piety and depravity! What a spectacle for angels to contemplate, and good men to behold! Bowie knives and Bibles!"

If such is the spirit of our ministry, sanctioned by our Legislators, and upheld by the common people, (and no one will understandingly say it is not) then on what ground has the church reason to hope for the speedy commencement of her temporal millennium! She is deceived, woefully deceived, and what renders her case more deplorable is, she will not be shown her mistake, and the fearful doom to which this infaturation is leading her. She is crying, Peace, peace, when sudden destruction will soon come upon her!

Qualifications for the Kingdom of God.

Luke xii. 22—"Sell that ye have and give alms: provide yourselves bags which wax not old—a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth nor moth corrupteth."

The question we propose to consider is: what shall we do with our surplus wealth? The passage we have quoted answers—sell that thou hast and give alms. I do not understand that a man should sell all that he possesses, for we are told that he that provideth not for his own hath denied the faith and is worse than the infidel. It is the duty of the Christian by honest industry to earn his daily bread. Undoubtedly it is that part of the fruits of our labor or property, which is not needed for our present wants, we are commanded to sell and give alms. This is the way Christ has laid down for us to lay up treasures in the heavens. To this agrees the answer of Jesus to the young man, who came and inquired what he should do that he might inherit eternal life? Matt. xix. 16—21—"If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come and follow me." If it was necessary for this young man to sell his great possessions in order to lay up treasures in heaven, it must be as necessary for all rich men to thus dispose of their surplus wealth. Christ must be extremely partial to exclude this man from the kingdom of God on account of his great wealth, and allow others to enter in who are as wealthy, or who are striving to obtain the same.

The Savior in the parable, Matt. xxv. 1—30, plainly teaches that all that his servants possess, —time, talents, property, and all that can be possessed, is given to them as stewards, and that at his coming he will require a strict account for the manner they have improved these things. By the fate of the slothful servant, we learn, that all who hoard up their talent, whether it be time, mental or physical abilities, or worldly possessions, that they will be cast out into outer darkness. If our talents consists entirely or in part in worldly possessions, we are to use them in feeding God's poor and destitute children, and other objects of benevolence. We will divide the objects of our charity into three classes:

1st. The poor of all classes, whether Christians or not.

2d. Those called of God to preach the gospel.

3d. Those objects of benevolence which have for their aim, the enlightening by the gospel of the human family.

It needs no argument to show it our duty, if we have the ability to alleviate the sufferings of the poor—it stands out as plain a command as any on record in the Bible. But in addition to this, we are required to love our neighbor as ourselves. If we were suffering in extreme want and poverty, we would be thankful to our rich neighbor to divide with us his over abundant stores; so will we do to the poor around us, if we love our neighbor as ourselves. But there is a higher duty we owe to the poor in Christ: we are taught Matt. xxv. 31—46, that when the least of the Savior's disciples are in want, if we visit and feed them if hungry, clothe them if naked, visit them if sick or in prison, it is considered as done unto the Savior himself. On the other hand if we neglect to do these things, the Savior considers himself as slighted and insulted, and will for this shut us out of his kingdom.

In our country there are two classes of poor—those in our own neighborhood, to whom we can at all times render a helping hand. But there is another class that loudly demands our sympathies—the down-trodden and oppressed slave. How many of Christ's little ones are among them, we cannot tell—there are undoubtedly many. Let us remember the principle, 'forasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.' Have we done all for them that we would have done for the Savior, was he now an oppressed slave in this condition?

2d. Duty to those called of God to preach the gospel.

The Adventists as a body have condemned the ministers of the nominal churches, on account of their salaries. In this condemnation of the salaried system, many have embraced the idea that the gospel should be preached free, that the preacher of the gospel can claim nothing of this world's goods from his hearers as a reward for his labors—that what is given him is a mere favor. The consequence of this faith has been, that many who have left their all to preach the gospel of the kingdom have been discouraged, to find that their temporal wants are neglected by those for whom they have spent their time and energies to feed with the bread of life. Some have left the field of labor—others are obliged to spend their time in laboring to support their families, when they might be proclaiming the coming of the Lord at hand, if the useless stores hoarded up by professed adventists, were distributed to supply their need.

God has given to every man different talents: to one, the gift of preaching—to another, an ability to labor with his hands—to another, worldly possessions. Is it just and right, that the man who has left a profitable business that would afford himself ample support to preach the gospel, should suffer, while those who have been benefited by his labors have an abundance of the comforts and many of the luxuries of life? Have not the Christian hearers of the gospel, duties to perform towards the preacher, as well as he in declaring the word of life to them? But let us turn to the word of God, and let that be the judge in this matter—

1 Cor. ix. 3—14: 'Mine answer to them that do examine me is this: Have we not power to eat and drink? have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the heathen of the Lord and Cephas? Or I only, and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working? Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard and eat-eth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes no doubt this was written, that he that plougheth should plough in hope, and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope. If we have sown unto you spiritual things is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless, we have not used this power, but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ. Do ye not know, that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.'

The apostle applies his argument by stating the fact, that the Lord had ordained or commanded that they that preach the gospel should live by the gospel. Therefore if the preacher of the gospel is obliged to devote his time to laboring with his hands for a livelihood, those who are benefited by his preaching do him a wrong; no less than that of withholding the hire from the laborer. He may forbear using this power, but the Christian hearer cannot free himself from this obligation.

3d. Those objects of benevolence which have for their aim the enlightening by the gospel of the human family.

It always has been the duty of the Christian to do all in his power to extend the blessings of the gospel; but the means and methods to be adopted for the accomplishment of this object, must vary with the time and circumstances. The question we now propose to consider is, what does the Lord require of us, second advent believers, living on the crumbling verge of time?

1st. It is our duty to spread out before the world, the evidences of the speedy coming of Christ, by means of the press. Here is an avenue through which the Lord's money in the hands of adventists can go forth accomplishing great good. There are many individuals that might yet be reached by advent publications, in our own country, if put into their hands free of expense. Many hearts might be aroused by this means, to a preparation to meet the coming Savior. In addition to this there is a large field of labor in the British Isles, in the various countries of Europe, and throughout the whole Christian world. There ought not to be left a solitary corner of the world where Christianity is acknowledged, but what shall have a faithful warning of this earth's approaching dissolution. Tracts on this subject might be translated into different languages, and distributed to the various nations, if the necessary means could be provided. Perhaps hundreds or thousands might be saved by this means. Who then can withhold in their hands the Lord's treasures, and refuse to relax their grasp, and thus this means of doing good be neglected, and be guiltless?

2d. It is our duty to do all that we can by the efforts of the living preacher. Much might yet be done in those parts of the country where the truth has been generally presented; even there there are many places, that have not had a faithful presentation of the subject. But, says one, the people will not hear; what if they will not hear, that will not excuse us from performing our duty to them. Look at Great Britain, and see the vast field all ripe for the harvest. Can the rich adventist withhold from the poor of that proud kingdom, the words of life and be guiltless? Look again at the West Indies; there too are thousands that can be reached by the living preacher. Look again and see the three millions of our own countrymen immured in that dark and dismal prison-house of slavery. The blessed Savior is there imprisoned, in the person of his despised disciples. He can draw no consolation from the book of God, for its pages are sealed up against him, by those cruel laws that inflict death on the second offence of teaching him to read. Shall not his cheerless hovel be visited by the glorious message of speedy redemption at the coming of Christ? What good reason can we offer to the judge of the quick and dead, for neglecting to pour this balm of consolation into the broken hearts of the poor slave? How many who are now debased to the lowest darkness of heathenism, by this horrid system of iniquity, might be raised up to rejoice in the hope of soon having a part with the inheritance of the saints? Every soul that might be saved by vigorous exertion on our part among them, if lost on account of our neglect of duty, their blood will be required of our hands.

My dear brother and sister, the gold and silver you are hoarding up is stained with the blood of souls. Those treasures of the Lord which he has put into your hands, if lying idle in your coffers, will eat your flesh as with fire—they will be a witness against you at the day of the Lord. Not a dollar that you possess is your own, it is all the Lord's. If you bury this talent in the earth you must meet the fate of the slothful servant, be cast out into outer darkness. You are not only guilty of covetousness, but your garments are dripping with the blood of souls, if you are found laying up the Lord's money. I. D. P.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM BRO. T. SMITH.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—How true the word of God, and how are its divine truths unfolding themselves to his dear children day by day! For a few weeks past, I have been deeply impressed with the necessity of dispensing the word of the Lord in the interior of one of the towns of the Penobscot river—I therefore sent word to some acquaintance that I would be, (the Lord willing) in their vicinity on Saturday to 'preach the word'—Saturday, Sunday and Sunday evenings. Notwithstanding a storm of snow, I made my way to the place appointed, and met with a few on Saturday evening, and among whom, to my happy surprise, I recognised the well known voice of a dear brother, who hearing of the meeting had waded through the snow and woods, and over wind falls a number of miles, to attend a meeting—and thus by deed as well as word, while there showed his love for the truth. I preached the word four times to small but increasing congregations; the interest apparently increasing each time—but in no one subject so much as I afterward learned as in the promises made by God to the fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, of an everlasting inheritance, which could only be fulfilled in the 'new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.' In this they saw the great importance of the resurrection, coming of Christ, &c., because these promises made by God to the fathers, could not be fulfilled until that time, as they all had died in the faith not having received the promises; but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

The word having gone out that a 'Millerite' was going to preach, some came from another district to hear the Word, who were so much interested that they pressed me strongly to come into their school-house and give them a lecture; I therefore gave them liberty to say that Monday evening I would be there. The preacher, (M. E.) was accordingly Sunday evening, requested to give notice that I would be there the next evening; but he declined, expressing a wish that 'Millerism' was out of the country. A brother, however, who had heard 'Father Miller' himself, when at Penobscot in the fall of '43, in whose heart some of the seeds of divine truth had fallen, made the appointment, and accordingly I repaired to the place. The house was well filled with attentive hearers, who listened patiently while I addressed them on the prophecies of Daniel. I labored to show them that the image, seen by Nebuchadnezzar, in chap. 2d, and the beasts seen in the 7th, each symbolized four universal kingdoms, and that the fourth was to be succeeded by God's everlasting kingdom, to be set up under the whole heaven, and given to the people of the saints of the Most High. That the horn, which made war with the saints, would prevail against them until the Ancient of days come, and judgment shall be given to the saints of the Most High. And consequently there is no room for, nor reason to expect, a temporal millennium. Among the hearers was the above named preacher, who was very respectful, and gave a pertinent exhortation to the people to be also ready, and said that day might come to-night, for ought he knew, and it might be a thousand years distant. It appeared, however, that he was not very positive in his belief of a millennium before the coming of Christ, or he could not have admitted that his coming might take place that night!

I there learned that a number had heretofore been tainted with this 'dreadful heresy,' and that nothing else could satisfy their spiritual appetite but those truths which related to the final restitution of all things, which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. More and more, dear brother, am I convinced that this is 'the meat in due season,' 'the sincere milk of the word,' by which we may 'grow in grace and in knowledge; and never was there a time when the Macedonian cry from all quarters was sounding forth more than at the present. Very little of the pure word of God is being preached—the theory of the day, makes 'death the gate of endless joy;' hence, the resurrection, coming of Christ, &c., are of little or no importance—and indeed why should they be, if as says the orthodoxy of the day, when a man dies, 'his happy spirit goes to heaven, with the Lord,' 'singing praises at God's right hand'—where the Psalmist says, 'are pleasures for evermore.' Oh Paganism! Oh Popery! what hast thou done? thou hast turned the eyes of the church from the only path of life, the resurrection, to the gates of death, as 'the way to endless joy!'

In conversation with certain ministers not long since, they exclaimed, 'why, if we had believed in the destruction of the wicked, we never would have sought for religion!' and if you preach that doctrine, no body will ever try to be Christians! Pause, said I, brethren, look at facts before your eyes—see the great body of Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, &c., believers in 'eternal life in misery!' and where and how are they? are not the great majority of them slain witnesses, having a name to live and yet dead? If, my brethren, we are influenced by motives no better, than the fear of 'always dying and never to die,' it is quite time that we examine ourselves.

I am happy, dear brother, in being able to say, that some are studying Paul, Peter and Jesus Christ, more—and Drs. Clark, Scott and Benson, less, and are beginning to believe God without a voucher. 'Great is truth, and it must and will prevail.' May the Lord hasten the time.

LETTER FROM BRO. B. B. BROWN.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—It is now about one year and a half since I left the dear brethren at the East and came to this field of moral death, where I find but a few sympathizing friends, and where no trace of an Advent lecturer could be found before I came. I have often thought of writing, and imploring the brethren through your much valued paper, of the need of more laborers in this region of country, but have hitherto neglected it by reason of sickness and a multiplicity of labor when well. The reasons for my coming to this neglected part of the field, were these: 1st. I was frequently written to on the subject by old acquaintances, who were settled in this country, desiring me to come and give them the light, which they had got in part by reading papers I had sent them. In the second place, I had money due me in this country which I thought would help me to a support while I was preaching the speedy coming of the Lord. I knew it could not be collected unless I was here; and chose not to be a burthen to my brethren so long as I had any means of my own. I have traveled over a vast wilderness since I came here, extending 150 miles north of this, but have never had the pleasure of finding but one place where an Advent lecturer had been before me; that was Chester, in Randolph county. There I found a few half-believers, who were comforted and strengthened in their faith. As a matter of course, the people of this whole country were entirely ignorant of the leading doctrines of our faith. They knew but little more than that a man by the name of Miller, away in Vermont or New Hampshire, had prophesied that the world would be burnt up in 1843. I have found but very little prejudice against the pre-millennial advent and personal reign of Christ. But when I preach that it is an event to be looked for daily, the same lying spirit that troubles our brethren at the East shows himself here also.

My labors, since I came to this region, have been exceedingly hard, and my living scanty by reason of not being able to collect where it was due me. At one time we were out of all provisions and also of means for purchasing more. I finally asked a wicked merchant to trust me a barrel of flour, to which he consented; it was five dollars. Where to get money to pay it I knew not, but the flour I must have—I felt like leaving that with God. I went home with the flour, never feeling more grateful to my Heavenly Father than I then did. He had thus far been my helper and I had learned to put my trust in him. I had no hope of receiving anything from the people of the country, for they had never done anything for me, (nor have they yet.) But the Lord provided. The same day on which I got the flour I received a letter from the dear brethren in Woodstock, Vermont, in which was a donation of just five dollars. I felt as if I could hardly go from the Post Office before kneeling down, and in tears of gratitude, give thanks to my Heavenly Father. For this and other expressions of kindness from those dear brethren when I was with them, and since I came West, they have my warmest thanks, and will ever share in the highest affections of my heart. I now feel as if my labors in this country are almost done. I look daily for my dear Redeemer to return. But though he should not return for a few months yet, I know not but my labors are nearly ended. I have suffered much from sickness for a year past, which has considerably impaired my health. I can preach now but little, and need some faithful brethren to come to my help. They will find it a hard field, and but few who will care for them. People generally through this region are ignorant and unlearned, and many of the ministers can hardly read intelligibly; yet they are bigoted and 'wise in their own eyes.'

My heart is made to rejoice from week to week by the soul-cheering intelligence which comes to hand through the 'Voice of Truth' and Advent Herald. I love to hear from my dear brethren, though I cannot see them, and mingle with them in prayer and praise. I rejoice to learn that some of our brethren, who were a few months ago getting wild in spiritualism and the 'shut-door' system, are now clothed in their right minds. O that we may see the whole Advent ranks once more all united, as they seemed to be in the fall of '44. But this we can hardly expect; for I am confident that nothing but strong faith in definite time will ever produce this effect—yet with the light I now have I can only say, it is the next great event in prophecy to be fulfilled, and is to be looked for daily until it comes. Never, however, did I more desire it than I do at the present time—

"For I have a long time been wandering
And now I want to go."

I will patiently wait, however, until my change comes, and try to keep myself in readiness. I shall send you in this letter a little money by way of payment. I wish I had more to send, but I find it very difficult getting enough to purchase what food and clothes we must have, though we are very economical and sometimes fare hard.

Your brother affectionately,

B. B. BROWN.

P. S. I wish to say to my brethren from whom I have received private letters, they shall be answered in due time—sickness is the only reason why they have not been answered before now.

B. B. B.

Metropolis, Massac Co., Ill., 1847.

☞ We regret, Bro. Brown, that you sent the dollar, especially if you needed it; it will be our pleasure to send the paper free. This letter points to an interesting field at home for missionary enterprise, and also presents a favorable opportunity for those who have the means, to bestow their gifts on the Lord's needy servants. Let us not be so eager to reap old and already highly cultivated fields abroad, when the fallow-ground is not even broken up of large territories at home. We mean to look at these things again, and we hope others will look at them, feel and act about them as the nature of the case or duty demands.—EDITOR.

LETTER FROM BRO. BYWATER.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I am now at home, after being absent five weeks from my family. On my return, I found four of my children had been afflicted with the whooping cough, and the youngest very severely, and for some time her life was despaired of; but through the tender mercies of our God she is yet alive, and I think is now on the gain.

In my last letter, I closed with our conference at Hornby, and I will now give a farther detail of our journey. After leaving Hornby we went to Bath. Here we found a few brethren—preached ten times, baptised one and broke bread. Here we occupied a house owned by our colored friend. A number of backsliders were reclaimed, and Bro. Stocking, a Freewill Baptist preacher, embraced the faith, and declared it publicly. We also preached the word in Pultney, Hamonsport, Dansville, Conesus and Geneseo; in all these places we found the brethren strong in the faith of Christ's speedy coming. There is a great want of laborers in Allegany and Steuben counties; the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few, and I can see that it is fast ripening and being prepared for the great gathering day. O, may we be found ripe for glory then, is my earnest prayer.

Yours in hope,

J. C. BYWATER.

Attica, Dec. 24th, 1846.

EXORTATION.

☞ There is a time of trouble coming! such as never was and never shall be again! Oh sinners! backsliders! cold-hearted professors! my soul trembles for you when I think that in a little while longer, unless you repent and turn to the Lord, you will be engulfed in the fiery storm of God's wrath, which will be poured upon the ungodly without one ray of hope to lighten that dark night of despair! I envy not the proud, lofty-looking ones of earth, nor the scoffers of our blessed hopes—for the day is coming when the lofty looks of man shall be brought down; they will call on rocks to hide them! O prepare to meet thy God! fly to Jesus while he is on the mercy seat, and willing to save all that will come unto him. We at times weep over those around us, to see them going headlong down to ruin: Jesus wept over Jerusalem! Our tears will soon be wiped away, our bosom will heave the last sigh, over those around us. Soon the last exhortation will be given—the last prayer ascend to the mercy-seat—the last parting farewell will be given—the last effects of disease will be felt in these corruptible bodies; sudden, like the lightning, the glories of the eternal day will burst upon us! the saints will then put on immortality, to die no more! O sinner, prepare to enjoy the blessings of that day.

S. E. MABEY.

Sister L. Bissel, Champion, N. Y., Dec. 14th, writes:

BRO. MARSH: I have for the last three months taken great pleasure in reading the Voice of Truth, and as it has come laden with the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand, it truly has been a welcome messenger to me. I am surrounded with the opposers of our blessed hope, some of whom are the professed followers of Jesus Christ, and it is indeed painful to hear the language that falls from their lips. I feel like exclaiming in the language of the prophet, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night" for careless mortals who are unconcerned about their souls' salvation! It is seldom that I hear any Advent preaching, or have the privilege of meeting with those who are looking for the return of our absent Lord, though I do occasionally meet with the brethren at Copenhagen, a distance of four miles from this place. Under such circumstances you may be assured that it is delightful for me to hear the evidence bearing upon the speedy coming of Christ presented through the columns of your paper. I do not feel disposed to give up my blessed hope in the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; for I am rooted, grounded, and settled in the belief that the Lord will soon come and reward his faithful children, and I find in the united and harmonious testimony of God's word, a reason for my faith, immutable as the promises of Jehovah, and sure as the councils of his throne. And it is the glorious prospect of soon coming into the full possession of life and immortality that strengthens and sustains me in this hour of trial. Yes, it cheers my heart, and lifts my fainting spirits up. It enables me to glory in tribulation and to count it all joy to be persecuted for Christ's sake. I expect soon, ah! very soon, to praise God with nobler powers in never-dying strains. Yes, all the saints of God will soon meet in that land where partings will never come; in a happier and holier clime than this, where praises will echo and re-echo through the vast domain of God. Blessed be God, we are almost there.

Sister P. Benedict, Newfield, N. Y., Dec. 21st, writes:—

I, with my companion, have been readers of the Voice since its commencement, and was enabled to pay until the sickness and death of my companion; since that time it has come free, which is now about one year. I have felt it my duty for some time to let you know that I received it.

The sickness and death of my companion and little son, and the cares of a little family, numbering four, one of whom now is afflicted, has been the hindering cause why I have not paid.

I received a letter from you, bearing date Dec. 16th, and the dollar enclosed, from a kind friend that loves in deed and in truth,—may the Lord reward. I received another letter from Bro. Gates, bearing date Nov. 12th, with three dollars enclosed! may the Lord bless those dear brethren and sisters who have been enabled to administer to the wants of the poor. They have the promise that the Lord will repay, and the Savior says, 'it is more blessed to give than to receive.'

There are a few of us here who are striving to keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and to have our lamps trimmed and burning—that when Jesus who is our life shall appear, we may appear with him in glory. It was this blessed hope that supported my companion in his sickness and death, and it is this hope that has sustained me while passing through these last trials. Brother, I believe we are very near the kingdom, and although we are strangers in the flesh, I hope we shall soon form an acquaintance in the new earth.

Bro. G. Needham, Buffalo, Jan. 8th, writes:—The work of God goes on still—thirteen have been baptised in all and others desire it; others are interested and have asked our prayers. The converts appear remarkably well. They have their conflicts, which shows that it is a work of God's spirit. A brother says we should not 'put the living to sleep by preaching to them, that if they continue in their sins, they, some time or other will find a state of eternal unconscious rest!' we believe no such thing! Does not Bro. B. know it? Eternal conscious torment has not been preached here, but life and death—the 'second death'—have we put sinners to sleep? no, blessed be God! He has blessed his own truth unto salvation.

Heathen Philosophy & Modern Theology, AGAINST BIBLE TRUTH.

BY J. REEVE.

Come, Holy Spirit,—guide me while I tread
With plebeian rudeness on the classic dead;
With neither Greek nor Hebrew would I see
If Man that was Not, cannot CEASE to BE—
If, when the Body to the dust returns,
The Spirit lives, and thinks, and feels, and mourns.

God said to Adam, 'Thou shalt surely die,*
Was 'time' a part, or did his Maker lie?
Y'st shall not surely die, said one of old,
And that same evening he the fruits have told.
Was 'ye' not all, or only part of Eve?
Had God not power to take, as well as give?
"The Soul's immortal"—came from God on high."—
The soul that sinneth, it shall surely die.—
"Death is not death, but never ending pain."—
When brought to nothing, what will then remain?
As chaff, as thorns, but root and branch devour'd,
By God's destructive fire upon them pour'd.

"Material matter gives to Mind its fire—Matter dissolves, but mind cannot expire."
Go now, ye lehr'd Philosophers, and find Distinct from matter, the soul spark of mind.
If SELF-EXISTENT—why dependent be?
Why not at Ninety, as at Thirty, see?
Why, if IMMORTAL, not at first complete,
And why by age become again effete?
If each direct from heaven—could not one see
When the new being first begins to be?
Some pulpit orators attempt to show
The soul once started will not cease to grow;
That Paul is now what Gabriel was of yore,
And we may be what Paul has been before.
It may be so in some sectarian creeds—
In Shool! no one either thinks or reads.
"Yet 'tis not now what God has let us know—
But is it Philosophically so?" Prof. Bush.

Christ's seamless garment—once could whole remain,
His soul and body are now rent in twain."—
"The soul was given by God, and cannot die."
Who knows if man's spirit ascends on high.
Admit the body goes to dust again,
But that the spirit: lives and thinks is not so plain.

Were man immortal as he first was made,
He might communicate that which he had.
Man lost Eternal Life he had from heaven;
For patient doing well it may be given.
Eternal Life can in no murderer dwell.
"Death is eternal misery in Hell."
He is immortal then who never dies—
Is it the Bible, or the Man, that lies?
Misery is not health—no rest is pain—
From second death man never wakes again.

"The soul—man's immaterial spirit,
Has immortality—says Walker—in it."
Thus man from truth by others is deceived,— Joshua in Helton EVERY soul destroyed,
"Destroy, means only to destroy their sin."
Tell me the place God's presence is not in?
"God's presence and his glory all things fill."
From these destroyed—WILL THEY BE LIVING STILL? 2Thi. 9.

"The soul is happy ere the frame is dust."
The Resurrection will reward the just,
Then all the faithful God himself will own;
Then Paul, and all who love Him, gain a crown.
The death of nature is senseless sleep,
Tho' that which gave it life o'er earth yet sweep.
The dead know nothing and are not awake
Till the earth and heavens that are broke. §
Man is stripped and consumed, and where is he?
As dung he perishes—He shall not be.
"This means the body," theologians say,
Man's breath goes—His thoughts perish that same day.
"Mind is immortal," thousands gravely tell,
There is no knowledge nor device in hell.

Some say their happiness is not complete,
Till reunited soul and body meet.
With God is joy and pleasure evermore—
How can it there the rotting bones deplore?
Can that soul perish that is with its God?
Or want the rubbish from beneath the sod?
If there, its pleasure, can't be incomplete—
And, if not there, Philosophers' is a cheat.

"But Noah Webster surely must be true—
I think that Paul and Mary also knew.
"The Mary's learning might not be profound,
She saw her brother rise up from the ground.

She knew enough to know her Savior true,
But not to know that Lazarus was two;
One form angelic singing praise to God,
And one corruptible beneath the sod.
'Lazarus, come forth'—Jesus loudly said,
And Mary greets her brother from the dead.
Could not the air that Adam breathed at first,
By power Divine re-animate the dust?
When all the hope of Israel was gone,
Saw we to sinew came, and bone to bone;
Flesh came, and next a covering of skin—
But did they live without the breath within?
Were ghosts and spirits called to come below?
Or, 'Come from the four winds, O breath, and blow'
In life and vigor they arose from death,
A perfect mechanism moved by breath.
So all true Israel will the graves restore
To their possessions—to go out no more,
My servant David then their King shall be,
And I their God through all eternity.

Learning unsanctified may give false light,
And lead the scholar farther from the right,
Systems established by the good and wise,
Tho' false, but few find courage to despise.
For love of ease, or popular applause,
Man follows man more than his Maker's laws;
Forgets the maxim that was taught of old,
First to unlearn the wrong he learnt before,
To those who ask, true wisdom's freely given:
Peace here, and immortality in heaven.

Take care, ye Doctors, how with tongue or pen
You change God's true word for doctrines of men.
'Tis truth that sanctifies, 'tis truth that makes free—
You shall decide when Doctors disagree.
God's truth is plain, and he who runs may read
When disencumbered from all human creed.
'Tis truth will judge you in the last great day,
When the rocks reel, and mountains melt away.
That day is near, ten thousand tongues proclaim—
Their sound is echoed by dissonant flame.
Escape the Second Death God's good contains,
And kiss the Son while mercy yet remains.

Kingdom of the Son of Man.

BY T. R. BIRK, M. A.
FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND.

DAN. II. 35.—"And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."
44. 15.—"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof is sure."
vii. 13, 14.—"I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like unto the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion that shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."
12.—"But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, ever for ever and ever."
27.—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

II. A second lesson which may be drawn from the close of these visions, is THE TRUE STANDARD OF NATIONAL EXCELLENCE AND HONOR. There is a deceitful atmosphere in the present world, which magnifies what is perishable, and gilds what is corrupt. But when we gaze on these promises, the false glare of luxury and ambition dies away. The atheism which masks itself under a spiritual disguise, and absolves kings and rulers from all concern for Divine truth and the cause of Christ, stands revealed in its true deformity and foulness. In this mirror we see clearly that true excellence and dignity belongs only to the righteous nation, where God and his truth are enthroned in the willing allegiance of the subjects and their rulers; and kings and princes, while they rejoice in the ways of the Lord, devote all their influence to promote his glory in the salvation and blessedness of the souls intrusted to their charge.

The high standard of national dignity and holiness, revealed in these emblems, is opposed to three great counterfeits and delusions, which are all of them rife and prevalent in these last days.

These are wealth and riches, military ambition, and cold and heartless theories of political ungodliness.

In the vision of the image, when the mystic stone descends, not only the iron and clay, but the silver and the gold, are broken to pieces together. Besides the political reference, there is plainly a great moral lesson secretly conveyed. Gold and silver, and material riches, have ever been one grand object of idolatry to the nations of the world. Especially in these last days, and in our own country, foolish theories have grown up into currency and repute, built and founded on this one grand falsehood, that a man's life consisteth in the abundance of his possessions. Hence the rapid increase of collective wealth and collective misery; a hollow, feverish state of society, covered on its surface with the proudest triumphs of art and science, and yet nursing in its bosom all the volcanic elements of discord, oppression, hatred, and revolutionary rage. Hence that mournful spectacle—the first of Christian nations degraded into a bloody pioneer for the most mercenary and heartless of its own children; while seeking, for filthy lucre, to force poison into the heart of a mighty heathen empire—and even religion itself, stunted and dwarfed by the atmosphere of covetousness, too feeble to raise her voice above a faint whisper against the enormous evil. But one glance at the coming kingdom of righteousness will unmask the fearful delusion. Then, in the presence of the Holy One, will be seen the guilt of nations no less than of teachers, who run greedily after the error of Balaam, loving the wages of unrighteousness, and cannot bear to renounce a profitable crime. Their silver and their gold will then be broken to pieces together, and be found worthless as the miry clay: and on all the gains of oppression and fraud at home, or in the furthest East, it will then with shuddering be found written—"It is the price of blood." For as mercy is twice blessed, so is cold, merciless avarice, doubly cursed. In the present life it ruins ten thousand souls, while it makes the gospel of Christ to be blasphemed among the heathen; and it brings upon the guilty a fearful sentence of condemnation in the life to come.

How different is the prospect in the kingdom of God! When the silver and the gold, which the covetous have worshipped, are swept away like the chaff, other promises will begin to be fulfilled. 'The merchandize of Tyre shall be holiness unto the Lord.' The Son of David shall sit on his throne, as the friend of the poor, and the Redeemer of their souls. 'He shall live, and to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba: prayer shall be made unto him continually, and daily shall he be praised.' All the riches and wealth of happy nations shall then be consecrated to the service of God, and be diffused in ten thousand forms of kindness and mutual charity among the families of the earth.

The delusion of military ambition and warlike glory will then also be done away. 'The beast shall be destroyed and given to the burning flame.' Its prowess may have been great, its armies triumphant, its victories and conquests wonderful. The whole earth may have been 'trodden down' by it, and 'broken in pieces.' But they were the conquests, not of love, but of haughtiness and pride. They were the victories, not of goodness, but of selfish ambition. Their secret motive was the lust of dominion or the desire of vain-glory; and, in pursuit of these shadows, the living God was forgotten, His laws transgressed, and His authority despised. Therefore the culprit, with all its military greatness, is arraigned and condemned at that righteous bar, and given to the burning flame. Such is the restless spirit which threatens the peace of the world at the present hour in a neighboring country, a spirit which rejoices in the pride of military triumphs, although the wrath of God has already visited them as with the thunderbolts of heaven. But this proud spirit of revolutionary violence shall soon perish for ever. 'Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.' A nobler ambition shall then animate the children of men; while each seeks to resemble more nearly the Lord of heaven, and to urge a more successful warfare against every form of spiritual evil. All shall then be warriors, but against pride, selfishness, and sin; and the fruit of every victory will be, not the groans of slaughtered victims, but nobler attainments of grace, and a more complete reflection in every heart of the Divine blessedness and glory.

* Morally then, and literally 930 years after.
† Hell, grave, or the spirit land. ‡ Ecclesiasticus xvii. 27-31.
§ Catholic Trans. 1822.

Equally clear is the lesson which these descriptions afford, to guard the Church against national atheism, leagued with spiritual and religious democracy. Such is the doctrine which denies the lawfulness of national religion, while it sets aside all rank and gradation within the Church itself. But the hope here presented to us is widely different. When the stone has smitten the image, it becomes a great mountain. It is not the dead level of a spiritual democracy, but ordinances of royalty and righteous dominion, which will then every where prevail. For mountains are, in all Scripture, emblems of princes and sovereigns, who, from the height of superior power, shed their fertilizing streams on the people that rest, like quiet valleys, beneath their shade. Such will be, as revealed in this vision, the economy of Messiah's kingdom. No level monarchy will be found in it, but all the ranks of a well-ordered polity. Even among the saints of the resurrection, 'one star differeth from another star in glory.' Variety and sovereignty are alike impressed upon all the works of God. It is only in the desert wilderness that we find an unbroken level, one monotonous waste of sand. But far different are the features of the good land of promise. 'The spiritual, as the natural Canaan, is 'a land of hills and valleys;' and more abundantly, by this sweet interchange, 'drinketh water of the rain of heaven.' And when the predicted mountain shall fill the whole earth, the emblem implies that holiness and love will be dispensed, in beautiful gradation, and through righteous ordinances, from the supreme Ruler to the various tribes of sojourners in the lower world. The delusions of spiritual democracy and national atheism will have disappeared, along with tyranny and idolatrous superstition. For the saints of the Most High will then possess the kingdom, and the bare thought of ruling a part from the will and word of Christ will have passed away as a hateful dream of the kingdom of darkness.

A further lesson to be drawn from these predictions is the deep and surpassing interest of the Gospel narratives. There is a kingdom to be established on the ransomed earth, in which the Son of man will reign for ever. The King himself has appeared, but only for a very little season, here below. An inspired record remains, which reveals to us the thoughts, and words, and actions, during his sojourn on earth, of this everlasting King. Viewed in this connection with the coming kingdom, what a fresh interest is thrown around every narrative, and each separate verse, of these holy Gospels! Each is a seed of eternal things. Each reveals to us some maxim of wisdom, or love, or holiness, in the heart of Him who will shortly be invested, and that visibly, with universal dominion. How vast an expansion, then, will every one of these truths receive in that kingdom of God! For the same word declares to us that 'Jesus Christ is the same, yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.' When the whole earth shall be receiving the law from His mouth, and shall walk in the light of His presence, every one of those gracious sentences, or actions of holy love, will be revealing more and more, through eternal ages, their secret excellence and divine beauty. Then will be seen in all its brightness, the true blessedness of the meek, the merciful, and the pure in heart. Then will He, who is now the light of the Gentiles, be also manifestly the peculiar glory of his people Israel. The heavens will then be opened, according to His promise, and the angels of God be seen ascending and descending upon the Son of man. Every miracle will be realized in its spiritual antitype; and every parable disclose some unsuspected depth of eternal wisdom. These simple records of the Lord Jesus, now despised by the proud and the worldly-hearted, will yield to saints and archangels fresh themes of wondering meditation, when thousand upon thousand ages shall have rolled away. And thus the parable of our Lord will be fulfilled; the mustard-seed will have spread into a mighty tree, and will over-canopy with its delightful shadow a ransomed universe.

Our wisdom, then, must be to realize, even now, this intimate connection between the Gospel of our Lord and Savior, and the kingdom that is to be revealed. We may thus, by the blessing of God, be preserved from two opposite evils. There is a Judaizing and carnal tone of thought, in which the hidden glory of the cross is forgotten, and the sensible and outward elements of the Christian hope replace those, and thrust them out of the memory, which are spiritual and divine. On the other hand the Gospel itself may be turned into a mere abstraction, a string of dogmas, a dry and heartless skeleton of doctrines, from which the life has entirely passed away. But the connection suggested by this vision is a safeguard against either danger. The prospect of the visible glory will maintain its heavenly dignity and power, when we read the prophecies in the light which beams from the cross and the resurrection of our Lord. And again, the doctrines of the Gospel will be felt as living realities, when we associate them with the visible manifestation of Messiah's kingdom. The word itself will resume its original meaning, in all its delightful freshness, as 'the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.' Seen in this light, it reveals to us the person and character of the great King, the maxims of His government, the character of those who sit nearest to Him in his kingdom, the depth of His agony endured out of love to rebels, the way of recovery to His favor, the assurance to every true penitent of a place and a share in His future and eternal dominion. The cross, interpreted by the coming glory, becomes a still deeper mystery of love, and appeals to the affections of the sinner with an added emphasis of Divine power. And the hope itself of that kingdom becomes more spiritual and heavenly, when we read it in the holy light of the inspired gospels, and learn to connect it with the sufferings of our incarnate Savior. 'The Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom.' Such were the two opposite temptations in the apostolic age. The union of these two great themes of prophecy, 'the sufferings of Christ and the glory that shall follow,' is the divine and effectual remedy against either delusion. May we have grace and wisdom, in these days, to use it aright! Thus we shall be preserved alike from the snare of fanatical excitement, destructive of peace and spiritual discernment; and from that speculative and abstract faith, which strips the Gospel of its true glory, and casts aside the great hope of the Church—the coming of the Lord Jesus in the clouds of heaven.

God Only hath Immortality.

Is the popular notion of the immortality of the soul of heathen or Christian parentage? Not of the latter surely, for the good Book no where speaks of man's undying or immortal soul; this and similar terms are of heathen origin, and adopted by Papal and Protestant Doctors into their manuals and creed books, for the instruction and edification of their votaries. But the most illiterate know that man and soul are of kindred import in common conversation, and man, person or soul, are in Scripture used in the same sense. For instance, when Paul, Acts xxvii. 37 says, 'And we were all in the ship two hundred three score and sixteen souls,' he means so many men or persons. Gen. ii. 7, we read, 'And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul.' Now, it was man, this living soul, that was put into Eden to keep and dress it; but in consequence of disobeying God, he forfeited his inheritance and was doomed to toil, sorrow and death, the consequence of sin. Now mark—the sentence comprehends the whole man, the living soul so skillfully formed by the Creator. 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.' Not a word here about the ascending of the immortal soul. God only hath immortality: so Paul teaches and so we believe. But some who claim to be 'men of God,' as credited teachers, believe and preach other doctrine. Instead of exhorting sinners to repent, believe, and obey, to fear God for the hour of his judgment is near, to flee to Jesus, 'whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire'—they tell their auditors about the 'priceless jewel,' the immortal soul—describe the glories of heaven, and paint the horrors of the pit, in order to arouse and excite the feelings. Get religion, get the soul soundly converted, say they, and all will be well. True, but did the apostles make converts by such means? Did they say to the impenitent sinner, follow the maxims and customs of the world, court its perishing pleasures, and gather gear by every crooked wile—only join our beloved denomination, fight under our banner, and advocate our creed and the doctrines of our church, and all will be well now and forever? No, the facts of the gospel, viz: the death, burial, resurrection, ascension, and glorification of Jesus, the Messiah, were brought to bear on the conscience to produce conviction, and then they were pointed to that same Jesus whom they hanged on a tree, exalted to the right hand of God, a prince and a Savior, to give repentance with the remission of sins. Acts ii.—'Men and brethren,' says Peter, 'save'—what, your immortal soul? no—'save yourselves from this untoward generation.' When were their sins to be blotted out? At the times of visitation spoken of by all the prophets, when Jesus came with power and great glory, to make all things new. Acts iii.; Rev. xxii.

Now which shall we believe? the holy men who were divinely inspired to make known the will of God concerning our salvation, or the 'blind guides,' who, under a feigned character, teach pagan lore and human doctrines, instead of the doctrine of Christ and the truths of revelation? Each one must answer for himself—but on the bare word of weak, erring mortals, I can never believe that one part of man is basking in ecstatic bliss in what they call the 'spirit land,' while his body is under the dominion of death, in the damp, cold grave. Farther, immortality or eternal life is the gift of God, to them who by patient perseverance in well doing, seek for it—Rom. 2. The ancient worthies received not the promise, but they died in the hope of a better resurrection, to a heavenly country: God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. Heb. 11. Grace and truth came by Jesus, who triumphed over death, and brought life and immortality to light by the gospel. To the Samaritan woman, Jesus said, 'If thou knowest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldst have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water; whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, it shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life.' On the same theme, Paul writes: Rom. vii. 23—'For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. O the height, depth, length and breadth of the love of God!

To as many as receive Jesus, gave he power to become the sons of God. 'Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead; to an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.' 1 Pet. i. 3, 4—'To be adopted into the family of God, and have Christ in you the hope of glory,' is the highest honor the children of the kingdom can attain in this evil world. Of what we shall be we can form no adequate conceptions at present. 'Beloved,' says John, 'now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him—for we shall see him as he is.' Is not this a blessed hope? O that the wrangling sectaries would buy eye-salve from Jesus, and anoint their eyes to see it.

Finally, those who are Christ's will not be made immortal till the second advent of Jesus to our world. To look and long for it is now their duty and privilege. Soon 'the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air,' &c.—1 Thes. iv. 16, 17. 'Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things to himself.'—Phil. iii. 20, 21. 'Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.'

The Bible and its Laws.

Among all the gifts and blessings that have been bestowed upon the inhabitants of the earth, there is none so great as the Bible. None from which we derive so much instruction, and so much benefit, as from the great treasure, the Bible. It is, in itself, supreme. It has God for its author, salvation for its end, and truth without the mixture of error for its contents. From it we learn how and by whom and for what purpose the world was made, and its history for six thousand years, from its creation. From the Bible we learn how and for what purpose man was created, and his condition before he fell; what he is now, and what he must be in order to stand in the burning day. It contains the lives of men who are examples to us, and who were perfect in their generations, and whose characters shine, although their tongues for thousands of years have been locked in silence. The Bible teaches us the way, economy and terms of salvation. It teaches us to be humble, to love God supremely and to love our neighbors as ourselves.

Although the Bible contains the writings of many men, and was written at as many different times and places; yet it is a perfect unit, for they all spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,—2 Peter i. 21. Different language is used by the different writers, upon the same subject—yet they have the same meaning, and by the assistance of one we may understand the meaning of another. O! the inestimable treasure, the Bible. How little we appreciate its blessings when we enjoy them from day to day—and too much like the beasts that eat the fruit under the tree, without looking up to see from whence it came.

The Bible has been preserved by God through scenes of blood and carnage, and now its pages diffuse light and knowledge into the minds of those who are wise in the sight of God. It contains a righteous, perfect, and immutable law, and that law should govern all the inhabitants of the world, from the fact that we are accountable to God only for the sins we commit. The law that was given to the Jews as a nation, and was their schoolmaster to lead them to Christ, was not binding upon them, without the shedding of blood; neither would the law of the New Testament be binding upon us, unless blood has been shed. Christ came to fulfill that law which was binding upon the Jews as a nation, and to confirm the second, the long-promised covenant—'For he taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.' Heb. x. 9. He has given us his new law, and he has not made it binding upon us by the shedding of the blood of beasts, but he was offered a sacrifice for us. His own blood was shed to ratify the covenant and to make it of binding force upon us; and now if we are not aliens, we are bound to obey his law. Is it the duty of Christians to assist in making laws to govern men? I answer no; because it shows first, that men are dissatisfied with the law of God; and second, that there is a defect in the law of God, and that it fails to accomplish the end for which it was designed. If God's law has failed to govern those for whom it was made, is it our duty to make laws that we think will do this work? Certainly not. Then plead no longer divine authority for so doing; for if you have divine authority to make laws, then different sects of professed Christians have divine authority for their creeds and platforms, which they have made for the better government of what? the church of Christ? No, for the law of the Bible always governs that—but for the better government of sectarian, corrupt churches have these human laws been made; for such bodies never have been governed by the law of Christ, the great Head of the Church.

Kingdom of God.

It is commonly the case with men in this world, when they commence any work of importance, to have in contemplation a certain end or object—so it was with God when he created the heavens, &c.; he then had in contemplation the establishing or setting up of a kingdom for his Son Jesus Christ and followers. For proof see Col. i. 16—'For by him, (Christ) were all things created, that are in heaven and that are in the earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers—all things were created by him and for him.' Again, Matt. xxv. 31—34: 'When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory,' &c. 'Then shall the king, [when he gets the kingdom] say unto them, [his disciples] on his right hand, Come ye blessed of Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.' The question arises, when will this kingdom be set up? For an answer, see the above quotation from Matt., which teaches us that it will be set up when the Son of man comes in his glory, and all the holy angels with him—Dan. xi. 44; vii. 9—14. Rev. xi. 15. It is very plain to be seen from the above quotations, that this kingdom is not to be set up until the second advent of Christ.

To erase from the Bible the doctrine of the advent would destroy the spirit or soul of the Bible. But why so? I answer, in the same way that we would destroy ardent spirits by extracting the alcohol. In both cases we should take away the spirit, and what remains, in every sense of the word, would be worthless. For example, let us deprive Paul of the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and where would we leave him? why in his first epistle to the Corinthians, xv. 20—23, he says that the righteous are to be raised from the dead at the second coming of Christ, and in ver's. 51—54, he tells us that they shall then be made immortal, incorruptible, gain the victory over death, &c.; and if we take from him the second advent, we leave him without a resurrection, immortality, incorruption, or victory over death, and hence, as he says in ver. 19, with a hope in Christ in this life only, and thus make him of all men most miserable. But place before him the second advent, and then he has a hope of receiving a crown at the appearing of the Lord; 2 Tim. iv. 6—8; and his conversation will be in heaven, from whence he will look for the Savior, and the Lord Jesus Christ, to change his vile (mortal) body, and fashion it like his (Christ's) glorious (immortal) body. Phil. iii. 20, 21.

WM. STEWART.

Dewittville, Dec. 21, 1846.

Do your Duty.

And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not—Gal. vi. 9. At harvest time the fruits of the soil amply rewards the patient toil of the husbandman—at the end of the world the harvest of the earth will be reaped. Then, says Jesus, shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father! The reaping time is near. O let us be humble, and keep our hands clean and our heart pure. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God! Straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to life eternal: ask for the good old paths and walk therein, and God will keep us by his mighty power, till Jesus our Deliverer come. Expect tribulation as thy sure lot, brother, but be of good cheer, Jesus has overcome the world: read his promise, Rev. iii. 21—'To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne.' Blessed prospect! unequalled honor! Well may the saints be called the excellent of the earth. The world knoweth them not, but the Lord keeps them as the apple of his eye; under the worst circumstances the consistent Christian can never be miserable—under trouble, trials and reproaches, he may indeed exclaim, 'If in this life only we have hope we are of all men most miserable.' But hope points beyond this vale of tears to the better land, where the inhabitants shall no more say, I am sick, and the light afflictions which are but for a moment, impart a keener relish for the coming glory.

In fine, the wondrous visions of inspired seers, the precepts and example of Jesus, the rich developments of love and mercy contained in the writings of the apostles, and a good conscience which is the best estate, impart heart-felt joy under every circumstance. Eye hath not seen nor ear heard neither hath it entered into heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by his spirit.

Time of the Second Advent. NO. V.

Having shown in our previous numbers that the word of God does not sustain the first two hypotheses under consideration, viz; that no knowledge of the advent being near can be had, and its opposite, that the definite time, or day and hour may be known; we now proceed to show that the third hypothesis is correct; namely, that near the time, as near as 'nigh at hand,' Luke xxi. 31, or 'nigh at the doors,' Mar. xiii. 21, or 'near, even at the doors,' Matt. xxiv. 33, is clearly and unequivocally taught in the discourse of the Savior on the time of his advent, as recorded by three of the evangelists. A brief reference to the records of these faithful historians will be sufficient to settle this point.

We will look at the very familiar account given in Matt. xxiv. Having just discoursed freely on the signs which were to precede his coming, in verse 32 the Savior says, 'Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh.' Here we candidly enquire, why did the Son of God introduce this simple parable here? a parable about the meaning of which a child seemingly could not be mistaken. Was it to perplex the mind of the humble enquirer after truth, who in obedience to other parts of his Lord's discourse, might be found watching to know when his return would be nigh? Certainly not, for the Savior never deceives any one especially his confiding children: it was given for their instruction. Was it to teach his disciples that they could know definitely the time of his advent? This cannot be: for he immediately adds, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man, &c., and more than once plainly repeats the same sentiment before closing his discourse. Surely he has not designedly, or in any way contradicted himself. Was this parable introduced to teach us that we can know nothing about the time of the advent of our Lord? No: for then the signs would all be superfluous, to say the least of them, and the explanation of the parable would contradict this view of the matter. What then was the design of the simple parable of the fig-tree? Let the Son of God answer; and let it be the highest pleasure of finite, imperfect and greatly blinded and erring mortals, humbly to bow to his infallible exposition. Hear it—

"So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that he is near even at the door." v. 33.

Mark xiii. 29, reads, "So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the door."

Luke xxi. 31 reads, "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established, saith the word of the Lord. We have presented three inspired witnesses to prove the correctness of the last hypothesis, viz: 'nigh at the door,' or 'nigh at hand.' They speak in perfect harmony, and directly to the point. Their testimony is plain and may be easily understood by the unlearned, the smallest capacity, and even the child, who has in a limited degree begun to exercise his faculties to know the truth. Therefore this position is sustained by testimony as infallible as the throne of God. For in view of it said the Savior, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.' Matt. xxiv. 35. The very same words are repeated in Mark xiii. 31 and Luke xxi. 33.

The testimony under consideration is direct, positive and immutable; and we should remember that the nature of the case will not admit of the existence of any counter testimony. The position is either true or false; there is no medium ground which we can take. If the proposition, nigh at the door, is a Scriptural one, then no conflicting proposition can be sustained by that perfect book. To say that the Savior did not fully or definitely define the position he designed to have his children take on the time of the advent, is questioning the perfection of his teaching. To say that this position is not the most positive and definite position the Bible anywhere warrants, is indirectly charging the Son of God with leaving the impression on the minds of his children that the precise time could not be known, when in fact it could be known, and is actually revealed in other parts of the inspired word. This never will do. To sustain the divine character of the Savior we must admit the perfections of his teaching, on the time of his advent, as well as on all other subjects on which he has discoursed. We fully believe that his teaching is perfect, and lays the sure foundation, or is the chief corner-stone on which the whole glorious fabric of the time of the second advent securely rests. It is the position, the only true position, the Bible position on time, and which is harmoniously, and infallibly sustained by all the numerous evidences which relate to this momentous question; among which the prophetic numbers hold a very conspicuous rank.

We deem it proper to remark here, to quiet the fears of some, and remove the prejudices of others, that the prophetic numbers never appeared to us more perfect and harmonious in their testimony on the time of the advent than now; they speak with divine certainty on this deeply interesting question; and in perfect harmony with the numerous other infallible witnesses in the case. But these things, the Lord will, we shall notice at a proper time, and we trust to the full satisfaction of all who will abide the decision of stubborn facts, and the immutable truths of the word of the Lord. But before doing this, all will at once see the importance of first settling this question, viz: What is the Bible position on the time of the advent?

To many, this question is already satisfactorily settled, in this and the preceding numbers on this subject. But with others it is not yet settled; we shall therefore say more next week on this matter. We say with some this question is not yet settled; we presume they think it is, but on a moment's reflection they will see that it is not. They have no position on time, only 'definite time,' but are not certain on what hour, day, week, month, or even year, positively, to fix that definite time. This is just no position at all; or is the most indefinite one which we can take, or is too indefinite, too uncertain, to constitute a sure foundation of gospel faith. True faith cannot take hold on such a proposition—it cannot stand erect, and with holy confidence give the reason of its hope on such a foundation as this. No no, the immutable God has laid in Zion a foundation for the faith and hope of his children to rest upon, even in these last days, without the fear or even the possibility of being confounded; and for which we do and will bless his ever adorable name. The greater and more glorious the subject, the more clear, positive, and infallibly secure is the position. The doctrine of the advent is the cap-stone of the divine fabric of man's eternal redemption, and most certainly must be clearly revealed, definitely taught in the Book of books, the Bible. In short, a position, a definite and infallible position on this whole question, must be clearly revealed in that perfect Book. And as already stated, our next labor will be to fully and indisputably settle the question, what is that position.

The Lord give us wisdom to rightly understand this subject, that our faith may stand not in the wisdom of men, but in the power, the truth of God, and that we may be ready to meet our Lord with joy at any moment. Never have we viewed the importance of strictly heeding the Savior's often repeated warnings to watch, to be ready, more than now.

Questions and Answers.

A correspondent, who kindly furnishes his wife with the reading of our paper, but is not a believer in the leading doctrine it advocates, in a letter containing a remittance, makes the following friendly enquiries, which we separate for the convenience of answering them:

(1.) "I should like to ask what you expect to accomplish by publishing your paper?"

We expect to please our Lord, and receive the reward he will give at his appearing, which will be eternal life in his everlasting kingdom. We expect also to do some good to others; the amount however we pretend not to calculate; this, the great day will soon decide, and we joyfully wait the final decision.

(2.) "Has the course you have taken convinced infidels, or made infidels?"

It has convinced some of their errors, and of the truth of revelation. Many, by the truths we advocate, have been led to renounce their infidelity, and are now rejoicing in the blessed hope of soon meeting their once rejected but now admired Lord. We know not that this doctrine has made one infidel. It is the very antidote of infidelity, and consequently produces faith, unwavering, saving faith, instead of unbelief, in all who candidly, prayerfully and faithfully examine it.

(3.) "Has it been calculated to unite Christians, or make divisions among them?"

If you mean that the great mass who belong to the, or a church are Christians, then this truth has served to make divisions among them, just as the truth has always separated the true Christian or child of God from the nominal, worldly and lifeless professors of religion. But if you mean just what the Scriptures recognise as a Christian, viz; one who loves the appearing of Christ, then we readily say that this glorious truth has served more strongly if possible to unite them. We know not one instance where it has divided such Christians. All who have truly loved the appearing of their long absent Lord, though they could not endorse the entire theory, especially definite time, nevertheless have virtually said, I hope your theory will prove true, I will not contend with you nor separate from you; for I love the appearing of my Lord, and therefore have no reason to be grieved with my brethren who believe his coming will take place soon, or at a definite date.

(1.) "Do you suppose that the speculation about Christ's second coming, stating the time of the advent, &c., has been according to the requirements of God, and the good of souls?"

Leaving the word 'speculation' out of the question, as a general remark we unhesitatingly give an affirmative answer. We have not a doubt of this proclamation being what is symbolized, in Rev. xiv., by the angel flying through the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach to every nation, tongue, and kindred; saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come. Consequently the general proclamation of the time of the Lord's coming has been 'according to the requirements of God.' Relative to its having been for 'the good of souls,' scores, yes, thousands have borne witness that it has. It has snatched them from that fearful destruction into which they were about to be plunged by their sins, and has made them humble, holy, and joyful Christians; and who are now blessed with the priceless hope of soon being made immortal and eternally happy in the kingdom of God. Certainly, this is doing souls good.

The 'speculation about Christ's second coming,' and setting the precise definite time for the occurrence of that event, we think have not been according to the will of God, and of course not for his glory nor the good of souls. But the speculations of the unwise and imprudent, and mistakes of the wise and prudent, should not, dear sir, be made the criterion by which we decide whether this is or is not the cause of God. The best of causes, and indeed every good cause, would have been abandoned if their true merits had been decided by the faults and errors of some of their advocates. Our prayerful and diligent inquiry should be, not what do the ignorant, over zealous, and mistaken ones say and do, but what is truth, and what must I do to obey it, possess its spirit, and receive the eternal reward it promises to all who are made free by it. May this be the portion of our friend I. W. M.—

State of the Cause.

We rejoice to hear of the in-gathering of souls into the church, in various parts of our country. But oh, how different the work from that which was witnessed every where but a few brief years since. Then the great mass were awakened to a solemn sense of their want of preparation to meet the coming judgment, and very many turned unto the Lord. But now, comparatively, a mere fraction are moved by these things, and but a small portion of that fraction become sound converts to the truth. But blessed be the Lord that a few, here and there, in these perilous times are being sealed we trust, unto the day of redemption. The work soon will be over, when the Master will come and reward every one as his work shall be. Let a knowledge of the shortness of the time we shall have to labor, and comparatively the little we can do, stimulate us to untiring faithfulness in doing what we can to save our fellow-boys from ruin.

God does, and will, while time continues, bless the faithful labors of his people. This truth has recently been and now is being demonstrated in the salvation of souls in quite a good many places from which we have accounts, where our brethren labor. In Buffalo a good work has been witnessed. At the last accounts from there, thirteen had followed the Savior in baptism, and quite a number more were expected to attend to the same ordinance soon. Others were seeking the Lord—and the church, as a matter of course, was in a good condition.

In this city a few have recently been induced to express their desires and good resolutions to seek the great salvation; and we hope one or more, has been justified by faith in Christ. Bro. Needham's recent labors with us, though he is still very feeble and not free from the ague and fever, were attended with a rich blessing to many who heard him. The Lord restore him to health again, and make him a blessing to the cause wherever his lot may be cast, is the fervent prayer of many.

In short, we have not a discouraging word to say about this best of all causes. We fully believe it is the Lord's own cause, and that he will soon justify it to the eternal joy of all who love it sincerely, but to the confusion of all who oppose it. We must say however, that many of us need faithfully to be admonished to certain duties, a few of which we will here name: 1st. It is our duty to shake off our unbelief, and go to work in good earnest for the salvation of souls, until the Lord shall call us from labor to reward. Let us beware lest unbelief and neglect of duty on this point shut us out of the kingdom, among the idlers of this world! 2d. It is duty now in a special manner, to guard against becoming divided in our feelings and acts, on the account of a difference of sentiment. We see that some of our good brethren are not yet fully free from sectarian selfishness. If they do not get rid of it soon, it will not only disqualify them for receiving the truth, but will bring at least leanness and condemnation to their own souls, and divisions among the children of God. O beware, beware on this point. 3d. It is our duty at this time, to see that our faith, (not an excited opinion) on the time of the advent, stands not in the dark reasonings and unqualified assumptions of any man, but in the Word—the plain, unsophisticated word of the Lord. See to these things faithfully—obey Christ in all things—and when he shall appear he will give you a crown of glory that fadeth not away!

Bro. Gross on the Time.

As Bro. Gross has kindly requested us to copy his article on the time of the advent, published in a recent number of the 'Advocate,' we feel it our duty as kindly to inform him why we cannot comply with his request. We think him not a safe expositor of the word of the Lord. And now we will kindly tell Bro. Gross why we think so. In the article he wishes us to copy we find the following exposition of a part of Matt. xxiv. Speaking of the 'day and hour,' he says:—

"But of that day and hour (now) knoweth no man, no, not the angels, but my Father only." Although it was not then known by men or angels, but was sealed up and closed till the time of the end, did he contradict the words to Daniel, that in the time of the end, many should run to and fro and knowledge should be increased, and the wise understand? Certainly not; but the Savior qualifies the sense by making an exception to the text, by saying, 'But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.' The 'but' or exception and explanation, absolutely refers to what had already been spoken, which was about knowing the day and hour—hence the knowledge of the day and hour will be at Christ's coming, as it was in the days of Noah. How was it then? God revealed the set time, and the righteous understood it and prepared for the event—but not so the wicked—they 'knew not' until the flood came and took them all away."

The Savior does not say that it will be in every respect at his coming, as it was in the days of Noah, and we have no right to add to his words, or extend the comparison, as Bro. Gross has, beyond what the Savior has done, and in a manner calculated to contradict him. The sentiment evidently is this, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man' &c. 'But [instead of knowing, it will be] as it was in the days of Noah.' How? Besides eating and drinking, a knowledge of the day and hour will not be had: for they 'knew not' in the days of Noah; 'so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.' Does this relate to the wicked only? So Bro. Gross interprets; but the Savior says differently. In the very next verses he says, 'Then shall two be in the field—and two at the mill,—the one shall be taken and the other shall be left. Watch, therefore; [who watch?—Christians, of course, who will be in the field or at the mill. Why watch?] for ye know not what hour [or day and hour] your Lord doth come.' The same doctrine is most clearly taught in the parables, and their explanations, of the thief and the ten virgins. And O that we may not be so blinded by a favorite theory of our own as not to see and understand the truth on this momentous subject. This will never be the happy lot of any one until he becomes fully willing to abide by the plain word of the Lord.

Short Expositions.

Please when you have time, to reconcile 1 Thes. iv. 17—'caught up to meet the Lord in the air,' with Job xiv. 12—'riseth not till the heavens be no more.' And explain Rev. xi. 12; also xii. 7—12.

We think 'heavens,' in Job xiv. 12, has reference to the old heavens, or the heavens which now are, which will be shaken, rolled together, and pass away at the coming of the Lord. The work of dissolution will commence, when the Lord riseth up terribly to shake the earth and to shake the powers of heaven. Then instantly, the righteous will be raised, changed, and caught up to meet the Lord in the air, the new or purified, or heavenly air, atmosphere, or heavens which will surround the Savior and his heavenly train. Hence Job and Paul harmonize on this subject.

Rev. xi. 12, we think symbolically speaks of the exaltation of the two witnesses, the Old and New Testaments, after they had been rejected by Infidel France three years and a half. Rev. xii. 7—12 symbolically speaks of the conflicts and purity or separation from worldly policy of Christianity in its early stages. The persecutions of the church by pagan Rome; the apostasy of the church, or her entering upon her wilderness state, &c. &c.

This we consider rather an imperfect expression of our opinion, than an exposition of the texts under consideration. This opinion however, we feel quite confident, had we time to do it now, could be shown to be according to the word of the Lord.

WEST INDIA MISSION.—Those who may wish to assist in furthering the objects of this mission, will send their free-will offerings to Wm. Ide, 111 Wall street, N. Y.

A lengthy letter from Bro. P. Livingston, bearing date, St. Johns, Antigua, W. I., is received, and we regret that it is so written, and on such thin paper, that we cannot well read it. A similar difficulty attends Bro. Mansfield's letter, received at the same time. We have however made out to decipher his so as to publish it. A little care on the part of correspondents, in this respect, would not only save us hours and hours of painful labor, but would prevent mistakes in their communications when published, and secure them an earlier insertion in our columns.

Expositions of certain portions of scripture have recently been called for by quite a number of our correspondents. We will attend to them all in their order of being received, and as soon as we can and not neglect other more important duties. The general wants of the whole body must not be neglected for individual gratification.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM BRO. A. FERGUSON.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—I see there is a number of able pens that write on the subject of time; I think very little more can be said on that subject, and if time was not revealed in the Bible by the prophetic periods and the signs given by our Savior, there would be very little inquiry in this generation or any other. I see R. W. Wells bears heavy and confident that the 1260 and 1290 days or years in Daniel, the 12th chapter, ended in 1801. The British historian, Sir Walter Scott, says that the Pope's wings were clipped and his locks shorn at that time; but Thiers, the French historian of that day, (who is still living) says it was about the last of May, 1802, when the treaty was ratified, which makes the 45 years or 1335 days, end the last of next May. Examine for yourself.—Thiers is as likely to be right as Walter Scott.

As for the advent cause around here, those that have a thorough knowledge of the Bible and history and the fulfillment of prophetic periods, and a belief that God has magnified his word, are as firm as ever—but the different sects are as indifferent, unbelieving and careless in inquiring if it is the truth of God's word, as the Jews were at the first advent, in the land of Palestine—and I view it as a fulfillment of the sign given by our Savior, 'Shall I find faith on earth when I come again?'

I think when I look back half a century on the world, we have lived in an age of wonders, such as the world never saw—and even the second advent cause, if we are far from the mark, will be to me the greatest wonder. Nothing but a power omnipotent can awake the priesthood; they still continue to preach a temporal millennium—the return of the carnal Jews, (to me mere dogmas): look in Jeremiah xxiii. 39, 40; compare that with the awful denunciations uttered by our Savior two days before his crucifixion, on the city and nation of the Jews. If we are in error, why don't the great, the learned and the wise set us right? If you ask any of the watchmen what of the night, they can tell you no more about it than a Hindoo or a Mahomedan Priest.

I am led to believe that the world has seen the last sign our Savior gave: 'The sea and the waves roaring,' except the sign of the Son of man; what that is I cannot tell, unless it is his personal appearance.

May that gracious, glorious Savior own you and me, and all who love and long for his appearing, is the sincere desire and prayer of your brother in Christ, ALEX. FERGUSON.

Charlton, Dec. 29th, 1846.

West India Mission.

ST. JOHN'S, ANTIGUA, W. I., Nov. 1846.

Dear Bro. Marsh:—Amid the multiplicity of engagements which demand my time, I remember your request to write, and will write a few words now with the promise of a longer letter soon. I have now preached seven times to the people and can form some estimate of the effect of our efforts, and I must say that if I ever had reason to be encouraged with the hope of doing good by presenting the truth, I have at present. We have a very candid and intelligent audience from evening to evening, and hear of some cases of awakening. Prejudice has fled away from many like the clear light before the sun, and at the close of each discourse men seem compelled to acknowledge that the truth has been preached. A Wesleyan minister said after the close of a sermon preached to consider the objections against knowing about the time of the Savior's coming—'Such preaching will do no harm, I hope it may do much good.'

Our health is still good: Mrs. Mansfield had a slight fever, which was speedily subdued by the water-cure treatment of the wet-sheet, &c., and she is now as well as usual. My health has never been better I think in any climate, and I trust God will still protect us and use us here for His glory.

If I may judge of my duty from the liberty God gives in its performance, I think I am now in its path. I have seldom and perhaps never enjoyed more freedom in speaking the truth, for which I am grateful to God, and pray for a continuance of God's favor. 'He that winneth souls is wise,' saith the Lord, and I feel desirous to be among that number, and trust some souls will be won over to Christ by our efforts; I feel that God's blessing is upon us, and I do think His truth will be approved and blessed.

What more shall be done in this island and others? This depends upon funds, as our expenses are heavy, even in the plain way in which we live, as all provisions with the exception of fruits and vegetables, come from the United States. Nothing would induce me to stay here but a sense of duty; there is nothing here which forms an equivalent for our varied climate, numerous productions, beautiful scenery, and especially Christian society, and sympathy in religious matters. But I am willing to stay and labor so long as God indicates duty, but I assure you my heart's pulsations are quickened when I think of my native land, my kindred and my dear brethren in the Lord.

We felt that the mission was an experiment at first—we now feel that it is a successful one to some extent. The solemn feeling which has been induced in many by this truth and the eagerness manifested by others to hear indicates a blessing.

Dear brethren, if you feel that as God's stewards you have anything to do in this mission, do it promptly, as we must soon return unless remittances are received from America. I feel confident God will overrule in this matter. I know I have given myself to do His will, and therefore he will direct.

With much love to all the dear saints,

L. DELOS MANSFIELD.

LETTER FROM BRO. C. R. GRIGGE.

Bro. Marsh:—I have thought that a few words upon Charity, might not be altogether unprofitable at this point of time, as I see our good brethren are agitating the subject of the state of the dead and final destiny of the wicked; and were it in his power, the devil would make it the rock upon which to split the little flock, whose it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom; therefore we need to have fervent charity among ourselves, lest there should arise a root of bitterness, &c., thereby many be defiled. If Charity or love characterize the productions of our labors and researches after the truth of God's Bible, and is there breathed forth, in the spirit of meekness and Christian forbearance, and flowing from a heart full of God and his blessed Christianity, cannot fail to have its designed and desired effect upon the heart of the Christian. Tradition has caused us all hours of bitter reflection, and it has required a mighty struggle to leap its towering walls and land upon the truth of God. It has been thus from the very commencement of our advent history. We were taught to believe there was to be a time of peace and safety prior to the coming of our King, when all would know the Lord from the least to the greatest. We now see from the word of God, that it is a fable of these last days forged by the devil, to ruin souls. The return of the carnal Jew is another of the Syren songs of this degenerate race, prompted by Satan to beguile unstable souls, and drag its multitudes down the popular current and stream of time, to people the regions of dark damnation and
