“He That Shall Come Will Come”

By Dr. G. H. Stieglitz

THE coming of the Lord Jesus Christ the second time is the prominent, if not the central, doctrine of the Bible. From the day that God promised that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head to the last word in the Book—“Even so, come, Lord Jesus”—the eyes of the faithful have been fixed on the future. All that is needed to prove that the Savior is coming again is the acceptance of the authority of the Holy Scriptures. The importance of God's thought of the second coming of Christ is manifested in the fact that this glorious event is mentioned three hundred eighteen times in the two hundred sixty chapters of the New Testament. Some one has said that this doctrine is mentioned once in every twenty-five verses from Matthew's gospel to the Revelation. The greater part of the Old Testament predictions are concerned about His second advent.

All believers in the Scriptures hold to some doctrine of the Lord's return. As to the time and manner of His coming, they differ. Concerning the great need of Christ's coming there is perfect agreement. Mankind is today floundering about, sadly in need of leadership in the affairs of the race. There is hardly a voice or personality around which men can rally with any degree of faith. On every hand, the world is groping in the shadows, crying out for infallible leadership. But among the sons of men there is neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regard. The world's greatest need is the return of God's Christ to rescue His own from the wreck of the world system and to establish the government of Heaven in the earth.

It is my great privilege to remind the friends of Israel that the several needs of the race can be satisfied only when the Redeemer returns. He must return. There are emergencies that call for Jesus to come again. I will enumerate a few of the most outstanding.

He that shall come will come to fulfill Old Testament prophecy. It is quite obvious to the thoughtful student of God's Word that the first advent of Jesus Christ did not exhaust the prophecies concerning Jesus' ministry in the earth. Many of the Old Testament predictions remain to be fulfilled. Some time ago, a precious tract fell into my hands, entitled, “Prophecies of Centuries Fulfilled in a Day.” Twenty-five Old Testament prophecies bearing on the betrayal, trial, death and burial of our Savior are compiled from the Scriptures. They were uttered by many voices at different times during five hundred years. These all were literally fulfilled within twenty-four hours on the day of His crucifixion. There were many Rejoice thou weary one,

Thy toil will soon be o'er;
A little while and thou wilt stand

Does poverty press hard?
Do troubles throng thee round?
Does sickness waste thy frame?

other prophecies concerning Christ's first advent fulfilled, but there remain yet many predictions concerning His ministry unfulfilled. Jesus said, “Not one jot or tittle shall in any wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.”

Secondly—He that shall come will come to make good His own testimony.

The grandest fact in history is that Jesus Christ, God's Son, has been in the world. The greatest event prophesied for the future is that Jesus is (Continued on page 9)

The Editor's Prayer

WE WOULD thank Thee, our Father, for the privilege of serving Thee and of being associated with Thy Son in the great and holy task of saving men from sin. We realize that no sacrifice can be too great on our part, if made on behalf of those for whom Christ died. To know that we have been the humble instruments in the divine hands to carry the message of salvation to a dying world is reward enough for all the effort we may put forth, and yet we know that in addition to the spiritual satisfaction we experience today there awaits us an eternal reward to be received when the Master comes. Amen.

The Roman Symbol

THE earliest form of the so-called "Apostles' Creed" of which we have any definite knowledge is the Roman Symbol, which is said to have been in use in the Church of Rome before the middle of the second century. "The baptismal formula, as we find it in Matthew, was early expanded into a brief statement of fundamental truths. As thus enlarged it was repeated by the candidates for baptism and served as a basis of preliminary instruction," writes Dr. G. P. Fisher in the History of Christian Doctrine.

The antiquity of this creed not only adds to its interest from a historical standpoint, but it provides us with a reasonably accurate account of what the church taught as especially important in the second century. Of course the mere antiquity of the symbol does not ensure its reliability or place upon it the seal of divine authority. The importance of the fact of its early origin lies in this, that the closer we get to the period of the apostles the less likely we are to find ourselves entangled in a net of error.

The original Roman Symbol as nearly as can be determined was as follows: "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, and in Christ Jesus His only-begotten Son, our Lord, who was born of the Holy Spirit and the Virgin Mary, was crucified under Pontius Pilate and was buried, on the third day He rose from the dead, ascended into Heaven, sitteth at the right hand of the Father, whence He will come to judge the quick and the dead; and in Holy Spirit, the Holy Church, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the body. Amen."

As to its purpose, according to Dr. Fisher, the creed

"served as a basis of preliminary instruction" for those contemplating baptism. When thus used it was a "symbol" of what was required of a Christian in the way of belief. It was not intended as an encyclopedia of religious truth, or even as a compendium of all that a Christian must believe in order to be saved. It was not originally used as a test of fellowship, but simply as a brief synopsis of the more important elements of belief.

In later ages the creed lost much of its value through the false interpretations which an apostate church found it necessary to place upon it, that its teaching might be made to harmonize with newly introduced heathen philosophies.

The creed became still more obnoxious to all real lovers of the Bible when its supporters not only grossly misrepresented its teaching, but established it as a standard of faith, placing it upon a par with the Scriptures. Such an idea was wholly foreign to the purpose of its compilers, and would have been extremely repugnant to them; for they looked upon the creed not as a fetter to bind the consciences of men and to limit their growth in knowledge, but as a protecting wall to keep out the wolves of pernicious error, which even then were endeavoring to creep into the fold of God from all sides.

Moved by the fear of appearing to establish a human standard in the place of the Bible, the only God-given authority in matters pertaining to spiritual things, the Church of God as a denomination has consistently refused to adopt any statement of belief that could be construed as a law governing fellowship in the body of Christ. At the same time it has found it expedient, and practically necessary at times, to compile an outline of belief that would express in concrete form the basic elements of its teaching. Such statements as here suggested have been issued in the past by nearly all of the state conferences as well as by many local congregations.

Some twenty-five years ago Iowa and Illinois joined in sending forth such a brief analysis of their belief which was published in the annual year book issued by the two conferences. And at the first general conference of the Church of God, held in Philadelphia in 1886, a similar statement was prepared which appeared for many years in the upper right-hand corner of the old RESTITUTION. But that these statements were to be used as standards by which fellowship was to be determined was as far from the thought of the compilers as such an idea was foreign to that of the authors of the Apostles' Creed.

TRINE-IMMERSION

By Elder Harry A. Sheets

OUR subject should not be confused with triune-immersion. There is quite a difference between the two. Trine-immersion is that form that requires three immersions to constitute one baptism. Triune-immersion is a term that means one immersion in the three names, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. We hope to deal with triune immersion in a later article.

It is thought by many that the earliest form of baptism was trine, and that single immersion was a development of later Christianity. In fact, Mr. Thurman (a trine-immersionist) declares that single immersion was introduced by Thomas Munzer in March, 1552. He also adds that one immersion as baptism was "unknown on earth before the year 1552." This strong assertion seems to be contrary to the facts given to us in early church histories, and is not in agreement with the writings of one who declares that single immersion came into practice about four hundred years after the beginning of the Christian era.

The New Standard Bible Dictionary (Ed. 2, Page 94) reads "When exactly the trinitarian form arose we do not know." Encyclopedia Britannica (Ed. 14, Vol. 3, Page 82) states: "Everywhere in the oldest sources it is stated that baptism takes place 'in the name of Jesus.' For the first time in the comparatively late final chapter of Matthew's gospel the command to baptize with the trinitarian formula (in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit) is put into the mouth of Jesus." It is evident from those two authorities that single immersion "in the name of Jesus" is not questioned but that any other form or practice is questioned.

Basil, who died in 381 A. D., wrote: "The Scriptures say, 'Go ye, teach and baptize,' and tradition adds, baptize by trine-immersion." Basil, with other Greeks, held that tradition, expounded by councils and bishops, was of equal authority with the Scriptures, so it is not surprising that he adds: "And if any minister or presbyter shall administer baptism, not by three dippings, but one, let him be punished by deprivation." His statement would prove that single immersion was known prior to 381 A. D. He also admits that trine-immersion was added to the Scriptures by tradition.

Tertullian (in about A. D. 200) instructed his followers as follows: "When we are going to enter the water, and a little before, in the church under the hand of the chief minister, we solemnly profess that we disown the devil and his pomp and his angels. Hereupon we are thrice immersed, making a somewhat ampler pledge than the Lord appointed in the gospels. Then when we have been acknowledged as children of the church, we taste first of all a mixture of milk and honey, and from that day we refrain from the daily bath for a whole week." Thus Tertullian admits that trine-immersion is an addition to the scriptural instruction.

Mr. Robinson, in his History of Baptism, says that "Mons. Daille, a writer of several centuries ago, proves by unquestionable authority that trine-immersion was first mentioned at the close of the second or beginning of the third century." He also states that "Basil, Jerome, Gregory, Nysson, and others pretended at first that it was an apostolic tradition." (Page 514.)

Mr. Robinson, in writing of the many formulas and ceremonies performed by the early Catholic and Protestant churches states: "There is no mention (in the New Testament) of any of the ceremonies which modern churches have affixed to baptism; no consecration of water, no sprinkling, no use of oils and unguents, no sponsors, no kneeling in the water, no trine-immersion, no catechumen state, no giving a name, no renunciation of a demon, none of the innumerable additions which, under the pretense of adorning, have obscured the glory of this heavenly institute." (Page 49.)

The contention between those who favored single immersion and those who favored trine-immersion became so great that the Council of Carthage, A. D. 256, tried to settle the matter by taking the following action: "The true doctrine of the Holy Mother, the Catholic Church, has always been with us, and especially in the article of baptism and trine-immersion wherewith it is celebrated."

The question is sometimes asked just why trine-immersion was introduced. This is answered by Clement of Alexandria (second century): "Ye were conducted to a bath just as Christ was carried to the grave, and was thrice immersed to signify the three days of His burial." Trine-immersion is now practiced for a different purpose.

A further contention for trine-immersion is the fact that baptizo is a frequentive verb. A frequentive verb is one that requires repeated action, like walking or rowing. We agree that many of the Greek verbs ending in "zo" are frequentive verbs, but Greek verbs cannot be reduced to a common rule any more than can English verbs. The use of the verb baptizo in God's inspired Word should be a divine interpretation of its use. We cite the following uses of the word: Jesus, in speaking to His disciples, said: "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." This was fulfilled ten days later when "there

“O YE OF LITTLE FAITH”

PART 3

By C. E. Randall

“And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?”—Matthew 14:31.

THE third usage of the rebuke, “O thou of little faith,” is called forth because of doubt. “Wherefore didst thou doubt?” Peter doubted the power of Jesus, or at least the word of Jesus, when he saw the boisterousness of the wind and sea. The professing Christian gets into many difficult and trying circumstances because he doubts the Word and power of God. No matter what kind of peril you are in, if Jesus has promised to protect and deliver you, do not question or doubt. He will do that which He has promised.

Eve in the garden of Eden doubted God and believed the serpent. The penalty is clearly in evidence. Oh, the awful price of a doubt!

The children of Israel doubted the power and promises of God that He would and could deliver the land flowing with milk and honey from the giants that possessed it and give it to them. Their doubt dug their graves in the wilderness. Oh, the price of a doubt!

Moses and Aaron, the great deliverers and leaders, triumphed before the courts of Pharaoh, valiantly followed the cloud and pillar of fire and at the head of their great people, viewed from the mount the borders of the land they were seeking, but were not permitted to enter because of doubt. Oh, the price of a doubt! Numbers 20:12.

When Naaman went to the prophet of God for healing and had received his instructions for deliverance from his curse of leprosy, doubt seized him, and had it not been for the reasoning influence of the servant he would have returned home without the blessing—all because of doubt. Salvation from his sickness necessitated his changing from doubt to belief.

How many blessings are being lost by the children of God due to doubt! Many people get near the border land of salvation but doubt the need of taking certain steps and unless some one causes them to change their minds from doubt to belief they must needs bear their leprosy of sin. Oh, the price of a doubt!

Nebuchadnezzar doubted the verity of the prediction that “all nations that forget God” shall be turned into hell. (Psalm 9:17.) The experiences of all godless nations have proven the statement true and Nebuchadnezzar realized it when he “ate grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles’ feathers.”—Daniel 4:33. This world-ruler was dethroned from his glorious kingdom, sank to the basest of surroundings, because he doubted the sovereignty of God. Oh, the price of a doubt!

Peter doubted that he would thrice deny the Master as the Lord had said. But ere the crowing of the cock, he who had doubted the knowledge and word of the Master had literally fulfilled the prediction. Oh, the price of a doubt! A trail of woe, disappointment and ruin has followed all who have doubted the Word of God. “He that doubteth is damned.”—Rom. 14:23. It is an easy thing to doubt, but a very serious and dangerous thing to do. There seems to be a growing amount of doubting in these latter days: doubting the divine sonship of Jesus; doubting the miracles He performed; doubting the inspiration of portions of Scripture, even whole books; doubting the reality and literality of the resurrection; doubting the necessity of knowing the truth. “I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.”—1 Timothy 2:8.

“O ye of little faith,” why do ye doubt?

To DOUBT

- God is to deny Him;
- leads away from God;
- destroys faith and trust;
- is evidence of lack of faith;
- may be popular, but is not Christian.

REDEMPTION

By James A. Patrick

“Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold . . . but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.”—1 Peter 1:18, 19.

OUR late lamented brother, George Aldridge of Auckland, New Zealand, has this to say of redemption in his tract, The Atonement: “Redemption is a purchase of captives from bondage, or of property from incumbrance. The word redemption, or as it is translated in the New Testament, ransom, is in the Greek, lutron—the root being luo, to pay—and it means the price paid, ransom.”

Paul, in 1 Timothy 2:6, says of Christ: “Who gave himself a ransom for all.” Young’s concordance defines the word ransom in this passage, “a corresponding price.” Then Christ paid a corresponding price in order to redeem man. What did He give? He said that He laid down His life for the sheep. (John 10:15.) What did Adam lose that needed redemption? His life—“In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die.”—Genesis 2:17.

Death or the loss of life was the penalty to be inflicted. Did God inflict the penalty on Adam? Most people answer, “Yes.” Then did Christ pay an equivalent price? If so, God inflicted the penalty on two persons. Would that be just? Would Christ’s sacrifice avail anything if Adam paid the penalty?

Suppose a man has his farm mortgaged, the time in which payment should be made is about to expire, he has no money to pay, and a good friend comes up and pays the mortgage. What would you think of the mortgagor, if he tried to collect from the mortgagee? Are we going to try to prove that God has collected from two men?

Again I quote from Brother Aldridge: “If Adam paid the penalty, then any theory which represents Christ’s death as an equivalent for his sin, represents God as vindictive to the last degree in demanding a penalty both from the sinner and the Savior. If Adam paid the penalty, then Christ could not pay it; if Christ died and gave His life for the life of the world, then we may be sure that the penalty of death was not paid in the person of Adam.”

I know it is sometimes argued that death frees man from sin and its results, and use God’s redemption of Israel under the judges, and His subsequent judging them as an example. When God redeemed Israel from their enemies they were just as sinful, and just as helpless, and just as sick, as they had been before redemption took place. Redemption only freed them from their enemies. After they were redeemed, God, in judging them, tried to correct the evils that were afflicting them. So when men die and are redeemed from death, their redemption will free them from nothing but the enemy, death. Unless they have a Savior in Christ they will have to pay the penalty, and it will be inflicted death; for the Adamic death is not the penalty for Adam’s sin, nor for our sins.

Then the question naturally arises, “Why did Adam die?” Because Adam was a mortal being and when he was separated from the tree of life, mortality took its course and death was the result. We die because Adam had nothing but mortality to transmit to his posterity, so we die because of our mortal natures inherited from Adam.

Another question that will naturally arise is, “How about the marginal rendering, ‘dying thou shalt die?’” Again I quote Brother Aldridge: “We ask, ‘Does the marginal rendering conflict with the text?’ A very important query, for upon this supposition this explanation has gained currency. The answer is that it does not. The margin shows what is the fact, namely, that in the Hebrew the expression is of peculiar idiom; to intensify the verb ‘die’ it is doubled; and if it had been translated word for word it would not have been good English.

“Our translators seem to have had the notion that they could express the intensity of the Hebrew verb by using the English word ‘surely.’ It is not necessary to know anything of Hebrew to feel that they were right. There are numbers of such expressions in the Scriptures in which the translators have done this, as, for instance, Genesis 2:16. ‘Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat,’ literally, ‘to eat, thou shalt eat.’ Says an able writer, ‘In one form or another this emphatic threat of punishment by death occurs in the Old Testament at least forty-seven times, and in all these occurrences the emphasis is expressed in the one language by repeating the principal term, and in the other by employing the adverb surely.’ If here the term indicates a lengthened period then of course the other instances will bear the like meaning, but the texts already cited show that would be impossible, the context in each case forbidding any such interpretation.”

Let us notice a few of the texts where the expression under discussion occurs. “Now therefore restore the man his wife; . . . and if thou restore her not, . . . thou shalt surely die, thou, and all that are thine.”—Genesis 20:7. The phrase above, “Thou shalt surely die,” is the same in the original as in the text under discussion. It is plainly to be seen that the penalty was to be an inflicted penalty, and was to be inflicted immediately. No long drawn out period was to elapse between the pronouncing of the sentence and its execution.

The reason the penalty was not inflicted the day Adam ate was that God provided a substitute and gave Adam a chance to accept. All have sinned and come short of the glory of God. All will have or have had a chance to accept the substitute. God must have given Adam the same chance that He gives everyone else. If the substitute had not been provided and the sentence had been inflicted that day the human race would have ceased to exist.

I think all will agree that Christ paid the penalty for Adam's sins and our sins. The penalty He paid was eternal death. But I hear one asking, "How can that be, isn't He alive now?" Yes, but what life is He living? Eternal life. That wasn't the life He laid down. He laid down the mortal life, and it is gone for all eternity. His sacrifice was complete, and, but for His faith and God's power to raise Him to eternal life, He would still be dead, and would remain dead for all eternity. It was His faith in God that caused Him to live again, not to live right on after death. You see, Christ paid the penalty, which was eternal death, not eternal torture. If eternal torture were the penalty, Christ did not pay it. Neither He nor anyone else could ever pay it.

Thank God, the penalty was not eternal torment; for then no one could ever have paid it. But it was eternal death, and Christ paid the full price.

The man that does not accept Christ will suffer the penalty of inflicted death in "the lake of fire, which is the second death." Then men will die for their own sins. Now they die because of their mortal natures.

MANUFACTURING MESSENGERS OF DEATH

LAST month the League of Nations issued a report showing which countries are the worst offenders as exporters of arms and ammunition. Three of the world's greatest countries were the worst offenders: Great Britain, which did 30% of the total arms peddling; France, with 13%; and the United States with 12%. The total volume of arms traffic in 1930 was $55,200,000, an increase over the $48,000,000 of 1925. Even a second rate power like Brazil has ordered the purchase of two cruisers, eight gunboats, seven submarines and six submarine tenders. Says a London paper: "The armament firms in every country are enjoying a little boom." The art of war is becoming a "popular course" in Russia. During the last few months seventy-two shooting grounds have been equipped in Leningrad for the purpose of training male and female workers how to shoot. When God's people see these things come to pass they speak about the "end of the age"; when cool, unsentimental and worldly observers consider these facts, they grimly discourse on the "end of civilization."—Pentecostal Evangel.

RADIATION

By Herbert H. Horseman

LIGHT, heat, and energy are radiated by bodies. A bar of iron fresh from the forge throws off or radiates both light and heat in the process of cooling. The hot-water pipes in the office or church, radiate heat but not light; and the heat does not diminish as long as the source of supply is maintained. The bar of iron is charged with heat which is soon thrown off. The heat of the pipes is maintained by their communication with the furnace. A more perfect illustration would be the sun, which constantly radiates light, heat, and energy, with apparently no diminution. If some one says I am mistaken in my science, the reply is I am not attempting to teach it—only making use of a simple phenomenon to teach a higher lesson.

Have you ever noticed that human beings radiate influences of various kinds? Some men radiate business. They seem steeped in it—charged with it—radiate an atmosphere of it in which they live. Others in a literal and physical sense radiate alcohol; they lurch into bus or tram, and body and breath soon radiate the fumes throughout the vehicle.

Then there are those living sunbeams, who radiate cheerfulness wherever they go. It is a delightful experience to be with them in their atmosphere of brightness and joy. And on the other side there are some who are always in trouble—or expecting it; a cloud seems to hang ever above and around them, and they radiate gloom and dampness and depression. "No man liveth to himself." We are all, always radiating influences bitter or sweet, evil or good, uplifting or depressing. What shall be our aim, and how shall we reach it?

There is no greater need in the world, and no higher aim possible for us than to radiate Christ!

You have doubtless known some who on their first contact with Him have seemed red-hot with enthusiasm and zeal. Then after a few months their heat has been expended, and they have become cold. The contact with their source of heat has not been continued. They were self-sufficient instead of dependent upon the Lord.

There are those again whose presence sheds a sweet odor of Christ Jesus—a silent yet powerful manifestation of His presence seems with them, as though a halo of His spirit were around them and Himself within them. His love seems to sweeten their voice, and to beam in tenderness from their eyes; and their whole being seems charged with Him.

It not only seems, but it is so. Realizing that they are but "earthen vessels," they know that the "excellency of the glory" is that which is from God through our Lord Jesus, and not from themselves. Their sufficiency is of God—their desire is that "Christ shall be magnified in their body, whether by life or death."

If, then, we can reach the height to which the Apostle

Paul attained and truly say, "Christ liveth in me," we shall bear Him about with us day by day, think His thoughts, utter His words; all our actions will be performed in His spirit, and all our life long we shall radiate the light, the love, the energy, the life, of our beloved Lord Jesus.

Brethren, sisters, radiate Christ!—Selected.

"As HE thinketh in his heart"—what is in your heart?

GOD'S REMNANT

By William S. Boyden

GOD has always had a faithful remnant. There will always be such a remnant. God's remnant is His restraining influence. Worldly and hypocritical Christendom only augments the forces that shall burst upon this doomed world. God's remnant only is a restraining power.

In the days of Noah and in the days of Lot there were remnants. It is God's faithful remnant that keeps the world from utter destruction now. "Except the Lord of hosts had left us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah."

When we turn to the people of Israel we find the most wonderful portrayal of this truth. It mattered not what infliction Israel suffered, what judgments fell upon her, what destruction her enemies wrought, what apostasy was her dreadful portion—God always preserved to Himself a remnant.

An incident in the life of Elijah flashes this truth so distinctly across the pages of Sacred Writ. To Elijah it looked as though the scourge of idolatry had done its complete work. It seemed that he alone was left. Listen to the words of discouragement arising from a dejected heart: "Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am alone left, and they seek my life. But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal." Even so, then, at this present time also "there is a remnant according to the election of grace."—Romans 11:3-5. A remnant of Israel was ever preserved, and from that remnant came the seed of God's Son, and from that remnant God is now and shall ever be glorified, in the ages that were, that are, and that yet shall be.

It is a priceless honor to be numbered in God's remnant. No one can measure the awful forces of evil, the licentiousness, lust, greed, crime, and bloodshed, that would be let loose like a devastating, life-destroying scourge, if restraint of God's remnant, the domicile of God's Spirit, should be withdrawn from this earth. "The whole world lieth in wickedness," yet our hearts are gladdened when we consider God's remnant.—The World's Crisis.

ELDERS

By George B. Alldridge

"Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind."—1 Peter 5:2.

IN PAUL'S day the world in his mind consisted of three classes. So he wrote to the church at Corinth: "Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God."—1 Corinthians 10:32. The world stands today in all its ramifications, whether we consider it politically, commercially, or religiously, separated into these three classes: the Jews, the Gentiles, and the church of God. Probably I should amend this by saying, "The world as God sees it."

Not one of these elements could long exist without organization. Hence, we see the political world ruled and controlled by statesmen and politicians; the commercial world by financiers, business men, and lawyers. The church of God? Who can answer this? Since the church of God is, or ought to be, ruled, governed, and controlled by its constitution, the Word of God, its organization should conform itself to its teachings and authority.

Jesus Himself established no organization. Upon one occasion He said, "But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven."—Matthew 23:8, 9.

At first glance this suggests government by communism. The early church tried this out (Acts 2:44-47) and it proved a failure. If it failed under the administration of the apostles, who were directly instructed by the Holy Spirit, I am quite sure it would fail in our day.

To my mind there is no question but that the Apostle Paul was raised up of God to organize and establish His church, "the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Timothy 3:15), upon a practical working basis, yet with all simplicity itself, and not the elaborate hierarchy so clearly described in Revelation 2:6, 15, as the Nicolaitanes, or clergy and laity. Ferrar Fenton translates Revelation 2:6 to read, "You have this to your account, however, that you hate the practices of the corrupters of the people which I myself also hate."

Paul says in 1 Corinthians 14:40, "Let all things be done decently and in order." This spirit prevails wherever the church is organized along the lines laid down by Paul himself, who had the mind of Christ.

In 1 Corinthians the twelfth chapter we are given a beautiful illustration of the church of God and its workings. Many of the gifts of the Spirit herein outlined ceased with the death of the apostles: some say all gifts ceased, together with the offices of elders, deacons, etc.

I have not space to give a synthesis, much less an analysis, of Paul's epistle to Titus, but would simply say that Paul outlines to him the exact method that should be followed by all classes in the church, young and old, males and females. In verse 5, chapter 1, he commands him to "set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee." Then follows what is to be required regarding character and ability of all those who were ordained to this office.

Ordain means, according to Dr. James Strong, simply to designate, or appoint. In 1 Timothy 3:1-7 a fuller description is given and designated as the office of bishop, or overseer.

Another office is mentioned in 1 Timothy 3:8-13 as that of deacon, and also the qualifications one must possess to hold that office. In Acts 6:1-4 we learn why this office was incorporated in the government of the church.

Still other offices are named in Ephesians 4:11-12, which reads, "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."

Note the next verse. Paul in this includes all past, present, and future time. "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." The "fulness of Christ" will not be consummated until the Head is united to the body.

According to the qualifications laid down by Paul to Titus and Timothy, an elder may fill the office of pastor, teacher, or evangelist. The pastor is the most important officer in the church. He is the shepherd over God's flock.

The beautiful twenty-third Psalm is indeed the shepherd's, or pastor's Psalm. He visits and comforts the sick, he sympathizes with and wisely counsels the despondent and unfortunate.

The work of the pastor is not like that of a lawyer or physician. I cannot do better than quote from Memories of the Life of Phillips Brooks, by Alexander V. G. Allen. One who heard him speak for the ministry said: "I was there; and it was an occasion in the life of Brooks—a great opportunity, and he realized it. The hall was never more crowded. Students stood and sat on the window seats; they seemed to be on each other's shoulders.

"He tried to be cool and philosophical, and tell them what the ministry was like, as previous speakers had told of the other professions. He started in that way, but the mass of young men and the upturned faces and the subject got the better of him, till, throwing philosophy and cool statement to the winds, he broke out, 'I can't come here and talk to you of the ministry as one of the professions. I must tell you that it is the noblest and most glorious calling to which a man can give himself.'

"The torrent once loose, it did not cease till it reached the deep calm of his closing words. One was almost afraid that the whole body of young men would rise on the impulse and cry, 'Here am I, send me!' That was a great speech, for its feelings and its thought."

In one of his lectures on preaching he said: "There must be a man behind every sermon, the intercourse with God in history. The real power of your oratory must be your own intelligent delight in what you are doing. You grow so familiar with the theory of repentance that it is hard for you to know that you have not yourself repented. If you could make all men think alike, it would be very much as if no man thought at all, as when the whole earth moves together all things seem still.

"To be dead in earnest is to be eloquent. The personal interest of the preacher is the buoyant air that fills the mass and lifts it. The sermon is truth and man together. It is the truth brought through the man.

"Say nothing which you do not believe to be true because you think it may be helpful. Keep back nothing which you know to be true because you think it may be harmful.

"This value of the human soul is something more than a mere sense of the soul's danger. It is a deliberate estimate set upon man's spiritual nature in view of its possibilities.

"Never allow yourself to feel equal to your work. Success is always sure to bring humility. 'Recognition,' said Hawthorne, 'makes a man very modest.'

"Preaching is the bringing of truth through personality. Jesus chose this method of extending the knowledge of Himself through the world. However, the gospel may be capable of statement in dogmatic form, its truest statement is not dogma but in a personal life. Christianity is Christ. . . . Nothing can ever take the place of preaching because of the personal element that is in it."

When I think of the unselfish devotion to the cause of Christ the workers at Oregon are doing against such discouraging conditions, my heart goes out to them; and I recall the words of Hebrews 6:10: "For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister."

We know here in Cleveland that our pastor meets one requirement of an elder, for he "is not greedy for filthy lucre." We love him and thank God that in the Church of God He has, and is, raising up pastors who seek to fill their office in harmony with the teachings of His Word.

Dear brethren, let us hold up the hands of our pastors. You recall these words: "And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed, and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun."—Exodus 17:11, 12.

Tocqueville, in describing his age, speaks of a senile consumption that one can define in no other way than a difficulty in living. Apparently this is a good description of our times and is contagious. So, brethren, let us get busy; or it will attack us all.

"Fear Him, ye saints, and you will then
Have nothing else to fear:
Make you His service your delight,
He'll make your wants His care."

“HE THAT SHALL COME WILL COME”

coming again. We have not only the word of prophecy, but the Master's personal declaration that, “I will come again.” This is His own word—His promise to His disciples. It is our hope and comfort while He is at God's right hand. Because He testified, “For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works,” He that shall come will come, and not tarry. He who promised is faithful, indeed. He will keep His word.

Again, He that shall come will come to confirm the testimony of the Holy Spirit through the apostles.

On the eve of His crucifixion, Jesus promised His disciples He would send unto them the Comforter—the Spirit of truth—which was to guide them into all truth and reveal “the things of mine” to their hearts. These “things” they were to record as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Their writings, the epistles, were inspired by the Spirit of truth. The epistles testify that the prophets and the words of Jesus are of divine origin and inspiration. Today, the Word of God is attacked on every hand. Comparatively few pulpits hold to the verbally inspired Bible. The Scriptures, like the Lord they reveal, are despised and rejected of men. Christendom is divided at this point. But hear me, men and women, the Bible claims to be of God, to voice His thoughts, to reveal His will. Men who made this Book did not write down what they thought or imagined or presumed or reasoned out; not what would accord with other men's thoughts or speculations, but what God, by the Holy Spirit, commanded them, the writers of the epistles, to say. “Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.” But men doubt that. Men fight that. Men hate that. God has given the believer faith to accept every word as God's Word. And there is coming a day, soon, we believe, when all the world, learned and unlearned, will confess that God's Word is true. When? When He that shall come comes to confirm the testimony of the Holy Spirit.

Once more, permit me to suggest, He that shall come will come because of the shame of the cross.

The Savior died on the old rugged cross, which is the emblem of suffering and shame. See Him! Crucified, a malefactor! They nailed Him between two thieves. He was numbered with the transgressors. The rulers, the priests, the people passed by His cross. They wagged their heads. They mocked Him. The scoffers bade Him come down from the cruel tree. But He died there on the little hill called Calvary. My friends, let me ask you a question, Is that all—is that the last picture the world shall have of our loving Savior? His life seemed to end in defeat. But did it end? They buried him in a borrowed tomb. Listen!

“Death cannot keep his prey—
Jesus, my Savior!
He tore the bars away—
Jesus, my Lord.”

Glory to His great name! Hear His own great declaration! “Nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.”—Matthew 26:64.

He that shall come will come to vindicate His character. He comes again to prove the sublime teachings—His words of wisdom were not merely the breathings of some impossible ideals. He will vindicate His own teaching and character.

He that shall come will come to restore Israel to their own land.

Israel is the mystery nation of history. Much of the Bible is concerned about God's ancient people. Israel, of old, was honored of God. To them were entrusted the Holy Oracles. To Israel was given the Law. They were a most favored people. But today, Israel wanders about through the nations of the earth—ten of her tribes lost; and those who compose the remaining two are despised and hated more than any other people. They are a people without a land, and their great city, Jerusalem, is under the control of foreign powers and Gentile governments.

God has made a covenant with Abraham regarding this people and their land. Their career has been, indeed, checkered. God's purpose regarding Israel has not been fully realized. A wonderful history lies behind them, while a marvelous future stretches before. Many are the promises which speak of Israel's restoration to Palestine. Today, thousands have found a home in the land of their fathers. Their presence there is the cause of much speculation and controversy. Is it possible that Israel will yet become a great nation and the blessing promised Abraham? Many think not. Permit me to state that I assume the absolute, infallible authority of this Book as the Word of God. And on that basis, believing that on this subject, as upon all others, the Holy Spirit has given clear and decisive testimony that God will restore Israel to their ancient home-land. But how is it to be brought about? “Therefore, behold the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said that the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north; and from all lands whither he had driven them; and I will bring them again into the land I gave unto their fathers.”

But how are these great things to be brought about? When shall these prophecies be fulfilled? There is only one answer. When He that shall come will come—then Israel will have peace in her own land. Abraham's God never sleeps or slumbers. He remembers His Word.

Please note, He that shall come will come because of the utter collapse of the present world system.

We look upon a world today, utterly wrecked and ruined—racked and suffering, and out of harmony with that which is good—a world in despair! Man has done his very best to make this world a better and happier place. All his efforts have been tested and he is face to face with failure. Every possible form of government has been tried and found wanting.

On all sides wickedness abounds. Godlessness—utter lack of respect for holy things cast aside.

The present age, with all of its physical, educational, economic, moral, political, and religious systems, is crumbling to certain ruin. The world stands helpless before the onrushing tide of evil and in its last moments, realizing the end is upon it, cries out to Heaven for deliverance. Can we, in these last hours, give to the world of men any assurance that there is a God who cares? Will God hear? Can we say that God will answer? Listen, my friends. "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not; behold, your God will come . . . he will come and save you."

Yes, brothers and sisters, God will answer—but how? He that shall come will come to take upon His own shoulder the government of the nations of the world and reign in righteousness. Not until He comes will earth's sorrows, woes, and wars be over.

In closing, let me declare unto you, He that shall come will come to raise the dead.

Praise God! A vast multitude are asleep in the silent tombs. They closed their eyes here in the faith that one day God would raise their bodies from the graves. They died in the faith that this mortal must put on immortality and this corruptible put on incorruption. What can they expect? Can we turn with certainty to the Bible and find the answer? Once again, I make bold to declare that the Scriptures set the seal of a divine certainty upon the doctrine of the resurrection. No language could be more clear and decisive than the testimony of Holy Writ. "They that are in the graves shall hear his voice; and shall come forth."—John 5:28, 29. "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Romans 8:11. Men and women, Christianity rests its entire claim upon the resurrection of Christ. Is Christianity supernatural? I point you to the empty tomb. There is no fact in history more perfectly proved than His resurrection. And because He lives, we shall live also. But when are the dead to be raised? . . . When He that is to come, comes!

It is my profound conviction that no greater blessing could come to the church than a revival of this ancient faith. Would that we might all so live as if with that glorious message of our coming Savior sounding in our ears: "Surely, I come quickly," and may the last prayer of the Scripture ever be in our hearts, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—The Jewish Hope.

TRINE-IMMERSION

came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind . . . and it sat upon them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 1:5; 2:2-4.) No repeating of Pentecost was necessary to give the Holy Ghost to those gathered in that upper room.

Speaking of His suffering and death Jesus said: "I have a baptism to be baptized with."—Luke 12:50. History records but one trial and death for Christ. Paul agrees with this when he wrote: "It is appointed unto men once to die, . . . so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many."—Heb. 9:27, 28. Compare Romans 6:10; 1 Peter 3:18.

Again: "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea."—1 Cor. 10:1-2. The children of Israel passed through the Red Sea but once and that one action was sufficient to baptize them unto Moses.

Lastly, Peter uses the ark built by Noah as a type of baptism. "Once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us."—1 Peter 3:20, 21. Noah entered into the ark but once; was sealed within but once; came out of the ark but once.

The four scriptures given above are sufficient to prove that baptizo is not a frequentive verb. An exhaustive checking of all scriptures would but confirm this conclusion.

Baptizo literally means, "to dip, to immerse." (See Young's concordance or any Greek lexicon.) The word has been transferred rather than translated in the King James Version. Benjamin Wilson translated the word in his work The Emphatic Diaglott. This brings Ephesians 4:5 to us in its true meaning: "One Lord, one faith, one immersion." In the light of the above facts the Church of God must continue to practice single immersion, and that administered "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

TO TAKE OUT STAINS

DR. W. H. POPE says: "I know a lady to whom an agent was trying to sell an article for taking out stains. He was rubbing away, meanwhile eloquently describing the merits of his goods. Soon the lady said, 'I know something that will take out stains, too.' 'What is that?' asked the man eagerly, not knowing but that some other dirt-killer had canvassed the town ahead of him. 'The blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth us from all sin.' (1 John 1:7). Do you know anything about that?' Do you suppose that man would demonstrate his goods again for six months without thinking of that 'other something' which could take stains out of a sinful heart?"

KIND words are jewels beyond price, powerful to heal the wounded heart, and to make the weighed-down spirit glad.

WHAT IF IT WERE YOU?

MANY people perhaps do not know the meaning of the Illinois State Berean Self-Denial month. In a brief word of explanation let me say that it is the month of October annually set aside for self-denial. That is, the money usually spent for some unnecessary thing is collected and sent to the Relief committee of the National Berean Society.

What is its good? My friends, go with me to a typical home that is helped by the Relief committee. The father has worked hard all of his life as has also the mother. But he loses his job, a salaried one, and the money stops. Rent falls due, clothing and food are scarce, fuel is needed, and perhaps sickness enters the home. In desperation, the father writes to the Relief committee for help. Imagine his joy when he receives this aid.

The funds are low in the Relief committee's treasury. Think of these needy ones when you buy that chocolate soda. Put yourself in their places when you take that auto ride, and save this money which you would have spent for pleasure and luxury. Give it to your local treasurer at the end of the month, and I am sure the Lord will bless you.

IOWA BEREANS

THE Bereans of Waterloo and Cedar Falls, Iowa, met on September 11 and elected officers for the ensuing year as follows:

Virginia Phillips, President
Gerald Palmer, Vice President
Alta King, Secretary-Treasurer

The lessons for the year will be varied. Some will be selected from old Berean books, and we hope to continue our character studies and chapter analyses, both of which are helpful types of study. In our character studies we aim to emphasize God's use of man to reveal Himself, and the effect that God's work through the man has upon the man himself. If other Berean classes have suggestions for lessons, we would be glad to receive them.

We plan to have one social meeting each month in the homes of the members.

FROM HOLBROOK, NEBRASKA

THE annual business meeting of the Holbrook, Nebraska, Berean society was held Tuesday, August 16, 1932.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Leona Lathrop, President
Wayne Wilson, Vice President
Icel Stedman, Secretary-Treasurer

Bro. Grover Gordon was elected permanent teacher for the class. A social is held once a month at the homes of the various members. There is a membership of twenty.

—Icel Stedman, Arapahoe, Nebraska.

Why should our spirits be oppressed
When days of darkness fall?
Our Father knoweth what is best,
And He hath made them all.

He made them, and to all their length
Set parallels of gain;
We gather from our pain the strength
To rise above our pain.

All, all beneath the shining sun
Is vanity and dust.
Help us, O high and holy One,
To fix in Thee our trust;

And in the change, and interfuse
Of change, with every hour,
To recognize the shifting hues
Of never-changing power.

—Alice Cary.

For the benefit of the Home Study Committee, which use the name in their correspondence work, and of the secretary, it is requested that those sending in reports distinguish between married and unmarried women and include addresses of all persons mentioned. Thank you.

MY HOME PROBLEMS

WHEN we say "home problems," we think of the work we take home from school in order to have a good lesson the next day, don't we? And that is one of its meanings. We find some of our arithmetic problems difficult to solve sometimes, and when Mother or big brother helps us a little the answer seems to come so easy that we wonder why we didn't see it before.

Now, we are going to talk a little this evening about some other "home problems," which Mother and big brother and sometimes Daddy (though we do think He's the smartest ever) can't solve. And these, too, seem to be so easy, after we've had help with them, that we wonder why we got so cross, and fretful, and sometimes saucy.

Perhaps the first problem that comes to mind is: Why should I listen to Father and Mother? I wonder if any of my little friends who read this page ever ask themselves what fathers and mothers are for, anyway. Think what a grand time we would have if we were our own "bosses" and could do just as we please!

Well, do you know, about the first thing that would happen would be that a lot of little folks I know (of course, not you) would be sick. One little boy would lie down on the ground after playing ball without his sweater on; another would eat nothing but cake because he'd never had enough any time. Some little girls would play house all day and not go to school at all; and others would even go to the movies every night!

Now, wouldn't that be a "mess"? I can hear every one of you say, "Well, I should say so!"

So you see mothers and fathers are pretty good things to have around after all, aren't they?

Another problem that even the older folks have to solve is: How am I going to keep my temper from going up just like a sky rocket? Every time big brother teases me, or I have to stop playing to do an errand for Mother something inside just seems to boil, and naughty words fly into my mind and out of my mouth!

Just shut your lips real tight and don't let them out, and after a few minutes they'll go away. How many of you know the poem that says words are not like kites? You can roll up your ball of string and bring your kite in, can't you? Wouldn't we be glad if we could do that with some of the words we have said!

How many of you can find verses in the Old Testament that tell us to honor our parents? Look in the sayings of the wise man and see what he says about it, too. And what does the New Testament say about these problems we have discussed?

THE TRAIL OF THE SUNFLOWER SEEDS

ALL the while he ate his breakfast food Marvin had thought about the right things he might do today.

"There were too many bad things yesterday," said Marvin to himself.

Marvin remembered about Stephen's bicycle. Stephen had left it leaning against the porch. Marvin had given the bicycle several hard shoves just for fun, and suddenly a chain had broken. It had taken Stephen all day to fix it.

Then there was Rosie's doll carriage. He had rolled it back and forth and tried to see how near to the edge of the porch it would go without tumbling off. Suddenly it had tumbled off and down to the ground. One of the wheels had been bent.

Everyone had scolded Marvin. They had called him meddlesome. Marvin didn't like that so he hoped to do differently today.

"Oh, I know the first good deed," cried Marvin, clapping his hands. "I'll gather the ripe sunflower seeds for Stephen. He wants to save them."

So into the garden ran Marvin. By standing on an old chair he could reach the ripened sunflower heads. Marvin's pockets began to fill fast with the striped seeds. First a handful in this pocket and then a handful in that pocket. Soon the seeds were picked.

Now there was something that Marvin didn't know, and there was something that Marvin's mother didn't know, and well, there was something that nobody knew! And it was that at the bottom of each full-to-bursting little pocket was a teeny-weeny hole! Already, in each teeny-weeny hole, a striped sunflower seed was poking its head through!

"Now I must find another good deed," cried Marvin.

Down the street he saw that Mrs. Allen hadn't had time to carry in the bottles of milk. The sun would soon shine on them. So away he went. Although Marvin didn't know it, every time he took a step a striped sunflower seed slipped down a leg of his short trousers and landed on the sidewalk.

How pleased Mrs. Allen was when she saw Marvin bring the milk to the back door and put it on the kitchen table.

PROBLEMS OF THE MODERN HOME

Joshua 24:14, 15; Mark 10:2-12; Ephesians 6:1-9

Devotional Reading: Psalm 127

GOLDEN TEXT

As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.—Joshua 24:15.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Problems of the Modern Home.

Basic Truth: "He will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord."—Gen. 18:19.

Outline: I. The Problem of Home Government. II. The Problem of Home Relations. III. The Problem of Social Relations in the Home.

I. The Problem of Home Government. The radical and complex changes that have arisen to disturb the tranquillity of home life as it was known in the past present many difficult and perplexing problems which our fathers never encountered. Earlier and broader education has had a tendency to develop a sense of individual independence in the minds of children that makes discipline on the part of parents exceedingly difficult. The child must be approached from a more adult standpoint than was formerly the case. He must be reasoned with as a logical-minded person, able to arrive at correct conclusions in his own mind. He must be taken into serious account as an actual and valuable part of the home economy if his cooperation is to be secured in the maintaining of satisfactory home conditions.

II. The Problem of Home Relations. The modern viewpoint recognizes an equality of intellectual capacity in husband and wife that is quite different from the master and slave conception of the distant past. The husband and wife are co-partners in the business of creating and maintaining a home. This idea is in harmony with God's original assignment of the family relationship, where the man and woman were declared to "be one flesh." With the recognition of such a unity of life between the husband and wife, the thoughts of the children are led naturally to fall into the same channel. They come to look upon themselves as individual and necessary members of the family. Mutual dependence leads to mutual confidence and mutual love.

III. The Problem of Social Relations in the Home. Here is one of the most difficult problems the modern home-maker has to solve—how to provide a social condition in the home that is at once uplifting and acceptable for both children and adults. Nothing will do so much to establish such a condition as the developing of a Christian atmosphere in every part of home life. To make the home the happy gathering place of young and old is a task which is rich in reward and which leads to eternal blessing.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Home: From the home issues the life of a nation, of society, and the church. To keep this home in such a condition that it will be a source of strength is a big problem. The home is crumbling beneath the crushing blows of modernism. The modern home finds no time, neither does it care for Bible reading or family worship. Father goes to his club, mother to her party, and son and daughter separate among their associates. Thus the evening is spent, not in the home together, but with "strange flesh". We must choose between the gods of pleasure, lust, and idolatry, which our fathers served before the flood, and "The Lord our God which is one Lord". The majority are choosing the gods of this world, choosing to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season rather than be heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. Discuss the advantages and benefits that will result if the family spends the evenings together. Do you think parents should advise and counsel their children against the many pitfalls and temptations which they will encounter, or is it better for them to learn from actual experience?

Home

—is the kind of a place that we make it; —should be a place where children like to be;
—without Christ is a makeshift;
—with Christ as the Head is a happy home.
—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."—Joshua 24:15.

The American home has but little, if any, trouble with its inmates wanting to serve the gods of other nations, but we do want to be like those about us. So our trouble comes in choosing between following the god of the world and the Lord Jehovah. It should not be hard for us to make a choice, for the one gives us only present pleasures, while the other promises pleasures for evermore.

Joshua and his house made a wise choice. Regardless of what any one else did, they chose to serve the living and true God. For some it is a hard struggle to pull off from associates to acknowledge Christ as their Savior, but it pays a hundredfold in this life and in the life to come everlasting life.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Problems of the Modern Home

The shifting of population from the farm to the city has changed home life. The rural family is largely a unit in its working hours, aims, social contacts, etc. Usually a country person can take a day off to go fishing or picnicking, or to enjoy some other form of recreation. With the members of a city family all is different. They have certain hours that they must be on duty, rain or shine, and the hours of work are often not the same. Each may be working at a different trade, which would necessitate membership in his own trade union and club.

These conditions in the city home make it impossible to have all home for family worship. There can be no social evenings spent with all present, hence no evenings of study of God's Word. Often no thanks is given to God at table, as there is often only one eating at a time. Sunday is the only day free for recreation. A decision must be made. Shall I go to church or shall I go to the country? Too often the latter is done under the excuse that the recreation is essential to health.

Modern business has been organized around the one central idea of making money. God is not considered. The Christian home must do all possible to counteract these tendencies. Working hours can often be rearranged by changing occupations, thus making possible the family altar. "For what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"—Matt. 16:26.—H. A. S.

My Home Problems

Thus far we have learned that to be the greatest success in life one must be a Christian; that home is the place in which to practice being Christ-like; that if each one of us shows these Christian characteristics in the home, our homes will grow better and happier. But now comes the trouble! It all sounds very well on paper, but when we begin to practice it, it doesn't go so smoothly. For instance, you say, when you treat brother Bill as you would like him to treat you, he laughs and calls you, "Softy", and imposes on you all the more. And when you help Mother as much as you possibly can, sister Sue runs off to the neighbors to play and doesn't come home until all the little things are done that help Mother so much. Never mind! Being patient is one of the Christ-like traits as well as being forgiving and helpful. And you can melt a heart of stone by continual kindness, remember that.

People today are practically just the same as they were two thousand years ago, and the advice that was good for them when Jesus walked on earth is just as good today. It is not old-fashioned, as some people call it. Solomon says that a soft answer turns away wrath. Did you ever try the "soft answer" on your brother when he was angry at you? If you have not, try it the very next time.

Remember, you can solve all your home problems, no matter what they are by a certain rule, and that rule is called the Golden Rule of life.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Savage, Jr., are the proud parents of a baby girl, born Sept. 6, 1932. Her name is Ruth Dell. Mrs. Savage was formerly Miss Ruth Hoskins of Eden Valley.

Rowena Randall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Randall, was buried with her Lord in Christian baptism. Rowena lives at 1024 Breckenridge Ave., North. May the dear Lord bless her in the new life, that she may be an instrument in His hands to win others to her Savior.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

Bro. Richard LeCrone of Kennard, Neb., will be special speaker for our Fall Conference and teacher of the Bible class. Saturday, Oct. 8, will be Young People's Day. The program which has been outlined promises to be of much interest. Mrs. W. F. Hoskins will teach the primary and younger folks. Bro. A. E. Hoskins of St. Cloud will have charge of the choir and all musical parts of the program. Bro. W. R. Thoms of Emily expects to be present and assist us.

Our Rally Day plans are just beginning to materialize, the Fall Conference coming before that day.

All in all, plans look good for a bigger and better conference than ever. Pray for the success of our meeting.

John Denchfield, Pastor.

BLAIR, NEBRASKA

We are engaged in a contest in an effort to increase punctuality and attendance at Sunday school. Competition is keen, and so far neither side has been able to secure but a very few points more than the other. Four more Sundays and then we will know which side has to furnish the party.

Everyone has been given something to do for Rally Day, which we will observe October 16. Our schedule for the day is as follows: Sunday school at 10:00; preaching service at 11:00; basket dinner at noon; program at 2:30. Two religious dramas are to be presented, one by the young people's class and the other by the adult class, in addition to several vocal and instrumental numbers and recitations by the children. We invite all who can possibly do so to meet with us that day and help make this the biggest Rally Day ever.

Mr. Meredith Nelsen, son of Bro. and Sr. Wm. Nelsen, who recently underwent an operation, is able to return home again.

We have missed Bro. M. D. Newell the past two Sundays from his usual place as teacher of the adult class. He is afflicted as was Job. We trust he will be able to return soon.

The midweek Bible study class has been resumed at Kennard on Thursday nights. The interest and attendance are very good. We are handicapped by not having a church building here in which to hold our meetings. Our houses are almost too small. We are meeting now at the home of Bro. and Sr. LeCrone. We are indeed glad to be able to report that Sr. Laura Bates has recovered sufficiently to be able to attend these meetings. We held them at her home last winter while she was sick in bed so that she might enjoy them with us.

ELDORADO, ILLINOIS

Rally Day was observed at Eldorado on Oct. 2nd. Being Bro. Lapp's regular date for preaching, and as he had been away for twelve weeks, an all-day service was planned to welcome him home. The first service was held on Saturday night, when a full house greeted him. The church had been attractively decorated with flowers for the occasion and presented a most beautiful appearance.

Fifty-five were present at Sunday school the following morning, and a large audience for preaching service. All were glad to give careful attention to Bro. Lapp's wonderful sermon. An attractive addition to the service was a vocal solo entitled, "I Am Satisfied With Jesus," given by a blind lady, Sr. Mina Martin.

In the afternoon a short program was given consisting of instrumental selections on the violin, guitar, and mandolin, by the "Better Boys Club" which was composed of three boys whose ages are from nine to twelve years; two violin solos by Marion Rice, eight years of age; a vocal solo by Wilson Orr, also eight years old; a Scripture reading (memorized) was given by Bro. Herbert Edmister; and a vocal solo by Bro. C. E. Lapp.

The evening service was largely attended. Mrs. Fred Shain.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

It was a happy church, indeed, which gathered on the banks of the beautiful stream flowing through Breen Park on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 2, and witnessed the baptism of five adults who have come to love their Lord and who wish to serve Him with their strength and talents. With the beautifully colored autumn leaves hanging as draperies round about it was a cozy picture.

In addition to Mr. James Cole, 156 Abbie St., S. E., who was mentioned in last week's report as coming forward, there were Mr. and Mrs. Jack Calcutt, 3435 Riser St., S. W., and Mr. and Mrs. Homer Conrad, 3715 Keyes Ave., S. E.

These splendid people have been attending regularly for some time. We have learned to respect them highly and it is with joy that we look forward to closer labors together.

In spite of depression and financial stress God has wonderfully blessed our little church, already twenty-six members having been added during 1932, and our hearts are filled with courage and strength as we look to the future. Pray with us for the advancement of truth and righteousness.

We expect to make a trip south the last of October, stopping at Citronelle, Alabama, and continuing on to Hammond, Louisiana, for a series of meetings from Nov. 1st to 13th. We plan to return home immediately following that meeting.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Helen Porter; J. G. Haupt; Samuel E. Haney; Mrs. C. L. McCallister (for self and another); Lydia Mathes; Ransom Lake; Ida M. Shepard; Jessie M. B. Kauffman (for another); W. H. Boyer; Mrs. Wm. Hadiecke; Anna D. Springer; Mrs. Lulie Wogomon; Lillian A. Griener.

NEWS FROM IOWA

Bro. J. W. Williams made his usual welcome appointments at Koszta, Stanhope, Gladbrook, and Lake View in the month of September.

Bro. O. J. Allard gave two sermons and one lesson at Stanhope, Sept. 24 and 25, which were very interesting and instructive, with quite a good and attentive audience. We are sorry that we neglected to mention his good sermon on "Signs of the Times," given to a large audience Sunday afternoon at the Iowa conference.

On Monday, Sept. 26, Bro. Allard drove to Carroll, Iowa, to meet Bro. Williams, who was coming from his appointment at Lake View, the two going on from there to Rockville, Mo., where they are holding meetings in a schoolhouse and in the Latter Day Saints' church. They also plan to go into the territory of Bro. Williams' boyhood days, Prescott, Kan., to hold meetings there. We wish them much success.

Esther Sealine.

MORE BAPTISMS AT CLEVELAND

Our fifth annual Rally Day, Oct. 2, was the most encouraging we have ever had. Sunday school attendance was 187, forty over the preceding Sunday. The offering of $15.32 was put into the building fund. While we were somewhat disappointed in not setting a new attendance record, it is at least a relief from what has been getting to be a pretty regular process—this is the first Rally Day that we have not broken the attendance record. However, there were enough so that many had to stand. Several special features enlivened the program, and we were all glad to welcome the orchestra back after the summer vacation.

The Sunday morning church service was exceptionally well attended, practically filling the church, with many of the Sunday school scholars remaining. The most impressive feature of the program was a baptismal service in which six of the Sunday school members consecrated their lives to Christ. Eight months ago a new class was organized in the Sunday school for the purpose of teaching the fundamentals to those who wished to prepare for baptism. This class has been steadily progressing during this time under the devoted leadership of Sr. Nellie Halls, and these baptisms are entirely its fruits. Out of an original enrollment of 13, seven have come into the church (one having been baptized previously, at Easter). Three others will probably obey later, but are not yet ready.

The newly baptized members are: Carl A. Carlson, 14501 Sylvia Ave.; William Dodge, 13605 Othello Ave.; Ernest Elshaw, 13807 Deise Ave.; George Cullen, 15017 Thames Ave.; Alex. Cruikshank, 728 E. 133rd St.; Miss Louise Aufmuth, 13432 Darley Ave. The last five are all young people of 'teen age. The last three of them are the first representatives from their families in the church. Bro. Carlson's wife was baptized last Easter, and his obedience now unites the family in the faith. These six and the two baptized three weeks previously, Sr. Austin and Sr. Dodge, were given the right hand of fellowship, together with four others who united by transfer. These latter are: George McMurtrie, 64 Victor Drive; Mrs. George McMurtrie; Miss Alice Stafford, 261 Waverly Rd.; and Mrs. Geraldine Chek, all of Willoughby, Ohio. They have been attendants at our services for quite a while, and we are glad to welcome them into membership.

By these twelve additions our total church membership was increased twenty percent. It gives our work the biggest impetus we have yet had so we are all greatly encouraged and look forward with confidence to the future, thankful for the Father's rich blessings, and with a prayer that those who have taken the step of obedience will walk ever worthy of the high calling.

M. W. Lyon, Pastor.

EASTERN NEBRASKA CONFERENCE

The Nebraska Conference of the Church of God met in Florence, Neb., Aug. 28 to Sept. 4, 1932. Bro. Almus Adams, state evangelist, opened the conference on Sunday morning. Bro. S. J. Lindsay arrived Monday evening, and beginning Tuesday he taught a class each afternoon and gave a sermon each evening until Sept. 4. After preaching a sermon on "Dictatorship," he left for his old home in Oregon, Ill. His presence here was a real inspiration to us. Needless to say, his sermons and lessons gave us the much needed meat in due season.

Bro. Adams closed the meeting with a sermon on "The Voice of God," which was appreciated and enjoyed by all.

Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., Sr. Lucille LeCrone, and Bro. Richard LeCrone very ably assisted with sermons and lessons. They also, with Sr. Harvey Krogh, Sr., and daughters, Dorothy and Clara, and Sr. Jenkins and son and daughter, aided wonderfully with several instrumental and vocal selections. Sr. Marie Foley, who is a music teacher, sang and helped with piano accompaniments. These brothers and sisters added much to the interest and enjoyment of our meetings.

Our business meeting began Thursday evening, Sept. 1. The following officers were elected: Frank Harper, pres.; H. L. Appleby, vice pres.; Arthur White, treas.; Minnie Perkins, sec.; and Alice Harper, cor. sec. Bro. Almus Adams was declared state evangelist.

So another conference ended. As in every previous year of our attendance we heard the comment, "This was the best conference yet!"
Minnie Perkins, Sec.

"SORER PUNISHMENT"

Our esteemed brother, R. H. Judd, in a recent letter says that his attention has again been directed to a difficult passage in Hebrews 10:29, which reads, "Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God. . ."

"This scripture," writes Bro. Judd, "was recently called to my attention in a tract sent to me by a rabid and active supporter of the terrible doctrine of 'endless conscious suffering,' the evident thought of the writer being that death is not sufficient punishment for the class of persons referred to, but that some sorer punishment is required.

"While one has one's own explanation of the thoughts raised, it is always helpful to have the opinion of others. For to be able to give an answer to him that asketh, we need to be well furnished. We should not take the attitude that if the explanation we have given does not suit the inquirer he must seek elsewhere. In such case he is far more likely to discountenance our doctrine as inherently weak, and lose what interest he had in seeking further. Perhaps some reader will provide us with an explanation."

The Herald will welcome a brief article or two on this interesting text from our thoughtful students of the Word.—Editor.

LINOS NORRIS

Linos William Norris was born near Dresden, Ohio, on March 22, 1846, and died at his home near Lebanon, Mo., on Aug. 28, 1932.

When five years of age he came with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Norris, to Illinois and settled on a farm three miles northwest of Clark Center, where he grew to manhood and received his education in the public schools and Westfield College.

On July 22, 1866, he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah E. Wright of Marshall, Illinois. To this union seven children were born. Of these, two sons, Edward M. and Noah L., died in infancy. Mrs. Carrie Stephens passed away at Independence, Kan., Jan. 6, 1904, and Mrs. Ida Cline of Martinsville, Ill., died on Feb. 10, 1932. Surviving are William F. and Charles E. Norris of Lebanon, Mo.; Mrs. Emma L. Claypool of Chicago, Ill.; eleven grandchildren; twenty-four great-grandchildren; an aged sister, Mrs. Sarah Phillips, of Olney, Ill.; a half-brother, P. E. Norris, of Elmore, Ind.; and a host of other relatives.

In early life Mr. Norris became a firm believer in the Lord, uniting with the Church of God, and was a true and faithful follower, devoting most of his spare time to the study of God's Word.

The deceased spent most of his life in Clark

County, Ill., until thirty years ago, when he moved to Independence, Kan. Later he moved to Kansas City, Mo., then to Lebanon, Mo., where his aged companion, who was also a member of the Church of God, passed away on Sept. 17, 1923.

Mr. Norris was a kind and faithful husband and father and a charitable neighbor. He had many friends, and was loved and respected by all who knew him.

On May 24, 1928, he was suddenly stricken with paralysis which left him almost helpless; yet he bore it all with Christian fortitude and was cheerful to the end. A granddaughter, Miss Ruth Stephens, whom he raised from infancy, tenderly and uncomplainingly cared for him during his long illness and old age.

Mr. Norris was a man of great intellect, retaining a brilliant mind throughout his long affliction until Aug. 25, when he suffered a second stroke which resulted in his death.

Funeral services were conducted by F. L. Austin at the Mt. Pleasant church, five miles southeast of Martinsville, Ill., Aug. 31, after which he was laid at rest in the Mt. Pleasant cemetery, awaiting the call of Him who is the resurrection and the life. What thrilling hope as loved ones are laid away! "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Mrs. Emma Claypool.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The church at Hammond, La., is again to have the opportunity of listening to Elder F. E. Siple's uplifting sermons during a campaign he is to put on there this fall. May God bless all efforts for the advancement of His cause.

Sr. Mary A. Woodward continues to improve slowly, and is now permitted to greet her many friends occasionally.

Bro. and Sr. Enos Elton of Tustin, Cal., sending in their renewal for The Herald and a generous contribution to the general work, speak of the difficulty encountered in attempting to secure work but assure us of their determination to remain faithful to the Master until He comes to relieve us of all our distresses.

Bro. and Sr. J. H. Adams, for some time residents of Longmont, Colorado, have returned to Holbrook, Neb., where they had previously lived. Bro. Adams was president of the western Nebraska conference for many years before going to Colorado and will be gladly welcomed back to his old home.

The article appearing on the front page of this issue is taken from the report of a sermon delivered by Dr. G. H. Stieglitz in the First Hebrew Christian Synagogue of Los Angeles, July 29, 1932, and reaches us through the kindness of Sr. Emma C. Railsback of that city. Addressed by a Jew to Jews, it is especially significant and impressive.

Sr. F. L. Austin and Sr. Leila E. Whitehead, accompanied by two fellowteachers of the Chicago schools, attended the morning services of the Oregon church Sunday. Sr. Austin is recovering from a recent fall in her school building which resulted in painful bruises and a broken nose.

As these notes are written the Minnesota Fall Conference is in full swing. May God preside at every service of the meeting.

Next Sunday, Oct. 16, is to be Rally Day at Dixon, Ill., Blair, Neb., and St. Cloud, Minn. We pray that it may be a "big day" spiritually, and from the standpoint of numbers present and lasting good accomplished.

The brethren at Waterloo, Iowa, have been greatly blessed for many years by the spiritual leadership of Bro. A. J. Eychaner, and it is a commendable thing that they should confess their affection and respect for him in his advancing years.

The Grand Rapids church is brightening things up by painting their church, while the church at Oregon is placing a new roof on their otherwise very complete and attractive edifice. Much can be accomplished even in these days if all will put their shoulders to the wheel.

Sr. Frank Rogers, the accomplished organist of the Oregon church, has just undergone an operation which will deprive us of her services for a time. During her absence Mrs. Marsh will substitute at the organ.

On October 17 Elder Harry A. Sheets will complete a period of seven years as pastor of a circuit of churches in Virginia. During that time he has rendered very faithful and effective service to the congregations of which he has been the overseer and has earned for himself not only the love of the brethren but the confidence and respect of a large group of friends in the community. His splendid wife has contributed in no small degree to his success. May God continue to bless them both.

THE SOUL AND THE CANDLE

THAT conditionalists are afraid of the word "Annihilation" and of being called "Annihilationists" is surely due to misapprehension of what is implied by that term, and by a misuse of scientific facts. A very common argument in this connection is employed when using the illustration of a candle being burnt. It is asserted that when a candle is burnt it is not annihilated, since the gases into which it is resolved still remain, and the total amount of matter is not affected. This is perfectly true. But we would like to ask, Where is the candle when it has been burnt? Does it exist at all? A candle consists of a certain amount of wax associated with a wick. Can it be said that this combination exists when the candle is burnt? Where is the wax, and where the wick? Neither exists, for they have been resolved into something that is neither wax nor wick. The candle as a candle has entirely disappeared, and what is that but annihilation? When we speak of a candle we do not mean the matter of which it is composed. That certainly still exists in other forms. No, we mean a certain combination, and that combination is destroyed by burning.

The argument would be just the same if the combination were destroyed by removing the wick from the wax. We might have any amount of wax and any number of wicks, but until these materials are combined in a particular way we should not have candles. There is no need to destroy these materials, or alter their nature, in order to annihilate the candle; just remove the wick from the wax.

So surely is it in the case of man at death. Man consists not of so much matter and life, but of a specific combination of "body, soul, and spirit." Give to these "elements" what constitution you please, if the combination be dissolved, if, as Paul says, they are not "preserved entire," man as a conscious being does not exist. No amount of bodies, souls, or spirits, of themselves constitute men. Only when the proper combination exists is there a man. That is why a resurrection from the dead is absolutely necessary in order that man may experience a continuance of life after death. The life which has returned to God must once again be restored to the body to reconstitute the "living soul."

It may be objected that this argument is tantamount to saying that, like the candle, man is annihilated by death. In a sense he is, but there are two facts that have to be taken into consideration in regard to man that have no connection with the case of the candle. The first is that each individual of mankind exists in the mind of God. . . . When God restores the life to the dead body in resurrection He does not create a new being, but brings back to conscious life the very being that has died. The second fact to be remembered is that time exists for the living only. There is no time in dead sleep. The moment of awakening follows immediately on that of falling asleep, however long the interval may appear to be to those living during that interval. The confusion arises because we find it so difficult to get rid of the idea that the dead are not dead but consciously alive somewhere, and somehow, and are as conscious of the passage of time as we are. We "know not the power of God," but credit Him with our limited ideas.—H. T. W. in Words of Life.

ENDURANCE

By R. H. Judd

IN THE last issue of Brother Randall's excellent little leaflet which comes occasionally from Fonthill, and which I have mislaid, either Hebrews 6:6 or 2 Peter 2:20 was made the subject of comment.

Who is there that has not been seriously troubled by the force of the language used? There are some who think that it is not possible for a converted person to be lost. The writer feels that he is not able to accept that position, for the possibility seems to be too plainly warned against by numerous scriptures.

Like most passages of Scripture that are difficult of understanding, a careful study of the language used, together with the context, will, I think, give the answer.

In 2 Peter 2:20, it would seem to me that the answer is found in the word "overcome"—"and are overcome." If the reader will take the trouble to get his concordance and Bible and turn to the many passages where blessing is promised to the "overcomer," he will not only be surprised, but will himself get a blessing. Doubt is sometimes expressed as to John's authorship of the book of Revelation, but this key word, "overcoming," seems to settle that matter, for both Revelation and John's epistle abound with the thought.

In the Old Testament we have the same thought expressed more than once. See for instance Proverbs 24:16, R. V., "For the righteous man falleth seven times, and riseth up again: but the wicked are overthrown by calamity." See also the solemn words of Ezekiel 18:19-32, which seem to me to carry the same message in language of deep concern, but with the predominant note of repentance and restoration while life gives opportunity.

Hebrews 6:6 is for many a most difficult passage. I well remember some forty-odd years ago when I was a member of Walmer Road Baptist Church in Toronto and the late Rev. Elmore Harris was pastor how very deeply some of us were concerned over this passage. The pastor most kindly pointed out that the very fact of our concern and the sincerity of it were themselves an indication that we had not come under the condition indicated. Further, he directed our attention to the marginal reading of the sixth verse, which is, "whilst they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh." It was "whilst" in a condition away from God that they could not be restored. Here again the language seems to be in full harmony with Ezekiel 18. While God grants life, He also grants opportunity; and oh, how frequent are His calls to return unto Him while opportunity is ours!

Pastoral Responsibility in the Latter Times

By Lyman Booth

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant (or urgent) in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and doctrine."

THIS is Paul's last charge to Timothy, as expressed in 2 Timothy 4:1, 2. He expresses it in the most solemn form, as if delivering it in the presence of God and His Son and also the appearing of Christ and His kingdom.

"Proclaim the tidings; be urgent in season and out of season; convince, rebuke, exhort with all forbearance and perseverance, in teaching." "In all things be sober; endure affliction; do the work of an evangelist; accomplish thy ministry in full assurance." Proclaim as a herald the Word of God, the gospel or glad tidings of the kingdom of God, as taught by our Lord.

Timothy had known the Old Scriptures, having been taught them from infancy. Though the New Testament had not then been written, Paul had fully instructed him in its teachings.

Reprove, or convince: show them wherein they are wrong. Rebuke: show them their sins. Exhort: show the truth as opposed to their error, the right as opposed to their sin. All this was to be done with all forbearance and perseverance in teaching the Word of God.

Paul gave Timothy a brief account of his personal ministry, as if he intended it as a pattern for Timothy to follow, using a metaphor taken from the Greek foot race to illustrate his ministerial labors, for which a reward or prize awaited him. He was confidently looking for a crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge would bestow to him and to all those who love the Lord's appearing. He had "fought a good fight," he had run a good race, he had completed a glorious contest, and through it all his faith and fealty had never faltered. He had kept inviolate his trust in Christ.

With the exception of our Lord, Paul was the greatest and most tireless preacher of the Word among men. He said he had labored more abundantly than all the apostles (1 Corinthians 15:10). He did not say this in a boastful spirit, for he thanked God for grace that enabled him to accomplish the work to which Christ had called him. He was pastor of all the churches in a general way; for we read in 2 Corinthians 11:28, after enumerating the trials, persecutions, and perils through which he had gone, "Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches." Not only was he pastor of one, but of "all the churches."

In point of usefulness the office of pastor is first in the church. It is in the pastor that we find the minister in all his functions. He is an ambassador of Christ, a ruler, a teacher, a steward of the deep things of God, a shepherd to feed the sheep and lambs. While some of these may have similar meaning, none have quite a comprehensive significance.

The pastoral office comprises several functions, chief of which is preaching, the proper ministry of the Word. While preaching the Word is preeminent, it should not crowd out other pastoral duties. None should be neglected, but all should be attended to with earnestness and zeal. The truly efficient and earnest pastor will find no time for aimless leisure, no time to repose on flowery beds of ease. Nothing can be of more profit to the cause of truth than the energy and courage which truth should inspire in the mind of a truly devout pastor.

If ever there was a time during the centuries when there was urgent need on the part of the pastor for that boldness which moves about with wisdom and truth, it is the present. Whatever is essential to the spread of Christianity should be clearly and forcibly stated.

"The meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."—Psalm 37:11.

The Editor's Prayer

DIRECT us, O God, that we may not be led to put our trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no salvation. For his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. But lead us, our Father, to put our faith in Thee, whose plans and purposes are ever righteous and assured of success ages before they are brought to maturity. Then shall we be moved to echo the words of Thy servant of old, "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in Jehovah his God!"

An Interesting Comment

AN INTERESTING comment on the meaning of the Hebrew word sheol occurs in The Standard Bible Teacher, published by the Standard Publishing Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, for the last quarter. The text under discussion is Isaiah 5:14 and 15, beginning with these words from the American Standard Version: "Therefore Sheol hath enlarged its desire and opened its mouth without measure." The comment follows.

"What a picture of death and the grave! Sheol means the grave. Consider a hideous monster with wide-open mouth swallowing up its victims. That is the picture here drawn of the grave. . . The grave spares no man or nation. The individual or the nation that gives itself to drink shall go down to Sheol, in ignominy and shame. . . Yes, at the last the mean man bows to the inevitable—death and the grave. All his skulduddery will avail nothing. There are no secret passages of escape. (In) Sheol all are on the same level."

Fooling Ourselves

MANY of our exchanges are lamenting the apparent breaking down of prohibition sentiment throughout the country and are predicting the dire results that will follow the removal of the restrictions placed upon the liquor traffic by the Eighteenth Amendment. With all of this we are in most hearty agreement, for surely no danger faces our country greater than that of the threatened return of the old saloon and all that went with it.

To the thoughtful and independent thinker and investigator who does not depend for his information on the misleading and frequently false assertions of the "wets," prohibition has been far from the failure it is painted. It is true the rich can still secure their liquor from the hands of the illicit vendor, but one needs but to recall the scenes of twenty years ago among the poorer classes and compare them with conditions today to be convinced that much good has been accomplished and much misery averted through the enactment and partial enforcement of our prohibitory laws.

Our purpose, however, at this time is not to arouse the people to a sense of moral obligation with regard to the coming election. We believe the historic attitude of the Church of God toward political questions is the right one still: that is, that as a church we should take no active part in worldly governments; but as individuals we are free to act as conscience, enlivened by the spirit of Christ, may dictate.

The tremendously important fact that the present situation forces home upon us is the ultimate futility of depending upon human means and human power to attain ends which only God Himself can accomplish through Jesus Christ. Governments are but human after all. No law can be enforced for any length of time that does not meet with the "consent of the governed," at least in this country. And the unanimous "consent of the governed" can never be obtained to any moral regulation or restriction until the hearts of the people have been made moral. This great task goes far beyond the power of human legislation to bring about. Nothing short of the Spirit of God can work such a change in mankind.

The most valuable contribution, therefore, which the Church of God can make to the temperance cause today is through increased evangelistic activity. Converting men and women to Christ through the power of the gospel will accomplish what no law could accomplish, however righteous it might be and however faithfully it might be enforced.

Let us not fool ourselves with delusions of a world made free from intemperance or from any other sin through the efforts of men. The establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth at the coming of Christ is the only hope.

"JESUS AND THE JEW"

By Mary A. Gesin

WHILE listening to the inspiring sermon by our pastor at Oregon on Sunday night, October 9, on the above theme, we were reminded of the fact that many of THE HERALD readers who are isolated, and perhaps others, too, would greatly enjoy that inestimable privilege. And so we have ventured to bring to you some of Brother Marsh's thoughts on this interesting topic. The subject was especially appealing because of its being delivered on the evening of a notable day in the calendar of the faithful Jew—a day of prayer for the many sins of the people of Israel.

Early in his discourse Brother Marsh propounded this query: If you were to ask any true Jew as to his understanding of the "kingdom of heaven" which Jesus preached, what would be his answer? Without hesitancy he would reply, "The kingdom of Israel."

Jesus Himself was a Jew; to the Jews He came preaching the gospel of the kingdom; from the Jews He drew His apostles who went forth proclaiming its establishment. "Go," said He, "not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matthew 10:5-7.

To the Jewish mind the kingdom of heaven of Jesus' preaching and the kingdom of Israel on earth were and are interchangeable terms. The kingdom of the Lord is identified many times in Old Testament utterances with the throne of Israel. A prominent example is found in 1 Chronicles 28:4-7. Thus, when the faithful Jew is praying, "Thy kingdom come," he is looking with joyful anticipation to the very day of peace and righteousness and equity on earth for which we so ardently long.

In light of the fact that we realize that blessing shall come to the peoples of earth through the channel of the Jew, ought the Christian be led into habits of derision, mockery, and insult of which he has been the target for centuries past?

That Jesus was destined to be King on the throne of the kingdom of the Lord on earth, angels announced on the night of His birth in the familiar words of Luke 1:32. And throughout His brief span of years He proclaimed that kingdom in both word and deed, going "about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people."—Matt. 9:35.

Despite all this, His own rejected their King; they would not have Him to rule over them, declaring to Pilate, "We have no king but Caesar." That One who came to bring blessing in place of curse, peace instead of war, righteousness rather than sin, they hanged upon the cruel tree. Thus they left the Son of God, their anointed King to die. But He was not rejected by God, for three days later He arose triumphant over death, alive for evermore.

Gradually the attitude of the Jew is changing toward the One they so heartlessly condemned, Brother Marsh declared. Today prominent rabbis are found who, though they do not yet accept Jesus as their Savior and Messiah, yet, like Pilate, they "find no fault in him." Though they cannot concur in the exalted opinion that the Christian holds of his Savior, yet they declare that here was a Prophet equal to, if not greater than, Moses.

But the day is near at hand when our beloved Lord will return, and then the Jews will look upon Him "whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn."—Zechariah 12:10. When they completely realize the depth of their folly and wickedness in rejecting Him, great will be the cry that shall ascend from their agonized hearts, and they will enter upon the greatest "Day of Atonement" they have ever known, calling upon Jehovah for pardon, and pledging their loyal submission to the mighty One who sits upon the throne of His father David, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

Then shall the Lord, even their God, "give them one heart, and I will put," He assures them, "a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh: that they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God."—Ezekiel 11:19, 20.

Then shall Israel with all peoples of earth echo the

PALESTINE

Land of Israel's favor'd nation—
Dreariness so long been thine—
Thou shalt wake from desolation—
Sure the word, "Arise and shine!"

We will mark the tokens telling
Of thy coming day of might—
Then all other lands excelling,
Thou shalt gleam with heav'nly light.

Wake, O wake, with song resounding!
Royal harp, renew thy strain!
Wilderness, in bloom abounding,
Greet thee our Messiah's reign.

Glory! Glory! Glory! Glory!
Thou a land of joy shalt be!
God shall speedily restore thee—
Canaan! Be our home in thee.

“WHY DIDN'T YOU LET US KNOW?”

By D. G. Harvey

GEORGE C. Stebbins, inspired by the words of an old “heathen” black man in darkest Africa, wrote the following words:

“Why didn't you tell us sooner?
The words came sad and slow:
Oh, ye who know the gospel truths,
Why didn't you let us know?
The Savior died for all the world,
He died to save from woe;
But we never heard the story—
Why didn't you let us know?”

At the close of a missionary service, hearing for the first time the story of God's love for the world, that God had given His only begotten Son, that all who believed might not perish but have everlasting life, this old man of the black race, asked the simple question, “heathen” though he was, that any Christian should ponder over, “Why didn't you let us know?”

This poor unlearned fellow man, no doubt, was thinking of the millions of his ancestors who had lived their lives and died in absolute ignorance of the only name under heaven whereby they should be saved. Should he believe this story of love as told by this white preacher, whose race had worshiped such a God and so lately had come to his people with the story that only the believing were destined to a home in “glory,” while his people, knowing nothing of the Word of God, were doomed to everlasting torture in a lake of fire called “hell”? He could see no justice for his people.

This question by this black “heathen” could as well be asked of you by some of your white or black fellow citizens of your own town or state. Thousands of them have never had the truths of the Word of God pointed out to them. Thousands, yes, millions of your own neighbors are going down victims of the enemy death, without hope.

You who have the truth, who have hope of resurrection when our Lord returns—what are you going to answer to that question? Can you feel the same gladness of heart that Paul reveals of himself as he writes, “Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.”—Acts 20:26, 27.

Think of it, brethren, men and women, every second of the day, are going into death without a word from you. Think of the large cities—thousands of people, and not one has heard of the blessed hope. Can't you hear them asking, “Why didn't you let us know?”

Our Master asks us, “Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?”—Luke 6:46.

What did He tell His disciples to do? Go to church once a week? or once a month? help pay the preacher? just gather in a little group and let the rest of the world go its way? Brethren, I can find no such doctrine in my Bible. It may be in yours.

These things help in a small way to strengthen us; but it is not obeying our Master's command, “Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.”—Mark 16:15.

You say, “I can't preach.”

But you can look at Mark 13:10. “And the gospel must first be published among all nations.”

Brethren, this gospel is being published in this paper, in many tracts, and in Berean books. There you can help. Put a copy of THE RESTITUTION HERALD in the hands of as many as you can. Carry a good supply of tracts. Talk to all of the friends you meet; hand them tracts; organize a Berean class. Go to church yourself; invite others to go. Urge your elders to hold a series of meetings often.

Meet every Sunday. If you cannot obtain the services of one of our ministers, hold a Berean study. Let the elders feed the flock; but first, last, and always, preach the gospel as did Paul, “warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus.”—Col. 1:28.

The words of the old song well express our closing thoughts better than any words of my own.

“You say you're a Christian disciple,
That you try His work to do;
And yet His very last command
Is disobeyed by you.
'Tis indeed a wondrous story,
He loved the whole world so
That He came and died to save us—
Why didn't you let us know?”

THE FOUNDATIONS OF A NATION

THE BIBLE is the best national constitution ever written, and only as they are based upon it are our national constitutions permanent and useful.

The Hebrew nation was built upon a recognition of God. Simply that God exists, that He is one, that His is the supreme and individual right to men's allegiance—this truth is adequate foundation for a state. But the Hebrews went further.

Their nation was built upon a recognition of God's justice. He is a righteous God, and so He requires righteousness in all His children. Justice in all human relationships was therefore a foundation of the Hebrew nation. And the Hebrews went still further.

They included an understanding of the love of God as well as His justice. Their nation was built upon thanksgiving, upon remembrance of all that God had done for them in the past, upon the happy assurance that God's loving protection would be theirs for all the future.

Faith, hope, love—love to God and love to man—these are the true foundations of a nation.—Adapted.

RE-IMMERSION

By George B. Alldridge

“And corresponding to that figure, the water of baptism now saves you—not the washing off of material defilement, but the craving of a good conscience after God—through the resurrection of Jesus Christ, who is at God’s right hand, having gone into heaven, angels and authorities and powers having been made subject unto him.”—1 Peter 3:21, 22, Weymouth.

How often, after setting forth to those interested in the truth the requirements of the gospel, we hear this declaration: “But I have been baptized!” We inquire, quoting Paul’s words, “Unto what then were ye baptized?” Usually the answer is, “I do not know what you mean. All I know is that I was baptized; yet I admit I did not at the time realize its significance as I do now.”

Then in a humble way, not attempting to parade before them my knowledge of the Scriptures I ask: “Do you recall Acts 8:12?” which I invariably quote. Weymouth makes it a little more clear than the A. V. “But when Philip began to tell the Good News about the kingdom of God and about the name of Jesus Christ, and they embraced the faith, they were baptized, men and women alike.”

I think sometimes, dear brethren, we become too personal in our remarks, trying to hammer the truth home instead of using Jesus’ and His apostles’ method, which after all was God’s method. “Come now, and let us reason together.”—Isaiah 1:18; see also Acts 17:2; 18:4, 19; 24:25.

In presenting the truth to people interested we should always use the questioning method; in the end you will find it the most satisfactory and profitable. So we ask: “When you were baptized did you believe in natural immortality and that at death you would ascend into heaven?” If our friend is honest, and usually he is, he will answer, “Yes.” Then we would say, “In your case there was no need of your being saved, as you would never die. Jesus’ death was on behalf of those who are dead, or are subject to death. So then, as baptism represents death and resurrection you have not yet intelligently complied with that command.”

Permit me to read Acts 19:1-5. You notice that these friends of Paul, like you, had been baptized. Let us consider who these were.

We will read Acts 18:24, 25. Note carefully the character and learning of Apollos, “an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures.” When we speak of eloquence we mean the art of speaking with fluency and elegance. So then the context proves that Apollos’ eloquence lay in the fact that he was mighty in the Scriptures. Yet Paul pointed out that the baptism that saves must be resulting from a faith in Christ Jesus, who came after John, into whose baptism they had previously been baptized.

Since you have been inquiring into and learning the truth, you have become so familiar with terms and expressions used in presenting it to you that your mind will deceive you, assuming you believed these things when you were immersed, really into the nominal system and as a believer of their false teachings.

I will quote to you from Dr. Moffatt’s translation (considered by scholars the nearest to the original we have today). Eph. 4:20-24: “That is not how you have understood the meaning of Christ (for it is Christ whom you have been taught, it is in Christ that you have been instructed—the real Christ who is Jesus); you must lay aside the old nature which belonged to your former course of life, that nature which crumbles to ruin under the passions of moral deceit and be renewed in the spirit of your mind, putting divine pattern which has been created in the upright and pious character of the truth.”

You notice in this reading that there is something we put off and something we put on. When you were immersed under your former church relationship, what did you put off and what did you put on? You could not have put off the “old nature,” for you believed that you never die. You could not have put on the new, for you did not need it. You believed that your soul, being immortal, at death would go “straight to glory.”

In Romans 6:3, we read, “Know ye not that so many of us (not everybody) as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?” In verse five we read, “For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.”

Let us read Galatians 3:27: “For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.” What does this mean? May I ask you why you wear clothes? “Of course,” you answer, “for protection and covering.”

We read in Acts 15:7-14 that the design of the gospel is to take out of the nations a people for the name of Jehovah. What name is this? Well, we will go back as far as the days of Moses and try to answer your question.

You recall Moses’ conversation with the angel of God. When the children of Israel sought to know by what authority he came to deliver them from bondage, he was to answer, “I AM THAT I AM . . . I AM hath sent me unto you." Moffatt reads, "God said to Moses I-will-be-what-I-will-be; tell the Israelites that I-will-be has sent you to them."

After Jesus' resurrection He commanded His disciples, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

The name, I-will-be-what-I-will-be, is the name which covered and protected Israel, delivering them from Egypt and bringing them into the promised land. In symbol, Moses being the mediator, Israel was baptized when they crossed the Red Sea. Into this name in symbol, with Jesus as our Mediator, we are covered and protected by being baptized.

A couple are engaged to be married. They love each other; both retain their own names until the law pronounces them husband and wife. After this the wife forever loses her name, and henceforth the law protects and covers her in her relationship to her husband under his name, which constitutes them one.

In Ephesians 2:12-22, those who are in Christ or covered and protected by His name, placed on them in baptism, are constituted as one family or household, all bearing this one name.

Probably none of us would claim to be living a more godly life than Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band (Acts 10:1-2). His alms and prayers ascended for a memorial before God. It is an interesting chapter, concluding with the story of all who believed, including Cornelius, being baptized in the name of the Lord.

All of us like to base our faith upon something definite. When the test comes, credulity fails us. Here is a rock, and if our faith is based on it, it can never be shaken. "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12.

How exacting our government is becoming toward all who are seeking to become her adopted citizens—a knowledge and clear understanding of what is required before the oath of allegiance will be administered. After the judge pronounces you a citizen of the United States of America, you lose your former status; you are no longer a German, Frenchman, Russian, or citizen of another country. You can now, equally with him who was born such, call yourself an American, and are entitled to all the blessings and privileges that relationship entails.

After you are baptized into the name of and into the body of Christ, you become a new creature. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." What a change has come over us! Now the words of Philippians 3:20, 21 become our experience: "We, however, are free citizens of Heaven, and we are waiting with longing expectation for the coming from Heaven of a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who, in the exercise of the power which He has even to subject all things to Himself, will transform this body of our humiliation until it resembles His own glorious body. Therefore, my brethren, dearly loved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand firm in the Lord, my dearly-loved ones."—Weymouth.

My dear friends, you who are holding back from obeying Jesus, if you could appreciate His words in Luke 21:31, as I do, "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand," you would at your first opportunity be baptized into and covered by that all saving name—Jesus. "Then like a stout and valiant soldier when he must be up and fighting with the enemies, oversleepeth not himself but keepeth his standing, and hath his weapons and armor already upon him."—Eph. 6:12-18; Rom. 13:11-14.

How the words of Jesus thrill me as I feel He will soon be here! I would see Jesus. To see Him means I must fight hard, and this as I am conscious of His help means joy and pleasure. None will or can accept in this warfare an easy success.

Jesus, what a price it cost you to suffer and die! So I must arm myself with the same mind, for if we suffer with Him, we shall reign with Him. The joy of overcoming? Yes, brethren, but the fight comes first! Oh Paul, how true your words are! If there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think of these things. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

"The dead in Christ shall first arise,
At the last trumpet's sounding.
Caught up to meet Him in the skies,
With joy their Lord surrounding!
No gloomy fears their souls dismay;
His presence sheds eternal day
On those prepared to meet Him."

THE CAUSE OF THE WORLD'S PLIGHT

By Samuel E. Haney

"Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not."—Jeremiah 5:21.

OUR TEXT was originally addressed to the typical Jews, but it is equally, if not more, applicable to the antitypical Jews—Israelites indeed—Christians, a fact which causes the text to apply to almost the whole human race en masse today. And to this deaf and sightless homogenous mass of human flesh God strives to describe Himself—His omnipotent power—that He may at least excite their curiosity.

Note verses 22, 25, 30, and 31 of this chapter: "Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it? . . . Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you. . . . A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?"

Unregenerate mankind, irrespective of its boasted knowledge of ancient and modern achievements, culture, and civilization, has become so imbued with its ego self-righteousness and vanity as the result of an over-indulgence in Babylon's "wine" that it is less considerate, comprehensive, and logical than was Balaam's ass. Read this beast's brief biography as recorded in Numbers 22:20-41 and Peter's opportune application to the Balaams of our generation, thus: "Accursed generation! they have gone wrong by leaving the straight road, by following the road of Balaam son of Bosor, who liked the profits of evil-doing: but he got reproved for his malpractice: a dumb ass spoke with human voice and checked the prophet's infatuation."—2 Peter 2:15, 16, Moffatt. Men have "a form of godliness," but deny "the power thereof." They even make a jest of the sacred record of God's punishment of the wicked in the past, and of the numerous prophecies concerning His hovering wrath over the unrighteous.

Further comment by Isaiah: "And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed."—Isaiah 6:9, 10. This is the class Jesus and Paul refer to, namely, "And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet."—Matthew 10:11-15; Acts 13:51.

It should not be difficult to discern the cause of this deplorable state of affairs: the pulpit is not giving the pew knowledge of the truth concerning the times and seasons in which we are living. Jesus explains it thus: "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."—Matthew 15:13, 14. And there they are, without God and devoid of a desire to know Him, causing them to be destitute of a definite hope of life.

Man, of whom God is no respecter (1 Peter 1:17), has brought about his own destined doom by failing to recognize and acknowledge his dependence upon God for every moment of his existence. Such behavior has demonstrated to all heaven a superlative degree of ingratitude by making a common thing of the blood of the Lamb of God, through and by which only God's recognition and assistance can be made accessible and access to the "way of life" through Jesus Christ possible.

The reason Jesus said, "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man," was that conditions shall be the same, namely, man's estrangement from God, his hostility to righteousness, and his antagonism to the fruits of the Holy Spirit. Of Noah's days it is written, "The earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way ('its way,' Roth.) upon the earth. And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them: and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth."—Genesis 6:11-13.

There never would be "foolish people and without understanding" were they to heed God's Word. "The fear of the Lord ('the reverence,' Roth.) is to hate evil: pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate."—Proverbs 8:13. Such conduct is the greatest barrier to God's kingdom. Hence, God says, "A froward heart shall depart from me; I will not know a wicked person. . . . I will early destroy all the wicked of the land, that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord."—Psalm 101:4, 8.

Now the cause and effect of this catastrophe, namely, blinded eyes and calloused eardrums resulting in the greatest of all calamities which is now dawning upon this wicked world, are the antitheses of humility and "the fruit of the Spirit," which "is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith" (Galatians 5:22) and which Peter says is an "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Peter 3:4).

Some of God's promises to the meek and humble follow: "Lord, thou hast heard the desire of the humble: thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cause thine ear to hear."—Psalm 10:17. "When God arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth."—Psalm 76:9. "The Lord lifteth up the meek: he casteth the wicked down to the ground."—Psalm 147:6. "The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy

OUR HIGH CALLING

By M. W. Perrine

WHEN I say, "Our high calling," I mean those who hear the call and pay heed to it and comply with the requirements which God has laid down.

God is the one who is calling. It is the same call that God made to the children of Israel out of Mt. Sinai by Moses. "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation."

And we find Peter ascribing to the Christian church the same high calling. He says to them, "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. To whom coming as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ . . . But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light."—1 Peter 2:2-5, 9.

The Jews rejected the call when they crucified the Christ, thereby losing the high honor which God had purposed to confer upon them. And Paul asks the question, "I say then, Hath God cast away his people? God forbid."

"Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth."—Acts 13:46-47. One fair opportunity was all that the Lord gave, and they lost to themselves that high honor. Now the call goes to the whole world.

God had a people whom He chose. He called them out of Egypt and led them through the wilderness and judged them and was their God until the days of Samuel, when they rejected Him as being their King. Yet, in the days of Saul and David, He formed them into a kingdom and gave them a man to reign over them. Under the reign of Solomon it was still called the kingdom of God (see 1 Chronicles 28:5), but in the days of Zedekiah it was overturned.

It is this same kingdom that God has promised to re-establish and set up (Amos 9:11) with Jesus, the Messiah, as the King. It is the people whom He is calling out from the world to bear His name and be joint heirs with Him and co-rulers in that kingdom whom He designates as kings and priests unto Him to reign with Him a thousand years.

This calling was a high calling; and Israel failed to come up to the mark of which Paul says, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Philippians 3:14. This is the same mark toward which all the saints in Christ Jesus are called to press. Why? Because there is a prize that lies at the end of it. "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded."—Philippians 3:15. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."—Philippians 2:5. Just as long as we have the mind of Christ and walk in Him and abide in Him, we are accounted as perfect; and that is as near as we will ever get to perfection.

We learn further of this calling when we hear the testimony of the redeemed ones as they fall down before the Lamb which stood in the midst of the throne, having every one of them harps and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints. "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Revelation 5:9, 10.

They are called to be kings and priests and to reign on the earth. Any other honors to be conferred upon them? Yes! Paul says, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life."—1 Corinthians 6:2, 3. "To reign and to judge" means to rule. The Old Testament judges were rulers. More than that, it means to execute judgment. (See Psalm 149.)

So you can see that the saints have something more to occupy their time than simply to sit and enjoy themselves playing on golden harps—not that they will not sing the praises of the God who saved them, extol His name and the name of Jesus who redeemed them, and make a joyful noise upon stringed instruments. Hear what David says about them, "Praise ye the Lord. Sing unto the Lord a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints. Let Israel rejoice in him that made him; let the children of Zion be joyful in their King. . . . Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a twoedged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written: this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord."—Psalm 149.

This world is a bed of iniquity, yet it is to constitute the kingdom of God. "The Son of man shall send forth his angels (messengers), and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."—Matthew 13:41, 42. The very fact that the saints are to judge the world may indicate that these messengers might be the saints. I do not say they will be, but angel means messenger. Malachi says, "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. . . And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this."—Malachi 4:1, 3.

But some one may say, "I thought God was a God of mercy and love." He has declared Himself such; but at the same time He is just, and His laws must be vindicated; for they are broadcast throughout the earth, and they are "perfect, converting the soul." If God's laws were obeyed, we would have a perfect government and a perfect people. David said, "Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face."—Psalm 89:14.

David's and Solomon's kingdom was called the kingdom of God. (1 Chronicles 29:23.) It was typical of God's kingdom that He shall set up under the Christ. David was a man of war and blood. Even so will Christ's kingdom be, for all the nations will be arrayed against Him.

And what was His edict with reference to these citizens when He returned? "But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me."—Luke 19:27. To whom did He give this command? Was it not to those to whom He had given authority over ten cities and five cities?

Surely the saints would have something to do in looking after the affairs of ten cities if they were all as large and as wicked as Seattle.

When the kingdoms are subdued and brought into subjection to Christ, then it is that Solomon's kingdom will in type represent the peaceful aspect of Christ's kingdom just before it is turned over to the Father, when God is to be all in all. "He (Jesus) shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth. In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth."—Psalm 72:6, 7.

The overcomer who is a king and priest unto God and Christ has his work to perform during the reign of Christ. "He that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father."—Revelation 2:26, 27.

The overcomer has a task to perform, not only in this world, but in the world to come. Yet is it not a fact that God has declared that day, the day of the Lord, the seven thousandth year in the world's history, as a day of rest? The Apostle Paul says, "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."—Hebrews 4:9. And he also declares that we enter it during the present age by faith. "We which have believed do enter into rest. . . . Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief."—Hebrews 4:3, 6. So we can see that the rest is in Christ, especially in this world, even though actively engaged in His work.

David said in Psalm 37:7, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him." You can rest while working for the Lord, or you can rest while waiting on Him. "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land."—Psalm 37:34.

The moment you enter into Christ, as Noah entered into the ark, and God shuts you in, as He did Noah, you will be safely carried through the time of trouble even as was Noah.

THE END OF THE WORLD

By J. G. Haupt

---

WITHIN the last century or more, at intervals, certain adventist bodies and others have fearfully predicted the near approach of the end of the world. Antichrists have been indicated as possible predecessors of each final day. The first antichrist of whom we seem to have mention probably is Bar-jesus, of Acts 13:6. In his epistles John refers to antichrists in past and future tense.

Since Bible times there have been teachers of peculiar doctrines, such as Swedenborg, Joseph Smith, and Mary Baker Eddy, none of whom can strictly be accused of being opposed to Christ or as aiming to supersede Him; while of late we have had Bahai, a preacher from Persia who claimed for a time to be another Christ.

Every active opponent of Christ and of God may be classed as an antichrist, as the word is used in the Bible. Thus, many antichrists of greater or less force have appeared in the world and will doubtless continue to appear. Wars and rumors of wars will occupy unhappily the stage until the trumpet call brings the dead in Christ to life and changes those living in Him in a moment from mortality to immortality.

Thereafter they will labor with their Leader, the mighty Christ of God, for a thousand years, during the period commonly known as the millennium (Rev. 20:6). When the thousand years have expired the rest of the dead are to rise.

Then will come the great judgment period during which the persistently wicked are to pass into Gehenna, the second death. From this time forward the righteous will be forever with their Lord. There will be no end of the literal world, for it shall last forever. (Rev. 5:10; 11:15; 22:5.)

Much confusion has been created by the translation of the Greek word aion, meaning age, as world. The end of an age is not the same as the end of the world. The last of a devout prayer of Christians as given by Paul (Eph. 3:21) is, "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

The "ages of the age," the "age to come," and the "coming age" are terms expressive of the eternal or final period of the earth. Hades, sin, and Satan will have been cast into Gehenna and utterly destroyed. This long period of bliss is sometimes called the end of the world and also the last day, for it marks the end of sin and death for evermore.

THE JEWISH SANHEDRIN

By the Editor

THE readers of THE RESTITUTION HERALD, as friends of the Jews whom Jesus loved and for whose forgiveness He so graciously prayed from the cross, are deeply interested in all that concerns this ancient "sign people" of Jehovah, particularly when their activities have to do with their attitude toward the Lord Jesus. They will recall having read some time ago in the secular press of a proposal being made by certain leaders among them to convene the Sanhedrin, which is the Supreme Court of the Jews throughout the world, to review the trial of Jesus, and will be anxious to know what progress the movement has made.

The Jewish Hope, a Christian Jewish paper published in Los Angeles, has this to say regarding the matter in its October issue:

"The Jewish lawyer, Mr. Shwayder of Denver, Colorado, who instigated this movement, committed suicide in Los Angeles a few months ago. With his death this movement came to an end, as his followers do not have the encouragement to promulgate his plan on account of the great difficulties which arose through the opposition of the Jewish rabbis. The Jewish papers asserted that Mr. Schwayder died of a broken heart as the result of the great opposition, as his idea did not coincide with the teaching of the Talmud."

Commenting on the above report, The Hope adds: "The Lord has another way and very soon the Jews and their rabbis will mourn for 'him whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son' (Zech. 12:10); and they will cry out: 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.'"—Matthew 23:39.

THE CAUSE OF THE WORLD'S PLIGHT

One of Israel."—Isaiah 29:19. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth."—Matthew 5:5.

We shall have our Lord's summary of the two divisions of our subject: a foolish people, which have eyes, and see not; ears, and hear not; and a people which have seeing eyes and hearing ears. "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. But blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear."—Matthew 13:15, 16.

Finally, God, through Martin Luther and his contemporaries, opened the Bible which Satan had kept closed to the world about nine hundred years, so causing those of recent generations who have sightless eyes and insensible ears to be personally responsible for their spiritual obtuseness.

The unregenerate world is soon to learn that man's logic and ways are much out of harmony with God's logic and ways (Isaiah 55:8, 9)—a heartrending disappointment!

PASTORAL RESPONSIBILITY

A lake fed by a running stream is a fit symbol of the pastor's mind, always acquiring fresh knowledge, never permitting itself to become stagnant. When a pastor ceases to learn, that moment he weakens his ability to teach. He should regard his mind as an instrument in God's hand to communicate to others the knowledge of the Scriptures and to present them carefully and with precision. This work should go hand in hand with prayer.

Strive not for eloquent speech, but use words which the Holy Spirit has imparted through God's servants, the prophets, His Son, and the apostles—sound speech which cannot be denied. Enticing words of man's wisdom cannot improve God's Word. No one would think of painting gold to make it shine. So it is with the scriptural expressions: they need no coloring to make them effective.

The pastor should constantly draw from the fount of inspiration and live in habitual communion with the infinite truth and love. Then the words he utters will possess a charm, a force, a power to touch men's minds and to mold their thoughts, which they wish to convey to others. No words of eloquence can effect the results that the plain, simple words of truth should, when uttered in the spirit of Him who taught with authority. Then there will be a perceptible recognition of the divine fire which touched the lips of the prophets.

A pastor and all under his charge should ever "lean upon the everlasting arms" for help, and not upon human pity and help. All alike should keep the simplicity of child-like trust; none should measure his fidelity by the praise and applause of men. Ever remember that success in the final awards depends on the exact measure of the zeal and constancy of the communion with the Lord.

The office of the minister is to point out and carry forward in man's behalf Christ's reconciling work by communication or incentive, by rousing and kindling any dormant capacity of being, and by taking the things of the Spirit, so teaching people the difference between active, earnest Christian life and indolent stupor, between implicit faith in God's Word and spiritual indifference, between the true worship of God and the worship of mammon.

Those who follow this course can look forward, with Paul, in blissful anticipation, to that glad day when they shall receive from the hand of a righteous Judge a crown that fadeth not away. May reader and writer be among the mighty host of the redeemed.

DENY YOURSELF

THE month of October has come again, bringing with it the beautifully-colored leaves, the crisp, cool mornings, and all the delights of autumn. What a great deal we have to be thankful for! Are we really appreciative of God's goodness?

As we all know, this is Self-Denial Month; and we have planned to deny ourselves of any luxuries that we would buy during this month. This money which we would have spent will be given to our Relief Committee chairman, Sr. Orpha Sanford, who will use it to help the poverty-stricken people who need it so badly.

Come, Bereans, let us show God how thankful we are and give our nickels and dimes to our local Berean treasurers, who will send them to the State Berean treasurer, Sr. Esta Starbuck, 624 Grove St., Rockford, Illinois, who will properly care for them.

—Elizabeth Ford.

MAN-LIKE it is to fall into sin,
Fiend-like it is to dwell therein;
Christ-like it is for sin to grieve,
God-like it is all sin to leave.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Let us not be weary in well doing."

RESPECT FOR OUR RULERS

FROM the smallest tot to whom Mother reads this Children's Page to Grandpa or Grandma, everybody has some one to whom he must be obedient. First of all, God is over all of us, and if we want to be happy and enjoy life we must obey God. He comes first; let us never forget that.

Then under Him, God has placed the men who are at the head of our government. And our lesson tells us that only those who do wrong need be afraid of any of the rulers or officers. For they are for our protection from evil and danger.

At school, are our teachers to whom we owe a great deal for the interest they take in us. Of course we try to please them in every possible way. And we do this not only for ourselves but for the sake of our classmates so that all will run smoothly.

And over each of us, as long as we are living with our parents and being cared for by them, are Mother and Father, whom we should always honor with prompt obedience, because they, too, are placed over us by God for our good.

Besides all these reasons, we want to obey those over us because we love them, don't we? It's so much easier to obey some one whom we love. Why, we'd be miserable if we made them sad by disobedience. And the one who early in life learns to obey, has a much better and happier time when he gets out into the world. By the time he is grown-up obedience will be so natural to him that he will not think of anything different.

How many of you know a verse that says that Jesus was obedient to His Father? Can you find the one that tells us we should obey Him as He obeys His Father?

THE TRAIL OF THE SUNFLOWER SEEDS

At the next place he brought in the morning paper for Grandpa Barker. Next he carried kindling wood for Mr. Dewey. Then there was a lawn mower to keep steady while John Harmon sharpened the blades. Oh, there seemed to be plenty of right things to do.

Marvin had just carried the clothespin bag outside for Mrs. Cook who always had lots of clothes to wash, when he saw Stephen coming down the street, wheeling his bicycle.

"I must give Stephen his sunflower seeds," exclaimed Marvin.

He felt of his pockets. How flat they were! He felt inside. And what do you suppose he found? Not sunflower seeds, but two teeny-weeny holes! Just then, Stephen reached him.

"S-Stephen," said Marvin slowly, "I picked sunflower seeds for you. I wanted to do a good deed. There are holes in my pockets and I lost the seeds!"

Stephen smiled. "I know all about the sunflower seeds," he said.

Marvin's eyes opened wide.

"Uncle Ben came to take us to the lake, and we couldn't find you. Then I saw some sunflower seeds on the sidewalk, so I followed them and they told me lots of things. I saw Mrs. Allen and Grandpa Barker and Mr. Dewey and ever so many others, and they have told me all about Marvin's good deeds! And if it hadn't been for the sunflower seeds, I wouldn't have found you. They brought me right here! And there are more sunflower seeds in the garden," declared Stephen.

Then Stephen lifted Marvin to the handlebars of the bicycle and away they sped toward home in time to go to the lake.

KEEP ON TRYING

Don't you ever give up trying;
Don't you walk off in despair:
Just remember
You are needed
When the burden's hard to bear.

Don't you think that no one's watching;
Don't you think that no one cares:
Just you think of
Who is listening
When you kneel and say your prayers.

Don't keep looking back and sighing
O'er mistakes made in the past:
Just you keep on Trying — trying,
And you'll win through at the last.

THE CHRISTIAN AND LAW OBSERVANCE

Proverbs 23:29-35; Romans 13:1-7; 1 Corinthians 9:19-27; Galatians 6:1-10; 1 Peter 2:11-17

Devotional Reading: 1 Peter 4:12-14

GOLDEN TEXT

Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Galatians 6:7.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Christian and Law Observance.

Basic Truth: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake."—1 Peter 2:13.

Outline: I. Civil Government a Divine Institution. II. Civil Officers Are Ministers of God. III. Observance of Civil Law a Christian Requirement.

I. Civil Government a Divine Institution. (Rom. 13:1, 2.) Civil government not only has the sanction of God, but is definitely established by His will. Cf. Dan. 2:37; 4:32. He places kings in positions of authority and removes them from office when they fail to accomplish His purposes. Government is thus seen to be of divine origin; and therefore, obedience to its requirements is obligatory. To disregard the laws of the state is equivalent to disobedience to God and brings upon the lawless one divine condemnation.

II. Civil Officers Are Ministers of God. (Rom. 13:3-4.) The purpose of civil law being wholly beneficent, those who enforce the law should be looked upon as the friends of society and the "ministers of God". No one who by nature desires the well-being of his fellows and who respects the rights and property of others need have fear of the law and its administrators. Rather, these representatives of government, observing his thoughtfulness for others and his inclination to obey the spirit of the law, will account him a good citizen and worthy of all respect. Such an individual will, in turn, recognize the value of government and will manifest his approval of it by cheerfully paying the taxes necessary to maintain it.

III. Observance of Civil Law a Christian Requirement. (Rom. 13:5-7.) The disciples of the Lord are the "light of the world". They are an example of righteousness to all the world. For this reason they must "abstain from all appearance of evil" (1 Thess. 5:22); they must obey the spirit as well as the letter of both divine and civil law, not through fear of punishment, "but also for conscience' sake," that no reproach may be brought upon the name of Christ and that His lessons on righteousness may be taught by His followers by example as well as by precept.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Lawlessness: Our lesson today charges us to be subject to the higher powers. Disobedience to these powers creates lawlessness. We are living in an age when there is deliberate and cunningly planned disobedience to ordered law. Disrespect for law is not caused by prohibition. Prohibition does however reveal a certain class of lawless citizens who have wicked hearts. There is a growing element that resents any law that in any way prevents pursuing in an unrestrained way the desires of the carnal mind and the lusts of the flesh. This lawless and disobedient sentiment will continue to increase until the Lord takes His power and reigns. Obedience to God's law requires respect and obedience to the laws of the land. In resisting the power of governments we are resisting the "ordinance of God", and we "shall receive . . . damnation", v. 2. It is by the law and enforcement of same that we have the privilege and blessing of worshiping God according to the dictates of our conscience without fear of molestation. This present wave of lawlessness will continue unabated until whoever worships the Lord will do so at the risk of his life.

Lawlessness

- is always against God;
- will come to its head under the man of sin;
- has many advocates in the pulpits;
- is one of man's worst enemies;
- has its origin with the devil.

Intemperance: Intemperance pays its wages in sorrow, suffering, disappointment, degeneracy, sickness, and death. Intemperance never reaps temperance. If in early life we sow to the whirlwind the years of reaping will be wrecked by earthquake and the harvest destroyed by storms. Many are being deceived today, not realizing that whatsoever we sow that shall we reap.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6:7.

A true Christian is a law-abiding citizen. A constant law-breaker is one who is habitually sowing seeds of discord and reaping the harvest thereof. I know of nothing, unless it be insanity, that causes one to violate the law more than does the drink habit. That causes disregard for everything and everybody. That is one way of sowing to the flesh and reaping the results.

Christianity is different; it sows to the spirit. Just as surely as seed is planted and brings forth a crop, just that surely will seed sown to the flesh or to the spirit produce abundantly. The reaping is just as sure as the sowing. "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. 6:8.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

The Christian and Law Observance

God always expects His people to obey the laws of the land wherein they live, unless those laws are in direct opposition to His. Paul wrote: "Let every individual be obedient to the ruling authorities, for there is no authority not under God's control, and under his control the existing authorities have been constituted. Therefore the man who rebels against such authority is resisting God's appointment; and those that thus resist will incur sentence . . . We must obey therefore, not only for fear of punishment, but also for conscience' sake."—Rom. 13:1-5, Weymouth.

Even God does not violate human laws to accomplish His purpose. He didn't lead Israel out of Egypt until Pharaoh cried out, "Rise up, and get you forth . . . and be gone".—Ex. 12:31-32. Nebuchadnezzar decreed that the three Hebrew children should be cast into the fiery furnace. God gave no opposition to that unjust command, but He saved them after they were cast in. Daniel was cast into the lion's den, but there was no royal decree against sealing the lions' mouths. God violated no command of man, but He saved His loyal servant just the same.

If God, the supreme Ruler of the universe, Creator of heaven and earth and all that therein is, will not violate the laws of man, can we, as His loyal subjects and followers, violate those same laws? The prohibition laws are not contrary to God's laws but are in direct harmony with them, hence it is evident that every Christian must respect and obey them.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Observing the Law for the Sake of Others

It is just as necessary that we obey the laws of our land as it is that we obey God's laws found in the Bible, unless, of course, the time should come when the laws of the land would demand that we do something opposed to God's laws. But no country makes laws just for the sake of saying, "Thou shalt not!" The laws of the land are made for the people's best good, just as are God's laws.

Discuss fully in class the impression that is made on others when a person of the world breaks the law; when a Christian breaks the law. Show how the two laws that Jesus gave (Matt. 22:37-40) pertain to all conditions and circumstances of life. Show that while there may be some things which are not contrary to the law and thus permissible, yet as a Christian I ought to refrain from doing them because of the example I may be setting for a weaker one. This may be termed, keeping the higher law, the law of love.

Watch the example that you set by your life, remembering always your influence, as a Christian, upon others who may be weaker than you are.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

FALL CONFERENCE AT BLANCHARD, MICHIGAN

The Fall Conference to be held at Blanchard will begin Friday evening, Oct. 28th, and continue over Sunday the 30th. Bro. L. E. Conner of Dixon, Ill., will be the speaker. The Blanchard church extends a cordial invitation to any who can attend. We urge as many as possible to come over and enjoy these meetings with the Blanchard brethren.

Wm. A. Hanson, Conf. Pres.

PICNIC AT PLUM RIVER

The Plum River Sunday school held its picnic on Saturday, Oct. 8th. It was an ideal picnic day, but owing to the stress of fall work some did not attend. The dinner, however, was enjoyed as fully as though the crowd had been larger. Following dinner, games and sports occupied the afternoon. Those present will remember the day as one of the pleasant outings of 1932.

AN INTERESTING COMMUNICATION

There is no man in our brotherhood better fitted by experience to speak on the subject of religious journalism than Elder James A. Patrick, who occupied the editorial desk of Day Dawn until that excellent paper was merged with our own some years ago; and for this reason The Herald appreciates very deeply the following words of commendation from his pen.

"You have some very strong contributors to The Herald at present. Your editorials are strong, too. I think I once told you that I considered strong editorials the best and strongest features of any paper. People look to the editorials for the policy of the paper. It is wise to keep them strong in the things of vital interest to the Church of God. I enjoy the paper very much and think it is growing better all the time."

DIXON, ILLINOIS

Rally Day proved to be a very enjoyable day at Dixon, Sunday, October 16th. It was a beautiful sunshiny day and seventy-eight members and friends enjoyed the program. Several selections were given by the junior choir during the Sunday school hour, and all joined in several Rally Day songs. The collection was $6.00, which was very encouraging to all.

We were pleased to have a number of visitors at church and Sunday school; folks from Adeline, Tampico, Rock Falls, Rochelle, and Chicago. Bro. Conner gave us a splendid sermon on "Fellowship." The senior choir rendered several special selections during the church services, which were appreciated by all present.

Grace Drew, Sec.

The members of the Sewing Circle at Dixon are a very busy group of ladies these days. With regular meetings the ladies are kept as busy as bees. Just now we are sewing for families of unemployed. Dresses, bloomers, layettes, suits, etc., are made and turned over to the welfare association to be distributed among the less fortunate. Some of the material for these is donated, but most of it is bought by the Circle ladies. The Circle will meet next Friday at the home of Sr. Conner.

Lila Wagner, Sec.

HAMMOND, LOUISIANA

We wish to announce through The Herald that Bro. Frank E. Siple, of Grand Rapids, Mich., will hold a series of meetings in the Happy Woods Church near Hammond, La., beginning Nov. 1st and continuing over the 13th of that month.

Albert Siple.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Rally Day, which had been changed to Oct. 9, was certainly a rally in the fullest sense. An all-time record of 342 in the Sunday school classes made our poor little church look smaller than ever. During the services after the class period more than 15 tons of human flesh were crowded into the auditorium, which only holds 100 regular church seats.

Special selections of music were given; and the pastor gave a short talk urging a rally not merely of numbers, but particularly of loyalty, for this winter season.

The superintendent had promised homemade ice-cream and cake to the class and their parents that had the largest percent of parents present on Rally Day, based on their average attendance for the previous quarter. This was won by Sr. Mosher's class of young people, 15 to 21 years of age.

The Knights of Abraham had their monthly meeting on Oct. 8 in their room, with good attendance. The building is now equipped with a chimney so that a stove can be used.

Our church will be six years old Oct. 23, and on that Sunday an anniversary dinner will be served in the basement. Interested ones from a distance are invited to attend.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MARSHALL, ILLINOIS

The Rally Day services held Oct. 9 were a success in every way. The weather was fine, the attendance good, and the spirit and cooperation manifested by all were splendid.

At the close of Sunday school a short program was given, the recitations, songs, etc., being in harmony with the spirit of Rally Day. At the noon hour a table was spread and we all partook of a bountiful basket dinner. And when I say bountiful, I mean just that. There may be a depression, but the baskets were just as full as ever.

Then, to round out a full day's program, preaching services were held in the afternoon and also at night, being conducted by the writer. One of the unusual features of the evening service was the number of young people present, there being 34 in attendance. Everything considered, it was the most successful Rally Day we have ever experienced.

We trust that the spirit and cooperation manifested on this one day can be maintained throughout the coming months. It will take study and prayer and sacrifice on the part of each individual, but in no other way can we expect our church and Sunday school to grow. May God give each of us strength that we may "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Harry Goekler.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Helen Porter, Mrs. A. J. Chaplin, Mrs. O. J. Dorsey, Emil Fredlund, J. C. Smith, Mrs. Edw. Twibell, Elmore Skinner, Mrs. Ida F. Orem, Jas. A. Patrick (for self and another).

KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Kokomo church held its first Homecoming and Rally Day, Sunday, Oct. 9. There were 71 present for the all-day services. This was the first attempt to hold such a meeting here by local effort alone.

Bro. Chas. Martin gave the morning Berean sermon; Bro. O. J. Parker spoke in the afternoon; and the writer in the evening. The children of the Sunday school had their place, too.

The local ministers are thankful for the cooperation and support of the membership at Kokomo. We also wish to thank Bro. C. A. Smead for his announcements over WCMA.

D. G. Harvey.

FROM SISTER WOODWARD

To the dear ones who have so kindly thought of me in my sickness with letters so full of love and appreciation, and also to those who have sent cards of good will, and to my dear little boys (of my Sunday school class) who have remembered me with beautiful bouquets:

Do not think that because I do not answer your letters that I am tired of receiving them, for my eyes and nerves, as well as my physician, forbid my writing. For them all I thank you, and ask that you continue writing, for your letters and cards are about all my health will permit me to read.

I am not in pain, but very weak. May the dear Christ keep you all.

Mary A. Woodward.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

Our Rally Day was a real success. 113 was the attendance for Sunday school, the largest number we have on record. The rain kept some of our members who live some distance away on dirt roads from being present. A little program presented by the children followed the Sunday school service. Then came the morning sermon by Bro. Lapp, after which the communion was observed. It rained all afternoon and evening, but a fairly large crowd was out for preaching Sunday evening. So closed a very pleasant day together, for which we were indeed thankful to our Father, who giveth every good and perfect thing.

The work day last Thursday was a success, too. It was a beautiful day. About 37 came. Soon things began to change; and the results are a clean church and a leveled yard, an improvement which has added much to its appearance. At the noon hour the crowd visited with Sr. Cooper and ate dinner at the Cooper home. This week the men are going to haul gravel for the street in front of the church if the weather permits, and later we are planning to set out shrubbery.

Some of our sick folks we mentioned in last week's items are back home. Paul Riley returned from Dwight, Ill., Sr. Myrtle Hodges came home Tuesday from the hospital at Rushville, but Bro. Lilan McDaniel is still in the hospital at Dwight. Sr. Vern Lindsay, who has been confined to her bed for several days, is improving. Francis Howell was kept from attending Rally Day services because of ivy poisoning, but he was able to return to school Tuesday.

Bro. and Sr. Wm. Laning moved last week into their new home, erected on the site where their house burned last March.

ROGER THOMAS BRIGGS

Roger Thomas Briggs was born at Blanchard, Mich., on Oct. 31, 1906, and died at the home of his parents there on Sept. 3, 1932. Roger was the son of Thomas and Laura Briggs, with whom he had lived his entire life. He was a regular and faithful attendant of the Sunday school at the Blanchard church, where his mother has been an active worker and where he will be so sorely missed.

In addition to his mother and father, there remain to mourn his loss four sisters and two brothers of the immediate family.

Death to one so young and strong came as a result of appendicitis and was a distinct shock to the entire community.

Services were conducted from the home on Sept. 5. The large audience was seated on the lawn, where they gave respectful attention as life and death and the promises of God's Word were presented.

Our hearts go out in fullest sympathy to the bereaved ones, and our prayers for their comfort and care arise.

The following lines selected by the family were read at the services:

"Let us draw our loved ones closer

As the ivy twines the oak;

Let us shield the poor and needy

From the world's harsh tyrant's strokes;

Lend a hand to help them higher

With a purpose true and firm;

And together work and labor,

Waiting for our Lord's return."

BROTHER EYCHANER'S BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Sunday, September 18, the basement of the Waterloo church wore a festive air. The occasion was a dinner served to the entire membership, but especially to Bro. and Sr. A. J. Eychaner in honor of Bro. Eychaner's ninety-third birthday anniversary, and to Bro. and Sr. H. S. Hunt in honor of their thirtieth wedding anniversary. Thirty-five guests partook of the good things to eat and of the fellowship dispensed. Among the guests were Sr. G. P. Allard, Sr. Pearl Rosenberger and son Glenn, and Melissa Ann Stauffer, all of Gladbrook, Iowa, and Sr. Edna Allard of Rockford, Iowa.

The guests found their plates at the tables by place cards furnished by Sr. Blanche Harland, upon which were written verses of Scripture. After grace was said by Bro. Eychaner, the verses were read, giving an appropriate setting to the occasion.

The four honor guests sat at a table decorated in pink and white crepe paper and a special table service brought from the home of Sr. C. W. Howe. A tiny bride and groom stood by the plates of Bro. and Sr. Hunt. Bro. Hunt started his share of the proceedings by trying to shake the "pep" out of the groom.

The main part of the dinner finished, Sr. Virginia Phillips presented Bro. and Sr. Eychaner with a beautiful birthday cake, a gift from the Dorcas society.

During dessert came expressions of good will and fellowship. Sr. Florence Allard acted as hostess and asked Sr. T. J. Ellis to pay a few words of tribute to Bro. Eychaner. This she did by relating the first time she saw Bro. Eychaner at work in the Master's vineyard, when she was but a girl, and then telling of the associations she had with him in this work as she grew older. She told us of the sweet influence he had had in her life and of his untiring work for righteousness and truth. And she did not forget Sr. Eychaner and her loyal, shoulder to shoulder work with Bro. Eychaner throughout the years.

Bro. Eychaner responded to her words with a happy look on his face, by telling of the vast universe over which God has control and of His purpose to cause the whole universe, including man, to sound forth His praise and righteousness and love. He commended us to the soon coming King and His kingdom, through which this work is to be carried to completion.

Out of a heart full of regard and esteem for Bro. Eychaner, Bro. O. J. Allard asked to say a few words. He tried to give us some conception of the influence that Bro. Eychaner's years of service have had, not only on our lives, but on the lives of hundreds, perhaps thousands, who have come in contact with him, directly or indirectly. As he spoke we thought of the circling waves that start from a stone thrown into water. They are not only on the surface, but deep down in the unseen depths, and they spread silently in ever-widening circles, farther than the eye can see. So is each one's influence in his own sphere. And so is the Christ's influence in His sphere, which is the universe.

Bro. C. W. Howe spoke a few words of good will to Bro. and Sr. Hunt, expressing the love we all feel for them. Bro. Hunt returned the expressions of fellowship, and added, for good measure, some of his genial little stories.

One more event was commemorated on this happy day. It was nine years ago in September that the Dorcas society was organized, and Bro. Hunt, as president of our state conference, was called upon to toast these faithful workers. He expressed deep appreciation of their help in forwarding the work in the state and in the city of Waterloo. He pointed to the church building as evidence of this service. Sr. Eychaner, president of the Dorcas society, responded on its behalf, thanking all who had helped in the work it is doing. She took this occasion to express the pleasure the day had afforded both her and Bro. Eychaner and their gratefulness for the many cards and thoughtful greetings they had received from various places over the country.

So closed a day of good fellowship. May the Father increase this spirit that we may be one in His Son when He comes.

Alta King.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Watch next week's issue for special Thanksgiving announcement.

We rejoice with the pastor and congregation of the Salem Church (Marshall, Ill.) over the success of its Rally Day effort. Bro. Gockler is a leader of energy and ability with a faithful church to support his efforts.

Sr. Bertha Partlow of the Restitution Church of God congregation near Casey, Ill., is undergoing treatment in the hospital at Effingham. Sr. Chas. Hickox of the same assembly has also been very ill, but is now reported as improving.

Elder L. E. Conner of Dixon, Ill., returned last week from his regular appointment at Morse Mills, Mo. It was Bro. Conner's last meeting at Morse Mills for this year. He is to begin a week of special services at Belgrade, Mo., at the home of Bro. and Sr. Jas. Wilson, during the second week in November.

Our praise ascends to God for the abundant harvest that has rewarded the faithful efforts of Bros. Anderson and Parker at Hillisburg, Ind. As a result of preaching the simple gospel of the kingdom of God as Jesus preached it, Bro. Anderson has been able to report more than 40 baptisms per annum for the last three years at least. May God continue to use him to His glory.

Sr. O. J. Dorsey of New Mexico, when ordering extra copies of a recent Herald, says, "It seems to me the articles of the last few months have been of special interest and helpfulness, especially to us who are isolated and do not have church associations with those of like precious faith." Thank you, Sr. Dorsey. We pray that God may continue to bless The Herald and its host of readers until the Lord comes.

Sr. A. J. Chaplin, Arkansas City, Kan., sends again for sample copies of The Herald to use in securing new subscribers. How deeply we appreciate the loyal support of our friends! She asks especially for copies of the issue of Oct. 4, as she says it contains such a "wonderful supply of good reading." Hunt that number up and see if you agree with Sr. Chaplin.

Word reaches us from Moorefield, Neb., of important changes that are occurring there in the way of reorganization. We hope for more definite information soon.

Last week saw ten new subscribers added to our list. We thank you, brethren, for the interest you take in introducing The Herald into new homes. We are trying to make it a real missionary as well as a help and inspiration to our local churches and isolated members. Pray for our success.

Sr. Ida Lapp, while sending in her monthly pledge, informs us that she has resumed her former position as bookkeeper. She is also teaching a Sunday school class, and she modestly adds that she has "spoken" once. Those who have heard her in Training School know that she has uplifting things to say in an interesting way.

The following brief communication from Bro. R. A. Curtis of Dayton, Ohio, reaches us as we go to press: "Mrs. Curtis' condition is slowly improving, insomuch that she can be out in the health-giving sunshine once more, for which we offer unto God thanksgiving for His deliverance." (Psalm 50:14, 15.) The Herald joins Bro. Curtis in praising God for His goodness for the recovery of our beloved sister.

Sr. Emma Kelly of Dixon, Ill., is seriously ill. Her situation is unusually pathetic owing to the fact that she has for many years been the faithful and only caretaker of Sr. Bertie Drew. The latter is a confirmed invalid, whose patience and Christian character have endeared her to all who have been blessed with her acquaintance. Pray for these distressed and needy sisters. A little token of love we know would be appreciated. A letter or card addressed to Miss Bertie A. Drew, 1703 West First St., Dixon, Ill., will reach them both.

Our next issue will contain a variety of interesting and profitable articles from our own contributors. Among others there will be one from the pen of Bro. D. G. Harvey under the arresting title, "The Suicide Trail." Sr. Lottie E. Young, whose writings are always welcomed by our readers, will come with a splendid admonition on a practical theme.

“O YE OF LITTLE FAITH”

By C. E. Randall

“Which when Jesus perceived, he said unto them, O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves.”

THIS fourth and last rebuke of, “O ye of little faith,” was the result of “reasoning.” Jesus had cautioned the disciples to “beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.” They understood not the true saying or meaning. They thought He had reference to the fact that “we have taken no bread.”

Jesus, perceiving this error of thought, at once charged them with a lack of faith. In substance He said: “What matters it, if there is no bread; do ye not remember the five loaves of the five thousand and how many baskets ye took up? Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand and how many baskets ye took up? Why should ye reason among yourselves on this occasion?”

After rebuking them for “reasoning” as to the possibility of His again providing bread in accordance with their own thoughts, He gives the true meaning of His own words. “How is it that ye do not understand, that I spake it not to you concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees? Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.”—Matthew 16:11, 12.

There seems to be a tendency on the part of the average person to “reason” the possibility and the why and how of certain promises of God. To reason with an aim to discover the true meaning and the priceless truth of Scripture is a noble purpose and is nowhere condemned in Scripture. But to “reason,” that is, to question, to doubt, to wonder whether it is possible for God to fulfill a certain promise or to bring about certain conditions which Scripture predicts, indicates a lack of, and is contrary to, true faith.

To illustrate the thought: Many deny the resurrection of the fleshly or physical body because they cannot “reason” it out. It is often argued, even in our own councils, that a body buried at sea and eaten by a fish or some denizen of the sea, becomes a part of the fish; and if the fish be caught and the oil extracted or the flesh consumed by some person, the original person has been devoured. Perhaps the fish is eaten by some larger fish, rendering the original person impossible of resurrection.

Would it not be well when we engage in such “reasoning,” which injects doubt and questionings into the minds of people, to take a little of the rebuke administered to the disciples? “Why reason ye among yourselves, O ye of little faith?”

Why “reason,” question, or doubt? Of course we cannot explain or understand how it can be done other than by saying, “It is written.” We cannot understand how God in the very beginning could start with nothing and make something. We must accept the “something” which is in evidence before us and by faith trust the making to the “Maker,” for “it is written.”

“God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?”—Numbers 23:19. Where we cannot understand what He is going to do, or exactly know how He is going to do it, or figure out why He is going to do it, faith should step in and say: “I believe it!”

Some say, or “reason,” that they do not think baptism is really essential to salvation. And to evade obedience to the command they reason, “Do you think a person that accepts Christ and lives the best he knows how and is not baptized will be lost? How about all these people that haven’t been baptized?” So goes the reasoning. “O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves?”

Such a doctrine we must beware of. The disciples were warned to beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees, which doctrine was the commandments of men. “But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men.”—Matthew 15:9. “Why reason ye among yourselves” is an outgrowth of the commandments of men rather than the doctrines of God. “O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves?”

ASKING THE WORLD TO FINANCE THE CHURCH

WHEN Jesus sent forth His twelve apostles, He told them: “Freely ye have received, freely give,” but at no time did He tell them to go to unbelievers and ask them to contribute to their support.

When Paul went into new mission fields he made tents to pay expenses that he “might not be chargeable unto any,” but after churches were established he commended them for “contributing once and again” to his necessities.

Since the Son of Man has left His work for His church to carry on until He returns, ought not the church to minister to the world instead of asking the world to minister to the church? Ought not the church to show the world that it has something to give that money cannot buy?

When the world gives to the church, too often the motive is to purchase the respect of the community and the patronage of the members of the church, and especially so if the gifts have been solicited.

Business men, when solicited to help build the church or to keep it going, seldom dare to refuse for fear of being boycotted. Advertisements solicited in the same way are nearly always purchased and paid for for a similar reason, and the church advertises the world to pay expenses.

God is abundantly able to finance His own work, but His only plan is for His followers to honor Him with their substance. God honors and blesses the tithing church as well as the tithing individual.—Advent Christian Bulletin, Mendota, Illinois.

Joy Cometh

BY MRS. H. V. REED

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."—Psa. 30:5.

Out of the weary shades of night,
Out of the darkness cometh light;
In fearful doubt or midnight storm,
Courage and hope of faith are born.

From mountain height the tempest flings
Earth's hope beneath death's angel wings,
But lo! there shines the "morning star,"
Gleaming in glory from afar.

Beyond the storm king's mantling shroud,
God's signet ring upon the cloud,
Pledges His love and truth and light,
When faith herself is lost in sight.

A Prayer

MY GOD, I will do Thy will,
To Thee my voiceless prayer is turning
Who only canst my hunger fill,
And every restless murmur still,
And satisfy my spirit's yearning.

Then let me of Thy doctrine know,
The secret of the Lord's revealing;
Thy face unto Thy servant show,
Reveal the path where I should go,
Nought of Thy way concealing.

Theological Hairsplitting

IN OUR zeal to know and teach “the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth” we are sometimes driven into such extreme technicalities of analysis that the thing we are so anxious to avoid overtakes us, and we are led into a labyrinth of erroneous and even pernicious conclusions.

A profound reverence for the Word of God will temper the teacher's “pleasure in expounding the Bible with a devout respect for its authorship, origin, and purpose.” Or, as F. D. Maurice asserts in Faith and Action, “If we have a real reverence for Scripture and a firm belief in that which it declares, we shall never strain a single one of its words and phrases. Abstinence from such dishonesty will assuredly bring its reward in clearer apprehension of the whole record hereafter.”

Unchangeable Truth

CHANGE of belief does not necessarily indicate either spiritual or intellectual growth; it may possibly mean retrogression and decay. As far as the teaching of God's Word is concerned, a truth once discovered or revealed remains a truth for all time. No subsequent unfolding of Revelation in the mind of the student can change a fact into a falsehood. It was a truth before he accepted it; it will continue to be a truth should he come to disbelieve it. His personal attitude toward it can have no effect upon its factual character.

These remarks are inspired by an observation we sometimes hear that without a change of belief there can be no spiritual growth. That is, that unless we find ourselves frequently obliged to confess that we are in error, we are not increasing in knowledge. A little reflection will dispel this illusion.

Education consists of adding fact to fact, experience to experience, building new ideas upon a foundation of established knowledge. When a child is promoted from one grade to another in school, he is not required to erase from his mind all that he had learned in the lower class. The advanced mathematician, laboring with logarithmic equations, continues to base his involved processes upon the simplest forms of arithmetic he learned in childhood—addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division.

One who learns any truth in history, mathematics, or the Bible will never need to change his mind with regard to it, for it will always be true. He may, and, in fact, he should continue to add to his fund of knowledge; but each such added fact only serves to confirm and to emphasize the things he already knew.

There are certain great fundamentals of Revelation which our fathers in the faith rediscovered a century or more ago, and for which the Church of God has stood firmly throughout its history. These basic principles of faith are of such an origin and of such a character that they can never, and need never, be changed. They are as unalterable as the laws of nature, as immutable and permanent as God Himself; for they originated in Him. No matter how much one may grow in grace and in knowledge of the Scriptures he can continue to build upon the firm foundation which was laid in the simple truths of the gospel.

It is true that the facts of the Bible become more clear to us as we continue to study its pages; new beauties and new grandeurs constantly appear to enter our eyes and gladden our hearts; but no matter how long we study or how diligently we search, we shall find no principle of truth which conflicts with any other principle of truth we may have learned before.

It is a significant fact that throughout the long history of the denomination the Church of God has never found it necessary to discard from its catalogue of essential doctrines a single item of belief in toto, so far as we are able to determine by a careful comparison of its teaching of seventy to eighty years ago with the doctrines advocated by THE RESTITUTION HERALD today.

THE SPLENDORS OF GOD'S PLAN

By Lottie E. Young

How many have looked at a complicated piece of machinery as it worked, every part fitting into another and all moving so smoothly it can hardly be heard? We may exclaim over man's ingenuity in making such a perfect mechanism, but do you ever think of the different parts of the body which God has given to you by which our daily work is accomplished? David realized their marvels somewhat when he said, "I will give thanks unto thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made." The most perfect work of man is wretchedly incomplete when compared with our various organs.

Take the heart, for instance, a tiny thing about five inches long by three inches in diameter, beating nearly thirty-one million times a year, receiving and discharging each day about seven tons of the most wonderful fluid known—blood. Let us try to treat more reverently this most remarkable "pump" in the world.

Then our eyes! How we mistreat the inestimable blessing of sight, that which enables us to see the heavenly bodies millions of miles away from us and also the finest grain of dust or insect! We cannot see God with our natural eyes, but we see many proofs of His presence in the objects He has created. No two leaves on a tree are exactly alike; each blade of grass is just a little unlike any other blade; and if you look through a microscope at flakes of snow, you will see them with different shapes, but always perfect. If we keep thinking of the Father in His works, we will realize that His presence fills all our lives.

Besides looking at things near at hand we can look backward at glad and sad happenings in our lives and be thankful for God's protecting care, and we may look ahead to the fulfillment of the many glorious promises scattered so lavishly through the Bible.

We should say often, "Search me, O God, and know my heart"; but may we all be so concerned with the way we are walking that we will have no time to be looking criticisingly at our neighbors. May our earliest thoughts in the morning be those of thanksgiving to the Father, who neither slumbers nor sleeps, and for His loving care during the dark hours; and after a busy day as we are ready to lie down, after thanking the Father for the mercies granted, may the prayer of David, "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep," give us the assurance of safety.

In the book, "Pilgrim's Progress," there is pictured a man who could "look no way but downwards." He was holding a muck rake in his hand, and even though one stood near him holding a celestial crown in his hand which he offered in exchange for the muck rake that was gathering only filthy things, the man would not look up, but contented himself with perishing trifles.

How many now are busy with the empty pleasures of the day, taking no time to look up and see the glories of the future so beautifully pictured in the Bible!

I have read of a young man who once found a five dollar bill in the street, and from that time on his eyes were ever fixed downward. In the course of years he accumulated thousands of buttons and pins, a few cents, a bent back, and a miserly disposition. He lost the glory of the sunshine, the brightness of the stars, the smile of friends, the blossoms of spring, the blue of the skies, and the entire joy of living. Surely that was a costly bill he picked up that day! But his experience is duplicated in some degree every day by men and women.

Some so-called "money-grubbers" are so intent on the pursuit of the "mighty" dollar bill that they have no eyes to see the unfolding splendors of God's plan of salvation or to help their brothers in any way. They cannot stop even on Sunday, as then work which has accumulated in doors and outside must be attended to; and the joy of praising the Lord with others in God's house is neglected.

You who are "weary and heavy laden," come to the one Fount of comfort and help. God still lives, and Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, to day, and for ever." Do not be "muck rakers," but look up, for the Lord is coming soon; and it is only to those who are "watching and waiting" that He will appear. So, cheer up, dear ones; look upward and not downward, and take fresh heart in the midst of today's trials and disappointments.

THE FRIEND I LOVE

I love the friend whose cheering voice
Can soothe my aching heart,
Can wipe the tears of grief away
When sorrow bids them start.

I love the friend whose gentle hand
Removes the cup of grief,
Binds up the wounds it did not make,
And kindly brings relief.

I love the friend whose beaming smile
Is like a ray of light,
To cheer me on my lonely way
Through sorrow's darksome night.

HELL-FIRE IN THE MODERN AGE

By Norman John McLeod

THE Greeks and Romans had developed a very complicated idea of the future life by the time that Christianity became the dominant religion of the Near East. They believed that everybody possessed an immortal soul that went to Hades at death. If the body were not properly burned, then the soul stayed in a region of very indefinite sort known as Limbo, from which place it sometimes visited the earth in the form of a ghost or entered into people as a demon to make them ill. If the body were properly burned, then the soul could be ferried across the River Styx into the realm of Pluto where it would be judged for the deeds done in the body. The unworthy soul was to be sent to Tartarus, where it would undergo all sorts of punishments according to the supposed sins in the body. This Tartarus had originally been a place which burned with fire where the Titans (mythical nature gods who had opposed the gods of Greece and Rome in early conflict) should burn forever. The worthy soul went to the Elysian Fields, where it enjoyed a shadowy "happy-hunting-ground" existence. Of this last group some could drink of the "River of Forgetfulness" and then be born into the world again (this last idea was added quite late in pagan history). Such was the condition of pagan belief when the Roman Empire became Christian.

In coming to the Roman Empire we must remember that most of the people who became nominal Christians were not converted by the usual method of persuasion, but were made Christians by act of law. Naturally these people, forced into Christianity as they were, kept their beliefs very largely as they were in the old religion. Since that day they have undergone many changes, as we shall see.

The Roman Christian church (not the Roman Catholic Church) took paganism over bodily and changed its names to coincide with the new beliefs. Now when a man died there was little difference in the concept of what happened to him; the chief difference was a matter of name and place. Limbo was kept and used for the soul which had done nothing either good or bad, but was for the great host of indifferent individuals (a very much over-crowded place, we would think). Tartarus was retained, but its name was changed to hell and used for the souls of the wicked, the unpardonable. The pardoned did not go underground at all, but instead ascended to heaven. Those who could be pardoned, but had not yet gained pardon went to a place, (not known among the pagans), known as Purgatory. In Purgatory they remained, undergoing mild punishments until they could be "prayed out" by the priests, providing that the friends and relatives of the deceased paid enough money.

This whole system was subject to two ideas: the immortality of the soul, and the flat earth theory. Likewise when the abode of the pardoned was changed from the underworld to heaven there was a great difficulty. In the story of the rich man and Lazarus as told by Jesus, He used the current idea of Tartarus and the Elysian Fields, which were very close together on the same plain. So it was easy for Lazarus and the rich man to carry on a conversation. But when the distance between heaven and hell was magnified, there was great difficulty in the minds of many as to how the conversation could be carried on. However, the Medieval Mind could surmount all such difficulties quite easily. But the Medieval Mind gave place to the Modern Mind.

Three features of the modern age upset the scheme of the medieval church: the discovery of the new world, which gave plausible support to the new theory of the sphericity of the earth; the new theories of the movement of heavenly bodies set forth by Newton; and the grave abuses in the church. Hell became very difficult to locate now that the earth was seen to be a sphere instead of a disk. Likewise with the coming of the new astronomy the difficulty of the existence of any place in the skies that was solid enough to support the so-called heaven of medievalism became manifest. But the abuses within the church were the real means of causing the greatest readjustment.

Limbo seems to have disappeared without much difficulty in the midst of the Protestant movement, but Purgatory was the next to go. Purgatory became the center of Protestant attack, for around it centered most of the abuses of the medieval Roman Catholic Church. Those people who were especially righteous in this life were supposed to set up an excess of virtue which could be dealt out by the various religious officials to cover the sins of those who were not so righteous. This transfer of reward was known as an indulgence. The sale of indulgences was toward the close of the Middle Ages one of the chief sources of revenue for the papal treasury.

When the various kings of Europe became strong enough to set up their own churches, as happened in Spain, France, and England at quite an early date, the sale of indulgences was no longer permitted. But the German emperor was not powerful enough to prevent their sale in Germany. The revolt against Rome, therefore, started in Germany. Soon Purgatory was challenged and stricken out of the Protestant religion. Thus, instead of there being four places to which the departed soul could go (Limbo, hell, Purgatory, and heaven), only two remained (heaven and hell).

The Protestant ministers of the early period of the revolt from Rome placed a new emphasis on hell. They had to. If a person were to be frightened into submission to the Christian religion it must be through fear of hell, for by nature of the argument a soul went either to heaven or hell. Jonathan Edwards and Cotton Mather were the two who probably carried this emphasis to the extreme. Along with the Calvinist scheme of "predestination" the former made the famous statement that "there would be infants in hell a span long."

Such ideas were revolting in the extreme, and especially did they become revolting when it came to the time of the funeral. It took a very brave minister to say that the departed soul had gone to hell. Under the old scheme the priest could say that the deceased was in Purgatory and that a little more money for a few more prayers might easily bring him out on his way to heaven. But there was no such comfort in the new arrangement; either heaven or hell. But as time has gone by, less and less emphasis has been put on the hell end of the matter. The modern church has felt that no one could be said to go to hell. Therefore, everybody must go to heaven, at least according to the funeral sermon.

We see, then, that there was a change from emphasis on hell to heaven. Under the early Protestant regime God was thought of more as a God of vengeance, a God of wrath who sent little helpless babes to a fiery punishment for eternity. If God be such, then there is little mercy connected with Christianity. If God be such, then the teachings of Jesus that God is love are hard to believe.

On the other hand, lately God is seen to be no longer a God of justice, but of lax toleration, a God of absolute moral indifference. If good, bad, and indifferent alike go to heaven, then certainly God cares not what we do from an ethical standpoint. Such is the state of belief in the modern nominal Christian church. Indifference can be the only logical outcome of such beliefs. If God tolerates the laxness of men to such an extent, then why should men be concerned about moral vices or heavenly virtues?

The learned Archbishop of York, having reached this point, says: "We shall find that the authentic Christian doctrine of the future life is free from the objects which lie against the general notion of immortality, while it contains all which in that notion is of religious value or of ethical utility. This Christian doctrine has three special characteristics:

- (a) It is a doctrine, not of immortality, but of resurrection.
- (b) It regards this resurrection as an act and gift of God, not an inherent right of the human soul as such.
- (c) It is not a doctrine of rewards and punishments, but is the proclamation of the inherent joy of love and the inherent misery of selfishness."

The conclusions to which he comes are marvelously clear. He feels that the whole body of the doctrine of the church needs reconstruction along the lines of conditional immortality. Eternal torment does not have a place in that regime; eternal punishment does. For, as he argues later, annihilation could be conceived of as eternal punishment, but could not by any stretch of the imagination be conceived of as eternal torment. How cheering it is to find a man in the position of head of one of the largest church organizations of Christendom coming to the viewpoint of those of like precious faith with us! Certainly in these last days "knowledge shall be increased."

SIN

By George B. Alldridge

"If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? And if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door; and unto thee is its desire, but thou canst rule over it."—Gen. 4:7, Leeser.

SIN. What a short word! An orthographer would assign it to the kindergarten speller. Yet lying within it are elements of destruction so powerful that, like an active volcano, it is ready at any moment to belch forth death and destruction, submerging everything beneath its path.

Speaking of words, it is a remarkable coincidence that one of the longest words in the Bible expresses exactly sin as it operates today. It is in Isaiah 8:3: Mahershalalhashbaz. Ferrar Fenton's translation reads, "Then I married the Poetess, and she conceived and bore a son: and the Everlasting said to me, Call his name Quick-rush-to-spoil-and-plunder. I do not know of a better definition for racketeers, gangsters, and politicians than this.

Everybody knows what sin is, for like eating and sleeping, it is ever with each of us. John says, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."

Words, to understand their root meaning, always need defining in harmony with their origin.

In this respect Jesus was a splendid lexicographer. His definitions are never ambiguous. Isaiah had Him in mind when he wrote, "And an highway shall be there, and a way; and it shall be called the way of holiness: the unclean shall not pass over it, but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

Sin is a falling away from, or missing, the right path.

How beautifully Jesus agrees with this. "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Where will this gate lead? Hannah in her prayer will tell us: "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory."

This is God's definition of sin: "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law."—1 John 3:4.

The underlying idea of sin is that of law and a law-giver. A child knows that God is the Law-giver and that He gave His law to us.

Perhaps some reader may be saying, "We are not under the law. Christ set us free from it."

May I ask if you are under any law at all? Probably your reply is, "Yes; the law of love."

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." God's laws, like Himself, are eternal.

Ernest A. Tratner, although his criticisms respecting the authorship and source of the Scriptures are in harmony with the higher critics of the German school from the days of Spinoza to Reimarus, Lessing, and others, says about that expressed in the ten commandments, "One of the most astonishing facts in the spiritual history of the Western World has been its ready recognition of the legendary character of all those stories relating to the divine origin of laws from Egyptian, Babylonian, Greek, and Roman sources, and at the same time its persistent refusal to so regard the origin of the Ten Commandments. Why? Perhaps the answer is to be found in the high character of the Hebrew injunctions.

"The Decalogue stands on a loftier plane than any other short set of laws known to mankind, and because of its intrinsic excellence and universal appeal it won its way into the heart of civilization as the Voice of God."

The writer recognizes that the ten commandments are from God. If so, since God is love (1 John 4:8), His commandments must also breathe out His very nature, love. They are in harmony with and are an expression of God Himself.

"Kings of Judah have drenched this valley with innocent blood and created shrines to Baal for burning alive their children as a sacrifice to Baal—a thing I never ordered, never mentioned; a thing that never entered my mind."—Jeremiah 19:3-6.

Dear readers, mark the condescension of God which veils His glory and majesty in comparing Himself with Baal. If you do not love God after this, it is because "the god of this world hath blinded the eyes of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."

There are but few black pages in the history of our country: human slavery, the liquor traffic, lawlessness; and at the Parliament of Religions held at the Columbian Exposition in 1893 Christianity compromised itself and met upon an equal plane with all those antagonistic to the teachings of Christ. We were invited to recognize the lofty monotheism of Mohammedanism, the grandeur of its principle of Islam, or surrender to a Higher Will. We were to appreciate the readiness of the Hindu to bear what seems to us intolerable privation and suffering in order to win the favor of his god, to give Buddhism due credit for its moral code and Confucianism for its insistence on filial obedience.

A writer in commenting upon this said: "Nevertheless, not one of these systems really makes for righteousness. Even when they enjoin virtue and propound good precepts, they are without the two essential features of any religion that is to help man. What are these two features? First, a power by which we may keep the good precepts; and secondly, a remedy if we fail to keep them. And these are the two features which distinguish Christianity. Christ provides the power by His Holy Spirit; Christ provides the remedy for failure by the sacrifice of Himself."

The following excerpts show clearly what it means not to keep the first commandment:

An Indian newspaper, The Hindu, says, speaking of Hinduism, "Abomination-worship is the main ingredient of modern Hinduism . . . Our priesthood is the mainstay of every unholy, immoral, and cruel custom and superstition . . . The endowments (of the temples) are a festering mass of vice and crime."

This is from a converted Mohammedan professor, Dr. Imad-ud-din: "I found nothing in Mohammedanism from which an unprejudiced man might in his heart derive true hope and real comfort, though I searched for it earnestly. Rites, ceremonies, theories I found in abundance; but not the slightest spiritual benefit does a man get by acting on them. He remains fast-held in the grip of darkness and death."

Mrs. Isabella Bishop, greatest of women travelers, says, "I have lived in Zenanas and harems, and I can speak from bitter experience of the life of women. All the worst passions of human nature are developed in a fearful degree: jealousy, envy, murderous hate, intrigue. . . . The request for drugs to disfigure the favorite wife, to take away her life, or to take the life of the favorite wife's infant son, have been made to me nearly two hundred times."

To read this brings on a feeling of nausea. But there is a bright side. As men catch the spirit of Christ, they try to overcome sin and destroy its accomplishments.

Dr. James A. Tobey, in Rivers of the Plagues, the Story of the Conquest of Disease, recites the names of twenty-one forgotten heroes who adorn the facade of the new School of Hygiene in London. As I read it, I was thrilled and at times felt like shouting at the heroism of these noble conquerors of disease and plagues. Some as martyrs laid down their lives on behalf of the fiat of science. How vividly Peter's words came to my mind: "Who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: for God was with him."

If men only knew the high service for which God is now selecting a little company to take away the sin of the world, I am sure they would respond.

THE REMEDY

THE BIBLE is God's law-text. It is the greatest of all texts, the most beneficial, the most valuable. Its purpose is to instruct man away from sin and death unto righteousness and life. It reveals a remedy in God's supreme court for man's every sorrow and pain, a solution for his every problem. Adherence to it awards man unto all ages; indifference to it is behind every crime and every distress. Observance of God's rules would correct the corrupt practices in the government of every state, church, home, and person. No political, professional, commercial, or private individual can be "crooked" while practicing them. Observance of biblical rules would clarify the world of its stigma.—F. L. Austin.

AN APPEAL FOR JUSTICE

By Samuel E. Haney

"O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth; O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, shew thyself."—Psa. 94:1.

How pathetically the Psalmist here expresses the heart sentiment of millions of god-fearing people during these crucial days! What an arraignment of the ungodly we find in verses two to eight, inclusive! And what certitude is depicted in verses nine to eleven! God will finally avenge those who love and revere Him.

After reading the Authorized Version of these eleven verses, read Dr. Moffatt's version of them, as follows: "O thou Eternal, thou avenging God, O thou avenging God, appear; rise up, O Ruler of the world, and let the haughty have what they deserve! How long is it to last, O thou Eternal, this exultation of ungodly men, blustering insolently, lording it arrogantly? They crush thy people, O Eternal, thy heritage they are harrying, killing the widow and the foreigner and murdering the fatherless; and they think the Eternal never sees them, Jacob's God will never heed them! But mark this, dullest of the dull—when will you understand, O senseless men? is he deaf, he who made the ear? Is he blind, he who formed the eye? Can he not punish men, he who is training them? Has he no knowledge, he who teaches men? Knowledge! The Eternal knows that human plans are but an empty breath."

How accurately the Holy Spirit through David here describes the true status of saint and sinner: the saint's subdued longing for vengeance upon their proud, arrogant persecutors; and the sinner's heathenish, bestial disregard of God and every semblance of equity.

Such a sorrowful appeal to God for justice on the part of Christians a hundred, yea, fifty years ago would have been far less appropriate than today. And the same can be said of the indictment against the ungodly non-Christian, thus proving that the chasm between the righteous and unrighteous is ever broadening, man continuously getting farther from God and His Son, the only source and "way" of life eternal.

It should not be a difficult task even for those who do not make a systematic study of God's Word and current events to recognize an almost superhuman power (satanic?) preparing as many as possible for the fulfillment of Daniel 12:1—"a time (or period) of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation." Neither should it require a volume to explain the cause of the world's wretched condition and the only "way" to escape the inevitable sequence, death.

Man has allowed the enemy of life, sin (Ephesians 4:18), to alienate him from his Creator; disbarring himself thereby from the source of life, Jesus Christ.

In God's sight the unregenerate race (as individuals) could not be more extinct were it in Sheol, the grave. The race, individually, must die symbolically, which God reckons as actual, in order to be accounted alive by Him. Paul, referring to the new creature in Christ Jesus, says, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him: . . . Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6:3-11.

This lengthy quotation should eliminate all doubts and obscurity as to whom God is "shewing himself" in these last days as the "Avenger" of His people. And also why the "brutish, fools—dullest of the dull—senseless men cannot understand": Satan having them huddled for their final abysmal plunge into an indescribably, unfathomable, sanguinary, chaotic state. And in addition to this, Satan and sin have made a wreck of this planet, and by this wreckage other planets have been injuriously affected. And by this overlooked condition Calvary's tragedy has been caused to be far more important and extensive, and the efficiency of the Cross has been increased to a greater degree than is generally understood.

This subtle enemy is like the wily snake that has no eyelids, therefore never closes its eyes; hence, our enemy is ever on the lookout to destroy God's handiwork as displayed in the mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms. The serpent being a Bible simile of Satan and of sin makes this anomaly quite significant.

God, in addressing the spiritually blind, deaf, and stupid who are unconsciously under the sway of Satan's power and intrigues, cries out, "Understand, ye brutish among the people; and, ye fools, when will ye be wise?" God is here striving to arouse the sleeping world to the fact that His reckoning (judgment) day is at hand; and also to the fact that at no time has He been deceived: "He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye, shall he not see? . . . He that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know? The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity."

The fact that this planet has ceased to be a suitable place for God's children to live, under present conditions, should not be a conundrum. David prophetically voices the Christian's sentiment: "O thou Eternal, thou avenging God, appear!"

Considering all these points it is quite apparent that not many of the race will be salvaged when the great Judge comes to establish His immaculate kingdom where no being unprepared shall "enter." (John 3:5, 7.)

What a glorious kingdom this is to be! involving the whole earth, renovated and renewed (2 Peter 3:7-14) as originally planned, according to the replica sample displayed in Eden, and suggestively given to Peter, James, and John—Mark 9:1-9. Peter preached about this "restitution ('restoration,' Moffatt; 'reconstitution,' Weymouth) of all things," exhorting the people to repent and be converted that they may be prepared for the "times of refreshing" which will synchronize with the presence of the Lord, namely, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive ('retain,' Diaglott) until the times ('period,' Moffatt) of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3:19-21.

"To love and to worship Him" not only exalts Him, but such expressed love and worship also quicken within the suppliant new vigor of purpose and new devotion of aim to be like Him who is loved. Such love and such worship are of untold value to the worshiper.

"We shall be LIKE him; for we shall SEE (understand) HIM as HE IS."—1 John 3:2.

THE HEAVENS RULE

By C. F. Knott

MANY in our day, as king Nebuchadnezzar in his, do not understand "that the heavens do rule" (Daniel 4:26), and "that the Most High . . . giveth (the) kingdom to whomsoever he will" (verse 17). But this fact is clearly set forth in God's dealing with Nebuchadnezzar.

Nebuchadnezzar and Cyrus are called servants of God (Isa. 44:28; 45:1; Jer. 25:9) because God used these kings in His dealings with His people, as well as with other nations. Nebuchadnezzar did not realize that God had given him the kingdom of Babylon, and as the king expressed it, God had to deal with him by many signs and wonders before he realized that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will." However, different from Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar lifted up his eyes to heaven and blessed the Most High and praised and honored Him that liveth forever and ever; and no doubt some day we will see this heathen king in the kingdom of God. On at least two different occasions had God sought to reveal Himself to the king. Once God fulfilled his desire and showed him the complete history of the world from the time of Babylon until the final setting up of God's kingdom on earth as found in Daniel 2.

Then again God revealed Himself mightily in the deliverance of the "faithful three" out of the fiery furnace when they refused to bow their knees before the golden image. On both of these occasions the king saw and recognized that there was a God of heaven, but he did not realize that this God was the only God; he only recognized Him as the God of gods. (Dan. 2:47; 3:28.) Not until God took hold of him and gave him a heart of a beast and made him eat grass like an ox and let him get wet with the dew of heaven until seven times passed over him, until his hair was grown like eagles' feathers and his nails like birds' claws (verses 32, 33), did he learn to know the God of heaven as the only God. No doubt seven times stand for seven years. (Compare Daniel 7:25 and Revelation 12:14 with Revelation 13:5 and 12:6.)

After God had given him that impressive dream recorded in Daniel 4 and had warned him by his faithful servant to repent and turn to God, God still gave him twelve months of grace (verse 30); but as he still had failed to acquaint himself with God, in the pride of his soul he spoke and said, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty? While the word was in the king's mouth, there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken; The kingdom is departed from thee." (Verses 30, 31.) Then he lost his reason and was driven out to the beasts of the field until seven times passed over him; and when at the end of the given time he looked up to heaven, not to the gods of Babylon, but to heaven, and recognized the most high God, his reason came back to him and he blessed the Most High and praised and honored Him that liveth forever and ever. (Verse 34.) He was sought by his statesmen and reinstated to his former position of honor. God gave it back to him, and he knew then "that the heavens do rule" and that the Most High gives the kingdom to whomsoever He will.

The tree which the king saw in the midst of the earth, the height of which was great, reaching unto heaven, the sight of which reached to the ends of the earth, the leaves of which were fair, and the fruit much, and in which was meat for all, in which the fowls of the heaven dwelt, and by which all flesh was fed, which was cut off and which was hewn down no doubt refers to Nebuchadnezzar, as shown in verse 22: "It is thou, O king, that art grown and become strong: for thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth."

Reader, let us draw the lesson that God has placed therein for us and humbly serve Him.—The Bible Advocate.

FALSE GOSPELS

By J. G. Haupt

I AM asked to say a few words on John 14:2, which reads as follows: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."

John did not mean to infer that Jesus said there were mansions in a house, but that in God's great plan of the ages, in His oikia, (the Greek word translated house), there are many abiding places.

Mrs. Zebedee had asked a special favor for her sons, John and James. She had requested that they should be given the most prominent positions when Jesus came into His kingdom. (Matthew 20:20-23.) The Lord taught her that in the kingdom age one would not be above another. At the last supper Jesus girded Himself and washed the disciples' feet. Humility was the lesson. In God's great oikia there is provision made for all that knock in faith for admission. Jesus has gone to prepare our inheritance.

His ascension gave Him a place at His Father's side. There He is the Head of the church, which is His body. He will return in like manner as He ascended, after which He will remain with His own forever.

A hymn writer has enlarged upon the translation of the King James Version. He speaks of "mansions in the sky," thus giving us an entirely different gospel from that of Christ. "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1:8, 9.

This double curse pronounced against all that preach (or teach or sing) a false gospel is a very serious matter. The false gospel that is the most commonly believed is probably the one that asserts that saved men, women, and children at death go to heaven. The resurrection gospel so strongly presented in the Bible, especially by the Apostles Peter, John, and Paul, makes it very clear that the just shall rise in the first resurrection, making that the only hope of life after death for them.

Another false gospel is that concerning three Gods in One, which is so different from the first line of the ten commandments (Exodus 20:3), the first line of the Lord's prayer (Luke 11:2), and numerous other biblical statements concerning the unity of God.

The first four books of the New Testament are known as the Gospels. One of them (Matthew) describes God's kingdom as "the kingdom of heaven," another (Luke), as "the kingdom of God." This kingdom is not in the heavens, but is of heavenly origin, all plans for it being made in the heavens.

The new Jerusalem, prepared above, is to come down out of heaven with the Messiah when He comes. (Rev. 21:

2.) Figurative language has its own laws. We are not to suppose that the new Jerusalem will be a city of marble and cement, with streets of actual gold, and literally above the clouds. But this beautiful language has its symbolic meaning.

In the first resurrection two classes appear, both of which are righteous. The righteous dead are called to life, and the righteous living are changed in a moment to immortality. None come from the sky except Christ, as no other has gone there. Let the devout Christian be satisfied to speak only as the Bible speaks of these things.

THE SUICIDE TRAIL

By D. G. Harvey

EARLY in the spring of this year, a man of middle age, still in the prime of life, once wealthy, but having lost all in the crash that followed the financial breaking-up of 1931, became so despondent that life to him was a burden. From the top of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument at Indianapolis, he leaped from a window, to fall a mangled mass among the stone figures many feet below.

"What a horrible death!" "He must have been insane!" These were common remarks referring to the incident.

If you notice the large metropolitan papers, any day you will read of such events. There seems to be a continual trail of suicides. What is the cause? Have men gone mad?

Webster tells us that "Suicide is the act of taking one's own life; self murder."

Brethren, the Christian who does not follow the great Leader, our Lord Jesus Christ, is just as truly a suicide as is the man who takes his own life today.

But you say, "I have been baptized; I belong to the church."

Yes, dear one, perhaps you went into the water and were baptized for the remission (forgiveness) of your sins in accordance with Acts 2:38. But have you followed your Leader? If Jesus had stopped there, where would the ransom have been? If the apostles had stopped at baptism, where would the church have been today?

You come out of the water free from your past sins. There is nothing against you, and you have done nothing to grow in grace. You are a child; really, a blank, as the machinist would say if he were to take up a blank gear before the teeth are cut. Let us name some of the teeth: love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance (Galatians 5:22, 23).

You rise to walk in newness of life (Romans 6:4). You must develop the fruits of the Spirit; follow the steps of the Master. "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps."—1 Peter 2:21.

What was the example set for us? He went throughout every city, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom (Luke 8:1). He went about doing good (Acts 10:38). We are not under the law of sin (Romans 8:2).

To be sure, we die; but we know that if we are faithful and keep the law of our Master, we shall live and reign with Him (2 Timothy 2:12).

His law is not grievous. It is not worded in great legal phrases. The common and lowly can understand. It is very simple. The law is fulfilled in one word (love): "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."—Galatians 5:14. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—Galatians 6:2.

We call ourselves Christians, disciples of the Son of God. The all-wise Teacher gave us one sure sign to prove our claim: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." We cannot follow His steps and not walk in love. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John 15:14.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15. Here is another command. Are you His friend?

But remember, preaching is not the whole matter. A man may be a wonderful speaker, he may be able to hold his congregation spellbound for hours; but without love it is suicide for him! You are surprised? It is sad, but true. Listen to Paul: "Lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."—1 Corinthians 9:27. (Read 1 Corinthians 13.) Why? Let James tell us: "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—James 4:17.

What is the result? Let Paul again answer our question: "The wages of sin is death."—Romans 6:23. Justice? Yes, that man dies of his own will—a suicide.

THE WORD OF GOD IN PUBLIC LIFE

SOMETIMES it seems as though a popular familiarity with the Scriptures is not as great at the present time as it has been in the past in American life. The foundations of our society and of our government rest so much on the teachings of the Bible that it would be difficult to support them if faith in these teachings should cease to be practically universal in our country. Every one who has given the matter any thought knows of the great literary value of the Bible and the broad culture, aside from its religious aspect, that comes from a general familiarity with it. Although it has been the subject of most careful and painstaking study for hundreds of years, its most thorough students find in it a constant revelation of new thoughts and new ideals which minister to the spiritual nature of the race. It would be difficult to conceive of any kind of religious instruction which omitted to place its main emphasis on the precepts of this great Book. It has been the source of inspiration and comfort to those who have had the privilege of coming in contact with it, and wherever it goes, it raises the whole standard of human relationship.

—Calvin Coolidge.

WHY PUT THEM OUT?

JUST what should be done with unruly children in the Sunday school? Should they be removed? God forbid. What would the Master think if we should cast out a child from His house?

Oh, love them, teachers, no matter how bad they are. I love every one of mine. I love the little clean ones from well-to-do homes because they are so sweet and clean; and I love the little dirty, neglected ones because they need my love. If they are too dirty I wash their little faces and hands after they come to Sunday school (unless you really love them and their mothers so much that they know you love them, don't try that, though, or you will give offence, but I do—in love) and mother soon takes the hint and they come neat and clean to Sunday school. If they are too ragged, get them some clothes unless you are too poor, in which case you can pray. I prayed for some of my children this winter till one Sunday a well-to-do member of the church asked me to call at her house that week. When I called she gave me money to buy cloth to make the little clothes I had been asking God for.

Be patient and loving and kind; care for little noses and sticky fingers (I carry extra handkerchiefs for that) and the little muddy feet that are held up for little shoes to be tied. Be willing to answer all sorts of questions, and listen with interest to childish confidences.

Teach them to respect the house of God. When mine begin to get unruly I always ask, "Who can tell me whose house this is?" The answer is always, "God's house." Then I ask, "And how does God want us to act when in His house?" They always get quiet when they remember that it is God's house in which they are.

See the needs of each child and pray that God will meet that need. If a child is untruthful (and many are) pray for him; if he is selfish (most children of well-to-do parents are), if he swears, or smokes, or is in need of bodily healing, or whatever his need is, take it to God. Pray for them daily. Find out where they live and call on their mothers. Let mothers know you love their children. If a child is absent find out why, by calling at his home.

Don't expect to just go on Sunday and "teach" the class, and feel that your duty is done. It is not. I work at my class seven days in the week, yea, and many nights when I awake a prayer goes up to the throne in regard to some member of the class.

I find that house to house work pays—if you truly love God. I believe it is the greatest work a woman can do. But you need to really know the Bible to be successful. Don't argue with any one and be sure you are prayed up and soaked through with the love and wisdom and patience that God alone can give. Carry your Bible, a song book, a supply of good tracts to give out as you go.

Oh, wake up, Sunday school teachers! See how great is the work God has called you to do, and do it with all your might, and may God bless the doing of it.—Mrs. H. F. Foster in The Pentecostal Evangel.

"BE PREPARED"

NOT since the days that Noah began to cruise the seas has there been such crying need for study and appreciation of divine commands. In spite of the fact that some say that those who lived before the flood (commonly known as "antediluvians") actually mated with demons who were real beings, the world was hardly in a more unrighteous condition than it is at present. Never has atheism succeeded in inducing people to deny the existence of God so rapidly as it is doing now. At few times in the earth's history has as little interest been shown in religion by the general populace as is being shown today.

These circumstances place the ones who do hold some interest in religious thought in a position of unsurpassed responsibility. Upon those who profess a belief in God rests the task of proving to mankind that the Christian is in truth what he purports to be, and no harder office can be devised by the healthiest imagination. Every member of the church, Sunday school, and Berean society is in control of the salvation of every other man. The great commission was not designed simply for the apostles, but for all who attempt to stride in the Messiah's footprints.

As the older ones become unable to maintain their former tasks, the burden of carrying forward the work of the church drops on the shoulders of the young people. Unpreparedness in religious fields is as bad as unpreparedness in time of war; so it follows as a matter of course that the oncoming generations must prepare themselves thoroughly to replace them who must vacate the places they have filled.

Such preparation as is needed can come only from two things: first, a recognition and acceptance of their responsibility by the young people; and second, the acquiring of the things they must know in order to carry on the work successfully. There exists no better method for securing both of these than to study the Bible in connection with the aid provided by Berean books, classes, and correspondence courses. All of the principal teachings of the gospel proclaimed by the Christ are analyzed carefully by lessons intended primarily for youth. Too great stress scarcely can be laid upon the value of such study. Effort and time is well spent in using it. In the words of the Boy Scouts' motto, "Be Prepared!"—Arlen Marsh.

YOUTH

DEAR young person, be persuaded to give your early years to God. There is a special promise for you. "Those that seek me early shall find me."—Proverbs 8:17. Perhaps you think, "I am too young to be religious yet." You say, "Let me enjoy the world a little; I have plenty of time before me." Are you too young to be religious? But you are not too young to die, nor too young to be punished in after life. You may not reach manhood or womanhood, much less reach old age. Multitudes die as young as you. If you enter a burial ground, how many of the graves are those of young people? Religion alone can render you truly happy. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

Jesus will be your Guide amid the snares, your Comfort amid the sorrows, and your Guardian amid the dangers of life. Lose not for one day the privilege of possessing such a Friend. Say this moment in your heart, "My Father, thou art the Guide of my youth."

—Lillian Dauntler, Dixon, Illinois.

WHAT LOVE DOES

IN PAUL'S letter to the Corinthians he talked of many practical, everyday things which come up in Christian living and advised people as a father would a child.

The most beautiful part of one of these letters is the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians. In this he told the people that even good acts may not have love in them. We see much in the world today that looks like love, but comes from selfish motives.

Paul goes on to tell how love shows itself in the lives of those who have it. He speaks of two ways in which it does this. One way, Paul says, is to do good things for and toward others. The other is to keep sweet when unkind things are done to us. Both of these ways of showing Christian love may be expressed by kindness, gentleness, and sympathy.

The endurance of love surpasses every earthly thing. Since God is love, how could it be otherwise?

At present, however, the vision of love seems to be partial and incomplete; probably few people recognize its greatness.—Mrs. Paul Klepinger, Brookville, Ohio.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Blessed be the Lord God . . . who only doeth wondrous things."

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM

"I WANT the bicycle today," said John angrily.

"You can't have it," shouted Jim. "You had it yesterday most all day."

"I did not; I only had it two hours," argued John.

"Well, anyway, it's mine now." And with that, Jim, who was a trifle larger and heavier than his twin brother, gave the handle bars a yank that sent the other sprawling, and he started triumphantly down the walk. But something halted him.

"Jimmie and John, come here a moment!" called the clear voice of Mother. And looking daggers at each other, the nine year olds reluctantly mounted the steps and flung themselves into chairs in the sun porch where Mother was sewing.

"Well, how are my camels this afternoon?" queried Mother, avoiding any mention of the quarrel which both of them knew Mother had witnessed and because of which they were sure she had called them in.

Shamefacedly, though curiously, they chorused, "Camels! What do you mean, Mother?"

"Haven't you heard, boys, that no amount of training will make a camel sweet tempered?"

"Those that were in the circus parade looked gentle enough," said Jim.

"And the one at the zoo seems good-natured," added John.

"Yes, and two little boys I know look good-natured most of the time, but you never can tell!" rejoined Mother, laughingly, but accusingly.

Forgetting their quarrel for the time being, the twins asked Mother to tell them more about this interesting feature of camel life which was so new to them. And she related how that, though they are used year after year by men, they never become gentle as horses or dogs do.

"Even when they are treated very kindly by their master, they often turn against him and bite or kick at most unsuspected moments," said Mother. "They may be well fed and not over-worked, and yet they seem to hold a grudge against all who come near them."

By this time the twins were entirely absorbed in the story of animal life which Mother was telling them, and questions and answers flew back and forth for several minutes.

"I just don't see any sense in keeping such sour dispositioned beasts around, do you, Mother?" finally said John, with a slightly crestfallen air. For both boys were beginning to see why Mother had called them by that new name.

"They are most useful in desert countries, boys, because they can endure what no other animal can. But some day they will be tame as Trix is, and not only the camel but all other cross animals also," said Mother.

"Yes, I remember the verse I learned for Sunday school that said, 'The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb,' and I often wondered why the lamb wouldn't be afraid," said Jim.

"And there's something about a little child leading a lion, isn't there, Mother, in that same verse?" queried John.

Then Mother proceeded to tell them how that when Jesus returns the natures of all the wild animals will be changed so that they will live at peace among themselves as they did in the Garden of Eden long, long ago.

"All the people also will be peaceful and kind and loving to each other at all times," Mother finished quietly. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

And two thoughtful little boys went down the steps arm in arm, taking their beloved bicycle between them along the walk over to a neighbor boy who didn't own one, to give him a couple of hours of pleasure.

Thereafter Mother only needed to call, "Camels," in her clear happy voice, when she heard the twins quarreling. Instantly the angry voices subsided, and the boys thought of the time when you can play with a lion or a bear and not be afraid, and they wished the time would hurry and come.

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

"Learn to bear and forbear,
Forget and forgive,
For this is the way that
All Christians should live."

"Who are you, Jesus?"

"I am the Light of the world. If you are afraid of the dark, I will give you light. I am the Good Shepherd. If you are lost, I will find you and bring you back. I am your Friend always."

THE CHRISTIAN AND WORLD PEACE

Psalm 22:27, 28; 67:1-7; 72:8-19; Isaiah 2:1-4; Matthew 28:16-20; Ephesians 2:13-19

Devotional Reading: Psalm 46:4-11

GOLDEN TEXT

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.—
Matthew 5:9.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Christian and World Peace.

Basic Truth: "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Isaiah 2:4.

Outline: I. Man's Attempts to Bring Peace. II. God's Way of Bringing Peace. III. The Christian's Contribution to World Peace.

I. Man's Attempt to Bring Peace. That peace in the family, community, nation, and world is a desirable thing is indisputable. Civilization cannot progress, happiness cannot be achieved so long as war and danger of war confront the people of the earth. Men have devised many methods by which they hoped to establish peace among the nations; but all such attempts have failed because of selfishness and international suspicion.

II. God's Way of Bringing Peace. God's method of bringing peace is first individual (Eph. 2:13-19), and then national (Psa. 72:9-17). He brings peace among individuals and races by breaking down the prejudice and suspicion that exist through uniting them in the unit body of the Lord. In Christ they realize their "blood" relationship to all others who are in Him and experience a feeling of sympathy and fellowship for them all, regardless of race or sex. (Gal. 3:28.) When Christ returns, God will establish world-wide peace under the rulership of His Son.

III. The Christian's Contribution to World Peace. The Christian realizes that universal peace will not be experienced until the Lord comes; but nevertheless, he is deeply sympathetic toward all righteous efforts that men put forth to bring it about. At the same time, the greatest contribution he can make to world peace is the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom of God, that men may be induced to believe the gospel, repent of their sins, be baptized into Christ, and eventually obtain a place upon His throne to assist Him in bringing peace, brotherhood, and good government to the world in the age to come.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Peace: Our lesson topic today deals with the Christian and world peace. It is evident that the lesson was compiled with the thought that this world condition of peace would be accomplished and brought about through the efforts of man—a noble ideal but one that never can be accomplished. It would be folly to lead people to believe that such a condition can ever be reached under the reign of man. It would be saying: "Peace, peace; when there is no peace."—Jer. 6:14. When people cry, "Peace and safety", then sudden destruction will come upon them. 1 Thess. 5:3. While we realize that we cannot bring about this reign of peace on the earth until the Prince of peace rules, yet Christian people should exemplify and set forth the "peace of God which passeth all understanding". It is incumbent upon the Christian to "follow peace with all men" (Heb. 12:14) and to "be at peace among themselves" (1 Thess. 5:13). It is well to remember that "the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."—James 3:14. Therefore we should "follow after the things which make for peace".—Rom. 14:19.

Peace

—of the world will come when Christ reigns;
—is not the offspring of fear;
—emanates from the heart;
—is absolutely necessary in church work.

Real Peace: It is difficult to realize just what it will be like when there is real peace throughout the universe. Such peace means that every man will be judged righteously, that none shall labor in vain, but all shall sit under their own vine and fig tree and none shall make them afraid; nor shall the inhabitant of that land say, "I am sick". There can be no real peace as long as sin rules and reigns in the heart of man or the curse rests upon mother earth. The "peace that passeth all understanding" now is just a small foretaste of the great peace that will prevail under the reign of our Lord Jesus.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God."—Matt. 5:9.

So far as I know there is nothing said in the Bible about world peace in the present day. Christ Himself said that He came not to bring peace on earth, but rather division. See Luke 12:51. However we are told to follow after peace, Rom. 14:19; if possible to live peaceably with all men, Rom. 12:18; and to have peace one with another, Mark 9:50. If all Christians would do this, there would be much less strife than there is.

For the ones who are capable of making peace between two or more parties, there seems to be a special blessing in that they are to be called the children of God. "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."—James 3:18. World peace will come when the Father wills it, and the record reveals nothing that Christians can do to hasten that day.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Christians and World Peace

Statesmen and thinkers of today are agreed that world peace is an economic necessity; otherwise our civilization will destroy itself.

Furthermore, they know that world peace cannot be achieved until all nations are ruled by one supreme ruler. It is agreed that there cannot be internal peace unless the nations of this world are welded into one vast kingdom with but one supreme ruler.

"Peace on earth, good will to men" should be one of the fondest hopes of every Christian, but we should want it in the way and at the time God has told us we could and would get it. God's Word tells us that universal peace will be achieved by Christ alone, when He shall sit upon the throne of David. All efforts at world peace now are attempts to achieve that millennial condition by man's own efforts, leaving Christ out of the picture. Satan is making another attempt to rob Christ of His glory and honor. Shall we help him or shall we preach the gospel of the kingdom as Christ commanded? A careful reading of 1 Thessalonians 5 will tell us that God's church people will not cry for world peace.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Why Work for World Peace?

When Jesus the Savior was born, angels heralded His birth with this beautiful refrain, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men". But as you pursue the study of history in your school life you will realize that there has never been peace over the entire world except for very short periods of time. And yet we know that the angels of God could not have been mistaken. What does it all mean to us, then? If man, with his advancing wisdom and improved facilities, has not been able in the nearly two thousand years since that wonderful event to establish and maintain peace, it is quite evident he will never be able to do so. Though Christianity in general believes and teaches that man will eventually bring a state of perpetual peace over the entire earth, in the light of history and Scripture we find ourselves at disagreement with this thought. But perpetual peace will finally be established through the efforts and by the aid of that One whom God ordained to establish it—Jesus the Christ. Read Micah 4:3; Psalm 46:9, 10; Isa. 9:6, 7; 32:17, and many more.

That, however, does not relieve the follower of Christ today of his duty to bring peace wherever and whenever possible. Many wonderful blessings are promised to the one who does all in his power to promote peace among his friends and associates. Jesus calls him, "blessed" or happy, and among His last words to His disciples He says that He will give peace to those who love Him. Let's see how many of us can be peacemakers.—M. G.

BLAIR, NEBRASKA

The Church of God at Blair held its annual Rally Day services on Sunday, Oct. 16. The meeting was a success in every way, the weather was beautiful and the attendance very good. We had Sunday school and preaching service in the morning. Sr. Lucille Le Crone delivered a fine discourse on "The Return of Christ."

A basket dinner was served at the home of Bro. and Sr. Harvey Krogh. We reassembled at the church at 2:30 for our Rally Day program, which closed with a sermonette by Sr. Le Crone, exhorting us not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together in these last days.

We were very glad to welcome our elder, Bro. M. D. Newell, back to services and his place as teacher of the Bible class, as he had been absent several Sundays due to illness.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Sr. Mary E. Allard of 18216 Rayen St., North Los Angeles (formerly Zelzah), who is in her eighty-fourth year, lives alone in her little home, near her son Glen's family. She enjoys talking of her hope of the soon coming Savior.

Bro. Eugene Howard, 2522 Florence St., Arcadia, is sadly afflicted with creeping paralysis. Such afflictions bring to our minds the promises recorded in Isaiah 35, and we hope for the fulfillment ere long. Write to Bro. and Sr. Howard letters of cheering sentiment.

Sr. Jessie Scroggs is taking an enforced vacation from her desk at the telephone office, and is under the care of a specialist. We trust that the rest and treatment will soon restore her to normal health.

Bro. J. C. Smith, 1040 Worcester Ave., Pasadena, who meets occasionally for worship with our brethren in that city, is reported to be in very poor health. He, too, is in the eighties.

Bro. S. G. Elton is finding it difficult to hold regular meetings since one family has moved away and the infirmities of age prevent others from attending.

Sr. Ora Knott and daughter Virginia have been having a long siege with the "flu" and have been unable to attend any of our services.

Sr. Alma Bandt is visiting friends in San Bernardino. We miss her from class.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The church group here sprung one of the most complete and successful surprises on the pastor and wife Oct. 15 that they have ever had. Having successfully decoyed us to the church basement, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, they then went through with an evening of farewell and good wishes for our trip south. Such loyalty and Christian fellowship make us look with joy to the return and make us plan for the labors together this winter.

Last minute arrangements are being made for our all-day anniversary services for Oct. 23. Committees are appointed for arranging the dining room, preparing the meal, serving, and dishwashing. At 2:30 a short anniversary service will be held and the communion observed.

When these lines appear, we expect to be on our trip to Alabama and Louisiana and will be gone from the local church for three Sundays.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Commendatory letters are pouring into the office from all parts of the country commenting on the strength and interest of the articles that have been appearing in our columns in recent months, and The Herald takes this opportunity of passing on to our corps of able writers these expressions of appreciation, which we feel are so well deserved.

The men and women who write for The Herald are addressing, according to conservative estimates, an audience of from three to four thousand thoughtful persons each week. It is both a privilege and an opportunity to be prized to be permitted to speak to so large a body of people on behalf of the gospel of Christ.

The Herald takes much pleasure in joining our subscribers in thanking our literary workers for the splendid service they are rendering to us and to all humanity through their labor of love.

MINNESOTA FALL CONFERENCE REPORT

The Minnesota Fall Conference was held at the Bergen church, commencing on Friday morning with Bible study, and preaching in the evening.

We had a very good conference, with five ministers present, John Denchfield, Virgil Thoms, Adna Hoskins, T. W. Savage, Sr., and Richard Le Crone of Nebraska.

Letters were received from brothers Clyde E. Randall and Sydney Magaw, from whom we were glad to hear.

Bro. and Sr. Thoms sang a number of beautiful selections, helping very much with the meetings.

The state Bereans put on a program Saturday evening. We are glad to see the young people interested in the Master's work.

In all we have had a very pleasant time in the Lord's house. Dear ones in Christ, pray for us here in Minnesota.

Mrs. T. M. Savage, Sr., Sec.

OUR THANKSGIVING NUMBER

Our special Thanksgiving number of The Restitution Herald will be issued on November 15 in order that it may reach all subscribers before Thanksgiving Day. We want you to have a place in this number. There are two ways in which it can be done. You may express your gratitude to God for His blessings of the year through a short letter for publication or by making a contribution to His work, which will be acknowledged as a Thanksgiving contribution.

In spite of the depression under which the world has been suffering for so many months, God has been very good to us. His provision for our prosperity and well-being has been most generous. The fields and orchards are filled with His beneficent gifts, and any lack we experience must be laid at the door of man's incapacity and selfishness. The riches of Grace and the riches of Nature are as great as they ever were. So let us show our sense of gratitude in word and deed.

Manuscripts and remittances for publication in the Thanksgiving issue must reach the office not later than November 11 if they are to appear in the special number of the paper. Let us hear from you all.

NIAGARA FALLS FALL MEETING

I wish to extend on behalf of the church a hearty welcome to all to attend our Annual Fall Meeting on Sunday, October 30, 1932.

Any coming from a distance on Saturday will gladly be cared for, and if coming by bus or train will be met if you will notify our secretary, Mrs. Elsie Moore, 1641 Weston Ave., or myself at 1832 Linwood Ave., Niagara Falls, N. Y. The church is located at 1926 Tenth St. Come with a prayer in your heart for a successful meeting.

Yours in the blessed hope,

W. H. Moore, Elder.

REPORT OF J. M. MORGAN

I began work as an independent evangelist of the Church of God in Christ in August, 1932. Eleven dear ones were baptized into the all saving name of Christ. Their names follow: Mrs. Lenora Pyle, Bristow, Okla.; J. A. Clay, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Clay, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Massey, Mrs. Chas. Mobley, Mrs. Chas. Clay, Mr. Truman Mobley, Jiles Mobley, all of Bixby, Okla., Rt. 1; and Mrs. Bertie Winters, Mounds, Okla. I am very glad to have the pleasure of presenting these fine brothers and sisters to your care and love. Mr. Chas. Clay plans to be baptized on the fifth Sunday. Praise the Lord for His many blessings.

I set the church in order with twelve members present. We took the Lord's supper Sunday night. The following day my wife, daughter Elfreda, and I bade these dear brothers and sisters good-bye, promising to return for another gospel meeting.

Who is paying the bill? "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. 6: 7-8. As to who is paying in this instance, here is the statement:

J. A. Clay, cash	$14.50
J. A. Clay, 4 casings	18.00
J. A. Clay, 15 bu. corn	5.00
Wm. Clay	1.00
John Brooks, 2 gal. molasses	1.00
Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ellis	2.00

Total $41.50

Brothers, sisters, and friends of the truth, do you want to share with me in this greatest of all work, teaching men and women the way of life? If you decide to help, send all donations to Elder J. M. Morgan, Bristow, Okla., R.F.D. 1, Box 5-B. I also have 1000 new song books, "Songs of Truth." I must sell these books to pay the cost of printing. The price is 25 cents, postpaid.

May God bless you all.

J. M. Morgan.

REPORT OF J. H. ANDERSON

On September 20th we began a special meeting at Hillisburg Church of God, our home church. The meeting came to a close on October 7th. We spoke eighteen times and Bro. O. J. Parker twice. The attendance and interest were very good. The following persons were baptized: E. Logan; Prof. Otto Dick, principal of the Kempton High School; William Hampton; Mary Hampton; and June Roth.

J. H. Anderson.

MRS. HARRIET OLSON

Mrs. Harriet Olson, wife of Fritz Olson, died Friday, Oct. 14, after a long illness. Mrs. Olson was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otis Holes of St. Cloud, Minn. Funeral services were held in the Church of God.

Mrs. Olson was a good wife. Her desire was to make others happy. She leaves her husband, both parents, and a brother and sister. May the Lord comfort and bless them, that when Jesus comes it may be said by them as it was said by the Apostle Paul, "O death where is thy victory? O grave where is thy sting? Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

JOSEPH HENRY DREW

Joseph Henry Drew was the only son of Henry J. and Amy Nowell Drew. He was born in Dixon, Ill., Oct. 23, 1860, and died in Cloquet, Minn., Oct. 11, 1932.

When a young man Mr. Drew took a claim at Wessington South Dakota, where in 1887 he was married to Miss Lena Gilkeson. Aside from the few years spent in farming at that place, his entire life has been spent in or near Dixon.

He is survived by his wife; one daughter, Mrs. Olive Guttery, of Lynch, Neb.; and three sons, Herbert, of Cloquet, Minn., Lee, of Dixon, Ill., and Howard, of Mifflintown, Penn. His three sisters: Rilla, Ada, and Anna Drew, of Dixon, Ill., also survive.

The above brief biography, handed to me, gives the story of a life of seventy-two years. He was of modest and retiring habit, as I knew him. He had the reputation of being a man of honesty and integrity. He was quiet, kind, and gentle in disposition and, withal, truthful and upright in his conduct; a good and honorable citizen.

Funeral services were conducted in the Church of God church house in Dixon, where his friends and neighbors of many years assembled to pay tribute to his memory. He rests, while we pray for the coming of the Life Giver, to wipe away all tears, heal the brokenhearted, and reward us all, according as our works shall be.

L. E. Conner.

JAMES ALEXANDER WILLIAMSON

James Alexander Williamson, one of the oldest and earliest residents of Golden Rule Home, having entered June 30, 1926, fell painlessly asleep in death on Oct. 19, 1932. Some months ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis which not only weakened his body, but deadened his sensibilities to such an extent that he knew nothing of the death of his wife, which occurred on Sept. 6 of the present year.

Bro. Williamson was born in Lafayette Co., Wis., Dec. 9, 1847. He married his life-long companion, Miss Mary Jane Crouch, Dec. 8, 1867. They were the parents of one daughter and four sons, but two of whom survive them: Oscar of Grand Island, Neb.; and Arthur of Portland, Ore. They leave several grandchildren also to mourn their passing.

Husband and wife were united in faith as they were in heart, having been baptized at the same time by Eld. Almus Adams in 1893.

The greater part of their lives was spent in Iowa and Nebraska. In the latter state they proved most devoted supporters of the work of the conference of the Church of God, to which they ever remained true.

They now rest side by side in Daysville Cemetery, in the plot of Golden Rule Home, awaiting the Master's call. The funeral sermon for Bro. Williamson was preached by Eld. G. E. Marsh, who based his remarks on Job 3:1: "There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary are at rest."

ANNA LEHMAN

Anna Lehman, daughter of Jacob and Rachel Doll, was born Oct. 22, 1866, and died Oct. 9, 1932.

On March 21, 1889, she was united in marriage to John Lehman. A few years later she united with the Church of God at Brush Creek, Ohio, and remained a faithful member until death. She loved the church and its divine teachings, and expressed her readiness and willingness to be called to rest.

She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, Bro. John Lehman of West Milton, Ohio; two sisters and three brothers, as well as other relatives and a host of friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the home in West Milton, and the Brush Creek Church of God on Tuesday, Oct. 11, after which she was placed in the Curtis Cemetery to wait the coming of Christ.

S. E. Magaw, Pastor.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The next monthly meeting of the N. B. I. Board will be held on Monday afternoon, November 7. A full membership is expected.

The men of the Oregon church have been climbing higher the last few Saturdays—putting fireproof shingles on the church.

Letters and articles are now coming in for the Thanksgiving number. Have you written yours?

Bro. F. E. Siple of Grand Rapids is on his way to Alabama and Louisiana to begin an extended evangelistic effort. Pray for its success.

A fine list of new subscribers to The Herald reached us recently from Sr. E. C. Railsback of Los Angeles. We thank you, Sr. Railsback, and trust that others will follow your example.

And while we are speaking of The Herald, we might mention an order from Bro. Patterson, also of California, for 35 copies of our issue of October 4. Many are finding that the paper can be used successfully in interesting those who are unacquainted with the gospel of the kingdom in these great truths.

One of our most able contributors, who is a layman, writes, "I love our paper and would like to send it to others, but financial conditions grow worse as winter draws near. Am working but three days each third week, which leaves funds rather short for desires." Could he see all the commendatory letters that reach us he would know that he is giving much through his writings to the cause of the Master.

Do not overlook the announcement of the Thanksgiving Day issue of The Herald. We are waiting to hear from you.

The Brush Creek (Ohio) church will begin a series of meetings on November 13th, to continue over the 27th. Their pastor, Bro. Sydney Magaw, will be the speaker.

On Friday evening, October 21, members of the Church of God in the Plum River district, near Lanark, Illinois, met in business session and formed a new church organization. This organization is the outgrowth of Bro. Austin's efforts put forth there just recently. Bro. Harvey Krogh is remaining there as their temporary pastor. Pray that they may grow in grace.

We were glad to welcome one new regular member to Golden Rule Home family recently in the person of Mrs. Emma P. O'Byrne. Mrs. O'Byrne has been a resident of Oregon for more than thirty years, is of keen intellect, and pleasing personality. She is the widow of a Methodist minister. Mrs. J. E. Steffa, also of Oregon, is making her home with us for the winter at least.

In the next issue Bro. Alldridge will follow his present article on "Sin" with one on "Lawlessness." Sr. Young will bring another helpful message. A number have expressed the desire that we occasionally republish some of the splendid writings of our talented authors of the past. One from the pen of H. V. Reed has already appeared. Next week we will print an article on "The Spirit of Man" by Bro. George Moyer. This article originally appeared in The Rock, a quarterly edited by Bro. Samuel Wilson in 1890.

BAPTISM

(The following article will be of special interest to our readers in that it presents with clarity the views held by the Church of God on the subject of baptism more than seventy years ago, as the article was published anonymously in the Gospel Banner of June 1, 1861. It was probably written by the editor of that journal, Brother Benjamin Wilson, the talented translator of the Emphatic Diaglott. We print without quotation marks.)

THE word "baptism" is Greek (baptisma, the final a cut off), and signifies a dipping, plunging, immersing, or immersing. "Sprinkle" comes from the Greek word raino and means to sprinkle. The two words do not mean the same. Raino is nowhere applied to baptism.

There is but one baptism, for Paul says: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism."—Ephesians 4:5.

That one baptism is in water; for, says Peter: "Can any man forbid water, that these should be baptized?"—Acts 10:47.

This one baptism in water is a burial: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death."—Romans 6:4; Colossians 2:12. Hence, it cannot be sprinkling, for that is not a burial.

A man is not in Christ before he is baptized, for we are plainly taught that we must be baptized into Him: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Galatians 3:27.

Again, baptism is for the remission of sins that are past: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2:38.

Baptism, like all of God's commands, is essential to salvation: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us."—1 Peter 3:21. To say that baptism is not essential is to say that God gave a command which He does not require men to obey.

The one baptism is preceded by gospel faith; and that is the "one faith" (Ephesians 4:5), without which "it is impossible to please him (God)" (Hebrews 11:6); or in other words, it is preceded by a belief in "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ."

Proof. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women."—Acts 8:12. (1st) Philip preached the things concerning the kingdom of God (2nd) and the things of the name of Jesus Christ; (3rd) they believed (4th) and were then baptized. They were not baptized first and then taught the gospel afterwards.

Christ taught His disciples to go and preach the gospel, or good news (Isaiah 61:1-4; Luke 4:16-21); and this was the gospel of the kingdom (Matthew 4:23; Luke 8:1; Matthew 24:14; Luke 4:43). Men were required to believe this gospel of the kingdom and then be baptized: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not (the gospel) shall be damned."—Mark 16:15, 16. Hence, we are taught by the Word of God:

First. That we should believe the gospel, which is good news of the kingdom of God.

Second. That we should then be baptized into the Christ, be buried with Him by baptism for the remission of our sins, and thereby become heirs to the promises made to Abraham (Galatians 3:29) and "heirs of the kingdom" (James 2:5) which is to be "under the whole heavens" (Daniel 7:13, 14, 27; 2:44; Matthew 25:31-34).

Hence, a man cannot have a gospel baptism without a gospel faith going before it; and to be baptized without a gospel faith and then get the faith afterwards destroys the order of God. This gospel to be believed before baptism is the gospel preached to Abraham (Galatians 3:8, 24-29; Genesis 12:3, 7; 13:14-17).

Reader, do not be deluded with the idea that what some call a baptism of the Spirit will answer the purpose or that it is the baptism enjoined. It is not. Jesus was the Baptizer with the Holy Spirit (Matthew 3:11; Acts 1:5; 2:1-4; 11:14, 15.) The disciples on the day of Pentecost and those believing Gentiles in the house of Cornelius were the subjects of this Spirit baptism. This, however, did not exempt them from an immersion in water. Hence, when Peter saw that God had given the Gentiles His Holy Spirit, he said, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord."—Acts 10:47, 48.

The apostles were commissioned to make disciples by teaching and baptizing: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them."—Matthew 28:19. They first taught the people and then baptized the believers. There were no exceptions to this rule. The law of the faith—baptism—was obeyed by all in the primitive churches. None was esteemed as a Christian, as a saint or holy one, until washed in the waters of baptism. They all became "obedient to the faith" (Acts 6:7; Romans 6:17; 16:26). Even John's baptism would not suffice. Apollos was taught by Priscilla and Aquila "the way of God more perfectly"; and twelve men, John's disciples, were "baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 18:26; 19:1-5).

THE SPIRIT OF MAN

By George Moyer

WE HAVE no disposition to call in question the fact that man has a spirit, but rather to determine the scriptural meaning and use of the word. There is a popular and conventional use of the word "spirit" as applied to man, the soundness of which we have no hesitancy in disputing. That the spirit of man signifies an "immortal being or soul" dwelling in the body like a man living in a house is so at variance with the uniform teaching of the Bible and so contrary to the facts of human experience and sound philosophy that we are compelled to meet the question fairly and dispassionately. If investigation causes time-honored relics to crumble to the dust, let them go. We cannot afford to lean on a broken staff, nor hug to our bosoms fascinating delusions. It is the solid truth and the comfort it affords that we need and should be ambitious to cultivate and cherish.

"There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." There is reason and judgment, the ability to think, the power to receive instruction in man. There is the susceptibility of responding to truth—spiritual perception of spiritual ideas—in man, which, more than anything else, distinguishes him from the beast of the field. The horse and the ox can reason with reference to things material, but they are nevertheless powerless to respond to moral ideas. They cannot reason with reference to things morally right and wrong. They have no spiritual perception of moral truth; and therefore they fall below the level of moral responsibility. Man is a moral being, higher than the beast; he is mortal and therefore "a little lower than the angels"; but he is morally a responsible being, seeing that he is possessed with the power of responding to the inspiration of the Almighty and therefore capable of enlightenment with divine ideas. With these thoughts before the mind let us briefly consider the following questions:

WHAT IS THE SPIRIT?

PRIMARILY speaking, it is the "breath of life." The atmosphere we breathe contains the vitality, the life principle, of all natural or animal bodies. It must not be inferred, however, that we contend that the word "spirit" always means breath. There are four senses in which the word "spirit" is used in the Scriptures:

To represent a person or being, as for example: "God is Spirit"; angels are styled "ministering spirits"; false prophets or teachers are "seducing spirits," deceiving themselves and others with delusion.

To represent an influence, or power, proceeding from a being. The "Holy Spirit" is an influence proceeding from God. By it the prophets and apostles were moved to speak and write the things revealed to them. By His "Spirit he garnished the heavens." It is the Deity's creative energy by which all visible things were made to appear. It was the Spirit of God that quickened the lifeless body of the Lord Jesus and caused Him to rise from the death state. The time is not far distant when all who are dead in Christ shall also be quickened by the same Spirit into life everlasting: that "mortality might be swallowed up of life."—2 Corinthians 5:4.

The word "spirit" is used frequently in the Bible to indicate a disposition of mind or a state of feeling. It is written, "I will cut off the spirit of man," that is, his ambitious disposition to rule the world independent of his Creator. "Blessed are the poor in spirit" is another example illustrating the use of the word under this head.

To represent the "breath of life," for most assuredly it is the life-giving spirit of all flesh. All passages in the Bible where the word "spirit" occurs can without difficulty be classed under one or the other of the foregoing senses.

It is, however, worthy of remark that in no single instance where the word occurs does it have the meaning of an immortal entity in man. The popular idea that the spirit in man survives the death of the body in a state of consciousness is not sustained by any statement found in the oracles of God. There are four words in the original Scriptures rendered Spirit, viz., n'shamah and ruach in the

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."—Matthew 6:10.

The Editor's Prayer

OUR most gracious Lord, we would thank Thee for the privilege of living in these days of stress and change which betoken so clearly the approach of our beloved Master. We thank Thee that we are permitted to witness the unfolding of Thy mighty plan, the increasing evidence of the truth of Thy Word, and the marvelous manner in which Thou art working unseen and unacknowledged among the nations. Help us to be ever more watchful and ever more prayerful as time goes on, that we may be found of Him without fault and blameless when He comes. Amen.

Revival of Rome

THAT Rome will again become a power in the earth is agreed by many Bible students, but opinions differ as to the nature and purpose of her revival. Some contend that it will be religious in character, others that it will be wholly political, and a third conception, more in keeping with the trend of present events, perhaps, than either of the others, is that it will be a uniting of the two. The more friendly attitude manifested by Il Duce toward the Pope during the past year or two serves to support the latter view.

Regarding the possibility of a political revival of the old empire, and the lengths to which Premier Mussolini seems willing to go to bring it about, was indicated in an address which he delivered in Milan a week ago. Speaking before half a million persons gathered in the public square to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the Fascist movement, as reported by the Associated Press, Mussolini declared "that Italy was ready to fight anyone who attempts to prevent her from regaining the leadership of civilization which was ancient Rome's."

The reversal of the scroll of history, started with the remapping of Europe and the Near East at the close of the war, will continue with ever-increasing rapidity until the antichrist's power is fully developed and all things made ready for the final conflict. Those who look and long and pray for the Lord's return would be wise for their own encouragement to keep their eyes open to the changing scenes not only in Rome but throughout the entire world, for the "signs" of His coming are appearing everywhere.

"Rachel Came —"

HE HAD reached the end of a long journey, a journey fraught with strangely impressive experiences which had filled him with awe; for he had met with God. She came to meet him, leading her father's sheep.

In this way began one of the most beautiful love stories of the Bible; and the Old Book contains many love stories, for love is of God and He wants men and women to drink of its fullness.

What an attractive picture they must have made, Rachel and Jacob, as they stood beside the well!

He, a strongly built young man of striking appearance, in whose eyes still lingered something of the glory that had shone about him as he lay with his head pillowed upon a stone and dreamed of a mystic ladder stretching away into heaven where the God of his fathers dwelt.

She was "beautiful and well favoured," with the graceful poise of the languorous East, and her soft voice and gentle manner spoke of a home where love ruled and God was worshiped.

"And Jacob loved Rachel" the quaint old record says, with a love so deep and true that Time could never cool its ardor or lessen its hold upon his heart. And that his love was fully returned there can be no doubt.

From the day in which the Lord God said, "It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him an help meet for him," the Father of all mankind has been bringing men and women together, uniting them in bonds of mutual affection and respect that can never be severed. That is God's way, the way His wisdom and His love for humanity pointed out.

There is no more sacred thing in life than the love of a good man for a good woman, and the blending of their lives into one. It results in as heavenly a state of happiness as mortals can hope to enjoy.

"And Rachel came!" There comes a Rachel into the experience of every godly man, "an help meet for him," provided by God's love. And for every Rachel there is a Jacob traveling along the highway of life to find her. But sometimes the journey is long and they do not reach the well of meeting early in life. But it is better that Rachel should wait, and that Jacob should not be too impatient, until both are sure that they have found the other—the true companion provided by God for their blessing.

OUR BIBLE STUDY

IN A STUDY of the Bible it is important for us all to keep several essential points in mind in order that we may attain a correct understanding of the Word of God and in order that such knowledge may reflect itself in conduct. Among the elementary considerations for such a study of the Bible, the following should by all means be observed:

First. The Bible should be studied in its unity. Many of the differences in doctrine and division in the household of God may be attributed to the stressing of isolated passages of Scripture, to the neglect of others which would result in a variety of doctrinal views. Much of the seeming contradiction in the Bible passes away when the underlying truth in each passage is carefully considered in relation to the Bible as a whole. These very points of divergence, which to the finite mind may seem to be contradictory, are part of God's plan in making known His infinite truth so far as it can be intelligible to the human mind. Unless we reckon with the whole truth, we fall into error. We must study the Bible in its unity.

Second. Much error in teaching is caused by the reading into the Scripture of human opinion and philosophy. It is a thoroughly human tendency to start out with some presuppositions and then attempt to bolster them up by an appeal to Scripture. Passages of Scripture can be found, which, when isolated from the rest of the Bible, can be made to prove almost any human doctrine. He who wishes to understand the revelation of God must not be guilty of such error or such attempts at the justification of his own philosophy. We must handle aright the Word of truth.

Third. The fear element should be removed as we proceed with our study. We should not be afraid lest it become necessary at any time to revise our opinions or cherished doctrines, if these be found out of harmony with the teachings of Scripture viewed in their unity. The objective of Bible study, so far as facts and doctrines are concerned, should be to ascertain what God has to reveal to us rather than to prove our own opinions to be accurate. When this objective is found in the study of God's revelation, there need be no fear, but rather trust that in the light of His truth we shall attain greater spiritual heights in our quest for an understanding of things divine. Here, too, the love of the Lord casts out fear as we search the riches of His Revelation. We must be fearless in our quest for truth.

Fourth. It is important for us also to understand the circumstances and the immediate occasion of any biblical writing, and also to ascertain the permanent and eternal basic truths contained therein. Thus we distinguish between the temporary and the eternal. Thus we are saved from the danger of falling into a legalism which kills the spirit and makes the attainment of life impossible.

Fifth. We must have confidence and faith. The Word of God has withstood attacks throughout the ages. It will stand forever. Instead of revising the views of eternal truth contained in the Bible to conform with accepted current usage in human society, we should let the scriptural truths stand first, and then, if necessary, change the accepted current opinions. The wisdom of God exceeds in an unmeasurable manner the wisdom of man. Let us be guided by divine wisdom primarily, and never compromise the Word of God for the sake of the wisdom of men.

Sixth. And, above all, we need humility, especially intellectual humility. If we acknowledge the primacy of scriptural truth, we shall be happy to discard our own imperfect convictions for those that rest on the rock foundation given by God. Thus is the Scripture fulfilled in an intellectual sense that he who exalts himself shall be abased, but he who humbles himself shall be exalted. We must worship God with mind as well as with heart. Our intellect must be subject to His perfect wisdom.—The Standard Bible Teacher.

IN THE RE-MAKING

AS STEEL must be softened to be reshaped, so must man become pliable if he is to be molded after the fashion of Christ. The mighty truth of God's Word reduces and prepares man to welcome the in-dwelling of God's Son. Only His in-dwelling changes and fashions man into a "new creature in Christ."

Neither God nor Christ forces the door to man's life. He who would admit Their presence must invite Them by works of faith. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." The "word of God" alone gives faith unto salvation.—F. L. Austin.

Luke 14:16-24

When thou art bidden, O Abidah, to serve the Lord thy God in the synagogue of thy people, thou shalt not begin at once to make excuse, and say, "Let Maasaiah do it; for, lo, I am bidden to a feast of the publicans and must needs go at the time appointed lest they speak evil of me and I lose their trade." Fear not, my son, for neither publicans nor republicans, scribes nor democrats, Pharisees nor Bolsheviki, can by any means do aught to harm thee if thou art faithful unto the Lord God of Israel. For when a man's ways please Jehovah, lo, the slanderous tongue is silenced and his enemies are made to be at peace with him.

THROUGH THE DARK

If but one brief message I may leave behind,
 One single word of courage for my kind,
 It would be this, O brother, sister, friend:
 Whatever life may bring, what God may send,
 No matter whether clouds lift soon or late,
 Take heart and wait.

Despair may tangle darkly at your feet,
 Your faith be dimmed, and hope, once cool and sweet,
 Be lost; but suddenly, above a hill,
 A heavenly lamp set on a heavenly sill
 Will shine for you and point the way to go.
 How well I know!

For I have waited through the dark, and I
 Have seen a star rise in the blackest sky
 Repeatedly; it has not failed me yet;
 And I have learned God never will forget
 To light His lamp. If we but wait for it,
 It will be lit.—Selected by Mary A. Gesin.

THE LIFE-GIVER

By William Leask

WE HAVE used the term "immortality" as the equivalent of eternal, or deathlessness; but the Greek word is incorruption or incorruptibility, always carrying the idea of perfect purity in resurrection life; a sinful immortality being an absurdity and impossibility utterly unknown to the Word of God. If, therefore, it be heterodox to deny the eternity of evil, we accept the epithet with all its consequences, as we prefer truth to orthodoxy and the teaching of the Holy Spirit to that of modern theology.

But as the word rendered eternal and everlasting is not in itself capable of conveying the thought which the English reader attaches to eternal and everlasting, namely, never-ending, except in cases in which that to which it is applied is known to exist forever, as, for example, "the eternal God," it is important to inquire what guarantee the believer has that the everlasting life promised to him will continue always? If the word is rendered "age-lasting," for example, may not that age come to an end, and the believer cease to be? May not the glory to be revealed be one of the age-lasting dispensations, which, like its predecessors, shall terminate at some far-distant epoch to give place to some unrevealed unfolding of Divine purpose to the universe?

On the mere meaning of the words I cannot rest the idea of literal endlessness: there must be something more to impart the certainty of duration to the life of the saved; and there is something that is certain, ample, perfect, glorious. Here it is: "Because I live, ye shall live also."—John 14:19. "Your life is hid with Christ in God. . . . Christ, who is our life."—Colossians 3:3, 4. This meets all possible limitations of the word and gives absolute assurance that our grandest hopes will be realized.

"Because I live" is enough. Yet is it not wonderful? As if to meet all possible criticisms, we have this about the glorious Speaker Himself: "Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him."—Romans 6:9. And this from His own lips, as if exulting in the victory already achieved and the manifold victories which are yet to spring from it: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."—Revelation 1:18.

But in connection with this great subject it may still further expand and exalt our conceptions of the love of God to men in giving to any of them who were merely mortals—and sinful mortals, too—this wonderful boon, if I mention the argument which I am confident entirely meets it.

The thought is this: There have been during the past many successive orders of creatures in our world before man appeared; what if at some period in the vast future the Creator should please to create a far nobler being than man, endowing him with splendid powers—mental and moral—that he might illustrate on an unprecedented scale the infinite resources of God and placing him in a newly-created world in all respects superior to this? What then? How could this affect the redeemed? Would this younger and grander being eclipse the glory not of the Adamic race only—for that may be easily assumed—but also that of those living by the second Adam, who have for a very long period shone forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father?

There is nothing wild or absurd about the supposition that God may create a personality as much superior to Adam as he was to any of the creatures to which he gave names. Who can say what the ages to come may witness, or what further manifestations of creative wisdom and goodness may be presented to the universe?

The idea, as such, therefore, cannot be rejected as impossible, or even incredible. The objection to its probability arises from its bearing upon the already existing sons of God; and here we come at once to that which gives to their life its supreme glory. What is that life? It is the life of the Son of God. He is the ideal perfection. The Godhead has no loftier conception of being than Christ.

Those who live in His life, therefore, and are glorified in His glory—we speak of that which is to be—have reached the highest position possible to creaturehood. No imaginary race can ever, therefore, either eclipse their glory or reach their position; for they shall live always in the undecaying life of the risen Son of God as the glorified members of their glorified and adorable Head.—Selected by R. A. Curtis.

THE VALUE OF DOCTRINE

By E. A. Marsh

THERE are many sincere persons who object to preaching on doctrinal subjects and think more good could be accomplished by presenting what they term more practical themes, implying that the distinguishing views of Bible teaching which separate denominations are of but little or no importance. So far does this feeling and opinion prevail that some do not consider it gospel preaching, or preaching "Christ and him crucified." As an illustration of this, the writer was once preaching on the subject of future punishment, and after closing, a deacon of a popular church arose and said he would have preferred to have listened to a gospel sermon. In conversation with him afterwards, he repeated it and said that all he desired was Christ and Him crucified.

Hence, it is that many mistake feeling for religion and have very crude ideas of the true teaching of God's Word. Others claim that it makes no difference what we believe so long as we are sincere and, therefore, attach but little importance to a sound exposition of Bible doctrine. So after hearing or reading it, they forget entirely the arguments and proofs given and ignorantly pursue the old superstitious course.

If ignorance were excusable where light and truth are manifest, and if that kind of blind credulity be warranted by sound reason or the Bible, we might safely retain every known error and find an excuse for all the various opinions held in Christian and heathen lands.

Not only do professed Christians who have but little idea of the doctrine as taught by Christ and the apostles stand in this precarious position, but some who have been partially enlightened associate with and fellowship that very class. I mean those whose eyes have been opened to the truth concerning the coming of Christ, the nature of man, etc. By this unwarranted course they think to gain favor or accomplish good; or they do it for the sake of their social or worldly interests. There are many ministers and people doing so, who thus endorse and sanction many of the popular errors of the day. Now, I hope such will read patiently through my appeal to them, by God's Word, to come out and be a separate, and yet united, people. We are living, as we believe and teach, in a perilous time. The enemies of the truth are many and powerful, and if we lend them the least aid or encouragement they will be the more aggressive.

When we learn without doctrine a person can be justified and saved, and that it is not of practical importance, we may with propriety expunge the greater part of the teaching of Christ and the apostles; but after a careful examination of their teaching, we arrive at a far different conclusion. This will appear by noting the many texts where the word occurs in both the Old and New Testaments.

"The law" (margin, "doctrine") "of the Lord is perfect, converting" (margin, "restoring") "the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."—Psalm 19:7. Here it is stated that "doctrine" "converts" or "restores" the soul; so it has power in it for the conversion of sinners.

"Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine?"—Isaiah 28:9. The answer following shows that it was by presenting "the word of the Lord" they were taught doctrine; and so it is now. See also v. 19, and 29:24.

"Who hath believed our report (margin, "doctrine")?"—Isaiah 53:1. The Prophet is speaking of the mission, work, and suffering of Christ, the story of which is part of the doctrine so necessary to be believed.

"The people were astonished at his doctrine."—Matt. 7:28. The teaching of Christ is evidently meant in reference to falsely judging others and on prayer and various exhortations, all called "his doctrine."

The next occurrence is in Matthew 16:12, where the doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees is referred to, of which He cautions them to beware; and the same admonition is applicable to those who are being led astray by teaching equally erroneous.

When He taught them in regard to the doctrine of the resurrection, they were astonished, as many are now (Matt. 22:33); but nevertheless, it must be preached; and He has furnished the example. When He preached on the "kingdom of God," they were also astonished; but He spoke by divine authority and boldness notwithstanding. (Mark 1:22, 27.) His parables were doctrinal. (Mark 4:2; Luke 4:32.) He was feared by the chief priests and scribes because the people were astonished at His doctrine. (Mark 11:18.) Like many ministers now, they sought to cripple His influence because He was preaching doctrine. He told the people to beware of that class in "his doctrine," and so ought we to do. (Mark 12:38.) He has taught us that any man may know the doctrine and where it originates. "If any man do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 7:17.

We learn that those who were converted in apostolic times "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship," and it would be well to do so now.

When Paul was in Athens, he preached "Jesus and the resurrection"; and the people inquired of him concerning this "new doctrine." It was considered "new" then; but after having been preached for over eighteen hundred years, it is still called a "new doctrine."

Paul, in writing to the Romans, ascribes their "being made free from sin" to their obedience to the "form (mould) of doctrine" delivered them, hence it is of the utmost importance. (Rom. 6:17.) In closing his epistle he appeals to them to "mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them"—Rom. 16:17. Should we not also do the same? In writing to the Corinthians, he asks, "What shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine?"—1 Cor. 14:6, showing that he considered it to be profitable to them. We are cautioned, however, not to be carried about by every "wind of doctrine."—Eph. 4:14.

Paul, in his charge to Timothy, instructs him to charge some "that they teach no other doctrine."—1 Tim. 1:3. He also instructs him to give attendance to doctrine, 1 Timothy 4:13, and to take heed to doctrine, v. 16; and he severely condemns those who teach otherwise and who "consent not to wholesome words, . . . and to the doctrine which is according to godliness."—1 Tim. 6:3. He declares that "all scripture is . . . profitable for doctrine."—2 Tim. 3:16. He charges Timothy to "exhort, with all longsuffering and doctrine."—2 Tim. 4:2. In Titus 2:7 he exhorts young men in doctrine to show "unconspicuousness, gravity, sincerity"; and this admonition is applicable to all Christian believers.

After obtaining a knowledge of the "principles of the doctrine of Christ," we are to "go on unto perfection."—Heb. 6:1.

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed."—2 John 9, 10.

Paul teaches that it is by "sound doctrine" we are to be able to exhort and convince gainsayers, Titus 1:9, and that we should speak the "things which become sound doctrine."—Titus 2:1. While "teaching for doctrine the commandments of men," it is vain to worship Christ.

From these copious references to the words of the prophets, Christ, and the apostles, it is clearly seen that doctrine is not only of interest to the hearer, but of greatest importance to the believer. Then let us who love the truth and believe in its power and value cling to the Word of God, and not patronize and encourage erroneous views and doctrines, opposed alike to sound reason and the Bible, by taking into our fellowship those who persistently refuse to accept the doctrine of Christ. This may seem arbitrary, but the teaching of the New Testament forbids us to associate with and fellowship those who will not receive or abide in the doctrine of Christ.

LEST WE BE JUDGED

By Nettie B. Crundwell

"For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"

THAT the judgments of God are about to be poured out upon an ungodly world there can be little doubt. Judging from present indications and the teachings of Holy Writ, this order of things is about to terminate in the time of trouble spoken of by Daniel the Prophet and Jesus the Christ.

Some are trying to sound out God's warnings to a dying world, hoping to save a few before it is too late. It is evident that it is our duty to warn others of the impending danger on every occasion that presents itself; but it is equally important that we who profess to be among the called out ones do not overlook God's warnings to us, or we may find ourselves in the sad plight that Paul ever had in mind. He spoke thus: "But I keep under my body (severely discipline my body) and bring it into subjection lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

We see by Paul's language that it is quite necessary for us severely to discipline ourselves. In fact the overcoming of self is far the most difficult of all our Christian duties.

Jesus says, "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." How important it is, then, that we overcome the works of the flesh!

Some have said that they are not afraid of self; but the Apostle Paul writes, "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

Now that is quite a list and covers most, if not all, sins. Most people professing godliness are above preaching far the greater part of it, but we cannot be so sure of some of them—strife, for instance, and envy.

Do we not stir up strife over small matters sometimes? Is not envy one of our most common faults? In fact, it is to be seen in almost every group of people; and it leads to wrath, and that in turn leads to hatred.

At first thought the word itself does not mean very much; but when we come to study the meaning of "envy," we find that it is at the root of a good many things. We are inclined to think of it as applying only to envying our fellow men their money, but it reaches far beyond that. We see others more brilliant than we who are better liked and consequently have more friends, and are more successful in life than we are. Unless we keep a close watch upon ourselves, we are likely to be seized with a good case of envy. And that leads to emulation and finally to hate.

Yes, brethren, we do well to check up on ourselves every once in a while and see how we stand, for the Apostle says that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN

Hebrew and pneuma and phantasma in the Greek; but none of these words as defined by scholars sustain the popular conception. The following text is often quoted to prove that the spirit of man is deathless: “Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.”—Ecclesiastes 12:7.

What spirit did God give man? A scriptural answer to this question will determine very clearly what spirit it is that leaves him at death.

If we turn back to the record of man's creation, we will find the desired answer: “And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.”—Genesis 2:7. To the dust-formed man was added the breath, or spirit, of life, nothing more. Before this divine inbreathing man was a lifeless soul; but when respiration began, he became a living soul. Life and death are opposite conditions of an organic body; where one begins, the other ends.

We ask, then, what leaves man at death? Only one scriptural answer to this question can be given, viz., that breath or spirit of life given at his creation. The spirit, therefore, that returns to God who gave it (not him) is nothing more than the God-given life principle which vitalizes all animal bodies and which is contained in and derived from the atmosphere we breathe: constantly breathing in this atmospheric ocean of life, it can be truly said that in Him we live, move, and have our being.

“God is Spirit” and imminent, that is, very near to all His creatures, causing the whole universe to throb with divine power and vitality. The notion that there dwells inside the physical body an immortal spirit-form that constitutes the real, thinking, and responsible man is in no sense a scriptural idea. It is purely a philosophical speculation, burdened with uncertainty even in the minds of those foremost in believing it. The Bible never speaks of man as a dual being, but rather as a unit organism, endowed with certain functions, among which are digestion, respiration, and thought. The function of mentality is no more mysterious than that of digestion. The stomach is the chief organ of digestion; but how it converts bread into flesh and bone, at the same time imparting to this inert and lifeless bread vitality, is truly a great mystery. How the brain performs the function of thoughts may be equally marvelous, but not more so than other functions equally the results of vital action.

IS THE SPIRIT OF MAN CONSCIOUS AFTER DEATH?

CONSCIOUSNESS cannot be affirmed of the Spirit in any sense, either before or after death. It is the corporeal-physical man of whom consciousness can be affirmed. Life and consciousness are one. Consciousness cannot exist where there is no visible personality and individuality of being. In death man's tangible individuality disappears, vanishes away; and therefore all consciousness ceases.

The Scriptures are very full and complete in their teaching concerning man in the state of death. “Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust.”—Psalm 104:29. David, speaking of man in another place, says, “His breath (spirit of life) goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.”—Psalm 146:4.

Death blows out the lamp and extinguishes the light of life and consciousness alike. “His sons come to honour and he knoweth it not,” “for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.”—Ecclesiastes 9:10.

It is remarkable that inspired writers never speak of man as returning to heaven or hell, but always to earth and dust. This, indeed, is very proper and in full accord with all the facts. “The first man,” says Paul, “is of the earth, earthy.” “Howbeit,” he says, “that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural (or animal); and afterward that which is spiritual.”—1 Corinthians 15:45-47. The animal and spiritual man are not two men in one, but two distinct types of men. The earthy man is mortal—corruptible. The spiritual man is immortal and incorruptible. The earthy man is subject to death. The heavenly or spiritual man is deathless. The present state pertains to the earthy, the resurrection state to the heavenly. First the natural, afterward in the resurrection the spiritual.

We conclude with the following deductions:

The spirit of or in man, primarily speaking, is the breath of life. We fail to discover that any other spirit leaves man at death.

There is an intelligence, or the function of mortality, which is sometimes expressed by the word “spirit.” This power or ability to think and reason is not a superadded spirit entity, or “immortal soul,” in man, but simply one of the functions of his organic being. The brain is the organ of thought. If the brain is idiotic by reason of deformity or deficiency in cranial structure, there will be only a feeble manifestation of mental power.

Man's emotional feelings are sometimes referred to by the word “spirit.” The disposition of mind he exhibits, or the state of feeling manifested, is frequently indicated by the word “spirit,” as in the following: “Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.” And the Apostle speaks of the “hidden man of the heart, . . . the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit.”—1 Peter 3:4. But in no single instance do we discover a text that speaks of a spirit being in man that survives the death of the body.—The Rock, February and May, 1890.

LAWLESSNESS

By George B. Alldridge

"Knowing this, That a Law is not enacted for a Righteous man, but for the Lawless and Unruly, for the Ungodly and Sinners, for the Impious and Profane, for Smiters of fathers and Smiters of mothers, for Assassins."—1 Timothy 1:9, Diaglott.

THE readers of THE RESTITUTION HERALD should rejoice and be thankful to our dear heavenly Father that its columns are safe in the hands of its present editors.

The editorial, "Fooling Ourselves," is a splendid statement regarding the attitude of every loyal member of the Church of God in the exercise of his or her franchise as an American citizen. Let it not be thought for one moment that to the government we are in any respect disloyal.

The Church of God as a people throughout our land is a valuable asset to the government. Unfortunately, though, by some we are considered anarchists. Jesus said, "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men."

In Jesus' day the same conditions prevailed in many ways as today. Our Lord avoided political entanglements, although His enemies sought to ensnare Him. The question of paying taxes came up, as prohibition has arisen in our day. The leading politicians began to heckle Him as they do Hoover, Roosevelt, and Thomas today; but He had that wisdom which is from above.

So they propounded a sticker and began to nudge each other and whisper, "Now we got Him; He will have to straddle this one sure." "Tell us therefore," they said, "What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not?" If He said, "Yes," then He would lose the Jewish vote; if He said, "No," then the authorities would arrest Him for seditious utterances.

"But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Shew me the tribute money. And they brought unto him a penny. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? They say unto him, Caesar's. Then said he unto them, Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's. When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way."

If Jesus were here today and the crowd that is crying for "personal liberty" were to ask Him how He stood upon the eighteenth amendment, He doubtless would refer them to the words of His beloved Apostle Paul (Moffatt's rendering): "Every subject must obey the government authorities, for no authority exists apart from God. The existing authorities have been constituted by God. Hence anyone who resists authority is opposing the divine order, and the opposition will bring judgment on themselves. Magistrates are no terror to an honest man, though they are to a bad man. If you want to avoid being alarmed at the government authorities, lead an honest life, and you will be commended for it."

This is the position of the Church of God. It has no fault to find with the constitution or any of its amendments.

In the early church an occasion arose when the apostles came into collision with the religious authorities. The high priest and his associates arrested the apostles. "And when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the high priest asked them, saying, Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrines, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us. Then Peter and the other apostles answered, and said, We ought to obey God rather than men."

The first amendment to our constitution reveals what a blessing we enjoy. "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievance."

If all professing a sympathy for the Christian religion would be as obedient as those of the Church of God, it would not be so difficult for the authorities to enforce the law. For preaching Christ no one will molest or arrest us, but those who do so must be careful that their lives conform to it.

The world during its history has passed through some terrible times, but there has been no time that those professing to be followers of Christ so flippantly set at defiance the laws of the land as they are doing today.

Can any true follower of Jesus fraternize with or lend his support to such a condition as this? To reiterate the words of our beloved brother Paul: "Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances? Touch not; taste not; handle not: which all are to perish with the using, after the commandments and doctrines of men."

H. F. Smalley wrote in The Fraternal Visitor, "Jesus would have us so adjust our regard both for Caesar and God that we may not on the one hand, under pretence of religion, do any injury to Caesar, nor on the other, under pretence of duty to Caesar violate any of the commands of God. The rights of God are sacred and inviolable. He, and He alone, is the Lord of conscience, and when that is invaded we must unhesitatingly declare that 'we must serve God rather than man.'

"Broadly speaking, both Government and Religion function to the welfare of man. Both lay claim to his obedience, but they operate on different planes. Legislative measures if capably applied can achieve a great deal in restraining criminal tendencies and diminishing social evils, but such enactments cannot make men good.

"Christ's laws have for their aim an altogether higher achievement—the creation of a clean heart and a pure mind, an inward spiritual condition, from which right-doing inevitably springs. In ordinary circumstances, then, the claims of the State and the demands of God need not clash. It has been well said that ‘Justice is the ideal of the State, goodness the ideal of Religion, and goodness presupposes a sense of justice.’ Fraternity or brotherhood was the metaphor used by our Lord to express the relations that should subsist between the members of His body. Modern democracy uses the same terms and proclaims the same ends. But while Christ’s servants were commanded not to return violence with violence when occupied in the work of proclaiming His kingdom, man resorts to a policy of terrorism and bloodshed. . . . War and desolation are no part of Christian duty.

“Christ’s brethren have sworn absolute allegiance to their Master and King, and while He is absent they dare not put themselves under the military control of the kingdoms of men under peril of violating their trust.”

Brethren, let us spare no effort to live lives worthy of our calling, maintaining in the future days the redemption wrought by our Lord in the past. So live that we may be accounted good stewards of God’s manifold grace, co-workers with God, ambassadors through whom God may call men and women to a knowledge of His saving truth.

GOD IN POLITICS

By Arlen Marsh

---

“Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel . . . I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet to me.”

FROM the time that Adam and his wife performed the gastronomic feat that brought the curse of Jehovah upon the earth and all its inhabitants to the moment of the last prison riot at Portsmouth men have refused with stubborn persistence to accept as fact their Deity’s power over their paltry governments and acts. Despite the history of Nebuchadnezzar’s inglorious fall, Belshazzar’s ignoble reign, the impious architectural efforts of Babel, and the unparalleled rule of Solomon, few rulers have been willing to confess allegiance and subordinacy to the God who created them.

Oddly, many now admit the authority of the Lord of hosts, proclaiming it vociferously. No one could doubt their enthusiastic acceptance of the supremacy of Israel’s God, and yet, somehow, those whose paeans rise the highest toward the heavens, those whose patriotic loyalty to the King of the universe builds and confirms belief and faith and stirs an uncommon fervor in the breasts of all who hear, seem a trifle cheap, like tinsel, not all of them, but some.

Emblazoned in two-inch letters, eight column headlines carry the gratifying news that the candidate for official figurehead has committed himself to a policy of strict economy, to which all his henchmen have pledged themselves, also. Good news, this, for the farmer whose land lies buried under a mountain of paper and for the city man who has received notice of a thousand dollars due toward the assessment levied recently on his six-hundred-dollar lot; very good news, indeed. Of course, the esteemed opponents of the honorable candidate for office have derided his proposed policies with sarcasm and jest and have substituted their ideas on political panaceas; but all that is to be expected, and he will retaliate in kind.

Meanwhile, the voter, whose knowledge of the practical economics of government usually extends to the maintenance or attempted maintenance of his own family and dwelling, regards with unconcealed aversion the brave promises of the candidate and his colleagues and enemies. He, the voter, could settle everything were he in office, but these others—bah! And as for his honor the candidate—well, anyway, if he were elected, the city, county, state, and nation would most assuredly go to the corporate poorhouse. On the other hand, were his opponent to attain the office, then all would be well. But the seven fates deliver us from the horrors of his rule!

Such is the process of thought and speech and writing apparent throughout the nation. He whose earnest plaints rise highest regarding the present, past, and future governments is not infrequently the same as he who clamorously asserts that the prophets were right and that God holds sceptre and crown. As the case may be, he cries for Democrat, for Socialist, for Prohibitionist, for Communist, for Laborite, for Republican to protect him from the inroads that the government is making on his bank account. If he has no bank account, his cries are louder still.

There is no room for criticism of the man who strives by word and deed to place in office that one whom his honest opinion deems best for the position; but harsh indeed must be the censoring of him who piously repeats Daniel’s declaration that “the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will” and well nigh simultaneously directs a verbal blast upon the opposite and successful party. Why this excoriation if he is convinced that the government he so bitterly condemns is God-erected? His is not true faith, but vacillating weakness.

In the hands of the great I Am all things work together for good for them who love the Lord in sincerity. Positive and divinely-incited utterances of the prophets assure us that Jehovah does hold sway among the decadent institutions of complacent man. As in the ages of the past, this rule spells endless death, spells destruction for all who oppose the Ruler’s will. No danger for them who are His own can possibly result, for God will never be defeated.

“JUST AROUND THE CORNER”

By Paul M. Hatch

THE caption above is used very frequently in these present times to express an expectancy of the near revival of business prosperity and has acted as a balm and sedative upon the minds of a populace that has been harassed out of mind, not only with the depression of business, but with the problem of keeping the home fed, clothed, and educated as well.

Just how close to the seductive corner this country or the world is, is a question that one can answer as well as another. There are no doubt forces in operation that will either promote or prolong the time of this turning.

However, it is not our purpose to discourse on those forces that are now in operation, as they can be readily perused in the daily press and current periodicals. They may be workable or not as the channels of trade use them rightly or abusively. It is rather to another “corner” that this article is devoted, a prophetic corner, if you please, that has a more glorious aspect than any that could be devised by mankind or even thought of. As we approach it and observe the portents along the way, its nearness becomes more and more a reality. Soon it will burst upon our view and the experience of a permanent joy and prosperity will be ours.

But before it will have been reached, there will appear many signs for our guidance, the great sign people of God (the Jews) being the most prominent. No doubt is harbored in the mind of the diligent searcher after truth but that numerous predictions of the prophets, centuries old, are finding their truth verified in these days in the movement of the Jews back to the land of promise once viewed by the outstanding character of faith, Abraham.

One prophecy in particular stands out as being especially interesting in connection with times that are apparently immediately before us. It is found in Hosea 3:4, 5, which reads: “For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days.”

Then again in Jeremiah 30:10, 11, we read, “Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.”

“The mountain of the Lord’s house” that is to be “established in the top of the mountains, and . . . exalted above the hills” in the last days can be no other than the nation of Israel. Into it all nations will flow with peaceful and religious mien desiring the bounties of God’s judgment and mercy. (Isaiah 2:2-5; Micah 4:1-7.)

This foretold gathering of Israel to their home land is now being accomplished, for there is no doubt that the Gentile times are closing that have trodden the holy city under foot; and the portents of its closing are the great upheaval in the political heavens and the intense distress of nations in perplexity, with the fear of men’s hearts in looking after the things coming on the earth attending it. “And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.” Such is the way that Luke views the scene with a prophetic eye; and we likewise, armed now with an actual sight and experience, can rejoice that our redemption is drawing nigh (Luke 21:24-28). Yes, Matthew says it is even at the doors (Matthew 24:33).

• It is almost time for the Deliverer to come out of Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob, for which David sighed in the fourteenth Psalm (last verse). “Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! when the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.”

COMPASSION

By Lottie E. Young

WE OFTEN hear the words, “O, conditions are very different now from what they used to be.” Perhaps that is true to a certain extent, but have men and women changed their dispositions? No matter how far back into the history of the human race we delve we see the same types of people we do nowadays. Take some of the characters of the Bible, for instance, and note how closely they resemble the folks with whom we associate. There is the record of but one perfect Man, who was “in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.” The failings of such men as Abraham, “the friend of God,” and David, “a man after God’s own heart,” are not disguised in the Word, and go to prove how true the Bible is.

We do not know very much about the men Jesus chose for His followers, but perhaps Peter is as good an example of the average man as any. When we hear the name we think of one who was impulsive and wayward. Yet how his outspoken, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,” must have comforted the heart of the Man of Sorrows, so weary with trying to help others, and getting so little response to His spiritual mission. Peter was surely enthusiastic in everything he did, and more has been accomplished by this type than by those who are over cautious.

Peter stumbled and fell when he trusted in his own strength, when he mixed with the enemies of Jesus, actu-

THE TRINITY

Exodus 20:3

AS ISRAEL departed from the true worship of God for the polytheism of the pagan nations, so has Christendom long since supplanted the worship of one God with that of the trinity.

The doctrine of the trinity has flourished for many centuries and has long been considered essential truth by most of Christendom. It was first established in the creed by the Council of Nice in the year 325, when all who would not bow the knee to the new Baal were branded heretics.

The doctrine declares that there are three co-equal and co-eternal Persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; that the three Persons are one substance and that each of the three is God in person.

The seriousness of this error is apparent when we realize that to acknowledge it is one form of idolatry. The God of the trinity is not the God of the Bible. It is neither scriptural nor reasonable. It is an inexplicable mystery.

How simple, in contrast, the one only God of the Bible, His Son, Jesus Christ, two distinct Persons, and the Holy Spirit, God's all-pervading influence.

If we love God, let us be jealous of His name and worship. Let us honor it and hold it sacred, that we may know His blessing upon His children who worship Him in spirit and in truth.—Senior Book II, Lesson 4.

VALUE OF BEREAN BOOKS

It is not an infrequent occurrence for one high school or college student to question another about his religion, but it is infrequent to find such a student who can answer the queries intelligently. Only knowledge can enable him to do so.

On this page is published an extract from one of the Berean books. Through lessons similar to this, with the aid of the questions and texts given, it is possible to gain a thorough knowledge of all the important gospel truths. If one is isolated, the home study committees are glad to aid his study by correspondence.

Prices on all books have been sharply reduced for a temporary sale. Now is the time to buy and to learn about God's Word. Rates are as follows (all books are prepaid): Senior series, 1921-23 and 1923-25, and Junior Book 3, $.10 a copy; Senior Books I and II, $.20 a single copy, $.17 a copy for 5 to 24, $.15 a copy for 25 or more; Children's Bible Story and Study Book and The Hebrew People, $.25 a single copy, $.22 a copy for 5 to 24, $.20 a copy for 25 or more; Jesus, the Light of the World, $.25 a copy. ### MARSHALL BEREANS

THE Marshall Berean Society held its annual business meeting at the Salem Church on September 4th, 1932, electing the following officers: Edna Wood, President; Ivan Veach, Vice President; Edith Hendrix, Secretary-Treasurer; Ruth Goekler, Assistant Secretary.

The class had thought it best not to have Berean on preaching nights. As we have been having preaching twice a month, this left two or three Sunday nights in the month for Berean meetings. Sometimes it rained, making our roads too bad to travel over. The class has probably averaged meeting about once a month. We feel this has helped to kill the interest. Attendance has not been good for three or four months.

We felt that something must be done and done at once; after talking it over with those most interested, we decided to discontinue meetings at the church but to meet at Martinsville at the various homes of the members. The first meeting, on October 13, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Sylvan Richey, was attended by fifteen.—Edna Wood, Pres.

MAKING A LIFE

ALONG the shores of the Jordan river one day long, long ago, there walked a wise and loving Teacher, followed by many people. He had just held in His arms the little ones who had been brought to Him by their proud mothers to receive His blessing. The disciples, feeling that Jesus (for He it is we are following in His journey toward Jerusalem) should not be bothered by little children, wanted the mothers to take their babies away. But Jesus was never too busy, nor too important, to heed everyone who came to Him.

After the smallest one had gone with a parting blessing and a kindly hand laid upon his golden curls, to dream perhaps of the smile upon the Stranger's face that day, another came to Him. This was not one of the little children of Judea, but a rich young man, who with all his wealth yet needed something that Jesus alone could give.

Running up to this wise and loving Teacher, the "poor," rich young man knelt at His feet, and looking up into those understanding eyes, he burst out with the question that was troubling him. To all appearances the young man had everything that life could give—money, friends, position, honor, fame. But still something was lacking.

Many of you, boys and girls, have decided what you will choose as your life work. And those of you who have not yet made your choice know that you are going to be somebody big, somebody who can do hard things, somebody who will lead others, somebody with money and power. I wonder if there is something even better than all this? But let's go back to the young man of our story.

He thought, when Jesus questioned him, that he had kept every command, but do you think he had? For Jesus had taught that the true meaning of these commandments was that love must be in our hearts toward all men. And if the young man had loved his fellow men he would gladly have heeded Jesus' warning.

Perhaps the trouble with the young man was that he wanted to do something big, but he wasn't willing to pay the price in sacrifice. For we read that he went away sorrowfully because he loved his riches more than he did those who needed his help. And Jesus must have been sad, too, because of the young man's decision.

Can you imagine yourselves there, boys and girls? You, too, have a choice before you. You may set out to make something fine of your life, finding joy not in piling up wealth, but in loving service to others in countless little acts of kindness, in teaching others about Christ. And in the end, though you may not be counted rich as the world counts riches, you will have that unseen wealth of love in the hearts of your friends and hope of life eternal. Or you can be as the young man who loved money above all else.

"To every child there openeth a high way and a low; and every child decideth which way his soul shall go." Which way will you take?

"Just as I am, Thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me,
To consecrate myself to Thee,
O Jesus Christ, I come.

"In the glad morning of my day,
My life to give, my vows to pay,
With no reserve and no delay,
With all my heart I come.

"I would live ever in the light,
I would work ever for the right,
I would serve Thee with all my might;
Therefore, to Thee I come.

"Just as I am, young, strong, and free,
To be the best that I can be
For truth and righteousness and Thee,
Lord of my life, I come."

Would you like to make a doll that won't break for baby sister or brother? Wind coarse white string around a book about eight inches long. Wind close together and enough to make a plump dolly. Now tie a thread around one end to hold the strands together. Next cut through the string at the other end of the book, and slip the book out.

A little way down the uncut end tie a string around to make the dolly's neck. Then put on a bright piece of ribbon for a tie. To make the arms take some strands from the body and cut them off the right length. Tie the arms at the shoulders and wrists. Tie another thread around dolly's waist and cover it with a pretty ribbon also.

Then sew on two shoe buttons for the eyes, and mark the eyes and mouth with crayon or ink. And there you have a pretty little gift for baby!

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Making a Living.

Basic Truth: "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—1 Corinthians 10:31.

I. Making a Living at the Expense of Others. (Amos 5:11-13.) It is particularly true in these times that "none of us liveth unto himself."—Rom. 14:7. We are mutually dependent upon each other. When the rich grind down the poor, they also rob themselves; for in reducing the ability of the laboring class to buy, they reduce their own profits. Injustice always reacts against itself. Selfishness on the part of the employer encourages the development of selfishness on the part of the employee, and each working for his own immediate ends diminishes the productive power of both. Observing the "houses of hevn stone" in which the rich live, there is born in the hearts of the less favored class a sense of injustice and inequality that tends to strife and loss on both sides.

II. Double Profits From Righteousness. (Amos 5:14, 15.) To seek the good of others is to seek one's own good; for as we have seen, we are dependent upon each other for our success in life. In forgetfulness of self lies the secret of happiness. Beyond this, "to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men" (Acts 24:16), brings a peace of mind that contributes to health and longevity.

III. Making a Living for Eternity. (Luke 19:16-23.) In this present life, we lay the foundation of our future existence and of our eternal reward. As we sow now, so shall we reap when the Lord comes and "rewards every man according to his works."—Matt. 16:27. "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."—2 Cor. 9:6. The one who utilizes generously the strength and ability God has given him will receive a reward commensurate with the effort he has put forth. Our position in eternity depends upon the faithfulness with which we perform the duties which God has placed upon us here.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Honest Toil: Honest labor is not a curse but a blessing. Before sin entered and the curse was pronounced man was charged with work to do. "And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and keep it."—Gen. 2:15. "Idle hands are the devil's workshop" is a saying full of truth. One of the condemning sins of the Sodomites was idleness, not being unemployed, for there is no sin in being unemployed necessarily, but they were idle because of volition. Idleness of volition is certainly a great sin. Any man can use his time to advantage even though there is no remuneration. No person can be honorable and worth while that eats the bread of idleness (Prov. 31:27). There are many people throughout the country who are unemployed and living from the charity and mercy of others because they simply don't want to work. "For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat."—2 Thess. 3:10. Every man when able and when it is possible should provide for his household. "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."—1 Tim. 5:8. When God said that we should earn our bread by the sweat of our brow, He knew what was best for us.

Honest Toil

—is upright no matter how servile the task;
—brings satisfaction to the toiler;
—is never rendered by a lazy man;
—is badly needed in church work.

Honest Pay: It is just as easy to take advantage and pay a dishonest wage as it is to give a dishonest day's work. One is as bad as the other. The person who cheats or withholds the hire of his laborers comes under the anathemas of the Lord. The golden rule in practice gives an honest day's work for an honest day's pay and vice versa.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Be not slothful in business."—Romans 12:11.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest."—Prov. 6:6-8. Well may we take a lesson from the ant, and be diligent that we may provide for ourselves. "He also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster."—Prov. 18:9. The opposite of this then would be, "He that is careful in business provides for himself and others."

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold." Though each should strive to have a comfortable living, it need not run into riches. We do not want to be dependent on others. Paul said he labored to keep from being a burden on others, which is a good example for us.—L. A. R.

The Christian Spirit in Business

Christianity is not like a "Sunday suit", to be used one day a week only. It must be used seven days each week and twenty-four hours a day. Anyone using Christianity any less than that is not a Christian, any more than a statement is truth because eighty-five per cent is fact and only fifteen percent falsehood. It is evident that the Christian spirit must enter into our business dealings.

Many "hard deals" and "sharp bargains" are made in the name of "good business" while the Christian spirit is forgotten. One came to Jesus and said to Him: "Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me." Here was one seeking only his just due; no sharp bargain was under consideration. Jesus answered: "Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Luke 12:13, 15.

When one refuses to carry his Christianity into business with him, it is because he thinks he can make more money by leaving it out. He thus proves that his first love is money. "Where your treasure is there will your heart be also. But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:21, 33.—H. A. S.

Right Ways of Earning Money

Just now this is a very important question to all, younger people included. We all desire money with which to purchase the necessities of life, and we see on every hand means of earning it. But it doesn't take a vast amount of wisdom to know that some of the methods of obtaining money are wrong, and from these we must keep ourselves if we would be like our great Example. Discuss in class good and harmful occupations. We sometimes think that the wicked person prospers more than the righteous, but David tells us not to fret about the wicked even though he does seem to prosper. "For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth", he tells us in Psalm 37. Throughout that chapter David shows the permanence of the righteous and the uncertainty of the wicked. So let us not be tempted by false ways or evil practices, but rather content ourselves with little and a clear conscience. Paul gave Timothy the same advice in these words, "But godliness with contentment is great gain, and having food and raiment let us be therewith content." He goes on to show how riches often bring much sorrow and that the follower of Christ should not be tempted by them.

As you begin to plan for your life work, dear young readers, remember that though you may obtain riches if you bend your entire energy in that direction, you will not find a happiness that is lasting, for it is in giving not in getting that true joy is realized.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

The annual fall series of meetings will be held at Brush Creek Church of God, from November 13 to 27. Special musical features and choir work will be in charge of Miss Louise Brewer. Sermons each evening by the pastor will be both doctrinal and evangelistic. Every member of the congregation is expected to join in with us to make this an interesting and helpful meeting. Any interested persons living at a distance will be gladly welcomed. If you can come just drop us a line, and upon your arrival care shall be waiting for you.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor,
243 North Second St., Tippecanoe City, Ohio.

MORA, MINNESOTA

These faithful people are indeed doing all they can to hold the fort. I have been going to this place each week to speak. They have their Berean study, both young people and adults separately, on Sunday evening in the homes, using the Berean books. The ladies have an aid society which would be a credit to any church. Last Thursday I spoke. There were forty-two in attendance. Friday morning one of the fine young ladies, Ruby Randall, was buried with Christ in baptism. The service occurred in Snake River back of Bro. George Randall's place. May the dear Lord abundantly bless this sister in her new life.

A. E. Hoskins.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

Our work is moving forward. All departments are actively engaged in doing their best in the development and spreading the gospel of the coming kingdom of God. The ladies have been playing a great part in helping to provide for the work. Their untiring efforts continue on through difficulties with a faith that is unshakable.

Likewise the men have organized, now known as "Good Samaritans", meeting twice each month with a good program, including an outside speaker to help in opening our eyes to the problems of our community. Bro. Wm. Spicer ably leads them as president.

The young people have very interesting Berean studies on Sunday nights.

The Bible school under our good superintendent grows steadily. We now have a men's Bible class, with Bro. Frank Noyes as teacher. Shall we pray for one another.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

OREGON

Sr. Lela Taylor arrived in Corvallis several weeks ago from Los Angeles, where she has spent the past two years. She is making her home with her mother, Sr. Flora Hogue, and is attending O. S. C.

Bro. H. B. Hathaway has returned to Corvallis after spending several weeks with Elmer Hathaway at Felida, Wash.

Sr. Evelyn Kerr left last week for Oakland, Cal., where she will visit friends and relatives.

It is with regret that we write of the passing of J. W. Hogue two weeks ago at the family home, 435 Kings Road, Corvallis. Our sincere sympathy goes out to Sr. Flora Hogue and family in their hour of sorrow. Obituary will appear later.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our sixth birthday is past. A good crowd was present to help us make the day an enjoyable one. About 175 stayed for dinner in the basement, most of the work being done by the men. A short anniversary service was held at 2:30, followed by communion. The evening service was another pleasing characterization sketch of an Old Testament character, one of a series which our pastor has been following for several weeks.

After this full happy day, our beloved pastor and his wife and three young daughters, Dorothy, Jeanette, and Virginia, left for a three weeks' trip to the South to visit the parents of both Bro. and Sr. Siple. Our best wishes go with them, and our prayers for a safe return.

Our ladies class, "The Morning Stars," held its regular social evening on October 19. A pleasant time was enjoyed.

Mrs. Fred Hall.

ENROUTE

After enjoying a wonderful "Anniversary Day" with our Grand Rapids church on Oct. 23, concluding the sixth year of the church's life and activity, the wife, our three youngest children, and I headed south. The first stop of any length was with the J. S. Lyon family at Citronelle, Alabama, where we were present for the wedding of Margaret to Richard Duval on Oct. 27. We later headed for Hammond, Louisiana, the writer's old home, where a series of meetings is scheduled to be in progress when these lines appear.

A capable member of the home church at Grand Rapids has been asked to keep you informed on activities there.

F. E. Siple.

REPORT OF PLUM RIVER CHURCH

A meeting for the purpose of reorganizing the church at Plum River was held at the church on Friday, Oct. 20. Much interest and enthusiasm were shown, as the church had not been properly organized for some years.

Officers were chosen, and all responded willingly and gladly in taking the responsibility placed upon them to better serve the Master. The following officers were selected: elders, Frank Switzer, Charles Lindsay; deacons, Bernard Crofton, Homer Switzer; deaconesses, Mrs. Frank Switzer, Fern Mitchell; secretary, Mrs. Bernard Crofton; treasurer, Mrs. Charles Lindsay. Bro. Harvey Krogh was chosen as temporary pastor.

Bro. F. L. Austin held a series of meetings at this place recently, and from his earnest and sincere efforts much good has resulted. Mrs. Emma Renner and Lloyd Renner, both of Mt. Carroll, and Mrs. Earl Baer, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Walter Miller, received Christian baptism. Two members from other churches requested membership.

Though our numbers are small, we hope to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." We hope through faith and works to bring others to the foot of the cross and to walk worthy of our profession and to love and serve one another even as the Master taught us. We would appreciate the prayers of other brothers and sisters.

Mildred Crofton, Sec.

"LET NOT THY LEFT HAND KNOW—"

We thank God that all are not "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" in these days, as the following anonymous letter which contained a ten dollar bill attests.

"Our railroad is running an excursion to Niagara Falls this week end—round trip $3. I could hardly resist going. Here is the amount I judge I would have spent had I gone."

We recall the statement of Bro. Haney in a recent article (Sept. 27) in which he said that if the Christian followed as strict a code of duty toward Christ as some worldly men do toward their business associates, "it would then be Jesus first, others next, ourselves last." That is the code our anonymous correspondent has adopted.

SARAH MARTHA MYERS

Sarah Martha Myers, beloved wife of Geo. Mortimer Myers, died at Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 28, 1932.

She was the daughter of Levi and Lucy Cox, and was born in Macon County, Missouri, August 12, 1843. She was united in marriage to George Mortimer Myers, May 14, 1863. To this union six children were born, three boys and three girls. She was preceded in death by her husband, her oldest daughter, Mrs. Ella M. Greenlie, oldest son, John T. Myers, and youngest son, Chas. A. Myers. Those surviving are: Mrs. O. M. Valentine of Chambersburg, Pa.; G. W. Myers of Topeka, Kan.; and Mrs. Minnie LaShelle of Des Moines.

Her daughter, Mrs. LaShelle, and granddaughter, Helen LaShelle, were with her at the time of her death. They did for her all that loving hands could do.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. H. G. Sutton of the Christian Church from the Lawrence Funeral Home, Boone, Iowa, on Friday afternoon, Sept. 30. Burial was in the family lot beside her husband and children at Atchison, Kan. The burial services were conducted by Rev. Kellson of Atchison.

Sr. Myers united with the church in early girlhood and lived an active Christian life until the time of her death. She was loved by all who knew her and was always ready and willing to help others and give her strength and share what she had with others. Her life work was well done, and she now sleeps awaiting the call of her Master in the morning of the resurrection.

Mrs. Ida Marsh.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Please read—and re-read—our president's appeal on the last page, that you may clearly understand our needs.

Bro. Wm. H. Boyer, secretary of the Maurertown, Va., church, reports an increase of four new pupils in the Sunday school since Bible school, probably as a result of the interest aroused then. The Maurertown church is strongly opposed locally, but continues to forge ahead.

Sr. Ida Marsh of Ames, Iowa, has been visiting at the home of her daughter, Sr. Leona Marsh at Fort Wayne, Ind. While in Indiana she writes that she had the pleasure of hearing two sermons by Bro. J. H. Anderson and one by Wm. H. Brown, former pastor of the Lee Avenue church in Cleveland, Ohio.

The obituary of Mrs. Sarah Martha Myers, which appears in this number, will recall to many the long and successful years of labor of her husband, Elder G. M. Myers. In addition to his preaching Bro. Myers published various religious journals in Illinois and Iowa, and was widely known for his scholarship and for his ability in debate.

The Herald wishes to extend its best wishes to Sr. Margaret Lyon, whose marriage to Mr. Richard Duval took place on Oct. 27, 1932, at the home of her parents, Bro. and Sr. J. S. Lyon, Citronelle, Ala. The bride is a sister of Sr. F. E. Siple of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Bro. M. W. Lyon of Cleveland, Ohio. May these young people "spend their days in prosperity, and their years in peace."

Remember the special evangelistic effort that is to begin at Brush Creek, Ohio, Sunday, Nov. 13th, and continue over the 27th. Pray for its success.

We rejoice to learn that Sr. Bertha Partlow of Casey, Ill., is again at home after undergoing treatment in the hospital. To God be the praise.

Eld. C. E. Randall, pastor of the churches at Ponthill, Ont., and at Niagara Falls, N. Y., is publishing a series of interesting little editorials on the work of the General Conference in his attractive church bulletin, "Church of God Messenger." We appreciate the spirit shown in the articles, and especially the editor's use of the pronoun "our"—he calls it "our conference," and so it is.

Two voices, long since silenced by death, are speaking to us out of the past in the present number of The Herald. In "The Spirit of Man," on the front page, Bro. George Moyer presents a most logical argument on the nature of the spirit. Bro. Moyer was a man of keen intellect and profound reasoning power, and served the cause of truth ably for many years throughout the middle west. "The Value of Doctrine," by E. A. Marsh, the father of the present editor of The Herald, was originally published fifty-two years ago. Elder Marsh assisted in the organization of the first Church of God conference in Iowa, and, together with T. M. Whitesett, acted as the first evangelist employed by it. His ministerial activity covered Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa.

TO OUR BROTHERHOOD

I AM COMING to you again, not because it is a pleasure to do so, but of necessity; for if the National Bible Institution is to continue its work, financial assistance must come from some source in the near future. It is not necessary for me to give a detailed report of financial conditions under which we are operating. Suffice it to say, however, that we have reduced our workers to the lowest point possible to still keep going and do our work properly, and for some two months we have been able to pay these workers only one half of their reduced wages.

This we cannot do indefinitely with hopes of retaining them, and we cannot get the work done without these workers. This is perfectly clear to all of us. In addition to this, creditors who have been carrying accounts against us for two or three years are demanding payment of their accounts, and interest on notes and bonds is to be paid; and there are no funds from which to draw to meet these demands. How are we to meet them? We cannot sell property, as there is no market for it.

Similar religious and educational institutions report heavy deficits the last two years, but almost all of them have endowments, or "foundations," from which to draw to meet such deficits. The National Bible Institution has nothing of this character, however. This means one of two things: Its members and friends must come to the rescue in this emergency, or it must suspend operations. Many of our people have been, and are, doing all that can be expected of them, but their number is too small to cope with the situation.

Other religious organizations have members—men and women who contribute many thousands of dollars in money and revenue-producing properties to meet such emergencies; but we do not seem to have members who can do this; and, therefore, the number of our contributors of small amounts must be greatly increased if we are to continue and pass successfully through the depression that is now upon us.

I sat and listened to the report of a committee of a religious body recently which reported a deficit of forty thousand dollars during the last year in one of its theological institutions and was not able to pay the interest on its indebtedness. This sounded very discouraging; but the report continued to state that it held title to property valued at two and a half million dollars in Chicago as an endowment, and yet contributions were being solicited.

Should I apologize for presenting our situation to you for serious consideration and whatever assistance you may be able to give, if you feel that our cause is worthy and entitled to such assistance? But if you can give some help, or have counsel to offer, do not delay; but act as quickly as you may be able to do, as I am not using idle words when I say that the situation is serious and demands immediate attention.

I know we have critics that will be ready to say: "I told you so"; but, as the Savior once said concerning the poor: "Ye have (them) with you always." The Savior had His critics, but His coworkers and friends assisted in bearing His burdens.

As I have heretofore stated, if anyone should desire specific information or explanation upon any phase of National Bible Institution work or its problems, kindly write us, and we will do our best to give the information you desire.

ally sitting in their midst and warming himself at their fire, forgetting the counsel given in the First Psalm not to stand "in the way of sinners," nor sit "in the seat of the scornful." Jesus Christ was in such intimate companionship with the Father that He could associate with all classes of sinners. But unless we are following very closely in His footsteps we will stumble and fall when smaller temptations than those which Peter had come in our way.

We are very ready to excuse ourselves for slips of the tongue, and wrong actions; but can we justify words which sting the listener by saying, "I know I have a quick temper, but I believe in telling the whole truth"? It is hard when one has a sick body not to murmur, but let us remember that the "Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering" which was harder than any we have to bear, and take Him for our example. Trials come to every one, but may we heed the lines:

"The little trials which we meet each day,
May lie as stumbling blocks in our way;
Or we may make them stepping stones to be
Of grace, dear Lord, to Thee."

So may we be helpers to others who have greater burdens to bear than we.

Yes, Peter sinned deeply, but he did not attempt to justify himself. The record is, "he wept bitterly." And how fully he was forgiven by the One who understands all our mistakes when the resurrection angel said to the women at the empty sepulchre—"Go tell his disciples, and Peter," of the glad event which had taken place.

If we look the Bible through we will not find a harsh word for the backslider. God is tenderly, lovingly trying to win them back to Him. Can we do less, and dare we sit in judgment of one who has offended us? Christ rejoiced over Peter's repentance and gave him a high commission, as we see in the last chapter of John's gospel. The first verse of Matthew seven says, "Judge not." So let us overlook Peter's sin and strive to appreciate the long and painful journeys he took, and the privations he endured, that others might know of the One whom he loved, and imitate his zeal for the truth and his steadfastness until death claimed him, a willing martyr. There are none without sin, so may our prayer to the Father be, Search me, cleanse me, fill me, use me—and we shall indeed be lifters of burdens and not those who pull others down.

THE GREAT SALVATION

By J. M. Stephenson

“How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?”—Heb. 2:3.

THE deliverance of Noah and his family from destruction by the deluge was a great salvation. The deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage was a great salvation. The deliverance of Christians from the awful suffering and tribulations consequent upon the destruction of Jerusalem and the overthrow of the commonwealth of Israel was a great salvation. But these salvations were only temporal deliverances, leaving their subjects still exposed to sin, temptation, and death; but the salvation spoken of in our text is eternal deliverance from sin, temptation, mortality, and death, to glory, honor, and immortality in the everlasting kingdom of God.

There is, therefore, an infinite disparity between all other salvations, however grand and glorious, and that great salvation which was spoken of by our Lord at the beginning of His preaching and was confirmed to Paul and his Hebrew brethren by those who heard Him. “God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost.” This is evidently the same salvation promised in the gospel which our Savior began to preach in Galilee and published throughout Judea and afterward commissioned His apostles to proclaim to the world and which was confirmed by the signs following. (Mark 16:15-18.) This salvation is denominated by the same apostle an “eternal salvation.” (Hebrews 5:9.) It will be eternal, not because the process of saving men will be eternally going on, but because its results will be eternal, because it will be final and changeless. Its subjects will be sinless, incorruptible, and immortal and therefore never can be again involved in the thralldom of sin or death to need a savior or salvation.

The word “salvation” signifies deliverance from either actual thralldom or imminent danger. Thus, “few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.”—1 Peter 3:20. They were not saved from death caused by drowning, but from being destroyed with an ungodly world. The great salvation under consideration not only proposes to deliver its subjects from sin and death, but to give them an incorruptible constitution which shall be imperishable as the divine nature and which cannot change or sin; and it therefore shall be absolutely invulnerable to temptation or disease—a constitution which shall bloom in fadeless and immortal youth and an endless life which can never be quenched by the cold tide of death. This is the victory over death and hades which the slumbering millions of saints shall gain “when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality” when the language of inspiration shall be verified that “death is swallowed up in victory” and when the triumphant song shall be sung, “O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?”

This is the great salvation involved in our Savior’s reply to the Sadducees in which He says, “But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age), and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.”—Luke 20:35, 36.

This salvation not only delivers all the sleeping saints from the dominion of death, but includes in its plenitude the deathless nature of angels, thus placing all who shall be accounted worthy of this exalted nature forever beyond the power of death and the triumphs of the grave. All other salvations which God has wrought out for His people shrink into insignificance when compared with this great and eternal salvation. This is the great salvation in which the blessed and holy to whom the Revelator refers will have part. He exclaims, “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.”—Revelation.

An Evening Prayer

We kneel before Thee, children of Thy love,
And wait Thy benediction from above:
O Thou who art of all mankind the Friend,
Thy richest blessing to our spirits send:
Thy word of courage to our hearts addressed,
By day inspires, at evening time gives rest. Amen.

The Eternal Earth

WITH his retorts and test tubes, his reactive agents both endothermic and exothermic, his micrometers and microscopes, his telescopes and spectroscopes, his instruments of minute precision, and his knowledge of infinitesimal, differential, and integral calculus, the painstaking scientist devotes long and laborious years to the discovery of a truth that was clearly revealed in the Bible two thousand to four thousand years ago! Such is the excessive vanity of man's wisdom.

To the amazement of his fellow scientists one of the most renowned of their number, Dr. Robert A. Millikan of the California Institute of Technology, has announced that it is his conclusion, following a long period of investigation of the properties and effects produced by the "cosmic ray," that the earth was formed "to be inhabited," and that for this purpose "it abideth for ever." As Ruth De Young expresses it in the Chicago Tribune, "Since his discovery of the cosmic ray seven years ago Dr. Millikan has firmly believed that we are living in a foolproof world; that, thanks to nature's generous provision in the manufacture of elements in the interstellar spaces, the sources of energy are inexhaustible; that millions of years hence the earth will be habitable and pleasant as it is today."

One of the most interesting sidelights thrown on this revolutionary discovery by Dr. Millikan is the attitude of the man himself toward religion. "He does not believe that the two are in conflict, but rather that religion is a necessary part of our present day world of science. To Dr. Millikan 'religion is life, not a creed,'" declares the correspondent. In this conclusion the eminent physicist is undoubtedly correct, and yet there is a sense in which what one believes constitutes his religion, for one's manner of life depends largely upon what he believes the most sincerely. One lives his convictions.

In spite of age-long efforts to discredit the Scriptures, the skeptic and the scoffer are being forced ever more frequently to acknowledge the truth of Revelation. Shall not He who formed all things know its end as well as its beginning? And so the Psalmist prays: "For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven. Thy faithfulness is unto all generations: thou hast established the earth, and it abideth. They continue this day according to thine ordinances: for all are thy servants."—Psalm 119:89-91.

In the past the scientific world was practically united in the conclusion that the entire universe was destined to extinction, that it was gradually wearing away, that the sun was cooling, and that after millions of years the earth would no longer be able to support life in any of the forms with which we are familiar. Echoing the "cry of scientists who have watched atoms split up and the sun wane, poets have lamented that 'Final ruin fiercely drives her ploughshare o'er creation.' But Dr. Millikan," continues The Tribune, "is a more optimistic prophet. . . . Through the discovery of this remarkable source of creative energy he believes the universe is self-winding and perpetual; that matter is being created incessantly in space. Maybe some day this very source of energy will be the means of prolonging human life. Who knows? It sounds absurd, yet nine times out of ten the scientist has laughed last."

Some years ago another scientist brought the encouraging assurance that endless life was possible on the earth even under mortal conditions. Thus page by page, chapter by chapter, the book of God's revelation through nature is found to be in harmony with the Bible. Of course it could not be otherwise, for they have both the same Author and the same object—to make known the mind and purpose and glory of God to man.

We must not become too impatient with those who are slowly, painfully, and honestly attempting to trace the footprints of the Creator over the hills and through the valleys of the world. They sometimes err, it is true. But truth is truth whether found in the Bible or "deep written in the rocks," and eventually all truth will be found to be consistent with itself; and in the ages to come the name of God will be magnified more and more as the saved ones in His kingdom are led to see clearly the matchless wisdom, the infinite power, and the supernal love displayed throughout the mighty and far-reaching universe of Jehovah.

THE UNIVERSITY OF GOD

By Mary A. Gesin

"It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God."—John 6:45.

IN EVERYTHING that exists God is instructing man concerning Himself," was the opening statement of G. Eldred Marsh in his sermon of Sunday night, October 30, to his congregation at Oregon.

Possessing the happy faculty of placing old truths in a new setting, Brother Marsh gave us what he termed the first and second lessons in the curriculum arranged by God in His great university. "There will never be a graduation from that university," he continued, "for when the great Dean sends His Son to instruct man at first hand, we will still be acquiring knowledge of the truth."

The first lesson that we must master as students in God's university is man's helplessness, and this is given us in almost the opening words of our Textbook, as follows: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul;" and "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Genesis 2:7; 3:19.

Formed of the dust of the ground, man is part of the earth itself. Mother nature, a teacher in God's great school as well as our Textbook tells us that when man dies he goes back into the elements from which he was formed. In fact, "that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."—Ecclesiastes 3:19, 20.

"The second lesson God gives us to learn," Brother Marsh explained, "is found in the opening chapters of the second division of our Textbook." "And Jesus," we are told, "went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people."—Matthew 4:23.

God, realizing man's need of government, immediately after creation gave him authority to rule in these words, "Have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."—Genesis 1:28. But very early in his career man proved his utter inability to subdue, not only others, but himself as well. Hence, the Creator delegated to His Son power and authority to teach and to rule righteously.

Truth is truth, no matter where discovered, and will always remain truth regardless of how great the error may be that intervenes.

The proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom, our second lesson, was the manner in which Jesus carried out the commission given Him by the great Dean. In the university of God today we are studying and preparing ourselves for the time when that kingdom will be established, when God will give dominion once more into man's hands, but hands that have been tested and tried and found worthy.

"Though apparently man is ruling today," Brother Marsh reminded us, "yet God is still supreme Ruler 'in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.'—Daniel 4:17. Because Israel forgot that God ruled over all, her kingdom was overturned. It is just as true today; if man persists in ignoring that fact, man's kingdom will be overthrown."

To submit to God's will today brings unmeasured happiness, as Job, that ancient worthy, tells us, "If they obey and serve him, they shall spend their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures." How much greater will be our joy when "he shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."—Psalm 72:8.

Knowledge is composed of two component parts, theory and practice. The one without the other is incomplete, for knowledge that is not put into operation in our lives is of no avail. Let us, therefore, grasp these first lessons in God's great school—man's helplessness and God's helpfulness—and make them part of the very fiber of our lives.

His Way Is Best

He holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad.
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if He trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

The very dimness of my sight
Makes me secure;
For groping in my misty way,
I feel His hand—I hear Him say:
"My help is sure."

I cannot read His future plan,
But this I know:
I have the smilings of His face,
And all the refuge of His grace,

—John Parker.

THE BIRTH OF THE SPIRIT

By M. W. Perrine

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."—John 3:6.

NICODEMUS came to Jesus as to an inspired teacher sent from God. The Master, knowing the desires of his heart, met them directly from His Father's great storehouse of wisdom and knowledge. "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

Nicodemus, though a ruler of the Jews, did not seem to understand. Then, to be a little more explicit, Jesus continued, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Opening his mind little by little, Jesus taught him, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

Did Jesus mean what He said? He surely did; and in order to clinch the matter He explained how they might know how to demonstrate the truth of it when one claims to be born of the Spirit. He said, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

No one can stand the test; but when one is born from the dead by the Spirit of God and He changes our vile body "that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21), he can prove that he is spirit, for he can come and go like the wind. When one is born of the Spirit, he will have a spiritual body like Jesus', made of flesh and bones but controlled and governed by the Spirit. A child born into this world is flesh and blood and will remain so until God changes him at the resurrection of the saints.

Paul said, "To be spiritually minded is life and peace."—Romans 8:6. That is the condition one enters into when he experiences a change of mind or heart, when the good seed, the Word of God, enters his heart and he believes it and is begotten by it. James said (James 1:18), "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures"; and Paul, in 1 Corinthians 4:15, declared, "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel"; showing that the Word of truth is the begetting power that enters the heart and works out a wonderful change in the heart and in the whole life.

Peter makes this change very plain: "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever."—1 Peter 1:22, 23.

Then he explains, "And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

This statement agrees with Paul, who says that the begetting takes place first when the Word enters the heart and faith comes by the hearing of it. Then Paul remarks, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."—Galatians 3:26. They now are begotten children, but are not yet come to the birth, and must grow and develop until the birth takes place at the resurrection.

Hear Jesus speak to the Sadducees when they ask Him whose wife should she be of the seven (Luke 20:27-33): "And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage: but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

This one statement of Jesus convinces me that no one is a perfected and completed child of God until raised up from the dead by the power of God, changed, and given a new body as well as a new heart.

Can we not see that there is a vast difference between being a child of God by faith in Christ Jesus and a child of God by a resurrection from the dead? You look at a child of God by faith, and you fail to see any difference between him and any other man; but if you were permitted to look upon one born of the Spirit by a resurrection from the dead, you would see a vast difference. Did Mary recognize Jesus after He rose from the dead? She thought He was the gardener. The two disciples on the way to Emmaus did not recognize Him. He was born of the Spirit and was spirit.

If one is born again in this world, that would be two births into this world; yet still he would be flesh and blood. Paul says, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God."—1 Corinthians 15:50.

1 John 5:1 reads, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him." This statement of John shows on the face of it that "born" is not the proper rendering, but "begotten." Begetting takes place in this world, but one is born into the world to come. Jesus was the firstborn from the dead so that in all things He might have the preeminence. The new birth gives us a new body. Without it Jesus could not inherit the kingdom, for He had a flesh and blood body, and it must be changed.

John 1:12 comments, "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." "Power to become sons" does not mean that they are sons who "were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Here again the other translations have to correct the King James "begotten" instead of "born." Wise translators! They seemed to have forgotten that a child must be begotten before it can be born.

Paul speaks again: "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God."—Romans 8:19. They were already sons of God by faith; so they were waiting not for that, but for the redemption of the body, the church; and they, being members of that body, would reap the benefits of the change Paul speaks of in Philippians 3:21: "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

Paul was waiting for something to happen. He was already a son of God by faith, but he awaited something more, that wonderful and glorious change that would not only change the mind and heart, but give him an immortal body, also, for at the resurrection this mortal must put on immortality. Then is the time we can shout, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

INTO THE WATERS OF DEATH

By Arlen Marsh

"The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun. Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us."

IN the light of such well known facts as these it seems much less absurd than superficial appearances might indicate to engage once more in the discussion which has earned for itself an unenviable reputation for bitterness and unconsciously displayed ignorance. Baptism, although the subject of extended controversy for some sixteen centuries, can be approached yet in a way not new, but less hackneyed and dull.

Despite the firm belief of the Church of God in baptism, writers in these columns recently have avoided any exhaustive treatment of it, but they otherwise have occupied their space with expositions on the form that such immersion should assume. Yet the first is properly the antecedent of the second; for if burial in water possess no great significance, it follows that consideration of the matter of method is nugatory.

Regardless of personal opinion, the Bible leaves but little scope for argument contrary to the conviction that the Messiah meant precisely what He said when the order, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," was laid down. Indeed, all the factual and circumstantial evidence that can be brought to bear upon the great commission quoted could lead to no logical conclusion other than that stated in The Gospel Plan, issued by the National Berean Society: "Just as there is but one true faith which can turn from sin, so there is but one true way of turning, and that is baptism."

James' flat announcement, too positive to permit question and too simple to be misconstrued, that "faith without works is dead, being alone," presents no opportunities for vain equivocation. As the two are placed under the pitiless spotlight of comparison by the brain which Brander Matthews called "a clear, cold, logic engine," this bald assertion of the Epistle resolves itself into a definite declaration that the Christ's command to "go . . . baptizing" is to be observed as one of the works without which belief is valueless. From this viewpoint alone baptism becomes one of the great essential principles of the gospel; and when taken in connection with the popular text, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you," this conclusion is possessed of an irresistible power.

Although it is true that no exact biblical statement avers that without baptism salvation is impossible, the absurdity of a contention that the Messiah left a possibility for evasion of this requirement in His words as recorded by Mark is too apparent to merit serious consideration. "He that believeth and is baptized," wrote the disciple, "shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16:16. Because of this sentence the idea exists that, although belief is necessary, baptism is not. Logic as a science would find at least two fallacies in this: the error in assuming that, since only belief is said to be essential, baptism is not; and the avoidance of the fact that belief develops into faith solely through works, in this instance, immersion. Reasonable sequences indicated by Scripture and a correct interpretation of language do away with the faint vestiges of strength owned by the argument that Jesus Himself tacitly admitted the possibility of dispensing with the rite.

That there is a precedent condition attached to this ordinance which Paul defines as a burial with the Savior into death is made clear by Philip's careful acceptance of the Ethiopian eunuch. "See," exclaimed the ruler, "here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." Obviously the implication was that without belief baptism held no power, that without a mental reception of the Christ and of His Father immersion was but an empty gesture. Further than the evidence of a pre-baptismal requirement, however, the need for the act itself is stressed. Similarly the argument in support of baptism as an essential element of salvation and of belief as its prerequisite is strengthened by the record of Philip's preaching in Samaria.

Pleadings of modernism that no dogma is necessary, that no act is indispensable, and that no teaching need be accepted well can be ignored. Contrary to the dictates of those who tire of the faith of their fathers, the Bible clearly outlines the unconquerable truth of the Preacher's utterance, "There is no new thing under the sun." Baptism yet holds the key of the gates of hell. Like those whom Tennyson made immortal, the Christian must ride with an uncomplaining obedience, not into the valley of death, but into the waters that symbolize it.

THE TIME FOR PRAYER

When is the time for prayer?
 With the first beams that light the morning sky,
 Ere for the toils of day thou dost prepare,
 Lift up thy thoughts on high;
 Commend thy loved ones to His watchful care.
 Morn is the time to pray.

And in the noontide hour,
 If worn by toil or by sad cares oppressed,
 Then unto God thy spirit's power pour,
 And He will give thee rest;
 Thy voice shall reach Him through the realms of air.
 Noon is the time for prayer.

When the bright sun has set,
 Whilst eve's glowing colors deck the skies,
 When the loved at home again thou meet,
 Then let thy prayers arise
 For those who in thy joy and sorrow share.
 Eve is the time for prayer.

And when the stars come forth,
 When to the trusting heart sweet hopes are given,
 And the deep stillness of the hour gives birth
 To pure, bright dreams of heaven,
 Kneel to thy God; ask strength life's ills to bear.
 Night is the time for prayer.

When is the time for prayer?
 In every hour while life is spared to thee,
 In crowds or solitude, in joy or care,
 Thy thoughts should heavenward flee.
 At home, at morn and eve, with loved ones there,
 Lift up thy heart in prayer.

A NEW NATION — AN ANCIENT ENSIGN

DURING the Tenth Olympic Games in Los Angeles, California, last summer, according to The Jewish Hope, the official hostesses presented a Pageant of Nations in the world-renowned Hollywood Bowl. To the student of the Bible the chief interest of the pageant lies in the part devoted to the Jewish people, a brief description of which we append.

"The first presentation of the Pageant of Nations received such widespread acclaim that the sponsors were prevailed upon to offer the spectacle a second time, which presentation took place on Sunday evening, August 14, 1932. About fifteen hundred players had been added to the already high cast for this second presentation.

"On that memorable Sunday evening Hollywood Bowl, with a normal seating capacity of 20,000, was filled to overflowing. Music from the Bowl orchestra floated softly upon the still night air; the play of colored lights was entrancing. A uniformed announcer, with three couriers bearing silver trumpets, took station at the right approach to the stage, and a like detachment at the left. Upon the announcement of a nation the couriers raised their trumpets and as their pealing notes reverberated in the Bowl, players arrayed in appropriate native costume made entry upon the stage, bearing high their ensign or flag. They then would render their national anthem, oath of allegiance or native choral selection, whereupon the players would arrange themselves in ever-increasing symmetry at the sides and rear of the stage, as the trumpets heralded approach of the next nation announced.

"The program was well advanced when the announcer on the right raised his hand aloft to hush the plaudits of the preceding number. When all was still, he spoke. 'Tonight, we present a new nation—ZION.'

"A hush descended on that mighty throng. High and clear the clarion notes from the silver trumpets heralded approach—and out upon the polished floor marched the standard-bearer carrying high a white ensign with two blue stripes and a center insignia of two interlaced triangles of blue. The Ensign of Zion! Then appeared a large blue and white banner, carried lengthwise and completely concealing its bearers. Midstage it halted; a moment all was still. Then above the banner appeared two tablets of stone—the Ten Commandments!

"A gasp of awe surged from the multitude, breaking into a swelling, thunderous ovation. Then interpretative dancers appeared, illustrating Israel's subjection to humility, ending with a pantomime representing labor and Palestinian industry.

"The few remaining numbers on the program were then presented, whereupon the entire ensemble, resplendent in uniforms, dazzling costumery with brilliant banners flying, concluded amid a riot of colored lights, in a grand finale, the singing of Handel's Hallelujah Chorus. So came to a close the Pageant of Nations of the Tenth Olympics.

"Students of divine prophecy will no doubt take great interest in the following observations: This is the first time in history that the Ensign of Zion has been presented at a gathering of all nations! This is now the third time that the Ensign of Zion has been officially presented or flown since the children of Judah were dispersed.

"It was first flown when the Balfour Declaration went into effect after the capture of Jerusalem by Allenby, and at which time also the shofar or ram's horn was blown by the high priest, fulfilling Isaiah's prophecy in 18:3, 'All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.'

"The second time was but a scant year ago when the Ensign of Zion was flown over the Wailing Wall, the only remnant of the once glorious Temple of Solomon, to herald the approach of the Zeppelin flying to Jerusalem bringing Jews to their homeland, and fulfilling Isaiah 60:8, 'Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?'

"According to tradition there is a saying that the Ensign of Zion, when presented for the third time, will mark the beginning of events fulfilling in rapid succession the prophecies concerning the children of Israel.

"In regard to the third raising of the banner or Ensign, note the prophecy according to Isaiah 5:26: 'And he (God) will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth.' Note also Isaiah 11:12: 'And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.' It stirs the spirit to behold how the Lord performs His wondrous works.

"The Tenth Olympics was the only attraction of sufficient magnitude to assemble representatives from all nations, and, as we have just seen, God chose representatives of this assembly of nations to witness the lifting up of His Ensign.

"A further description of the Ensign of Zion and its meaning is here set forth. The first Scripture reference we have of the term is found in Exodus 17:15: 'And Moses built an altar, and called the name of it JEHOVAH-NISSI.' (The Lord is my ensign.) Our second reference we find in Numbers 2:2: 'Every man of the children of Israel shall pitch his own standard, with the ensign of their father's house,' giving us the first indication of the use of ensigns to denote rank or tribal affiliation. (Note that the words, flag, banner, standard, and ensign, are used synonymously.) We have no scriptural reference to the particular design of the Ensign of Zion, but according to ancient Jewish tradition the Lord presented David with an ensign under which his army should triumph, and this flag has been the national standard ever since.

"The Ensign of Zion is white, with two horizontal stripes of blue. In the center of the ensign are two triangles, interlaced, also of blue. The white stands for purity, the blue for the heavens. One triangle represents the "trinity" of man, i. e., body, soul, and spirit. The other triangle, according to Jewish history, represents the God-head which, when the Messiah comes will be explained by Him.

"It is interesting to note the scriptural reference in regard to the colors, as found in Esther 8:15: 'And Mordecai went out from the presence of the king (Ahasuerus) in royal apparel of blue and white.' The ancient badge of royalty was the diadem, a band of blue and white worn about the head. It is, therefore, readily apparent that the Ensign of Zion denotes royalty!

"The scriptural meaning of ensign, aside from banner or standard, has also a symbolic meaning, as stated in Isaiah 11:10: 'And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.' So we have, Root of Jesse—Ensign. We know that the 'root of Jesse' is Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Messiah. Jesus, then, is set for an Ensign of the people. Thereby we go farther: the Ensign of Zion denotes royalty and Jesus Christ the Ensign is King of kings and Lord of lords!"

THE POWER OF THE WORD

TIME and again men have tried to destroy the Word of God. Every effort made during the dark ages to publish it in a language that the common people understood was desperately resisted.

John Wycliffe, the first to translate the Bible into English, was tried for heresy, condemned and ex-communicated, but later was permitted to return to his church. Forty-one years after his death, so great was the hatred of him and his work, that his bones were disinterred and thrown into a river.

When William Tyndale translated and printed the New Testament in English every copy that could be secured was burned publicly. Tyndale himself was imprisoned and later was strangled and his body burned at the stake.

Today the Bible is the most popular and best-selling book in the world.

A traveler in the interior of Mexico found a boy who seemed very different from the "lounging, heavy crowd in the plaza." After talking with the boy he realized that he had discovered a "real jewel among pebbles." When the boy said that he did not drink or smoke, the stranger asked him why.

"Oh," he said, "we have a book at our house and in this book there are many things that make one think. I read and then I wonder if it is wrong to do this or that; and I think it is wrong to drink and smoke because it makes one dizzy and lazy. It is the Holy Bible. It makes us different from the rest of the people. We are happier, we are more healthy, we are better in every way; and I wish there were more of these books here."

Jean Kenyon Mackenzie in her "African Trail" tells how the Bible brought confidence and mutual trust between suspicious tribes. "I once heard a long talk of this matter on a forest journey. I had four hammock carriers, each of a different tribe.

"This walking that we walk today," they told each other on that journey, "is strange walking for black people to walk; four men of four tribes walking in one company and doing one work. God alone could unite us after this fashion." And to the white woman they said, "Before the time of the things of God, not one of us but would have feared to meet the other. Ah, brothers, is it not a true word?"

"He tells the truth!"

"And now, we eat together and we sleep together like people of one village."—Messiah's Advocate.

AT THE DIVIDING POINT OF TWO AGES

THE signs of the times seem to indicate that we are approaching the time when the Age of Grace ends and the next great age begins. In a word, we are living in a transition period. This will explain the confusion and unrest of these times; for if moving from one house to another is fraught with so much confusion, how much more the passing from one age to another!

About four years ago, Dr. Magnes, head of the University of Jerusalem, made the following statement: "There was never a time when civilization was so near ending as the present. . . . It is indeed a momentous time, a time of revolution, comparable perhaps to that period of late Judaism and early Christianity, when men were awaiting the end, and yet were planning new life and new doctrine."

What does this Jewish scholar mean? He is comparing our present times with the transition period between the Age of Law and the Christian Era. Since "history repeats," it will be interesting to make a comparison between those two transition periods; and in order to do so we shall study the general characteristics of the people who lived three hundred years before Christ and as many years after. Why this period? Because as Dr. Angus has said, "Without exaggeration, the period before and after the advent of Christianity was the greatest crisis in world history." (Acknowledgment is made to this scholar for the quotations and many of the historical facts referred to in this article.)

The period mentioned begins with the world conquests of Alexander the Great, who paved the way for the Roman empire and who, by his spreading of the Greek language, prepared the way for the universal preaching of Christianity; it ends at the time when the church, freed from persecution, had time and strength to become truly universal. We include the period after Christ's birth because dispensational study teaches us that the ages overlap.

What were the general characteristics of the transition period between the Age of Law and the Christian Era?

It was a popularizing age. Religion, art, and philosophy were widely spread among the people in a superficial form. A scanning of the list of books in the "One Dollar Edition" series today will reveal the fact that some of the "heavy" subjects like philosophy, science, and world history have been written up in an interesting, popular style, enlivened with illustrations. A reading of the magazine section of some of our prominent newspapers will lead to the same conclusion; so will the examination of the articles in our popular magazines. Since a little learning is a dangerous thing, we wonder whether this superficial knowledge of science has something to do with the difficulty experienced in modern evangelism—whether people have been led to think that they know too much to believe the Bible?

It was a highly civilized and modern age. We say

"modern" because of the great resemblance of that age to ours. "Facilities of communication were more abundant than at any other time prior to the invention of steam and the era of railway construction. Women became prominent in various spheres. There was the same love of dress, amusements, pleasure as in our days." The hot-air system of heating was known in the Roman world during the first century B. C. Taking the cure at natural springs was quite the style. As we read and write while traveling on the train, they did likewise while journeying. Dentistry was practiced, and gold-filled teeth were known. "The banking business was highly developed."

It was an educated age. Universities were well attended. Teaching was recognized as an honorable profession and was lucrative. Titles corresponding to M. A. or D. D. were known. Though libraries were known from the seventh century B. C., it was only in the Roman period that they were established in every city of importance. Books were numerous and cheap.

It was an age of cosmopolitanism. The nations had begun to have fellowship with one another, to exchange goods and ideas, both religious and social. The different peoples were united by a common language, and their movement began with Alexander the Great and ended with the whole world united into one brotherhood under the rule of one individual, Julius Caesar. It is a matter of common knowledge today that rapid transportation, radio, international movements are making this world a very small place, so that what affects one great nation is bound to affect all.

It was an age of religious universalism. Scholars searched for the best in every religion in order to find one universal religion. This tendency was manifested in a most remarkable way in 1893, when there was held at Chicago the first world parliament of religions, which lasted for seventeen days and which was attended by about 150,000 people from all parts of the world. The purpose of this convention was to produce a creed that should unite all religions. Naturally, it failed in its main object, for not until the Son of God appears and reigns will there be one Lord and one faith.

It was an age that just before its crisis point was characterized by the expectancy of a great king who would save and rule the world. This was true, not only of the Jews, who had the Old Testament prophecies, but also of the Gentiles. There was a craving for rest in political, social, and religious life, a universal demand for salvation. As an outward manifestation of this yearning the people began to address their gods as "savior"—a title that they later applied to their emperors. "Much of this was flattery; but it reflected the universal demand for some one to interfere when the times were out of joint, to restore security and bestow rest upon the world." Vergil, a Roman poet who lived until 19 B. C., prophesied the birth of a wonderful child who should usher in a new and happy age. Professor Conway finds that this poet possessed the following ideas: that the guilt of man had grown to be unendurable, so that the world was sadly in need of regeneration; that the establishment of the Roman empire made a setting strangely favorable for such a spiritual movement, and intended by Providence to introduce it; that it was part of the duty of Rome to attempt the task; that one special deliverer would be sent by Providence to begin the work; that the work would involve suffering and disappointment, and consist in the bringing of a new spirit into the world.

We shall have no difficulty in finding a parallel to these facts in our own day. Dr. Wilhelm Laible of Leipzig, the outstanding religious leader of Germany, says that one of the signs of the coming of Christ is the widespread awakening of Christians on this point. In one of the great Hindu temples there is a white horse made of plaster, saddled and ready for its rider, waiting for the "sinless incarnation," who when he comes will have the sword of justice in his hands to destroy the wicked and thus drive out this "age of falsehood" and bring in the "age of truth." A writer in the Moslem World points out how general among the Moslems is the expectancy of Christ's coming. Our world is looking for saviors, as Mussolini has said, to lead them out of their political, social, and spiritual confusion. What would not the world do for a man who would accomplish this? They would almost worship him—and Satan will see to it that they get the counterfeit before the real King appears. See Revelation 13.

It was an age that witnessed the first earthly coming of the Redeemer of the world. Briefly note the different stages of His appearing: His humble birth attended by heavenly signs; His public manifestation after thirty years of silence; His crucifixion—the beginning of the end of the Age of Law; the destruction of Jerusalem in A. D. 70, and the scattering of the Jews—the act of divine judgment that formally closed the Age of Law. As an illustration of the principle that "history repeats" notice what signs preceded this judgment. Physical signs: pestilences, floods, earthquakes, the appearance of comets and meteors. Religious signs: several false Messiahs arose. Political signs: the Roman and Jewish worlds were rent by civil war. Rumors of wars disheartened many Jews from the cultivation of the soil. Moral signs: Josephus, a Jewish historian who lived before and after A. D. 70, says that his generation in Judea was the wickedest the world had seen, and if the avenging sword of the Romans had not smitten Jerusalem with God's vengeance that the very earth must have opened to swallow up her iniquities. Compare Matt. 12: 43-45.

As the Redeemer appeared at the dividing point of the ages of Law and of Grace, so He will appear at the dividing point of the ages of Grace and the Millennium. The time appears to be fast approaching. What shall be our attitude during this transition period? In Matthew 24, the Lord predicts that the crossing over from one age to the other will be characterized by disturbances in the physical and religious realms. He tells His people to lift up their heads in joyous expectancy when these things come to pass, to watch to keep their lamps lighted and filled with oil, and faithfully to use their talents until He comes.

FINE LINEN OR FILTHY RAGS

By Richard LeCrone

YOUNG Christians sometimes complain: "It seems as if I am not supposed to do anything. Things that others do and that are not even noticed immediately cause a lot of criticism when I do them. Why is that?"

"Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."—Isaiah 1:18.

"But why quote that to us?" they ask.

Because "we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags."—Isaiah 64:6.

Though it sound irrelevant at first, we will find there the answer to the question of many Christians: "Why are my mistakes noticed so much more than those of the non-Christian?" Those non-Christian friends of ours who can perform the questionable deed without drawing criticism are still clothed in their own righteousness, which is as filthy rags. The Apostle Paul expresses it thus: "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."—Romans 10:3.

How different, Paul tells us, is the standing of the Christian! Using himself as an example, he says, "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith."—Philippians 3:8, 9.

In contrast to the filthy rags spoken of by Isaiah, John, speaking of the fine linen that will adorn the bride of Christ, defines it: "The fine linen is the righteousness of saints."—Revelation 19:8.

Is not cleanliness or righteousness after all a matter of relativity? On the already-spotted robe of a non-Christian another small spot is not readily noticeable, but when it appears upon the garments of those who have "washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. 7:14), the smallest sin spot is plainly visible. That is the reason Christians cannot do all of the things permitted to non-Christians.

It is the privilege and duty of Christians to keep their robes spotless through faith in Christ Jesus that Christ may say of them, as was said of the few at Sardis, that they "have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."—Revelation 3:4, 5.

THE GREAT SALVATION

20:6. Hence the subjects of this great salvation will not only be exempt from the second and last death that any shall die, but will be elevated to thrones of glory and reign with Christ as kings and priests for one thousand years. This is the great salvation of which Christ is the "firstborn" among many brethren, who will share with Him the incorruptible and immortal nature of His divine Father and the glory and honor to which He is heir.

They will also belong to the new creation of which He is the firstborn. Colossians 1:15. Hence, this salvation will as far surpass all other salvations as the incorruptible nature surpasses the corruptible, the immortal the mortal, and the new creation the old creation. The Apostle therefore has well denominated it the great salvation. This is the most exalted nature in the empire of God. It is the nature of the supreme Ruler of the universe, and His holy angels; called by way of preeminence the "divine nature."

The most exalted conception of the great God which inspiration has given is expressed in the following sublime language—"Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen."—1 Timothy 1:17. The same apostle accuses a class of the worst sinners in his day with having "changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image like to corruptible man" (Romans 1:23), thus teaching that the nature of God is immortal and incorruptible in contrast with man's nature, which is mortal and corruptible.

But as has been clearly proved, this great salvation proposes to deliver man from mortality and corruption and clothe him with the divine nature. This is the strongest motive to self-denial and fidelity held out in the Bible, and through its magic power the Christian is enabled to triumph over the world and escape its allurements. The anticipation of this glorious salvation has been the patent cause of the grandest achievements of faith and the noblest heroism the world has ever known. Infinite wisdom could devise no greater reward, and to all eternity neither men nor angels can realize any greater boon.

According to our Savior's discourse with Nicodemus, this great salvation will prospectively save all believers from eternally perishing. He said, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."

According to the foregoing promise, to save every one who believes and to give eternal life to every believer in the Son of God are one and the same thing. The perishing spoken of and eternal life are placed in direct antithesis; it therefore involves eternal death, the proper antithesis of eternal life. This great salvation therefore includes eternal exemption from death, and its opposite, eternal life.

According to Paul in his letter to the Romans, glory, honor, and immortality are indissolubly joined to the promised gift of eternal life. He says, "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life."—Romans 2:7. Thus this great salvation commences with deliverance from death, and climaxes with glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life. I might say that it commences with the deliverance of the sinner from his sins, but this part of our subject cannot be considered now.

This is "the better resurrection" that inspired the faith, animated the hope, and was the prompting cause of all the splendid triumphs and glorious achievements of the long line of martyrs from Abel down. It was this bright hope that cheered their drooping spirits in the darkest hour of persecution and trial, that quenched the raging flames, plucked the venomous sting from the grim monster, and enabled feeble women to spurn the present life with all its endearing associations and all the love of home and friends most dear and suffer the most cruel torture and infamous death, that they might obtain this "better resurrection," that they might with the redeemed host of God's elect enjoy to all eternity the ever increasing joys and glories of this great salvation. It is the culmination of all the good which God has ever promised and that an ever increasing capacity through all the ages of eternity can ever enjoy or realize. It will be the climax of all the hopes of the church of the living God and the realization of all their bright visions of happiness and glory. No wonder, then, that the great Apostle to the Gentiles should willingly, yea, gladly, give up all his fair prospects and forego the bright anticipation of glory, honor, and position which had so long dazzled his eye and be defamed and made as the filth of the world and the off-scouring of all things that he might know Christ and the power of His resurrection and if by any means he might obtain this great salvation as involved in the resurrection from among the dead.

No wonder that Moses, the man of God, could mock the might of empire, and tarnish the glittering treasures of Egypt in his heroic decision to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin in its most fascinating form that he might receive "the recompense of the reward." Hebrews 11:24-26. The Son of God endured the most malignant hatred and cruel persecution and died the accursed death of the cross that He might be made perfect through suffering and thus be qualified to honor the Author of eternal salvation. "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."—Hebrews 2:10; 5:9.

In this and all the foregoing texts this great salvation is offered to the obedient only. Those who neglect to comply with its conditions will not obtain it. It is the salvation which our Savior affixed to the faith and obedience of the gospel. In the great commission He said to the eleven apostles, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

"THE FRUIT OF THE RIGHTEOUS IS A TREE OF LIFE; AND HE THAT WINNETH SOULS IS WISE."—PROVERBS 11:30.

BITS OF CORRESPONDENCE

"INCIDENTALLY, there were eighty-eight present at the last meeting of the Berean Society at the Church of the Golden Rule in Cleveland," comments Miss Ruth Tomlinson, Chagrin Falls, Ohio, while sending an order for fifteen of The Hebrew People. "Both teachers and pupils are enjoying the books now in use," she adds.

Richard Le Crone, new pastor at Lester Prairie, Minnesota, writes that he is doing his best to organize a Berean society at his church. The national secretary wishes that more were equally ambitious.

After a long silence, the Fredericktown, Missouri, Berean society ordered six of Senior Book I on October 10 through its secretary-treasurer, Robert Rouse, Rt. 3, Box 140, Fredericktown. The letter declares, "We are well satisfied with the ones we have, but want six more just like them."

Several additions have been made to the Junior Social Correspondence Committee, of which Miss E. Dorothy Magaw, 238 Marshall Ave., St. Paul, Minnesota, is chairman: Mrs. J. Don Swartz, 3228 W. 100th St., Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Mary Jane Eckert, 217 N. Galena Ave., Dixon, Ill.; Arthur Mills, Andover, S. D.; Peter Hutchinson, Hammond, La.; Miss Gertrude McInturff, Maurertown, Va.; and Leonard Young, Westbrook, Texas. Mrs. Boyd Edney, Dana, N. C., is taking up home study work under Miss Verna Himmelright's able direction. Mrs. Laura Briggs, Blanchard, Mich., has been placed on the Senior Social Correspondence Committee by the chairman, Mrs. Rhoda Hanson, 1840 Union Blvd., Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Oregon, Ill., Berean society selected Arlen Marsh to act as its director beginning October 16. Methods of study were considered in the first lesson under the new plan of leadership. At present a series on the prophetic visions of Daniel is in progress.

"I want to start Berean work," Mrs. G. Marrs, of 2472 Yale St., Memphis, Tenn., assures the secretary. "There is no Church of God in this country and but a few members. We are meeting from house to house and holding services. All advice will be thankfully received."

TRIBUTES TO HONESTY

FROM time immemorial men have revered the quality of honesty, and as a consequence literature is filled with references to it. Shakespeare wrote, "No legacy is so rich as honesty." Alexander Pope remarked, "An honest man's the noblest work of God." Shiller advised, "Be true, and thou shalt fetter time with everlasting chains." Cervantes commented, "An honest man's word is as good as his bond." Bulwer-Lytton declared that "honest men are the gentlemen of nature." Otway amplified this statement with, "Honesty needs no disguise or ornament." Owen Feltham felt that "honesty is a warrant of far more safety than fame."

IN THE MIDST OF THE NOBILITY

SO THINKETH ye ancient court noble: "Ah, sweet Ambition, at last you shall have your soul's desire; send for your best silks and laces. This week 'tis to be mine to bow in the presence of the king. It will be the greatest thrill of this mortal life!"

But the Berean noble says: "It seems so wonderful that I can hardly understand it that we should be in the very presence of the Most High God, Maker of heaven and earth. Yet we are assured that 'where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.' It certainly is a privilege; and if we all realized it, we never would allow the class to get dull again. Indeed, if the greatest thrill in life comes from knowing the greatest person, we of all people have that thrill every week in our Berean class."

—Cecil Smead, Culver, Indiana.

THE foregoing article is the second of a series by Bro. Smead on the Berean text, Acts 17:11: "These were more noble than those of Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so." His message comes as a timely reminder that all Bereans have a heritage of nobility to live up to.

GOD'S GIFTS TO US

ONCE upon a time a man who had many servants and much money planned to take a long journey. When he was almost ready to start, he called his servants to him and told them what he wanted them to do while he was away.

To his best servant he gave five talents, or pieces of money, to another, two, and to a third he gave one—each one according as he was able to take care of his Master's wealth. Then he started on his trip.

Do you think he meant them just to keep the talents as they were given to them, or did the master expect them to use his wealth and make it grow larger? Which would you expect if you were the master?

Finally the day came for the master to return home. I imagine those who had used the money entrusted to them were very happy when they saw him coming. But what about those who had not made good use of the master's property?

The one who had been given five talents came running to the master and laid ten talents at his feet; he had made good use of what had been entrusted to him. The servant who had been given two brought back four. But the one who had only been given one came with lagging steps and downcast face to show his one talent. He said that he knew the master was a cruel man, and so he was afraid and hid his money and did not make any use of it at all!

How would you have rewarded these servants if they had been yours? Why, of course, you would have given the biggest reward to the one who had made best use of his time and his master's wealth. And the one who did not love his master, but was afraid of him—well, I think you would have done with him just as the one in the story did. And do you know what that was?

You know, our Master, Jesus, has gone away and left us with all His possessions to care for in His absence; and He expects us to make the best use of them that we know how. He has not given us all the same things, but some one thing and others something else.

When we are young, sometimes we do not realize just what it is we have to take care of; but as we grow older, we see. Some of us have money; some have time; some have beautiful voices; some can speak well. Whatever it is that we have, the Master expects us to use it for Him; and in using it, it will grow bigger and better.

We need not wait until the Master returns from His journey to give our gifts to Him; but each day we can give them to Him by giving them to others, for that is the way we serve Him. Then when He returns, we shall be glad to see Him; for we shall know we have used rightly what He trusted to us in His absence.

“Flowers breathe their fragrance,
Birds give their song;
Stars shine in beauty
All the night long;
Voices of Nature
Praises repeat;
What can the children
Lay at His feet?”

“Thoughts pure and holy,
Words kind and true,
All gentle service
Little hands do;
Work for our Master,
Joyful and sweet,
Prayer for His kingdom
Lay at His feet.”

—E. E. Hewitt.

THE MISSING VIOLETS

DAVID searched in vain for Ruth's violets. He was in a hurry, too. His Sunday school teacher was having a party that afternoon to entertain new members. Every boy and girl in the Beginners department was to try to bring one other boy or girl to Sunday school. Everybody else had been able to find some one who would join the class, but David had his new member to get.

“I must hurry to see Will Young before the party,” thought David, as he looked for the missing violets. “I wonder if I can get him to join our class.”

Will Young was a newcomer in town David had been told. He had never met him but knew where he lived.

Time was quickly passing, but David could not go to Will's until he found Ruth's violets. He had left them on that big rock. But they were not there now. Where could they be?

STEWARDSHIP OF MONEY

Deuteronomy 8:7-18; Malachi 3:7-10; Luke 12:22-34; 1 Corinthians 16:1-4; 2 Corinthians 8:1-15; 9:1-15; 1 Timothy 6:17-19.

Devotional Reading: Matthew 6:19-24

GOLDEN TEXT

Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.—Luke 12:15.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Stewardship of Money

Basic Truth: "Honour the Lord with thy substance, . . . so shall thy barns be filled with plenty."—Proverbs 3:9, 10.

God and Man.

I. God Provides All Good. (Deut. 8:7-18; Mal. 3:7-9.) The "good land" into which the Lord was to lead Israel had been prepared far in advance of their coming. Its fruitful fields, its fountains of water, its valleys and hills, its iron and "brass" had all been made ready for them ages before. All was God's, for He was its Creator. Whatever they might afterwards make of the materials found in Canaan would be made from that which belonged to God. Man can create not a single blade of grass or atom of iron. He can but use that which he finds at hand, that which God has prepared for him.

II. What Man Possesses Is Consigned to Him by God. (2 Cor. 9:6-10.) Man was never the real owner of anything, not even of his own life. All things he enjoys are given to him "on consignment" from God. That is, God retains the actual right of ownership Himself. He permits man to use the earth and its fulness during the period of his mortal existence; but at his death, all reverts to God, "for when he dieth he shall carry nothing away" (Psa. 49:17). Even his life returns to God who gave it (Ecl. 12:7). All through the time man is permitted to occupy the earth and to enjoy its blessings, the Creator requires a just share of its increase. That is His "rental charge."

III. Our Debt to God Is Payable to God and Man. (2 Cor. 9:11-15.) Being but the stewards of God's treasures, it is but right that we should return to Him a part of the increase. He has made it possible for us to do this in two ways: first, by worship of Himself; and, second, by service rendered to our fellow men. As we "do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. 10:31), our deeds of kindness to others redound to the praise of the Lord as men are given cause to thank God for His goodness extended to them through us. Thus giving induces the worship of God on the part of both the receiver and bestower of benefits and makes the giver a co-worker with the Lord in blessing his fellow men.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

The Giver: Man is entirely dependent on God for all that he has and is or ever will be. God is the Giver of every perfect gift (James 1:17). He sends the rain upon the just and the unjust alike. The sun shines on both evil and good (Matt. 5:45). We sow in hope that God will give the increase.

How little we realize how dependent on God we are! Our lesson deals with God as the Giver. When the children of Israel were brought out of Egypt into the wilderness and finally into the promised land, God enjoined them not to forget all His benefits and to remember that it was He who gave them manna and quails and preserved their clothing and shoes for forty years, that it was He who brought them into a land flowing with milk and honey. When their flocks increased and their silver and gold multiplied they were to remember that God was the One "that giveth them power to get wealth". What was true then is true now. The one that accumulates wealth does so through the power of God.

The Giver

- of every gift is God;
- is entitled to thanks;
- owns everything.

The Receiver: Man is on the receiving end. God gives; man receives. As the recipient of all of the mercies and blessings of God, man has certain obligations imposed upon him. One of the first and most important duties imposed on man is that of thankfulness. Certainly a giver of a gift is entitled to thanks. We assume such as a matter of fact. None questions the propriety of giving thanks to those who shower gifts upon us. This is likewise true in our relationship to the greatest of givers and His gifts. Man should give thanks (1 Thess. 5:18). Next in importance is the tithe. God gives ten-tenths or all, and in return asks us to show our thanks by returning one-tenth to be dedicated to the proclamation of God's goodness and greatness.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

"We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." Then why covet what another has? What we have must be used in this life and should be used advantageously for the cause of Christ. We are only stewards of what we have; everything really belongs to the Father. We should use what has been given us as though God Himself directed our every act.

"Thou shalt not covet" is one of the ten commandments and was repeated by Christ. The covetous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 6:10. A man's life should be for the glory of God and not just for the things of this life. Not what we have, nor what we want will mean anything, if not used as becomes a Christian.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

God is the Creator of all things and has a right to claim all things. All that we may acquire in this world is a loan from God. Paul wrote: "For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain that we can take nothing out." In Matthew 25:14-30, Jesus gave the parable of the man that wished to travel in a far country. To one servant he gave five talents (pieces of money), to another he gave two talents, and to another just one. At his return he rewarded each according to the manner in which he had used the talents. There is no doubt but that the way in which we use the money entrusted to us will form a part of the basis of judgment.

Should one use God's money to buy intoxicating liquors? Should he spend it on crime or to thwart justice? Should he spend it on a harlot? Would he please God by spending it on wild parties? Would he please God by spending ten dollars on dances and cigarettes and only ten cents for the preaching of the gospel? One must answer these questions and many more if he would spend God's money wisely. How are you spending the portion entrusted to you? Christ will ask you some day. Your acceptance or rejection for a place in God's kingdom will, to a certain extent, depend upon the truthful answer you can give.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Last week we considered the ways and means of making money, and today we will study the use of money. Were it not for its purchasing power, money would be of no value. For example, if the world of business should suddenly change and use something other than money for a means of exchange, our money would be of no use to us. Of itself it is of no more value than so much tin, hence the folly and wickedness of hoarding it. But there are so many things we can buy with money. We can provide ourselves with fine homes, expensive cars, beautiful clothes, etc. But we can also buy happiness for the little cripple next door, purchase pleasure for the old lady in the next street, provide food for the hungry children near us. Which do you think would please our Master the most and bring the most lasting happiness to the individual possessing the money? We can also help spread the glad tidings of the gospel to those who have not heard it; we can bring others to share in the services of our church that we enjoy so much; we can help those who teach the beautiful story of Christ, if we cannot teach it ourselves. Remember that it is not the amount but the manner in which we give that counts.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

GOOD NEWS FROM LESTER PRAIRIE, MINNESOTA

The Church of God at Lester Prairie is now having regular services on Sunday both morning and evening. Though the attendance has thus far been small, we have a group of earnest workers who are resolved that with the help of God they will surmount all obstacles and make the church at Lester Prairie shine for the glory of God.

It is our hope in the near future to organize a young people's Berean society, which we feel sure will go far toward strengthening our congregation and promoting interest among our young people.

May God give us strength for the work that is before us. Remember us in your prayers.
Richard Le Crone, Pastor.

NOTICE TO MINISTERS

To all Ministers of the Church of God:

The Ministerial Conference this past summer proved so valuable to the ministers who found it possible to attend that they thought it profitable to continue the exchange of ideas throughout the year. Accordingly Eld. Harry A. Sheets, Eld. Norman John McLeod, and Eld. M. W. Lyon were selected to direct the work, the first named being chairman.

The first general letter went into the mails on October 29. There are some ministers whose names and addresses we do not have in our files. If you have not received your letter by the time you read this notice, please write to us, giving your full name and address; and we will send you a copy of General Letter 1 by return mail.

Please address all communications to your Chairman,
Eld. Harry A. Sheets,
Rt. 1, Box 56, Woodstock, Virginia.

MOOREFIELD, NEBRASKA

Dear friends of like precious faith, greeting: Great changes have been made here in the last few weeks. We are no longer meeting in the union church building. I was called as pastor for another year by the majority of the members, but the board, except one member, was so bitter against me on account of the things I stand for, that I thought it wise to withdraw from the union church.

Things looked dark for a while, and I could not see my way clear. But I trusted in God, and He brought me through. Thanks to all who prayed for us in this time of trouble, also to all the dear ones who stood true to God and to the Word of truth when it was everything but popular to do so.

We are now carrying on our meetings in the community hall. The hall is commodious, and our meetings are being well attended, even by outsiders.

We do not have Sunday school but many think we should. I would like to have the thoughts of others in regard to Sunday school. We have a junior choir of several girls and boys who ought to be in Sunday school.

We have our own church building here, which with a little work and expense could be made a very fine place for our meetings, and the hope of many is that this will be accomplished.

We are planning for a special Thanksgiving service on the Sunday before Thanksgiving Day. Brethren, pray for us.

E. E. Giesler, Pastor.

MICHIGAN FALL CONFERENCE REPORT

Bro. L. E. Conner arrived in Grand Rapids on Friday, Oct. 28. After spending a few minutes with Bro. A. K. Richardson, who has not been able to leave his bed for seven weeks, we went to Blanchard for meetings that evening and over Sunday, Oct. 30. The attendance was not very large, but the attention was very good, and there were many remarks after Sunday evening services that they were real old-fashioned Bible services which they liked to hear. We thank the Blanchard brethren and hope they will be able to have more services.

Wm. Hanson.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Recently the Dorcas ladies entertained their husbands and families at a social gathering held in the fire barns. The program presented was thoroughly enjoyed, according to reports reaching The Herald.

Sr. F. E. Hall, acting as official "reporter" during the absence of Pastor F. E. Siple, writes that the regular church services were well attended, and that Bro. Corsan delivered two inspiring sermons. Several were absent, however, having embraced the opportunity of attending the meeting at Blanchard, and hearing Bro. L. E. Conner.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

Sunday, Oct. 23, was our Rally Day at Eden Valley. We had Sunday school at the usual hour in the morning, and following that an interesting short program. Then dinner was served in the church basement. There were preaching services in the afternoon and evening. Bro. Denchfield preached in the afternoon and Bro. Thoms in the evening. The weather was bad so the crowds were not what we would have expected had conditions been better, but the four services had a total attendance of 316.

There were preaching services at the church each evening of the week following, the preaching being done by Bro. Thoms, assisted by our pastor. On Sunday, Oct. 30, we also had four services. In the afternoon a Miss Milkey of Paynesville spoke, and Bro. Thoms in the evening.

We enjoyed having Bro. Thoms and his daughter, Merelle, among us. He is well known here, having spent the greater part of his youth in this community. He is new at preaching, but not new in the service of the Lord, and is doing very good work with his preaching and singing. His father was one of the two ministers who organized our church at this place. And his mother's sweet voice in song is a memory very dear to all the older members.

We feel that much good was done in these meetings. They closed with a service on Monday evening.

The interest in the work is good, and Bro. Denchfield goes about his usual happy way, lending a helping hand here and there, cheering the sick and boosting the work generally.

Bro. W. F. Hoskins is on the sick list at present, being confined to his bed with a very painful back. We hope God's people will remember him in prayer.

Mrs. Herman Ruhn.

SPECIAL MEETINGS AT BRUSH CREEK (OHIO) CHURCH

Eld. S. E. Magaw, the energetic pastor of the Church of God at the Brush Creek (Ohio) church, has just ordered from The Herald print shop a quantity of invitations, attractively printed in two colors, to advertise his forthcoming special meetings which are to begin next Sunday, Nov. 13, and continue over the 27th.

Speaking of the purpose of the meeting, Bro. Magaw says:

"In days of distress men need the comfort and cheer of the Gospel. The words of Christ are enlightening. They keep one patient. They stay the heart. The message of salvation in God's own Holy Word is the need of this present hour of turmoil and despair.

"It is sad that in days of such dire need of God men still trust the arm of flesh. To wait upon the Lord will far more quickly, and far more satisfactorily, bring the peace that all men seek.

"It is our purpose in this series of meetings to bring you nearer your God, to encourage you in Christian faith and service, to assist you for your presentation to Christ when He comes to rule the earth."

BURR OAK, INDIANA

There is a rumor that WCMA may be moved from Culver. We will be sorry to have to discontinue the services, and we hope and pray that the station may be kept here.

Visitors are commenting upon the nice appearance of the interior of the church. The Ladies Aid supplied the cash, and the men and women together supplied the labor. Upon approaching the building the first thing a visitor notices is the big "Welcome" sign on the front of the church. Then he will see the vestibule done in a Japanese Brown Tiffany. In the main room a red and green stencil decorates the cream walls. Now, the ladies are working for rugs for the aisles, lest people be afraid to walk on the bright and shining golden oak floors.

Services are as follows: Sunday school at 10:00, Dewey Overmyer, Supt.; morning worship at 11:00; evening worship at 7:30. The Berean classes are held every Friday evening at 7:45. We have also been privileged to meet with the Bremen Bereans several times during the past two months. Their class is held on Wednesday evening at the homes of the various members, and usually the house is full.

We were very much saddened by the death, on Oct. 29, of our oldest pioneer member, Bro. Samuel Osborn. Since the establishment of the church here Bro. Osborn has been a faithful and consistent worker for the Master.

C. A. Smead, Pastor.

THE NEW BANNER OF DAVID

One of the most interesting features of Bro. Marsh's sermon on "Peace," delivered last Sunday evening at Oregon was the new banner of David which was on display, showing the white background emblematic of God's righteousness and the bars of blue representing His royalty, with the star of David in the center. This inspiring sermon was attentively heard by the usual large audience from representatives of several of the churches of Oregon, as well as our own.—M. G.

AT WCMA

Now that it is getting colder, you may be able to tune in on the services broadcast from Culver three times a week, as follows:

Gospel Proclamation Service, Sunday, 6:30 a. m.; Glad Tidings Hour, Monday, 2:30 p. m.; Truth Seekers' Hour, Monday, 10:30 p. m.

WCMA, Culver, Indiana, is found at 1400 kilocycles; and if conditions are just right, you may sometimes hear the services though you are a thousand miles away. Please write and let us know if you are able to get the broadcast.

C. A. Smead, Pastor.

GOEKLER-ALLEN

A quiet wedding was solemnized on Sunday, Oct. 30, 1932, when Miss Lurlyne Allen became the bride of Ralph Goekler. The ceremony was performed by the local Christian Church pastor, L. Z. Smith. They were attended by Mr. Vernel Allen, brother of the bride, and Miss Ruth Goekler, sister of the groom. Ralph is a son of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Goekler and is employed by the Chevrolet garage. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Allen and is a lady of sterling character. Ralph is a member of the Salem Church of God, his bride not being affiliated with any church at the present time.

They will be at home to their friends at 914 Beech St., Marshall, Ill.

DUVAL - LYON

A wedding of interest to church people and Bereans in many parts of the country was solemnized on Oct. 27, when Miss Margaret J. Lyon was united in marriage with Mr. Richard C. Duval, at the home of her parents at Citronelle, Alabama.

The ceremony was performed by the writer in the presence of the family and a few close friends, amidst a setting of ferns and beautifully colored autumn leaves. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. F. E. Siple, and the groom by Mr. F. E. Siple, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who, less than two years before, in this same spot, had themselves taken the vows as bride and groom. Following the ceremony a wedding luncheon was served, after which the happy couple departed on a tour along the Gulf Coast to New Orleans and north to Chicago, where they are now at home at 645 N. Central Park Ave.

The bride is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Lyon, and sister of the writer. She has been active in Berean and church work, and employed as a nurse in Chicago for a number of years past. The groom, also a resident of Chicago, is employed with the Bell Telephone Co. We are sure that friends in many sections will wish for them a long life of happiness together.

M. W. Lyon.

REPORT OF J. H. ANDERSON

My report for October is as follows; Bible lessons and sermons: Hillisburg, 8; Rensselaer, 2; Culver, 1; Burr Oak, 1; Plymouth, 1; North Salem, 1; Blush Mo., 4; Donivan, Mo., 9. Total, 27. Baptisms: 2.

Bro. J. O. Rogers has worked up quite an interest at Donivan, Mo., 220 miles south of St. Louis, and the Blush, Mo., church decided to give their fifth Sunday service to them, so I was sent there. About forty of the Blush members motored the 120 miles to assist in the meetings. We had preaching every night in the schoolhouse and Bible lessons every day in Bro. Rogers' home. The interest and attendance were very good. As a result of the meetings Sr. Alma Dickson and her daughter, Grace, were baptized. Bro. Rogers has opened a good field here and we hope to have the pleasure of again visiting this place.

At present we are holding meetings at Dana, North Carolina.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The brethren at Moorefield, N.C., are to be congratulated on the definite and independent stand they have taken for the truth. Pray that God may bless both pastor and congregation, and make them fruitful.

Elder C. E. Lapp, pastor of the church at Eldorado, Ill., informs us that Leo Ray, a seven-pound boy, was welcomed to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd of that place. "Mrs. Lloyd will be remembered as Juanita Shain," Bro. Lapp adds.

All who can do so should make an effort to attend the special meeting at the Brush Creek church, near Tippecanoe City, Ohio. Bro. Magaw is announcing some very timely subjects for consideration from November 13 to 27.

"Sr. T. A. Weldon (of the Fonthill church) is critically ill. We ask your prayers in her behalf," writes Bro. Randall in his last bulletin. Sr. Weldon has done much for the cause of Christ. Let us remember her before the Father's throne.

Bro. H. H. Hawkins, moderator of the Church of the Golden Rule (Church of God), Cleveland, Ohio, writes that he is recovering nicely from a serious operation, and appreciatively says, "I feel confident that the prayers of the brethren and family helped in the successful operation, and in my speedy recovery."

Bro. M. W. Perrine, Everett, Wash., sends in his tithe and tells us that he is now eighty-four years old. Bro. Perrine is still writing some very helpful articles which appear in The Herald from time to time. He concludes his letter with the following significant remark: "I do not expect to send in many more tithes, for the Lord is coming."

During the past few weeks two more of our young ministers, both graduates of the last Training Class, have entered upon regular pastoral work. Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., has been invited to act as pastor of the newly organized body at the Plum River church, near Lanark, Ill.; and Bro. Richard Le Cronc has been called to the church at Lester Prairie, Minn. Pray for the success of these earnest workers and for the spiritual growth of the congregations under their leadership.

The editor wishes he might personally answer each of the many good letters that reach the office, but owing to time and expense he is unable to do so. He does appreciate them, however, and thanks God that The Herald is proving of value and interest to its readers. May God bless you all.

Bro. and Sr. Ivan Veach of the Salem church, near Marshall, Ill., welcomed a little daughter into their home on Oct. 29. Although not named when the word reached us, we trust that sometime she will bear the "only name" by which we may be saved.

There is no experience in life more filled with happy emotion than we feel when we learn that some one has taken a stand for the gospel of the kingdom and for the Lord Jesus Christ. We praise the Lord for those who have recently responded to the invitation extended by Bro. Anderson in Missouri, and pray that they may continue faithful "till the day dawn."

Bro. and Sr. A. J. Eychaner of Cedar Heights, Iowa, expect to leave about Nov. 11 to spend the winter in Tampa, Fla. Their address will be 303 Zack St. The Lord be with them and keep them in His name.

Among the many able advocates of the gospel fifty years or more ago in the middle west, none was better qualified for his task than Elder J. M. Stephenson, whose article, "The Great Salvation," is reprinted on the front page of The Herald this week. Bro. Stephenson has rested many years in the little cemetery at Ripley, Ill., but is not forgotten.

We regret to learn that Bro. Eugene Howard, who for many years was a faithful supporter of the Lord's work in the middle west, is quite feeble at his home at 607 Milan Ave., South Pasadena, Calif. He and his wife, however, continue to remember the needs of the general work. May God bless and keep them both.

The churches at Fonthill, Ont., and at Niagara Falls, N. Y., indicated their appreciation of the past efforts of their pastor, Elder C. E. Randall, by extending to him a unanimous invitation to remain with them for another year.

REDEMPTION

By R. H. Judd

“Who redeemeth thy life from destruction.”—Psalm 103:4.

I WAS pleased indeed to note Brother Patrick's article on the above subject. For many years, as HERALD readers know, I have taken the position that the death penalty by which Adam was first threatened was a penalty to be inflicted within the day of his transgression, and which for more than one obvious reason was not carried out.

Personally I feel that conditionalists have lost vantage ground in not accepting this fact from the beginning and that they will yet have to come to the recognition of it, for it is undoubtedly one of the best illustrations of accepting Scripture in its literal and actual sense that can possibly be found. Coming as it does at the very commencement of Bible history in relation to man, it is most important. I am convinced that in due time it will be seen to be the only theory—a theory that becomes a fact—that fully coincides with every detail of the narrative in its natural and literal sense.

While it is undoubtedly true that Adam's death was the result of his own mortal nature and that the death we die is consequent upon our inheritance of that nature, there is one point to which I should like to draw attention to correct the impression that natural death (as we call it) is not the wages of sin.

In discussing the question with a correspondent in California through the columns of his magazine my opponent positively denied that natural death is the wages of sin, insisting that spiritual death was the penalty threatened and that it was spiritual death to which the passage in Romans 5:12 referred. I answered this contention in part by pointing out that death could not have one meaning in Romans 5:10 and another meaning in the twelfth verse of the same chapter.

Without taking space to consider all the difficulties entailed by the views commonly held by many, including conditionalists, it seems to me that the one answer to them all will be found in recognizing that two distinct penalties were pronounced against Adam.

The first punishment in Genesis 2:17, clearly and precisely threatens a death to be inflicted within a given day. The second, in Genesis 3:17-19, amounts to a commuted sentence of penal servitude for life. The reader cannot fail to see that the language of Scripture exactly fits the above-stated facts. There is no mention in the Bible that the first sentence was carried out. The only reference made to Adam's death (Genesis 5:5) tallies in every detail with the language of Genesis 3:17-19.

It has been far too readily assumed by almost all classes of Bible students that God's honor would be impugned unless some kind of death penalty were carried out. Statements to this intent frequently occur; especially so in “orthodox” literature. In this way, by all sorts of devices, have human hands sought to steady the ark of God. All kinds of death have been invented until death itself is actually denied. God's threatened sentence against Nineveh was in every particular as definite and concise as the one pronounced against Adam, but it was not carried out in the time specified.

That natural death is the penalty for sin there cannot be the slightest doubt, for no truer description of its process can be found than that given in Genesis 3:17-19; and the reason for it is definitely stated to be, “Thou hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat. . . .” Hence, as Adam failed to gain possession of eternal life (see Genesis 3:22), death “passed upon all” his descendants.

A further fact is evident. The testimony of many scriptures is, “Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me.”—Psalm 51:5. Justice could, therefore, demand our life from its commencement; but in mercy to the race the commuted sentence comes into effect upon Adam's descendants as well as himself. In order that eternal life may become the possession of man there is but one way open (Hosea 13:14). The whole process of salvation is based upon redemption, for “none of us can by any means redeem his brother.” A Redeemer who could pay the ransom had to be provided.

Let us, Brethren and Sisters, take God at His word. Let us take it literally, where the literal will hold; and I know of no other instance where that rule will apply better than it does here. Literal death to be inflicted on a day distinguished from other days of his life by a definite act was clearly threatened by the language employed, but was not carried out because of extenuating circumstances that both divine and human laws have recognized from that day to this. (Let the reader turn to Ezekiel 18:21, the language of which aptly applies to Adam, and to Jeremiah 18:8, which just as aptly applies to Nineveh. See also Jonah 3:10.) Nor can there be any mistaking the fact that a second penalty was pronounced amounting to a commuted sentence of penal servitude for life. The reader is invited to compare the sentences and see if this is not actually the case. The sentence of death is as literally pronounced in the one as in the other.

Now take your Bibles and search out the words “redemption,” “redeem,” and “redeemer.” With all emphasis I repeat that redemption from death is the only remedy. We are redeemed by the precious blood (life-given) of Christ, in whom we have redemption through His blood (life-given), even the forgiveness of our sins. “The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.”—Romans 6:23. “We are not redeemed with corruptible things such as silver and gold, but with the precious blood (life-given) of Christ.”

Let our hearts burst forth with the exultant cry, “O grave, where is thy victory?” “None of us can by any means redeem his brother, or give to God a ransom for him.” “But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.” He was the only One who could redeem, because He was Himself free from sin.

THANKSGIVING NUMBER

VOLUME 22

OREGON, ILLINOIS, NOVEMBER 15, 1932

NUMBER 7

"In Every Thing Give Thanks"

By F. L. Austin

"O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name: make known his deeds among the people." "Praise ye the Lord. O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever."—Psalms.

WHAT thrills race the heart as one experiences the sense of overflowing Thankfulness! How life is stimulated! How the features beautify with vivacious smile and cheer! How the whole soul is fed! edified! All this especially when Thankfulness is by works translated into Thanksgiving.

What the electric current does to the filament of the light bulb, that deep-hearted, o'erflowing Thankfulness does to the life of man—it brings the inner self to the white-heat of appreciation which in turn radiates its joyous light of Thanksgiving unto all around. How it dispels darkness for others! Dimmed lives are given light! Broken spirits are revived! Despair is, in a twinkling, changed to hope. Hard-heartedness relaxes and takes new mold—mold that honors God, distributes to fellows things of need. Fevered brows are cooled; distressed eyes are softened; children's fears are quieted. What miracles are wrought when the springs of Thankfulness form into flowing streams of Thanksgiving! What tonic to sin-sick lives!

How wondrously good was our heavenly Father to fashion and shapen and organize us so as to make us susceptible and responsive to the re-awakening and restoring and re-heartening influences of matured and exercised Thankfulness. Like faith and love it promotes (Continued on Page 10)

EDITORIAL

The Restitution Herald was entered as second class matter, October 16, 1911, at the Post Office at Oregon, Ill., under act of March, 1879.

G. Eldred Marsh, Editor

Paul C. Johnson, Associate Editor

“Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name. For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations.”—Psalm 100:4, 5.

The Editor's Prayer of Thanksgiving

OUR hearts overflow with thanksgiving unto Thee, most gracious Lord of truth and righteousness and love, because Thou hast so enriched our memories with records of the bountiful provision Thou hast made for all our needs. We thank Thee for Thyself, our Father and our God; for Jesus Christ, Thy only begotten Son, our Savior; for the blessed Word of Truth that reveals Thy love to us; and for the glorious hope that gladdens our hearts and makes bright with promise the otherwise gloomy pathway of mortality. To Thee be all praise for evermore. Amen.

The Peace of Thanksgiving

“PRAISE is comely for the upright,” declared the quaint old singer of Israel, and his words are still true. To praise the Lord for His goodness is an act of righteousness that is ever acceptable to the Father's heart, while to disparage His blessings by indifference or complaining is to deny His faithfulness and His love.

To see in every happening the beneficent hand of God, to recognize in all that occurs around us a constant outpouring of divine love, and to realize that this is actually, gloriously true in so far as the obedient child of God is concerned, brings a peace of mind that nothing else can equal. This is the “peace of God, that passeth all understanding,” for it blesses and comforts and strengthens regardless of material circumstances and conditions in a manner that exceeds the natural comprehension of any man.

Just to know that we belong to God, that we are counted as His children, that we are included in His plans, develops within us an ever-deepening sense of appreciation. That the infinite Creator of the universe commands that “all things work together” for our good fills us with awe and wonder, and inspires us to greater zeal and earnestness in our desire to serve Him as we realize that our labor cannot be in vain in the Lord.

The Joy of Thanks-living

THERE is a spiritual uplift that comes as a result of prayer and meditation and worship that is most helpful; but the joy that follows the living of praise to God goes far beyond anything we may experience through its mere verbal expression.

As we meditate on the infinite kindness of the heavenly Father to us we find ourselves impelled to reflect something of that kindness to others around us. And as we do this we become conscious of the blessedness of being permitted to associate with Him in dispensing His rich bounty to the world of needy men. Then, indeed, our hearts are attuned to singing and our lips to praise!

Working with God! What a glorious, what a wonderful, what a holy thought! We may work with God! Surely no effort could be too great, no burden too heavy, no task too difficult, if attempted for God, and with God, to show our appreciation of His goodness toward us.

The extent to which we are willing to go in service to our fellow men provides a criterion by which we may measure our own regard for the blessings we have received. Some one has said, “As a physician judges the condition of men's hearts by the pulse which beats in their arms, and not by the words which proceed from their mouths, so we judge the thankfulness of men by their lives rather than their professions.”

The test of the Master might be applied here. “By their fruits ye shall know them.” It is not so much what a man says as what he does that indicates his appreciation of the benefits God has given. The spontaneous outpouring of the heart in praise is good, but the constant outpouring of the life in service is better. Not that thanksgiving be neglected, but that thanks-living be emphasized.

The test which James applies to faith might also be applied to the matter of thanksgiving. “Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works.” Thanksgiving, like faith, is dead without works, “being alone.”

THANKFULNESS

By George B. Alldridge

"Only fear the Lord, and serve him in truth with all your heart; for consider how great things he hath done for you."—1 Samuel 12:24.

ONCE a year it is usually the custom followed by all business institutions to take an inventory of their assets, and thus determine the wealth acquired during the year or the depreciation in value of stock.

Every day for the child of God is a thanksgiving day; but it seems a good thing to take a retrospective view of the past year and heed Samuel's admonition to "consider how great things he (Jehovah) hath done for you." We cannot number God's blessings spiritual and temporal.

Because of man's greed and selfishness he limits a just and equitable distribution of the rich and bountiful harvests He gives to the sons of men. If, as in China or India, there be famines even in our own land, and many families in need of the essentials of life, God is not responsible, but rather the greed of men upon which God frowns.

Who can read the sixty-fifth Psalm without feeling his whole being going out in thanksgiving to God for all His mercies? In Pendeman's wonderful picture, "The Jews Beneath the Willows of Babylon," the four figures depict sadness. Yet there comes over us a feeling of peace as we realize that they are recounting to each other the joys and blessings of God so beautifully set forth in Psalm 137.

When we think of the wickedness of the world today and then that God has redeemed this sinful world through the righteousness of Christ our Savior, how real to us Ephesians 1:14 becomes! "Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."

Of course the spirit of depression affects us, the very air we breathe seems to be full of it; but lift up your heart in thankfulness, for as the Psalmist said of God, "Thou art my hiding place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance." And again the Psalmist says of Him: "How excellent is thy lovingkindness, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings."

How our hearts should go out to God in thankfulness for health and strength and food for our daily requirements! Surely God's angels are watching and hovering over us to ward off all danger and alarm.

How many of us thank God for His Word of truth and the ability to read, inwardly digest, and to diligently follow it? Think what a dark and benighted world this would have been if God had not sent His Son to illuminate it with the Spirit of Truth and to leave us an example in the way of holiness! For are we not instructed to "follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord"?

When we think for a moment how dark and traitorous the human heart is and that God has appointed a way by which He does cleanse it from sin and deceit, we thank God that the greatest miracle is now being performed, and that "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Paul continues, "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. 5:17-21.

Think of it! God is making us fit to be His representatives before the children of men as our Forerunner Jesus was "in the days of his flesh."

So we can all, I am sure, find something to be thankful for. This verse covers it all: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

I realize that I am incompetent to judge what experiences are best for me. God is preparing me to have a part in that glorious kingdom. So (Continued on Page 10)

Our Praise to Thee

From this green earth of ours,
From this wide, rolling sea,
From these fair hills and vales,
Praise goes up to Thee.

From every field and plain,
From every flower and tree,
From every stream and rill,
Praise goes up to Thee.

From men of every clime,
From lips of bond and free
From age and infancy,
Praise goes up to Thee.

God of heaven and earth,
The Lord of all we see,
From this creation of Thy hand,
Praise goes up to Thee.

—Horatius Bonar.

THANK GOD

---

THANK GOD for life!

E'en though it bring much bitterness and strife,
Though all our fairest hopes be wrecked and lost,
E'en though there be more ill than good in life,
We cling to life and reckon not the cost.
Thank God for life.

Thank God for love!

For though sometimes grief follows in its wake,
Still we forget love's sorrow in love's joy,
And cherish tears with smiles for love's dear sake;
Only in Eden is bliss without alloy.
Thank God for love.

Thank God for pain!

No tear hath ever yet been shed in vain,
And in the end each sorrowing heart shall find
No curse, but blessing in the hand of pain;
E'en when He smiteth, then is God most kind.
Thank God for pain.

Thank God for death!

Which touches anguished lips and stills their breath
And giveth peace unto each troubled breast
That grief may end. Soon He who conquered death
Shall come and bring eternal life and rest.
Thank God for death.

“WHEREFORE DOTH A LIVING MAN COMPLAIN?”

By D. G. Harvey

---

“It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord.”—
Psalm 92:1. “Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.”—Romans 1:21.

ONCE more, we as a nation are asked by presidential proclamation to pause and give thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Just one day for thanks.

There are many desires we cannot satisfy today. All things are for our good (Romans 8:28). Man has refused to humble himself (James 4:10); but he is being humbled.
Disappointments should put us into a mental position to do the will of our Father if we do not become bitter.

True, we (many of us) have lost homes, autos, radios, and many pleasures; but did we really need them? No! We are alive; “wherefore doth a living man complain?” “We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out,” says Paul in First Timothy 6:7.

Let us be warned by Romans 1:21. Be thankful for that mother, that father, whose love you have known since childhood. Think of your many blessings, that boy, that girl of yours. What would you take for them? You have life. Without it you have nothing. Thank God for that life to use in His service. You read these few lines; thank God for eyes that see. Think of the many who have not such a blessing and who sit in darkness.

Our Father knows our needs and will grant them all.
(Phil. 4:19; 2 Cor. 9:8.) But remember there is a vast difference between desires and needs. A baby will cry for the moon, but the moon would not be good for the baby.

“It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord.”
Thank God for life, the laughter of your children, the love of life's companion, for friends, His Word, His Gift to the world (John 3:16), for hope itself. Nothing to be thankful for? “Count your many blessings”; and you, too, will exclaim, “Wherefore doth a living man complain?”

ABOVE ALL THAT WE ASK OR THINK

By Mary A. Gesin

---

SOME ONE has aptly said that “our prospects are as bright as the promises of God.” If we take only a few minutes a day to read some of the assurances of our heavenly Father, our immediate surroundings brighten up immeasurably, provided, of course, that we believe them.

How about this one? “The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry.” Or this: “The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him;”
and “no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.”

If our feet are set upon the sure foundation of the promises of God, how can our prospects be dark and gloomy?
This world needs more than anything else those who refuse to be cast down by present conditions. “Whoso is wise . . .
shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord,” and “shall speak of thy praise all the day long.” The great Apostle gave the unrestrained love of his heart to “him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think.” Shall we do less?

As the former associate editor of our beloved HERALD, may I say to the many readers and writers of its pages whose lives have so enriched my own, “I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers, hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast to the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints.”

“And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work: being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God.”

ARE WE THANKFUL?

By James A. Patrick

MOST professing Christians say they are, but are they? Actions speak louder than words. The cause of Christ is languishing for funds to carry it forward. But do you not know there is a depression? There is never any depression with God. If we lack any needful thing, even in times of depression, I am convinced it is our own fault. The Lord has promised to supply all our needs; and if we take him at His word, He will not fail us.

Israel was never in want when it lived up to God's law and brought all the tithes into the storehouse, for He had promised them: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Malachi 3:10. When Israel followed this rule, there was never any want among them; they could withstand their enemies and their land was always productive.

I am convinced that if people lived true to the Lord and paid the tithe—all the tithes—they would be better off financially than if they did not pay the tithe. Nine tenths with the Lord's blessing will go farther than ten tenths without His blessing. But if we pay tithes simply with a view to financial gain, it will avail us nothing.

What have we to be thankful for? I am thankful for our Savior, the Lord Jesus. When I think what it cost Him to redeem me, my heart melts within me with love and thankfulness to Him. Think what it would mean were the world without Him! Think of those that are without God and have no hope in this world or the next! I am thankful for His gospel. It brings wondrous hope to our hearts; this good news of a coming Savior and a coming kingdom. I am thankful that I am permitted to live in these wonderful times: "In an age on ages telling, to be living is sublime."

It may be asked why one should think it wonderful to be living in times of such depression and distress. Of course, we are sorry for the world in its distress, and we will be sorry for it when the Lord comes and takes us out of it; but what joy to be living at that time!

I once heard a story about a preacher that illustrates this thought. He was holding meetings in the country. One night after service he had to go alone quite a distance to a certain home to be entertained that night. The roads were neither good nor easy to find; so the people gave directions as best they could. After giving him directions, they told him he would know when he was near to his destination because he would come to a very bad mud hole. He could not go round it, but would have to go right through. When that preacher came to that mud hole, he plunged into it with a good deal of thankfulness because he knew he was near the end of that long muddy road. So we can plunge into the depression with rejoicing, for it is the bad mud hole near the end of the way to our everlasting home.

WE ARE THANKFUL

By J. H. Anderson

WE ARE THANKFUL—

That God is our Father and loves us. Matthew 6:9; 1 John 3:1-3.

That we are His children and heirs. Romans 8:17.

That we inherit all things, and are very rich in the true riches. Revelation 21:7; James 2:5.

That we have one faith and that it pleases our Father, justifies us, and is imputed to us for righteousness. Ephesians 4:5; Romans 5:1; 4:19-25.

That we have one hope that is an anchor of the soul and saves us. Ephesians 4:4; Hebrews 6:19, 20; Romans 8:24.

That we have a Brother who will save us. Matthew 1:21.

That our God will make all things work together for our good. Romans 8:28.

Yes, Brother Marsh, we are thankful!

THANKSGIVING

By V. Earl Thayer

AT this season of the year it is rather difficult to express one's thoughts in new and different terms, for Thanksgiving appeals to us in much the same old way each year, namely, an overflowing of joy for the good things that have touched our temporal lives. It is altogether fitting that we should appreciate all these blessings, from the air we breathe to the universe in which we live and are permitted to enjoy.

Let us analyze this word "thanksgiving" by dividing it into two equal parts: Thanks—this is just a word used to express our pleasure or gratitude regarding something that has appealed to or affected us; but giving, taken alone, has an altogether different meaning, and by it we experience the richest of joys.

We give of our bounty to supply the needs and pleasures of others—fine! But do we give to our Father that which is a real pleasure to Him? A heart that thrills at the very thought of our Father, an inexpressible yearning to do His will, a desire to serve others for the cause of His Son Jesus, a life freed from covetous self and completely resigned to Him who is the All in all, and a love that cannot be diminished by all the adversity of a world under the power of sin make in the sight of our Father a real thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving at Golden Rule Home

SURROUNDED by extensive lawns, shaded in the summer by towering elms, stands the large brick residence known as Golden Rule Home. A correspondent of THE RESTITUTION HERALD was sent recently to interview the members of the "Family" to secure from them Thanksgiving messages for our readers, for we felt sure all would be glad to hear personally from each of them. These older ones who have come to us in their declining years have had lives of rich experience in the service of God, and the confidence they have come to feel in His goodness is based on actual knowledge of His bounty which they themselves have known.

Entering the Home by way of the cheery sun-parlor, the visitor was met by Mrs. Levi Mick, the efficient and kindly matron who is lovingly referred to by her elderly "children" as "Mother." Since coming to the Home Sister Mick has carried a heavy and difficult burden with Christian fortitude and consummate success. She has, indeed, been an affectionate, sympathetic, and thoughtful "mother" to all who have come under her care, and many are the expressions of gratitude her "children" have made regarding her faithful service.

When asked for a text of Scripture or a Thanksgiving admonition, Sister Mick quoted the words of Jesus found in Matthew 26:38: "Tarry ye here, and watch with me." No words could be found better fitted to express the constant watchfulness exercised by the matron over her little family. Whatever she does she does as unto the Lord.

Mr. Mick, the matron's husband, who has charge of the heavier work about the house, the lawns, and gardens, is a kind, unassuming man of equable temper. When questioned regarding Thanksgiving he quietly said, "I have everything I need, and nothing to complain about," a sentence which provides us with a good reflection of both his mind and character.

Mrs. Elizabeth Scoville, a member of the Oregon church, who has been connected with the Family since May 14, 1929, handed our interviewer a note to the following effect: "This is November 11, and Armistice Day. When the great World War closed, I surely was a very happy American citizen. And now I am thankful for the many good sermons I hear, the kind friends I have, the good health I enjoy, and for all the other blessings I receive from day to day."

Dear Miss Alice Kerr, formerly of the Dixon, Illinois, church, entered the Home about a year ago; and although totally deaf and weakened by advancing years, she always greets one with a sweet and cheerful smile and a gentle pressure of the hand. Sister Kerr sends you all this touching message: "Love and Thanksgiving greetings to all the brotherhood. How thankful I am that I am at such a nice Home to spend my Thanksgiving, instead of being alone!

There are so many kind friends here for which I am particularly thankful this year."

Mrs. Clara Chaffee was the first to avail herself of the Home's protecting care, having become a member of the Family nearly ten years ago, a few days before the doors were officially opened. Mrs. Chaffee has been a consecrated member of the Church of God for many years, as she was baptized by Elder O. R. L. Crozier in 1883. She is now a member of the church in Oregon, where she is a welcome and regular attendant at practically all services. Her words to you are brief. "I am so thankful for all the dear ones I have met in Golden Rule Home, thankful that the Lord has given me opportunity for service in His name."

Mrs. Mary A. Woodward, too well known to our brethren everywhere to need an introduction, loved by everybody, and still devoted to the service of her Lord, brings her usual inspiring message.

"I have so many things to thank God for that I wonder where I should begin. I believe I will start with thanks to Sister Alta King for the beautiful message of love just received from the brethren in Cedar Falls and Waterloo, Iowa. How thankful I am for so many dear friends both far and near who are praying for me and so sweetly leaving me in God's tender care, for we know He doeth all things well.

"Again I am so thankful for Brother Marsh's fine discourses, of which, though not hearing one of them personally since September, I hear echoes every first day from others of the wonderful words which have been given to large and attentive audiences.

"Once more I am thankful to know how the dear God, through our splendid Training Class, is providing young, prayerful, spiritual-minded men to fill at least eight pulpits with earnest workers in the Lord's field, and one young woman, Sister Lucille Le Crone, who is equally well fitted for her task. I am glad to know that at least one more woman is studying and working for the advancement of righteousness. I was alone in this work for years, just one woman lending her voice to God's ministry. But we can say now, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen."—Rev. 7:12.

"We thank God for a godly man and woman who are so bravely and conscientiously guiding the ship over so many troubled waters, for we have had much sickness and death here during the past year, owing to the infirmities of age."

A recent addition to our Home circle is Mrs. E. P. O'Byrne, who has been a resident of Oregon for many years. Mrs. O'Byrne brings you the following interesting offering.

"The thing I am most thankful for is that the kind heavenly Father keeps us in ignorance of the tribulations that may come to us in life.

“ ‘Oh restful, blessed ignorance.
 ’Tis better not to know;
 It keeps me quiet in the arms
 That will not let me go;
 It hushes my soul to rest
 On the bosom that loves me so.’ ”

We regret to say that owing to illness one of our Home ladies was unable to provide our “reporter” with an interview. The one who is ailing is Mrs. Steffa, a woman of quiet and lovable character, and a long time resident of Oregon. She is passing the winter in Golden Rule Home.

May God bless and keep from harm these dear older ones until the Master comes.

MUCH TO MAKE US THANKFUL

By Connie Ramsey

How many things there are to be thankful for! Food and raiment, and the many spiritual blessings received from our heavenly Father. And how thankful we should be for the promise that our Savior is soon coming back to earth again to restore it to its Edenic beauty.

His coming may be in the morning light,
 When Nature sings;
 The Sun of Righteousness shall arise
 With healing in His wings,
 To give to all that love the light
 That everlasting day,
 When sorrow, sadness, sin, and death
 Shall flee away.

A PASTOR'S GRATITUDE

As PASTOR of a church I am deeply grateful to God for the opportunity He has afforded me to work with His faithful people in preparing the way for the coming of the King. The spirit of fellowship, the constant cooperation, the sympathetic interest, the personal consecration, the earnestness, zeal, and adherence to duty manifested by the brotherhood of the church with which I am privileged to labor is an ever-increasing source of satisfaction and joy. I thank God for the Oregon church and all for which it stands.

I am thankful for our steadily growing Sunday school, its efficient superintendent, its earnest teachers, and for the many boys and girls, the majority of whom come from homes where the name of Christ is not honored, and for the degree of success that has attended our efforts to lead these younger ones closer to God.

I am thankful for our mid-week service of prayer, where men and women, yes, and children, too, of any religious persuasion or of none, may come and find spiritual uplift and comfort. I am thankful that so many, both from within and without our membership, are availing themselves of this period of communion with God.

I am thankful for our Berean society and the evidence it shows of increasing interest and usefulness in a broad way, and for the young people of the church who are so ably carrying on this work.

I am thankful for our beautiful and commodious church building with its adequate appointments and worshipful atmosphere. I am thankful that it is equipped for every form of Christian service, and that it has come to stand in Oregon and throughout Ogle County for all that is spiritually uplifting and ennobling in the community.

I am thankful for the attitude of friendliness that has been developed between the Church of God and the other churches of the city, and for the large and interested congregations that greet our messages each Sunday night.

I am especially thankful for the spirit of worship that pervades every department of the church—that the Church of God in Oregon is truly “a house of prayer” for all people.

For these and a hundred other blessings which I enjoy as pastor of this people I praise the name of our heavenly Father on this Thanksgiving Day.

EVERY-DAY THANKSGIVING

By Elsie Bradley

“It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord.”

TO THE true child of God every day should be a day of Thanksgiving. “Shew forth thy lovingkindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night.”—Psalm 92: 1, 2. Little do we realize that “every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.”—James 1:17. “In him we live, and move, and have our being.”—Acts 17:28. For without Him, we could do nothing. (John 15:5.)

Apart from His blessings there is no life. We are all depending upon Him, whether Christian or non-Christian. Daily all seek His tender mercies, and daily should all thank Him.

“Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation.”—Psa. 68:19. “Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.”—Psa. 95:2. “In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.”—1 Thess. 5:18. “Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.”—Eph. 5:20. “Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord.”—Psa. 150:6.

THANKFUL FOR DEPRESSION

GIBBON, the historian, said that if a man were allowed to choose the period of history during which to live that he would have chosen the period of the early Roman Empire. Then man had all that his heart could desire. There were two hundred years of peace in which to develop under the organizing power of Rome the great heritage of ancient Greece. In many ways he was right. That was a great period; and at its beginning it was the greatest. Shortly after it began the Prince of Peace came into the world for the first time.

But I thank the Lord that I am living in these perilous times of peace. They are filled with events of grandeur that happen so thick and fast that the mind is staggered in its attempts to follow them. And everything points to the soon coming of our Lord and Savior. We are inclined to feel sorry for ourselves because of the "depression." But we have the sure consolation of God's Word that should lift us above the depression and the stress of nations to see beyond. The "depression" seems to hamper the Lord's work through lack of funds, but I cannot greatly fear that the work of the Lord will suffer thereby, for "God wills it."

Strange as it may seem, then, at this Thanksgiving time I am most thankful to the Lord for the world-wide business depression. The only cure for depression is more of it. Hoping, therefore, to have more of it, I remain,

Yours in His saving name,
Norman John McLeod.

WE HAVE CAUSE FOR THANKSGIVING

---

---

I AM SURE all have seen cards, especially at Christmas time, showing the earth covered with snow, a frozen brook, leafless trees, perhaps icicles hanging on a house or fence; and yet a bird is depicted as singing amidst all this desolation! No ground in which to find food, no water visible, and its little coat of feathers seemingly slight protection against the rigors of winter, but is he downhearted?

Is not this a modern version of the old picture drawn in Habakkuk 3:17? "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls." But just read the next verse and hear the "singing bird." "Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." There is nothing very visible in the way of food in either case, but neither is there the faintest hint of "depression."

In spite of the "down in the mouth" attitude of many, how thankful we as a nation should be for abundant harvests of food of every description. I can only speak of this favored part of our land; but here bush, vine, tree, and earth have been loaded with good things to eat. Contrast our condition with any other nation on the earth and let us all "smile, smile, smile" and follow the advice of the Apostle Paul: "In every thing give thanks."

We as a church have great cause to be thankful for the faithful men and women connected with the National Bible Institution, who by word and pen have given their lives to spreading the gospel through the land; that believers are waking up to the fact that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh"; that each week baptisms are reported in THE RESTITUTION HERALD; that more and more students of prophecy are being found, even among so-called "orthodox" churches, who are declaring the coming of Jesus Christ as the only solution of present day difficulties. O yes, we as a nation, a church, and individuals have great cause for thanksgiving; so let us "lift up our heads and rejoice."

You know how you are drawn to persons who are pleasant and happy, who enjoy everything, who rejoice and give thanks by their very manner. It is the same with you. When you rejoice, persons are friendly and all are attracted to you, but when you complain, you drive away your friends and your good. Rejoice!—Author unknown.

FROM ONE NINETY YEARS OLD

THE date of universal Thanksgiving is at hand. It is well for us all in this time of depression to stop and consider what we have to be thankful for.

First of all we should be thankful for life and the comparative health that prolongs life.

Then we have THE RESTITUTION HERALD, so ably edited and published, coming to us weekly, heralding truths of the Bible.

To us, from our earliest memories, we recall the old Restitution, published at Plymouth, Indiana, and edited by Arthur Underwood. Among its writers were the Wilsons, H. V. Reed, S. A. Chaplin, and many others. Then came THE RESTITUTION HERALD, established by Brother S. J. Lindsay and others at Oregon, Illinois, in 1911.

Our thanksgiving goes out to a Divine Power that gave us all these means of intellectual improvement and knowledge of the eternal truths of the Bible, God's holy Word. May the able management of our present publication, others following, be continued until our Savior's coming and God's everlasting kingdom shall be fully established, and peace, honesty, and sobriety rule in all the earth.

Blessing on all doing and interested in this noble and meritorious work.

Yours in the blessed hope,
S. T. Shirley.

LET US THANK HIM

By Emma C. Railsback

“GIVE thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: his mercy endureth for ever.” The Psalmist uses this exhortation many times: it becomes a chorus in some of the Psalms. “Let the redeemed of the Lord say so.”

The members of the household of faith have great reason to give thanks unto the Lord in these days of rapidly fulfilling prophecies; for the Savior has said that when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. The beginning stage has already passed—many of the beginning signs are now history. Events which affect the final conflict of the nations are rapidly taking place before our eyes.

The great Apostle to the Gentiles has given us a very graphic word-picture of present day conditions, one that needs no retouching by modern artists. It is found in 2 Timothy 3. Men’s hearts are failing them for fear—the wisest statesmen can see nothing but chaos ahead—all the world is looking for a leader, a superman, one who can take the reins of government and set the nations in order. This superman will soon arise and the whole world will give him homage. The Scriptures term him “the man of sin.”

One sad feature of present indications is the lukewarmness of some believers who should be diligent workers in sounding out the gospel message while there is yet time. O, that the Lord would help us to arouse them from their lethargy! Jesus says they are poor and blind and naked and He will spew them out of His mouth.

It is sport, cards, golf, football, anything to keep their minds from God’s warnings and seeking first the kingdom of God.

The harvest is ripe, but the laborers are few. Let us give thanks unto Jehovah for the privilege of working in His vineyard. Let us thank Him on this annual holiday as never before, because the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. “Even so, come, Lord Jesus”—come quickly.

THANKFUL — BUT TO WHOM?

By M. W. Lyon

IT WAS a beautiful custom they had in ancient Israel of attributing to the Creator even the commonest blessings that came into their daily lives. When a child was born into the home, he was considered a gift from the Lord (Psa. 127:3; Gen. 33:5; 48:9; 1 Sam. 1:19). When they were kept safely from some peril, they did not pass it off as “luck”; the angel of the Lord was watching over them to protect from danger (Psa. 34:7). Success in war or business or personal endeavor was ascribed to the favor of the Almighty.

But today we attribute nearly everything to secondary causes. We thank and appreciate the human actors on the stage, but not the God behind the scenes. We think the flowers come from seeds, the rain and sunshine from the sky. But are not these only second causes? We hear a grateful patient say, “I have a marvelous doctor. His knowledge and skill saved my life.” Why not acknowledge with James (ch. 1:17) that “every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father”? If God forgot us as easily as we do Him, what miserable lives we should lead!

It is this very sin of creature-glorification that the Apostle condemns in Romans 1:18-21. Why should we be so shortsighted as to see only the natural causes of the experiences that come to us? Surely the great God of heaven, He who created and ordered the circumstances under which we live, is the One to be thanked by those who are His acknowledged creatures! And not alone for the apparent blessings do we owe Him thanksgiving, but also for the suffering and the crises that He permits, for only through these can opportunities arise for development of true character.

Out of these calamities which have overtaken so many of us we can wrest glorious victories. This depression has made people think about God. The nation’s great emergency is the church’s great opportunity. God help us to appreciate these times enough to strike while the iron is hot and point them to Him who alone is able to save.

NATIONAL THANKSGIVING

By Arlen Marsh

THE Thanksgiving season has come once more, and with it the countless expressions of praise which fill pulpit and press annually during November. To God praise rises from sincere hearts for the many grants He has made to the world; but almost never is mentioned one of the greatest of all boons—tolerant government.

Regardless of political preference, God has been remarkably good to the United States. Freedom of religion, of speech, of thought, of press are ours by the guarantee of the constitution itself. Panics and booms come and go, but through them all stands the benefit of a government which permits all men to worship as they will. Taxes are far less heavy than in other nations—no dole has taken fifty per cent of the gross income of any man in federal levies as it has in England. Pure foods, sanitation, the best educational and library systems in the world are ours because of the government God has given.

So, if for no other reason, we must indeed thank omnipotent Jehovah for His unprecedented kindness toward us and obey Paul’s neglected injunction to offer “first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, . . . for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.”—1 Timothy 2:1, 2.

“IN EVERY THING GIVE THANKS”

and aids things good and Christian and godly and is itself increased and enhanced as it spends itself in its own Thanks-Giving. It is as the life force within the seed—it gives its power to quicken the seed and cause it to grow and fruit and thus multiplies itself. How like the Savior's word, “He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it.”—Matthew 10:39.

It is quite the annual custom for Christian and non-Christian to observe a day of Thanksgiving. The primal and noble intent of the originators of the day was to set aside a day for the giving through worship of thanks to God for His wonderful providence and watch-care. But it is sad to realize that the population of America, which in the days of the Plymouth Rock Colony was one hundred per cent for worshiping God in thankfulness for His unnumbered blessings to man, is only in a very small per cent today devoted to worship. And, unless there be some unexpected catastrophe previously, there will likely be few more than one per cent of the people of the land that will give themselves in worship to God on Thursday, November 24. Instead, this national holiday for worship and religious thanksgiving will be largely given to the satisfying of the lust of the flesh.

How true God's Word is: “Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.” This is a statement of advance information which God put on the air nineteen centuries ago as characteristic of “the last days.” Other statements, many of them, bear like testimony that it is now the last days. Indeed it would seem that well nigh the whole world has revolted against God and turned to the wisdom of man. True, many, very many, have “a form (pretense) of godliness, but (oh how they deny!) the power thereof.” This rebellion against God and against His Son has turned the world into the most rapacious orgy of sin and moral, commercial, and political debauchery known to the history of man.

The navy of the Ships of State is violently plunging and tossing in the devastating storm which surpasses all record. While the crews of statesmen labor unceasingly to save their respective ships, many, oh so many, have gone down or are humanly hopeless of surviving. Never was there such an opportune moment for the church to witness for Christ. Never has a Thanksgiving Anniversary presented such an open door of service.

Only in Christ is there real hope. In Him there is no cause for fear. In this there is today genuine reason for Thankfulness and for Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving is the giving of thanks, not only by word of mouth, but in addition by the deed of life that is commensurate with one's position or station in life. True Thankfulness to God will bring out much of the hitherto hidden resources and will present them as Thank Offerings to the God of all love and to the only Savior of man.

Showing Christ to man and leading man to salvation in Christ is by far the greatest blessing that can be conveyed to one of God's creatures. It is the blessing which God (John 3:16) prized most.

The old world is able to, and usually does, feed and clothe its people. But the whole world using its every worldly resource to the last straw cannot save one single soul of man. Only Christ can do that, and only Christians have the will and sacrifice to provide ways and means to lead to Christ and to His saving grace.

Christians, we are thankful, aren't we? We will render Christian thanks, won't we? And in so doing, we will keep the name of our Savior uplifted high before our fellows, won't we?

In these days of intense world depression, during which so many have lost and suffered so much, ought not those who still retain and receive income—and there are numbers—see that they in thankfulness to God carry a share for the more unfortunate that the way of salvation may always be maintained?

Soon God is to take to Himself, through Christ, His “great power, and . . . reign.” It will be in the midst of conflict and distress even greater than that of today. All things are working to that conclusion. Then let us today be as will those around His throne (Rev. 11:17) at that time be: “Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty.”

THANKFULNESS

every day I will praise Him and try to realize that whatever may happen “neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.”

THANKFUL FOR MANY THINGS

“EVERY year,” writes Sister J. F. Richardson, Hudsonville, Michigan, “I think will probably be my last year as a subscriber to your valuable paper. I enjoy it more than I can tell. Many of its contributors I have met, and have heard speak on God's truth. Many to whom I have listened are now sleeping, but I recall their words of encouragement in times of lonely hours spent in my room alone with God, my Bible, and THE RESTITUTION HERALD. I greet its arrival as a dear friend. . . . The dear Lord blesses me abundantly in many ways, good health, vision, kind care, and such a beautiful world in which to live. Still I long for Christ to come to perfect it. My prayer is, ‘Come quickly.’”

KOKOMO ELECTIONS

THE senior Berean society at Kokomo, Indiana, held its annual business meeting at the home of Bro. D. G. Harvey, 907 S. Waugh St., on September 20. The following officers were elected: president, Charles Martin; vice president, Miss Edna Ebert; secretary, Edgar Harvey; corresponding secretary, Miss Bernice Bengé; treasurer, Miss Mary Whittaker; adviser, Deo Harvey; welfare committee, Miss Edna Ebert, chairman, Miss Bernice Bengé, Miss Ellen Prichard, Gerald Maroney. Edgar Harvey resigned in favor of Miss Ellen Prichard as secretary. Miss Bernice Bengé resigned, and Miss Helen Harvey was appointed to fill the office of corresponding secretary. The merit system was adopted, with the adviser in charge.

Helen Harvey, Cor. Sec.

TIDINGS FROM KOKOMO

THE senior Bereans of Kokomo met at the home of Bro. D. G. Harvey Friday, October 28, for their monthly class social. After the devotional with which we open all classes, Bro. Harvey read from Ecclesiastes 3:1-12 and 5:1-5, followed by sentence prayers by members of the class.

Bro. Charles Martin, president, then instructed the class as to "clues" for the Mystery Party. Bro. Martin seemed to think an object lesson on the state of the dead was in order, leading the class through our beautiful Crown Point Cemetery (Friday was a dark night). Aside from a few thrills, nothing occurred. The class being convinced that "the dead know not anything," it assembled at the home of Sr. Edna Ebert, where the remainder of the evening was spent in games of the Halloween season. The class thanks the social committee for its efforts.

BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

THE Brush Creek Berean society held its monthly social and business meeting at the home of Bro. and Sr. Sydney Magaw on the evening of Nov. 3, 1932. About ninety members and visitors gathered for the evening. We were glad and surprised to have with us from the Lawrenceville, Ohio, church, Mr. and Mrs. David Beck, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beck, Mrs. Arthur Bowser and daughter Barbara Ann, Mrs. Belle Hartman, Mr. Lamoil Finch, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Poole, Homer Overholser, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Barentine and Donald, Mrs. Mary Staley, Mrs. Edward Myers, and Miss Mayme Kauffman.

After a short business session the evening was given over to games and contests. Much merriment was provoked by these, especially by the unexpected appearance of Bro. and Sr. Ambrose Hoke and Sr. Helen Doll of Dayton. They were masked and dressed as folk of long ago, and there was much questioning about their identity. Refreshments were served later in the evening.

Mrs. Pauline Klepinger, Secretary.

CLEVELAND NEWS

THE Golden Rule Bereans, under the capable leadership of our new president, Ruth Tomlinson, are forging ahead this fall. On Friday, Oct. 21, we reached a new attendance record when 88 were present; and last Friday, Oct. 28, (the night after our Halloween social) we still maintained our high average with 67 attending. The adult class, under their splendid leader, Bro. Lyon, took the honors on both occasions, with an attendance of 30 and 26 respectively. All of our classes are growing in numbers and fervor. This fall our attendance has never been below 60, and we hope to reach the 100 mark soon.

In the absence of Bro. Hawkins (senior leader who has been ill) several members of the class have led the study of the lesson. While Bro. Lyon is visiting his family in the South, Sr. Salisbury and Bro. Conrad are leading the adult class. Sr. Salisbury had a very interesting lesson on "Purifying Hope."

We pray for God's continued guidance and blessing, not only on our Bereans, but on all those throughout the nation.

Eunice Hawkins, Secretary.

THE THANKFUL TWINS

FOR more than a month before Thanksgiving Miss Peters, teacher of the "True Blue" Sunday school class of which James and John were members, had been telling her boys how to have the happiest Thanksgiving they had ever had.

"Find some one with whom to share your good things, my dears," she said, "for happiness shared is doubled."

"Sure, we'll have some one to share our goodies with, Jim. Don't Uncle John and Aunt Amy come every Thanksgiving?" said young John on the way home one Sunday morning.

"Yes, and they share, too, don't you know, for they always bring us something grand from the city," laughed Jimmie.

But each boy knew deep down in his heart that was not the kind of sharing their teacher meant. Hadn't she told them that because of so many fathers being out of work this year, there would be more girls and boys than ever who would not only have no goodies but scarcely enough to fill that hollow spot which the twins scarcely knew existed?

"Maybe we can find some one who won't have any Thanksgiving and take them part of ours," said John; "there's always so much left anyway."

"Yes, maybe," said Jimmie absent-mindedly.

The more they thought about it the more they realized that if they did that, they wouldn't be giving anything really, for they would still have all they could wish for themselves.

Then one chilly Sunday Miss Peters told them that she knew of a little family of four, with no father at all, one, a little boy of their own age who couldn't run or play as they did: "And they won't have any Thanksgiving at all unless some of us are really and truly thankful," she ended.

Two thoughtful little boys on the way home wondered what they could do to show that they were thankful that they could run and play and that they had nice warm homes and plenty to eat—something different than merely taking part of their own feast to some one else. And the more they thought of it the more they wanted to do something for the little boy who couldn't play ball or do any of the things Jimmie and John did every day of their lives. Bursting into the room that Sunday afternoon, almost in one breath they told Mother of their teacher's talks.

"How would it be, boys, to take them something of all our Thanksgiving goodies just before we sit down to dinner?" questioned Mother.

"No," exclaimed John, "that wouldn't really be giving anything, for we'd still have plenty ourselves."

"Yes, that's true boys," pondered Mother. "We'll have to think of another plan."

And so they ran out to play but underneath was always the thought of the little boy who sat alone day by day. During a game of run, sheep, run, the twins found themselves in a vacant lot facing a shabby little home. In the window sat a boy of their own age, excitedly waving his hands, a smile on his thin face.

"Look at that boy! Why doesn't he come out and play?" said one of the boys.

"Oh, he's the one teacher told us about whose father is dead, and he can't play because he's crippled, and he won't have any Thanksgiving either," said John in one breath.

The thought of him staid with the twins all the way home, and Jimmie said, "He's a good sport, isn't he?"

"Let's do it," said John.

"All right," said Jimmie, each thinking the same thoughts.

They could hardly wait to get home to unfold their plan to Mother, for during the week past they had discussed it, wondering if they would "have the nerve."

"Mother, we're going to have just an ordinary dinner on Thanksgiving Day, if you and Father won't mind," burst from Jimmie.

"And we'll take our whole feast to the little crippled boy the night before," chimed in John.

"That'll be just fine, boys, and of course we won't mind and neither will Uncle John or Aunt Amy, I'm sure."

With Mother's help the provisions were all bought and neatly packed in two baskets, and when it was quite dark on Wednesday night Father and the twins drove over and deposited the baskets on the porch. Giving a loud knock they slipped off the porch into the darkness, but where they could watch the happiness on the face of the little boy who couldn't run to the door, as he saw the goodies unpacked before his unbelieving eyes.

And over their simple Thanksgiving dinner, Father thanked the heavenly Father for his thankful twins.

STEWARDSHIP OF LIFE

Exodus 3:1-12; Isaiah 6:1-8; Matthew 25:1-46; Mark 1:16-20; Acts 26:12-19;
1 Corinthians 9:17-27.

Devotional Reading: Matthew 6:28-34

GOLDEN TEXT

First gave their own selves to the Lord.—2 Corinthians 8:5.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Stewardship of Life.

Basic Truth: "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, well-pleasing to God—your rational religious service."—Romans 12:1, Diag.

I. Call to Stewardship. (Ex. 3:1-12; Isa. 6:1-8; Mark 1:16-20.) The call to stewardship comes in various ways. Moses received his call to become steward over Israel, the "peculiar treasure" of the Lord (Ex. 19:5), from the midst of the burning bush. Isaiah was called to the same stewardship by the Lord's voice and the purging of his sins by a coal of fire. Peter, Andrew, James, and John were made stewards of Jesus Christ by a personal commission directly from Him. While the call reaches the individual by various channels, it is always a call from the Lord to serve Him by caring for His people. We, too, are called to the stewardship of the truth of God by the gospel that we "should shew forth the praises of him who hath called (us) out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9). We are the custodians of the gospel.

II. Obligations of Stewardship. (Matt. 25:1-46; 1 Cor. 9:16-27; Acts 26:19.) A heavy responsibility rests upon the steward of God. He must be energetic, not slothful (Matt. 25:26), "blameless" (Tit. 1:7) in the eyes of the world as well as of the church (1 Tim. 3:7), self-sacrificing and a servant of all (1 Cor. 9:19). Regardless of the sacrifice it required, Paul "was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision" by which he was made a steward of the gospel of Christ, for it was an obligation laid upon him which he could not avoid (1 Cor. 9:16).

III. Faithfulness in Stewardship. Paul looked upon himself as a steward "of the mysteries of God," and affirmed that "it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful" (1 Cor. 4:1, 2). Jesus makes future reward contingent upon the steward's faithfulness (Luke 12:42). His parables recorded in Matthew the 25th chapter are given to emphasize the importance of faithfulness in the performance of present duties. Paul's faithfulness was exemplified throughout his entire life following his conversion.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

The Call: Man was created for the pleasure and glory of God (Rev. 4:11). "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—1 Cor. 10:31. That man might accomplish this great task of doing everything to the glory of God, the Father has a very comprehensive and definite program or plan in which He has a work for every person. To perform our portion of the work assigned does not mean that we must be foreign missionaries, evangelists, or ministers, but we must do the jobs at hand and answer immediately the call of the Father with the words, "Here am I". Life does not consist in the abundance of things which we possess, but in the way we redeem the time and use our life. It is possible to serve God every day in every place. Life is a precious thing. It is lived just once. Every year, month, week, day, hour, and minute wasted can never be recovered or undone. In our lesson today we have the four apostles accepting the call of Christ. There was no hesitancy on their part; they left their nets immediately.

The Call

- is for service;
- is better obeyed than spurned;
- is to every man.

A Good Witness: Paul was called as a minister to witness to the great things which Christ had done, to open the eyes of the blind, and to turn people from darkness to light. He was in no wise disobedient. Whether in jail, before a court, shipwrecked on an island, or in a lawful and quiet assemblage he witnessed a good confession. The Lord had saved him, and to the Lord he gave the best that he had. He never shunned, regardless of circumstance or condition, to declare the whole counsel of God.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"First they gave their own selves to the Lord."—2 Corinthians 8:5.

Isaiah, like the ones of our text, when the call came answered with, "Here am I, send me". Each of the apostles gave their all to follow the Christ. Paul, too, left all to do the work of the Master. These gave willingly to serve and follow the One who gave His life for mankind. What a splendid example this is to first give ourselves to the Lord. If we do this then all that we have will be dedicated to His service.

Paul tells his brethren that, "whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God". If we first give ourselves to God, then I am sure we will try to please Him and try to do all things to redound to His glory and honor.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Living as God's Stewards

From the words of Jesus it is evident that He considers us as stewards of God, but we might ask, Stewards over what? Jesus tells us in Luke 12:42, that we are stewards over His household to administer to the needs of His people with a view to keep all in readiness for His return. Under these conditions each of us is charged with a great responsibility. This charge seems to include the warning of those out of Christ that He will soon return.

Paul, in 1 Corinthians 4, reveals that we are stewards of the great mystery, which he reveals to be Gentile participation in the promises made to Israel. Thus we are stewards of the gospel to the Gentiles and must preach salvation to them. Another responsibility we cannot dodge! Peter (1 Peter 4:10) makes us stewards of the grace or love of God. We must administer that love to the world. We must teach by example. (Read 1 Cor. 13.) We are also stewards over the members of our own bodies and must use them to God's glory, for they are Christ's. Read 1 Corinthians 6:15-18.

"Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God."—Romans 6:13.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Serving God Where We Are

When we are in the youth time of life we are very apt to think that there is nothing that we can do to serve God; we must wait until we are grown. But I wonder if that is true. Let us look at some Bible characters and see what they did. The young lad Samuel comes to mind first. In 1 Samuel 2 and 3, we read that his mother lent him to the Lord and he assisted Eli, the aged priest, with his duties in the temple. But we cannot all leave home and assist some great leader. Well, we have David, who was out tending his father's sheep when Samuel came to anoint him to be king over a great people. After the ceremony he returned to his humble task, keeping meanwhile his faith in God. And we read that when Saul wanted someone who could play soothing music, David, "which is with the sheep" was selected, for "the Lord is with him". Then we have the little maid who served the wife of the great Assyrian general. She was an Israelite captive who was taken during a war away from her own people and her own country. But she did not forget the God she had been taught to worship from childhood. How many of you know the story and where it is found? And how many of you can tell of a youth who served God faithfully by warning a great apostle of danger to his life so that he could flee and save himself? Then, of course, we have the greatest example of all—Jesus our Savior, who when only a boy of twelve realized that He must be about His Father's business.

As soon as we reach the age when we realize that God requires us to do certain things for Him, then we should begin to render that service, whether it is in the big things that people notice or the small that no one knows about but ourselves, the one for whom we do them, and God.—M. G.

The annual meeting of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith was held on Sept. 18, 1932. The meeting opened with prayer by Bro. Parker. The secretary's report was read and accepted. The treasurer's report was accepted. Election of officers resulted as follows: deaconesses, Srs. Parker and Bengé; trustees, Bros. Maroney, Chase, and Prichard; secretary, Sr. B. Bengé; treasurer, Sr. Martha Parker.

Motion was made and carried to appoint committee to consider articles of faith. A committee consisting of Bros. B. Maroney, C. Martin, and O. J. Parker was appointed. It was also decided to continue both the talks by our elders and the Berean sermonettes, which are in charge of Bros. C. Martin and R. Harvey.

NORTH SALEM CHURCH

A new roof now dons the North Salem church, home of the Indiana Bible School. It consists of "A" grade wood shingles, sixteen squares, and was completed at a cash cost of $55.00. This will make the place safe from storms from without for some time to come.

We wish to thank the following persons who so willingly assisted us in the labor of putting it on. Messrs. Warner and his hired man from Bremen; Hatten, A. Guge, and Smead from Burr Oak; R. Stilson, and E. Stilson from South Bend; and J. Houser of Lakeville.

Now if any in the state wish to assist by a contribution toward the expense, send it to Bro. Willis Roose, Napanee, Ind., or hand to Bro. Anderson who will turn it over to the treasurer. It will be appreciated. Thanks.

F. A. Stilson, President.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK

The Blessed Hope Church of God at Niagara Falls held its all-day meeting on Sunday, October 30. There were 38 present at Sunday school, Bro. Randall being the teacher.

At eleven o'clock the church was filled—the largest number we have ever had at a morning service for many years. The meeting was opened by singing, after which Bro. Moore, the first elder, offered prayer. This was followed by the singing of a duet by the two white-haired elders, Bros. Moore and Rennard. Although they have been members of the church for the past thirty-six years it is the first time they have ever sung together.

In introducing the next special feature, Bro. Randall said, "We have a little lady with us this morning, a great friend of mine. She is going to sing for us and I now take great pleasure in calling upon Shirley Sullivan." She came forward and sang in a sweet, clear voice, "In Days of Youth." This little girl is only eight years of age and has been singing solos since she was four years old.

Bro. Randall then announced his text, "Buy the truth and sell it not." "I am not going to preach on doctrine this morning," said the pastor, "but rather I am going to give you some good advice. If you want to know the truth I would urge you to consult God's Word, not man's word." He warned us against sowing discord among the brethren by false doctrines and quoted Proverbs 6:16-19 (especially verse 19).

After the morning service came to a close, an invitation was given to all present to stay for dinner. During the week Bros. Randall and Culp had built two large folding tables. These were soon erected and loaded to the limit with a very tempting spread. When all appetites were appeased the tables were folded up and put aside until needed again.

The afternoon service was after the same order as that of the morning. We were sorry that some had to leave in the interim on account of distance but when the meeting was called others had come from the surrounding territory and we again had a full house. The special numbers for this service were: First, the singing of an anthem by the Fonthill church choir, Sr. Blanche Page of Fonthill presiding at the piano. (We can always depend on these people to help us—they never refuse, and they travel fifteen miles to do it.) The Moore brothers quartette, consisting of James, Alfred, Franklin, and William, sang that old and inspiring hymn, "Rock of Ages." The pastor then announced that his subject would be, "Resurrection"—not a new subject, but the beautiful thoughts that he brought out relative thereto were indeed new to us, especially his explanation of the fifth chapter of John's gospel where the two classes are spoken of in verses 24 to 28. He made it very plain that if Christ is not risen all preaching is vain; we are yet in our sins; we have no hope; we have lost our Christ. Following the singing of a hymn, communion was observed. 52 people partook of the emblems. After singing one verse of "Just as I Am" the gathering was dismissed. Again an invitation was extended to all to stay in the church and have supper with us.

The final meeting of the day was called at seven-fifteen with a rousing fifteen-minute song service. The pastor then called upon the second elder for prayer. The special singing for this service was as follows: Bro. Holland of Thorold, Ont., favored us with a solo, which was much appreciated. The next number was a quartette composed of James and William Moore and the two Gardiner sisters of Lancaster. They sang, "No Night There." The last discourse by Bro. Randall was, "Keep Awake." Like all the other lectures of the day this one was most interesting. In closing he sounded the warning: "Don't go to sleep, for the coming of Christ is at hand. But you, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. Again I say, 'Keep awake.'" Thus ended one of the best meetings we have had for years. The total number of people attending was approximately three hundred thirty.

This report would not be complete without sounding a word of praise to our faithful Bereans who worked so hard to help Bro. Culp clean the church; also for the beautiful array of cut flowers that made it look so attractive. They saw to it that everyone had enough to eat.

Also thanks are due to Sr. Sullivan for our special program of singing.

G. T. Rennard.

SAMUEL OSBORN

To Mr. and Mrs. George M. and Anna Osborn of Delaware County, Ohio, on January 18, 1840, was born their sixth child, Samuel. When he was but six weeks old, the parents with their family moved to Starke County, Indiana, near Eagle Lake. At that time there were but five white families in Starke County. When their son Samuel was but four years of age, both parents were stricken by death. This sad bereavement left Samuel in the care of his elder brother, William.

Mr. Osborn served in the Civil War in Company H, Indiana Volunteers, receiving honorable discharge at the war's close. Thereafter, until his death he was a faithful member of Henry Speyer Marmont Post of the G. A. R.

Shortly before his marriage on April 18, 1867, to Henrietta L. Rice, he purchased a farm northwest of Culver, in Starke County. Here a home was established, and a family of four children was born; Orren, who died on March 31, 1873, at the age of four; Olive A., who died at the age of fifty-one on July 18, 1922; Cora R. Osborn-Fetters, who died at the age of thirty-eight, on November 22, 1911, leaving three children—Lester, Earl, and Grace Fetters-Sanders, all of whom survive; and Carrie D. Osborn-Shearer, wife of James Shearer. This marriage was rudely shattered by the death of the loved wife and mother on March 22, 1883.

Bro. Osborn was baptized into the name of Christ, Bro. Nathan Geiselman, now living in Florida, officiating, on January 26, 1890. His three daughters followed later. He became a member of the Church of God and ever after manifested an earnest effort to be true to his Lord.

On January 18, 1900, Bro. Osborn was married to Rebecca McDonald-Alleman. In March of the same year they moved to a newly purchased home in Culver. Here another happy home was developed. But again death thrust in its withering hand: first, his daughter Cora was smitten in 1911; Sr. Osborn, wife and homemaker, was stricken in April, 1913; his daughter Olive, in 1922; and lastly, on October 29, 1932, Bro. Samuel Osborn himself, after 92 years, 9 months, and 11 days of even, upright, and exemplary living.

In the death of Samuel Osborn Starke County lost not only one of its earliest pioneers, but also a man who had been tested and tried and always found loyal and true to the higher ideals of righteousness and truth. He identified himself with those who labored for temperance, opposing liquor's travesties to the last. In his death Christianity has lost a staunch advocate, and the Church of God has lost one who was active as Sunday school superintendent, elder, and worker until growing age prohibited longer responsibility and who even until death was always interested. He was present at church Sunday morning, Oct. 2, only three weeks before his death.

Bro. Osborn is survived by one daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. James Shearer, and their two children, Samuel H. and Mildred F.; by five grandchildren—the three others being Lester, Earl, and Grace Fetters, mentioned above; by four great-grandchildren; by a number of nephews and nieces unto the second and third generations, to all of whom he was affectionately known as "Uncle Sam," as also by a large number of acquaintances to whom he was always a sympathizing friend and helper.

His people sorrow not as those who have no hope, for Bro. Osborn lived a life which gives them hope that he shall be among those who will be called by Christ at the first and better resurrection. Indeed, it was with this hope that he lived to the last: and it was with this hope that he was laid to rest in the family plot in the North Union Cemetery following services attended by many.

Resurrection! Wondrous word! It is the word of Christ who gave His life unto death, but who also said, "I am the resurrection and the life."

MOSES—THE GREAT LAW-GIVER

It is well for all students of Scripture to familiarize themselves with the events of Moses' life as the leader and prophet of Israel. These events point out the manner in which faith and obedience were rewarded and unbelief and disobedience punished.

The Bible presents no character more diversified in its elements of interest or richer in its typical value than that of the hero of Israel's wanderings in the wilderness.

According to the account given by Stephen in the seventh chapter of Acts, the life of Moses falls naturally into three major divisions or periods of forty years each. The first was spent in the court of Egypt, acquiring the worldly wisdom and learning of that highly cultivated people. (Acts 7:22.) Throughout the second period Moses was engaged as a shepherd in the land of Midian, a task which provided him with ample opportunity for meditation and drawing near to God.

Eighty years, two-thirds of his entire life, were thus devoted to the education of the great law-giver, in preparing him for the service he was afterward to render to God and to his people. Knowledge, experience, faith, and the judgment and spiritual poise which years alone can bring equipped Moses with those essential qualities of leadership which contributed to his conspicuous success.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Sr. Jessie Wilson asks that we inform her friends that her present address is 1700 E. Twentieth St., Oakland, Calif.

Sr. Mary A. Woodward is slowly regaining her strength. She says she feels that the prayers of little Billie Mick, who is about half-past-four, are being answered. He has been praying every night, "Make Sr. Woodward well for Jesus' sake. Amen."

The secretary of the N. B. I. desires to thank those who have so generously contributed to the Thanksgiving Offering and to assure them that the money reached us in a time of pressing need. May God bless you all.

With much sorrow we learn of the death of Sr. T. A. Weldon of Thorold, Ont. Sr. Weldon was a woman of more than usual devotion to the Lord and His work. She was a faithful attendant and generous supporter of the activities of the Church of God at Fonthill, and her passing is mourned by many. May God's comforting arms be extended around Bro. Weldon and Bro. and Sr. Will Holland in their grief. Full particulars will follow.

"An Earnest Plea" by "an unnamed disciple" which appears on the last page of this issue was written by a consecrated young worker in the field who feels deeply the sacred nature of the work he is doing. He is a firm believer in prayer and is convinced that if the church will appeal to God unitedly with unflinching faith the Father will both hear and heed. The first Sunday of December has been suggested as a time in which the ministers everywhere might present the needs of the general work to their congregations and urge all who can to come to its support. More regarding this later.

Sr. Abbie H. Fiske of Baltimore, Md., making a Thanksgiving Offering, says, "It is only a little, but given with a very willing and cheerful heart in the service of our Lord." It is these "willing and cheerful" givers of small amounts that make the work of the N. B. I. possible.

Bro. J. G. Haupt, Natchitoches, La., continues to spread the truth throughout his section of the South by publishing articles on important biblical subjects in the local papers. Recently he has been presenting some enlightening facts concerning the psalms of David.

The editorial staff appreciates deeply the quick cooperation of our ministers in responding to our appeal for Thanksgiving articles and also all other communications it has received.

Sr. Elnora Waldo of Blackwell, Okla., in sending a Thanksgiving offering to the N. B. I. says, "The Herald always brings just the help and encouragement that I need, and usually I find one or more articles that seem to have been written especially for my benefit. Our heavenly Father has so many ways of helping us."

Without venturing to pass on the merits of such entertainments, the N. B. I. board recently instructed the editor to omit from reports of church activities hereafter references to games and parties for two reasons: first, because such efforts are not of sufficient general interest to justify their insertion in our over-crowded news columns; and, second, because these reports result in serious criticism being directed against The Herald which requires considerable correspondence to adjust, and thus adds to the expense of the office. We feel our friends will understand our position in this matter.

AN EARNEST PLEA

By an Unnamed Disciple

OUR faithful manager, Brother L. E. Conner, recently made a plea in THE RESTITUTION HERALD to our brotherhood for financial assistance in carrying on the work of the National Bible Institution. I need not repeat that our Institution is in dire need of this assistance and that it must come soon.

I wish to make a more urgent entreaty to every god-fearing brother and sister that you pray to the heavenly Father, our Helper and our Strength, for that assistance which we need to carry on His work. If we do not have faith enough to ask God for the things we need, He will certainly not allow His business to remain in the hands of an unfaithful people, namely, the Church of God. "Let not that man," who does not ask with faith or who asks not at all, "think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord."—James 1:7.

We as a people have forgotten that faithful promise given by our Savior: "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matthew 21:22. You say there are strings tied to this, and truly you say; but they do not have knots which we cannot untie. These are the things which might bother us: first, we must pray in accordance with God's will; then we must forgive if we are not at peace with all men, lest we have sin in our hearts; and last we must have faith and really believe that we shall receive. God will do the rest. Dare we doubt?

There is no time of depression so severe that God will lose ground in His work. Sin is not so devastating that it will change God's plans. The point is this: Are we going to be the faithful, praying, devoted people that God can use in His work, or will sin and hard times get the better of us just because we have ceased to look to our Father and have forgotten to pray for the things we earnestly desire in furthering the gospel and glorifying His holy name?

Brethren, something must be done very soon. If you have nothing to give to this work, give part of that which you need for yourself; and if you do it with faith, God will see that you have not robbed yourself of anything. God will "not despise." He will not mislead His children. He is a God of love. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?"—Matthew 7:11.

And if you have not even enough for yourself, you can pour out your spirit in prayer and supplication to the Lord, entreating Him to provide a way for the work of the National Bible Institution to continue. I know that our church paper has done very much for me and I am sure there are many who have no other spiritual fellowship with others of our precious faith. Pray for the work to continue. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—James 5:16.

Some one says, "What good will prayer do? We cannot change God. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever." Certainly, dear Brother, but prayer changes you so that God can entrust you with the things He has long been waiting to give you. Many times I have tried to do things that I knew were God's will; but I always failed until I had assured Him and myself that it was to be for His glory and honor, not for me to glory in anything except in serving God more.

It is the Lord's will that the gospel is still to be preached to all people. The National Bible Institution is trying to carry on that noble work, but obstacles are rising in its path. We, the supporters of this work, are helpless if we try to overcome these barriers in our own puny weakness. It is time we were placing our trust in the heavenly Father.

Let us bow our knees before God in our closet, having forgiven our brother, and earnestly ask God to give us liberal hearts, knowing that He will bless us according to the willingness with which we give. May we all pray that the work will continue and the glory and honor be to Thee, our most gracious heavenly Father.

THE THANKFUL SPIRIT

By Lucille Le Crone

THANKSGIVING DAY is a purely American holiday. Every American man, woman, and child is familiar with the story of the origin of this festival. For most people it has come to mean just that—a festival and feast, nothing more. They have lost the true spirit of the day and have substituted in its stead something quite foreign to the original idea and motive of their forefathers on that first Thanksgiving Day.

The true spirit of Thanksgiving needs no President's proclamation to urge that a day be set aside for giving of thanks to God. The true spirit is not acquired in one or two days; it must grow and develop in one. The true spirit is not manifest only one day out of three hundred sixty-five and forgotten the other three hundred sixty-four.

In order for Thanksgiving Day to be successful we must cultivate the thankful habit every day of the year and every hour of the day. If three hundred sixty-four days a year we go about saying, "Just my luck! I never get a break! Just what I expected! Some people were born lucky!" and similar expressions which we hear every day, we certainly shall not find the real joy that is in Thanksgiving.

When we can look upon each event in our lives, no matter how adverse it may be, and say, "It might have been worse; I'm thankful it wasn't," then I believe we will have found the key to a successful Thanksgiving Day.

Pick out the blessings in the days as they come along and thank God for them then and there. "Count your many blessings, name them one by one; and it will surprise you what the Lord hath done." Cultivate the thankful spirit and make every day a thanksgiving day.

THE BIBLE AND PROGRESS

The following address was delivered by Woodrow Wilson at Denver, on the tri-centenary of the King James Bible, which occurred a year before his first election to the presidency of the United States. It is to be hoped that our new president-elect will enter upon his great office with as deep an appreciation of the spiritual needs of our people and as fervent a love of the Holy Scriptures as did the one who gave voice to the sentiments as here expressed. — Editor.

I COME here tonight to speak on the Bible as the Book of the people, not the Book of the minister of the gospel, not the special Book of the priest from which to set forth some occult, unknown doctrine withheld from the common understanding of men, but a great Book of revelation—the people's Book of revelation; for it seems to me that the Bible has revealed the people to themselves. I wonder how many persons in this great audience realize the significance for English-speaking peoples of the translation of the Bible into the English tongue. Up to the time of the translation of the Bible into English, it was a Book for long ages withheld from the perusal of the peoples of other languages and of other tongues, and not a little of the history of liberty lies in the circumstance that the moving sentences of this Book were made familiar to the ears and the understanding of those peoples who have led mankind in exhibiting the forms of government and the impulses of reform which have made for freedom and for self-government among mankind.

For this is a Book which reveals men unto themselves, not as creatures in bondage, not as men under human authority, not as those bidden to take counsel and command of any human source. It reveals every man to himself as a distinct moral agent, responsible not to men, not even to those men whom he has put over him in authority, but responsible through his own conscience to his Lord and Maker. Whenever a man sees this vision, he stands up a free man, whatever may be the government under which he lives, if he sees beyond the circumstances of his own life.

Our present life is a very imperfect and disappointing thing. We do not judge our own conduct in the privacy of our own closets by the standard of expediency by which we are daily and hourly governed. We know that there is a standard set for us in the heavens, a standard revealed to us in this Book which is the fixed and eternal standard by which we judge ourselves; and as we read this Book, it seems to us that the pages of our own hearts are laid open before us for our own perusal. This is the people's Book of revelation, revelation of themselves not alone, but revelation of life and of peace. You know that human life is a constant struggle. For a man who has lost the sense of struggle, life has ceased.

A man has found himself when he has found his relation to the rest of the universe, and here is the Book in which those relations are set forth. And so when you see a man going along the highway of life with his gaze lifted above the road, lifted to the sloping ways in front of him, then be careful of that man and get out of his way. He knows the kingdom for which he is bound. He has seen the revelations of his relation to God and his Maker, and therefore he has seen his responsibility in the world. This is the revelation of life and peace. I do not know that peace lies in constant accommodation. I was once asked if I would take part in a great peace conference, and I said, "Yes, if I may speak in favor of war"—not the war which we seek to avoid, not the senseless and useless and passionate shedding of human blood, but the only war that brings peace, the war with human passions and the war with human wrong—the war which is that untiring and unending process of reform from which no man can refrain and get peace.

No man can sit down and withhold his hands from the warfare against wrong and get peace out of his acquiescence. The most solid and satisfactory peace is that which comes from this constant spiritual warfare, and there are times in the history of nations when they must take up the crude instruments of bloodshed in order to vindicate spiritual conceptions. For liberty is a spiritual conception; and when men take up arms to set other men free, there is something sacred and holy in the warfare. And not cry, "Peace," so long as there is sin and wrong in the world. And this great Book does not teach any doctrine of peace

A Prayer

O GOD, our Father, give me clean hands, clean words, and clean thoughts; help me to stand for the hard right against the easy wrong; save me from habits that harm; teach me to work as hard and play as fair in Thy sight alone as if all the world saw; forgive me when I am unkind; and help me to forgive others who are unkind to me; keep me ready to help others at some cost to myself; send me chances to do a little good every day and to grow more like Christ. Amen.—Selected.

Learning to Pray

OF ALL the rich heritage of hope that faith brings to us through the inspired Word, nothing is more precious to him who understands its value than the privilege of prayer. The vision we catch of the glorious Age to Come—the King in all His beauty, the saved ones rejoicing in His presence for evermore, the peace and the security we know will be ours in "the land that is fairer than day"—all these expected blessings of the future cannot bring to our aching hearts today so much of solace and peace and assurance as does the simple knowledge that God hears and answers prayer!

It is "an ever present help" we need to keep us safe and steadfast as we wait and watch and pray. And that is what prayer provides—"an ever present help in trouble." No doubt that is the reason that the Master said that we should "watch and pray" as we listen for the coming of His feet.

"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" in every way, but especially in bringing him into close and confident relationship to God. Prayer makes a man feel the reality and the nearness of the eternal Father, "though he be not very far from every one of us" at any time.

"The prayer of faith shall save the sick" either of body or mind, and "the Lord shall raise him up" from his despondency and from his fear at the present time and literally from the grave to life everlasting "at the last day." Such are among the glorious results and accomplishments of prayer.

And yet how few Christians enjoy this, their greatest privilege. Perhaps it is because they do not know how to pray; their spiritual education may have been neglected along this line. It is even possible that those who brought them into the truth did not know how to pray, did not themselves know the true meaning and value of prayer. To such teachers, however learned they may be along other biblical lines, faith means little more than the rudiments of doctrinal truth which must be believed before baptism. They do not recognize the miraculous change that is wrought in heart and mind and motive when the "power of God" actually lays hold upon a man through the gospel.

"Men of every race and nation" have been created of one blood, "that they should seek after the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him." If this innate longing for God causes the "untutored savage" to stretch forth his hand in the darkness, seeking after God, surely the regenerated heart of the one who has been made a "new creature in Christ Jesus" by the power of the gospel will long with great intensity to reach out into the infinite and touch the hand that saves!

And that reaching out after God is prayer!

"But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering," says the inspired writer as he lays down the first principle of effectual prayer. When the disciples felt their lack of faith they prayed! "Increase our faith!" Prayer itself meets the first problem we face in calling upon God.

We have said that perhaps many did not pray because they did not know how to do so; they had never been taught how to do it. Here again prayer overcomes the lack of knowledge. "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." The disciples, having observed the joy the followers of John derived from prayer, cried unto the Master, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples." And the Lord granted their desire. Surely He will do as much for us if we ask Him!

And that simple confident calling upon God is prayer!

Where and when shall we pray? Again the Bible, the first and greatest of all prayer books, provides the answer. Paul, identifying himself as "a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity," speaking by inspiration, says, "I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting." Concerning the proper time for prayer he says, "Pray without ceasing," and, "In every thing give thanks."

THINGS THAT ABIDE

By Mary A. Gesin

A TRIPLE-ARCHED doorway, we are told, leads into the vast recesses of the beautiful cathedral of Milan. Above the left archway are inscribed the words, "All that pleases is but for a moment." Over the right one may read, "All which troubles is but for a moment." And the center panel bears these words of profoundest wisdom, "That only is important which is eternal."

A few moments of meditation given to the three inscriptions may be of interest to us. Perhaps we will find a flaw in their reasoning; but if we conclude that they are true, the result will doubtless be of value in our lives. In our search for truth let us go to the Fountainhead of all truth, whose words are found in the Book of books, for final proof.

"All that pleases is but for a moment." We need but to look upon our own individual lives, and we will grant that this statement is conformable to the actual condition of things. A circumstance which gave us the utmost pleasure a few short months or years past is taken from us and—we pine away and die? Ah, no, we keep right on living; endeavoring to find another condition that will compensate in some measure for the one we must forego. And thus we continue to adjust ourselves to the ever-changing vicissitudes of life and to weigh its relative values.

But what do the inspired writers say about the fleeting character of pleasure? James, the practical, says, "The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth," comparing the beautiful things of nature which bring us so much pleasure to the brevity of life itself.

Peter tells us (in his first epistle, 1:24) that all flesh is as grass and all the glory of man just as fleeting. And we are all familiar with the words that the wise man left for our instruction, he who had devoted many years of his life and much wealth to the securing of things that gratify the senses. In the end he termed them all vanity. Surely he who had experienced life to the full was capable of judging the true value of what it offered!

"All which troubles is but for a moment." How much of comfort we might derive from these eight simple words just at the present time if we could only appreciate their truth. The little troubles of life loom large and forbidding before us. We fear unseen evils more than those we actually encounter. And when the misunderstandings of life are cleared away, how foolish we feel for having entertained them at all!

What does the omniscient One reveal to us on this very matter? David, who gives us light on so many of the little, as well as the big, problems of life, has much to tell us which we would do well to heed. He says in one of his psalms, "Fret not thyself because of evil doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall soon be cut down"; but we need not quote further, for all of you are familiar with his words.

Paul, that valiant soldier for his Lord, tells us that though "we are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken, cast down, but not destroyed." Surely, He who in every trial upheld the beloved Apostle will also uphold us if we are faithful! You who are distraught by conditions surrounding you and with which you feel so unable to cope, take courage from his words.

Read this entire passage (2 Corinthians 4) carefully. See how gloriously he pens the final words: "For which cause we faint not . . . for our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory." He who endured every pain and privation imaginable for the sake of the cause to which he gave up his life, reckoned "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Do we?

"That only is important which is eternal" calls to us from the center arch of this beautiful entrance. Do we believe it? What are some of the things that are eternal? Let us see.

Among the tangible things that are eternal we find the earth itself. For David tells (Continued on Page 8)

THE QUIET LAND

Stillness midst the ever-changing,
 Lord, my rest art Thou;
 So for me has dawned the morning,
 God's eternal NOW.
 Now for me the day unsetting,
 Now the song begun,
 Now, the deep surpassing glory,
 Brighter than the sun.
 Hail, all hail! thou peaceful country
 Of eternal calm;
 Summer land of milk and honey,
 Where the streams are balm.
 There the Lord my Shepherd leads me,
 Wheresoc'er He will;
 In the fresh green pastures feeds me,
 By the waters still.
 Well I know them, those still waters!
 Peace and rest at last;
 In their depths the quiet heavens
 Tell the storms are past,
 Nought to mar the picture fair,
 Of the glory resting there.

SIMPLICITY

By George B. Alldridge

"But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."—2 Corinthians 11:3.

WHEN we meet upon each "first day" of the week, the simplicity of our services always impresses my mind; and I feel refreshed as I realize that here is one place where in simplicity and truth I can worship God—and not after the vain traditions of men.

In my travels as a young man I gazed upon some of the most beautiful works of architecture erected by the world's greatest geniuses endeavoring to express their understanding of God and inside listened to and saw how vain man's understanding is of what God requires of His children in their worship of Him.

Many years ago I stood upon Mars' Hill, where Paul preached that memorable sermon recorded in Acts 17:22-31, so unique in its completeness regarding God's plan in dealing with the human race from its creation and fall until its restoration and full fellowship with God in the "Ages to Come."

After reading some work on science or on ecclesiastical history, I am sure that if my faith relied upon my belief and trust in God according to their testimonies, it would indeed be founded upon sand; but I thank God that there is a Source open to me whereby I may acquire knowledge that is founded upon a rock and that has withstood assaults of every form and power known to man.

Jesus is preeminently, in His choice of words to express His meaning, the most simple of all men. So when my mind is weary, I take up my Bible and begin to read something that He said. How easily I can follow Him! The terms he uses and also the illustrations drawn from things my simple mind readily understands are very beautiful.

Take the resurrection of the dead. As soon as we begin to philosophize and try to reason it out by allegory or otherwise we become confused; but when we turn and read what Jesus said, how clear it all seems and Jesus does seem very near. So I turn to John 20:17: "Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God." How easy to catch Jesus' spirit in this! "When ye pray say, Our Father." Is there anything more sweet or endearing than this? So if I am God's Son, it matters not what may happen or overtake me, He is my Father; and because of that relationship, even though lying in the embrace of death, I am safe!

Recently a boy left home without his parents' consent. His father sent out a call to the police authorities to arrest and hold him until he should come and claim him. The chief of police near Cleveland, Ohio, picked him up and wired this information to his father.

The chief remarked that his father would treat him pretty rough for this escapade; but the boy laughed and said, "You do not know my father as I do. He will not hurt me, but will be awful glad to see me."

Brethren, this is just how God wants us to feel toward Him. As earthly fathers we can only bestow upon our children gifts and blessings which are earthly; but Jesus says that God is our heavenly Father. So then, as such, all things that are heavenly He will bestow upon us. It is His good pleasure to give us the kingdom.

I have just been brushing up my mind on English history. Every schoolboy knows that King John at Runnymede was compelled by the barons to sign the Magna Charta, which is considered the basis of the British constitution and of popular liberty.

The modern popular notion of what the Great Charter is and the reality are far apart. It was (so a writer says) Sir Edward Coke who five hundred years later invented the Magna Charta as people imagine it to be. One who reads the text will not find in it what many people imagine is there. In many respects it was more reactionary than reforming. There is no such thing as trial by jury, and it has not "no taxation without representation" in it. It is not a charter of liberty, but of liberties, that is, of the privileges and monopolies then held by the barons, not by the people. The document called for a return to old custom and was not a complete form of government.

But how different are the words of Jesus in His sermon on the mount! Professor Thomas C. Hall has well called the sermon on the mount "the Constitution of the Kingdom of God." Read it carefully and note how, for the betterment and blessing of all mankind, provisions are made. Compare these so-called "Beatitudes" with even our own constitution; and which would, if enforced, bring the greater blessing? Anyone who can read can understand them, they are so simple; and then note how Jesus compares these with the law of Moses which they thought they understood.

As I read over these things, I find that Jesus is seeking by them to make me perfect by asking me to live now a life of love, this, of course, being the love of enemies, and to conduct myself according to the golden rule and the refusal to judge others' motives, and to employ the spirit of forgiveness. It means even more than this, but I shall be thankful if I attain this.

TRIUNE-IMMERSION

By Elder Harry A. Sheets

THE Church of God neither believes in nor does it practice baptism in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. The Church of God has always made it a custom to prove every doctrine and practice it holds. In keeping with this policy we submit the following reasons for not practicing triune-immersion.

We do not believe that Jesus gave a formula for baptism in Matthew 28:19, when He said: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The writings of the apostles cover the first ninety-seven years of the Christian Era and nowhere in these writings (the New Testament) is it recorded that any were baptized in the three names. That brilliant Bible scholar, H. V. Reed, wrote: "Bingham, in his Antiquities, labored with commendable zeal to trace the (supposed) formula now in use back to the apostles, but signally failed. Indeed, there is no proof in the New Testament, nor in the writings immediately succeeding the apostles, that the triune formula was ever used by the apostolic church. Those who believe in a triune God, and those who practice triune-immersion, cannot find any proofs in earlier times, aside from the words quoted above (Matthew 28:19), for their practice."

On Page 197 of Neander's Church History, we read: "We certainly cannot prove that when Christ commanded His disciples to baptize in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost He intended to establish a particular formula of baptism." And Myer maintains that "Jesus does not, assuredly, dictate the words which are to be employed in the administration of baptism." Justin left the record that "It was only at a later period that the baptismal formula was drawn up according to these words" (referring to Matthew 28:19).

Dr. Priestley wrote concerning this passage: "It does not appear that the apostles understood that these particular words were always to be pronounced at baptism; for whenever the rite is spoken of in the book of Acts, baptism is always said to be administered in the name of Christ only. Afterward great virtue was supposed to attend the pronouncement of these words by those duly qualified. . . . It is therefore certainly better, in order to avoid superstition, to express the same meaning in other words, and to baptize as the apostles did, in the name of Christ." In commenting on Acts 10:48, the same writer states: "We have here another instance of baptizing in the name of Jesus only; and not in the form of words which some suppose to be prescribed by our Lord, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, which particular words, as I have observed before, had better be avoided in the administration of the rite."

Pressense, who made a special study of the early church has this to say about baptism: "The conditions of entrance into the church are at first extremely simple. No guarantee of preparation, of instruction and examination, is required; conversion has at this period an exceptionally sudden and supernatural character. The sign of initiation into the new society is baptism. . . . The formula of baptism was not pronounced in full; the neophytes were simply baptized in the name of the Lord." Then he adds: "There is no example in the New Testament of the employment of the complete formula of baptism. Bingham in vain attempts to deny this fact."

Just ten days after Jesus left His disciples to go to God's right hand the Holy Ghost came upon them to teach them all things (John 14:26). Peter put his newly acquired power and knowledge into immediate use. At the close of that great sermon the people cried out: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter's comforting reply is: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2:37-38. It is evident that Peter did not use the baptismal formula on the day of Pentecost.

About one year later Peter and John were sent to Samaria to confirm the work done by Philip. When the two apostles reached the brethren at Samaria they "prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost (for as yet he had fallen upon none of them; only were they baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus)."—Acts 8:16. In this case two apostles accepted those who were baptized in the one name. God must have approved of the same baptism because the Holy Ghost came upon these people as a result of prayer. The Holy Ghost was God's stamp of approval upon them and it gives us the assurance that God does accept baptism that is administered in the name of the Lord.

Ten years later Peter was commanded by the Spirit to return to Caesarea with the servants of Cornelius. After reaching the home of that devout man he preached to those present and was astonished when the Holy Ghost came upon Cornelius and all his house. Then Peter said: "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord."—Acts 10:47-48. This should cause us to realize that for about twelve years Peter baptized in the one name. We have no record that he ever changed to any other formula.

The two scriptures above (Acts 2:38 and 10:48) bring to our attention the fact that the Jews and Gentiles were each baptized in the same name. Paul is in harmony with this when he states: "There is . . . one Lord, one faith, one baptism."—Eph. 4:4, 5.

That the Apostle Paul was baptized in the one name is evident from his writings in Romans 6:3, 4: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death."

The Church of God believes and teaches that the writings and teachings of the apostles after the day of Pentecost were in reality the instructions of the Holy Ghost. This would put their words on a par with those of Jesus. God instructed both. We must, therefore, consider the actions of the apostles in baptizing in the name of the Lord Jesus as a divine interpretation of our Master's instruction in Matthew 28:19. A careful examination of Jesus' words will reveal the fact that there is agreement between the two. Jesus commanded to baptize in "the name," but He did not tell us what name that was. "Father" and "Son" are not names but titles. Mark records the great commission but makes no reference to any name except in verse 17, where he states: "In my name shall they cast out devils." (See Mark 16:15-17.) Luke's record of the commission is: "And he said unto them . . . that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (24:47). John states: "But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name" (20:31).

Peter declared the saving power of the "name of Jesus Christ" when he made his defense before the Sanhedrim the day following Pentecost. He had healed the beggar at the Beautiful gate and the indignant rulers demanded: "By what power, or by what name, have ye done this?" Peter answered: "Be it known unto you all . . . that by the name of Jesus Christ . . . doth this man stand before you whole. This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which has become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:7, 10-12.

Jesus declared: "I am the door. He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."—John 10:1. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me."—John 14:6.

The promises are for only those who are baptized into Christ. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. 3:27, 29.

The promise of the first resurrection is to those that are Christ's. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we (in Christ) which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4:16, 17.

The greatness of the name of Jesus, and the saving power of that name, are manifest in the writings of the Apostle to the Gentiles. He tells us "that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."—Phil. 2:10, 11. "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."—Rom. 10:9. In verse thirteen he adds: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

The Apostle John agrees with Paul: "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son hath not life. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God."

That we are baptized into the name of the One who was crucified for us is negatively proven by Paul in his argument to the Corinthians: "Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Were ye baptized in the name of Paul?"—1 Cor. 1:12, 13. He tells us in another place that baptism is a symbol of death. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Rom. 6:3-5. When Christ comes He will "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself."—Phil. 3:21. We can attain unto His glorious resurrection by being buried by baptism into the likeness of His death.

We have proved that baptism is a symbol of death. Did God die for us? did the Holy Ghost? Should we then be baptized in the name of the Father or of the Holy Ghost? If we are baptized for the dead (Paul says we are, 1 Cor. 15:29), would we not testify to a falsehood to be baptized in the name of the Father and of the Holy Ghost when neither died? These are serious questions.

We, of the Church of God, are willing to follow the apostles and baptize only "in the name of the Lord Jesus." We are commanded to do this: "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Col. 3:17. We have assurance of the correctness of our position from the words of Paul to the Corinthians: "But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God."—1 Cor. 6:11. Three-name baptism does not give us any such assurance, therefore, we cannot accept triune-immersion as Christian baptism.—Gospel Searchlight.

GODLY THINKING

By Samuel E. Haney

"For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Prov. 23:7.

ROTHERHAM'S rendering of this verse is: "For just as he has thought in his own mind (soul), so he is."

Rarely, indeed, do either Christians or non-Christians realize how much influence for good or evil, success or failure depends upon their manner of thinking. The trend of one's mind is not hereditary, nor is it fixed by mere chance, pot luck. There would be as many left-handed people as right-handed ones were it not for parental concern in the beginning.

To be independent of besetting circumstances one must cultivate a fixative mind: then disagreeable happenings are ineffective owing to one's ability to react from them. The mind which is training itself to be whole, casts out fear, lust, greed, and pride. It recognizes that these things are hurtful, that they cause more injury than pleasure. And the mind in training, twisting in the agony of its own creation, learns slowly and sadly by experience, so that the next time it will strive harder to restrain itself.

It is easier to form bad and injurious habits than good and helpful ones, a fact that should particularly concern Christians with whom correct thinking is preeminently important. Paul, second only to Jesus as a teacher, says, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philippians 4:8.

Christians who do not discriminate in their thinking, but promiscuously entertain any thought that slips into their minds, are inadvertently allowing themselves to drift into a putrid atmosphere of despair. And the more they wriggle to extricate themselves, the deeper they sink with impairing bodies into this world's spiritual miasma, something which means misery and a gradual separation from God.

A Christian native of India who maintains a higher ideal of Christianity than many of us said, "I know I haven't salvation, for while I have conquered everything else, angry thoughts worst me." Among such people anything like losing one's temper is thought to be utterly incompatible with the truly Christian life. It should be well for us older ones to take cognition of the higher plane upon which these "babes in Christ" are dwelling. They seem to possess the apostolic faithful spirit as of yore. Such an attitude should assist the careless thinker who has been switched off (side-tracked) from the main line of godly thinking.

Christians who have formed the pernicious habit of careless thinking should cultivate the habit of utilizing their mental energy on actualities (facts) and avoid illusory day-dreaming, which is an incipient form of insanity, soliloquy often being its sequence and a second stage of mania. Anyone who has made a study of facial diagnosis and human demeanor during recent years will agree that there are more insane people outside than there are inside asylums, but they are of a milder form. The woods are full of morons and idiots, so proving that man without mental and spiritual contact with his Creator is a miserable failure from any angle he is viewed. The foregoing accounts in part for the old Adamic man being constitutionally addicted to wrong thinking and for having a grouchy disposition and for the new creature in Christ Jesus being constitutionally a rejoicer in the Lord. One of the chief reasons of this deplorable state of affairs is wrong thinking, thinking from a fleshly instead of a spiritual standpoint, allowing the "old man" instead of the "new man" (Eph. 4:22-24) to control the mental faculty.

Very few realize that the power that the mind has over the body makes it possible to think one's self into or out of a spell of sickness. "For just as he has thought in his own mind (soul), so is he." This applies to one's whole being—body, soul (or life), and spirit. The mind is the ingress of this unseen power, whether for good or evil depending entirely upon the individual's volition.

Life is what we make it. We must either master it, or it will master us and cause life to be one constant grind. Follow the customs of the world, and we shall be galley slaves mastered by the capricious whims of lust: "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life."—1 John 2:15-17. An indifference to this gospel fact explains why some Christians' physical and mental suffering is of their own creation.

Here are a few excerpts from Paul's pen on thinking: "In virtue of my office, I tell everyone of your number who is self-important, that he is not to think more of himself than he ought to think; he must take the same view of himself, corresponding to the degree of faith which God has assigned to each."—Romans 12:3, Moffatt. "With regard to food that has been offered to idols. Here, of course, we all have knowledge! Knowledge puffs up, love builds up. Whoever imagines ("thinks," A. V.) he has attained to some degree of knowledge, does not possess the true knowledge yet."—1 Corinthians 8:1, 2, Moffatt. "It is not that I am personally qualified to form ("think," A. V.) any judgment of myself; my qualifications come from God."—2 Corinthians 3:5, Moffatt. For "if anyone imagines ("thinks," A. V.) he is somebody, he is deceiving himself, for he is nobody."—Galatians 6:3, Moffatt. Thinking, personal with Paul: "When I was a child, I talked like a child, I thought like a child, I argued like a child; now that I am a man, I am done with childish ways."—1 Corinthians 13:11, Moffatt.

The Apostle is here explaining the Christian's progressive experience by relating his (our) mental growth and ways. The Christian is expected to grow in grace, knowledge, and the stature of Jesus Christ (2 Peter 3:18; Ephesians 4:11-14). Doubtless Paul, the Christian, in this instance had in mind his different mode of thinking under grace than he had under law. And how well this hypothesis explains everyone's experience before and after repentance, conversion, and consecration! To be in the school of Christ means progression. Transversely, no progress means no spiritual contact with the great Teacher.

An improper mode of thinking has caused havoc with the race on many occasions, wars, for instance. But the most notable case was in Noah's day, when all the people save eight had become so debased and corrupt that God decided they were unfit to inhabit even an imperfect earth. The second conspicuous case was that of Lot's day, when all but three had become so immoral as to vex just Lot with the filthy conversation of the wicked, causing the Lord to rain upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire, so making them an example to those that after should live ungodly (Gen. 19:24; 2 Peter 2:6-8). But the most notable of all exhibitions of God's wrath upon a race of God-dishonoring people who give Him no reverential consideration is in the immediate future.

The cause of God's portending wrath is the same as in the two cases cited, namely, gross immorality, a mind devoid of the Spirit of God, and an indulgence in various phases of dissipation. In the two former cases God showed no pity; and the same procedure is to obtain in His destruction of all nations, which is prophetically and chronologically about due to take place (Isa. 13:18, 19; Jer. 46:28). Jesus confirmed the above when He said, "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." Read Luke 17:24-30; 21:34-36.

THINGS THAT ABIDE

us that God "built his sanctuary . . . like the earth which he hath established for ever." And Solomon says, "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth for ever." The Word of God, in the form of our beloved Bible, is another tangible thing which is eternal, because it is truth itself, and "the truth of the Lord endureth for ever."—Psalm 117:2. Though all other wisdom fail, the "word of the Lord endureth for ever."

Of equal importance are the intangible things of life, and of these Paul speaks so fluently in the chapter to which we referred above. In the last verse of 2 Corinthians 4, "we look not," he assures us, "at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

The things that go to make up our lives—those things which we cannot see—faith in God and our fellow man, hope that shines amid the crumbling ruin of material wealth, love in our heart and in the hearts of those we serve, a love instilled by the countless unsung acts of kindness and cheer whose worth is not measured in dollars and cents—these are the things that are important, the things that abide.

THE NEW PALESTINE

IN THESE days of uncertainty and business depression, perhaps no country on earth enjoys greater activity and prosperity than old Canaan. This little land, smaller than Vermont and about one-eighteenth the size of California, is rapidly shuffling off the old and finding for itself a place on the business map of the world.

If the traveler lands at Jaffa, the Joppa of New Testament times, a few minutes' automobile ride to the northward brings him to Tel Aviv, an up-to-date city of 36,000 population, all of Hebrew race, and said to be "the first purely Jewish city to arise since the days of the Romans." Here are modern industries, electric lights, schools, hotels, restaurants, a synagogue, and a hospital.

Still farther north along the Mediterranean coast arises Mount Carmel, where Elijah gathered the multitudes of Israel to witness the crowning miracle of fire from heaven in distinguishing the true God. But just as the tourist comes beneath the shadow of this ancient landmark, he finds that the little town of Haifa has been transformed into a thriving seaport and business center. Among the modern manufactured products are flour, soap, cement, silk, and glass; while in the making is a new harbor, which, when completed, will welcome the largest ocean steamships. Near the city are twelve giant storage tanks, each with a capacity of more than a half million gallons, and connected with the sea by pipe lines over a mile in length. The fuel oil is obtained from the fields of Irak.

GALILEE

THE Sea of Galilee, once the favored resort of Christ and His disciples, is now visited once a week by a modern hydroplane that flies regularly between London and Bagdad. Mizpeh, a little to the south, the "watchtower" from which Samuel judged Israel, is now an important air terminal for planes from England, France, Germany, and other countries.

Not far from Mizpeh, the great Jordan power station has been erected; and the waters of that far-famed stream are now utilized in supplying power and light to all parts of Palestine. In the construction of this hydroelectric system, many miles of canal were dug, many dams were built, and a large new lake appears in the Jordan Valley.

Both on the shores of Galilee and on the Dead Sea, splendid health and pleasure resorts, bath houses, and tourist hotels are rapidly rising; while launches and motor ships play about upon the waters.

Throughout the country here and there, macadamized roads have been built; a hundred new agricultural colonies have been formed; and the Jewish farmer, with tractors, harrows, drills, and modern harvesting machinery, is fast supplanting the peasant husbandman. As another innovation, the Holy Land now uses its own national currency and postage stamps.

JERUSALEM

OLD JERUSALEM is in transformation. Its ancient ramparts, some forty feet in height and three miles in circumference, have been repaired. Its streets are illumined at night by electricity. The water and garbage carriers of other days have been almost entirely superseded by efficient water and drainage systems. The telephone and radio have entered; while a thousand motor cars are registered by the traffic department.

Of its 90,000 people, about two-thirds live outside the walls. There are superb residential districts, commercial sections, public buildings, a university, colleges, hospitals, parks, recreation grounds, and hotels. The latest of these, King David Hotel, overlooking the Holy City from the south, cost $1,250,000, has two hundred guest rooms, and is advertised as "the last word in modernity."

Writing of the building activity that gives the Jerusalem suburbs "the appearance of a boom town in America," a recent visitor to the Holy Land says:

"In all, some eighty streets have been laid out, and their very names are pertinent of Biblical history, for we have such appellations as The Street of the Prophets, Herod's Way, Nehemiah Road, Street of Ezra, Street of the Maccabees, Isaiah Street, John the Baptist Street, Jeremiah Street, and Hezekiah Street.

"A style of architecture in keeping with the landscape and traditions of the site has been encouraged. This is particularly noticeable in the various Jewish garden cities which have sprung up around the ancient walls. The houses are built of stone, with balconies, arched windows, spacious verandas, and attractive entrances. Each stands in its own grounds with flower beds in front and behind."

THE WONDERS OF THE DEAD SEA

THE scheme for extracting the potash, bromine, and other salts from the waters of the Dead Sea is being rapidly developed by Palestine Potash, Ltd., under the direction of M. Novomeysky. This company was organized in London in the latter part of 1929 and now owns the seventy-five years concession granted by the Government of Palestine and Transjordan to Novomeysky and Tulloch.

The work of erecting the plant at the Dead Sea is proceeding rapidly and satisfactorily. The operations during the first working season fully confirmed the results obtained by the experimental work of the preceding years and have proved the possibility of manufacturing potash from the waters of the Dead Sea by applying the sun's rays as fuel for evaporating and precipitating the chemical salts. The company's expectations concerning the quality and quantity of the crude potash salts produced and the cost of production have been entirely fulfilled.

At the end of 1930 more than 350 workmen were employed by Palestine Potash, Ltd. Housing accommodations and sanitary conditions are excellent. Should this year's operations prove as satisfactory as those carried on in 1930, the company will have to consider the construction of a narrow gauge railroad from the Dead Sea to Beisan, in order to create for itself direct communication with the port at Haifa.

Competent experts have estimated that there are in the Dead Sea approximately the following quantities of salts:

Potassium chloride, 2000 million metric tons; magnesium bromide, 980 million metric tons; sodium chloride, 11,000 million metric tons; magnesium chloride, 22,000 million metric tons; calcium chloride, 6000 million metric tons.

Potash is used primarily in the manufacture of fertilizer. Bromine is required for medicines used in the treatment of nervous disease and in the manufacture of chemicals connected with the dye-stuff industry. Magnesium chloride is used in the manufacture of magnesium meals and in the dressing of cotton goods. This undertaking should, if successful, lay the foundations of a heavy chemical industry in Palestine and should stimulate the establishment of many other industries.

Major T. G. Tulloch, one of the promoters of the Palestine Potash, Ltd., recently told a (London) Star reporter—"After living a couple of years on the shores of the Dead Sea, all my ideas of Palestine have been changed. The country surrounding the Dead Sea, when properly explored, reveals some of the most wonderful scenery I have ever seen; and the climate is marvelous," he added enthusiastically.

"I have visited many health resorts—open air sanatoriums and sunray establishments—but the little bay we have discovered on the shore of the Dead Sea is nature's own sanatorium and one of our schemes is to establish a health clinic there.

"Hundreds of English people who have wasted years traveling over the world in search of a cure for rheumatic troubles have been permanently cured in a week by bathing in the Dead Sea. It is a natural cure which is due to a combination of unique conditions.

"In the first place, the waters of the Dead Sea contain 25 per cent of salts of magnesium, magnesium bromide, and potassium chlorides. No other waters in the world contain such a high percentage of these chemical compounds. The water is so dense that it is impossible to sink in it, and the temperature so warm that one can remain for hours without any risk.

"The atmosphere is extremely dry and the sunshine is practically continuous for seven months and the rainfall is only two inches per annum. The number of hours of sunshine is double that of the sunniest spot in Europe. But the most important atmospheric fact is that our proposed resort is the lowest lying open country in the world. The Dead Sea lies thirteen hundred feet below sea level, which means that the air there contains 6 per cent more oxygen per cubic foot than at sea level. One health-giving effect of this is that the call on the heart is correspondingly reduced, and a feeling of extra mental and physical energy is engendered.

"These are the reasons we are establishing a health clinic—and why we are calling it a health resort as well as a pleasure resort.

"Although there are no fish in the Dead Sea, there are many varieties in the Transjordanian streams and gorges, where the subtropical vegetation, hot and cold bathing pools, and the scenery are marvelous.

"While it may be snowing at Jerusalem—only fifty minutes away by car, on a new metalled road—it is always sunshiny on the shores of the Dead Sea, with strawberries, oranges, and tropical fruits growing all the year.”

But will this “new exodus” to Palestine satisfy Jewish ambition? No. The only One who can satisfy the longing of the Jewish heart is Jesus, the true Messiah of Israel.

so long as there is sin to be combated and overcome in one's own heart and in the great moving force of human society.

And it seems to me that we must look upon the Bible as the great charter of the human soul—as the “Magna Charta” of the human soul. You know the interesting circumstances which gave rise to the Magna Charta. You know the moving scene that was enacted upon the heath at Runnymede. You know how the barons of England, representing the people of England—for they consciously represented the people of England—met upon that historic spot and parleyed with John, the king. They said: “We will come to terms with you here.” They said: “There are certain inalienable rights of English-speaking men which you must observe. They are not given by you; they cannot be taken away by you. Sign your name here to this parchment upon which these rights are written, and we are your subjects. Refuse to put your name to this document, and we are your sworn enemies. Here are our swords to prove it.”

The franchises of human liberty made the basis of a bargain with a king! There are kings upon the pages of Scripture, but do you think of any king in Scripture as anything else than a mere man? There was the great king David, of a line blessed because the line from which should spring our Lord and Savior, a man marked in the history of mankind as the chosen instrument of God to do justice and exalt righteousness in the people.

But what does this Bible do for David? Does it utter eulogies upon him? Does it conceal his faults and magnify his virtues? Does it set him up as a great statesman would be set up in modern biography? No, the book in which his annals are written strips the mask from David, strips every shred of counterfeit and concealment from him and shows him as indeed an instrument of God, but a sinful and selfish man; and the verdict of the Bible is that David, like other men, is one day to stand naked before the judgment seat of God and be judged not as a king, but as a man. Is not this the Book of the people? Is there any man in this Holy Scripture who is exempted from the common standard and judgment? How these pages teem with the masses of mankind! Are these the annals of the great? These are the annals of the people—of the common run of men.

The New Testament is the history of the life and the testimony of common men who rallied to the fellowship of Jesus Christ and who by their faith and preaching remade a world that was under the thrall of the Roman army. This is the history of the triumph of the human spirit in the persons of humble men. And how many sorts of men march across the pages, how infinite is the variety of human circumstances and of human dealings and of human heroism and love! Is this a picture of extraordinary things? This is a picture of the common life of mankind. It is a mirror held up for men's hearts, and it is in this mirror that we marvel to see ourselves portrayed.

How like the Scripture is all great literature! What is it that entrances us when we read or witness a play of Shakespeare? It is the consciousness that this man, this all-observing mind, saw men of every cast and kind as they were in their habits as they lived. And as passage succeeds passage, we seem to see the characters of ourselves and our friends portrayed by this ancient writer; and a play of Shakespeare is just as modern today as upon the day it was penned and first enacted. And the Bible is without age or date or time. It is a picture of the human heart displayed for all ages and for all sorts and conditions of men. Moreover, the Bible does what is so invaluable in human life—it classifies moral values. It apprises us that men are not judged according to their wits, but according to their characters.

If any statesman sunk in the practices which debase a nation will but read this single Book, he will go to his prayers abashed. Do you not realize that there is a whole literature in the Bible? It is not one Book, but a score of books. Do you realize what literature is? I am sometimes sorry to see the great classics of our English literature used in the schools as textbooks, because I am afraid that little children may gain the impression that these are formal lessons to be learned. There is no great book in any language that is not the spontaneous outpouring of some great mind or the cry of some great heart. And the reason that poetry moves us more than prose does is that it is the rhythmic and passionate voice of some great spirit that has seen more than his fellow men can see.

I have found more true politics in the poets of the English-speaking race than I have ever found in all the formal treatises on political science. There is more of the spirit of our own institutions in a few lines of Tennyson than in all the textbooks on governments put together:

“A nation still, the rulers and the ruled,
Some sense of duty, something of a faith,
Some reverence for the laws ourselves have made,
Some patient force to change them when we will,
Some civic manhood firm against the crowd.”

America was born a Christian nation. America was born to exemplify that devotion to the elements of righteousness which are derived from the revelations of Holy Scripture.

I have a very simple thing to ask of you. I ask of men and women that they will realize that part of the destiny of America lies in their daily perusal of this great Book of revelations—that if they would see America free and pure, they will make their own spirits free and pure by this baptism of the Holy Scripture.

THE VOICE OF EXPERIENCE

YOUNG people especially need to be reminded of the verse, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful" (Psalm 1:1); for they usually like the company of those who do things that Christians should not do.

Young people, obey Jesus' command and do not "cast ye your pearls before swine." Do not be seen with those who will not understand what Christianity really is, but remember what David said and keep away from them. Do not try to go with them; for you cannot help them, and they can hurt you and will laugh at you. That is what Jesus meant.

If you stay with people like them very long, you will find yourselves thinking and talking and doing as they do. Beware of anything like that, for the Bible says that God will not hold anyone guiltless who takes His name in vain.

All these things are true, for this is from a sister who knows by experience.

—Amy Johnson, Marshalltown, Iowa.

CHANGE IN ADDRESS

WILL all the local treasurers of Illinois Berean societies please note that the address of the State treasurer, Mrs. Esta Starbuck, is now 840 Haskell Ave., Rockford, Illinois? ## SO SAITH YE NOBILITY

YE NOBLE OF OLDE: Quick, valet, my best perfume and powder. I am to be presented before his Highness, the King, in august assemblage this very day. I must begin my toilette at once.

Today's Berean Noble: I must prepare for this evening's Berean meeting. I won't worry so much about my clothes so long as they are clean and neat. For I am told that, as for my adorning, "Let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart" that I am to ornament. For I am to appear this evening before the King who will "look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." Since that hidden man is my spirituality, I had better freshen it up by giving it some of "the sincere milk of the word."

THE MISSING VIOLETS

That morning David and some friends had gone out to a hillside to pick some violets for the party. Ruth had asked David to keep her flowers. Thoughtlessly he had put them down and forgotten them.

After they started back David missed the flowers and offered to go back after them. But they had disappeared. Suddenly David heard a cry.

“Help!” came a girl’s voice.

Running quickly in the direction of the call, David saw a strange little girl on the ground. Her foot was caught between two stones. He pulled with all his might and succeeded in freeing her shoe.

“Thank you.” The girl smiled tearfully. “Now will you give me my hat?”

David picked up the hat. Underneath were Ruth’s missing violets!

“Where did you get these violets?” he asked.

“I found them on a big rock,” answered the little girl. “Are they yours?”

“They are not mine, but I left them there for some one else,” replied David. “I remember the pink string.”

“Will you help me home?” the girl asked him. “I can hardly walk.”

David wanted to hurry on, give Ruth her flowers, stop by to see Will, and get to the party on time. But he could not refuse to help this girl.

Slowly they started home, the little girl leaning on David’s arm. At the railroad crossing they were delayed by a long freight train. David was nervous. It was almost four o’clock.

The day was windy. A gust of wind blew off the girl’s hat. It rolled towards a big mud puddle.

David dashed off. He picked up the hat just as it reached the edge of the puddle.

“Thank you again,” smiled the girl. “You are certainly helping me a lot. Can’t I do something for you in return?”

“We’re having a Sunday school party this afternoon for new members,” explained David excitedly. “Can’t you go with me and help me explain about the violets?”

The girl agreed. Just then the town clock struck four!

“I’m late,” sighed David.

At last they arrived at the party.

“Why, David, we had given you up,” exclaimed everyone.

A door opened. Ben and Nellie came in with refreshments. Ben seemed surprised to see the girl with David.

“Why, Will Young, what are you doing here?” he asked.

David looked up in astonishment.

“Are you Will Young?” he enquired. “I thought that was a boy.”

“My name is Wilhelmina,” explained the girl. “But everyone calls me Will.”

“I was going to see you this afternoon, to ask you to join our Sunday school.”

“Well,” said Will slowly, smiling at David, “now that I know how nice you are, I’d like very much to join.”

“That’s fine!” replied David.

THE HAPPY RIDDLE

“Try to guess this riddle,” said Jane to Eve;

“The more of it you give, the more you receive.

It’s worth more than money, but it’s free as air,
You’re looking at it, I declare.”

“My goodness,” said Eve. “What can it be!”

Jane smiled, then giggled and laughed, “Tee-hee!

It’s a mile from beginning to end,” said she.

“I know now,” cried Eve, “ha-ha-he!

“A smile is a mile from beginning to end,

And you keep it when you pass it on to a friend.

It’s worth more than money, for it scatters joy,
And fear and anger it will destroy.”

IN ALL of our recreation if we ask ourselves if God would approve, we will not go far wrong. May each of you make the right choice of methods of enjoyment, as you grow older year by year.

LESSON 11. — December 11, 1932

THE CHRISTIAN'S USE OF LEISURE

Leviticus 23:39-43; Nehemiah 8:9-18; Zechariah 8:5; Matthew 11:16-19;
Mark 6:30-32; 1 Corinthians 10:23-33.

Devotional Reading: Philippians 4:4-9

GOLDEN TEXT

Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.—1 Corinthians 10:31.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Living With People of Other Races.

Basic Truth: "God . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men . . . that they should seek the Lord."—Acts 17:24-27.

Outline: I. A Common Creator Unites All Races. II. A Common Nature Unites All Men. III. A Common Salvation Makes All Men Brothers.

I. A Common Creator Unites All Races. "God that made the world and all things therein" has united in one great family all mankind. Israel was commanded to remember this common origin of humanity, and to recognize it as constituting a bond between them and the people of other races. Solomon prayed that the "stranger" who turned his face toward the temple and called upon Jehovah might be heard of Him. It was clearly shown to Peter in the vision on the housetop that he must call no man "common or unclean." Paul, more thoroughly enlightened yet than Peter, beheld in mankind a brotherhood of "one blood," who was seeking to worship the one God.

II. A Common Nature Unites All Men. (Acts 10:28-35; John 4:5-10.) As a common Creator brought all men into being, developing all races from one original pair, it of necessity follows that all men possess the same nature. All are formed "of the dust of the ground" (Gen. 2:7), and when life departs "all turn to dust again" (Ecc. 3:20). "All have sinned" (Rom. 3:23), and all stand in need of deliverance from the penalty of it.

III. A Common Salvation Makes All Men Brothers. (John 4:10; Acts 10:34, 35.) "God is no respecter of persons" and has provided in Jesus Christ a means of salvation that is available to all men. All may not accept it (John 1:12; 12:46-48), but the opportunity is extended freely to all. Cf. John 3:16. In His conversation with the woman at the well Jesus states that He even then was willing to give to her, a despised Samaritan, a drink of the water of life of which He was the possessor, thus establishing the universal character of His work of redemption. If the woman would "ask", He would gladly "give" to her of the "living water." To recognize the universal brotherhood of men, to realize that we all are sinners together, gives us a sympathetic interest in their present and future welfare.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

A World Gospel: There was a time when God was dealing with the nation of Israel that He did not have direct contact with the peoples of other nations. See Amos 3:2. The national phase of God's work has been discontinued for the time being at least, and He is dealing with the individuals of all nations.

Christ in giving His charge to the disciples said, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations". There is no race barrier nor color line in this command; all are included. No man is barred from becoming a member of the body of Christ. "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:27. Every one is invited to come and take up the cross of Christ and find peace and contentment under the blessings of the gospel. If there is any division in the church by race or color it is man-made. See Gal. 3:28. The man who is poorly clad should be given the same recognition as the man in goodly apparel (James 2:1-4).

Careful Association: While we are enjoined and admonished to have no respect of persons and carry the gospel to all people of all races, yet in our contact with the sinful and unclean extreme caution must be used not to be partakers of their sins, but to keep ourselves pure (1 Tim. 5:22). Christ associated in a way with sinners, but He kept Himself unspotted (James 1:27).—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons"—Acts 10:34.

This text was uttered by Peter in the house of Cornelius when he realized that the Gentiles were accepted by God. Paul says, Rom. 10:12, 13, "For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." The difference comes in calling upon God and believing in His Son, and not calling upon God and rejecting His Son.

Then which will we choose? In Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian nor Scandinavian, Italian nor Pole, Hungarian nor Norwegian, bond nor free, male nor female, but all Christian. Shall we not do all we can to help as many as we can to see the way of salvation so there will be no difference between us? Let's try to do that.—L. A. R.

Following Christ in Dealing With Other Races

Much of the misunderstanding and hatred between races is due to unchristian dealings. In days past the Jew felt he did no wrong in cheating a Gentile, and the Gentile felt guiltless in mistreating the Jew. We still look down upon the foreigner as someone to be mistreated. We speak of "dagos", "hunkies", "wops", etc., and feel no sin when we take advantage of their ignorance of our money values. It is a shameful truth that foreigners are short-changed, over-charged, and deceived by us Americans. Is it any wonder that they try to protect themselves, and retaliate by forming gangs? We teach and instruct and then punish them for learning the lesson too well.

Paul tells us that "ye are all one in Christ Jesus".—Gal. 3:28. God needs the organizing ability of the American, the science of the German, the energy of the Italian, the tenacity of the English, the skill of the French, the cunning of the Chinaman, the assurance of the free, the meekness of the bond, the strength of the male, and the tenderness of the female. God needs all of these elements. We must regard every person as a member or potential member of Christ's body. Perhaps that foreigner that lives next to you or peddles fruit in your back alley is just the material Christ needs for His great building. The honor is yours if you get him. The disgrace is yours if you turn him away by abuse. Can you call him a "wop" the next time you meet him?—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

All Belong to God

Sometimes, perhaps, we think that we who go to Sunday school and church, read our Bibles at home, and pray to our heavenly Father, are better than those we see about us who do not do these things. You know, Peter felt much the same way about it, and God sent him a dream to show him he was wrong. To understand the meaning of this dream, we should be familiar, in part, with some of the Jewish customs and ceremonies, which you will find in detail in the book of Leviticus. But this is too lengthy, and so your teacher will give you a short review of the laws pertaining to the eating of meat. The Jews of Christ's time were so particular about keeping the laws of Moses that they went to extremes and added many more which really were foolish. For instance, they even avoided brushing against a Gentile for fear of becoming soiled. Relate the dream God sent to Peter and the events which occurred almost immediately. Peter was ready for Cornelius when he found him knocking at the door because he learned the lesson God sent him. He was ready to do a very great favor for Cornelius, and in helping another he helped himself.

If you find yourself in the position that Peter found himself, thinking you are better than another, just remember that God is the Father of all, and then try to do some favor for that person. Afterwards you will find that all that old feeling of "better than you" is gone.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

NORTHWEST CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT

The quarterly meeting of the Northwestern Conference of Oregon and Washington will be held December 2, 3, 4, at Corvallis, Oregon. We urge all members and others interested to be present.

Gladys Barber, Secretary.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The "Knights of Abraham" had an unusually interesting and profitable gathering at their monthly meeting on Nov. 12. The speaker of the evening was provided by Bro. Hall in the person of Mr. Kurkjian, who gave an excellent address on "Cooperation." Many of the men in attendance said they enjoyed it the most of any meeting thus far held by the "Knights."

The Sunday services were well attended, which indicates a loyalty on the part of the membership that is maintained even in the absence of the pastor.

The "Morning Stars" (a ladies' class in the Sunday school) held their regular meeting on the 16th, a large group being present. Following a short but profitable period of Bible study, the ladies devoted their attention to a social program which was greatly enjoyed.

"We are anxiously anticipating the return of our beloved pastor and his wife and family this week," writes Sr. Fred Hall, who submits the report, "as we realize with their absence just how much we need them."

FROM THE OLD DOMINION

The following items of general interest are taken from "The Gospel Searchlight," published by Eld. Harry A. Sheets on behalf of the churches of Virginia.

Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Cooper, associated with the Browntown, Va., Church of God, but residents of Washington, D. C., welcomed a little daughter, Marjorie Marie, into their home on Oct. 26.

Both the pastor and his wife have recently been operated upon for the removal of diseased tonsils and are recovering nicely at this writing.

Bible classes have been resumed after a short summer vacation, the first of the new series being held at the home of Bro. S. E. Boyer.

The pastor announces a series of thought-provoking sermons on marriage, to begin early in December and continue at intervals into January. They are as follows: (1) "Marriage: What It Is, and What It Ought to Be"; (2) "What Kind of a Girl Should a Young Man Marry?" (3) "What Kind of a Man Should a Girl Marry?" Practical discourses of this kind are sure to be helpful.

"We have heard several remark recently about how good the articles in The Restitution Herald have been during the last few months. We agree, they HAVE been good! If you have not been reading the paper you have missed something of real value. We believe that the Church of God has as good a paper as any published. We subscribe to several and we think The Herald is best. Non-members have told us the same thing."

TO THE ILLINOIS BROTHERHOOD

Requests are being made by every department of our work for funds with which to carry on. No one department—local, state, or national—deserves all of one's support. Not one of these can exist permanently without the other two. (Neither can any individual exist permanently unless in one way or another he shows his faith by his works.) Therefore we are asking that when you distribute your portion for the proclamation of the gospel that you consider and remember all phases of our work.

At present financial assistance is being given by the Illinois State Conference at two points which are not yet able to carry their own loads. Send your remittances for our State work to our treasurer, Miss Anna E. Drew, 629 N. Galena Ave., Dixon, Illinois. Paul C. Johnson, President.

ELDORADO, ILLINOIS

Immediately after the morning service on Sunday, Nov. 6, the majority of the congregation gathered on the banks of a creek about five miles east of the city and witnessed the baptism of Mrs. Marshall Wiggins. We are all encouraged because of the stand our sister has taken, and we hope and pray that she may continue true and faithful to her Lord and Master until He comes.

Please pray for us at Eldorado, that we may keep the services going so that others may accept Christ while the opportunity is afforded them.

The congregation was agreeably surprised Sunday morning when several of our brethren and friends from Herrin, Ill., visited us. They were: Mr. and Mrs. Loren Margraves, Mrs. Ida Jeffrey, and Mrs. Margaret Donaly and daughter.

C. E. Lapp, Pastor.

A WORD OF THANKSGIVING

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High."—Psalm 92:1.

Cannot all Christians echo these words of David? God is good, and His love and tender care are over all His children. Even in these sad times we can rejoice, for we know the dark cloud will break when Jesus descends for His own. "Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Precious promise! May it bring a song of thanksgiving to our lips, and rest to troubled hearts.

I have many things to be thankful for: God's love and the blessed hope most of all. But I thank Him, too, for our splendid church paper and the faithful inspiring articles coming weekly. It takes thought, time, and effort to write them. May God bless the writers.

We do not forget Bro. Marsh, and all those who bear the burden at Oregon. May it be our privilege to hold up their hands in prayer and every way possible.

The time for work may be very short, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Lilian Railton.

AT WCMA

It is with regret that we must announce that there will be no more services broadcast over WCMA, Culver, Indiana. The station has been discontinued, the channel and time being absorbed by an Indianapolis station. We desire to express our sincere appreciation to all those who have cooperated in this work, contributing so liberally of their time, effort, or substance. Through your cooperation and prayers much good has been accomplished. Thousands have been privileged to hear the gospel. Isolated and afflicted ones have been comforted and encouraged. It has aided various church groups to revitalize their activities by helping to add new members and increased interest. A grand total of one hundred sixteen sermons has been broadcast.

We praise the Lord for His goodness and mercy. He gave us this work to do and has permitted us to keep it up as long as we have. Now that we may no longer do this, we look to Him for assignment of some other task that will spread the glad tidings of the kingdom to suffering, sin-blighted humanity. Thus may the name of the Lord be glorified.

C. A. Smead, Pastor.

HELPING FUND

G. E. Coats $1.00

AN APPEAL

For Those of Our Number Who Are in Need

As I have stated before in my appeals for financial help, it is not a pleasure to ask; but to be able to have the funds to give our worthy brothers and sisters in Christ who are in destitute circumstances and are hoping to receive help in some way is for me worth all the embarrassment of making an appeal for the relief work.

At the present time I am very much in need of financial help, and you who are not among our unfortunate number I am asking to give this appeal serious thought. Many of you do not realize what it means to be hungry and cold and facing eviction from your home. These conditions are what some of our families are going through.

The following are expressions from letters I have recently received that are similar to many others sent me:

"We received your letter with money order enclosed and we thank you, dear sister, for it. I am sure I don't know what we would have done or where we would now be if it had not been for the assistance you have given us."

"Dear Sister: I am writing to you in regard to our destitute condition. If you cannot help us we will thank you for past favors, for you have driven the wolf from our door before."

Through lack of funds I have asked help for some of our families from the Red Cross society; but it, too, is handicapped in its work because of lack of funds.

Our families being helped at the present time are exceptionally worthy; and as they know the funds to carry on the relief work (since some of them have donated toward it when they were able) come from our more fortunate ones, will you fail to help them? Can you rest, knowing they are in need? I have one family alone that is deserving of all the money I have received in the past year for this relief work, but the money must be divided among other families.

I received a donation for the relief work recently from one of our brethren, who gave it in memory of his wife. What better tribute can be paid to the departed than to help the living with such a memorial?

Now, to those who wish to respond to this appeal—and we must help our deserving ones in need; we cannot afford to do otherwise—please send contributions to my address.

(Mrs.) Orpha Sanford, Chairman,
National Berean Relief Committee of the Church of God, 5424 Race Ave., Chicago, Ill.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

We certainly enjoyed today's Herald just received. Even in these times, so discouraging and depressing, we are so thankful to find so many striving to live the Christian life. I like Sr. Lucille LeCrone's article, "The Thankful Spirit." I believe with her that if we would count our blessings more often we would not complain so much, but rather we would go about with a smile instead of a frown, and clouds would take on a rosy hue, and before long the sun would shine.

This Thanksgiving means that I for one, with many others of our little church here, feel thankful to the Giver of every good and perfect gift that we have had opportunity to buy the brick for our little church building, and have everything, as far as we have gone, paid for. The building on the lot we bought will soon be torn down, and willing hands will do the work of excavating for the basement. We need a church building here, and we thank our heavenly Father that He is showing us the way. To Him be all the praise. We thank Him for willing hearts and hands. He never fails those who put their trust in Him.

So with our National Bible Institution. It will never cease to function if it is God's work, and I heard one of our ministers say in the days when it first started, "If it is of God it will live; if not, it will go down." It has lived, and how many have been blessed through its activities, how many young men have been sent out from the school there and are today preaching the gospel.

It is true with this institution, as with many larger institutions, finances are low. But, brethren, you can all take our paper, you can all, I am sure, send a few dollars besides that to help. The fund for the brick we bought to build our church was started by the dollar-a-month method. We are just a few here, but God blessed our efforts.

The Savior says that we should deny ourselves and take up our cross and follow Him. Don't let others do all the denying and all the cross-bearing. "Bear ye one another's burdens."

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Chaplin and daughter, Bernice Brown.

MARY JANE WELDON

Mary Jane Weldon was born to John and Jane Davis at Norwich, County of Oxford, Province of Ontario, Canada, on August 4, 1860. She died at her home in Thorold, Ontario, on November 8, 1932.

She was united in marriage with Thomas A. Weldon on September 24, 1878, with whom, in true, mutually helpful devotion, she lived a happy and beautiful life for more than fifty-four years. To them were granted the joys and uplift of three children: Cecil, John, and Irene. The sorrows that followed, first in the death of John, in the glad and vigorous days of noble boyhood, and later in the death of Cecil, after he had attained full manhood, were keenly felt by Sr. Weldon to the last.

A little more than two years before their marriage both were "baptized into Christ," the late powerful teacher, R. V. Lyon, officiating. For a full half century and more Christianity was not only a profession but a joyful and happy service. It was the mold which formed her life and fashioned it into one of beauty and helpfulness both in home and community.

Sr. Weldon was dearly loved by old and young. Her thoughtfulness for others, and her gentle and quiet ways of Christian service ingratiated her into the lives of all.

For some months it was known that her health was failing. But it was not until a few days before her death that the seriousness of her condition was revealed.

With tears of deep sorrow her bereaved husband, her daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Holland, and their little son, William, her many other relatives and friends, and the Fonthill church of which she was an honored member for a quarter of a century, gently laid her at rest in the family lot in Toronto, to await the call of her Savior whom she loved so truly, and for whose coming she had much longed.

May her sleep not be long. May the day soon come that will enthrone our Lord in a rule of righteousness that will overthrow sin and death and the curse, and that will perfect peace and truth and life for evermore.

F. L. Austin.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. and Sr. W. D. Tilton of Oregon, Ill., are spending two weeks with his sister and other relatives in Omaha, Neb.

Mrs. Steffa, who is spending the winter in Golden Rule Home in anticipation of becoming a permanent resident later, was compelled to undergo a painful eye operation last week, from which she is recovering nicely.

The members and friends of the newly organized Plum River (Ill.) church had a basket supper and social gathering recently at the schoolhouse across the road from the church. Everyone was so well pleased that it was decided to meet again next month.

Sr. Lucy Lapp and family of Sunnyside, Wash., wish to greet their scattered friends through The Herald, and express the hope that the brethren will come quickly to the support of the N. B. I. in its time of need. They emphasize their desire by enclosing a contribution.

At the present time the board of the N. B. I. is sending out some two hundred individual appeals to brethren in various sections of the country to assist us immediately in meeting the pressing financial needs of The Herald and of our other departments. We believe the response will come. If you should be overlooked in this special appeal, please do not feel slighted, but indicate your willingness to help, voluntarily and freely. It will be deeply appreciated just at this time.

Sr. Amy Johnson of Marshalltown, Iowa, sends a message of thanksgiving to our readers, and tells of her own deep appreciation of the Lord's goodness to her.

That interest is not permitted to flag during the pastor's absence, as shown by the report of the Grand Rapids church, speaks well for the spiritual status of the congregation and for the past leadership of the pastor.

Sr. Mary A. Woodward has improved sufficiently in health to accompany Bro. and Sr. F. L. Austin to their home in Chicago last Saturday for a visit.

The pleasing word reaches us that Bro. and Sr. Ward Lindsay, Schulenburg, Texas, are rejoicing in the arrival of a son on Nov. 14. Bro. Lindsay is a son of our former editor, Bro. S. J. Lindsay, now of Tempe, Ariz.

The Herald appreciates the commendatory words of Bro. H. A. Sheets of Virginia, and also the loyal support which his congregations are rendering the N. B. I.

In the death of Sr. Weldon the Fonthill, Ont., congregation has lost one of its most beloved and faithful members. It may be truthfully said of her that she opened "her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue was the law of kindness." We look hopefully forward to the coming of the Lord and a joyful reunion in the kingdom of God.

BED ROCK

By Arlen Marsh

IN COMMON with the Frenchman who, according to an old poem, spent his life in a vain search for the better town that always lay beyond the nearby mountain, many of the earth's inhabitants so far have cast away the superstitions and inhibitions of the past as to seek impatiently and somewhat superficially for the something that they lack, a something indescribable yet nevertheless real, a something born of mental imagery and thwarted ambition. Ethereal though it is, that intangible desire, that indefinable purpose, that immeasurable object has succeeded in calling to its standard many million times that company which sought blindly, but hopefully, for a fictitious Holy Grail.

Deeply graven in the mind of almost every man is this unconscious longing for something better. Drawn by a force irresistible, those who are in its grip travel through the sands of life aflame with thirst for knowledge. Too practical in the main to accept the transcendentalisms of the mystic and theosophist, they have turned to the more empirical hypotheses of the scientist and the agnostic. Lack both of knowledge and of the inclination to learn has caused their rejection of the doctrines of Christianity and has left them without solace and possessed of an intolerable and unreasoning cynicism.

Almost two millenniums before this strange power laid hold of the general population in all its vigor, Paul predicted to Timothy that such would be the conditions. "Ever learning," wrote the Apostle in reference to the unhappy victims of this unease, "and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Then he added, "But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of."

As he confronts a galaxy of dogmatic lights in the religious firmament that puts to shame the stars of the celestial one, the thirster after knowledge and wisdom can hardly be condemned for his doubts concerning the value of the heterogeneous theories that he faces. Disagreements are the order of the day; the Bible is dissected and reconstructed with a scandalous freedom; and the results of this treatment, so say the authors of them, may or may not be believed according to individual conviction. If the resurrection seem illogical, do not accept it; if a unitarian Deity be incomprehensible, disregard It; if any dogma the church may teach be irreconcilable with personal opinion, it properly may be denied. No wonder that bewilderment changes to doubt and doubt to atheism!

Held out to the one attempting to find relief and consolation in the awful conglomeration of modern theology is the hope, "We'll build the new world!" The Book on which the church ostensibly stands gathers dust in neglected corners, while the man who blunders after concrete help dreams disgustedly of Keats' axiom:

"Beauty is truth, truth beauty."

If this be truth that the church teaches, then Keats lied; for there is no beauty in trifling argument, particularly in argument with what is alleged to be the Source of all truth.

Abstruse ideas of spirituality and moral living are offered in substitution for the solid facts of the Bible; yet at no time in all history has been such need or such demand for a teaching based on a foundation of definite doctrine. Its value cannot be overestimated, for not until it has been found can a man receive the satisfaction of knowing his God. Upon the positive, well defined statements of the gospel rests the only possibility of the spirituality that is being stressed by many; since none can be a Christian until he knows what such a person is.

WILLING TO SACRIFICE

By Mary A. Woodward

"For the poor ye have always with you; but me ye have not always."

BECAUSE of this lack, not always having the Christ with us, I am penning these few lines. And O, there are so many of us who are poor in pocket; but we must be careful not to be poor in spirit and never forget that however poor we may be financially we are never too poor to pay back to our dear Master our full tenth. That is His portion and we as His stewards must not be in debt to Him.

I saw Brother Perrine's one dollar in the Thanksgiving list and I know that meant sacrifice. Then I finished reading "An Earnest Plea" from an unnamed disciple, and that decided me. My doctor must wait a little, for God's work must not stop; for how could the weeks go by and no one getting THE HERALD to read? And how could we get along without the Training School another year? When we think of those dear boys, and girls, too, who are so brave in these hard times, working for very little besides their board, God bless them!

It is no fault of any of the N. B. I. board that the depression is on us. So let us all buckle on the armor a little closer and stand by the Master's cause and give. Get down and pray to the dear Father to give you a willing heart to give of your poverty. Let us see how many from each church will send one dollar to the N. B. I. next week. Think of the mite of the poor widow; how that has multiplied in all these years! Think how a dollar from each one of God's poor will boost the work.

We all want to be among the boosters. Let us show our colors this week and send one dollar. Go without the turkey or chicken and let Thanksgiving dinner be the poorest meal of the year for the Master's sake. I am willing, for one, to eat bread and milk for dinner and supper if we can ease the heavy load waiting to be lifted from the weary workers. May God hear and help. Amen.

GOD, OUR SOLE DEPENDENCE

By George B. Aldridge

"But I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me: thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God."—Psalm 40:17.

MANY readers of the Bible lose half of its beauty and helpfulness by putting their minds into a strained, solemn attitude the moment they open it. I find the best way to read the Bible is to take it up as I would any history, biography, or essay; and new truths, new beauty, and new sublimity appear in every page.

If religion be a practical thing, it must depend not only upon beautiful thoughts, but also upon matter-of-fact certainties. Its truths must come to us in a form in which we can carry them with us and bring them to bear upon our motives in the hour of temptation. When tempted, we need something solid to fall back upon—not a picture, not a mist, not a view, not a hypothesis, but a fact.

Since the day of righteous Abel unto this present generation God through His Word has responded to this supreme necessity of the soul of man. There never were in the history of the world such changes and uncertainty as now, never the need for faith to gaze unfalteringly upon the unseen and the eternal as now. Could we by faith realize that God is indeed present and very near each of us, then all else could well be sacrificed; for as Peter says, "The heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

A scripture which should be indelibly in our minds is, "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." Balak realized this as Balaam repeated to him God's message: "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"

Some people say, "I do not need to read the Old Testament, I get all I need from the New." Well, maybe; but for me God's faithfulness and integrity in honoring His Word stands out more conspicuously in the Old than in the New.

For instance, here are two incidents which skeptics capitalize. The first is found in 2 Samuel 6:3-8 and the second in 1 Samuel 6:19, 20. Under the law God warned any who would touch the ark of the covenant, except he were a priest, he would surely die (Numbers 4:15).

When David took the ark of God from the house of Abinadab, Uzzah and Ahio, sons of Abinadab, drove the cart on which it was placed; and as the oxen shook the cart, Uzzah, with honest intent, put forth his hand to steady the ark; and God smote him for his error, and he died. God could not tell a lie to save the life of one, however honest he might be. Honest error, though not so culpable, is equally injurious with willful transgression. The effect of poison is the same when taken by accident as when taken with deliberate intent. God's law in nature knows no difference.

I will quote the second incident: "And he smote the men of Beth-shemesh, because they had looked into the ark of the Lord, even he smote the people fifty thousand and threescore and ten men. And the people lamented, because the Lord had smitten many of the people with a great slaughter." What were the lives of 50,070 persons compared with the faithfulness of God's words and the assurance we have in its truthfulness?

So as I read, my faith is strengthened in the good Word of God, that He will fulfill it. So how precious the words of Isaiah 45:22-25 are! "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else. I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear. Surely, shall one say, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength: even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed. In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory."

Even angels, prior to the birth of Jesus, were not so

The Editor's Prayer

OUR FATHER, we would ask Thy special blessing to rest upon the reader of this page today. Lead him, as he peruses that which follows, into a deeper sense of appreciation of Thy constant goodness, especially as it is experienced by us all, even in times of almost universal want like these. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Where the Money Goes

IN THESE times of general need we frequently ask the question, "But where has the money gone?" There seemed to be plenty for everything a few years ago; what has become of it all?

The answer, of course, is not far to seek. There is just as much actual metal and paper money in the world now as there ever was in the past, probably a great deal more. It has neither been melted into ingots nor consumed by flames. The truth of the matter is we spent very little cash in those prosperous and irresponsible days, but we were lavish in our expenditure of credit. We mortgaged our property both real and personal and pledged our prospective incomes far beyond the bounds of reasonable discretion.

The government, local, state, and national, is composed of the total population of the country, and reflects the composite mind and character of our citizens; and so while you and I were pledging our property, our salaries, and our business honor to secure on the "deferred payment plan" new automobiles, radios, farms, and silk shirts, the government was bonding the entire country to establish new commissions, build new battleships at thirty million dollars each, new postoffice buildings that were frequently entirely unneeded, and to pay investigating committees to investigate investigating committees which had been appointed to investigate—ad infinitum. And so it went.

But now "pay day" has come around, or as they used to say in England, "settlement day"; and the piper and all his tribe are demanding their money, and they must be paid. What are we going to do about it? The chief difficulty lies in the fact we have all both "danced" and "piped" and have nothing to pay ourselves!

The sad thing about it all is that we have not learned our lesson even yet. Generally speaking, we are quite as improvident in our spending (while our money lasts) as we were in the more prosperous years. We are still scattering our remaining dimes about as carelessly as in the past, and the searching question of Isaiah the Prophet might well be addressed to us, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not?"

The president of Wisconsin University recently published an analysis of the way in which the American spends that dollar which he finds so hard to secure. With thousands, yes, millions, in actual need this winter his statement assumes the proportions of an indictment of our entire citizenship for their excessive selfishness. We are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" or of our fellow men. When we feel the pressure of need through being deprived of some of the luxuries we have enjoyed so freely in the past, we fall upon our knees before God and beg for relief. But we "ask, and receive not, because (we) ask amiss, that (we) may spend it upon (our) pleasures."—James 4:3, A. R. V.

And here is the way we do it, according to Mr. Frank: Of every dollar we spend 24 cents goes for living expenses, 22 for luxury, 14 for waste, 13 for miscellaneous, 11 for investments (including insurance probably), 5 for government (local, state, and national), 1 for education, and 1 for religion!

One cent for God and ninety-nine for ourselves! When we are inclined to "kick against the pricks" of adversity, let us think of these significant facts: only twenty-four per cent of our income is used for living expenses; we still spend almost as much for luxuries as we do for necessities; we spend twenty-two times as much for embellishments in our efforts to maintain a "high standard of living" as we devote to religion; we waste through thoughtlessness fourteen times as much as we return to God; and we invest one hundred ten times as much in Time as we do in Eternity!

In addition to all this we must remember that in spite of our selfishness and niggardly response to His bounty the heavenly Father continues to pour out His blessings upon us in measureless abundance. God does not treat us as we treat Him. Where would we be if He did?

"But the love of God is greater than the measure of men's mind,

And the heart of the Eternal is immeasurably kind!"

THE CHRISTIAN'S ARMOR

By J. H. Williams

"But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation."—1 Thessalonians 5:8.

IN HIS letter to the Thessalonians Paul sets forth the return of the Savior to earth, the resurrection of those who have fallen asleep in Jesus, the change that will take place in those saints who are living when He appears, and adds, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—1 Thessalonians 4:18. That the comfort contained in this hope of a resurrection is limited to a class or group can scarcely be doubted when we read, "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God, and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Romans 8:14, 17.

Therefore, the children of the day will be sober. They will put on the breastplate of faith and love: faith in God and the promises He has made to all those who come to Him believing that He is and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him; and love toward all mankind, with a supreme love for God. There will be a transformation in these children of the day, brought about by a constant re-rewinding of the mind, a continuous communion with the Spirit of God through the Word. It is only thus that the will of God concerning His people may be proven and understood.

Continued meditation day and night on the "exceeding great and precious promises" of the heavenly Father will become for the child of God a breastplate to ward off the fiery darts of the enemy assailing him from every side. Like David, who is declared to be a man after God's own heart, such a student will be able to say, "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth! Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way. Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psalm 119:103-105. That revered king of Israel, by heeding God's Word, was able to say, "Depart from me, ye evildoers: for I will keep the commandments of my God."—Psalm 119:115. These words of David, handed down through the ages, contain much the same thought as voiced by Paul to Timothy: "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee."—1 Timothy 4:16.

Concerning the second coming of our Lord, Paul says, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light."—1 Thessalonians 5:4, 5.

The question then arises, "What is a child of light?"

Such an one may very properly be described as one who, having heard the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ and having believed those things, accepts God's Word as a lamp to his feet, showing the path to salvation.

Having found the path through the Word of God, the first step therein is baptism for the remission of sins. Peter answered those seeking the way to salvation, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2:38. Thus are we "buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God."—Colossians 2:12.

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God."—Colossians 3:1. Having gone so far on the way to salvation, you will gradually come to transfer your affections from the temporal things of life to the eternal blessings that God has promised to bestow on us through His Son Jesus Christ, who died for us while we were yet sinners. Paul's advice is, "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth."—Colossians 3:2.

Paul, in all his letters to the churches, took great care to teach and admonish them how they should live. As a reason for this he says, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God."—Colossians 3:3. Buried with Christ in baptism, we have died to the world by putting off the sins of the flesh and putting on the new man, Christ Jesus. This new man will serve as the Apostle suggests in Romans 12:1: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." To the Colossian church he wrote, "Put to death therefore your members which are upon the earth: fornication, uncleanness, passion, evil desire, and covetousness, which is idolatry."—Colossians 3:5, A. R. V.

If we advance in the religion of Jesus Christ, we begin to rid ourselves of our fleshly lusts and desires and follow after righteousness by adding to our faith virtue (purity of character); and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. "For," says Peter, "if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ,"

"MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT"

By Harvey U. Krogh

THE conditions in our land the past three or four years have caused much hardship and suffering. Many people have suffered and apparently quite unjustly. About two years there was a drought over many parts of the United States, and a friend told me that it seemed that God was cruel to allow such suffering as took place in some areas. It is true that from man's standpoint it might seem cruel, but from God's view it is different.

We must always remember this: God has ways of His own, and we dare not judge God's doings. If God allowed this depression, we cannot question it. God's ways are right. "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Isaiah 55:8, 9. God is supreme. We see that even "the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men."—1 Corinthians 1:25. So why should anyone pass judgment on God's way of doing things when He is so far greater than we are?

When God created man, He blessed him and gave him dominion; but man soon sinned and misused the things God gave him. Because of that disobedience God placed a curse upon men and the earth. Since that time there have been much sorrow and distress. Jesus prophesied, "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places."—Matthew 24:7.

We find that many people suffer because of these things; but what about the righteous? Should they and do they have to suffer in time of famine or earthquake? David says in Psalm 37:25, "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

Some one says, "I know a Christian who is always suffering and always in need."

Yes, it is true that Christians have to suffer; for we read in Psalm 34:19, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." The sixth verse: "This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles." And the seventeenth and eighteenth verses: "The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles. The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit."

God is watching over us and caring for us. He will not let us be overcome if we are true to Him. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."—1 Corinthians 10:13.

We need not worry if we are God's servants, because God is kind. In Psalm 125:1-3 we find: "They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even for ever. For the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity." Peter says in his second epistle, chapter two, verse nine, that "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."

But God does not always deliver us from our afflictions and our temptations as we might think He should. The Apostle Paul was afflicted; and he said, "Lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness."—2 Corinthians 12:7-9.

Sometimes I think that if we would earnestly ask God to take some of our afflictions away from us, we might hear our Lord say, "My grace is sufficient for thee: my blessings on you are enough." The Lord does not need great men to do His work; He does not call on those who have all that they desire. The Lord said, "My strength is made perfect in weakness." "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—1 Corinthians 1:27.

Then we should say as Paul did: "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong."—2 Corinthians 12:9-10. Those are the things that we, too, should glory in and take our pleasure from. Those are the things which should make us happy. Suffering builds us and makes us stronger if we will endure. "We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became him (God), for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation (Christ) perfect through sufferings."—Hebrews 2:9, 10.

Again God's ways are not man's ways, for God makes strength and perfection through suffering. We, too, can be made perfect through enduring trials; "for both he that sanctifieth and they that are sanctified are all of one," and this is why Christ is not ashamed to call us brethren—we are willing to suffer with Him and to endure as He did. It is because of our sufferings with Him that we are to become joint-heirs with Christ, heirs of God's possessions. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof"; and "the meek shall inherit the earth."

Let us be patient when we feel that we are oppressed and tempted and tried, because there will be a crown of righteousness laid up for us if we endure to the end. We may have much to suffer, but remember God will not allow us to be tempted above that we are able to bear. God will protect us and care for us if we look to Him. If we had everything we wanted, we might not serve God as well as we do. God knows in what circumstances we will serve Him best; so we must remember that His grace is sufficient for us.

By M. W. Perrine

God is the Creator of the heavens and the earth, the sea and the dry land. The whole creation was the work of His hand and was altogether perfect; but it was ruined by sin. God, however, had a remedy provided. He said, "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth . . . wherein dwelleth righteousness."—Isaiah 65:17; 2 Peter 3:13. The firstborn in this new creation was Jesus the Christ. Why should this be? Because God had said from the beginning that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head (Gen. 3:15). Wonderful promise! Only a word; but it is God's Word, which is sure.

But the promise had to be worked into concrete form if it was to accomplish the divine purpose, that is, the One who should come should be both the "seed of the woman" and the "Son of God." No one but God could bring this about; so God sent His holy Spirit to minister and, addressing His word to Mary, said: "Therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."—Luke 1:35. And Jesus called Himself the "Son of man," thus combining the divine with the human.

The ark of the covenant provided a type of this uniting of the two elements in one. The wood of which the ark was made represented the human and the gold the divine nature in Jesus. In other words, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself."—2 Corinthians 5:19.

The Word of God first had to become flesh in order to become the "seed of the woman," for she was flesh. And John's record is, "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."—John 1:14.

Paul also declares that "when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4:4, 5.

It was this flesh and blood Son (for He was made of a woman, and how could He be otherwise?) that was to redeem the Israelites and adopt them, together with Gentile believers as sons of God.

Jesus was not a Son that had existed with the Father from eternity! If He was "made of a woman, made under the law," how could He have existed before the woman and before the law, except as He existed in the mind and in the purpose of God?

Paul said further that "he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence."—Colossians 1:18.

Jesus is the great central Figure to which all the prophecies point. He is the lodestone or magnet in God's plan of redemption as He Himself said. ("And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."—John 12:32.) And His great drawing power is love, whether He manifests it in saving one from sin by the gospel or in raising one from the dead after sin has done its work. Jesus proved His love when He offered up His life upon the cross and further declared love to be the new law that was to supersede all the law and the prophets. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John 15:13.

The preeminence of Jesus is shown in many ways in the Bible. He testifies of Himself, "I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (hades) and of death."—Revelation 1:17, 18. And John says concerning Him that He is "the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth."—Revelation 1:5.

At the time of His baptism the Father testified from heaven, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matthew 3:17. Being the Father's only begotten Son, He inherited all that belonged to the Father, including the world and its fulness. Even the Father's name, Jehovah—Jesus—was given Him; so the Father could speak of Him as God. Not that He was God, for He only claimed to be the Son of God; but because He was given an inheritance and power and authority equal to that possessed by God. "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."—Hebrews 1:8, 9.

Earlier in the same chapter Paul speaks of His preeminence. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath made heir of all things, ("on account of whom also he made the ages"—Diag.); who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the firstbegotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him."—Hebrews 1:1-6. Isaiah prophesied that "his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isaiah 9:6.

Paul gives us further insight into His preeminence as Savior of the world and instructs us as to what our attitude should be toward Him. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."—Philippians 2:5-11.

Jesus had learned the lesson of humility, that "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted"; and the Father called Him to a place at His own right hand. Peter, referring to Him, said, "This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders (the Jews), which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other."—Acts 4:11-12. To this Paul adds, "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."—Hebrews 7:25.

Paul, speaking again of His exaltation, says, "Which he (the Father) wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come."—Ephesians 1:20-23.

It is God's will to "have all men to be saved" through Christ; but Jesus said concerning this matter, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life."—John 5:40. Jesus is the antitypical ark, and He invites all who will to take refuge in Him. How were Noah and his family saved? By getting into the ark and abiding in it, and God shut them in, and they were secure one whole week before the flood came.

Now God's door of mercy is open, inviting all to take refuge in Christ. Do not spurn this gracious offer as the people spurned Noah's invitation. When God rose up and shut the door it was too late. Do not be unwise as they were. Remember the promise given through Daniel: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."—Daniel 12:3.

Peter compares the salvation made possible through baptism to that effected by entrance into the ark. "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us . . . by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 3:21. There is a likeness shown in this statement of Peter between the destruction that came upon the old world and the destruction that is coming upon this present evil world, the salvation of those who were in the ark and the salvation of those who are now in Christ.

Finally, how can one get into this ark? Believe in and be baptized into Christ (Gal. 3:26-28); and then abide in Him (John 15:4-7), even as Noah and his family did in the ark.

The Prophet Isaiah, looking down the stream of time to the end, saw the same period of trouble that was also foreseen and predicted by Daniel and other prophets, as also by our Lord, and saw the necessity of a secure refuge from the storm of God's wrath. And he witnessed the resurrection of the dead and the reward of the righteous. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain."—Isaiah 26:19-21. Isaiah well knew that no place of refuge that man could invent would be a safe refuge from the coming storm. Only God could provide such a refuge, and that refuge is Christ.

The beloved disciple points us to that place of refuge. "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."—1 John 2:28. David knew that the only secure place of refuge was in God. "Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me: for my soul trusteth in thee: yea, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast. I will cry unto God most high; unto God that performeth all things for me. He shall send from heaven, and save me from the reproach of him that would swallow me up. Selah. God shall send forth his mercy and his truth."—Psalm 57:1-3. Both mercy and truth are manifested through His Son Jesus Christ in these days; for Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14:6.

AN elocutionist who was giving an exhibition of his ability was asked to recite the 23rd Psalm. There was a preacher present in his audience, and he requested that the preacher might recite it after him. The elocutionist with his beautiful voice, excellent emphasis, and measured tones recited the Psalm; and the audience applauded. Then the preacher arose. He was unable to recite the Psalm with the faultless intonations of the elocutionist, but as he repeated it his whole audience was made to realize that he was living in vital union and communion with the One of whom he was speaking. There was no applause for him, but nearly every eye was wet. The elocutionist said, "I reached your ears; this man reached your heart. The difference is just this—I know the Psalm, but he knows the Shepherd."—Selected.

A VOICE FROM THE GATE OF GOD

By Arlen Marsh

LIVING in the strip of land left by the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers is a district made famous by prophet and historian, the probable cradle of civilization. Authorities differ on this last point, some ascribing the honor of giving birth to the governmental and mechanical organization which has developed into the modern complex living conditions to Egypt; but in any event, it is certain that the oldest earthly city and presumably the oldest kingdom sprang into being in this territory under the able leadership of Nimrod some two thousand, three hundred years (at the very least) before the decree of Caesar Augustus sent Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem.

For approximately seventeen centuries the little principality fostered by "the mighty hunter before the Lord" struggled against the political, social, and economic vicissitudes that always have assailed the nations of the earth. Rising and falling in power as it conquered or was conquered, it finally entered the eighteenth century of its existence under the guiding sceptre of Nebuchadnezzar, prince of the armies of Babylon under his father, and at this time sole regent over the vast lands he had succeeded in subduing. Encompassing relatively little time in his efforts, the son of Nabopolassar victoriously marched his armies from the Caucasus Mountains to the Arabian Desert and from Carmana in Persia to Cyrene in west Egypt.

Into this "world empire" went the young Jew Daniel, captured in the overthrow of Jerusalem and taken captive into Babylon to be educated as one of the king's seers, a position accompanied by wealth, honor, and responsibility. According to his own record of these events he was one "in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science." His training in Hebrew law, royal courtesies, mathematics, and religious practice was augmented by a three-year course in astrology, astronomy, and kindred subjects in Nebuchadnezzar's court. His name, meaning "God's judge," was changed by the royal policy to Belteshazzar, or "prince of Bel," in order to circumvent the discrepancies between his original appellation and the philosophy to which those living in the "Gate of God" (Babylon) clung.

During this period Daniel succeeded in winning the high esteem of the court officers by the splendid results of his close adherence to the simple diet he himself prescribed and of his absolute rejection of the rich foods commonly granted to those occupying a place of honor in the Chaldean palace. Not on any occasion did his faith in the God of his fathers waver; rather, indeed, his observance of the requirements of the Mosaic law was as rigid as it had been when he had worshiped in the temple at Jerusalem. This firm refusal to compromise with Bel and with fellow deities led him to an eventual place of rulership unparalleled by any from an enslaved people and enabled him authoritatively and publicly to defend Jehovah by carrying His message to the most dissolute of monarchs.

It was "in the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah" that this word was given "unto Jeremiah from the Lord": "I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me. And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come."—Jeremiah 27:5-7.

This prediction had been handed down a full half century before the armies of Babylon swept as an undefeated horde over western Asia and Egypt, leaving in their wake a devastated country and a population bound to unrequited toil. The apparently invincible king of these troops fell, as many with far less cause have fallen, into the cultivation of his ego until it blossomed forth as brilliantly as a rose. To reveal to the emperor and, subsequently, to all men the consequences of his and others' complacency was the task set before Daniel. In a series of visions, recorded at length by the Prophet himself, the future of mankind was disclosed; and by Belteshazzar, as he was inspired by God, they were interpreted as necessity demanded.

"And in the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar" came the first of the great "visionary visions" described by the Interpreter, the dream commonly known as the great image, a dream forgotten by the dreamer and narrated by Daniel for his benefit. "This image's head was of fine gold . . . Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. . . Thou art this head of gold."—Daniel 2:32, 37, 38.

After Belshazzar had assumed the regal power of Chaldea, the second dream was had. "I saw," said Daniel, "in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea. And four great beasts came up from the sea diverse one from another. The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings."—Daniel 7:2-4.

Nebuchadnezzar long before had been described as a lion or an eagle by Jeremiah. It does not require the concluding statement in Daniel 2:38 to arrive at the fact it was he who was represented by the head of gold. The two visions, dreamed at widely separated times, obviously related to the same individual or nation (the one corresponded to the other; since all Oriental rulers held the belief expressed by the English king, "I am the state!"), if only because they both were the first parts of their respective four-division dreams of world history-to-be.

There were important reasons for the use of gold in representing Babylon. The kingdom, while not so wealthy or so extensive as its successors, exceeded in lavishness and splendor even the civilization of Periclean Greece. Its capital city was encompassed by an enclosure "so thick and high as to embody more solid masonry than the Chinese Wall" (Dr. Joseph A. Seiss). "Hanging gardens," erected to satisfy the desires of Nebuchadnezzar's favorite wife; vast breakwaters; towering, ornate buildings; enormous aqueducts; and an endless use of gold, silver, and brass served to compose the rich display of the Chaldean cities. Slave labor, indefatigable because readily replaced, built all of this and much more, dug miles of canals and tunnels, and constructed great harbors on the Persian Gulf.

But the wealth and the kingdom, like all wealth and like all kingdoms, were, as Poe denominated all things human, "mutable and evanescent." In accordance with the revelation made to Daniel the lion's wings were plucked; and in the seventy-second year of "Darius the Median" (about 538 B. C.) the Medo-Persian Empire rolled over Babylon and swallowed it, leaving a quarter of the visions fulfilled.

GOD KNOWETH BEST

Sometime, when all life's lessons have been learned,
 And sun and stars for evermore have set,
 The things which our weak judgments here have spurned,
 The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
 Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
 As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue,
 And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
 And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
 God's plans go on as best for you and me;
 How, when we called, He heeded not our cry,
 Because His wisdom to the end could see;
 And, even as prudent parents disallow
 Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
 So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
 Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.

And if sometimes commingled with life's wine
 We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
 Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
 Pours out this portion for our lips to drink.
 And if some friend we love is lying low,
 Where human kisses cannot reach his face,
 O, do not blame the loving Father so,
 But wear your sorrow with obedient grace.

With faith more strong, O be content, poor heart!
 God's plans, like lilies, pure and white unfold,
 We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart;
 Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
 And if through patient toil we reach that land
 Where tired feet with sandals loose may rest,
 Where we shall clearly know and understand—
 I think that we shall say, God knew the best!

THE CHRISTIAN'S ARMOR

This growth can only come about by a regular "partaking of the sincere milk of the word"; and as we study the Word of God (if we do it in faith and love toward Him who first loved us), we may be able to make our calling and election sure, if so be that we continue in them.

The Apostle James has said, "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." There are too many who do deceive themselves by hearing the Word and not doing it. For that reason Adam lost his first estate. He heard the Word spoken in the Garden, but failed to heed it. By his disobedience he brought the curse on himself and all his posterity. As we see the work of that dread enemy, Death, on every hand, it should be an object lesson to us, leading us more and more into submission to our heavenly Father's will. Obedience is what God demands of His children, as well as faith in His Word. "Even so faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone."
 —James 2:17.

For those of us, then, who would not be found wanting when weighed in the balances, there is something to do as well as to hear. There is profit for the growing Christian in Paul's admonition, "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—2 Timothy 4:2-4.

That this prophecy is in process of fulfillment today is plainly evident, and that it points to the near approach of Christ's return can scarcely be doubted. If more proof were needed, Christ's own words describing conditions previous to His advent would surely be enough. "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, . . . so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matthew 24:37-39.

All Christendom is complaining of the lukewarm condition existing in the churches today. Of the cause Paul prophesies, "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."—2 Timothy 3:1-4.

Because the children of light have been given these signs, they should be careful to look to their armor. The breastplate and helmet should be kept in constant use. "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called. . . . I give thee charge in the sight of God . . . that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Timothy 6:12-14.

May we ever keep our eyes on Jesus, who is the Author and Finisher of our faith, foregoing the pleasures of this life, that we may be among those who meet the Lord in the air and that we may have a part in the regeneration foretold by John in his record of Revelation 21.

BACK to the Bible is forward to Christianity."—F. L. A.

GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD

By A. J. Eychaner

"And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come."—Mark 4:26-29.

THIS text in many respects is a remarkable one. It is the outline in parable of the kingdom of God, in the varied and successive stages of its development.

Let us draw an outline here upon the blackboard, that the eye may aid the ear and that we may get a clearer conception of the Master's teaching; thus:

1. The Sowing Time.
2. The first appearance of the Blade.
3. The development of the Ear.
4. The Full, or Ripe Corn in the ear.
5. The Harvest.

What is this illustration intended to represent? The text says, "So is the kingdom of God." It is the kingdom, then, that Jesus is illustrating. It does not refer to any condition of men in their relation to salvation, but to the kingdom to be set up among men.

The illustration is from nature and is easily understood. The successive stages in the figure are clearly marked, and we are not left to guess at its meaning, for we are told that Jesus is discoursing on the coming kingdom.

The divine government that God is establishing among men is a successive work, and marked by distinct stages in its growth. I said, "Is establishing." I mean by that that the work has already begun, by the sowing of the word of the kingdom. We are yet in the sowing time:

You will not be startled, then, when I say that these stages in the growth of the wheat in the illustration represent ages in the work of redemption. God's purpose is to redeem the world by means of the kingdom. But before He will set up the kingdom He must prepare a people who shall be the teachers and rulers and who are prepared to administer the divine government in righteousness. Hence the sowing time or an age of preparation.

From the nature of the figure it is evident that the Blade Age is after the Sowing Age is past; and the blade stage is followed by an age which shows signs of fruitage, spoken of as the "ear." This is followed by an age when the principles of that divine kingdom will have reached all the world—the age of "full corn." After this comes an age of "harvest," or the age of the world's in-gathering.

The kingdom of God in its administration of blessing the world will cover three ages of growth besides this present age of sowing. The "leaven" of another parable was put into three measures of meal. This is only another way of teaching the same great truth.

We think that we interpret correctly when we apply the sowing time to the present age. We should also bear in mind that the sowing time referred to in these parables has especial reference to the publication of the gospel of the kingdom, which we know began in Galilee (Mark 1:14). The sower soweth the word (Mark 4:14). This "word" is the word of the kingdom (Matt. 13:19). This is the same word or gospel which Jesus commissioned His disciples to preach in all the world (Mark 16:15). And the prophecy of the Savior is that this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations (Matt. 24:14).

The kingdom of God is to be a government of God for the people, through His chosen instrumentalities. The earth is yet to be filled with a knowledge of God. Mankind is to be schooled and disciplined until its actions conform to the divine law. Let us consider attentively these distinct phases of the kingdom's growth as introduced by the great Teacher.

The formative or elementary state of the kingdom spoken of as the appearance of the blade aptly represents the kingdom when it first appears, after this age of sowing. It will be after the second appearing of the Christ and the dawn of a new age in the world's history that the kingdom will first appear (2 Tim. 4:1; Dan. 7:13, 14). It will be like the tiny shoot of the wheat when it first comes up through the soil, so small that Jesus in another parable likens the kingdom at this point to a grain of mustard seed, the smallest of all seeds, but capable of the most marvelous growth (Mark 4:30-33). At this stage of its growth Daniel compares it to a stone, which in its wonderful growth becomes so great that it ultimately fills the whole earth (Dan. 2:35, 45).

But before this blade state can make its appearance to begin this work, the elements which go to make up a kingdom in its organized state must all have been developed and brought together. The territory, subjects, laws, central place of government, and rulers, all are necessary and will receive their proper share of preparation in the divine plan. After these have all been made ready, the kingdom in organized form will begin its work in the world (Dan. 2:44).

The kingdoms of this world are given to the Christ when He comes (Dan. 7:14; Rev. 11:15-18). The resurrection of the righteous dead and the change of the living will take place before the kingdom is organized, for they reign with Jesus (Rev. 5:10; Dan. 7:22, 27; 2 Tim. 5:12).

This reign with the Christ will begin with His coming. The first age will be one of conquest, the antitype of the conquest of Canaan by Joshua. The judgments of God will be abroad in the earth (Psa. 149:1-9; Isa. 26:9; Acts 17:31). This age of conquest and judgment will be followed by the millennium, or the thousand years of Revelation 20. There will also be a resurrection at the beginning of this second age (Rev. 20:4). Those who come up in this resurrection are the martyrs who were beheaded under the power of the Beast during the first age of the kingdom.

At the close of the millennium there will be an open rebellion of the forces of sin, which will be followed by severe judgments (Rev. 20:7-9). This will be followed by a general resurrection of all the dead at the beginning of the third and last age before the harvest.

This will be the final age of probation. That there will be probation for those who never have had an opportunity in this life there can be no doubt: first, because Christ tasted death for every man and because He is the true Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world (Heb. 2:9; John 1:9); second, because the books are then opened. We always open books at the beginning of business; and when business is over, we close them by settling the account. The dead are raised, and the books are opened, that in them their works may be written; for they are judged by the things written in them.

After the books are opened, they will remain open until the close of the age, when the dead will be judged out of the things that were written in them; and we are told that whosoever was not written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire, or the second death.

Then the harvest of the earth is ripe. The time has come for reaping. The angels will gather out of His kingdom all things that offend and they who do wickedly, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire (Matt. 13:41). Paul says that Christ must reign until He has put down all His enemies, when the kingdom will be given up to the Father and God will be All in All. The wheat has been gathered into the garner. The righteous shine as the sun in the kingdom of the Father. The Stone has become a great mountain and fills the whole earth. The three measures or ages have been leavened. Blade, Ear, and Full Corn have been rounded out; the Harvest is over; and the new heavens and new earth have come into view.

“I WILL never dare to think, nor speak, that the Scriptures can be adverse to themselves, but if any scripture seems to be so, and has a color as though it did contradict some other scripture, I will rather confess that I understand not the things that are spoken, being certainly persuaded that no part of Scripture can be opposite to any other part thereof.”—Justin Martyr.

GOD, OUR SOLE DEPENDENCE

highly favored as we are today. Peter says so. Here are his words: “Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.”

Next month Christendom will acknowledge the goodness of God by setting apart a day to commemorate the event which brought forth the glad acclamation from the angelic hosts, “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.” I think it was then that God revealed to the angels His plan for saving men by the preaching of the gospel. How different, though, its reception by angels and men!

When a soul is baptized into Christ, how many of us realize what is going on in the presence of God? Here is what Jesus says: “I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.”

So I trust only in God. My sole dependence is in Him; and from the depths of my heart my prayer is, “O Lord my God, great in power and excellent in knowledge, who orderest all things and weighest the actions of men, give me grace to serve Thee in better knowledge of Thy truth and righteousness. Thou teachest me good things and showest me the way of everlasting life through Jesus my Savior by the instruction I glean from Thy Word. Thou restoreth my strength with food convenient for me and renewest the powers of my mind by intervals of refreshment from continued application.

“Thy mercies surround me, ministering to my wants; and Thou art ever near at hand to be my defence and to direct my footsteps. I will rejoice in Thy providence, and thankfully remember the events of each day, remembering at all times that we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. I acquire knowledge that without love will puff me up.

“Keep ever before my mind the words of Jeremiah: ‘Let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth.’”

“Thine forever! O how bless’d
They who find in Thee their rest!
Savior, Guardian, heavenly Friend,
O defend us to the end.

“Thine for ever! Thou our Guide,
All our wants by Thee supplied,
All our sins by Thee forgiven;
Our lives hid with Thee in heaven.”

If we had no suffering in this life nobody would know what love meant.

RELIGIOUS BUSINESS

HE WHO tries to conduct a store but does not keep accurate account of expenditures and receipts and make frequent inventory is inviting bankruptcy. If he has no regular hours of opening and closing, no tidiness in arrangement of stock, no standard of dignity as to conduct permitted in his place of business, he is simply marking time until the doors are closed.

But conducting a religious work is the most important work that any man or woman ever undertook. Order and decency, therefore, are fundamentals which can build for success, or which, if violated, are sure to bring failure.

Business meetings should be held at regularly prescribed times and officers chosen who will conduct the work to the best interests of the class. An officer when chosen carries a heavy responsibility and has a wonderful opportunity to serve his Lord. To allow pleasure trips or other matters of passing importance to interfere with one's duty to his class and to his Lord is being unfaithful as a steward in the conduct of business. Whether you are an officer or not, if you have a class to work in, set an example for the rest of the class in regularity and punctuality.

Furthermore, help to see that the class work is conducted with dignity so that the best results may be obtained by all and Christ need not be ashamed of the conduct. Solomon once said there was a time for everything. Mirth has its proper time, and we all enjoy the smile and the laugh. But there is a time also for reverence and true worship. Let us not rob ourselves and the class by injecting the wrong atmosphere into the service period.

Turn frequently to the closing verse of 1 Corinthians 14 and meditate upon the great Apostle's admonition: "Let all things be done decently and in order."—F. E. Siple.

THE UNITY OF GOD

IT IS of more importance to understand the nature of God than to understand the nature of man. The first and great commandment is that God is one (Deut. 6:4, 5; Mark 12:29, 30).

As Israel departed from the true worship of God for the polytheism of the pagan nations, so has Christendom long since supplanted the worship of one God with that of the trinity. The seriousness of this error is apparent when we realize that to acknowledge it is one form of idolatry.

Jesus' Sonship is made a vital part of our faith. As the Son of God He was born into the world (Luke 1:35), and Scripture constantly refers to Him as such. More than one hundred twenty times He is called the Son of God. If we believe that Jesus is co-eternal with God, we deny His Sonship; for co-eternity is impossible in a son. The very word "son" implies a beginning; and this beginning is explicitly stated of Jesus in Galatians 4:4, Hebrews 1:5, and other places.

The holy Spirit is the power or influence of God. It proceeds from God (John 15:26) as light proceeds from the sun. The use of the word "Ghost" for "Spirit" is unjustified, since both are derived from the same Greek term. The Revised Version correctly renders it "Spirit" in nearly every occurrence. The holy Spirit exhibits the characteristics of an influence rather than those of a person. It is poured out (Isaiah 32:15) and fills houses and people (Acts 2:2, 4), is shed on believers (Titus 3:5, 6), and breathed (John 20:22). Christ was anointed with it (Acts 10:38), believers drink of it (1 Cor. 12:13), the apostles were baptized in it (Matt. 3:11).

A DAY OF FUN

"HURRAH, hurrah," cried the boys and girls piling out of school on Thursday afternoon. "No school tomorrow; goody, goody!"

"Let's have a game of baseball to wind up the season," said one. "Football!" said another.

And so they proceeded to lay plans for a big day, for the next day was to be "visiting day" for the teachers and a holiday for the pupils.

Deep in plans for a big time we spy our young friends, Jimmy and John, the sturdy nine year old twins that we have come to know and like so well in spite of their noise and occasional scuffles. This group planned to start the day with a hike to Castle Rock, where they would play "hide and seek" and some other games, eat their lunch (comprising "hot dogs" which they would roast over a big bonfire), and then hike back home.

"Each one bring plenty for himself and a little to spare," ordered John, who seemed to be the leader. "We'll meet at the playground at nine o'clock and leave at fifteen after nine. Whoever's not there then gets left, that's all!"

"So long," they called to each other. "See you tomorrow; hope it's a nice day."

Morning dawned bright and clear, and the twins were eating a hearty breakfast at seven-thirty. Their plans had been unfolded to Father and Mother, who gave their consent with many warnings concerning the fire. Immediately after breakfast Mother packed a big lunch in their knapsacks which they strapped on their backs, and they were off!

The appointed meeting place was six blocks from the twins' home, and it was nearing nine o'clock. As they swung briskly along, whom should they meet but the old street sweeper they had known all their lives.

"Let's give him a lift," said one to the other.

And two young strong bodies bent to the task of pushing the heavy cart, while the weary old man brought up the rear with many a grateful grunt of gratitude. This took them two blocks out of their way, but they safely deposited the load in the appointed place.

"It's fun, isn't it?" pronounced Jimmie.

"Let's help him some Saturday all day," bravely announced John.

Scurrying back on their tracks, they almost ran into Bill, the young man who delivered groceries to their home.

He had had bad luck, dropped a box of groceries, and spilled boxes, packages, and potatoes all over the sidewalk. They simply couldn't walk right by Bill without helping him, because Bill was one of their special friends.

Nothing daunted by this delay, out they started once more, discussing the possibilities of a "day of fun" sometime helping Bill. By this time they were only three blocks from the meeting place. Directly in front of them was a little girl, crying her eyes out and searching through the grass on each side of the walk. She had lost the money, two dimes and three nickels, with which she was to buy some things for her mother.

Looking anxiously at each other, wondering if it would make them late, they bent to search for the scattered coins. Minutes passed.

"Here's a dime; here's another," called Jimmie.

"And here's two nickels," cried John; "one more and we'll have them all!"

The last nickel, hiding itself under a broad clover leaf, was spied by John, and the little girl skipped happily on her way once more.

"Poor kid; glad we found 'em," they said to each other, and started again for the appointed spot. Arriving there without further delay, they found not a boy in sight! The hands of the clock in the court house tower pointing to ten-fifteen gave them the reason.

"Tell you what let's do! Let's go home and get some games and go over to our thankful boy's home" (for such they called the little crippled boy to whom they had given their Thanksgiving Day feast), said Jimmie.

Explanations to Mother were in order, games were gathered up, and once more they were off. Their timid knock was answered by a bright-eyed little girl who politely invited them to "come in." Explaining that they had brought some of their games over to show her brother, they were ushered into the next room where sat the little boy who could not run or play ball or do anything that needed good strong legs such as the twins possessed.

Needless to say, they were made most welcome, and soon three boys were absorbed in the new game the twins had received from Uncle John on Thanksgiving Day. When the noon whistle blew, Jimmie and John were suddenly reminded of the big lunch Mother had packed for them, and begged Robert, their "thankful boy," to allow them to share it with him and his sister.

LESSON 11. — December 11, 1932

THE CHRISTIAN'S USE OF LEISURE

Leviticus 23:39-43; Nehemiah 8:9-18; Zechariah 8:5; Matthew 11:16-19;

GOLDEN TEXT

Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.—1 Corinthians 10:31.

Those of you who read this page will, perhaps, have noticed that the heading this week is the same as that of last week. Last week the heads were reversed so that the wrong one was used. Please pardon our mistake.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Christian's Use of Leisure.

I. The Meaning of Leisure. (Mark 6:31.)

The apostles, after their return from the missionary journey upon which they had been sent by Jesus, were kept so occupied by the demands of the multitude that pressed about them, that "they had no leisure so much as to eat." The word "leisure" does not mean idleness. It is defined as "freedom or opportunity afforded by exemption from occupation or business." Leisure provides opportunity for one to engage in pursuits foreign to the ordinary duties of life. It is a period when one is not "pressed for time." The characters of men are revealed in the way they employ their leisure hours. They may use them wisely in increasing their strength of body and mind, or they may waste them in profitless amusement.

II. The Social Use of Leisure. (Nehemiah 8:10-17.) The children of Israel centered their social life in their great religious festivals, the passover, and the feast of tabernacles. In the early days of America the social life of the people found expression in religious activities, or in events closely connected with the church. In the church an opportunity is presented for the social gathering of the most wholesome elements in any community. Further, the work of the church is sufficiently broad to provide that variety of thought and labor that is so necessary to spiritual and moral growth. The deepest and most lasting benefit is derived from associating with those whose lives are clean, and whose conversation is confined to subjects that build up and strengthen ideals.

III. The Spiritual Use of Leisure. (Mark 6:30-32.) Throughout the history of God's people we find them devoting much of their time to religious exercises. Jesus, John the Baptist, and Paul spent many quiet years of leisure in the wilderness learning the mind and ways of God. More active use of leisure may be made with profit by faithful attendance at the services of the church, the Sunday school, and the Berean society. These all lead to spiritual growth.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Leisure: Everybody has some leisure moments, or should have, for there is a time to work and a time to play. In these days of shorter working hours we are having more time to ourselves and for ourselves, and it is a big problem to some to know how to use this extra time that modern conditions have brought to them. To many leisure is proving a curse rather than a blessing. They are using it in idleness and pleasures. "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." There is no harm in pleasure if of the right kind and not overdone. Pleasure that appeals to carnal instinct and lustful desire is not the kind of pleasure that one should participate in. The great tendency of today is not to use only our leisure hours, but to overstep and use the time that rightfully belongs to the Lord. Sunday is the day that belongs to the Lord and is not a day for picnicking, golfing, ball playing, fishing, and other similar forms of sport and pleasure. This kind of desecration on the part of professing Christians has been a large and potent factor in making Sunday a day of sport and pleasure.

Rest: Our physical bodies need rest and relaxation; the same is true of our minds. There is no better way to accomplish this than to draw ourselves away from crowds. As Jesus said to His disciples, "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while." These quiet hours afford splendid opportunity for meditation on the "law of the Lord" which is restful, refreshing, and immensely profitable.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

All through life there is something to be done. We do not all have the same work; neither are all capable of doing the same work. Some are better fitted for certain things than others, but there is always something for each one to do, whether it be washing dishes in the home or preaching the gospel to the heathen. The one who washes dishes or does any other servile work can do it to the glory of God.

It is the spirit in which the work is done rather than the kind of work that makes or breaks for good or evil. If the most menial task is done with the thought that I can honor my Master by doing this then that task becomes less menial and is turned to the glory of God. Living and working to honor God should be uppermost in our minds. Therefore let's strive to honor and give glory to God, regardless of our station in life, or what is given us to do.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Modern life is so strenuous and exacting that vacations and regular exercise are recommended as a balance. These are often carried to excess. So many forms are presented today that it becomes a problem as to just what recreation a Christian can use and what not. The Apostle Paul, who recorded a very practical Christianity, has given us those forms of recreation that are best. He was speaking under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost when he said, "Exercise thyself rather unto godliness."—1 Tim. 4:7. One who would keep all godliness will find the proper amount of exercise and rest necessary for physical well-being.

"Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1:27. This visiting together, with attendance at church and prayer meeting will do wonders for the body. In the next verse (1 Tim. 4:8) Paul adds, "For bodily exercise profiteth little (margin, for a little time): but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." No other recreation can give one as much as the above. Golf, tennis, swimming, etc., may aid in this life for a limited time only, but cannot build for the life to come. Dancing never was a profitable exercise nor a godly pastime.

"Exercise thyself rather unto godliness."
—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

We have considered right ways of earning money, best vocations in life, and now we will discuss best ways to spend our leisure time. Rest and play are needed to round out our lives, but the manner in which we spend our rest time makes all the difference in the world to us. We know many people who are quite wise as to their work, applying themselves most diligently to their tasks, but when it comes to their leisure, they seem to have no thought as to how it affects everything else, spending it in ways that are harmful. The word, recreation, is an interesting word. It comes from the Latin and means to create anew. Then recreation should be something which will result in a renewal of mind and body, not a destruction of them. Webster says it is refreshment of the strength and spirits after toil. In class, discuss the various ways in which those of your acquaintance spend their leisure time.

Many of the feasts which God instituted for His people were occasions of gladness and joy. The daily home readings give you a list of references regarding them. We know that God recognized the value of relaxation. In all of our recreation if we ask ourselves if God would approve, we will not go far wrong. May each of you make the right choice of methods of enjoyment, as you grow older year by year, discarding the harmful and pursuing those that truly re-create.—M. G.

THE CHRISTMAS HERALD

We are planning to make the holiday issue of The Restitution Herald a real HERALD of the Lord's coming, covering both the first and second advents. His first appearance marked the most important event that had occurred to that time, and His second coming is by far the most important happening the future holds in store for the world.

Plan now to have The Herald sent to your friends as a Christmas present, their subscription to begin with the Christmas number of December 20. What more splendid gift could you make than to send to your friends and loved ones an announcement of the Lord's coming? Remember, you can provide them with the equivalent of about ten large volumes of inspiring religious reading for One Dollar and Fifty Cents (new and Christmas subscriptions only), which is the price of a single volume if secured in book form.

A special Christmas Gift announcement will accompany the first issue of such subscriptions so that your friends will know whom to thank each week for the year-long present. Send in your subscriptions at once so that they will reach us in time for the special Christmas number.

AT THE SOUTH BEND CHURCH

Rally Day at the South Bend, Ind., church was not only an enjoyable day, but produced some results which we hope may be of real progress to the church growth and interest.

We had for our speaker on Rally Day our own beloved Bro. Floyd Stilson. He consented to speak for us with reluctance. His talk pleased every one, and on comparing opinions afterward a number of different people expressed themselves as having thought that it would be fine to have him regularly. The result was that Bro. Stilson was asked to assume pastoral charge of the church here and has consented to speak for us two Sunday mornings of each month, the second and fourth. Will all interested members and friends within reach of South Bend remember these dates and join us in worship and service.

Our Sunday school meets at ten o'clock each Sunday morning, and our preaching service follows at eleven. The place is the Community Room of the Y. M. C. A.

Idona Romine, Secretary.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

It is a comfort and blessing after a wonderful vacation trip to be back on the job with the home church, and the full houses that greeted us Nov. 20 would warm the heart of any pastor. At the morning service a heart-to-heart talk on "Thankfulness" was given; and in the evening the life and lesson of Gideon, "a mighty man of valor," was presented.

Final arrangements are being made as this is written for a 7:30 a. m. Thanksgiving service at the church on Thanksgiving Day.

Bro. and Sr. Courson of Grandville very faithfully conducted the services during our absence. We appreciate it deeply. We found Bro. Richardson about the same on our return.

All departments of the church are in a healthy condition, for which we are most thankful to our heavenly Father.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Bro. and Sr. Eugene Howard, formerly of Kansas, have moved from Arcadia to 607 Milan St., South Pasadena, California. On Thursday, Nov. 10, we took them over to Redlands to visit with their old time friends and neighbors, Sr. Orem and Sr. Wilma Judy. While they were visiting with Sr. Orem, we went over to Riverside to see Sr. Jessie Kauffmann and Sr. Wood. Sr. Wood has pretty well recovered from her illness and is now able to go to town by herself. After dinner at Sr. Orem's house we went to see Sr. Shepherd. She is not in good health having never completely recovered from the automobile accident from which she suffered some time ago. Bro. and Sr. Howard returned to Pomona with us and then went to South Pasadena the next morning.

Last spring we started a Bible class in Pomona on each alternate Sunday evening and so continued meetings during the summer. With the coming of fall Bro. Lichty and his family returned to Pomona, from which they had been away for some years. They have taken an active part in the class, and with his help in the teaching of the class it is now being held every Sunday evening in the Williams Street Chapel instead of in the various homes. Sunday evening, Nov. 6, a "pot luck" supper was held at the chapel before the beginning of the class. We are now studying the signs of the times with especial reference to the return of the Lord. Bro. and Sr. J. E. Hammond and Ruth Smead came over from Los Angeles to attend the meeting.

At Long Beach last Sunday afternoon we performed the rite of baptism for Bro. Wilson Calkins of Lynwood. A rather large group of Long Beach and Los Angeles people were present at the water and later at the home of Bro. and Sr. Rich. Sr. Railsback will probably give further details of this meeting.

Bro. W. B. Ward recently returned from an extensive trip through the East, visiting friends and relatives in Arizona, Texas, Indiana, South Carolina, and Virginia.

Sr. Ora Knott, after a long siege of illness, recovery from which was twice interrupted by serious relapses, is now thought to be on the road to permanent recovery.

Norman John McLeod, Pastor.

TO THE CALIFORNIA BRETHERN

Feeling that the appeal of Bro. Conner should not go unheeded when we consider the needs of the national organization of the church, we wish to add our appeal to his, and to further assurance of this belief make the following pledges to that work: (The amount thus far pledged from these California brethren is paid in full, and acknowledged under "Special Contributions."—Editor.)

HOLBROOK, NEBRASKA

Thanksgiving Day was observed in the good old-fashioned way at the Church of God at Holbrook, when one hundred seven members and friends of the church gathered for a short program of song, a reading by Sr. Buelah Wilson, several expressions of thanks from different ones followed by a sermon by Grover Gordon, the theme being taken from Psalm 50: 14, 15: "Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most High: and call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." The concluding thought was from Colossians 4:2: "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving."

At noon a bountiful basket dinner was served, and judging from the abundance of food, we can say that God has wonderfully blessed us with the temporal things of life in these depressing times.

The afternoon service consisted of special songs and a sermon by Bro. Arthur Hornaday, his thought being that, "salvation belongeth to the Lord," Psalm 3:8, and "to God belong the issues from death," Psalm 68:20, which come through our Lord Jesus Christ. "By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name. But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."—Hebrews 13:15, 16.

All departed to their several homes feeling that what this old world needs is more thanksgivings and fewer misgivings.

Sunday morning, November 27 will mark the beginning of a series of evangelistic meetings to continue for three weeks at the Church of God at Holbrook.

Bro. F. L. Austin, the "Back to the Bible Evangelist," will be with us. To those near we extend a cordial invitation and to those who are not located so that you can attend we invite your prayers that "the gospel of Christ which is the power of God unto salvation," may be made manifest unto many to the end that they will take up their cross and follow Him.

Grover Gordon, Pastor.

"THE VISITOR"

Recently I learned of a woman who was lending her copy of "The Visitor" to the boys of her church. I am wondering if there are not members of our own church who will do the same. Hence, I am offering to send one copy to anyone who will lend the same, especially to the boys. Send ten cents in stamps to pay for wrapping and mailing. Please do not delay, for this offer will not appear again. Address, Harriet E. Boice, 1009 South Wright Street, Champaign, Illinois.

OUR SOUTHERN TRIP

The meetings at the Happy Woods Church near Hammond, La., the place of Bro. W. H. Wilson's one time "Pine Woods Bible Class," continued with good attendance from Nov. 1 to 13. In addition to the evening services there we motored to the Blood River district, where the Springfield Bereans have been successfully operating for the past year, and held afternoon meetings. The value and success of Berean work are most evident in places like this and Hammond, and wonderful personal development is noticeable.

Five responded to the gospel call and were baptized before we left. They are: Mrs. Lucinda (Wm.) Hutchinson, Mrs. Ophie (Bernard) Lobell, Miss Mary Richardson, all of Rt. 1, Hammond, La.; and Eddie Hutchinson and Miss Dollie Bylsma of Hammond. The last one named was baptized under a full southern moon after the meetings had closed Sunday night, Nov. 13. The two Hutchinsons are not of the same family, the one an elderly lady and the other a young, unmarried man. The others are all young people, also.

A day's delay caused by a motor accident on Nov. 14 made possible a class meeting that night of members of the 1913 graduating class of Hammond High School, some of whom we had not seen since nineteen years ago last May. And the teacher, Miss Annie Eastman, who guided us most closely so many years, was with us again.

Tuesday we returned to Alabama, where we picked up the children, bade farewell, and on the following day started for home. It was a privilege to be able to stop over for a couple of hours with brethren at Eldorado, Ill., and also at Marshall, Ill., and then to eat dinner again with the F. A. Stilson family and Sr. Railsback at South Bend. The deep ice and snow in Indiana made driving slow and perilous, but we reached home safely Friday night, the 18th, and found all well.

Sophrona Galbraith was born at Waterloo, P. Q., Canada East, April 28, 1848, and died at the home of her daughter, Andella Beek, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, of pneumonia, Nov. 11, 1932. She was married to George Gage at Belleview, Ontario, Nov. 18, 1864. To this union there were born two children, Roscoe of Cedar Falls, Iowa, and Ardella Beek of Cedar Rapids. In 1866 they moved to Grundy County, Iowa, living on a farm until a few years ago, when they moved to New Hartford, Iowa, where she resided until her death. She was a loyal and zealous member of the Church of God. The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Sr. Anna D. Springer, Lancaster, Ohio, sent us a letter filled with the spirit of thanksgiving, but which reached us too late for publication in our special issue. She makes some very practical suggestions for the wider use of The Herald of which we hope to speak later.

The material for the new quarterly is being assembled. Get in your order early for "A Quarterly for every pupil every Sunday."

Do not forget to place The Herald at the top of your Christmas shopping list!

Bro. R. H. Judd, whose scholarly articles so frequently appear in The Herald, has sent us copies of a number of interesting poems he has written, most of which have to do with the everyday business of "living with others," and touch a responsive chord in the hearts of all busy people.

Sr. Harriet Gesin, the aged mother of Bro. Chas. Gesin of Oregon, Ill., suffered a serious accident last Friday when she fell down a flight of stairs at the home her daughter near Freeport. At last report she was resting easily. Pray for her recovery.

We are pleased to learn that Bro. F. L. Austin, the "Back to the Bible Evangelist," began a series of special meetings last Sunday at Holbrook, Neb. Our knowledge of Bro. Austin's work elsewhere leads us to anticipate for that community a real "Back to the Bible" revival, something that is needed everywhere. Pray for the success of this effort.

The article entitled, "Growth of the Kingdom of God," by Bro. A. J. Eychaner, appearing in this issue, is republished from a tract which was not only written, but set in type and printed on a hand press by the author while he was pastor of Park Hill Church in Gladbrook, Iowa, many years ago. The truth it expresses is as fresh and timely as when it originally appeared. This article reminds us that Bro. Eychaner recently celebrated his ninetieth birthday anniversary.

If you are looking for Christmas presents, glance over the inexpensive offerings of the National Berean Society described on page 11 of this paper. It will save you money.

A suggestion to those reporting for the various local churches: Why not include in your reports occasionally a brief review of your pastor's especially interesting sermons? All would be profited by it.

The splendid response made to Bro. Conner's appeal by the brethren of the Los Angeles church provides an example and a precedent that many other congregations might well follow. If a similar effort would be made by each of our churches the general work would soon be relieved of all anxiety. We thank God for the generosity of these brethren.

With the appearance of the article, "The Christian Armor," The Herald is glad to introduce a new contributor to its columns in the person of Bro. J. H. Williams of Rochelle, Ill. Bro. Williams has been associated with the work of the General Conference from its beginning and is now its vice president. He has been a life-long student of the Word, and his ability as a writer is here evidenced.

The Oregon, Ill., church held a Thanksgiving service last Thursday evening. Following the six o'clock dinner in the church, a service was held in which the heads of the different departments of the church expressed their reasons for feeling thankful to God at this time. It was found that the causes for thanksgiving far outnumbered all reasons for despondency.

Do not forget to place The Herald at the top of your Christmas shopping list!

Bro. and Sr. Alex. Scroggs of Murphy, Ore., in renewing for The Herald say, "O that there were many heirs of God in the household of faith who would hold up your hands; for far be it from all the faithful to see the noble work of the N. B. I. lag in the least on account of insufficient means to carry it forward."

I'VE BEEN THINKING

By Harriet E. Boice

THAT is what most of us do all the time; but we who are shut in most of the time do a little more serious thinking, perhaps. Whether our thoughts are sad and depressing or joyful and invigorating depends upon our attitude toward life.

Good health, comfortable circumstances, friendships, companionship, and our abounding faith in God are all things that we should be most thankful for; but many of the most beautiful thoughts have been penned and given to the world by those in deepest distress. This could not have been so but for their love of humanity and their abiding faith in God. There are many things in life over which we have little or no control that bring sadness and depressing thoughts; however, the thing most necessary for all our well-being now and hereafter is faith in God. "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

I have been thinking after reading THE HERALD'S Thanksgiving letters of those whose names have been so familiar to many of us for years and have become entwined with our thoughts and stand as faithful stewards of God. Yes, we thank God for such lives. I have been thinking, too, of the new names, of those whom we have never met, who have recently started in the ministry and are yet to be tried under the yoke, not of bondage, but of freedom in Christ. They will meet many discouragements and will face the fact that their success or failure will depend, not so much on the backing they get from the organization with which they are connected, as from their capacity to make the most of their individual opportunities.

If I remember rightly, Jesus did not send His disciples out with a large bank account to back them but said, "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, . . . for the workman is worthy of his meat." The cause of Christ need never stand still for lack of funds if the individual members of the church improve the opportunities that come to them. We have depended too much on what the organization might do and not enough on what the individual can do if he has a mind to take the trouble to think the thing out and do that which is at hand and within his means. We can look around and find something that needs our prayer and our cooperation to answer that prayer, for faith and works go hand in hand.

We have all felt the effects of the depression more or less. We have some idea of what it has caused of misery, despair, and crime. I have heard of many cures for the depression, but this one is most distracting. Our brother says: "The only cure for depression is more of it." The logic of this statement is too much for my mind to grasp in view of the terrible suffering of humanity that it has brought about.

I could not be thankful or earnestly pray for more of these things that have been the cause of this depression, namely, the great war, the speculation and inflation. I rather pray, "Lord, give us wisdom to extricate ourselves from such insecurity and to give the laborer work for his hands to do and sufficient pay to provide the necessities of life."

The world has been suffering also from "high-powered salesmanship." How many times have you been induced to buy something on credit, perhaps a new car or some luxury you could not afford or pay cash for; and now the pinch has come, the job has been lost, and so misery comes to the man in debt and without a job. The one lesson we should learn is that taught by Paul: "Owe no man any thing." That is the one thing we can practice to our advantage in the present situation. "Pay as you go."

There is hope that men, as well as nations, may learn practical lessons from this depression that will be beneficial for ourselves and for the generations to come. The one need now is to balance the budget. We should all live within our incomes, whatever they may be. I know of no better plan than to begin at once to use the resources at hand to restore prosperity to ourselves individually. There must be the individual effort to do something. Many of those without jobs can find something to do that will be helpful to somebody in some way. No one need be entirely idle, though all jobs may not bring in the cash. There is much work to be done at all times, and one is much better off to be busy at something rather than to let the hands be idle and the mind go "wool-gathering." If we persevere in well-doing, the reward will be sure.

Recently I heard the story of a woman living in the mountains of Kentucky who wanted very much to get books for her neighbors to read. She was very poor and had no money to buy them. She prayed, of course, for what she wanted most; and one night in a storm a stray sheep took shelter by her door. In the morning the sheep was cared for and was found to have given birth to a little lamb. The woman took this as a means to answer her prayer; so she sheared the sheep, wove the yarn, sold it, and bought books from year to year until she had a library of many books. This may be a lesson to us.

One by one the games were all played, and it was time for the boys to go home. As they crawled into bed that night at their usual hour, they thought of the hikers and wondered if they had had a good time.

"I know they didn't have any more fun than we did," murmured John.

"Bet they didn't either," agreed Jimmie sleepily.

And a little crippled boy turned over on his pillow and whispered, "Thank you, God, for a happy day"

THE GREAT TRIBULATION

By Dr. A. B. Simpson

"Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."—Rev. 3:10, 11. "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand."—Luke 21:36.

THERE looms large and dark in the vista of prophecy a dreadful cloud upon the future of this world. Isaiah asked the watchman, "What of the night?" and the answer came, "The morning cometh, and also the night." The last shadows blot out the dawn. Jeremiah cries, "Alas, alas, for the day is great; it is even the day of Jacob's trouble." And Jesus Christ tells us of it in His Olivet discourses (Matt. 24:21): "Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

The dreadful hour of sorrow is to be especially severe upon Israel. We have already quoted Jeremiah's prophecy of Jacob's trouble; but he adds, "He shall be delivered out of it." Daniel in his last chapter reaches this closing vision, almost, of the Christian age (Dan. 12:1), "There shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." That this time is the distant future is revealed in the next verse, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake."

Zechariah more fully pictures this catastrophe, this furnace worse than the Egyptian bondage. "And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein. And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried; they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God."—Zech. 13:8, 9. "I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives."—Zech. 14:2, 3, 4.

But it shall not only be a day of trouble for Israel, but also for all the nations. In Luke's report of the Olivet address, we have this full account of the tribulation: "There shall be . . . upon the earth distress of nations."—Luke 21:25. This is an extremely intense word. It is more than distress. It is desperate distress, distress which leaves men at their wits' ends, so that, as John tells us in the vision of the Apocalypse, "In that day men shall desire death, and shall not find it." "Distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

We hear the mutterings already, the volcanic forces that are underlying our social, industrial, and political life and which might easily break forth at any moment but for restraining providences which shall be removed in that tribulation time.

IT WILL BE THE NATURAL RIPENING OF SIN

Let us look at some of the causes of this dreadful condition of things that is coming upon the earth.

It will be the human heart in its corruption and depravity and with all the added forces of modern development and culture reaching their highest possibilities of wickedness and misery. We have just such a picture as this in Rev-

"Men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed."—Psalm 72:17.

The Editor's Prayer

OUR HEAVENLY FATHER, we thank Thee for the bountiful manner in which Thou hast provided for our material needs as well as for our spiritual requirements. We especially glorify Thee today for the support Thou hast given to our general work through the faithfulness of Thy people. Prayers are being answered, Thy work is going on, Thy children are being blessed and comforted by the assurances they are receiving of Thy overruling care. Continue thus to bless, we pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

Terrified Christians

"NOT the least startling discovery of our time is the multitude of supposed Christians who are as terrified as anyone else," said Dr. Joseph M. Gray, the pastor of the Central Methodist Church, Detroit, recently before the Chicago Sunday Evening Club. "We have not lived in the land of the spirit we claimed. The idea of God has been interesting but irrelevant. We have wanted to have religion without becoming religious. We want a God that keeps His distance, being on call rather than wanted. As a consequence the great suffering of today is one of loneliness."

For the student of prophecy this is not a "startling discovery" that is called to our attention by Dr. Gray. It is a condition with which we have been familiar for many years and the causes of which are not hard to find.

First, in point of time, fear has been implanted in the heart of the Christian by those who held to the unscriptural theory that eternal torment was the punishment for sin. Second, the "supposed Christian" has been terrified through his failure to study carefully and to interpret rightly the prophetic Word. Had he done so, he would have known the meaning of the events which now so frighten him and would have rejoiced at the evidence presented of the Lord's return. Third, as the speaker said, "We have not lived in the land of the spirit we claimed." That is, we have not rejoiced in a full conviction of God's goodness and love and a faith that laid hold upon His promises without faltering and without fear. These are the reasons why Christians fear.

Will He Come to the Feast?

FOLLOWING the resurrection of Lazarus the fame of the Wonder-Worker of Galilee was carried far and wide, and the multitudes assembling at Jerusalem for the Feast of the Passover were hoping for a glimpse of this remarkable Prophet of God.

Among others who were thus anxious to meet Him was one particular company of Jews that had apparently but recently arrived in the city from some distant place. They had passed through the ceremonial purification preparatory to participation in the great annual memorial; and now that all was in readiness as far as they were concerned, they were seeking to learn about Jesus.

They knew that every Jew that could possibly do so would be present at the feast; but they also knew that the high priest had determined to destroy the One whom they sought and that he had issued an order demanding that anyone who knew of His whereabouts should immediately inform him that Jesus might be apprehended and killed. Caiaphas had said, "It is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not."—John 11:50.

Knowing all these things, these visiting Jews questioned, "What think ye, that he will not come to the feast?"—John 11:56.

It was merely a matter of casual interest for them. Perhaps nothing more than an idle curiosity prompted their desire to see Jesus; but nevertheless, they really wanted to know if He would actually appear at the feast. And that is the question I am asking now.

In a few days we will be meeting in our various churches to celebrate the great annual memorial feast of the Christian world—the first coming of our Lord. We will recall once more the startling events that marked His birth as the Babe of Bethlehem. We will echo the gladsome chorus of the angels, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." We will tell again the wonderful story of that night of mystery and miracle, of angelic visitation and heavenly promise. It will all have to do with the first coming of our Lord.

And I wonder—is it not possible—that He may come to the feast?—personally, gloriously, visibly, to you and to me "come the second time, without sin unto salvation"?

What think ye, that He will come to the feast?

"IN MY FATHER'S HOUSE"

By Norman John McLeod

IN THE ORIENT many things are done according to formulae. Because men have lived together in such large numbers in such close quarters for so many centuries, they have formalized social relations. Jesus knew many of these formulae of courtesy and used them in the teaching of His doctrines just as He used many other familiar things.

When a guest approaches the house in the Near East, he is met by the servant of the house long before he arrives at the house itself. The servant greets the guest with this formula (the words are partly my own): "In my father's house there are many spare bedrooms. If it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." ("We shall put a clean sheet and some clean pillow slips on the spare bed," we would say in our country.) "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you into our house, that you may dwell with us while you are staying here." This formula Jesus used when giving His discourse to the disciples about the "mansions."

What did Jesus mean? Was He going to prepare a guest chamber in heaven for us? Are we to follow Him to heaven to be with Him among the clouds? Or had He another meaning? In order to understand what He meant, we must go back into the previous chapter. Peter had asked the Lord a question, and Jesus started there to use a form of reasoning now no longer used. We would think of it as unsound logically, but then it was considered the best form of teaching. One thought leads to a related one, and that in turn to another related one, and so on in a semi-circle.

In John 13:33 Jesus had said to them: "Yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you." The most natural question that could be asked was asked by Peter: "Lord, whither goest thou?" Jesus gave him an answer, plus other things. He said to Peter in effect: "I am going to heaven, but you cannot."

What? The gatekeeper of heaven is not to go there? Surely that is a strange thing if the passage about the mansions is to receive its ordinary interpretation. But immediately comes another thought: You cannot follow Me to heaven, but you can follow My example. The impulsive Peter could not wait to do that; he must follow Jesus' example immediately. But even that was denied him: the cock should not crow until Peter failed to follow that example three times. So Peter felt downcast; he must needs be comforted. Then follows the comfort passage.

The word "follow" is in a measure a play on words. You cannot follow Me literally to the actual place I am going, but you will follow Me figuratively through the ways of suffering and tribulation. The discussion is removed from its original phase to another, from actual bodily following of a person to imitation of an example. That Peter immediately saw the point there is no doubt, for he showed himself ready to lay down his life for the Master. To comfort Peter for the fact that he could not follow the Lord, but instead would deny Him, Jesus started off on a different train of thought also related to what had been said. (Step one: You know where I am going. Step two: You shall follow Me in tribulation.)

Then there follows another transition: "And whither I go ye know"; (now the key phrase) "and the way ye know." Thomas provided the basis for the transition: "Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way?" Those were the bald facts. Always Thomas wanted the facts. We should be very thankful to him for that attitude.

But what a strange reply: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." Who had said anything about truth or life? The discussion was about going some place; now it is about truth and life. How did the argument get into such a situation? Thomas had been puzzled about Jesus' going away; Jesus used that bewilderment to teach some new truths. Thomas said we cannot know the way. Jesus: "I am the way." The way where? To truth and life! Jesus was not an actual, literal way to any place; but His teachings were the way to life and truth. That is typical of His arguments.

The same type of argument was used in discussing the "true manna, which came down from heaven" (John 6). There is no question that these arguments employ figurative means. Jesus is so closely associated with His teach-

"In My Father's House"

By G. Eldred Marsh

In my Father's house is gladness,
Which the world can never know;
In my Father's house is joy,
Which the world cannot bestow.

Here within His blessed presence
We may meet Him face to face;
And to bear life's heavy burdens
Find an all-sufficient grace.

When the hearts of men are failing—
When the tempests loudly roar—
When the tumult of the battle
Echoes back from shore to shore;

Still within this quiet circle,
We shall gain a sweet release,
From the world's mad rush and clangor,
Till He come, the Prince of Peace!

ings that one stands for the other. He, therefore, became the way to truth and life if followed carefully. What a clever conceit to use for an argument. But the thought was again transferred.

The key phrase to the new thought is this: "No man cometh to the Father, but by me." Where was Jesus going? To the Father! The disciples could not follow. But they could imitate Jesus' example, and thus Jesus would become the way to the Father. They could not literally go to the Father—that He had made very clear—but they could approach to the life of the Father through the truth in Jesus.

And then Jesus went from that through a series of thoughts: "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him." At this point Philip supplied the key thought: "Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us." So the argument passes through series after series of steps in thought. This is a skillful method of teaching, but not so clear when many centuries have elapsed since the discussion took place. The discourse on the "mansions," then, is part of a chain of reasoning. The courtesy formula is used to bring Peter comfort for the fact that he was to deny the Lord instead of following His example.

The following, then, is what we learn from following through the complete discussion: Instead of telling His disciples that they are to go to heaven to be with Him, He was using the courtesy formula to show them that their comfort would be in belief in Him, that belief in Him would lead them to the fountain Source of all life—the Father; and several times He distinctly told them that they could by no means go where He was going, namely, to heaven to be with God.

There is a comfort and a surety in this sort of thing that is not to be found in the "going-to-heaven-when-you-die" theory that is commonly deduced from this "mansions" passage. That passage teaches somewhat the following sort of thing: "I am going away to look after your spiritual wants. I know that there are many things that are perplexing in this life. 'Let not your heart be troubled.' In My Father's family are many places for you to abide, and I am going to prepare them for you. Then, most joyful news of all, I am coming again after I have been away from you to carry on the preparation. And when I come again, you are going to be with Me for all time."

Is that not better than the ephemeral things that lead to the doubts of the modernist—the "mansions in the sky"? Are these things not more certain than life itself? Why, then, should we not be comforted, even as was Peter?

It is known that white pelicans often form in long lines and beat the water with their wings to drive the fish into shallow water where they can be gobbled up easily. This reminds us of the artful way the devil is handling the gullible human fish. "Gobbling up" will soon be the next act.—Haney.

THE SCAPEGOAT

By George B. Alldridge

"The reproaches of those who denounced thee have fallen upon me.—All such words were written of old for our instruction, that by remaining steadfast and drawing encouragement from the scriptures we may cherish hope."
—Romans 15:3, 4, Moffatt.

I HAVE often wondered why the columns of THE RESTITUTION HERALD are so silent regarding the types set forth in the Old Testament foreshadowing the Messiah. If we can convince men of the fulfillment of the types pertaining to His first advent, surely then with confidence we may point to the fulfillment of the signs heralding His second advent, known generally as Paul expresses it: "But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night."

It is a singular fact that immediately following our Lord's resurrection He began to proclaim the evidence as recorded by Moses and all the prophets, the things concerning Himself (Luke 24:27).

Unfortunately there are men whose minds are so narrow that when a writer endeavors to point out the universality of God's love and mercy toward all mankind they cry, "He is teaching universalism or unlimited resurrection." Jesus said Himself, "For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost."—Matt. 18:11.

One of God's first promises to Abraham was, "And I will bless those who benefit you, and punish those who injure you, and all the nations of mankind shall become benefited from you."—Ferrar Fenton. I read these words spoken upon the night Jesus was born, "Do not be afraid; for I now come to make known to you a great Gift which shall be to all people; for to-day there is born in the town of David a Saviour, who is the Lord Messiah. . . Then suddenly appeared with the messenger a whole heavenly army, praising God, and chanting, Honour among the highest to God, and peace upon earth, to men who accept."—Luke 2:8-15, F. F.

Please observe the qualification of these words: "To men who accept"; and the Scriptures hold out no hope for any others.

John said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." It does not matter how you treat or explain this verse. The fact is that not one sinner can be saved unless Jesus, as the Lamb of God, first took away the sin of the world.

After reading Leviticus 16, my mind is deeply impressed with the knowledge that it was for the end of reconciling the tabernacle, the high priest, the under priests, and the people that the scapegoat became prominent and was dealt with. Aaron, a type of Christ, confessed the sins of the children of Israel, including the priests and Levites, over the head of the live goat, and sent him thus laden by a "man of opportunity" into the wilderness, or a condition from which it could not return.

Without this type how can we understand Isaiah 53:6? "Jehovah hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." Moffatt makes it a little clearer: "Like sheep we had all gone astray, we had each taken our own way, and the Eternal laid on him the guilt of us all." How clearly Peter saw all this! I will again quote Moffatt's rendering: "He bore our sins in his own body on the gibbet, that we might break with sin and live for righteousness; and by his wounds you have been healed."—1 Peter 3:24.

I cannot see how God could in a typical sense more clearly reveal to Israel how He intended in the person of His Son to put away forever sin out of His sight. This will help us to understand Micah 7:19: "He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities: and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea."

It is well known that under the Roman government the Jewish authorities were forbidden the right of administering capital punishment. So Jesus, as the antitypical scapegoat, must be led away by the hand of a fit man. In this case it was the Roman government impersonated by Pontius Pilate, who said, "Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?"—John 19:10.

Into what wilderness did Pilate lead Jesus, or rather give orders for Him to be led? We answer, "Into Death—The Great Unknown." As Shakespeare says, "From whose bourn no traveler returns."

From this wilderness of silence and gloom Jesus never could have found His way out. But what saith the Scriptures? "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it."—Acts 2:24. Again, "And killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses."—Acts 3:15. Also, "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree."—Acts 5:30. The Syriac Version reads, "And he took away all our sins and in his body lifted them to the cross."

How plain it all is! Israel, restored again into God's favor, sees all its sins buried into the depths of the sea. Humanity that accepts Jesus as its Redeemer sees all its sins buried in the wilderness of Death. "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour: that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man."—Hebrews 2:9.

Sometimes I think we get mixed up about Jesus' being a sacrifice for sin ("For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."—1 Cor. 5:7) and the putting away of sin represented in the scapegoat. Note well the difference: One is slain within the court; its blood is carried into the holy of holies, into God's presence, to make an atonement for us. "Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did once, when he offered up himself."—Heb. 7:27. This, you see, was the Lord's choice.

Now in Hebrews 13:13-16 we are exhorted to go forth to Him "without the camp, bearing his reproach." This is to be our choice. It requires a living organism to do this; but paradoxical though it may appear, in God's sight it is reckoned dead, or buried with Christ through baptism into His death.

Let us go back to 1 Peter 2:24 again. Because Jesus bore away our sins into death, we are to break with sin and live for righteousness. To do this we must go unto Him "without the camp, bearing his reproach." Of this we have a beautiful example in Moses, who chose "rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward." How clear this makes Colossians 1:24! "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church."

The passover lamb was not a sin offering; its blood was not carried into the holy of holies as Jesus was (Heb. 10:20-24). The blood of the passover lamb protected Israel against the destroying angel who slew the firstborn of Egypt and afterward furnished food for them upon the night of their deliverance from Egypt. Jesus as our passover lamb saves His own household and sprinkles us with His blood, sealing God's covenant with His elect and also furnishing us with spiritual food and sustenance during our passage from "Egypt" until we reach the kingdom of God. (See Luke 22:16-20; John 6:53, 54.) Jesus fills so many types that we must learn to differentiate among them.

At present God is only dealing with the household of faith. In Amos 3:2 we read, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities." This is true today only on a larger scale, embracing all the family of God throughout the whole world. These, like their divine example, must suffer reproach for the name of Christ; and I say with the spirit of reverence to the world that we are being made a scapegoat, or as the dictionary defines it: "He who bears the blame for others."

The world accuses us of many things, as it did Jesus; but we must remember Peter's words, "Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not: but committed himself unto him that judgeth righteously, who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes we were healed."

"My soul looks back to see
The burden Thou didst bear;
When hanging on the accursed tree,
And hopes her guilt was there."

THE FIRST RESURRECTION

SUCH a theme as the resurrection should have great interest for all the sons of men, but especially it should be of interest for the Christian mind. The idea of resurrection prevails in some form or other in nearly all regions. It holds a paramount place in the Christian religion. It is obscure in the Judaism of the Old Testament, but it was a well-accepted doctrine by the Jews in the era immediately preceding the introduction of Christianity. It was denied by the Sadducees but was accepted by the Pharisees.

The Christian church has always held to a doctrine of a general resurrection, but her teachers have differed widely as to the nature of the resurrection. Some have thought of it only as a spiritual event and have limited it to the raising of the soul from a state of sin to the state of holiness. The body resurrection is denied by many. The testimony of the church of the ages nevertheless has been, "I believe in the resurrection of the body."

The church usually has thought of a general resurrection to take place at the coming of Christ to judge the world at the end of the millennium. There is another view held by no small number of worthy exegetes who hold to the doctrine of two resurrections, the first to occur at the appearing of Christ to usher in the millennium and the second to come at the end of the thousand years. This view, known as the Chiliastic view, was held by the post-apostolic fathers generally. It is based upon the text in Revelation 20:5, 6, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

It has been argued by those who reject the doctrine of two resurrections that this is insufficient Scripture upon which to base so important and far-bearing a truth, and it is rejected by many because it lacks sufficient scriptural support. It might be said in reply that one well-authenticated scripture should be enough to establish a foundation for belief, but in this particular instance we are not shut up to such narrow ground for the doctrine of two resurrections. The Apostle John certainly did not invent the doctrine. He must have based his statement on some previous knowledge, on some previous belief of the church. There is good scriptural ground for belief in the first resurrection of the saints; and our purpose in this article is not to be controversial and to argue for a dogmatic creed, but to set forth the scriptures by which we believe the doctrine of the first resurrection is taught.

The first passage to come under our consideration is Daniel 12:2. I am indebted to Tregelles for light on this passage and shall quote largely from his book on Daniel. He translates the passage, "And many from among the sleepers of the dust of the earth shall awake; these shall be unto everlasting life; but those (the rest of the sleepers, those who do not awake at this time) shall be unto shame and everlasting contempt."

The word which in our authorized version is twice rendered "some" is never repeated in any passage in the Hebrew Bible in the sense of taking up distributively any general class which had been previously mentioned: this is enough, I believe, to warrant our applying its first occurrence here to the whole of the many who awake and the second to the mass of sleepers, those who do not awake at this time. It is clearly not a general resurrection: it is "many from among"; and it is only by taking it in this sense that we gain any information as to what becomes of those who continue to sleep in the dust of the earth.

The Jewish commentators have so interpreted the passage. "Of course these men with the vail over their hearts are no guides as to the use of the Old Testament; but they are helps as to the grammatical and lexicographical value of sentences and words." Aben Ezra, the same author, goes on to apply the first resurrection to Israel only and gives it a thoroughly carnal character; yet he distinctly recognizes a first and second resurrection, although his doctrine as to this is directly contrary to that of our Lord and His apostles—so much so as to make it probable that the same notions had been current among the Pharisees even in our Lord's day. It is sufficient for our purpose to show that the rabbis understood Daniel to teach the two resurrections and that the belief of the two resurrections was held in the time of the apostles and Jesus.

Luke 20:35, 36 says, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from (among) the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." The expression "the resurrection from among the dead" certainly points to a definite and separate resurrection from the general resurrection. This is an important passage, because it is the answer to the Sadducees who did not believe in any resurrection. In the expression "neither can they die any more" Christ differs from the rabbis, who taught that the Israelites would rise and then die again, to be raised once more at the general resurrection.

This was also the doctrine of Paul. Tregelles says, "The first resurrection only is spoken of in First Corinthians, chapter 15, the saved, and no others, are mentioned: the order of the resurrection is told in verses 23, 24: First, 'Christ the firstfruits'; second, 'afterward they that are Christ's at his coming'; third, 'then cometh the end,' the time of the general resurrection. 'Then' is not here, as in verse 54, equivalent to 'at that time,' but wholly a different word (eita), indicating successional order; the rest of the dead live not till the close of Christ's millennial reign."

In First Thessalonians the fourth chapter Paul states the doctrine of the first resurrection clearly. He says, "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel; and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Paul could not be more explicit than when he says, "The dead in Christ shall rise first."

Paul expresses his firm belief in the first resurrection when he makes it the goal of his spiritual ambition. In the language of intense aspiration after heavenly things he makes the first resurrection the goal of his longings. He says, "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." The Greek expression is ex nekron, from out the dead. That is, from among the dead ones. Surely there is no meaning in these words if Paul did not believe in two resurrections. And it is a strange exegesis that denies such an import to his words. Paul does not use the ordinary word for resurrection, anastasis, which means uprising; but he uses the word exanastasis, which means out-uprising from death. . . . .

Now to many this subject may seem of little importance, but this is not so. It is of vital importance. It is connected with the return of the Jews to Palestine. Tregelles says, "It is at the coming of the Lord Jesus that Israel is delivered; it is then that the first resurrection takes place." Isaiah 26:19: "Thy dead men shall live, they shall arise my dead body." (Such are the words literally: identified with Christ as being His members.) Again Isaiah says, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." To that day belongs the statement of the same continuous prophecy: "He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit."—Isaiah 27:6.

In the light of present events we do well to consider earnestly the above teaching of Scripture. This is a blessed hope inspiring the saints to holy living. Such teaching is not mere fantasy and idle speculation as some would have us believe, but the simple plain truth of the inspired Word of God. The saints of the Old Testament wait for this resurrection; the martyrs beneath the altar are waiting for it; and those who have died in Christ are waiting for it. And may we who are alive wait for it with joyful anticipation and blessedness; and may we pray, "God grant that the exhilarating prospect of having part in the first resurrection may give us the victory now over all the vanities of this world of death."—The Alliance Weekly.

GOD'S COVENANTS

By Samuel E. Haney

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50:5.

LET US first ascertain what the Bible translators' understanding of the Hebrew and Greek words which they translated "covenant" and "sacrifice" was and the variety of scriptural significances they intended to be attached to them. "Covenant," according to Webster: "An agreement between two or more persons, or parties; to enter into, or promise by a close covenant. One who covenants." Funk and Wagnalls: "God's promise of blessing to be fulfilled on performance of a condition, as of obedience." So we see there is such a thing as an unconditional covenant; the party of the second part is disregarded. In other words, a covenant is a definite promise.

There are God-made and man-made covenants, or promises. It is with the latter class our text has to do. Read Genesis 3:14, 15; 9:8-17. Notice that nothing the serpent (Satan's representative) or Noah might at any time do would in any way affect God's one-sided covenant, or promise.

"Sacrifice," Webster: "Destruction, surrender, or loss made or incurred for the sake of something; also, the thing sacrificed; as, the sacrifice of business to pleasure." Funk and Wagnalls: "A giving up of some cherished or desired object, as for the sake of another."

We shall now notice how our text is associated with the return of our Redeemer. In doing this we shall use Dr. Moffatt's rendering of the context, namely, verses one to six: "The Eternal speaks! from east to west earth falls a-tumbling. From Sion, so peerless in beauty, the God of gods is flashing! Our God comes with a summons—in front of him devouring fire, encircling him a mighty storm—calling high heaven and earth to the trial of his people; the heavens announce his assize, that God begins the trial. Gather me my followers, who pledged their troth to me by sacrifice."

The paramount difference between the infinite Jehovah's covenants and those of finite man is that the former's always have and always will be fulfilled, a thing which cannot be said of weak, finite mortals' promises. As long as we are living, our covenant promises are in the making, not to be completed until life's journey is ended. We may default; but God, never. It is only those who overcome to the end that shall be privileged to "eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God"; to "sit with Christ in (His) throne"; and to "inherit all things."—Rev. 2:7; 3:21; 21:7.

The preparatory work of gathering God's saints, potential heirs "of all things," is now in a process which will terminate when Jesus comes for them. "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matt. 24:31. In the interim Revelation 7:1-3 is being fulfilled, namely, the sealing (preparing) of the saints to meet their Lord. Progress in their covenant-making is in proportion to their fidelity to God and to the honesty of their efforts.

The thing that Christians should be vitally interested in during the brief intervening period is the completion of their covenant with God by sacrifice. God completed His covenant by sacrifice when He sacrificed His Son in our behalf. "For God loved the world ("sinners," the writer) so dearly that he gave up his only Son, so that everyone who believes in him may have eternal life, instead of perishing."—John 3:16, Moffatt.

Now, what are we doing in the way of sacrifice to have (gain) eternal life? Devils (demons) believe (James 2:19); but belief comprises obedience also to God's plan of salvation. It is impossible to make necessary sacrifice without first complying with God's requirements, namely, being "born again"; for this is entirely the work of the holy Spirit through the new creature in Christ Jesus. One must be the antithesis of Paul's description of unregenerate man: "Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."—2 Tim. 3:1-5.

He emphasizes more pungently in 2 Corinthians 6:14-18 another requirement, "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." This promise (or covenant) is also conditional between two parties, its validity depending upon compliance of the party of the first part—you and me. Thus, once in conformity with God's plan it becomes a pleasure to make a covenant with God by sacrifice and to be thus in a position to suffer cheerfully for Christ's and the gospel's sake.

Just in proportion as man is alienated from the things and customs of this world and life and ingratiated into the invisible things and customs prophesied of God's kingdom is he qualified to abandon willingly the things and customs of this world. It should be easy to see that in the proportion we are meticulous about affairs of this fleeting life we handicap our kingdom march.

What are the things Christians are expected to sacrifice? Anything that militates in the completion of the covenant they are striving to make with God, namely, money; time wasted in worldly pleasures; worldly ambition; and idol worship, the most prevalent thing in all Christendom, self being foremost. But the fact that we shall soon be privileged to see Jesus, to be like Him, and forever to be with Him should be sufficient incentive to cause us to make any sacrifice, especially such that tends to mortify the flesh, to gratify the new creature, and to honor God.

Many Christians who would gladly spend hours preparing for a brief outing cannot find time to spend ten minutes a day in the study of God's Word; yet they expect to be ready to meet Jesus when He comes and to spend eternity with Him in God's paradise. Some temerity is required to bring about such an unchristian attitude.

Christianity, generally speaking, has become quite slipshod. Many try to enter into God's kingdom in ways other than God's appointed way. Jesus refers to them thus, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."—John 10:1.

In the concluding two verses of the fiftieth Psalm we have a wonderful proof of God's love for a lost, wicked race, His willingness to assist the most derelict in making His covenant: "Mark this, you who ignore me, or I will tear you to pieces, with none to protect you: whoever offers thanks to me as sacrifice, he honours me; whoever holds by my rules in his life, I will let him enjoy my help."—Moffatt.

PAUL went into the synagogue on the sabbath days and reasoned with the people out of the Scriptures; but the modern apostle of doubt often goes into the cathedral on the first day of the week to reason the people out of the Scriptures.—J. W. Williams in The Restitution.

INCREASE IN SUICIDE

DR. FREDERICK LUDWIG HOFFMAN, medical consultant of the Prudential Life Insurance Company, has recently declared that there were "not less than 20,000" suicides in this country during 1931.

"The suicide evil," Dr. Hoffman writes, "is the most sinister specter of our national life, next to murder, which marks the United States as the most murderous nation on the face of the globe."

Says Bishop Oldham:

"It is high time for the pulpit and religious press to emphasize strongly the wickedness of suicide. Sympathy for the family and friends, and the natural feeling expressed in the maxim, 'Speak only good of the dead,' make it hard in individual cases to appear to pass judgment.

"An element in the present sad situation is the tremendous mental strain under which business men are now laboring, and the dazed bewilderment with which many are beholding the wreck of their fortunes.

"But this fact suggests where the true evil and the possible remedy are to be found. It is to be noted that the suicides are chiefly among those who have been most ardent in their pursuit of wealth, that its attainment has not brought satisfaction, and that its loss has meant despair.

"It is a wrong aim in life, the over-valuation of physical comfort, the mistaken emphasis on the temporal and material, which make the downfall so great and so disastrous. When the world fails those who have thought only of it, there is nothing to live for. Without hope, they are of all men most miserable. The answer to their distress can be found only in the cross of Christ, and in the knowledge of Him who was rich, yet for our sake became poor."

IN MODERN TIMES

By Arlen Marsh

THROUGHOUT his school career the student is faced with the constantly repeated declaration that "mediocrity is a thing to be avoided." Protestingly he writes essays on it, on the deadening effect of trite expressions and hackneyed illustrations, on the value of the English language as a "fluid" tongue, on the necessity for acquiring knowledge and new means for setting forth ideas, on the unbearable-ness of being ordinary. Expositions are failed because they have not something new in manner; honor grades are earned because the pupil seeks for that new thing. He becomes imbued with the thought (if he has profited by his education) that mediocrity is intolerable. And then he graduates.

His lot from that time on is a hard one. Having amassed a mental pile of assorted facts and modern ideas, he starts blithely to meet the world—and meets a wall of opposition. Trained to think, to write, to read, he finds from hard experience that the army tests were right and that a mental age of thirteen or fourteen is the correct rating for most people. He discovers a world bound hand and foot by custom, age-long prejudice, and terrifying conservatism. His efforts to tell the benefits of raising standards of living, speech, music, art, and science are laughed to scorn. He uncovers the astounding fact that there are few willing to do ought but lie dormant, adversely critical of all efforts to advance.

In school he learned to use allusions to literature, painting, scholarship of every sort. He learned that "cute" and "pretty" and "says" and "good" could be expressed much better with other more accurate, if less familiar, words and that the average novelist uses in his work a vocabulary of at least fifty thousand words. He studied President Wilson's speeches and Ruskin's essays and Milton's poems, and he added much to his knowledge and to his stock of words. In brief, he took advantage of his opportunities, partly through compulsion, partly through innate desire to improve. And still he learns new things, searching with Diogenes for facts, knowledge, wisdom.

These are the ways to progress. More and more graduates pour from high school and college; more and more seize on the city night school courses. They demand things that interest them—things they have not known, things that will develop their mentality as exercise develops their physique.

The church, however, has ignored them. Gradually, very gradually, it is coming to a realization that young and old find nothing to interest them within its walls. Slowly it is acknowledging that general education has brought new conditions and that those who gained by proffered chances demand a treatment different from that given in the days sixth grade students taught in schools. It admits somewhat that when Paul referred to poets in his speeches and used logic in his oratory he was justified and that Luke was, perhaps, not altogether wrong in recording that oratory in Acts. Almost it confesses that it will have to do similarly to succeed, and soon it must altogether.

Jesus the Christ was the perfect teacher. He spoke for all classes. But men cannot be as He. John spoke of love, of spirituality; Paul wrote of reason; James cried to the people from the corners of the streets; Luke addressed the educated from the angle of the scientist. Peter used poor Greek; Paul's was well-nigh flawless.

So it is today. Some speak to the common people, whom, if Lincoln was correct, the Lord must love more than all others, and are heard gladly. Some speak for those who are conversant with the arts and sciences and business, for those who work mentally rather than physically. Both types are needed; neither should be criticised harshly. It is an old axiom, well worn but true, that he who picks the most flaws is the one who can do least well. Let each class cling to its field, and let neither be responsible for infraction of the golden rule.

"I AM satisfied with Jesus;
But a question comes to me
As I ponder o'er His goodness,
Is He satisfied with me?
Am I kind and true and tender;
Am I all I ought to be?
I am satisfied with Jesus;
Is He satisfied with me?"

THE GREAT TRIBULATION

elation 14:18, this ripening of the vine of the earth. "Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe."

We have a little account of the ripening of man's unrestrained physical life in the early stages of the Bible. We read in the beginning of Genesis that "there were giants in those days," that men developed the species by high breeding until through physical development such as doctors are telling you about today they reached a condition of the very highest physical perfection. The women, we are told, were beautiful women. The believers of that day, the descendants of godly Seth, regardless of God's separating line, mingled with the world, and "took them wives as they chose." They married as they wanted to. They married without any thought of what God wanted and thus mingled the seed contrary to God's prohibition. They developed a wonderful race of physical perfection, the highest types perhaps that humanity had developed in that age when human life was still long and when the seeds of death had not fully wrought their fruit of mortality.

But what was the result? A race so corrupt morally that the "earth was filled with violence," and God had to send a deluge to wash away the pollution of their sins and crimes. A little later human wickedness developed into the fearful and unnatural vices of the cities of the plain; and God had once more to consume the stench of human wickedness, this time by a rain of fire. The Lord Jesus has told us that moral conditions on earth at the time of His coming will be as in the days of Noah and Lot. Human nature will then have reached, not only its perfect physical development, but its highest intellectual and social culture; and man's capacity for wickedness will be at its maximum.

The two special features suggested by the days of Noah and the days of Lot in the moral picture are violence and lust. We can already see the beginnings of these last developments in the lawlessness of our own age and the breaking away of modern society from all restraint in violence and self-indulgence. We need only imagine these conditions at their height, and earth would be again an inferno like the scene which the angels met that awful night when they came down to the home of Lot to investigate the wickedness of Sodom.

IT WILL BE THE RESULT OF SATANIC POWER

The tribulation time will be Satan's "hour and power of darkness." "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16:13, 14.

The frog suggests the night, and this will be the Night of the Ages. The frog suggests the pestilential swamp, and earth will be one deadly quagmire of moral putridity. The frog speaks with a dismal croak; and the note of infidelity, materialism, spiritualism, and atheism is one of gloom, depression, and despair. These three spirits are already beginning their dire work. The "unclean spirit" from the mouth of the dragon may well be recognized in the croakings of spiritualism; the frog from the mouth of the beast is busy in the swamp of socialism and anarchy; and the emissary of the false prophet is abroad in the varied forms of present fanaticism, materialism, theosophy, and even religious liberalism. Let all these things have unrestricted sway, and we shall already be in the great tribulation.

THE OPPRESSION OF HUMAN AUTHORITY

The tribulation time will be the time when antichrist shall reign, and all the world shall be under the arbitrary and cruel sway of the last and worst form of human government, represented by the beast. Think for a moment of the condition of the Jews today in Russia under that oppressive government. Make it universal, and earth would be a hell. Think of the oppressive and destructive excesses of socialism, the dynamiter of the antichrist. What more would be needed to constitute the great tribulation? Think of a world where no man could buy or sell or transact any kind of business without a license from this superman, as will be the case when the prophecy of Revelation 13:15-17 is fulfilled; and who would wish to live on earth in such an evil time?

JUDGMENTS UPON THIS WORLD

Many believe that the trumpet woes of Revelation 8:11 belong to this period. Certainly the awful picture of Revelation 14:19, 20, belongs to that time. "And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God. And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs." At last comes the final conflict: "And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon . . . And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him. . . . These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."—Rev. 16:16; 19:19, 20.

WITHDRAWN FROM THE WORLD

The church will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and human society will be without the presence and restraining influence of the followers of Christ. What a dreadful world this will be when the atmosphere of faith and love and prayer are at last withdrawn and the awful shadow of the dragon's wing rests like a pall of despair upon every human heart. God grant that we may escape that dreadful day.

The period of the great tribulation appears to be fixed by the words of Christ (Matt. 24:29): "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." It will, therefore, precede the public manifestation of the Lord Jesus Christ in His glorious epiphany and follow the parousia of the Son of man, when His church shall be withdrawn to meet Him in the air and the holy dead shall be united with them in the first resurrection.

Finally, how shall we escape this awful day? We cannot do better than read the Lord's last message in the third chapter of Revelation. "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."—Rev. 3:10, 11. Those, therefore, that keep the word of His patience, that believe His Word and live it, shall be numbered with His waiting people and shall be saved from this awful catastrophe. Israel must go through it because Israel did not know the Lord and will not know Him until He comes with His saints. Like Noah, Israel will have to go through the deluge; but like Enoch, the saints of God will be caught up before to meet Him in the air.

LOOK HERE—AND SAVE!

AS CHRISTMAS approaches, the problem of finding inexpensive gifts for children looms largely in the foreground. The National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois, has met the need by publishing three low-priced Bible story and lesson books: Jesus, the Light of the World, a tale of the life of the Messiah, selling at $.25 a copy; the Children's Bible Story and Study Book and The Hebrew People, containing stories and lessons about the great characters and peoples of the Old Testament, reduced until December 25 to $.25 a single copy, $.22 a copy for 5 to 24, and $.20 a copy for 25 or more; postpaid. Unlike many books of their type, these are written from the standpoint of the real Bible teaching. The Society will appreciate your patronage, and you will appreciate its books.

YE NOBLE'S WEAPON

Ye renowned Noble so vows: O most high and mighty Prince, this honor overcomes me. I faithfully promise that this sword which your Highness has just presented to me shall, as long as my life's blood shall flow, be used to defend your person and your dominion. Never shall its blade be turned against you.

The prayer of the faithful Berean Noble: This sacred Book, O God, Thy gift to man, shall never leave my thoughts. I thank Thee that I am permitted to have a copy of my very own. I consecrate my life to Thee, to use this tool so as to be "approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." To that end I shall "Search the Scriptures Daily," "rightly dividing the word of truth," "even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit," for the division is Thine. Thus do I promise to believe its every teaching; for I know that when I have fully digested them, I will have strength for every battle of life, and Thou wilt give me in the end victory o'er the grave.

He who works for sweetness and light works to make reason and the will of God prevail.—Matthew Arnold.

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD

Only when the obscuring mists of belief in natural immortality are removed is God's great gift of life appreciated for its true value. When we fully realize the significance of our mortal nature and know that we are (Psa. 49:12, 20) like the beasts that perish, then to us the hope (Rom. 8:24) of immortality becomes the greatest thing in the world.

For the greatest honors, the greatest wealth, the highest positions man can reach are nothing, if death shall cut us down at last. The philosopher may say the soul cannot die, the poet may chant, "There is no death"; but facts are facts, and we know that we shall die (Ecc. 9:5). This is the bitter pill that tempers all our joys. So it is LIFE which is our most critical need of all needs.

And it is LIFE that we are assured through the promises of God! "Thanks be to God," exults the Apostle (1 Cor. 15:55-57); for the sting of death is drawn and the sting of life removed "through our Lord Jesus Christ." Ponder long and thoughtfully the full meaning of the verse, "I am come that they might have LIFE"! It was life that was lost through sin (Gen. 2:17; Rom. 6:23; 1 Cor. 15:56); and it was LIFE He came to restore (Luke 19:10; John 3:14, 15; 10:27, 28).

The matchless love of God, the sublime sacrifice of our Lord were for one purpose and one alone, that we might have LIFE (John 3:16; 11:25, 26; 20:31)! Have you believed unto life?—Senior Lesson Book II.

We live in deeds, not years; in thought, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.

We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Life's but a means unto an end; that end
Beginning, mean, and end to all things,—God.

—Philip James Bailey.

HOW WE OUGHT TO LIVE

ONCE upon a time a famous artist, we are told, was traveling through Switzerland, that little country in Europe filled with so much beauty of natural scenery. Some of the officials of the country met him and asked to see his passport, which, as most of you know, permits one to pass over the boundary lines of one country into another.

"I do not have it with me," said the artist, "but my name is Dore."

"Prove to us that you are he," said the officials, to whom the name, Dore, was well known. For they did not believe that he was speaking the truth.

Taking a piece of paper and a pencil from his pocket, he sketched a group of peasants standing nearby. The little drawing was so true to life that the men exclaimed, "Enough, you are Dore."

So it is with us! You and I say we are followers of Christ, dear young Readers, but we must do something to prove it. We may go to church and Sunday school and study our Bibles; but if we do not do the things that we learn, we are not what we appear to be.

James said, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only."

Following, we have a few words of an important quotation from each of the lessons we have studied the past quarter. See how many of them you can complete.

 What sort of boy was Jesus in His home? Are you trying to be like Him?
 How were the little Hebrew children trained?
 What does obedience mean to you?
 What is the best rule to follow every day?
 How is lasting peace over all the earth to come?
 To whom will the Master say, "Well done"?

PURE AND STRONG AND TRUE

"God, who touchest earth with beauty,
 Make me lovely, too,
 With Thy spirit recreate me,
 Make my mind anew.

"Like Thy springs and running waters,
 Make me crystal pure,
 Like Thy rocks of towering grandeur
 Make me strong and sure.

"Like Thy dancing waves in sunlight,
 Make me glad and free,
 Like the straightness of the pine tree,
 Let me upright be.

"Like the arching of the heavens,
 Lift my thoughts above;
 Turn my dreams to noble actions,
 Ministries of love.

"God, who touchest earth with beauty,
 Make me lovely, too.
 Keep me ever by Thy spirit,
 Pure and strong and true."

The foremost duty of a Christian is to follow his Example as closely as possible in everything, thus giving honor to Christ.

LESSON 12. — December 18, 1932

CHRISTIAN STANDARDS OF LIFE—REVIEW

Devotional Reading: Philippians 3:8-14

GOLDEN TEXT

If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.—Luke 9:23.

Lesson I. Psalm 1:1-6; 119:9-16; Daniel 6:10; Matthew 6:5-15; 2 Timothy 3:14-17.

Topic: The Christian's Devotional Life.

Summary. The devotional life is developed by meditation on the Word of God and prayer. Prayer to be effective must be the sincere expression of the heart. The prayer Jesus taught His disciples provides a model of all prayers. It begins with an acknowledgment of God's holiness, and its first three petitions have to do with the accomplishment of His purposes. The latter four concern those who pray and include desires for both material and spiritual blessings.

Lesson II. Genesis 50:17-21; Luke 2:40-52; 10:38-42.

Topic: The Christian in the Family.

Summary. A Christian is a learner and a follower of Christ and as such exhibits His faith and love in the family and the home. He is governed in all his conduct by the example of his Master and shows in all that he says and does that he recognizes the presence of Christ within the family circle. Jesus in this lesson made the Father's work of first importance in His life, even placing it above that of filial devotion. Mary and Martha found in the presence of Christ in their home a spiritual and harmonizing influence. We may have Jesus in our homes as well.

Lesson III. Genesis 18:17-19; Deuteronomy 6:4-9; 1 Samuel 1:24-28; Mark 10:13-16; 2 Timothy 1:3-6.

Topic: The Home and the Coming Generation.

The importance of instructing children of all ages in the truths of the Bible is strongly emphasized in the lesson. Abraham indicated a disposition to transmit to his posterity the truths revealed to him by God and consequently was granted further revelations. Israel was required to teach the children daily of God and His relation to them and to their fathers, particularly with regard to the unity of the Lord and their reason for loving and serving Him. Jesus exemplified the deepest interest and the most tender love and understanding of child minds and hearts and drew from their trustful natures a lesson of great importance to older ones of all ages.

Lesson IV. Joshua 24:14, 15; Mark 10:2-12; Ephesians 6:1-9.

Topic: Problems of the Modern Home.

Summary. The service of God is the basis of Christian home life. A mutual recognition of our obligation to God will assist greatly in meeting successfully the problems of the modern home. To make Christ the actual Head of the home, to perform all tasks as services to Him will assure faithfulness throughout the family circle and give to the meanest duty a sacredness that will crown it with beauty.

Lesson V. Proverbs 23:29-35; Romans 13:1-7; 1 Corinthians 9:19-27; Galatians 6:1-10; 1 Peter 2:11-17.

Topic: The Christian and Law Observance.

Summary. Civil government and civil law are authorized by God to maintain peace and to insure the liberty of His people. The administrators of the law are "ministers of God" and worthy of all honor when they conduct their offices faithfully. The Christian is bound to obey the laws of the land conscientiously as a religious duty and thereby show to the world that he desires to encourage every effort for good among men.

Lesson VI. Psalm 22:27, 28; 67:1-7; 72:8-19; Isaiah 2:1-4; Matthew 28:16-20; Ephesians 2:13-19.

Topic: The Christian and World Peace.

Summary. World peace will never be experienced until Christ comes and establishes the kingdom of God on the earth. Then all nations will be subjected to the rulership of God through His Son; and peace, prosperity, and brotherhood will become universal. God is preparing for the coming reign of peace by creating a new race of men in Christ Jesus, whose hearts are changed to conform to the mind of Christ. These faithful ones will be co-rulers with Him when the kingdom is established.

Lesson VII. Deuteronomy 24:14, 15; Amos 5:6-15; Mark 6:3; Luke 12:13-21; 19:1-26; 2 Thessalonians 3:6-13; 1 Timothy 6:6-16.

Topic: Making a Living.

Summary. Selfishness may lead to affluence for a time; but it also leads to the loss of honor, self-respect, and possibly the wealth that has been accumulated. To "seek good, and not evil" in all the relations and contacts of life results in contentment and long life. Future rewards depend upon present faithfulness in the use made of ability and opportunity in the service of God.

Lesson VIII. Deuteronomy 8:7-18; Malachi 3:7-10; Luke 12:22-34; 1 Corinthians 16:1-4; 2 Corinthians 8:1-15; 9:1-15; 1 Timothy 6:17-19.

Topic: Stewardship of Money

Summary. God provides all this for the use of mankind. In return He requires those who have possession of His riches to use a portion of them or of the increase of them for the benefit of others less fortunate than themselves. Such a manner of giving in the name of the Lord humbles the giver, draws him closer to God, makes him a co-worker with Him, and provides the receiver of the blessing reason for worshipping God for His goodness.

Lesson IX. Exodus 3:1-12; Isaiah 6:1-8; Matthew 25:1-46; Mark 1:16-20; Acts 26:12-19; 1 Corinthians 9:17-27.

Topic: Stewardship of Life.

Summary. Moses was called upon to give his entire life to the service of God. This service consisted in caring for Israel, the "treasure" of Jehovah. We, too, are commissioned as stewards of God, and are required not only to preserve intact the truths of the gospel, but to increase their usefulness by extending them to all the world. Our entire lives should be devoted to this purpose.

Lesson X. 1 Kings 8:41-43; Luke 10:25-37; John 4:5-10; Acts 10:9-19, 28-35; 17:22-28.

Topic: Living With People of Other Races.

Summary. A common creation, a common mortality, a common sinfulness, a common condemnation, and a common provision made by God through Christ for our salvation should cause us to recognize ourselves as members of a unit family, and thus create within us a sympathetic interest in each other's present and eternal welfare.

Lesson XI. Leviticus 23:29-43; Nehemiah 8:9-18; Zechariah 8:5; Matthew 11:16-19; Mark 6:30-32; 1 Corinthians 10:23-33.

Topic: The Christian's Use of Leisure.

Summary. The children of Israel found a satisfactory means of utilizing their periods of leisure in taking part in the great religious feasts provided for in the law. Jesus and the apostles spent their leisure in communion with each other and with God. The recreational value of leisure is not lost by using it profitably.

Lesson XIII. Luke 2:1-20.

Topic: God's Gift to Man.

Summary. God has given us a standard by which Christmas giving should be governed in His Gift to us. He gave His best. The richness of the Gift was not obscured by the super-richness of its casket. He gave us a Gift that both rich and poor could appreciate. His Gift increases in value with the passing of the ages because its essential quality is love.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

Thanksgiving morning at nine o'clock we enjoyed a service that will be remembered for a long time. It was one of the old-fashioned kind in which everyone took part. Everybody was thankful and rejoicing in their hope through Christ. At the close of the service an invitation was given; and Sr. Anthony Barbaroosa, 311 24th Ave. N., came forward and was buried with her Lord in baptism the Sunday following. God help us that all may realize the nearness of His glorious appearing.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our Thanksgiving service at 7:30 a. m. proved to be an inspiration to all of us. It does one's heart good to hear the overflowing appreciation of men and women who, though surrounded by problems, nevertheless realize the abounding love of a heavenly Father. The church also distributed approximately twenty Thanksgiving baskets.

Adult attendance is noticeably on the increase. The house has been actually crowded for both morning and evening sermons of late.

The annual church business meeting is being held this week for selecting officers to direct the affairs of the church for 1933. We are earnestly praying that God will direct in the choices made.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BEAR, ARKANSAS

On Friday, Nov. 4, Bros. J. M. Dorris and R. A. Humphreys went to Driggs, Ark., to get Bro. L. H. Shelton to come to Bear and hold a series of meetings. The first services were held Sunday night, Nov. 6; and the last was held Sunday night, Nov. 13. Eight sermons in all were given. We do trust and pray that our dear Bro. Shelton will be blessed for his good efforts to spread the gospel.

Six were buried with our Lord in baptism. On Sunday evening, the 13th, a crowd gathered at the water to witness the baptism of Mrs. Tom Land, Maddox, Ark.; Miss Olive Humphreys and the writer, both of Bear, Ark. About dark three more decided to take the seal of faith. So by the light of a bonfire and two lanterns Bro. Shelton baptized John Humphreys and wife and Mrs. J. L. Humphreys, all of Bear.

On Sunday night the Lord's supper was held. All regretted to see Bro. Shelton leave, but we hope to have him back again soon. He is truly a man that is a spreader of the gospel.

We ask the prayers of all for this community and especially on God's children.

Mrs. Rachel H. Morris.

BACK to the BIBLE

Bro. F. L. Austin, the "Back to the Bible Evangelist," has just placed an order with us for fifteen hundred tracts and an additional quantity of his evangelistic paper, which also bears the suggestive title. "Back to the Bible." This printed matter is to be used in the campaign he is now conducting in Holbrook, Nebraska.

Bro. Austin's many years in pastoral work, interspersed by much experience in the evangelistic field, have made him appreciative of the value of the printed page in promulgating the gospel. It is the simplest and least expensive form of teaching the truth. But papers and tracts cannot do the work alone. An interest must be developed through personal contact with the people before they will give the attention to the literature distributed necessary to accomplish the purpose desired.

Here is where the pastor, evangelist, Sunday school teacher, and Berean worker come in. It is their duty to arouse and maintain the interest of the individual in the truth of which these various publications treat until he becomes interested in Bible study on his own account.

The publication, "Back to the Bible," issued by Bro. Austin is a five-column, four-page paper, filled to overflowing with well-written articles on the first principles of the gospel, and is of special value in introducing the truth in new localities. It is so prepared that it can be used anywhere and at any time to the advantage of all who are engaged in carrying on an evangelistic effort. It does not require the presence of its editor to make it effective.

In order that its usefulness may be made as far-reaching as possible, Bro. Austin has placed a quantity price on the paper that is well within the reach of any evangelist or congregation that is contemplating engaging in such an effort. It will be supplied at $2.50 per hundred. Do not address your order or request for sample to us, but to F. L. Austin, 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Illinois.

A THANKFUL CHURCH

The annual fall meetings at Brush Creek (Ohio) have brought renewed courage to us. Starting on November 13, there was a growth in interest until the meetings closed on Sunday, Nov. 27. One of our best services was on Thanksgiving morning, when many gave their testimony of gratitude to the Lord.

Most encouraging of all, and that for which we are now especially thankful, is the addition of nine new members into the truth and fold of Christ. These were baptized on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 27, in Brush Creek on the farm of Bro. and Sr. Chas. Doll. The new members were extended the right hand of fellowship at the final service Sunday evening. They are: Mildred Esther Puterbaugh, West Milton; Mr. C. V. Wilson, Mrs. Bertha Pensyl, West Milton Rfd.; Mrs. Lottie M. Moore, Esther A. Underwood, Tippecanoe City, Rfd.; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph F. Brown, Mrs. Mertie Weaver, Josephine Weaver, Troy, Rfd.

An unusual blessing has come to us in the conversion of this last one named, Josephine Weaver. Josephine, in her latter teens, has learned and obeyed the truth handicapped with ears that cannot hear and a tongue that cannot talk. She has been schooled at the school for the deaf and dumb in Columbus and thus is able to read and write. By watching our lips, too, she could understand parts of our sermons. Upon returning home after the evening services, she would frequently question others who had heard the message. It was much to our joy, then, when one evening she accepted the gospel invitation and came forward for baptism. Her confession was taken in writing and then read to the brethren as her public testimony of Christ. If the deaf and dumb will be taught the way of salvation, where can the neglectful find excuse? To help Josephine her pastor has already sent in her subscription to The Restitution Herald, the best religious weekly obtainable. Will others send her a card or letter of cheer? She will gladly listen to the voice of the pen. Hearing, after all, is a matter of the heart, and not of the ears.

Mrs. Mertie Weaver, mother of Josephine, and Mr. and Mrs. Brown, brother-in-law and sister to her, requested baptism the same evening. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been attending regularly the past summer. We are glad to welcome them and the mother, Mrs. Weaver, into our body of believers.

Mildred Puterbaugh for the past year or more has shown an interest in our work, though holding membership in another faith, where she served as one of the Sunday school teachers. We are glad to welcome her into our fold. With most of her life before her, we trust she may find opportunity to teach many others those gospel truths that she now loves.

Mr. C. V. Wilson is nearing his seventy year mark. Much to the shame of professing Christendom, he had never so much as seen a baptismal service until the service in which he was baptized. As we walked together into the icy-cold water, he said, "I'm going to do the best I can." Little does the world know of the glory there is in such implicit faith and obedience.

Mrs. Bertha Pensyl and Mrs. Lottie Moore are both wives and mothers who have attended our services for a year or more. Each one has a son that led the way some time ago. It is now indeed gratifying to see the mothers also embrace the true and only gospel. May God bless them in their new service and bless them with fruitful lives.

Esther Underwood, about fifteen years of age, is the daughter of one of our deacons. Her mother, too, once served in the church but now sleeps in the grave. There are few, if any, who attend our services more regularly than Esther; and we rejoice to see her in early life take up the cross that leads to life eternal.

In addition to the converts many others, new to us, came to hear the Word. There is other fruitage yet to come, which we pray may be gathered as the Father wills.

It is just a little past Thanksgiving Day; but if you will do so, please accept this as a Thanksgiving letter from the Brush Creek Church of God and its pastor.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

VIOLA POWELL

Viola Jane Griffeth was born in New York, June 27, 1853. At the age of one year she moved with her parents to Adams County, Wisconsin, where she resided for 17 years.

She was married on Feb. 11, 1870, to Walter B. Wilber and came to Michigan where she has resided since. To this union were born two daughters, Lulu B. and Mary L. Lulu B. preceded her in death at the age of 7 years.

She was united in marriage to E. A. Powell at Ionia, Mich., Sept. 20, 1910, moving to Blanchard in 1913, where she resided until her death on Oct. 20, 1932. She is survived by her husband, E. A. Powell; one daughter, Mary L. Kelley of Grand Rapids; one foster daughter, Ruth Pumfrey, and grandson Raymond of Belding; also by two sisters, Irena Osborn and Mildred Culp; one brother, B. H. Griffeth, all of Blanchard, besides a host of other relatives and friends.

Sr. Powell was of a sunny disposition, loving, gentle, and patient in suffering. She had been a member of our Blanchard church for many years and died with a firm hope of the resurrection.

Funeral services were conducted from the home on Saturday, Oct. 22; and Sr. Powell was quietly laid in her final resting place, awaiting the Master's call.

F. E. Siple.

MRS. E. C. GATES

Rebecca Ann French, daughter of Ezra and Melissa French, was born near Lester Center, Blackhawk Co., Iowa, January 11, 1861, and died at Oelwein, Iowa, Sept. 19, 1932.

Her early life was spent in the vicinity of her birth. On April 25, 1883, she was united in marriage to Edwin Cyrus Gates. Into this home were born three children: Mae Gates Boyle of Atlanta, Ga.; Hazel Gates Hubbell and Harrison Gates, the latter two having preceded the mother. The family made their home in Otterville and Aurora, Iowa, later moving to Oelwein.

Mrs. Gates was a devout Christian woman. She was a member of the Church of God, and her entire life was lived in the spirit of the Master who went about doing good. She took little thought for her own comfort, but always for the well-being of others. Many friends and dear ones will long cherish her friendly, cheering smiles and words of encouragement.

Mrs. Gates is survived by her husband, Edwin Cyrus Gates, of Oelwein; her daughter, Mae Gates Boyle, of Atlanta, Ga.; two grandchildren, Miss Edwina L. Boyle and John Boyle, Jr.; also by one brother, Charles French of Madison, Wis. Two sisters, Aelsah French Everett and Mary French Noss, preceded her. Besides these, a host of relatives and friends bear tribute to this true friend, wife, and mother.

The funeral service was held in the First Baptist church of Oelwein, conducted by Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Hillis. She was laid to rest in Woodlawn cemetery.

C. E. Hillis.

WHERE ARE WE GOING?

By John W. Burget

Do we love Jesus enough to contribute money to the support of His church? How can we expect to be the bride of Christ if we do not help support His church? We are going down, down, down, the broad highway to destruction; for James said that faith without works is dead.

Do we work and help to support our national headquarters? If we do not do anything for our church, is not our faith dead? "For as the body (the church) without the Spirit (or "word") is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

What condition are we in, anyway? Are we hot? If so, we go to church and help to support the Church of God. Or are we cold? If so, we do not want to go to church; we do not care anything about our national headquarters; we are dead.

I think a great many of us are just lukewarm. We would like to go to church; but some worldly affair interferes, and we just cannot get started. We would like to help support our national headquarters, but we do not love Jesus enough to make the sacrifice; therefore, we are going down, down, down, the broad highway to destruction. Jesus said, "Because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spue thee out of my mouth."—Revelation 3:16.

Why do not our ministers write and tell us about the signs of the times concerning the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ?

I believe we ought to establish a national prayer hour every Sunday (not Sabbath day, because Jesus nailed the Sabbath days to His cross—Colossians 2:14, 16), according to standard time, that we all could pray at the same moment, praying that we would get out of our lukewarm condition, praying that we all would make a sacrifice and send money to support our national headquarters.

I understand that our national headquarters will have to quit if all of us do not help. James said that faith without works is dead.

Brother! Sister! that sounds bad! Let all of us get busy. Let our headquarters minister publish a prayer for all of us to repeat at the same moment of time as requested.

I suggest we establish our time to pray as follows: Standard Time—Atlantic 2:00 p. m., Eastern 1:00 p. m., Central 12:00 noon, Mountain 11:00 a. m., Pacific 10:00 a. m., Sitka 9:00 a. m.

We can be out of debt and our headquarters will be able to do more, if we all help. We can if we will.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Sr. Wm. Hanson writes: "The Restitution Herald is getting better week by week. It does me good to see the Lord's work advancing in the various churches. We're praying earnestly for the N. B. I. work."

Elder A. E. Hoskins, the energetic pastor of the Church of God at St. Cloud, Minn., has recently changed his address from 436 22nd Ave. N. to 615 23rd Ave. N. But wherever he lives, you will find Bro. Hoskins actively engaged in his Father's business.

At the Oregon (Ill.) district Sunday school convention held last Sunday, Mr. Ray Wallace, our grower at the greenhouse, was chosen president, Sr. Mary A. Gesin, our former associate editor, vice president, and Miss Hazel Wilde, assistant treasurer of the N. B. I., was made representative of young people. Altogether the Institution is well represented.

Do not forget to place The Herald at the top of your Christmas shopping list!

Word reaches The Herald that Bro. Cecil Smead, pastor of the Burr Oak, Ind., church, is taking a month's vacation among the orange groves of Southern California. For the month of December his address will be 2922 Stockbridge Ave., Los Angeles, Calif., which is the home of his mother, Sr. J. E. Hammond. Bro. Smead has been faithful to his work and will return refreshed for further service.

We are publishing the communication from Bro. Burget on the news page to make sure that all read and meditate carefully on his recommendation. Further, we suggest that the plan be adopted and that our brethren unite their hearts at the time stated in special prayer to God for His blessing and leadership in the general work of His church, particularly with regard to the financial needs of the N. B. I. at this time.

Those who are seeking inexpensive Christmas gifts would do well to look on page 11 of this paper.

Sr. Levi Mick, matron of Golden Rule Home, is spending a short vacation at her old home at Warsaw, Ind. Sr. Mick has been exceedingly faithful in her care for the older ones at the Home, and was sadly in need of rest long before she found it possible to get away.

We greatly appreciate the prompt manner in which the brethren are responding to the recent appeal of Bro. L. E. Conner. We will continue to work and sacrifice and pray and PAY until our general work is lifted entirely from the "Slough of Despond" into which it was cast by the depression.

Do not forget to place The Herald at the top of your Christmas shopping list!

We much regret to report that Bro. T. J. Ellis, treasurer of the N. B. I., was severely injured last Thursday night while doing some over-time work on a locomotive in the Illinois Central R. R. shops at Waterloo, Iowa. Sr. Ellis writes that he slipped from the running board of the engine and was thrown some eight feet to the hard floor of the shop. He was painfully bruised and suffered severe sprains of ankle and knee, but no bones were broken. We pray for his speedy recovery.

* Writing of the death of Bro. Decker, Bro. Wm. A. Hanson of Grand Rapids, Mich., says: "Through the death of Bro. Decker the Blanchard church has been deprived of one of its oldest and most faithful members. For years he has been a devoted elder of the church, loved and respected by every member. The Michigan Conference will feel keenly the loss of an active worker and faithful contributor to the State work."

THE HOLY SPIRIT

WHAT is the holy Spirit? One says, "The Spirit is the Word or in the Word." Another says, "The Spirit is the third person of the Trinity." Another says, "It is the power of God, by which He is omnipresent." All cannot be right, though all might be wrong.

In Ephesians 4:30 we are told not to grieve the Spirit. This text is used to prove the Spirit to be a person, because it is said that you cannot grieve an influence.

But we can grieve another's feelings, or a heart (1 Sam. 2:33; Deut. 15:10; 1 Sam. 1:8; Psa. 73:21) or a mind (Gen. 26:35). Yet the heart or the mind would not be considered a person, would it? However, Paul might mean here that the Spirit is a person. We shall let the matter rest here, for now.

God can be omnipresent, however, by His Spirit, as Genesis 1:2 proves. This was God's working power. We would not take it that a PERSON was on the waters, literally, would we?

But we are told that the Spirit is the Comforter—the Paraclete. And therefore the Spirit is a person.

Perhaps so. But let us read what Jesus says. "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."—John 15:26. The word "proceedeth" is from the Greek ekporeuomai. It means to go from or out of a place, to proceed from, to flow out, etc. We read again: "God . . . hath also given unto us his holy Spirit."—1 Thess. 4:8.

We find no honor ascribed in the Bible to the Spirit when the Father and Son are named. We read of the Spirit "itself" (Rom. 8:16, 26), but we never read of God or of Christ "itself." We are not taught to love the Spirit or to worship or honor the Spirit or pray to the Spirit.

The word "spirit" is used in four ways in the Bible. It means a person (angels), state of feeling (a haughty spirit), breath of life (Job 27:3), and a power proceeding from one being to another. Power is never seen, but may be felt. 2 Kings 7:6, 7 and 1 Chronicles 14:15 illustrate how folk can have a mental vision of things.

In Revelation 5:13 the honor goes to God and the Lamb, but not to the Spirit. So Revelation 7:9, 10. And note 2 John 9: "both"—not three. 2 Thessalonians 1:1, 2, 8, 12: the grace is not from the Spirit. Note Paul's benediction, Romans 1:7. In the thirteen letters of Paul this occurs, but the Spirit is omitted. Why? If Paul knew of a "third person," why omit him in 1 Corinthians 8:6?

In the Bible we never read of "God the Spirit." We do read, "The Spirit of God." In Acts 2:4: 10:45, we read that they were filled with the Spirit. Not with the spirit of the Spirit! Jesus imparted the Spirit by breathing (John 20:22). Can a person be thus imparted? Jesus calls the Spirit "power from on high" (Luke 24:49). God's Spirit is His "presence" (Psa. 139:7). They were baptized with the Spirit (Acts 11:16). Were they baptized with a person? The Spirit is imparted by laying on hands (Acts 8:18; 19:6). Did Simon try to buy a person or a "power"? Read it. The Spirit is poured (Acts 2:17). Can a person be poured? God put His Spirit within individuals (Isa. 63:11). A person—this? We may spend much time in agreeing or disagreeing or discussing about the nature of the Spirit. One thing must be remembered, however; and that is that we must "be filled with the Spirit." This must be. It is imperative. And the more of that experience we have, the better, praise God.

To say as some do that if we deny the personality we know nothing of the Spirit is unwise and wrong. And to call folk who believe in the personality of the Spirit idolaters is unwise and wrong.

Let us see to it first of all that we have the holy Spirit, for apart from that Blessing and experience we are none of His (Rom. 8:9).—L. W. Hoffman in Messiah's Advocate.

AFFLICTIONS, like God's angels, will move away when they have done their errand.

ANCIENT PROPHECY AND MODERN DISCOVERY

THERE is an interesting prophecy in the eleventh chapter of the Apocalypse," says Revelation, "that is thrown into brilliant relief by a recent utterance of a radio official. The Bible story is that of the two witnesses and their death in the street of Jerusalem. Rev. 11:8-11. The narrative says that when the witnesses have finished their testimony, the antichrist shall overcome them and kill them. Their dead bodies shall lie in the street of Jerusalem.

"There is nothing extraordinary so far. But the next verse says that 'people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half . . . and they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry.'

"It has long been pointed out that this prophecy could never have been fulfilled under conditions existing when it was made. It would have been impossible for the people of all nations to have news of an event so quickly, since the rejoicing is said to have taken place before the bodies were buried at the end of three days and a half. Now, of course, news can flash around the world and into every province of the globe in much less time than this.

"But now the president of the National Broadcasting Company has a word to say on television. After speaking about the fact that isolation is impossible in the world because of radio, airplanes two miles in the air, submarines under the sea, and explorers in the jungles or at the poles being able to keep in touch with 'civilization,' he goes on to say, 'Soon men dwelling in five different continents will be able to talk to one another as clearly as if they were all in the same room.' " And through television men in every nation will be able actually to see the dead bodies of the two witnesses as they lie in the streets.

THE FALSE AND THE TRUE

IT IS useless to pretend that the faith preached by the apostles gradually gained ground in the Roman Empire until it became the established religion. It did nothing of the kind. On the contrary, its spark almost went out, as the apostles themselves expected it would. They expressed themselves in tones of unmistakable despondency regarding the immediate upshot of their enterprise. Evil men and seducers were to wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Instead of the bride of Christ being formed in a position of honor and power in the earth, we have a woman of a very different sort in ecclesiastical ascendancy over the nations.

The apostles would have repudiated with sorrowful indignation the entire system which went by the name of Christianity two hundred years after their death. It was hard work for them to make converts, supernaturally endowed though they were. The instincts and passions of human nature were all antagonistic to the faith they preached. And when their powerful influence was withdrawn, the state of the case was one of practical failure and collapse. Even while they were living, they had more than they could do to keep those who professed the faith of Christ up to the mark of His teaching and requirements. There were continually occurring outbreaks and schisms and unfaithfulness which called for their censure and reproof.

We are not astonished, therefore, that matters should have grown worse after their removal from the scene. That which subsequently became a powerful organization was not the Christianity of Christ, but something entirely different, except in name. It was propagated at the point of the sword. It was not the purity of the system which was the secret of its spread, but the fact that it was a gross and impudent caricature of that which Christ had taught. For more than three hundred years, historians tell us, Christianity was a struggling and comparatively unimportant sect until Emperor Constantine avowed himself a Christian for reasons that will not stand much investigation. Eighty years after, the pagan worship was entirely prohibited by Emperor Theodosius, who issued an edict against its sacrifices.

And what have we round about us today but the most recent phase of the historical continuity of this very system? It has become consolidated and crystallized and has grown venerable, but it is the same still and can only be confounded with the Christianity of the New Testament by those who are incapable of comparing the two. It is not a divine reality, but a purely human device which kings and priests have found too profitable to abandon and forego.

The question needs to be revived and pressed home. What makes a man a friend and follower of Jesus Christ? Who is competent to settle such a question as Christ Himself? And He says, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you"; "whosoever shall do the will of my Father who is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother"; "he that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me"; "not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."

Now where shall we look for the practical reality corresponding to these statements? The commandments of Christ—who begins to try to live according to them? Is it the Christian nations who are ever ready for a pretext that may serve as ground on which to massacre half-civilized communities and to annex their territory and who are instantly up in arms to avenge an imaginary insult? Is it the Christian merchant or tradesman whose one great aim in life is to amass a fortune? Is it the Christian statesman who, on entering upon his parliamentary career, swears himself in?

It is clearly useless to extend inquiries like these. We must look elsewhere for something that bears any resemblance to the varied forms of obedience which Christ enjoined. The divine reality is only to be found in those persons (by whatever name they may be called) who are daily endeavoring to carry out His precepts in the midst of a

A Personal Prayer

LORD, let me never fail to trust in Thy providential care, even in the smallest affairs of my life. And in adversity, when Thou seemest to hide Thyself and I look in vain for release from trouble, cheer my way and inspire me with the assurance that the day will dawn and deliverance shall surely come. Under the most trying circumstances, may my faith in Thee and in the final triumph of righteousness hold me fast to duty.—Isaac Errett.

"My Conception of America"

"MY CONCEPTION of America," said President Herbert Hoover some years ago, "is a land . . . where contented and happy people, secure in their liberties, free from poverty and fear, shall have the leisure and impulse to seek a fuller life."

These are noble words, worthy of the great man who uttered them. Further, they reveal a vision that is almost prophetic in its scope and akin to inspiration in its insight into the natural aspirations of men. Coming from the president of the United States, it is not surprising that in its direct application it is limited to the citizens of this country; but we know that if this lofty destiny is ever granted to America it will also be enjoyed by all races of men throughout the world.

In these remarkable days of rapid communication and exchange it is impossible for one nation to bask in the sunshine of prosperity and other nations remain for long under the clouds of adversity and depression. We are learning that "God is no respecter of persons" and that "He hath made of one blood all nations of men" and has already begun the process of breaking down the bars of race and prejudice that will eventually result in the complete amalgamation of these diversified elements of humanity in the fires of the tribulation and in the more blessed melting power of the kingdom of God that is to follow.

So we may look hopefully forward to a time in which the president's splendid vision of America may become an actual reality to all the world.

That the president has not overlooked this broader outlook upon mankind is apparent from what follows.

Anticipating the objection that might be raised against the seeming selfishness of his viewpoint, he continues: "Some may ask where all this may lead beyond mere material progress. It leads to the release of the energies of men and women from the dull drudgery of life to a wider vision and a higher hope. It leads to the opportunity for greater and greater service, not alone from man to man in our own land, but from our country to the whole world."

How wonderfully the prophets, speaking for God, assure us of the future fulfillment of Mr. Hoover's aspirations for America and for the world in a way so grand, so glorious, and so rich in its splendid realities that it is impossible for the finite mind to grasp it in its fulness!

When the rebellious hearts of men have been humbled by adversity, by warfare, by the sorrowful fruitage of sin, until they are willing to cry one to another, "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths," then, indeed, will the world learn righteousness and become "a contented and happy people, . . . free from poverty and fear," and then shall they have "the leisure and impulse to seek a fuller life."

Under the guiding hand of Infinite Love, under the constant instruction of Divine Wisdom, under the blessed leadership of the Prince of Peace and the Lord of Life, the peoples of the world will be released from "the dull drudgery" they have labored under since the curse was pronounced upon the ground and will find both time and inclination to devote their attention to the nobler pursuits and to the fuller and richer service made possible for them by the opportunities afforded in the Golden Age.

Then, indeed, will open up before mankind "a wider vision and a higher hope"; for their vision will stretch out into the infinitude of eternity, and their new-found hope will be as limitless as the resources of the Almighty! For Mr. Hoover's "conception of America" is Jehovah's conception of the future of the world.

To plan so glorious a consummation demands more of wisdom than the human mind can bring to bear, and to accomplish a purpose so marvelous and so great requires a power mightier than man possesses. And so the prophet says, "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this!" It is to God, therefore, that we must look, and on Him alone must we depend for the complete realization of our hopes for America and for the world.

THY KINGDOM COME!

FROM childhood we have been taught to pray, Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. For two thousand years childish lips have prattled those sacred words at the mother's knee, and the saintly patriarch in trembling accents has muttered the petition. From the pulpit of the house of prayer, from the peaceful fireside of the home, from the great ships plowing their way through the trough of the sea, from the blood-stained battleground for ages those words have ascended to the Throne of Grace.

Thy kingdom come! These identical words, used by Jesus in the prayer He taught His disciples to pray, are found in almost every formal service in the Hebrew Book of Public Worship used in the Jewish synagogues throughout the world of today. Wherever the sons of Jacob meet to pay homage to the God of their fathers, that prayer is solemnly intoned. The ancient rabbis declare that no Jewish invocation is complete without it.

In the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer the words instilled in the hearts of the disciples by Jesus Christ are repeated again and again. At the christening of children, at the time of their confirmation, in the marriage service, at the burial of the dead—in all formal orders of worship in the Episcopal Church those words have a most important place.

The pious Catholic, as he "counts his beads," having said ten Ave Marias or Holy Marys, repeats the Paternoster, the prayer beginning with the words, Our Father, and which leads to the expression so dear to our hearts—Thy kingdom come!

Bishop Fallows said, referring to the World Conference of Religions held in Chicago during the World's Fair: "At the round table we had there were represented twenty-six denominations . . . and we could all join in the Lord's Prayer."

No matter what creed we may endorse, no matter what sect we may be connected with, be it Jewish, Catholic, or Protestant, if we have come to know something of the God of the Bible—the God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob—if we have learned something of His kindness, His mercy, His justice, and His love for all mankind, our greatest and most natural desire and fervent prayer will be that His will may be done on earth as it is done in heaven!

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork, sang the Psalmist. The starry skies reveal the majesty, the power, the wisdom, and the unity of their Creator. With minute exactitude as to time and place, the heavenly orbs—the stars, the planets, and the meteors—follow through the measureless reaches of limitless space the beckoning finger of God! They never falter, they never deviate, from the true path to which the wisdom of God directs them.

That men and nations everywhere may thus come to obey God is our desire as we pray, Thy kingdom come.

We would be more specific, however, as to why men of so many generations, composed of individuals differing so widely in other things, have felt and still feel impelled to offer this matchless model prayer of Jesus Christ our Lord.

First of all, it is perhaps due to humanity's lack of confidence in itself. We have learned by sad experience the futility of man's efforts to right the wrongs of the world. If I were asked to point out the basic cause of the wars that ravage the earth today and threaten its peace and security tomorrow; if I were asked to give the real reason for the present world-wide financial depression; if I were asked to name the particular virus that is poisoning the entire body politic and the entire social body with discontent and suspicion; if I were asked to tell why thousands are dying of hunger while agriculture suffers from "over-production"; if I were called upon to declare why banks are closing, why business is stagnated, why men are out of employment, why wages are reduced, why all of these depressing and alarming conditions prevail everywhere, I would make but one answer to them all: Men have lost confidence in themselves and in the governments they have established!

Confidence cannot be built upon a crumbling foundation of past failures! It simply cannot be done! The thinking public grows tired of explanations and excuses and political vaporings after a while. It reaches a point in its experience when it comes to demand a change, a real change, a fundamental change. It must have relief.

God Remains

Psalm 19:1

The heavens declare the glory of God—
The shifting clouds and azure blue,
The rising and the dying sun
Bring God—none else—to mortal's view.
I stand and lift my heart to Him,
I reverence, worship, and adore,
I see my Maker's handiwork,
In all this wealth of beauty-store.
Uncover heads, bend low the knee,
For God remains.

Yes, God remains, the God of love,
The God of beauty and of power.
No matter what the critic says,
Or if unfaith hath fleeting hour,
His hand is there, His fingers write
In characters convincing, true;
Man cannot shut away the sight—
Majestic orbs in deepest blue.
Man's darkness flees! Sweet hope is born!
Since God remains.

THE REQUIREMENTS OF GOD

By Alice V. Blakesley

As I sit here by my window meditating in my lonely hours, this question comes before me: "Are the requirements of God too hard to be observed and, therefore, is it impossible for one to be saved?"

To this I say that for the unconverted one this would seemingly be true, for it is not by good morals or power or strength of our own that we can please God. But for those who have accepted Christ and the Will and Spirit of God within their hearts all things are made possible; for we read, "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able."—1 Corinthians 10:13. If we depend on our own ways and strength and good morals, we will surely fail; for by so doing we are looking away from God to our own ways and are depending on our own strength; whereas we should be ever looking to God, the Source and Fountain Head of all power and strength. "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Phil. 2:13. This is said of those who love the Lord and are strong in faith.

We read in Romans 8:28, "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Here we see there is a line of work for every one of God's children to do; and as we study the Word of God so as to be approved by it and are qualified for an office, God gives us the call through His Spirit, impressing upon us to take up the line of work for which we are qualified.

He opens up the way for us to receive an education and to be educated in His Word; and when we are approved by it, then His Spirit calls for the ministering of His Word to the unsaved, that we may throw out the life-line to save many who are drifting upon this stormy ocean of life with no port in view and show them that to accept Christ as the Captain of their vessel will anchor them safely in a port where there are no clouds or storms or pain or sickness or trouble but all is peace, joy, and happiness with Christ as King.

God has given each one of us a talent to be used for Him as He wills; and shall we not comply in obedience to His will, or shall we deliberately wrap up that talent and lay it aside and say that the requirements of God are too hard to be observed and that therefore it is impossible for one to be saved?

Now let us examine Luke 18:18-30. As we read about the rich ruler, we see that the case presents some remarkable points. First, this man was of irreproachable character, and this amidst all the temptations of truth; for he was a young man and exceedingly rich. But unlike the other rulers to whose class he belonged, he became restless, his heart craved something more than riches: it craved eternal life; and he so far believed in Jesus as to be persuaded He could authoritatively direct him on this vital point. So in earnest was he that he came running to Jesus, even kneeling down before Him (as we read in Mark 10:17). When Jesus told him of the keeping of the commandments, he said he had kept them and asked what he yet lacked.

This gives us a glimpse of his heart: doubtless he was perfectly sincere. Something in him whispered to him that just the keeping of the commandments was not sufficient to gain eternal life. He felt that there was something beyond this necessary, and he was at a loss to know what it could be. When Jesus required of him to sell all he had and give it to the poor, he went away much grieved; as his riches were his idol. When riches or eternal life on Christ's terms were the alternatives, the result showed which side the balance inclined; and thus was he shown to lack the one all-comprehensive requirement of the law, the absolute subjection of the heart to God. (He did not have the faith the poor widow had who cast her two mites, all she had, into the treasury, trusting God for her keeping.)

In Matthew 19:29 we read what Christ says: "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life." Here we have the blessed promise of a reconstruction of all human relationships and affections on a Christian basis and in a Christian state after their being sacrificed in natural form on the altar of love to Christ. This He calls manifold, an hundredfold more than what they sacrificed.

Our Lord Himself was the first to exemplify this new adjustment of His own relationship. Read Matthew 12:49, 50, and 2 Corinthians 6:14-18. But this came with persecutions, for how could such a transfer take place without the most cruel wrenches to flesh and blood? But the persecutions would happily follow us into our new and higher circle breaking that up, too. Best of all in the world to come, life everlasting, praise God!

"When the shore is won, at last,

Who will count the billowy past?"

These promises are for everyone who forsakes his all for Christ as required in Matthew 19:29.

We read what God's requirements of us are in Deuteronomy 10:12: "What doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy soul." Read also Micah 6:8. And in the sixteenth verse it reads, "Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart (that is, by change of mind), and be no more stiffnecked." Combine this with Leviticus 26:41; Deuteronomy 30:6; Jeremiah 4:4; Romans 2:25-29; and Colossians 2:11.

Oh, dear ones, may we all ever hold fast to our faith which is the cable to the anchor of our hope and ever remember that our faith is to be tried by trials and persecutions. May we ask strength of God to bear them in patience as did Daniel and Job; and may we each so live that in the end we can say as Paul said, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:"

henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Timothy 4:7, 8.

A GOOD SUPERINTENDENT'S QUALIFICATIONS

PERHAPS the first question which comes to us as we consider our subject is, "What do we mean by qualifications?" The dictionary will tell us the meaning of qualifications is: "Any quality, endowment, or acquirement which fits a person for any office or occupation, legal power or ability." As citizens of a nation, whether it be the United States or Canada, we would not expect to put a man at the head of our government who did not have the necessary qualifications to fill that office. As private citizens we have a right to look for the necessary qualifications in our leaders. We would not expect to put a teacher in our schools unless he had prepared himself for that work and was qualified to fill that position. It is so in every phase of the workaday world—the social, economic, political, and business side of life. We expect certain qualifications in the leaders to enable them to perform their special tasks.

How slow we have been to recognize that the leaders in the greatest of all tasks need certain qualifications to carry on the work which has been left by an infinite God in the hands of mankind to carry on. There is no office in the entire church that is fraught with greater responsibility or opportunity than that of the Sunday school superintendent. Therefore we believe that the pupils of any school have a right to expect certain qualifications in their superintendent.

A good superintendent is first of all a Christian—a Christian in the highest sense of the word, Christlike. He is one who has had the blood applied to his heart, and is conscious of the abiding presence of the Christ in his heart and life; one who knows Him who has said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life"; one who is practicing in his daily life the principles which Jesus laid down in that wonderful sermon on the mount; one who is enjoying the fullness of the Spirit, even to overflowing, that it may go out and touch other lives and inspire them to know Him too.

The superintendent is the leader of the Sunday school. According to Bishop Charles H. Brent, the first qualification for leadership is humility. This will be found in the superintendent whose life is wholly consecrated to God. H. W. Webb-Peploe has said, "What God wants is men great enough to be small enough to be used." All great leaders have had in their lives the quality of humility; and Jesus, the greatest of all leaders, was the most humble of them all. Therefore the superintendent who is a Christlike, humble, consecrated, devoted Christian, cannot help but make an impression upon the pupils of his school.

He should ever keep the main objective of the school in mind. Hurlbut tells us in his teacher training book that "the Sunday school is a department of the church of Christ in which the Word of God is taught for the purpose of bringing souls to Christ, and of building up souls in Christ." The superintendent should never lose sight of this.

A good superintendent is a Bible student, seeking to know the mind of God as revealed through His Word, studying to show himself approved unto God, a workman rightly dividing the Word of Truth.

A good superintendent is a lover of children. The church today must be fed from the school. We must centralize our thought upon the children of the community. Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God."

We often read the parable of the sower. Some seed fell by the wayside, some on stony ground, some among thorns; but we do not believe the hard beaten path, the stony ground, or the thorny places apply to the heart of the child. It is our conviction that here is the fallow ground in which to sow the good seed, that it may spring up and bear fruit. Children may come to Sunday school because they love their teacher; but what a feeling of gratitude is in their hearts if there is a kindly smile or a word of appreciation or encouragement from the superintendent. Children love to be noticed, and especially by those who are their leaders.

A good superintendent should be progressive. He should have the best interest of the school at heart. This being true, he will endeavor to keep abreast of the times and train himself as far as possible for his work. He should come in to touch with available agencies, attend gatherings—denominational and interdenominational—as the way may open; read some of the best books on the subject; go to the school of prayer, preparation, perseverance, patience, and practice; visit other schools occasionally. He should have a good library of his own and a good worker's library in his school. He should have a well-planned program. Never should a superintendent come before his school unprepared. We cannot expect reverence from the school unless the superintendent comes before the school with an air of reverence and is prepared to carry forth a program in the spirit of reverence.

Not only is preparation for the school session necessary, but he should look ahead through the year, and plan well in advance the special features to be observed. There are other qualifications we might mention, but our space is limited. May we sum it all up briefly in the words of that great Sunday school leader, Marion Lawrence, in his book, My Message to Sunday School Workers. "The Sunday school superintendent should have a good head, two good eyes, two good ears, a tongue that knows how to keep silent, two feet, two hands, knees that bend, a broad back, a good liver, and a big heart."—Mrs. Pearl Pender in The World's Crisis.

HE MUST COME AGAIN

By D. G. Harvey

"Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him."—Isaiah 40:10.

ABOUT two thousand years ago there came a man out from the wilderness speaking without fear to the Jews of his day, warning them of their sins. Well-dressed? No, clad in camel's hair. He claimed no high honors for himself, saying only that he was the one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord."—Matt. 3:3; Luke 3:4. This man, John the Baptist, was commissioned to bring the attention of the world to our Lord's first advent. He was faithful. He did his work and will receive his reward.

The church today has its great work. The church has been commissioned to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom and the coming of the King (Matt. 16:15). Almost all are familiar with the story of the birth of our Lord, which so-called Christian nations celebrate each December 25. We hear much of His death on the Roman cross and are reminded of His resurrection at Easter-time each year. But of His second coming very little is said. Yet the event is of such importance that Paul saw fit to close each chapter of First Thessalonians with reference to that event. The last message of Jesus to man as revealed to John was, "Surely I come quickly."—Rev. 22:20. Yet sad, but true, this greatest of all events is seldom mentioned in the popular church today.

John the Baptist did his work, used his talent. What will be the reward of the church that fails in bringing this message, that hides its talent?

Our text states, "His work (is) before him." You say, "His work was finished on the cross," and remind us of His words, "It is finished." True, the sacrifice was finished. Even before that He had finished another part of His work. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me."—John 17:4. He had glorified the Father.

But the greatest, the most important, work has not been finished. He who has the power of death is yet to be destroyed (Heb. 2:14).

When Jesus was taken up into heaven, the angels informed His disciples He would return (Acts 1:11). His followers were the last to see Him on the earth; His church will be first to see His return. He will come as a thief to catch away His bride (1 Thess. 5:2); a thief to the world, but with a shout to His church (1 Thess. 4:16) He will catch away His church out of the world during the time of trouble (Matt. 24:21, 22; Dan. 12:1). We are now in the beginning of sorrows (Matt. 24:6-8).

How do we know His coming is near? By fulfilled prophecy. "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Psalm 102:16. "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21:24. Is Jerusalem trodden down any longer? Are the Jews captive? Is Zion being built up? What does it mean? It means that Jesus is coming again, not as the Man of sorrow, but as a King of kings and Lord of lords, bringing with Him the rapture of the church, the destruction of Satan, the removal of the curse, and the restoration of the earth. Please compare Revelation 22:1-4 with Genesis 2:7-10. Proclaim the gospel of the kingdom (Matt. 24:14).

THE TREE OF LIFE

THE types in the Scriptures that find their antitype in Christ are indeed wonderful. There are so many things that are shadows of good things to come, all of which find their substance in Christ. There is first the natural, afterwards the spiritual. The type is the lesser, the antitype the greater.

Adam is spoken of as a figure of Him that was to come (Romans 5:14). This being so, we are on good scriptural ground in considering the tree of life in Eden as a type of the greater Tree of Life, even the Christ, which is in the midst of the paradise of God (Revelation 2:7).

A type can never be equal to its antitype. The Edenic tree could only perpetuate natural life, whereas the greater will give immortality. The Edenic tree could not give to Adam the mental attitude that would lead to immortality of the body. The Christ Tree of Life will give to the eater a mental unity with God that will eventually be perfected in the divine nature.

Much has been written about the Edenic tree imparting immortality to the eater, even if only once partaking of it. This cannot be for various reasons. Immortality is the divine nature. To possess it is to have life in ourselves. "For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself."—John 5:26. This is God's objective, so that at the end of Christ's reign of a thousand years "God will be all in all" (1 Corinthians 15:28). No person will be allowed to enter that state until proved worthy by trial. (See Romans 2:6, 7.)

It must be especially noted that before Adam's character was formed by trial it was his right and privilege to eat of the tree of life in Eden. There was no restriction. It was as free to him as the other trees of the garden, the only exception being "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil."

It is not in keeping with God's revealed way of working to place immortality within such easy and haphazard reach of His creatures. Therefore immortality was not a property of the tree of life in Eden. It was there for Adam's benefit in his natural, earthy state. It could not change his nature, but it would perpetuate that nature indefinitely. Death would not and could not enter Eden with such a tree in its midst. Adam, in common with the animals, had his natural food prescribed. But there was no tree of life for the animals. They would naturally die as they advanced in years. Not so with Adam. The tree of life would rejuvenate him; it was a special blessing to him because he was God's son, made in the image of the Elohim. This means of living on and on was his right, freely given to him by his Creator. It was this right that he lost through disobedience. Without the tree of life death became inevitable.

God's sentence of death upon him was carried out by banishment from the garden and cutting him off from the tree of life. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin."—Romans 5:12.

The only passage in the Genesis account that has been used to teach immortality in the tree is Genesis 3:22: "And now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever." We all know that "for ever" does not necessarily mean eternally. The Jews under the Mosaic law could have lived in the land of Palestine "for ever and ever" if obedient (Jer. 7:1-7). Jesus will reign as King-Priest "for ever and ever" (Rev. 1:6). He will not be Priest when God is All in all. If "for ever" meant eternity, there would be no need to write, "For ever, even for ever and ever."—Daniel 7:18.

The truth is very simple. Adam, having eaten of the forbidden tree, was prevented from also eating of the tree of life. As a sinner his right to the tree of life was cut off. Thus all his posterity, Jesus included, was born outside of Eden into that state of things brought about by Adam's sin; and so the Apostle writes, "In Adam all die."

We will look at the antitypical tree of life. The way that Jesus has become the Tree of Life is not my subject. As the spiritual is so much greater than the natural, so the privileges and blessings in Christ and the life that is in Him far transcend and eclipse all that was prefigured in Eden. It is necessarily so. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."—John 10:10. This abundant life is immortality—the life of the Father. Christ is our Tree of Life even now, not the natural life, but the spiritual life. Now we are sons of God.

We are God's handiwork created from the dust of the Gentile earth. We are placed in God's garden. It is our privilege and right to eat of Him (Christ). We live on the luscious fruits of God's Word with Christ in the center as the Tree of Life. So long as we eat of Him, our inner man—the new man—the spiritual man—will never die. He is God's Gift to us. He will never be cut off from us while we are obedient; only our deliberate actions will deprive us of Him. Without Him the new man will grow old and die. With a full and free access to the Tree of Life we are rejuvenated day by day. All this in our mental, probationary state.

Be careful, brethren. What will be with us—immortality or corruption? "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."—Rev. 22:14.

A. E. Harvey in The Faith.

THE TRANSCENDENT CHRIST

Two brief texts of Scripture will serve to direct the trend of our meditations on this theme, Colossians 3:11, "Christ is all, and in all," and John 15:5, "Without me ye can do nothing."

The entire nature and essence of the Christian faith is determined by the person and work of Jesus Christ. Christianity owes its vital existence to Christ, and all Christian doctrine centers in a divine personality. Other religions could be deprived of the names of their founders and their religious principles remain intact, but not so with Christianity; it is centered in Christ, and without Him it would crumble to dust. For this reason the modernistic attacks upon the person of Christ are the more perilous and destructive to the very foundation of our sacred faith. Any teachings that tend to rob Christ of His divine origin or attributes are subtle and satanic and must not be tolerated or entertained to the slightest degree in the heart of a true believer if he is to maintain his fellowship with God and an unclouded Christian experience.

The great question asked Peter by Christ in Caesarea is one of the most vital that can be conceived: "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" Everything depends upon our estimate of Christ, and the only answer that will satisfy the Savior is the answer given by Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." It is impossible to classify Christ with Elijah, Jeremiah, John, or any other of the prophets and great men of the past. He cannot be termed a "good man," or merely a "prophet." He is either the divine Son of God, or a deceiver. Therefore the vital error of any religious system is that which detracts for a moment from the divine nature of Christ. Christ is all and in all to the believer in every aspect of Christian experience and in every step in his approach to God, for "no man cometh unto the Father but by me." This is true from the first experience of conviction to the most advanced stages of saintliness.

WITHOUT CHRIST SALVATION IS IMPOSSIBLE

Christ is the Way to God, and the only way. "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Regeneration consists not in conformity to any code of morals, good as they may be; it does not depend upon self-effort or keeping the law, but upon our acceptance of a divine Person as our Redeemer and Substitute. "Who-soever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." Thank God for this sure foundation upon which to rest our faith. As has been said, "We may tremble on the rock, but the rock never trembles under us."

WITHOUT CHRIST SANCTIFICATION IS IMPOSSIBLE

A true vision of Christ as our holiness will lift us out of a multitude of perplexities and confusing controversies.

We shall also experience a new sense of victory over the foes that assail us, a new conquest over carnal desires and the clamorings of the self-life. Paul cries out in Romans 7, "Who shall deliver me?" and Christ is the answer. "The battle is not yours but the Lord's." The trusting heart learns to refer all its problems and conflicts to Him who never lost a battle, and He becomes very real to us as the One who conquers all our foes, and we can sing with the poet:

"All that I need He will ever be,
All that I need till His face I see;
All that I need through eternity,
Jesus is all that I need."

Dr. F. B. Meyer has expressed the thought beautifully in an address on Christ as the complement of our need. He says, "I do not talk about the cross so much as about Jesus who was crucified; I do not talk about the grave, but about Jesus who rose; I do not talk about the ascension, but about Jesus who ascended. He is with you and me always. It is not holiness, but Jesus the Holy One. It is not meekness, it is Jesus, the Meek One. It is not purity, it is Jesus the Pure One. Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, not it, not an experience, not emotion, not faith, but Jesus."

WITHOUT CHRIST A MILLENNIUM IS IMPOSSIBLE

The future hope of the church and the only prospect of universal peace and millennial blessing is the coming back of our Christ. "Jesus is all the world needs today." It is folly to talk about a "Golden Age" and world-betterment schemes apart from Him. There can be no kingdom without the return of the King. Material progress and scientific discoveries do not necessarily spell moral and spiritual conquest. Much as we value all efforts to bring about world betterment and moral reform to raise ethical standards in society, at the same time we are compelled to concede that the tide of iniquity is rising higher and higher. We can never by human effort extinguish the flames, but can only hope to pluck men out of the fires.

Christ gives us a beautiful prophetic picture of the church age in the fourteenth chapter of Matthew. After He had fed the five thousand He constrained His disciples to go across the sea while He ascended the mountain to pray. As the ship proceeded a storm descended and the winds were contrary. In the fourth watch Jesus came to them walking on the waves, and immediately they were safely in harbor. The church during this age of absence from her Lord is tossed with the waves of worldly opposition and persecution. The night grows darker, and progress more difficult. But she is watching for the coming of the Master, walking on the waves. Immediately He appears the haven of all her hopes will be realized. He will speak peace to the troubled waves, and His presence will be the grand solution of all earth's conflicts, and the culmination of our fondest anticipations.

"Jesus, our watch we are keeping,
Longing for Thee to come;
Then shall be ended our night of weeping,
Then we shall reach our home."
—J. D. Williams in The Alliance Weekly.

A WISE ANSWER

THREE years ago a lecturer for the Christian Evidence Society was discoursing in the Hall of Science in Old Street Road, London, E. C., to some of Mr. Bradlaugh's followers among the skilled mechanics of that district. He emphasized the truthfulness of the history of the Bible by insisting upon the striking conformity of its references to Egypt with its political conditions in successive generations, now ascertained by our fuller knowledge of the hieroglyphic language—a conviction which seems to penetrate most deeply into the minds of those scholars who are specialists in this subject.

After the lecture on Egypt and the Bible was ended, opportunity was given for comments by the hearers in the Hall of Science. One of them, an earnest and interesting man in middle age who had read somewhat on Egyptian discovery, rose and said that after all he felt himself totally unable to believe the story of the exodus, if on no other ground than the decisive argument that the monuments of Egypt contained no inscription or memorial whatever of so great an event as the Israelitish oppression or of the overthrow of Pharaoh and the miraculous destruction of his army in the Red Sea. This produced hearty and general applause.

It was, however, answered to him that no nation has ever been known to set up memorials of its own wickedness and tyranny, much less of its own disastrous defeats. The permanent convincing memorial of the truth of the origin of Israel in Genesis and of the exodus from Egypt was the history of the people of Israel, who testified to their own servitude to the Pharaohs by the permanent Passover and to their deliverance, which must have been accomplished by some power equal to the forcible rescue of a nation of valuable laborers and slaves from the grasp of the most formidable military monarchy in the world of that day.

This fact that defeat is commemorated by silence, and victory by public monuments, was further shown by the example of Waterloo. England abounds with literary and monumental memorials of the decisive battle. Bridges, streets, crescents, railway stations, public monuments everywhere perpetuate the memory of Wellington and his victory. But in Paris, in France, the name of Waterloo is never seen or heard. You will look in vain for a single monument or inscription which perpetuates that overthrow. Would it be safe to conclude that there had been no battle of Waterloo in which Napoleon was overthrown? No, you look to the victors for the monuments.

It was thus with Egypt and Israel. It is only just to our Old Street auditors to say that they frankly admitted by cheers the fairness and sufficiency of the explanation; but this was an example of the rule that popular objections made on the authority of learned skeptics can often be removed by an unlearned appeal to common honesty and that the most victorious defense of the Bible before the common people against the destructive criticisms of men without spiritual insight is often found upon the very surface of the Bible itself in that tone of truth and godliness which all men appreciate and which is altogether inconsistent with theories of late traditional elaboration by Elohist, Jehovist, or Sacerdotalist dealers in folklore and imposture. A literary criticism, springing from a secret hostility of men to the supernatural and divine in their souls, is necessarily fatal to fair dealing with the Bible.—Edward White. Selected by R. A. Curtis.

THE WEALTH OF TURKISH SULTANS

FOR five hundred years the Sultans of Turkey have been amassing fortunes in treasures, some of which the present regime would not be averse to changing into ready money to help out their present precarious condition. These treasures include gifts of other sovereigns of Europe and Asia and also trophies of war. The curators of the Kapout Museum, Istambul, now have them on display; and although they now fill four rooms, there remain hundreds of other cases still to be opened. They represent many millions of dollars. The appraisals which have been made in recent years through experts have not been made public.

IMMORTALITY

IMMORTALITY, as we teach it, is the sole prerogative of God, the One who, Moses said, lifts His hand to heaven and says, "I live for ever." No created being could or would dare make such an assertion. Paul asserted that "he only hath immortality." And again, "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God." etc. But to man a ray of hope was given; for "to them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality, God will render eternal life." Eternal life will include the other three. Some people have asked me to define the difference between Eternal Life and Immortality. The only answer I could give them logically is that immortality represents a quality and eternal life a quantity. And this is surely taught by Paul in the great fifteenth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, where he says that "this mortal must put on immortality, and this corruptible must put on incorruption," both of which represent quality, and adds that "death is swallowed up in victory," the power of an endless life, the climax of all.

The Reformation, headed by Luther, began a crusade against Romish doctrines and practices, such as prayer for the dead and to the dead and absolution for the so-called "dead" in purgatory. Luther claimed that according to the Scriptures man sleeps until the resurrection. Tyndale and many other reformers also held the same doctrine. Many suffered death for their faithful testimony. Luther said that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul came off "the dunghill of Romish decretals."—E. W. Gad in Words of Life.

THY KINGDOM COME

I am a firm believer in American institutions and in American principles of government. If it were possible for men to govern themselves successfully, I believe that a government like ours is best calculated to do so. But even under the favorable conditions provided for in the constitution of this great commonwealth, our citizens are rapidly and unmistakably proving themselves inadequate to the task they have assumed. They cannot govern themselves satisfactorily.

Why do we pray, Thy kingdom come? First, for the reason I have given: the people have lost faith in the governments of men. At least they have lost faith in the ability of their leaders to provide for all their needs. They have lost faith in the power of their governments to establish and maintain peace. In a measure they have lost faith in the judiciary which they themselves have chosen to dispense justice. And last of all they have now come to lose faith in the officers of the law to protect their persons and their property from the assassin and the bandit. And so, when the arm of flesh fails them, they are driven to God, and they pray: Thy kingdom come!

They hear the internationalist's cry of, "Peace, peace; when there is no peace" (Jeremiah 8:11), and observe how "sudden destruction cometh upon them" (1 Thessalonians 5:3) immediately thereafter. And of course, they lose faith, not in God, but in men. Driven by the desperation of despair, they remember GOD—the God of their fathers whom they in their prosperity had almost forgotten—and turn to Him in prayer: Thy kingdom come!

For they know that the Word of God has gone forth; that it cannot return unto Him void, but will accomplish that which He pleases; that it will prosper in the thing whereunto He sent it; and that the earth will be filled with gladness and crowned with prosperity and peace when God's kingdom comes!—G. E. M.

"TILL HE COME"

"Till He come!" Oh, let the words
Linger on the trembling chords;
Let the "little while" between
In their golden light be seen;
Let us think how life and home
Lie beyond that "Till He come!"

Clouds and darkness round us press,
Would we have one sorrow less?
All the sharpness of the cross,
All that tells the world is loss,
Death, and Darkness, and the tomb
Only whisper, "Till He come!"

—Bickersteth.

GHOSTS OF PERSIA

By Arlen Marsh

PROOF of the existence of Jehovah or of its own correctness never can be built successfully on the premise that the Bible is true. Logic calls an attempt to do so the fallacy of simple iteration; for it is obvious that there is fault in that reasoning which endeavors to establish the being or state of a thing by the assumption that, since the thing is, it is. There are few more absurd arguments than this.

Yet this type of thought is the philosophy that commonly is used to establish the truth of the Bible and the being of God. Efforts to inject some thread of logic into religion usually meet with the plea, "But faith is all we need. We must accept everything on faith." Nevertheless, no man of intelligence would believe in Christianity if he could not prove to his own satisfaction that all Scripture actually is given by inspiration of God.

Predictive prophecy (in the exact meaning of the word, prophecy has reference to anything said or commanded by the Deity) is in its proper sphere when used to reach a definite conclusion regarding the veracity of the Bible. No greater or more effective proof of its truth can be found than the fulfillment of events foretold by it to occur far in the future. For this reason, and not for the mere slaking of curiosity, an analytical examination of such books as that penned by Daniel is of extraordinary value.

As was commented in "A Voice From the Gate of God," published in an earlier issue of this paper, the Medo-Persian Empire swept over dissolute and degenerate Babylon about 538 B. C. It was, however, some sixty years before that date that Jeremiah inserted in the midst of the judgments pronounced upon the peoples of the earth, "Make bright the arrows; gather the shields; the Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes: for his device is against Babylon, to destroy it; because it is the vengeance of the Lord."—Jeremiah 51:11.

In accordance with the vision dreamed by Daniel in the king's palace at Shushan, capital during the reign of Artaxerxes of the Medo-Persian kingdom, the Medes during the incipient stages of the empire were the more powerful of the two nations. However, Cyrus the Great caused the greater horn of the ram of Daniel 8 to grow with astounding rapidity by permanently subjecting the Medes to the sceptre of the Persians. (Incidentally, this places credence on the contention that "Darius the Median" of Daniel 6 and 9 was merely a ruler over Chaldea, subservient to the true emperor; for at the time indicated the Persians, and not the Medes, were in control of the government. Perhaps Daniel 9:1 lends force to the argument: "Darius . . . which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans.")

Following hard upon the seizure of supremacy by the Persians, the empire began faithfully, if unconsciously, to fulfill the predictions made of it by the prophets of omniscient Jehovah. Like an avenging sword it hurled "impregnable" Babylon to the ground on the very night that Daniel interpreted the handwriting on the wall for Nebuchadnezzar's grandson. Liege was anticipated, but without a struggle. Rapidly the kingdom pushed "westward, and northward, and southward, . . . and became great," as had been foretold by Daniel in the third year of the reign of Belshazzar of Chaldea.

Represented by the silver of the great image, this empire of the Medes and Persians was in a sense, although greater in area and military power, inferior to Babylon, the head of gold. No architectural triumphs or engineering feats marked the Medo-Persian civilization: more like Assyria, it developed a tremendous brute force and sagacity (characteristic of the bear which indicated it in Daniel 7); but it failed to approach the vast constructive activities maintained by Nebuchadnezzar.

Two years previous to the revelation involving the ram with its unequal horns Daniel "had a dream and visions of his head upon his bed." Four beasts, rising from the "great sea" of earth's peoples, passed before his mental vision. A lion stood for Babylon, a bear for Medo-Persia. Even the three great provinces crushed by the latter nation were indicated by three ribs clenched in the animal's teeth. Truly, in a metaphorical sense, the creature did "devour much flesh"; for Susiana, Parthia, and Lydia, together with Egypt and Armenia, offered but ineffective opposition to the hordes Cyrus had collected.

But the kingdom made great in Nebuchadnezzar's eyes was not the only man-supported nation to fall. Connected with each of the predictions made of the victories of the Persians was a statement regarding the conquest by the emperor of Greece—Alexander of Macedon; and at Granicus, Issus, and Arbela, the Medo-Persian army turned in rout before the Grecian hosts, leaving a man of thirty years undisputed ruler of western Asia. In every detail the history of the world as unfolded by God years before its actual occurrence was fulfilled. The ghosts of Persia as well as the voices from Babylon serve to establish the impregnable truth of the Bible and the wisdom of an all-wise Jehovah.

crooked and perverse generation. These recognize the fact that Christ's friends are those only who make His revealed will the standard of their behavior and who do what He has told them. Anything outside of this simple and reasonable definition is also outside the circle of His recognition and is not Christianity, however pompously it may put forth its demands to be so considered and however swiftly learning and rank and station and wealth and numbers may rush to the support of its false and baseless pretensions.—Selected by R. ### "WHATSOEVER THINGS ARE LOVELY"

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

FOR the work-bent mountain woman whose untutored mind is touched by the sweetness of the wild blossoms she has brought into her home; for the long-fingered, long-haired pianist who loses his soul deep in the divinity of Beethoven and Wagner and Rachmaninoff; indeed, for men and women in every rank of life, loveliness in some form is a respite from the sometimes unlovely round of Things As They Are in this sadly-mismanaged, man-run world. Man occasionally looks away from his petty plans to the widespread beauty God has placed everywhere; to the bright stars, distant and pure; to a bit of rose-flame sunset reflected suddenly in a little puddle; to the golden, glorious songs and promises of the Bible.

The "occasionally" is the sad part of it. Too many people classify church work, with the reading of books and studying music, as "very nice, if one has the time and money." They consider religion a luxury, something they cannot have every day, thereby missing the whole purpose of Christianity and refusing to admit the supremacy and authority of God's beautiful plan. How much more pleasant and worth-while it would be to make of one's religion a lovely living thing! How infinitely blessed is the Christian who consecrates his whole existence to Christ so that the beauty of his faith shines in all the inconsequential events of everyday life! Knowing such a person is as inspiring as masterpieces of art and literature and music.

Christian young people, let us all try to make of ourselves beautiful temples to our Lord, that we may experience that supreme, unimagined loveliness when "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose . . . And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."—Isaiah 35:1, 10.

WHOM DO YOU OBEY?

OBEEDIENCE goes hand in hand with faith. Where one is found, the other is also. When one believes the gospel promises and truly repents, he must change his course of life from sin to righteousness, from disobedience to obedience.

When a foreigner becomes a citizen of this country, he promises to be loyal and to obey its laws; and the person becoming a Christian must do the same thing.

God requires obedience; and if one does not obey, everything ends in death. Obedience is necessary even in everyday life; for instance, when a man works in a factory, he will soon be discharged if he does not obey the laws of the factory. Obedience is only another name for teamwork.

When one is a sinner, he is free from righteousness according to Romans 6:20. When he is free from sin, he must be a servant of God. We have to be servants of one or the other.

Life offers but two ways of living, described clearly in the following scriptures: Romans 6:16; 6:23; 5:19; 2:6-8; Galatians 6:8.

Romans 6:16-23 outlines them very clearly.

Obedience to Sin

Service to sin
Freedom from righteousness
Works of iniquity
Ends in death

Obedience to God

Freedom from sin
Service to righteousness
Works of holiness
Ends in life

The consequences following disobedience are: many are made sinners (Romans 5:19), indignation and wrath (Romans 2:8), flaming fire and vengeance (2 Thessalonians 1:8).

God wants us to be as obedient as children are to earthly parents (Colossians 3:20), as citizens in the world (Titus 3:1), and in every relationship of life (Colossians 3:18, 22); then to be obedient that we may be prepared for the greatest of all blessings, eternal life.

WHAT CHRISTMAS MEANS TO ME

WHAT a difference there is between the way we celebrate Christmas and the way we celebrate our own birthdays! We expect gifts from our friends and our loved ones on our own birthdays; we look forward to an especially nice dinner or supper or party—to receiving, rather than giving. But on the day of all days in the year, Christmas, we think only of the joy of giving to others, small though our gifts may be. And that perhaps is the reason Christmas is such a day of joy, a day in which love rules.

First, God's great love caused Him to give us the most wonderful Gift in all the world—His Son, our Savior. And it is love that makes Christmas such a happy time—love for God, and love for Jesus, and love for our parents and friends. It is love in our hearts that causes us to want to show to those around us our gladness for God's great Gift. For you know if we give to those around us, especially to those in need, we give to God; and that is the only way we can give to Him.

There is another way we can give other than by gifts wrapped up in soft tissue paper and tied with a pretty red bow; and that is by giving ourselves, not only on Christmas, but all the year round! Not one of you is too small to spread the Christmas spirit of love around you. Some of you can tell the lovely Christmas story to little brother or sister—how the shepherds heard the most beautiful music sung by angels and how they hurried to tell others all about it.

Some of you can sing Christmas carols to those who are sad. How many of you know the one that tells how the little Lord Jesus lay down His sweet head in a manger? “Luther's Cradle Hymn,” it is called; and it sounds so sweet sung by little voices like yours. If you do not know it, learn it and sing it to some one who needs a smile of love on Christmas Day. Here it is:

“Away in a manger, no crib for His bed,
The little Lord Jesus lay down His sweet head;
The stars in the heavens looked down where He lay,
The little Lord Jesus asleep on the hay.

“The cattle are lowing; the baby awakes;
But little Lord Jesus no crying He makes.
I love Thee, Lord Jesus, look down from the sky,
And stay by my cradle till morning is nigh.”

Then there are other beautiful songs of Christmas. “O Little Town of Bethlehem,” brings before our minds the picture of the little sleeping village and the visit of the angels on the night the dear little Baby Jesus came to Mary, His mother. And there is, “While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks,” telling us how on the still night air beautiful music came to the ears of the watching shepherds; and with what joy they hurried to find the Babe!

Their hearts bursting with happiness, the shepherds returned from their trip to Bethlehem, thanking God for the beautiful music of the angels and the visit at the stable where they had seen the baby Savior. And we imagine if they lived to be old, old men they never forgot the wonder and the love and the beauty of that night.

And so we, because of that first Christmas, go about spreading cheer and kindness all about us. In Sweden, it is said, a sheaf of wheat is placed on a tall pole for the birds' Christmas feast, and all the animals are given an extra feed of the very best grain. They do this because the Christ-child was born in a stable and the spirit of kindness should include all, even the animals.

In Norway, we are told, every wanderer or homeless person is taken in and fed and warmed and comforted. For they have a little legend that the Christ-child goes from door to door in disguise, and they do not want to turn anyone away for fear it may be He.

Now, we know that Jesus does not really wander over the world knocking at everyone's door; but He does come to us and knocks at our hearts asking us to let Him in so we may come to know Him and have Him for our Friend all the time. And when we have learned about Jesus for ourselves, He wants us to tell others about Him, that He may go into their hearts and be their Friend as well as ours.

More wonderful still, after a while this Christmas Gift from God—Jesus—will come back to the earth again and bring the joy and the gladness to all the world the angels told the shepherds about so long ago. And when He comes, He will call His friends to meet Him and to be with Him forever after that time.

I know you will all want to be called to meet Jesus when He comes the next time and see Him just as He is today. For He is no longer the little baby that lay in the manger, but a grown-up Friend who loves you more than anyone else does. So let us try to live as He wants us to do now and be ready when He comes.

LESSON 13. — December 25, 1932

GOD'S GIFT TO MAN

Luke 2:1-20

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 9:6, 7

GOLDEN TEXT

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: God's Gift to Man.

Basic Truth: "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6:23.

I. A Love-prompted Gift. (Luke 2:10, 13, 14.) Jesus Christ, God's richest Gift to mankind, was prompted by love, divine love. It was a love that was limitless in its scope, for it embraced the entire world. The gifts of the wise men were also prompted by love. Upon these two examples is based the practice of Christmas giving. Giving of the best we have to those who need it most, not in our own name, but in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, such is the true love-prompted motive behind all Christian giving.

II. A Rich Gift in a Humble Casket. (Luke 2:8-12, 15-18.) The humble circumstances surrounding the Savior's birth serve to emphasize, rather than to diminish, the wonder and the glory of the event. The appeal of the picture is first to the poor. Those in the most humble circumstances are made to feel that One born in a stable and reared at a carpenter's bench is able to both understand and sympathize with them in every need. On the other hand, no prince was ever brought into the world under more glorious conditions than those that marked the birth of the Prince of Peace. Nothing of His divine majesty was sacrificed by the sordidness of the surroundings in which He first saw the light of day.

III. A Gift of Increasing Value. (Luke 2:19, 20.) The most prized gifts are those whose value increases with the passing years. And such was the Gift of God to man. During the centuries that have intervened since God showed His love for the world by giving His Son for its redemption, the richness of that Gift has been multiplying year by year as the influence of Christ has extended farther and farther into the darkness of the world. Yet the fulness of its value will not be appreciated until He returns to set up His kingdom of peace and of righteousness, and the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Good Tidings: Our Christmas lesson not only tells of the good tidings which the angel brought the lowly shepherds, but it is good news to all. This joy, real joy, is for all people. And the part that makes it real joy and good news is that this child that was born on that memorable night was the Savior of mankind. This event was the fulfillment of the long promised "seed" that should bruise the serpent's head. What a glorious sight it must have been when the heavenly choir appeared in heaven singing that glorious song of hope! It is no wonder the shepherds "made known abroad" what they had seen and heard. If Christians of today would be as enthusiastic in proclaiming the good news of the glorious appearing of Christ in His soon coming again as the shepherds were in telling of His first appearing what change would be wrought, both in the lives of the worshippers and those that hear.

Peace and Good Will: The song of the angels was a song of hope. They sang of the time for which we pray, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven". Ere long He that is to come will come and will not tarry, and He shall usher in that reign of righteousness which shall bring peace and good will toward all men. See Isa. 32:17. Those who are waiting for this great day will be like those who were waiting for His first advent. They will rejoice. But those who are not will be like Herod and his kind; they will be disappointed.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights." The Father alone knows how to provide gifts far beyond what any human can ever think or know. It is the Father who gave us life and maintains it—the greatest gift perhaps of all unless it be the gift of His Son. Both these gifts are so great that I wonder whether we appreciate them or just take them for granted. Without these gifts we would be as a lump of clay, and yet how many fail to appreciate them and stop long enough daily to thank the Giver for them.

We have these gifts now, and added to them are the air that we breathe, the sunshine and the rain, together with the many beauties of nature. Who can say that our Father is not a loving Father, or that He cares nothing for His children? Let us learn to appreciate all that the Father has given us and thank Him for them, and then may we receive that other gift that is in store for them who believe on the Son and have put on His name. That gift is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. (Rom. 6:23.)—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Jesus, the Teacher of Peace and Good Will

"For a child is born unto us, a son hath been given unto us, and the government is placed on his shoulders; and his name is called Wonderful, Counsellor of the mighty God, of the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isa. 9:5, Leeser. Isaiah proclaimed Christ as earth's Peacemaker. The angels proclaimed peace at His birth. Jesus Himself taught the new gospel of "resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also", and "love your enemy, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."—Matt. 5:39, 44.

Jesus kept His own commandments, as is testified by Peter. "When he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."—1 Peter 2:23. He left us this wonderful example and asked us to follow Him. Those who will shall be blessed. Even the animals will be at peace with one another and with all mankind.

"They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." (See Isa. 11:6-9.)—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

What Christmas Means to Me

How appropriate that the last lesson of this quarter should fall on Christmas morning! All during the past three months we have been studying the manner of living that Jesus taught, pertaining to both our private and public life. Today we will consider Jesus Himself, the manner and purpose of His first coming and also of His second. The story of Jesus' birth is such a beautiful and dramatic one that we never grow tired of it. The incidents that accompanied it never occurred with another individual's birth, plainly manifesting that He was the Son of God, the Savior of the world. Why did the world stand particularly in need of the Savior at that time? The angels sang of peace on earth and good will to all men. Show how Jesus brought these to a sin-sick world. He sowed the seeds of faith and hope and love, and these have been growing throughout the centuries since then and will bring forth a harvest that will cover the earth when He comes again. Find references that show that the purpose of His second coming is to make world-wide the blessings He showered upon a few at His first coming.

Think deeply over the question, "What does Christmas mean to me?" If it does not mean all it should, if it means a day of receiving instead of giving, a day of feasting rather than sharing, let's reverse our positions and cause Christmas to mean what our Savior designed it should—a day of giving of ourselves to those about us in love and kindly deeds. And in the meantime let us pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

WATERLOO, IOWA

Sunday, Nov. 5, was a day of joy for the brethren of Waterloo. The morning service was given over to the thought of communion, the Lord's Supper immediately following the sermon. The rejoicing came as the result of Sr. Evelyn Phillips' definitely entering the fellowship of the Church of God and receiving the right hand of fellowship. Sr. Phillips comes to us from the Christadelphian body. Bro. and Sr. Phillips have long seemed to belong with us; for, while they held membership elsewhere, they cooperated with us heart and soul.

We enjoy our work in the new church and think it a vast improvement over the house-to-house way. It not only affords us a regular meeting place, but it is a place where strangers drop in now and then. Preaching services are held twice each Sunday besides the regular Sunday school and Berean class. Things are going as well as could be expected in these troublesome times. The Waterloo brethren are thanking God for His temporal and spiritual blessings as they come and are trusting Him to give the work success.

Charles W. Howe, Pastor.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our annual business meeting was held on Dec. 2. A very splendid attendance of the church body was present, and a beautiful spirit prevailed as officers were selected to direct the work for the coming year. Installation services will be held as they undertake their duties, and we pray God's directing hand may help them to serve wisely.

The Christmas program is being prepared, and due to insufficient space in our building it is to be given at the Godwin School auditorium Friday night, Dec. 23.

We are all getting ready for our series of special meetings to be held the first half of January. Bro. Magaw expects to be with us, and we hope to draw very close to God as a result of this special work.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

"KEEPIN' COMPANY"

Woven around the beautiful love story of Jacob and Rachel, Bro. Marsh gave valuable advice to the young people in his sermon "Keepin' Company" Sunday evening, Dec. 4. We could not but wish that all of our young folks could have heard him suggest that in seeking companions for life they should look for qualities that endure. For they are not "Keepin' Company" for only a few short months, but for life. In closing Bro. Marsh pictured the union of two hearts who go down the path of life together, with the smile of God upon them.—M. G.

HOLBROOK, NEBRASKA

The following, taken from The Holbrook Observer of December 8, will be of interest to our readers.

"Full house and rapt interest are the order of the day at the evangelistic meetings being conducted at the Church of God. The three services Sunday were before capacity audiences.

"Evangelist F. L. Austin has in all of his discourses been urging the Word of God as the one only Text from which man is to be informed of God and His purpose; and promises to man. Not only is God's Word the only instruction unto salvation, according to Mr. Austin's analysis, but he also declares that obedience to His Word would most quickly solve man's current problems. Back-to-the-Bible would solve the world depression, according to this evangelist, more quickly and more completely than any other move man can make.

"None could exalt Christ more highly than He is being exalted in this series of gospel studies. He has been emphasized as God's well beloved Son, and as man's Savior, Redeemer, Resurrection, Life, and King. Only in and through Him do man and this old troubled world have hope, according to these proclamations at the Church of God.

"The subject of sermon tonight (Thursday) is announced to be, 'Some Startling Signs of the Times.'

"It is the intention to continue these services throughout this week and next at 7:30 each evening and Sunday at 11:00 a. m., 2:30 and 7:30 p. m., excepting that no service will be held Monday night.

"On Monday evening last, Mr. Austin addressed a packed house at the Dunbar school house."

LORENZO DON DECKER

Lorenzo Don Decker, oldest son of Peter and Carolyn Decker, was born in Canada, April 20, 1855, and passed away on Nov. 15, 1932, at his home in Blanchard, Mich. He came to Michigan at the age of 5 years, his parents being among the first settlers in Millbrook Township.

He was united in marriage to Cora Munn, Oct. 10, 1878. To this union seven children were born, all of whom are living, except Archie, the oldest son, who passed away in 1916. He leaves a wife and six children: Mrs. Lewis Childs of Lansing; Orrie of Meadowlands, Minn.; Clyde of Alma; Mrs. R. Theil of Detroit; Mrs. Roy Riley of Pontiac; Mrs. Joe Douglas of Lansing; also 17 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren; one brother, Hazen, of St. Louis, Mo.; and 3 sisters, Mary E. Munn, Mrs. Lottie Sheets, and Mrs. Mabel Patrick, of Blanchard; many cousins, nieces, and nephews; besides a host of friends.

He was a devoted husband; a kind father; a friend to be depended on at all times; an honest, upright citizen, never shirking a duty and never afraid to stand for the best things.

In his early youth he gave his heart to the Lord and ever remained true to the cause of righteousness.

His work is ended; he stood the test and could say with the Apostle Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." His life has been a life of usefulness in the home, the community, and the church where he will be greatly missed.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Sr. Connie Ramsey of Arkansas asserts that The Herald "grows better and better" and prays for the blessing of God upon its management. We thank you, Sr. Ramsey.

Sr. P. N. Benn, 108 Rockwood Ave., Dayton, Ohio, tells us of a literary club in that city that is taking Bible as one of the books to be studied in classic literature. Sr. Benn will direct the work of the club on Dec. 28.

The churches everywhere are planning their Christmas programs. May each one be a great hope-building, spiritually- uplifting program that features not only the historic fact of the Lord's first advent, but the still more glorious assurance of His speedy return to the earth.

The N. B. I. is retailer for the Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio. This concern publishes the most attractive line of Sunday school supplies now on the market, and their literature comes nearer to meeting the doctrinal demands of our people than any publishers other than our own. Let us know your needs in general supplies for the Sunday school, particularly for the younger classes. A catalog will be sent on request.

Again, as has often occurred in the past, our limited supply of extra Heralds was exhausted to supply the demand for copies for free distribution among friends of our subscribers. We are glad that The Herald is found to be of value in spreading the gospel of the kingdom throughout a needy world.

In a very interesting letter from Bro. and Sr. H. S. Lasher, Burlington Flats, N. Y., we are informed they are leaving immediately to spend the winter in Florida. They speak encouragingly of the material success they have enjoyed the past year and inclose a generous contribution to the general work. May God continue to bless and keep them until the Master comes.

Responses are beginning to come in from the individual appeal for funds which was sent out by the board a few days ago, and while it is too early to draw any definite conclusions as to the final result, it is evident that the brethren appreciate our difficult position and are putting forth every effort to relieve us. In some cases families are uniting their contributions and sending them in together. Some congregations are doing the same thing. Dorcas societies are also assisting in this way, and Sunday schools are contributing to the immediate needs of the institution. May God bless you all and move all who can possibly do so to lend their support both in prayer and in money at this trying time.

Bro. S. W. Harlan, Holbrook, Nebraska, is recovering from a recent illness. Bro. Harlan has been one of our most faithful workers for many years. We pray for his complete recovery.

Do not forget to order a supply of the forthcoming "Russian Number" of The Herald. It will contain some valuable prophetic information of a most timely nature.

Sr. Mary F. Wolf of Nebraska when sending in her renewal to The Herald says, "The Herald is all the preaching I have. I look eagerly for its coming every week. Now that we are in perilous times it behooves us to read a great deal and to watch and pray also."

We regret to learn of the death of Sr. Alma Hall, of Lincoln, Nebraska, which occurred on December 3. Particulars are not yet available.

Sr. Harriet Reed of Arkansas City, Kan., says she "would not know how to get along without The Herald, and cannot understand why any of our people can fail to support it. . . . I can hardly wait for its coming each week."

The Fonthill-Niagara Falls churches are planning a union New Year's eve service and social gathering. How splendid it would be to watch the old year out and the new year in on our knees before God, with our voices lifted in prayer and an open Bible in our hands!

The young people of Minnesota have organized a state Berean society and have affiliated with the National Berean Society. Miss Ella Randall, Box 136, Mora, Minn., is the secretary. Further information will be given by the Berean page in a later issue.

We wish to announce that we are planning a series of special issues of The Herald for the near future, each of which will treat of some particular matter of spiritual or prophetic interest. For instance, our New Year's number, out on Dec. 27, will have to do largely with the European situation, emphasizing the prophetic position of Russia, the spread of "Red" propaganda and political developments in that part of the world in the near future. Bro. Geo. B. Alldridge will contribute a thoughtful article on "Prophetic Russia"; Bro. C. E. Randall, "Is the World Going Red?"; while the editorials will treat of "The Bear That Walks Like a Man." Better order extra copies in advance to be sure your friends are supplied.

THE PASTOR AND HIS SALARY

By C. E. Randall

"Where there is no vision, the people perish."

WE MUST be forward-looking to adequately handle present problems. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," has nothing to do with planning for the future. Problems that are properly handled at the present are those which some one or group made provision for in the "yesterdays." If as a church we are to grow, we must visualize, estimate, and evaluate the needs of tomorrow.

The future of many of our churches is being threatened. Hard times are doing it. Our ministers in the majority of instances have been underpaid. They have not received salaries commensurate with other incomes or which their office required. For workers to take churches at such meager wages that they can hardly meet board bills or pay transportation charges is to develop a condition that they themselves must suffer for in years to come. Such a low standard is bound to cheapen the profession and force out the better-qualified.

It is commendable for pastors to share in the suffering and depressed condition of their people. All are doing this. But to shelve our "better minds" and to employ young men with limited Bible knowledge because they can be hired at twenty to forty dollars per month is not the better part of wisdom.

Our two church boards (Fonthill, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N. Y.) set an example that all church boards over the country could well emulate. Instead of taking the easier way and asking for a cut, they tried to find ways for an increase. This is the type and kind of Christian vision that we need, and it will keep the church out of debt and will keep the standing of the ministerial profession on a respectable basis.—Church of God Messenger.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

CHRISTMAS NUMBER

VOLUME 22

OREGON, ILLINOIS, DECEMBER 20, 1932

NUMBER 12

It All Is True

By G. Eldred Marsh

It all is true that in the long ago
As shepherds watched their slumb'ring flocks by night,
The Heavens blaz'd with radiant glory bright;
And Messengers of God, descending low,
Told of the One who came by lowly birth,
Yet who is destined to be King of all,
And rescue Man from his ignoble fall,
And fill with peace and righteousness the Earth.
It all is true.

It all is true, and Men shall one day see
The heavens yet again with glory burn,
As He, once here, shall to the earth return,
From the dread curse of sin to set us free;
And every knee shall bow—all tongues confess,
That glory, praise, and honor are His due,
For all He's done for Man—and yet shall do—
And earth and heaven then His name shall bless!
It all is true.

EDITORIAL

The Restitution Herald was entered as second class matter, October 16, 1911, at the Post Office at Oregon, Ill., under act of March, 1879.

G. Eldred Marsh, Editor

Paul C. Johnson, Associate Editor

"Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God."—Hebrews 10:7.

Dedicatory Prayer

OUR FATHER: We humbly dedicate this Christmas number of THE RESTITUTION HERALD to THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, whose birth we commemorate with gladness and for whose glorious coming we look with unspeakable joy. May its message bring hope to the hopeless, comfort to the sorrowing, and peace to the troubled hearts of all to whom it comes. This is our prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

He Came

INTO a world of sin, of degradation, of misery, and of death, He came, the Son of the most high God! The time of the Lord's first coming was "a day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness."—Joel 2:2. "He came unto his own," the people of Israel, to deliver them from the doom that impended; but "his own received him not."—John 1:11. With outstretched arms of tender affection He cried, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!"

His sympathetic vision was not limited to the downtrodden, though still rebellious, children of Israel. It reached out into all the world; and He cried, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matthew 11:28. And He commissioned His disciples to go into "all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15.

Both Jews and Gentiles rejected His gracious invitation and cried with united voice, "We will not have this man to reign over us."—Luke 19:14. Together they led Him to the cross of shame and listened with sneering faces to His final prayer for them: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."—Luke 23:34.

For two thousand years the world has continued to deny His claim to divine authority to reign as King of kings and has persistently rejected the salvation He came to provide. Yet still He pleads!

He Comes

YET once again He comes! But not in humility, not in weakness, does He come again, but in "power and great glory." He comes to redeem those who have trusted in Him, and to give them life. He comes to "deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper."—Psalm 72:12. He comes to "exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high." He comes to accomplish in the nations of men what His Father accomplished with the kingdom of David, that is, to "overturn, overturn, overturn" them; and they "shall be no more." (Ezekiel 21:26, 27.)

Here the similarity between the two events ceases. For these overturned empires can hope for no revival through some future reversal of circumstances. "All people, nations, and languages," shall serve the King of kings, and "his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away."—Daniel 7:14.

This is the coming to which the Prophet looked forward when he said, "The great day of the Lord is near, . . . a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness," when the Lord "will bring distress upon men" and "neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them" (Zephaniah 1:14-18); "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Thessalonians 1:7, 8. "For these be the days of vengeance, that all things . . . may be fulfilled."—Luke 21:22.

These very outpourings of divine judgment upon the ungodly mark the crowning of the saints with immortal life and glory; for He who is to come has said, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21:28. As we observe the unfolding of events around us, may we not lose faith or become indifferent or discouraged, but be ever mindful of the fact that these things point to the coming of our Lord!

"AN' THEN—HE DISAPPEARED"

By Arlen Marsh

ORNATE lamp posts. Festooned fire escapes. Decorated street cars and busses. Tinkling bells in the hands of stuffed Santa Clauses. Windows to dazzle the eye with brilliance. Wreaths and garlands and holly and mistletoe and imitation snow in abundance. And, above all else, a peculiar roar that, once heard, is never to be forgotten. Crowds animated with joy. Some, animated with bitterness and despair. Christmas eve in the city.

A small boy, clothed in rags. A limousine with chauffeur and footman. The dregs of the world. Beggars, halt and blind and lazy and professional. Wealth. Lavish display. Tinsel. Odors of gas and hamburger and smoke and candy. Love and hate. Charity and theft. Noise. Soap box orators. Loudspeakers blaring raucous sounds purporting to be carols. "Buy Christmas seals." "Vote Red." Christmas.

And in a corner, protected from the steady stream of pedestrians by a pillar of a twenty-story bank, two men, one gray-clad, smiling—though uncertainly—one grave.

"I mean it, Roy," came quietly from the older and more serious of the pair. "I believe firmly in the absolute truth of the return of Christ, and I say positively that all this"—a slight gesture indicated the hurrying throng—"is but a mockery. That man, for example, over there in the door of that drug store: a pauper, obviously. And that well-dressed young fellow you see buying a ticket at the broker's window across the way almost ran over him, swearing because he wouldn't get out of the way. I tell you, Christmas has become a profanation of the name of Christ, an excuse for exercising egotism."

"Oh, rot!"

"Have you read The Other Wise Man, Roy?"

"Certainly not!"

"You should. It might do even you good."

"Even me'!"

"Yes. You go to church. You give because it's 'smart' or because people would look askance if you didn't. But you deny, nevertheless, the very purpose of tomorrow, commemoration of Jesus' birth and reminding of His return.

Your Bible gathers dust, and you sneer at all religion."

The young man's eyes flashed fire.

"Foolishness!" he blazed out.

A siren roared as a patrol wagon rushed to the scene of a Socialists' revival, and he glanced away. His gaze returned toward his partner and hung startled for a moment. No one was there.

"Pah! He wouldn't stay!" said his mind and the shrug of his shoulders.

A yell, a crash, and a peculiar hush caused him to swing about. With their usual haste, the curiosity-seekers began their dash to the corner, impeded by the vigorous efforts of three of the police on traffic duty there. The blue car of the P. D. had struck a street car head-on. The young man, drawn by an irresistible impulse, pressed toward the scene.

"Brabecyzk!" shouted a sergeant who had appeared from nowhere. "Hold back that crowd!"

He jumped to the assistance of the doctor who had drawn up his car nearby and had gone to work immediately. One of those fortuitous events that happen more often in truth than in fiction had held the physician at the red light just before the wreck.

But there was more than that. People were having difficulty finding friends to bear the brunt of their exclamations. A warning hand from the doctor brought momentary quiet.

"Doctor." It was a broken gasp from one of the victims. "Doctor—where's Mallory?"

"And where's that dumb cousin of mine?" some one wanted to know from the rear of the crowd.

"Mallory—was here—an' then—he wasn't."

"Yes, yes. Keep quiet." An effort to soothe from the sergeant.

"Mallory was—my friend—even if he was—a softy. He—where is he?"

A stir from the rear.

"Shut up, you fool. I wanna listen!"

"Mallory was talkin'— (Continued on page 10)

To Jesus on His Birthday

For this your mother sweated in the cold,
For this you bled upon the bitter tree:
A yard of tinsel ribbon bought and sold;
A paper wreath; a day at home for me.
The merry bells ring out, the people kneel;
Up goes the man of God before the crowd;
With voice of honey and with eyes of steel
He drones your humble gospel to the proud.
Nobody listens. Less than the wind that blows
Are your words to us you died to save.
O Prince of Peace! O Sharon's dewy Rose!
How mute you lie within your vaulted grave.
The stone the angel rolled away with tears
Is back upon your mouth these thousand years.
—Edna St. Vincent Milay, in "Christian Herald."

GOOD TIDINGS OF GREAT JOY

By Harry A. Sheets

"He shall build an house for my name, and I will stablish the throne of his kingdom for ever. I will be his father, and he shall be my son."—2 Samuel 7:13, 14.

SAMUEL was directed to Bethlehem to anoint a king. He selected a boy who was caring for sheep out in the fields. Nearly eleven hundred years later, when shepherds were tending their flocks upon the same hillside, the glory of God penetrated the darkness, revealing an angel. "Fear not," assured the heavenly messenger, "for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:10, 11.

All Israel had waited patiently for a thousand years for that important announcement. The promise had been made to King David (2 Samuel 7:6-17; Psalm 89:29); and the beginning of its fulfillment was proclaimed in David's country, the fields familiar to his childhood.

The loyal Israelites left their flocks and hastened to Bethlehem. They searched out the Child of Promise, did homage to Him, and "returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen."—Luke 2:20.

The angel announced "great joy, which shall be to all people." We shall share in that joy by reviewing the promises of the kingdom to be fulfilled in that remarkable Child.

God assures us, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—Psalm 2:6-8. Later Isaiah prophesied: "For a child is born to us, a son hath been given to us, and the government is placed on his shoulders; and his name is called Wonderful, counsellor of the Mighty God, of the everlasting Father, the prince of peace, for promoting the increase of the government, and for peace without end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to establish it through justice and righteousness, from henceforth and unto eternity. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will do this."—9:6, Leeser.

Gabriel told Mary of this great prophecy when he informed her that she had been selected as the mother of Jesus. "For," said he, "thou hast found favour with God. And, behold, thou shalt . . . bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1:30-33.

The Jews were fully aware that Jesus claimed to be the rightful heir to the throne of David. Their accusation of Jesus before Pilate was that He claimed to be king of the Jews. When questioned by Pilate, Jesus replied: "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."—John 18:37. Jesus not only claimed the throne, but He went so far as to promise positions of power and rulership to the twelve when He Himself should occupy His throne: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."—Matthew 19:28.

God has not forgotten His promise to Jesus. John was granted a glimpse into the future and saw the throne given to its rightful heir: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."—Revelation 11:15. Jesus is not ruling on His throne now (see Revelation 3:21). He will not do so until "the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."—Matthew 25:31.

God has revealed some of the blessings and pleasures of that coming kingdom age, not many, but sufficient to attract us. "In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. . . . Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him. For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper."—Psalm 72:7-12. "He must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."—1 Corinthians 15:25, 26. "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. . . . Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."—Isaiah 35:1, 5, 6. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Revelation 21:4. "And there shall be no more curse."—Revelation 22:3. When the kingdom is fully established, God Himself will dwell with men and be their God (Revelation 21:3).

All accounts of Christ's kingdom speak as though it would be located upon this earth. "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth."—Zechariah 14:9. "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."—Isaiah 2:3.

If we Gentiles are faithful unto our Master, we shall be given the opportunity to reign with King Jesus; for He has redeemed us unto God by His blood "out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on THE EARTH."—Revelation 5:9, 10.

IMMANUEL—GOD WITH US

By George B. Alldridge

"Have no fear, for behold, I bring you good tidings of a great joy, which shall be for all the people. For unto you this day there is born in David's town a Saviour, who is the anointed Lord."—Luke 2:10, 11, Centenary Trans.

SOME of our Christian friends make the keeping of the Christmas festival (as we observe it upon December twenty-fifth) a serious question. No less an authority than Frazer in his Golden Bough confirms and supports this view. He says, "Christmas is nothing but an old heathen celebration of the winter solstice." In other words, all who keep December twenty-fifth as a Christmas festival are followers of the old king of the Saturnalia and thus are commemorating a pagan festival and not the day of our Lord's birth. Well, technically, yes; but practically, no.

All, I presume, recognize the days of the week and also the names of the months. None of these marks bear scriptural authority, but may be traced to mythological origin and human conceit in the perpetuity of their names. The Bible speaks of the Sabbath day and a numerical designation for each day of the week.

The Christian is obligated to keep each day unto the Lord, especially the first day of the week. Apart from this, there is no command to recognize any day set apart to Saint this or Saint that, including Christmas.

But like the Fourth of July, we set apart this twenty-fifth day of December to commemorate an event. It is the event and not the day we commemorate. What is this event? Let the angel answer: "I bring you good tidings of a great joy, which shall be for all the people. For unto you this day there is born in David's town a Saviour." Wonderful news, especially just now, when all mankind is crying out for a deliverer.

For most people Christmas means having a good time, remembering old friends, exchanging greetings and cards, giving presents, and gormandizing certain viands prepared and set forth upon a special menu prepared for the occasion. We who are looking for the greatest event in human history, namely, the manifestation of the world's Redeemer, look back to a day nineteen centuries ago when a Jewish child was born. The date of that birth is uncertain and immaterial; but what is of intense interest is the fact that of the person of this Jewish Babe the record is, "And they shall call his name Immanuel," a word which means, "God with us."

Going back to the type recorded in Jewish history, I find kings, priests, and prophets were anointed with oil when admitted to their office; and as this Child constituted the Savior of mankind, He was to embody in Himself the offices of King, Priest, and Prophet. So the prophets pointed to Him as the Anointed One, "Messiah" in Hebrew, "Christ" in Greek—Jesus Christ.

We recall Solomon's words, "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." So, for four thousand years, his inventions estranged him from God; and he ceased to maintain that uprightness God endowed him with at his creation. But I read in Acts 3:21 the words of Peter: "Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Now, what things are these? Just the things God "hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." How can I find out what these things are? Just the same way in which Jesus and the apostles did: searching the good Word of God.

Well, do I discover anything to make me happy at this season of the year? Indeed I do, for I find that when this Child arrived at manhood God from heaven said,

"This is my Son, the beloved,
In whom I delight."

So at last God found one of my race in whom He could delight. Again upon a mortal man He could stamp His image and likeness; yet withal, He could take upon Himself the likeness of our sinful nature. And why?

I evade all theological disquisition and answer as my simple mind grasps it. We who were aforesaid alienated from God, He made to be at one with God by becoming one of us and giving up of His oneness with the Father. We of the human race, through sin, a blot in the fair creation of God, were dead in trespasses and sins but are brought back into the harmony and order of His obedient creatures, uniting us to the Father in Himself. For our deadness He gives us life, for darkness light, for foolishness wisdom, for sinfulness a desire for holiness, for works of the flesh fruits of the spirit, and soon for corruption His incorruption, for mortality His immortality.

Never mind about the carnal spirit of the world exemplified at this season of the year. Let us, dear brethren, catch the angel's spirit: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." As a matter of historical fact, this is the origin of our Christmas celebration and festivities. That some do not recognize this does not alter the fact that its real meaning is as cited above.

If Christ had never been born, then December twenty-fifth or any other day would hold no significance. Regarding this important fact—Christmas day means that to all men if they will embrace it: "Good tidings of great joy" and "glory to God in the highest."

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

By Samuel E. Haney

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee. Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord JEHOVAH is everlasting strength."—Isaiah 26:3, 4.

THIS text is more tersely expressed by Rotherham: "A purpose sustained, thou wilt guard, saying, Prosper! Prosper! Because, in thee, hath he been led to trust. Trust ye in Yahweh unto futurity, for, in Yahweh, is a rock of ages."

Here is God's conditional promise to fallen man set forth by Himself, the Creator of the universe and all things therein: "Peace; a. State of quiet; freedom from disturbance, calm; a public quiet, order, and security; b. Harmony between persons or nations."—Webster.

The fact that all peoples and nations constituting part and parcel of the present order of things are the exact antithesis of this definition of peace demonstrates that the unregenerate portion of the race are not in spiritual contact with the Prince of Peace, described by Isaiah thus: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."—Isaiah 9:6.

The Prophet, in describing the results of the absence of divine control, accurately depicts the general state of affairs throughout the world today. "Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their paths. The way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment in their goings: they have made them crooked paths: whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace."—Isaiah 59:7, 8.

Everything God made in the beginning was pronounced "very good" (Gen. 1:31); and everything He has since brought into existence in behalf of His children, including peace, has been very good or "perfect." But one must experience God's standard of perfection to grasp its significance: perfect creation, perfect patience, perfect peace, perfect love, etc.; a problem beyond the comprehension of the finite, unaided by the holy Spirit.

The world has spasmodic periods of an inferior standard of peace, but God conditionally promises something better than an intermittent peace to those "whose mind is stayed on" Him. This word "stayed" simply means to stand still, not to retreat, to have power of endurance.

No one in these closing days can successfully comply with God's requirements, namely, to "stay his mind" on his Creator, unless he first complies with Paul's instructions as found in Ephesians 6:10-17. "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Read the remaining verses from your Bible.

There are so many ways and things in these evil days to detract our minds (attention) from our loving heavenly Father, thereby temporarily dethroning our faith by which we are able to see the invisible God, thus reminding us that the eye does not remain single, returning as it does to the gaudy visible things that appeal to the natural "old man," the flesh. But what we are seeing (being attracted by) shows the state of heart and mind and determines our status with God; it also makes us either miserable or peaceful.

A victorious faith disdains the sight of and actually refuses to see or mentally entertain the things of an enchanting character. And self, which is under the dominion of the flesh and should be mortified (Rom. 8:13; Col. 3:5) and not gratified, is our greatest visible enemy. It tends to obstruct the blessings of God, who is more anxious to clothe and beautify us than He is the birds and lilies. But fallen nature is determined to have its own way of thinking and acting, so with other obstinate reasons accounting for unrepentant soul's lack of the God-given Perfect Peace.

Faith, which engenders peace and trust, implies a refusal to see ourselves, either in our strength or our weakness, our worthiness or our unworthiness, our failures or our successes. Faith refuses to consider our rights, refuses the impulses to self-justification, refuses alike to be moved by praise or blame. In fact, faith utterly refuses to see self in any way or form. Self becomes most distasteful to the mind that is stayed on God.

To the world such an analysis and indictment of self is preposterous, verging on lunacy. But such a decision only emphasizes the distinction between God's children, under the sway of His holy Spirit, and those Paul refers to, namely, those "under the sway of the prince of the air, the spirit which is at present active within those sons of disobedience."—Eph. 2:2, Moffatt. In other words, God's consecrated children, who are soon to be with their Redeemer and in God's kingdom, are misfits in this world of sin and misery from every viewpoint, socially, financially, politically, religiously, commercially, and professionally. Nevertheless, to the extent that they are such misfits in the ways and customs of this wicked world's devotees and to their idols (Isaiah 2:17, 18; Hosea 4:17) will they be qualified for their heritage or birthright of eternal life at the return of the Prince of Life.

We have been considering God's promise of perfect peace, but the enjoyment of it is contingent upon "trusting (always relying) in the Lord," which includes periods of adversities, depressions, and sickness. David and the wise man refer to such a state of mind or faith: "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord." "Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them." "My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments: for length of days, and long life, and peace, shall they add to thee. . .

HE'S COMING TOMORROW

By Harriet Beecher Stowe

"The night is far spent; the day is at hand."

MY SOUL vibrated for a moment like a harp. Is it true? The night, the long night of the world's groping agony and blind desire, is it almost over? is the day at hand?

Again: "They shall see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things come to pass, look up and rejoice, for your redemption is nigh."

Coming! The Son of man really coming into this world again with power and great glory? Will this really ever happen? Will this solid, commonplace earth see it? Will these skies brighten and flash? and will upturned faces in this city be watching to see Him coming?

So our minister preached in a solemn sermon; and for moments, at times, I felt a thrill of reality in hearing. But, as the well-dressed crowd passed down the aisle, my neighbor Mr. Stockton whispered to me not to forget the meeting of the bank-directors on Monday evening; and Mrs. Goldthwaite poured into my wife's ear a charge not to forget her party on Thursday; and my wife, as she came out, asked me if I had observed the extravagant toilet of Mrs. Rennyman.

"So absurd," she said, "when her income, I know, cannot be half what ours is! and I never think of sending to Paris for my things. I should look on it as morally wrong."

I spoke of the sermon.

"Yes," said my wife, "what a sermon!—so solemn. I wonder that all are not drawn to hear our rector. What could be more powerful than such discourses? My dear, by the by, don't forget to change Mary's ring for a diamond one. Dear me! the Christmas presents were all so on my mind, that I was thinking of them every now and then in church; and that was so wrong of me!

"My dear," said I, "sometimes it seems to me as if all our life were unreal. We go to church, and the things that we hear are either true or false. If they are true, what things they are! For instance, these advent sermons. If we are looking for that coming, we ought to feel and live differently from what we do! Do we really believe what we hear in church? or is it a dream?"

"I do believe," said my wife earnestly (she is a good woman, my wife), "Yes, I do believe; but it is just as you say. Oh, dear! I feel as if I am very worldly. I have so many things to think of!" and she sighed.

So did I; for I knew that I, too, was very worldly. After a pause I said, "Suppose Christ should really come this Christmas and it should be authoritatively announced that He would be here tomorrow?"

"I think," said my wife, "there would be some embarrassment on the part of our great men, legislators, and chief councillors, in anticipation of a personal interview. Fancy a meeting of the city council to arrange a reception for the Lord Jesus Christ!"

"Perhaps," said I, "He would refuse all offers of the rich and great. Perhaps our fashionable churches would plead for His presence in vain. He would not be in palaces."

"Oh!" said my wife earnestly, "if I thought our money separates us from Him, I would give it all—yes, all—might I only see Him."

She spoke from the bottom of her heart, and for a moment her face was glorified.

"You will see Him some day," said I, "and the money we are willing to give up at a word from

I Shall Be Glad

I should be glad if the Lord should come,
Oh ay,
I should be glad!
Do you think I would grieve me overmuch
If the cities should crumble before His touch,
If the hills should rock with the weight of woes,
And the dear earth writhe in travail throes?
Nay, nay;
I tell you, Nay;
I should be glad!

I would be glad if I had no part,
Glad, glad!
If my Lord by His coming should pierce my heart,
And wipe me out from His book of life,
Yet I would be glad.
I would offer myself on the mount of the Lord,
I would yield myself to the binding cord,
I would welcome the thrust of Moriah's knife,
And still be glad.

Do you know why?
Because I have heard the bitter cry
Of a world that can no longer live
And I would give
My joy of eternity just to know
That for evermore there could be no woe.
I think it would be
If it had to be Worth life itself to have that thought,
A glory to die with that thing wrought
Into the mold of eternity.

And I shall be glad; for my Lord will come.
He has reckoned the years, He has finished their sum;
And the day between is a slender day
Till the sorrow of time shall be wiped away
In the blazing glory of endless joy.
I shall be glad,
I shall be glad
In the sight of a rapture without alloy;
I shall be glad
When the Lord shall come!
—From "Songs of the Kingdom," by Arthur W. Spalding.

Him will not keep Him from us."

That evening the thoughts of the waking hours mirrored themselves in a dream.

I seemed to be out walking in the streets, and to be conscious of a strange, vague sense of something just declared, of which all were speaking with a suppressed air of mysterious voices.

There was a whispering stillness all around. Groups of men stood at the corners of the street, and discussed an impending something with suppressed voices.

I heard one say to another, "Really coming? What? tomorrow?"

And the others said, "Yes, tomorrow. On Christmas Day He will be here."

It was night. The stars were glittering down with a keen and frosty light; the shops glistened in their Christmas array: but the same sense of hushed expectancy pervaded everything. There seemed to be nothing doing; and each person looked wistfully upon his neighbor as if to say, "Have you heard?"

Suddenly, as I walked, an angel-form was with me, gliding softly by my side. The face was solemn, serene, and calm. Above the forehead was a pale, tremulous, phosphorous radiance of light, purer than any on earth—a light of a quality so different from that of the street lamps that my celestial attendant seemed to move in a sphere alone.

Yet, though I felt awe, I felt a sort of confiding love as I said:

"Tell me,—is it really true? Is Christ coming?"

"HE IS," said the angel. "Tomorrow He will be here!"

"What joy!" I cried.

"Is it joy?" said the angel. "Alas, to many in this city it is only terror! Come with me."

In a moment I seemed to be standing with him in a parlor of one of the chief palaces of the city. A stout, florid, bald-headed man was seated at a table covered with papers, which he was sorting over with nervous anxiety, muttering to himself as he did so. On a sofa lay a sad-looking, delicate woman, her emaciated hands clasped over a little book. The room was, in all its appointments, a witness of boundless wealth. Gold and silver and gems and foreign furniture and costly pictures and articles of virtu—everything that money could buy—were heaped together; and yet the man himself seemed to me to have been neither elevated nor refined by the confluence of all these treasures. He seemed nervous and uneasy. He wiped the sweat from his brow, and spoke.

"I don't know, wife, how you feel; but I don't like this news. I don't understand it. It puts a stop to everything I know anything about."

"O John!" said the woman, turning toward him a face pale and fervent and clasping her hands, "how can you say so?"

And, as she spoke, I could see breaking out above her head a tremulous light, like that above the brow of an angel.

"Well, Mary, it's the truth. I don't care if I say it. I don't want to meet—well, I wish He would put it off! What does He want of me? I'd be willing to make over—well, three millions to found a hospital, if He'd be satisfied and let me go on. Yes, I'd give three millions—to buy off from tomorrow."

"Is He not our best friend?"

"Best friend!" said the man, with a look half fright, half anger. "Mary, you don't know what you are talking about! You know I always hated those things. There's no use in it: I can't see into them. In fact, I hate them."

She cast on him a look of pity. "Cannot I make you see?" she said.

"No, indeed, you can't. Why, look here," he added, pointing to the papers, "here is what stands for millions! Tonight it's mine, and tomorrow it will be all so much waste paper; and then what have I left? Do you think I can rejoice? I'd give half; I'd give—yes, the whole, not to have Him come these hundred years."

She stretched out her thin hand towards him; but he pushed it back.

"Do you see?" said the angel to me solemnly; "between him and her there is a 'great gulf fixed.' They have lived in one house with that gulf between them for years! She cannot go to him: he cannot come to her. Tomorrow she will rise to Christ as a dewdrop to the sun; and he will call to the mountains and rocks to fall on him, not because Christ hates him, but because he hates Christ."

Again the scene was changed. We stood together in a little low attic, lighted by one small lamp—how poor it was!—a broken chair, a rickety table, a bed in the corner where the little ones were cuddling close to one another for warmth. Poor things! the air was so frosty that their breath congealed upon the bed-clothes as they talked in soft, baby voices.

"When mother comes, she will bring us some supper," said they.

"But I'm so cold!" said the little outsider.

"Get in the middle, then," said the other two, "and we'll warm you. Mother promised she would make a fire when she came in, if that man would pay her."

"What a bad man he is!" said the oldest boy. "He never pays mother if he can help it."

Just then the door opened; and a pale, thin woman came in, laden with packages.

She laid all down and came to her children's bed, clasping her hands in rapture.

"Joy! joy, children! Oh, joy, joy! Christ is coming! He will be here tomorrow."

Every little bird in the nest was up, and the little arms around the mother's neck: the children believed at once. They had heard of the good Jesus. He had been their mother's only friend through many a cold and hungry day, and they doubted not He was coming.

"O mother! will He take us? He will, won't He?"

"Yes, my little ones," she said softly, smiling to herself. "He shall gather the lambs with His arms, and carry them in His bosom."

Suddenly again, as if by the slide of a magic-lantern, another scene was present.

We stood in a lonely room, where a woman was sitting with her head bowed forward upon her hands. Alone, forsaken, slandered, she was in bitterness of spirit. Hard, cruel tongues had spoken her name with vile assertions; and a thoughtless world had believed. There had been a babble of accusations, a crowd to rejoice in iniquity, and few to pity. She thought herself alone, and she spoke: "Judge me, O Lord! for I have walked in my integrity. I am as a monster unto many; but Thou art my strong refuge."

In a moment the angel touched her. "My sister," he said, "be of good cheer. Christ will be here tomorrow."

She started up, with her hands clasped, her eyes bright, her whole form dilated, as she seemed to look into the heavens, and said with rapture, "Come, Lord, and judge me; for Thou knowest me altogether. Come, Son of man, in Thee have I trusted; let me never be confounded. Oh, for the judgment-seat of Christ!"

Again I stood in a brilliant room, full of luxuries. Three or four fair women were standing pensively talking with each other. Their apartment was bestrewn with jewelry, laces, silks, velvets, and every fanciful elegance of fashion; but they looked troubled.

"This seems to me really awful," said one, with a suppressed sigh. "What troubles me is I know so little about it."

"Yes," said another, "and it puts a stop to everything! Of what use will all these be tomorrow?"

There was a poor seamstress in the corner of the room, who now spoke.

"We shall be ever with the Lord," she said.

"I'm sure I don't know what that can mean," said the first speaker, with a kind of shudder; "it seems rather fearful."

"Well," said the other, "it seems so sudden—when one never dreamed of any such thing—to change all at once from this to that other life."

"It is enough to be with Him," said the poor woman. "Oh, I have so longed for it!"

"The great gulf," again said the angel.

Then again we stood on the steps of a church. A band of clergymen were together. Episcopalian, Methodist, Congregationalist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Old School and New School, all stood hand in hand.

"It's no matter now about these old issues," they said. "He is coming: He will settle all. Ordinations and ordinances, sacraments and creeds are but the scaffolding of the edifice. They are the shadow: the substance is CHRIST!" And hand in hand they turned their faces when the Christmas morning light began faintly glowing; and I heard them saying together, with one heart and voice,

"Come, LORD JESUS! come quickly!"

HAVE YOU FOUND THE CHRIST?

A MESSAGE FOR OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

By Mary A. Gesin

THE Christmas season! The very words bring to our hearts a warm glow of joy and to our minds visions of happy days, glad meetings with long looked-for loved ones, exchange of greetings with absent friends, and fireside chats with those most dear. Ah! it is, indeed, the gladsome season of the year.

What joy must have prevailed on that first Christmas morning when to the anxious waiting hearts of many came the glad news that the Christ was born! Long had Jewish seers and prophets waited for that event. Witness the joy of Simeon, the devout, when he held in his arms the tiny Babe in whom rested the hope of Israel. See the contentment in the eyes of the aged Anna as she beheld the One for whom she had waited so long.

But not to the aged ones alone did the coming of the Messiah bring joy. Think you that among those rugged men, watching over their flocks under the stars of the still Judean night, there were no young men who "came with haste" and found the Savior? We are apt in our minds to picture those to whom the wonderful message was given as gray-bearded men, leaning on their shepherds' crooks for security. Perhaps we will not be reading too much between the lines to see them in the vigor of young manhood, leaping with joy to see the fulfillment of their dreams, and on returning to their tasks "glorifying and praising God" with youthful voices "for all the things that they had heard and seen."

Passing on in the history of the One announced on the night of His birth by the very angels from the throne of God, we see others seeking and finding the Savior. A very human touch is given in John's narrative (chapter 2) of the emotions of Andrew as he heard Jesus asking two who followed Him, "What seek ye?" The foremost desire of Andrew, by no means an old man, was to find "his own brother Simon" and tell him the glad news, "We have found the Messiah." In fact, we are justified in believing that many of the apostles and early disciples of our Lord were near His own age, which was just entering the thirties.

In these days of unrest and turbulence youth is prone to seek relief from the strain and tension of daily life in more excitement, resulting only in greater tension. "Leave that for the old folks" is their reaction toward religion in too many instances. And perhaps it is the fault of the viewpoint of many of us "old folks" that they see it from this distorted angle. Perhaps we have not shown them enough of the satisfaction that is realized in seeking and finding the Savior.

Dear young readers, you who are filled with the zest of life, you whose minds are keen and alert, the pathway to success in your life's work lies along the pathway to the Christ. More abundant powers He has promised those who give their hearts to Him, and that, not only for the future, but for today as well. Witness for yourself the success of those whose energies are spent in self-seeking as contrasted with those who early seek the Christ. Notable examples are all about you. The results speak for themselves.

The Master has a special work for you to do today, for youth calls youth. When you see one of ability and promise giving his heart and service to God, you can only conclude, "There must be something in it." Be one yourself to lead others to seek Jesus; tell the glad news of His birth, His life of accomplishment, His forceful message of the kingdom, to your friends and associates. Above all, live the life which the Savior laid down as the pattern which all of you may follow with His help; for He, too, was human, tempted, and tested, even as you are.

One of these days, young people, the One whose birth instituted the season of gladness which we are now enjoying will again come to earth, proclaimed by the "voice of the archangel and with the trump of God." He will call to His side those who have made themselves worthy by seeking Him today. He will have the greatest work of all time to perform—that of healing, blessing, and reclaiming this sin-swept world—and He will need helpers. Do you not desire to be at His side?

You who have visions of great things you are planning to accomplish, seek the Savior today; and in finding Him you will find the solution of your problems, the realization of your hopes, and the fulfillment of your ideals.

"Perhaps today shall sound the mystic summons—

The shout! The voice! The trump! not by all heard;
And from their scattered silent resting places,
The dead in Christ will rise to meet the Lord;
While we, the ransomed living, in a moment
Shall be caught up—according to His Word."

"AN' THEN—HE DISAPPEARED"

about hatin'—Sunday—duty. He said—he wanted—to—go—to church."

An indomitable spirit drove the man on.

"Brabecyzk, keep back that crowd! And quiet, Smithers. You wanna croak?"

"Mallory was drivin'—an' he swung out—to miss—the car, an' then—he disap—disappeared. He'd—always said—he would—some day. Where is he?"

"Doctor," he appealed from the sympathetic, but unbelieving, gaze of the sergeant, "Mallory—said—he was goin'—to get—get—'caught up.' Where's—"

"Look out, there!"

"Oh, fer—"

A young man, clothed in gray, had fainted.

THE SAVIOR SAYS, "WATCH!"

THE Savior says, "What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch!—lest coming suddenly, I find you sleeping." When? At death? No; at His second coming. Hebrews 9:28 (declares that) "unto them that look for him will he appear the second time . . . unto salvation." We should be looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of Christ (Titus 2:13), so that when He cometh we may say, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him."

How can we wait for that we do not expect? Let us believe the Scriptures, and ask God for wisdom to lead us into all truth, and watch the signs of the times, the movements of the nations, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and as much as possible live peaceably with all men, praying, Thy kingdom come, and Thy will be done on earth so that the earth may be full of God's glory. This is the desire of one who loves the truth for Jesus' sake, and hopes to obtain an immortal life when Christ comes to raise His saints.—Elder Richard Chown, of Daysville, Illinois, in Expositor and Advocate, September, 1857.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."—Psalm 112:7; 119:165; Proverbs 3:1, 2, 17.

The foregoing is an elaboration of what our Lord, the Source and Embodiment of peace, meant when He said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. . . . (For) these things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."—John 14:27; 16:33.

Dr. Moffatt's version of the latter clause of our text, verse 4: "Always rely on the Eternal, for the Eternal's strength endures." Reader, have you practical knowledge of your body's ever having been strengthened and renewed by the Lord? If not, you are missing much that has been appropriated for you whether you ever utilize it or not. The following texts are not superfluous: "The righteous also shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger." "His flesh shall be fresher than a child's: he shall return to the days of his youth" (to which many can testify). "Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's."—Job 17:9; 33:25; Psalm 103:5.

Reader, if you are in doubt about the present attainment or fulfillment of these three texts, consult some of those who have been rescued from the brothel and dragged from the gutter by the Prince of Peace. The writer has had some experience and a great deal of observation along these lines.

"SING, O HEAVENS; AND BE JOYFUL, O EARTH; AND BREAK FORTH INTO SINGING, O MOUNTAINS: FOR THE LORD HATH COMFORTED HIS PEOPLE."—ISAIAH 49:13.

NOEL, NOEL!

THE snow-covered world is breathlessly, beautifully hushed. The night glitters with the far purity of the stars, God-made diamonds, and the humbler lights, like rhinestones of man. Little groups of people sing "Joy to the World" and "O Come, All Ye Faithful" in their homes, on street-corners, in friendly little churches. Good will and cheer are everywhere. In all the millions of big and little houses there is an air of glamour and festivity. In the hearts of millions of big and little people there is ineffable reverence impelling them, perhaps unconsciously, to worship. And all this annual loveliness because a Child was born nearly two thousand years ago?

No, it is not only because a Child was born. It is because His birth was a glorious gift of life—the hope of eternal life to all the sadly sinful world—a gift announced by shining light and shining angels. It is because that silent, silver night the Being was born who brought the new religion of Love. It is because of the fact that from His teaching have come so many blessings to men. It is because God gave to us all His Son, who is our way to eternal life and happiness. Oh, let us never forget to be thankful for this supreme Gift, but let us bless God for His infinite love!

A CHRISTMAS CAROL

There's a song in the air!
There's a star in the sky!
There's a mother's deep prayer
And a baby's low cry!
And the star rains its fire while the Beautiful sing,
For the manger of Bethlehem cradles a King.

We rejoice in the light,
And we echo the song
That comes down through the night
From the heavenly throng.

Ay! we shout to the lovely evangel they bring,
And we greet in His cradle our Savior and King.

—Josiah Gilbert Holland.

GOLDEN RULE BEREAN SOCIETY

An average weekly attendance of exactly seventy is the record set by the Cleveland Berean Society for this fall since the opening night, September 9.

Bereans and Sunday school worked together in preparing Thanksgiving baskets for those in need. In addition to a bountiful array of food brought in, there was $12.50 in cash donated, so that eleven families received baskets and one other was sent the money equivalent.

MINNESOTA STATE BEREAN SOCIETY

"As you already understand, the Minnesota State Berean Society wishes to join the National Society," writes the secretary of the Gopher State organization in her letter of December 8, 1932.

The officers of the Minnesota society are as follows: president, John Savage, Waite Park; vice president, Miss Vivian Bennett, Eden Valley; secretary, Miss Ella Randall, Mora; treasurer, Miss Marian Hopkins, St. Cloud.

Local Minnesota societies affiliated with the state society have been organized at St. Cloud, Eden Valley, and Mora. No report had been received on December 8 from Lester Prairie. A society at Hector has been affiliated with the National Berean Society for several years.

The new Minnesota organization (formed during the last quarterly conference of the Minnesota Church of God) serves in some measure to replace the loss suffered when the Texas Berean Society disbanded a year ago.

—Arlen Marsh, Sec., Nat. Ber. Soc.

According to a recent letter from Mrs. Rhoda Hanson, chairman of the Senior Social Correspondence Committee, a new society has been organized at Grandville, Michigan, under the leadership of Mrs. Ada Simpson. Mrs. Hanson further comments that there is a prospect for a new society in California.

Unto you is born a Savior which is Christ the Lord.

HERALDS OF THE KING

How many of you live along a state road or a highway? Those of you who do not live near one have traveled over one many times, no doubt. If you have to ride over a gravel road before you get to the cement, it seems so bumpy, doesn't it? And when you get on the smooth concrete, the car just seems to sail along.

Of course, you know that if some one did not take care of the highway it would soon be as rough as any other road. But the road man watches for bad places and fixes them; and he keeps the sides smooth and clear, too. That is his special work—to keep the way smooth for you and me and everybody who rides over it.

Now John was just such a workman; only instead of working with cement and stones, he worked with people. And he was preparing the way for the coming of a great person, in fact, the greatest one that ever lived—Jesus our Savior.

Why, you ask, did anyone need to prepare the people for Jesus' coming? Because for many, many years no one had told them about God, and they had grown to be very wicked, just as the highway would become rough and the sides filled with weeds and rubbish if no one tended it.

When the news spread around that a man by the name of John was calling to the people to make themselves ready for the coming of Jesus, great crowds flocked to the shores of the river Jordan to hear what he had to say. We can just imagine that when some of the people who had been very, very wicked heard what John had to tell them, they must have felt ashamed of themselves.

John told them what God wanted them to do in order that their hearts would be clean and honest so that they would listen to Jesus' words when He came. Can you think of anything in your own life that you would not want Jesus to see if He came today? Let's clean out all things from our hearts and minds that we might be ashamed of and have the way smooth and free from bad habits and wrongdoing when our King comes.

FIND OUT:

How John knew that he was to prepare the way for Jesus.

Where he lived before he took up his work.

What kind of food he ate and what sort of clothes he wore.

What he told the people who came to hear him preach. What sort of person he was.

Who was more important—John or Jesus.

FOR YOUR NOTEBOOKS:

Let's begin this new year with a notebook or a scrapbook, in which we will keep the most important things about each lesson. In it paste a picture of John if you can find one. Write under it—God's messenger—"Prepare ye the way of the Lord."

Now draw the Jordan River; cut out some men and women and boys and girls and paste them on both sides of the river.

I hope many of you will start a scrapbook, because I have a special reason for asking you and a special place for your scrapbook. I shall tell you all about it later.

Now draw two highways—one rough and crooked and the other smooth and straight. Along the first one write, "Bad temper, cross looks, disobedience." Along the other write, "Sunny disposition, sweet faces, obedience." You and Mother can think of many more. This will be great fun for stormy Saturdays when you can't go out, or for Sunday afternoons.

HOW WE SHOULD LIVE

"A little endured,
And a little explained;
Thus the quarrel is ended,
The friendship regained.

"A little conceded,
Much tenderness shown
For the failings of others,
As well as our own.

"Then all will work smoothly,
The warfare will cease;
And where there was tumult
There now will be peace.

"Learn to bear and forbear,
Forget and forgive;
For this is the way that
All Christians should live."

JOHN PREPARES THE WAY FOR JESUS

Mark 1:1-11

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 40:3-11

GOLDEN TEXT

Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.—Mark 1:3.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Preparing the Way for the Christ.

Aim: To lead the pupil to submit to the rulership of Christ today that he may be prepared for His coming in the future.

I. The Prediction. (V. 1-3) Nowhere is the grace of God more clearly revealed than in the warnings and promises of prophecy. Knowing the end from the beginning, God makes known to His children the events of the future that they may be prepared for them. The coming of the forerunner of the Messiah was predicted that the people might recognize Him when He came and accept His message. His task, which was faithfully performed, was to prepare the minds and hearts of the Jews to accept Jesus as their Savior and Messiah when He came. The same task devolves upon the Christian worker today, but is broadened to include all nations and races.

II. The Fulfillment. (V. 5-8.) Sin is the one great obstruction that must be removed to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord. Sin must be taken away before He can gain entrance into the hearts of men. His sovereignty begins with the individuals today and extends over nations when He comes. For this reason John urged the Jews to manifest their faith in Jesus as the Christ by repenting from their sins and to symbolize their repentance in baptism. The same course is required of us. We must believe in Jesus as the Messiah, as the King of God's future kingdom upon the earth, and therefore as the One who has authority to pardon or to condemn sin in the name of Jehovah, repent of our past iniquity, and submit to Christ's will.

III. The Great Example. (V. 9-11.) Jesus is our great example. Although He had committed no sins for which He must repent, He would have become a sinner had He not been baptized, for He declared that baptism was an act of righteousness. (Matt. 3:15.) To omit an act of righteousness would be sin. Every requirement God makes through Christ is essential. No item of faith or practice given in the Bible for Christian observance can be neglected and the disciple be guiltless.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

John the Forerunner: John the Baptist's work was to "prepare the way of the Lord." The coming of the Lord must be prepared, for the people must be warned; and John was the one selected for that labor. Sin had made broad and crooked paths. To straighten the paths sin must be destroyed. The root cause must be destroyed. Repentance, confession, and baptism were the three requirements in this preparation work. People had to comply with all three of these steps in order to be forgiven their sins and released from their condemnation. There were no substitutes or just as good ways, but just the one way, which was God's way; and this one way was proclaimed by the herald, John the Baptist.

Our message today should be clear-cut, uncompromising, and right to the point. The task assigned the church is no less important and necessary in the straightening of the crooked paths and preparing the way for the Lord's second coming than was John's in preparing the way for the Lord's first coming. In making straight the crooked paths we must follow the same plan as pursued by John the Baptist: preach repentance, confession, and baptism for the remission of sins. There are no substitutes in our day so far as God is concerned. There are many "just as good ways" offered, but there is just ONE way that will give "remission of sins." If we are to be true and faithful forerunners of Christ in preparing the way for His second coming, we must without fear or favor give the "preparatory message" which He has given us without in any way changing it. —C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

Isaiah and Malachi each prophesied concerning John the Baptist hundreds of years before his birth (Isa. 40:3; Mal. 3:1). He it was who prepared the way for the coming of the Christ. He taught, he preached and baptized, he answered questions, and he did many other things to let people know that Christ would soon make His appearance. He acknowledged Christ and called Him, "The Lamb of God."

Christ needs still to be acknowledged and pointed out to others that they may know Him and know that He is the One who does take away the sin of the world. The Christian has a duty as great, or perhaps greater, than John the Baptist in helping people to know God and His Son Jesus that their sins may be blotted out and forgiven.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

Preparing the Way for the Christ

In Isa. 6:8 we read of a "voice" announcing the scattering of Israel because of their sins. In Isa. 40:3 we read of a "voice" calling upon Israel to repent and seek salvation. Whose voice was heard by Isaiah (Isa. 6:8)? Was that the voice which was to cry for Israel's repentance and return (Luke 3:2)? In Matt. 3:1 we read that John came "preaching." "Preacher" means teacher, and preaching usually refers to teaching; but in this instance preaching comes from "kerusso," meaning to proclaim as a herald.

What kind of a man was John? Was he a prophet (Luke 7:28)? Was he Elijah (John 1:21; Luke 1:17)? Had the people repented would he have fulfilled the prophecy of Mal. 4:5 concerning the coming of Elijah (Matt. 11:14)? Since the people did not repent, should we look for the coming of Elijah? Read carefully Mal. 4:5. How was John to prepare the way for Christ (Luke 1:17, 77; 3:7, 11-15)? What paths were to be made straight? Was John's work successful with the common people (Luke 3:7; Matt. 3:5, 6)? Did the chief priests and elders of the people accept John's warning (Matt. 21:25)? In preparing the way for Christ, what was the first thing required by John (Matt. 3:2)?

What was the first thing commanded by Peter on the day of Pentecost as he prepared the way for Jesus (Acts 2:38)? Is this still the first step to salvation? What is the second (Acts 2:38)? Does God still need messengers to prepare the people for the salvation of Christ? How is salvation carried to the people today (1 Cor. 1:21)? Who should do this work? Does God excuse anyone? Whose voice should we be (1 Cor. 2:7)?—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Heralds of the King

How many of you boys and girls have had a great man come to your town or city? All of you, I am sure. And most of you have gone to see some great man. How did you know he was coming? I can hear some of you say, "Why, we read about it in our paper." Others heard about it over their radios. News travels quickly nowadays, doesn't it? But nineteen hundred years ago it was quite different. They had no daily papers, no telephones, no radios. When a great man intended to visit a certain place, a runner was sent ahead; and sometimes he blew a bugle to let people know about it. You have seen a picture of him in your history, perhaps.

In our lesson today we learn of a runner whose work it was to announce the coming of the greatest Man that ever lived. Think of that! Would we not be proud to be chosen to fill such a position! I wonder if this runner, or "fore-runner," as he was called, because he ran before, was proud. Find out all you can about him—his name, the strange happenings at the time of his birth, his manner of living, etc. You will find this in Luke 1:5-23; Matt. 3:1-6, as well as in the text given in your quarterly.

Special problem: Find an instance in the later life of John the Baptist that shows that he meant it when he said, "There cometh one mightier than I after me." Let us also in honor prefer others.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SUB-ZERO WITHOUT—WARM WITHIN

The zero weather greatly reduced the attendance at the special evangelistic meetings of the Church of God at Holbrook, Neb., but it did not chill the spirit of the meeting or the interest in the least. At every service a surprising number braved the frosty air to gather in the warm comfortable house of worship to study anew from the greatest Book in the world of Jehovah's revealed plans and purposes.

The meetings were announced to continue throughout the week and over Sunday, Dec. 18, with another all-day gathering on that day.

Bro. Austin has been giving his very best efforts in the Holbrook work and has made many new and valued friends in and around that hospitable city. He is most appreciative of his kind reception among the people of the community. He had many things which he wished to present during the last week in addition to no little review that seemed necessary on account of the break caused by the cold wave. Back to the Bible is the constant urge to the religious as well as to the business world. The truth of God's Word has been emphasized again and again as the one light that reveals the pathway both to the individual unto life everlasting and to the world unto returning prosperity.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our church family here enters the Christmas season with the deepest appreciation to our heavenly Father for all His great goodness, and we pray the richest of the Christmas spirit and blessings upon all of you.

All departments of the church are progressing. Especial mention should be made of the Dorcas Society. In spite of all the depression talk and depressing feelings the ladies during the past three months have earned by various activities more than two hundred dollars. At a period of time when so many men are out of work, or working for nearly nothing, it certainly manifests a wonderful spirit of co-operation for the ladies to do as they have done. In addition to the above they have provided garments, shoes, stockings, bedding, and other necessary items to children and needy ones and distributed twenty-one bushels of food at Thanksgiving time.

Final arrangements are being made for our series of meetings to be held from January 3 to 15. Bro. Magaw is to be our out-of-town speaker, and we hope that much good may be accomplished by the work.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

TRUTH SEEKERS' QUARTERLY

Now that a copy of the new quarterly for the first three months of 1933 is in your hands, perhaps a glimpse into its pages would be of value. The editorial page gives us first of all the aim for the lessons of the quarter. The teacher should study the aim frequently so as to present each lesson as part of a unit, a step toward the goal set for a particular quarter. In addition to the general aim, the editor, G. E. Marsh, has suggested an aim for each separate lesson contributing to the central aim. Keeping your quarterlies on file is the next valuable suggestion. Interesting comment on Mark and his gospel occupies our attention next, being of especial help in preparation for the new quarter.

Turning the page we find the text for lesson one and under it the daily home readings, which, if followed, prepare the mind of teacher and student for the lesson itself. The setting of the lesson provides valuable information in condensed form, giving you a grasp of the facts necessary before commencing to teach any lesson. A study of the text is given for each lesson, which, in effect, is the best interpretation gleaned by our editor from several commentaries which may not be in every teacher's library.

On page 6 we find the thought of the lesson brought out by the editor in comprehensive form in a study of the subject, along with the aim and basic truth of each lesson. Following this we have a practical application of the lesson and the golden text brought to our attention concretely. On the next page comes the lesson as prepared for the various departments. Because of lack of space these can be suggestive only. The writers have endeavored to suggest points of contact, leading questions, special problems, and the story which always fascinates children. At the bottom of pages 5 and 6 the editor has outlined comprehensive questions on the text and the subject. And so throughout the quarter.

On page 56 we find a list of the lessons for the second quarter with their aim and texts. Following this is the dictionary, wherein you will find difficult terms defined, places located, etc. Look up, for instance, Mount of Olives. Lastly, the abbreviations used in the book are explained.

Teacher and student should remember that because of the size and low cost of the book all matter can be suggestive only, but will lead to thought and research which will prove valuable. Along with all this must be a sincere desire on the part of the teacher to lead another to God through the channel of consecration of oneself by the power of His Word. That your quarterly may assist you in attaining this end is the desire of Bro. Marsh and his co-workers.—M. G.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The Rockford (Ill.) Sunday school will present its Christmas program next Friday night. Included in the audience will be the children from a near-by orphans' home. The Oregon program will be given on Christmas Eve.

We pray for the success of the forthcoming special meeting to be held in the Grand Rapids church by the pastor assisted by Bro. Magaw of Ohio.

"It is the event and not the day we commemorate."—George B. Alldridge.

In the name of Him whose birth we celebrate The Herald extends to its many readers its Christmas greeting, and prays that the Spirit of the Lord, which is the Spirit of Love, may continue with them throughout the new year.

The official board of the National Bible Institution is deeply grateful to the Father for the wonderful way in which He has inspired His stewards to respond to our appeal for financial relief. The spirit ail have shown has been most encouraging in addition to the splendid material help they have rendered. We are not yet altogether out of our "Slough of Despond," but with the supporting hands of faithful brethren we are drawing much closer to the solid ground. May God bless you all.

THE GREATEST OF ALL GIFTS

By D. G. Harvey

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

AS WE draw near to the day kept by all Christendom as the anniversary of our Lord's birth, commercialized though it has become, a day of giving gifts among men, it behooves all men to pause and give thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift for the greatest Gift of all, His Son.

God, who has so graciously given us life and provided all our needs, remembering that we are dust and that no man can redeem his brother from the curse, the result of our first parent Adam's disobedience, has in His mercy given His only begotten Son that the lost and dying race may through Him receive everlasting life. This will be a life so much greater than this present one that Paul, the great teacher of the Gentiles, was moved to cry, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Romans 8:18.

We think we suffer in this day. What are our sufferings compared with those of the apostles, who were without shelter, often hungry, in prison, beaten, put to death. Space forbids full quotations. Please read Acts 13:50; 16:23; 20:23; 1 Cor. 4:11; 2 Cor. 1:4; 6:4; 11:23; 1 Tim. 4:10; 2 Tim. 3:10; 1 Peter 3:14; 4:12. Then compare your sufferings with theirs and thank God for such men, who by their faith and zeal brought to you the gospel of Christ.

Read again and study the suffering of our Lord from the garden to the cross. Picture in your mind His agony in the garden, His torture at His mock trial, and His final suffering in the most painful death on the Roman cross. Yet we today live in an age when we may worship God with full protection of the laws of our country.

Suffering is only the restraining of our carnal, our selfish will. As the little girl once said, "I can make myself mind myself." If such were only true! But of ourselves we can do nothing. We must receive the Father's guidance at all times.

During the present "depression," due to lack of employment, the giving of gifts will be curtailed to a large extent by the sons of Adam; but we have a Father who gives each of us greater gifts.

The greatest Gift of all gave His life for us and arose from that tomb; and we in faith hear Him say, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore."—Revelation 1:18. And again, "Because I live, ye shall live also."—John 14:19.

Our Father sent this greatest Gift to men once, giving all men the assurance of righteous judgment by that Son (Acts 17:31). The Gift will return to restore all things promised by God through the words of His prophets (Acts 3:19-21). Then will be fulfilled the promise made to Abraham so long ago: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." That Seed was Christ (Genesis 22:18; Galatians 3:16).

The Greatest Gift to Man. Hear Him: "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me . . . Surely, I come quickly."—Revelation 22:12, 20. Thank God for this greatest Gift of all and pray as John, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

"BEYOND the dark night of depression we can see the dawning of a brighter day."—A. E. Hoskins.

HE CAME; HE'S COMING AGAIN

By E. O. Stewart

The world in solemn stillness lay
Around Jerusalem,
While shepherds watched their flocks by night
Near ancient Bethlehem.
A song floats out upon the wings
Of that first Christmas night,
And fills the darkness all around
With heaven's golden light.

It brings a message of good cheer
To find a resting place
Within the hearts of men forlorn;
It tells of heaven's grace.
It tells how God so loved the world
A Savior He would give,
That whosoever trusts His grace
Might with Him ever live.

The Bible tells how Jesus died
To pay the sinner's cost;
To purchase back the first domain,
Which father Adam lost.
It tells how He will come again
To reign on David's throne,
To banish war, establish peace,
On earth from zone to zone.

Then Paradise shall bloom again;
For it He will restore.
He'll wipe the tears from every face;
The curse shall be no more.
When Christmas comes, it should recall
The dawn of God's great plan
To banish sin, remove the curse,
And save poor fallen man.

THE GIVER AND HIS GIFT

By R. H. Judd

"A light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of my people Israel."

AT THE time these words were spoken by Zacharias some two thousand years had passed since Israel had been made God's chosen nation as a witness to a specific purpose. What that purpose was is plainly stated in Isaiah 43:10-12 and 44:8. It was chosen to be a witness to the fact that the Lord Jehovah is the only true and living God and that in very truth there is no God beside Him, that apart from Him "there is no Saviour."

Let any unprejudiced mind go back in survey to the conditions existing from the dawn of Israel's history to the time when the father of John the Baptist gave expression to the words of our text and he cannot fail to acknowledge that every nation upon the face of the earth had forsaken the worship of Jehovah and was steeped in the worship of a degrading polytheism.

This sad fact is accounted for by the view so commonly held that man is a creature of evolution and that his religion has also evolved from a lower to a higher plane, beginning with idol-worship of created objects in the heavens and on the earth. Beyond all question of doubt the Scriptures are the earliest authentic records we have regarding the beginnings of man's history. It is abundantly clear from them that man began with the worship of the one living and true God above and beyond nature itself. Hence, the indisputable proof of the Bible statements regarding man's fall, especially in this particular respect. This is clearly brought out by Paul in Romans 1:20-23, where he charges that mankind had "changed" from the glory of the incorruptible God to images made like to corruptible man and had "served the creature more than the Creator."

Take a look back through the prophets and see if this is not the great burden of the message: Israel was meant to be God's witness of Himself in the midst of a world where not a single person worshiped Jehovah as the only true God so far had it departed from Him. Notice, too, how every other sin God freely and frankly forgave, but would not tolerate the worship of any other than Himself; and for this sin of Israel's in forsaking God, His judgments were terrible upon it. Again and again God pleaded with Israel to "return" to Him. Let the reader turn to Isaiah, chapters 40 to 44, where these facts are portrayed in wonderful contrast and terminate in passionate plea to return unto Him. "Return unto me, for I have redeemed thee."

In nearly all these passages in both Old and New Testaments the fact that God Himself is Creator and Giver of all good things is linked to the urgent call to worship Him only. (See Isaiah 40:28-31 and 44:21-24; also Acts 17:22-30, where Paul makes this the very subject of repentance.)

If He is in truth the Creator of all things, then all things must indeed be had from Him and through the channels of His choice. He alone can open the windows of heaven and pour forth a blessing so that there will not be room enough to contain it.

In the light of present-day teaching and prevalent worship of a trinity, of whom even the personality of one is, to say the least, doubtful, it may well be asked, "Did Christ come to introduce a fresh object of worship (namely, Himself), or did He come that He might make known Him that sent Him?" Most emphatically He came to make known "the truth . . . there is one God; and there is none other but he."—Mark 12:32. He came to make this known as a fact, a living, "bright reality" in the lives of those to whom He came. Realizing the greatness of the issue and the impossibility of its accomplishment in this life, "he asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever." In view of this, He Himself declared in John 17:3, "This is (the purpose of) life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (It may be remarked here that the word that has in this instance the meaning of "in order that," as in verses 11, 12, 13, 19, 21, 23, and others in this same chapter.)

The truly great things in this world have not been done by nations, but by individuals. It was those who stood alone with Jehovah who accomplished great results, and their names stand out like stars in the firmament of history. No race of men has moved the world as did the prophets of Israel, and "last of all he sent unto them his Son."

When the world of nations lost their knowledge of the one true and living God and were steeped in idolatry and on the way to individual and national destruction, "God sent forth his Son"; and oh, what a change has come upon the world! He came, not to declare Himself, but God. His first recorded utterance was characteristic of His whole life, "I must be about my Father's business." Later He said, "I am not come to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." He put God first in the hour of His great temptation in the wilderness (Matt. 4:10), and He put God first in the last scene in the garden—"Not my will, but thine, be done."—Luke 22:42; Matthew 26:39.

No wonder John bursts forth with the ultimate climax that God shall be All in all. Then will the knowledge of the Lord cover "the earth as the waters cover the sea," and saints and angels will follow on to know the Lord. What, indeed, will this earth be when God is known? Knowledge and progress were almost dead before the coming of Christ; but since He became known, and through Him the knowledge of God, in that proportion has "knowledge increased."

When sin no longer separates us from God, oh, what will the issue be? And He came "to save his people from their sins." Do you catch the thought? A world without sin, and a world brought back into contact and relationship with the living God. "Last of all he sent unto them his Son." It was God's "last," and it was God's best. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

THE RUSSIAN MENACE

By George B. Alldridge

“Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands: and many people with thee.”—Ezekiel 38:6.

DURING the Great War after Paul von Hindenburg apparently had annihilated the Russian army, thus eliminating Russia as a factor on the side of the Allies, many Bible students considered Germany as the “Northern Power.” On November 11, 1918, the Central Powers signed the Armistice, thus placing themselves at the mercy of their enemies, whom for four years they had so valiantly opposed.

Overnight, so to speak, a new nation was born. Some writers speak of it as Bolshevism; others, especially in America, as Communism. However, even if there be a difference, to the ordinary mind they are synonymous.

As a government it is known and recognized by its adherents as the Soviet Union. For the past fifteen years their missionaries throughout the world (who are especially busy just now) have been promulgating by means of the printed page and able speakers the overthrow of all forms of government not in harmony with their own.

Permit me to quote from a handbill widely circulated in Cleveland, Ohio: “Smash the Enemies of the Soviet Union—Enemies of the American Workers! Demand! not a cent for Armaments—All Funds for the Unemployed! Organize! against imperialistic War—The Bosses’ Solution for The Crisis. Down with the Fish (Please turn to Page Nine)

The Bear That Walks Like a Man

THE interest we take in the future of the race is almost equaled by the interest we feel in its past history. From whence came these various races and nations of men? Were they all developed from the same original stock? What were the conspiring influences and circumstances that shaped the destiny and marked the character of the various groups of mankind? And where was the cradle of the human family? These are most fascinating questions.

We know that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."—Acts 17:26. We know further that in doing this He has taken into account His own infinite and eternal purposes for all the earth. "When the most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel."—Deuteronomy 32:8.

As we review the findings of the archeologist and the ethnologist we are impressed by two facts: first, that their deductions and conclusions are strongly supported by the Bible; and, second, that the grouping of the various races is in harmony with the predictions of the prophets and arranged in such a way as to foster the fruition of the divine purposes concerning Israel and the future kingdom of God. Thus science is found to sustain the inspiration of the Scriptures.

To understand the peculiarly important position occupied by Russia in prophecy it is necessary for us to know something of the origin of its people. We cannot enter into a lengthy discussion of the archeological and ethnological evidence upon which the conclusion is based but must content ourselves for the time with the simple assertion that the Turk, the Chinese, and the Tartar elements in the Russian population evidently arose in proximity to each other and under similar influences and are, therefore, closely akin to each other. The importance of this fact will be recognized when we come to see how closely associated these three races will be in the final prophetic unfolding.

The earliest information we are able to obtain concerning the territory and the inhabitants of present-day Russia has to do with the conquest of native tribes by three Swedish brothers at a very early period. The Russian of later times, however, is more the product of Tartar than of Swedish influences. Men still say, "If you scratch a Russian, you will find a Tartar."

Following the wide-sweeping success of Jenghis Khan in the twelfth century, the Mongol, or Tartar, tribes which had already conquered China advanced to the north and west and subdued large sections of what is now Russia and Manchuria, as well as all of Persia.

The Tartars, or Mongols, were, perhaps, the most ruthless and bloodthirsty of all the barbarian tribes that from time to time swept over portions of Europe. They left the indelible mark of inhuman savagery upon the Russian character. Treachery and deceit have characterized the Tartar race throughout history. It was owing to that well-known element in the Russian character that Kipling warns against treaty-making with that people.

"Over and over the story, ending as it began:

'Make no peace with Adam-Zad—the bear that walks like a man.' "

Our New Year Prayer

OUR FATHER in heaven, by whose loving favor we have been brought to the close of another year, we approach Thee in deepest gratitude as we meditate on the blessings Thou hast bestowed. We thank Thee for material comforts, for spiritual assurances, and for all the rich heritage Thou hast given us through faith in Thy blessed Son. Take us into Thy keeping for the New Year, that at its close we may feel that we have indeed grown in grace and in the knowledge of those things which lead men closer to Thee and incline them to consecrate their lives more fully to Thy service, we pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

THE NEW YEAR

By George B. Alldridge

"We spend our days as a tale that is told."—Psalm 90:9.

WHOEVER wrote the one hundred second Psalm expressed in one verse the entire gamut of human experience in writing, "My days are like a shadow that declineth; and I am withered like grass." How accurately Job coincides with this thought: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not." James, writing centuries after, declares the same thought: "But the rich in that he is made low: because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away."

What is man's whole life but the inconsiderable measure of a span? Yet how insignificant even this is compared with that comprehended in a span of God, "who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance"?

Suppose with Moses it should be our experience to say, "The days of our years are threescore years and ten: and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength, labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away."

Think of what is involved in this brief span of human existence! Our Eternal Destiny—Eternal Life or Eternal Death. To our mind "years," speaking of the future, seems a long time; but as "days" it seems just a little while. So how fittingly the Scripture says, "The days of our life." Each day passed is a step nearer the final goal of all men (Hebrews 9: 27). But as another year passes, how it should impress our minds with the shortness of life!

What emphasis the writer of the Hebrew letter places upon "To day": four times it occurs in the third chapter. Note especially the thirteenth verse: "But exhort one another daily, while it is called To day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." The things pertaining to our peace may be freely held forth to us now; but if neglected the future may set them out of our reach, forever lost.

Let us as we enter this year consider upon what terms we are standing before God, accepted into His family by Him or through neglect still "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world."

It is true as Paul declared "that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." We all realize how difficult the "narrow road to life" is becoming, but to delay to enter the race today is far more dangerous; and what Paul says of his day is more true of our day: "The night is far spent; the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light."

Why? "For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. How solemn are these words: "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." But if the door stand unopened, Jesus may be gone before tomorrow; and since, once rejected, it may be final, no man can assure himself of another opportunity.

So each day of this year 1933 may we remember Moses' words: "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

"Uncertain life, how soon it flies!
Dream of an hour, how short our bloom!
Like spring's gay verdure now we rise,
Cut down ere night to fill the tomb.
Teach us to count our shortning days,
And with true diligence apply
Our hearts to wisdom's sacred ways,
That we may learn to live and die."

Ring Out Wild Bells

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the fend of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out, my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand,
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in The Christ That Is to Be.

—Lord Tennyson.

IS THE WORLD GOING RED?

By C. E. Randall

"But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief."—1 Thessalonians 5:4.

THE Apostle, writing to the church concerning conditions that are to prevail prior to and including the "day of the Lord," says, "ye are not in darkness." Thus we would understand that those who are members of that great and glorious body the church are "children of the light, and children of the day" and are not as those who sit in darkness. The reason is obvious: "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Being in Him, we "walk in the light, as he is in the light." This God-given light penetrates the darkness, revealing the unseen to those who are accustomed to its rays. As we focus the rays of God's light upon the question being discussed, we find there is much revelation for us.

Red is the color of tribulation days when "every man's sword shall be against his brother." To get the subject before the readers in such shape that they can clearly understand, we shall enumerate some of the instances where red is used in the Bible in so far as it pertains to our day and the day of the Lord and shall then offer our comments.

"Behold a great red dragon."—Rev. 12:3. "I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet (red) coloured beast." "And the woman was arrayed in . . . scarlet (red)." "I saw the woman drunken with the blood (red) of the saints."—Rev. 17:3, 4, 6. "The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in scarlet (red) . . . in the day of his preparation."—Nahum 2:3. Sin is spoken of as being "as scarlet" (red) and "red like crimson" (Isaiah 1:18).

We may expect to see in our day the forming of the battle lines between the two great opposing forces of righteousness and unrighteousness, the one force headed by the Son of God and the other force or army led by the great red dragon. With all the spiritualizing and symbolizing that may be done in explaining the Book of Revelation, the facts that are set forth in that final revelation to man will have such a literal fulfillment that mankind will be dazed before its realities.

The seed bed for the planting of God's judgments in the earth is being prepared in such a visible way that he "who runs may read." One must close his eyes to the political and social revolutions and upheavals which are taking place with the rapidity of an earthquake if he cannot see the battlefield of Revelation in the making. This book, buttressed by other portions of God's Word, reveals that man's day will end with the "accuser of our brethren," that great red dragon, knowing that he will shortly go forth with great fury and will give power and a seat and great authority to a scarlet (red) beast; and thus we shall have a red ruler, a red government, and a red religion which will require all who live at that time to fall down and "worship the image of the beast." The red dragon has always opposed God, and the man of sin who gets his power from Satan will also be an opposer of God and through his opposition will cause the red blood of all the saints of Israel and of tribulation time to flow unless they renounce their allegiance to God and pay homage to the beast.

About the time when Gentile rule of Palestine under the Turkish regime was broken we could begin to see the red dragon organizing his forces. It began in Russia. Russia went red; and when she went red, she also went anti-Christian. And since the Reds obtained power, the God of our fathers and the Christ of our salvation have been burned in effigy and the precious sacraments of the church and the teachings of God's Word have been hooted as a blight of civilization. The red flag of red Russia inspired by the red dragon has caused the blood of millions to flow. During the first five years of red rule in Russia over a million people were murdered. If such atrocious acts of lawlessness and cold blooded crimes can be perpetrated in a world where the Spirit of God radiates out and away from the people of God, what will happen when this Spirit is removed by the translation of the church?

The doctrines of a red government and a red religion are being spread broadcast in every country of the world. Russia is not the only country with red ideas. China is going red. Germany and Italy are not red, yet they have the spirit of the dragon everywhere in evidence. The nations that are going to come against Jerusalem to battle and to plunder, pilfer, and spoil are the ones that seem to be fertile soil for the doctrines of red religion and of red government. This would be natural, for it is these very people under the leadership of the dragon that are going to attempt to frustrate the purpose of God in that last great battle known as Armageddon.

Thus we may expect the nations that have opposed and persecuted the Jew to be in the columns of those nations under the control and leadership of the scarlet-colored beast and this beast in turn to be under the control of the great red dragon. We may minimize the prophecies pertaining to the dragon and the beast, but we cannot overlook nor reject the visible facts as they are transpiring in the nations of Jewish opposition.

We are entering a time when as Christians we must be very careful how we support and countenance mass and mob opposition to "orderly constituted governments," for the birth of such movements is generally proved to have taken place in the councils of the Reds who are opposed to God and Christianity. Our duty is not to embarrass governments, but to "pray for those in authority" (1 Timothy 2:1, 2).

Time's sun is fast setting, its twilight is night,
Its evening is falling in cloud o'er the sky:
Its shadows are stretching in ominous gloom,
Its midnight approaches, the midnight of doom.
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee;
And wrath is preparing, flee, lingerer, flee.—Bonar.

"A More Sure Word of Prophecy"

By Norman John McLeod

NOT long ago a man came into a book store where religious books were sold to object to the new translations of the Bible; as for him, he said that he was satisfied with that written by James, the brother of our Lord. That sort of ignorance has given rise to the modernist's definition of a fundamentalist: a fundamentalist is one who thinks that Moses pounded out the first five books of the Old Testament on a Corona typewriter in the English language.

To be reasonable, however, fundamentalism is a protest at the attempt of the so-called "higher critics" to tear down by very ridiculous methods the faith that has been intrusted to them. Fundamentalism thus far is commendable; but few of us would subscribe to what is known by them as the "fundamental doctrines": immortality of the soul, reward of the righteous at death, and many other such items.

Let us ask ourselves the question: What is fundamental Christianity? The "back to the Bible" movement is an attempt to answer this question. In this vein let us consider prophecy as a fundamental doctrine.

Most people would consider it the very farthest from fundamentals that could be found in the biblical works. How, then, may prophecy be a fundamental doctrine? The answer to that question is found in the light of 2 Peter 1:16-21. But before going into that particular section of the Bible, let us consider some other items which will show what Peter is talking about.

The most absolute proof of the authenticity of the Bible is the present status of the Jews and the things that are happening to them. But what would be our interest in Zionism if it were not for the prophecies connected therewith?

The Christian who studies his Bible knows more about what the Jews are doing than they do themselves, especially those Jews who are returning in unbelief. How many Jews would understand what is meant by the following text unless they have come into contact with Christian people: "Unto you therefore which believe he is precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into marvellous light: which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy."—1 Peter 2:7-10.

They could not understand that the Gentiles were to be part of the great ruling class in God's kingdom; yet that is one of the great fundamentals of the Bible and is also dependent upon the fulfillment of prophecy. What is the purpose of taking out a chosen people from among the nations of the world? To make a class of rulers for that great kingdom that is to be established. That understanding, then, of the situation of the Jews and the relation of the Gentiles to them is dependent upon God's kingdom, all of which is yet future.

The average churchman does not understand any more than does the Jew. He thinks that God's kingdom is to be brought in by the righteous acts of wicked men; that God's kingdom is to be brought in by means of the moral reformer and the reforming legislator or, still more ridiculous, by the proper politician put in executive authority.

Or we might notice the covenants of promise. The Jews who pride themselves as being the recipients of God's promises do not understand that they are dependent upon conditions that they do not comprehend. The Gentiles who glibly sing of standing on the promises of God do not in most cases know what the promises are, let alone know the conditions of their fulfillment. The average Jew would not understand what the Apostle Paul meant in the book of Galatians when he said, "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." And the average Gentile Christian does not comprehend the richness of the plan of God which makes such glorious things possible of fulfillment.

Peter says: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty." Usually nothing is thought to be more reliable than eyewitness. And Peter here is paying tribute to that eyewitness.

But what were the apostles witnessing? Things which had been prophesied for hundreds of years. Moses had said: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. . . . And the Lord said unto me, They have well spoken that which they have spoken. I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him."—Deuteronomy 18:15, 17, 18.

David in many of the Psalms spoke in detail of the things which the apostles saw fulfilled: "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning; thou hast the dew of thy youth. The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek."—Psalm 110:1-4.

Then the more elaborate prophecies of the writing prophets from Isaiah on through the list were being fulfilled before the eyes of these witnesses. These things Peter considered more sure than the eyewitness of the glory that was pictured to them in the scene of the transfiguration: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount."—2 Peter 1:16-18.

Those things were certainly powerful evidence; but Peter thinks that prophecies were more sure that were fulfilled before their eyes: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation."—2 Peter 1:19, 20. The eyewitness, then says Peter, is not so sure as the word of prophecy that lights us as a lamp in a dark place until the day dawn. The more sure word of prophecy to which he refers may be divided into two parts: that concerning Jesus' first coming which we have just mentioned, and that concerning His second coming.

To most people the word "prophecy" refers to the various apocalyptic prophecies of Daniel and John the Revelator. They are bewildered by beasts, images, visions, and symbolisms which are not always clear and are capable of many interpretations. But these are not all of prophecy. They are for those who care for that sort of thing, but they can hardly be classed as the fundamental things to which we refer when we think of the more sure word of prophecy of Peter. Even in those more enigmatical prophecies there are many things that might be spoken of as sure in the sense of clarity and certainty of fulfillment.

Daniel had many visions, of which some were hard to understand. But of those visions there were many things said that are not so difficult to understand. At the end of the interpretation of the image which Nebuchadnezzar saw there is this statement: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."—Daniel 2:44.

That is the hope of the Jew and the Gentile; that is the faith in which all the worthies died. God has always kept His word as Peter states. We know that no such kingdom as mentioned by Daniel has ever been set up; therefore, it is still future. The radical modernist may tell us that prophecies of Daniel in regard to the various elements of this vision were written after the events took place and that if Daniel wrote them he lived much later than was supposed by Archbishop Usher. But no matter how much stress they put on these facts, the real test of Daniel lies in the kingdom which is yet to come, not on those nations which have gone down.

Faith, therefore, becomes the chief element of prophecy. Prophecy becomes from that fact the most important element in the faith which we hold dear. The only and final test of the reliability of a prophet is whether his predictions come true: "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him."—Deuteronomy 18:22.

So important is the doctrine of the second coming of Christ that we have been spoken of as an "adventist" church. At the Bureau of Census in the Department of Commerce the churches are grouped according to some peculiar doctrine. There is a group of "adventist" churches: ours is known as the Church of God, Adventist, to distinguish it from the other churches of God. In recent years the adventist doctrine has come to appeal to a larger number of churches. In fact, so common has that tenet become over the radio that no longer do we find it a thing that makes the adventist church distinct. But most of the preachers do not know why Jesus is coming back to this earth. Most of them would say that He is coming to take His people back to heaven.

God has made covenants with man which wait upon the return of Christ for their fulfillment. He told Abraham that he and his seed should inherit the land of Palestine forever: that must wait upon that glad day (Hebrews 11:8). He has promised to resurrect the followers of Jesus to a life of eternal righteousness and usefulness: that must stand in abeyance until the Lord returns (1 Thessalonians 4:13). He has promised to set up a kingdom on this earth that shall subdue and supplant all other kingdoms: that must remain an anticipation until that "time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." (Daniel 7:27, 28.) He has promised to remove all pain, all sorrow, all sickness, and finally death from the earth: that is a thing of eager longing that has been left in the hearts of men until the sound of the trumpet of Gabriel shall rend the gladsome air at the Lord's return (1 Corinthians 15:24, ff.).

Why do we have faith in God? Because we are anxiously expecting the fulfillment of all of God's precious promises. Why do we live in Christian love one with another? Because love gives us the kind of character that will be found pleasing to Him when He comes to take His great power to reign. Peter in this connection says that, added to all other of the Christian graces, is love.

The sum of prophecy, the total of the Christian graces are all centered around the eyewitness of the apostles. The sure word of prophecy that is more sure than the witness of the eye that was granted to the apostles is all centered in the greatest event of all history and prophecy: the second coming of our Lord from heaven.

CHINA - RUSSIA COMPACT

EVERY nation that assumes diplomatic relations with the Soviet government fears, not without cause, the undercover communistic propaganda that representatives of Russia will undertake when they are openly admitted for commercial purposes. After prolonged suspension of formal intercourse between the two nations China and Russia, they have recently resumed a formal friendly attitude. The acting president of the exexecutive yuan of China commented on the change as follows, according to a dispatch from Shanghai of December 14.

"I view the resumption of normal diplomatic and commercial relations with Russia with lively satisfaction," he said, "I have ever thought that there is a natural sympathy between the two broad streams of humanity representing China and Russia which transcends the vagaries of international politics. I am glad that the path is now clear for a free intercourse between these two people which will play its part in bringing about peace in the Far East."

That such a friendly agreement is to be expected between these two nations is evident from the Scriptures. There must come a gathering of the various race elements into several great groups preparatory for the establishment of the empire of the Antichrist; and the Tartar element in the Russian character will naturally be drawn to the Mongol element in China and, eventually allied with Japan, Turkey, Egypt, Persia, and probably India, will make ready to sweep across Asia in a communistic typhoon of destruction. Of course, the final and total overthrow of the combined Oriental powers is declared in Ezekiel the thirty-eighth chapter and other prophecies.

The first step toward such a coalition would be the unifying of the several peoples through the adoption of a common form of government like that presented by communism.

The press report continues: "Chinese newspapers emphasize the necessity of guarding against communistic propaganda and almost unanimously state that the direct reason for the resumption of relations was the refusal of the League of Nations to take positive action against Japan's seizure of Manchuria. It was hinted that the resumption of relations was more than a friendly diplomatic move."

DISEASE GERMS AS IMPLEMENTS OF WAR

The Buffalo Evening News asserts that the "Soviet red army plans to fight its future enemies by inoculating them with disease germs, according to information conveyed to the war office.

"Evidence that the Soviet is actively engaged in storing up stocks of tubes containing germs of encephalitis lethargica, commonly known as sleeping sickness, has been communicated to the British authorities by the Allied intelligence department, it was learned.

"It has been known for some time that the Red army chiefs have been paying special attention to chemical warfare and have employed a large number of foreign scientists, many of them German, for research in this direction."

A CITY WITHOUT GOD

"The Society of the Godless, which has the official backing of the Soviet authorities, is reported to have planned to build in Russia, in the vicinity of Nischni-Novgorod, an entirely new city, to accommodate about thirty thousand laborers, in which there is to be no trace of religious life," says The Alliance Weekly. "They will begin by eliminating the home and erecting forty immense communal houses. The Posener Zeitungsdienst describes these as being equipped with clubrooms, lecture halls, motion pictures, gymnasiums, libraries, and dining rooms. On each floor there is to be an information bureau to answer questions about the non-religious life. Anti-religious lectures and classes are to be presented every fifth day."

BRITAIN DEMANDS APOLOGY FROM RUSSIA

---

THE following dispatch from London, under date of December 7, is of interest in connection with this week's editorial, in which attention is directed to the underhanded methods practiced by Russia throughout its history.

The information is taken from The Chicago Tribune and is printed without quotation marks.

The British government has handed Russia a stern warning that propaganda activities of the third internationale in England and India will not be tolerated.

The warning was accompanied by an unequivocal demand that an apology be made for a recent article in the Moscow Izvestia alleging that instructions were issued by the British foreign office to its agents to obtain documents, "real or bogus," establishing a relationship between the Soviet government and the third internationale.

Captain R. Anthony Eden, undersecretary for foreign affairs, revealed the incident in the house of commons. Captain Eden was asked what the government is doing about the report of the British ambassador to Moscow that the third internationale has issued instructions to the British communist party to form nuclei in military units and similar organizations and to the Indian communist party to support nonpayment of rents and taxes and to organize a general strike.

Captain Eden replied that the government is considering both the ambassador's report and Izvestia's charges that the British foreign office has instructed its agents to supply documents linking the Soviets and the internationale. The Soviets have consistently denied such a link and the charge that the government controls the internationale has been a sore point in Anglo-Soviet relations.

GIVING GOD NOTICE

"He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision."—Psalm 2:4.

RUSSIA has served final notice on God. He is to be evicted. He must move out without further ado. At the beginning of the first Five-Year Plan God was openly renounced. Churches were appropriated and religion was repudiated, but He continued to stand by. Now, at the beginning of the second Five-Year Plan His exit is the first item on the program. Russia is not big enough for both God and the Soviet.

Can Russia carry out this order of eviction? They easily exile unwanted citizens to Siberia. But can they exile God? How will they go about it?

They will destroy all remaining churches and prohibit all public worship. It is a great compliment to the churches for Russia to believe that their destruction means the end of religion. But God is not limited by cathedral walls. He does not dwell in houses made with hands. He dwelt in Russia before man erected his first altar, and He will continue to dwell there after atheistic Communism has become a synonym for economic suicide.

They will teach the younger generation that there is no God. There are Communistic Sunday schools in this city (Cleveland, Ohio) carrying on positive programs of education in unbelief. But neither education nor the lack of it can wholly prevent the knowledge of God. A savage in Africa, hearing about God for the first time, remarked, "I have always known there was a being like that."

They will prohibit prayer. But prayer is the natural breathing of the human spirit. Prohibition of communion between the finite and the infinite is impossible. Prayer is beyond the control of man-made laws. Men will pray. Millions in Russia today, through the medium of prayer, are continuing to climb the "dark altar stairs that lead to God."

This final order of eviction will fail, for the glory of God is inextinguishable in His world. Noticing a light in the old Lincoln home in Springfield, Illinois, a child remarked, "Mr. Lincoln forgot to put out his light when he went away." Neither Mr. Lincoln nor any other man can put out that light. Nor can Russia quench the light of God in the souls of men.

Give God notice? Think again, Russia, land of riot and revolution—boastful chanticleer whose crowing thinks to bring the dawn. As well give notice to the sun to cease shining or the moon to curtain its splendor or the milky way to spill its star dust into the sea.

God will not vacate. Ouster orders cannot reach Him. At the end of another Five-Year Plan He will still be found "within the shadow, keeping watch above His own."

Give God notice? He that sitteth in the heaven shall laugh. God is giving you notice Russia—lo, I am with you always, even unto the age of the ages.—Don D. Tullis. Selected by George B. Alldridge.

THE BEAR THAT WALKS LIKE A MAN

As we trace the history of this people down through the ages from peasant to prince, from the absolute monarchies of the earlier Czars to the tyrannous autocracy of Bolshevism, we observe the same brutality exhibited, the same disregard for human life and human feelings, the same tendency to look upon love and kindness as indications of weakness that must be entirely eradicated.

For generations before the war Russia was a hotbed of underhanded violence. Assassination, the weapon of anarchy, caused both the ruler and the ruled to live in a constant state of fear. Where other races would endeavor to bring about a revolution by the ballot-box or by open rebellion, the efforts of the Russian people toward reform were advanced by intrigue accompanied by deceit and murder.

The mental and moral attitude of the Russian race seems generally to lead to a disregard for the more lovable and humane qualities of heart and life. Under the atheistic leadership of the new government the home was the first to go, and that was followed immediately by an effort to drive out religion and the church.

The treacherous nature of the nation today is becoming more plainly apparent as its secret efforts to undermine existing governments are discovered. The British Empire, one of the first to recognize the Soviet government, was compelled to withdraw its formal recognition owing to the underhanded methods of the Russians in their work of political propaganda. France has met with much the same experience.

It was because of the continued refusal of the Bolshevie authorities to assume responsibility for the national debts of the country that has caused our own government to withhold recognition until this time.

The world still recalls the treacherous manner in which "New Russia" deserted her allies at a most critical period in the World War.

When the Russian representatives demanded complete disarmament at the Geneva conference last year we remembered again Kipling's warning, put into the lips of the old blind hunter, so aptly describing the deceitful attitude of "the bear that walks like a man."

"Horrible, hairy, human, with paws like hands in prayer, Making his supplication rose Adam-Zad the Bear!

I looked at the swaying shoulders, at the paunch's swag and swing,

And my heart was touched with pity for the monstrous, pleading thing.

.....
Near he tottered and nearer, with paws like hands that pray—

From brow to jaw that steel-shod paw, it ripped my face away!"

This might well be a poetic description of the partition of Poland between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, which took place late in the eighteenth century, with the former nation receiving the lion's share of the spoils. It might be a chapter from the history of Jewish persecution in the same country, or it might well be taken as a picture of the ruthless murder of the entire family of the Czar.

The poet whose words we have appropriated as the title of this article fully realized the danger that threatened his beloved India from future Russian aggression, and he knew that danger was never greater than at the moment when Russia was crying for peace.

"But . . . this is the time for fear,
When he stands like a tired man, tottering near and near;
When he stands up as pleading, in wavering man-brute guise,
When he veils the hate and cunning of the little swinish eyes;
When he shows as seeking quarter with paws like hands in prayer,
That is the time of peril—the time of the Truce of the Bear!"

It is not strange that this people so long arrayed against the God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob, should be among the first to be called into judgment! For no nation that denies God, that vilifies religion, that dishonors home and motherhood, that mocks at prayer and love and human kindness can be trusted.

The very characteristics that make Russia what it is today and what it has been in the past and what it will be in the future will bring about its own eventual destruction.

Moved by its unnatural and inhuman greed, the "Bear that walks like a man," the great Beast of the North, will fulfill the predictions of Ezekiel 38:1-9 and 39:1-5; and the gray-haired mothers of Russia, whose heads are bowed tonight in prayer, secret prayer, that God may bless and keep their children to whom they dare not teach His name, shall be avenged!

The millions of suffering Jews whose blood cries out for justice from a thousand reeking Russian prisons and from the long snowy trails that lead away across the dreary steppes to Siberia shall be avenged!

For the voice of the almighty Judge of the Universe has said, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay!"—Romans 12:19. And again, "Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? To me belongeth vengeance, and recompence; their foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste."—Deuteronomy 32:34, 35. •

The nation that forgets God, the people that denies God, that cannot be trusted, shall not endure. It is a menace to humanity, a constant danger to mankind. But God is just. It will be for Him to say finally,

"Over and over the story, ending as (God) began:—
'There is no truce with Adam-Zad, the Bear that walks like a man!'"

THE RUSSIAN MENACE

Committee and the Repressive Measures of the Bosses! Demonstrate! against Capitalism! For Defense of The Soviet Union! Attend the Anniversary Celebration November 7th! Join the Communist Party!"

Some of my readers may pooh at this and say, "We are too powerful to be overcome by propaganda such as this." Probably you are right; I hope so.

Let me quote one scripture and then answer me truly: Is it being fulfilled today? "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven (governments) shall be shaken."—Luke 21:26.

Jesus was a wonderful student of the Old Testament. Hence, He knew just when to apply the prophecies as they became due. So listen to this: "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."—Matthew 24:21.

Somebody may say, quoting the historian Josephus, that this occurred at the siege of Jerusalem when it was destroyed by Titus in the year 70 A. D. But let me finish the above quotation, "And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

Obtain a good church history from any public library and after reading it you must confess that there has been "great tribulation" far exceeding even that at the siege of Jerusalem. Besides, in this "great tribulation" Jesus is speaking about, the Prophet says that at this time "it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein."—Zechariah 13:8.

At the time General Washington seemed to be fostering a lost cause at Valley Forge an English subject wrote a pamphlet called "Common Sense." Benjamin Franklin said that the teaching therein set forth (to fight for independence) won the Revolutionary War. The Soviet Union at present is following the same method.

But there is another point wherein Russia seems to be the greatest aggressor, and that is an attack upon God. Think of it! I have not the space to quote it, so read Jeremiah 25:31-33. This refers to the controversy with the nations which God Himself will decide in His own way.

In The Literary Digest of November, 1932, is an article so sensational in character that it has gone the rounds of both the secular and religious press. Under the caption, "Russia's Ban on God," The Digest says, "On May 1, 1937, there must not remain on the territory of the U. S. S. R. a single house of prayer to God, and the very conception 'God' will be banished from the boundaries of the Soviet Union as a survival of the Middle Ages which has served as an instrument for the oppression of the working masses." This means virtually a boycott placed upon all religions by the Soviet Union.

But God says that He has a controversy with the nations. Why? From the days of Constantine to our own day God has been so grossly misrepresented by those professing to be His friends that as Jesus says, "Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn."

A scripture I have often pondered over is Psalm 9:17: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."

Ah, Gomer, and all your bands! do you not hear this loving God speaking, "And all the nations that forget God"?

Under the surface of society there are smoldering the elements which under favorable conditions will break out. As Peter says, "The heavens (governments) and the earth (society), which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

To point out how surreptitiously this error is now working, creating a spirit of universal discontent, I will quote a paragraph from the foreword of one of the present "best sellers," Big Town, by Philip McKee: "You look back upon the mess of the World War. No one tries much any more to make a thing of glory out of that. They keep still. Were the boys who went into it a mess? Hardly. They did a job they were asked, urged, begged to do, a dirty ugly killing job. They got nothing much out of it. Some of them found a few comrades they can remember with pleasure."

"I have given the best of myself here, the fire and fineness of my youth. I marched and fought through filth and dirt, hoping to come out into the light. You said I would. You said that. What I got was increased darkness. Now they are rigging the game to do it again. You watch. They'll do it again. They'll do it to my son. . . . We are going into a time of deeper discussion than men in America have ever known. We are going into a time like the pre-Civil War days. I'm no prophet. I don't know when it will come, what will touch it off. It's coming. I've faith in its coming. It is going to cut across everything, tangle everything. There will be questions asked, questions and more questions. There will be toys taken away from children. They'll cry."

"It's coming."

"The machine has made a new world for men. It has made new towns, new cities. Here's one. You wait. You will see presently what a tangled strange time there will be, in the great cities, in the little places, in the Big Towns."

Recently I read in The Empire News of November 16 this startling statement:

"PROPHET OF WAR

"CERTAIN AS ANYTHING HIDDEN FROM MAN

"While you are talking,' declared Mr. G. K. Chesterton, speaking at Liverpool, 'a new war will come suddenly.

"It will come like a thunderbolt, and from a quarter you know nothing about—Poland. Russia will attack Poland. That is almost as certain as anything connected with the future that is hidden from man.

"Russia will be the aggressor. She will declare war upon the people with the frontier laid down by the Treaty of Versailles. It is coming very soon. Poland will fight to the last man, and there are a very great many men to fight.

"Some base people might advocate that Britain should stay out of any coming European trouble and profit by staying out, but,' he said, 'I don't think we could keep out of it. I doubt in the long run if it would stop short of bombs on London.'"

Now read 1 Thessalonians 5:3. This is in harmony with Chesterton's thought.

In conclusion I will quote from Ludwig of his impressions while on a tour through Egypt: "Among such people, unawakened slaves, nine-tenths of them peasants, there are obvious possibilities for communist propaganda, seeing that the communists, also, favor a social change, untempered by transitional stages. The authorities in Cairo are terribly afraid of the Red Spectre, which stalks there unseen. Already, we may surmise, the message, coming by way of Asia, must have crossed the ditch of Suez. In this part of the East there is but one barrier against the advance of the Muscovite doctrine which has made victorious progress in Asia—the barrier of the Islamitic faith. Kismet!

"All that happens, happens according to the will of Allah, so why kick against the pricks?

"England showed the wisdom of the Serpent, the wisdom of the Vatican, when she introduced so-called popular education beside the Nile. Schools have been built, but there has been no reduction in the number of illiterates.

"Lord Cromer, having due regard to London's sensibilities, wanted to diffuse a knowledge of Christ and the English language. Kitchener's administration rescued the peasants from the clutches of the usurers and the rich farmers. Since the English became supreme in Egypt it has, for the first time, become possible for the son of a fellah to be a lawyer and a party leader—as was Zaghlul, who hated England. Nothing has been done by the British to awaken the fellaheen from their glorious torpor, for (working with Levantine subtlety) it is easier to come to terms with a few hundred pashas in Cairo, men interested in cotton and in political advantage, than with the enlightened strength of a population of twelve millions. Egyptian society still resembles a pyramid. Thousands of stones, assembled by slaves, are built up into a broad-based structure towering to a truncated point.

"This last is a platform from which a mere handful of persons can gain a pleasant outlook on life. Within the building is hollow: and there, for centuries upon centuries, a king's mummy has been crumbling into dust."

Ludwig then points out how Britain will, or intends to dam both the Blue and White Nile for the purpose of exploitation. This is arousing the enmity of the Egyptians, who for a way of deliverance from this thralldom will appeal to the Soviet power and thus fulfill primarily Ezekiel 38:8-13.

"TURN UNTO ME, SAITH THE LORD OF HOSTS, AND I WILL TURN UNTO YOU, SAITH THE LORD OF HOSTS."—ZECHARIAH 1:3.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

"Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Hebrews 9:28.

CHRIST told His disciples of His second coming on the last night before His crucifixion. He said, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14:1-3. His love for them was so great that although He was very sorry to leave them His greatest thought was that He would come again and deliver them from all sin, sickness, and death.

Why is Christ coming again? The first reason is to set up God's kingdom. Christ was the Seed of David, and the throne of David was promised to Him (Luke 1:31-33). Christ, David's Seed, was to rule over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. We know that unless Christ does come we have no hope for any blessing beyond the present life; therefore, one other thing Christ is coming for is to resurrect the dead (1 Corinthians 15:22, 23; 1 Thessalonians 4:16). The earth will be restored to its Edenic purity (Acts 3:19-21; Revelation 21:4, 5). So we know that if we are faithful we shall have no sickness; for what pleasure would we have in the next life if we did not have health?

When is Christ coming again? When the Jews return to their homeland and reestablish Jerusalem, He shall come. Matthew 25:31 says, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." So He will set up His kingdom when He comes the second time. At His appearing every eye will see Him, and all the dead will hear His voice. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice."—John 5:28. If this is true, then how can the popular theory be correct that we get our reward at death? Who would be in the graves to hear His voice? Also, how can we believe we shall go to heaven (if faithful) when the Bible plainly teaches that Christ's kingdom will be on the earth?

Will Christ's second coming be literal? Acts 1:11 says, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Christ told his disciples in Luke 24:37-39 that a spirit has not flesh and bones as they saw Him have. He showed them His hands and His feet, and they believed that He was the Christ, and not a spirit. When He comes, we shall be like Him.

Although Christ's second coming will be glorious for some, it will also be an unhappy time for the rest. Revelation 6:15-17 says, "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" We know that His coming is near. Let us watch and pray always, for we know not at what hour He may come.

YE NOBLE'S RUBBER HEELS

Ye Noble of Olde: There, just so. A graceful bow, a pleasant voice, and quiet clothes that offend not my Sovereign's eye. He has been so kind to me that I want to show my appreciation. I know he likes it done that way.

The Modern Berean Noble: I once thought that I would be frightened to death if the Lord were in the same room with me. But since I have learned to know Him, to experience His presence and His goodness, I feel quite at ease because I love Him. But because I love Him, I want to make a pleasing appearance to Him. Most of all the Lord wants us to have on "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

MAKING A GOOD BEGINNING

"Yoo-hoo, Doubles," called Freddie, in front of the twins' house the morning after New Year's Day. "Come on out with your sleds."

Jimmie and John, in the hall putting on caps and coats, rushed out to answer the summons. Coasting was just perfect, and many vacation hours had been spent on the long hill just outside the town.

"But we haven't got our chores done yet," said John. "We've got to split the kindling for morning, carry out the ashes, and sweep the porches."

"Aw, you can do them this afternoon. We'll come back a little early," argued Freddie. "The boys are all ready to go."

"Let's do it just this once," insisted Jimmie. "It won't hurt anything."

John was on the point of yielding, when he remembered once before that they had put off their chores till afternoon, and they seemed twice as hard to do and took so much more time.

"Nope, we can't do it; we got to do our work first and then we'll be over," he declared.

Reluctantly Jimmie followed his leader, John, round to the back porch, while Freddie went on down the street, his sled trailing after him.

"What you want to be such a goody-goody for, anyway?" asked Jimmie.

"Just 'cause it's easier to do our work now than after we've been coasting a couple of hours. And besides, remember what Mr. Parker said after class last Sunday about making a good beginning?"

"Yes, but he was talking about Jesus. You know, He is to be the King in God's kingdom, and He can do any way He wants to," returned Jimmie.

"Sure, He can, but He doesn't want to do any way but the right way. You know our teacher said His life is an example for us to use in our life," countered John.

Harmony restored between the nine year olds who could not be parted in work or play, the chores were done with their usual neatness and promptness. And down the street two more sleds went to join the fun on Liberty Hill.

Returning promptly on the shrill whistle of the factory at noon, whom did the boys see but Uncle John just getting out of his car to enter the house. He spied his favorite nephews down the street and waited for them.

"Wonder if two boys I know don't want to go with me out to the country this afternoon and help fix up the shack so we can go out later in the week for a few days?" Uncle John announced at the dinner table.

"You bet, we do," chorused the boys together, for an afternoon with Uncle John was just about the finest thing they could imagine. And it proved to be fully up to their expectations.

Uncle John had dandy tools, and he didn't mind a bit letting the boys use them, so that even if it was work, when you were with him it seemed like play.

Two tired boys, discussing the day as they usually did when getting ready for bed, decided that Jesus' life wasn't so different after all from theirs that they couldn't use it for their example.

"You know, Jesus was tempted to do just as He pleased when He started out to do God's work, but He didn't give in," said John, recalling the lesson of the Sunday before.

"And He had a fine ending to His day, too, 'cause it says angels came and took care of Him," answered Jimmie. "Guess His way is the best."

LESSON 2. — January 8, 1933

JESUS BEGINS HIS WORK

Mark 1:12-20

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 11:1-9

GOLDEN TEXT

The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1:15.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus Begins His Work.

Aim: To lead the pupil to believe the gospel as taught by Jesus and to become His follower.

I. Preparation for Service. (V. 12, 13.) The temptation of Jesus established a common understanding, a point of universal human contact with all men of all ages. He was tempted by hunger, pride, and worldly ambition "in all points . . . like as we are." And "in that he hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted."—Heb. 4:15; 2:18. Having passed through a similar experience, Jesus understands our fleshly inclinations and weaknesses. To be successful fellow-workers with Him we, too, must take into sympathetic account the life-problems of those whom we would win for Him. Sympathy, encouragement, and love will draw men to Christ; while censure and condemnation will embitter and harden them.

II. Speaking for God. (V. 12, 13.) Jesus was the Voice of God. He spoke God's words, and not His own. (John 14:10.) He added nothing to the message He received from the Father. He placed no interpretation upon it. It was a most simple announcement: "The kingdom of God is at hand." For those who heard it, it had but one meaning: the kingdom of Israel, which they knew as the kingdom of God, was about to be reestablished upon the earth. That comprised the gospel by which Jesus would induce men to repent. The same gospel remains today "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Romans 1:16.

III. Fishers of Men. (V. 16-20.) There is peculiar significance in the fact Jesus selected so many fishermen to be His apostles, His "sent ones." These men were familiar with the process of casting a net into the sea and gathering every kind of fish. Matt. 13:47. Their work among men was to be of the same nature. It was not for them to choose where the work should be done or to select some as fit for salvation. They had but to cast the gospel net into the sea of humanity, accept all whom the Father's love and truth might draw unto Him and count them worthy for Christ's sake.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Once started, the Savior immediately applied Himself to the task assigned Him by the Father. He allowed nobody or any circumstance or condition to deter Him from the line of duty. What a wonderful example of true discipleship and faithfulness! His first work was the conquering of self over sin. He had to triumph over the enemy before He could personally head the forces of righteousness in that grand struggle for ultimate supremacy and the complete annihilation and destruction of sin and its full results. He conquered! Not alone, but with and by the aid and strength of the Father when the "angels ministered unto him." His first great victory over sin forever set at rest any doubt as to the outcome of an individual's fight against the enemy when trusting in and depending upon the Father. There can be only one result, and that is VICTORY. We need have no fear of temptation or what the enemy can do to us, for "if God be for us, who can be against us."

Loyalty to the Father means a triumph absolute.

He

- was called to duty;
- answered the call;
- met the enemy;
- conquered;
- now reigns as Victor.

His duty was far-flung in its scope. It covered the earth and touched every human being. What an immense task, what a noble work! His call, triumph, and victory were but the beginning of thousands of others. Will we hear, obey, and triumph in the call?—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark 1:15.

Our Lord's ministry was fourfold. He first preached the kingdom, then He preached the King. Following that He preached the rejection of the King, then the rejection of the kingdom. As Jesus is just beginning His work in this lesson, He teaches that "the kingdom of God is at hand." In other words, He is telling them that the time is nearing when the kingdom is to be established.

He teaches repentance and belief in the gospel as preparation for that kingdom. Only six verses in Mark are given to His teaching the kingdom. The other Gospels give considerably more about it. The kingdom is a very important topic and should be taught as Christ taught it. Repentance and belief in the gospel go hand in hand with the subject of the kingdom. We should follow our Savior's example in teaching them.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT Jesus Facing His Task

What was Jesus' great task (Matt. 1:21; John 10:10)? To whom did Jesus first go (John 1:11)? Did not the Jews have the promise of life under the law (Gal. 3:21)? Were the Jews under sin as well as the Gentiles (Rom. 3:9, 10, 23)? What was the condition of the Gentiles (Eph. 2:12)? Would it not have resulted in great publicity for Jesus to have cast Himself down from the temple in the sight of all the people as Satan wanted Him to do? Why did He not do it (Matt. 4:7)? Why did He not accept the offer made to Him by Satan (Matt. 4:8-10)?

Was either of the two methods suggested by Satan in harmony with God's method of introducing Christ? What was God's method (1 Cor. 1:21; Mark 1:10, 11)? How did Jesus decide to introduce His work (Luke 8:1)? Was Christ "showing" the glad tidings of the kingdom of God when He performed miracles? Which would really influence toward God the more, sitting on a throne in pomp or cleansing a leper? Could Christ have accomplished His God-given mission by accepting world rulership at that time? What introduction did John give Jesus (John 1:29-36)?

INTERMEDIATE CLASS Making a Good Beginning

When a new president is elected by the people of our country, as soon as he takes office, he selects men to assist him. His cabinet, it is called; and there are ten departments in it, with an able man at the head of each department. The office of Secretary of State is considered the highest honor, but all receive the same salary—$15,000 per year. Today we are studying about One who is greater than any president and about the men He chose to assist Him at the very beginning of His work. All of you boys and girls, I hope, study your Bible lessons during the week. You would not think of going to school each day without looking at your lessons, would you? Your Bible lessons are even more important. Discuss in class why that is true.

In this greatest cabinet that was ever selected who was the One who did the choosing; who were the first four chosen? Why do you think Jesus chose such simple men as fishermen for helpers? Did they hesitate when called? Most of the apostles came from the region of the Sea of Galilee. Find out all you can about this country and be able to draw a simple map of it.

Special problem: What pay did the men receive who were chosen to assist Jesus? Perhaps you can find the answer in Matt. 19:27, 28 or in Luke 22:30. John 12:26 tells us the reward that will come to us, also, if we serve Jesus.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

HOLBROOK, NEBRASKA

Sunday evening, Dec. 18, closed the series of evangelistic meetings conducted by Bro. F. L. Austin at the Church of God in Holbrook. His theme throughout the series centered around the following: Give honor and praise to God and to His Son Jesus Christ; back to the Bible; and what it means to be a Christian. We of the faith feel that we were greatly strengthened and encouraged by his work among us.

During the week Mr. Virgil Clarkson came out and took his stand for Christ. We feel that there are several others contemplating this all-important step. May God guide them aright and keep us one and all faithful to the end.

Mrs. Eva Phelps.

HUGHES - BURDICK

On December 6, 1932, Thelma M. Burdick, youngest daughter of Myrl Burdick, Cambridge Springs, Pa., was united in marriage to Ivan S. Hughes, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John E. After the impressive ceremony the bridal party returned to the home of the groom's parents, where a number of relatives and friends were gathered for the occasion and supper.

The bride and groom expect to visit relatives and friends in Indiana, after which they will be at home at the groom's parents' residence. The groom will be remembered as the brother of Mrs. Irvin L. Ferguson.

PROPHECY AND THE NEW YEAR

With each annual reversal of the wheel of time we draw one year nearer the realization of our eternal hopes. As the new year dawns we are impressed with the thought that perhaps before the next cycle is completed our Lord will have called His own to meet Him in the air. We trust that this may be true.

But whatever the outcome of the year may be, we know that the advent of Christ is drawing very near and that we should be doubly interested in the wonderful happenings around us. To what better purpose, then, could we devote our New Year's edition of The Restitution Herald than to pointing out the meaning of some of these events!

May God help us all to be watchfully prayerful as we await the glad day of eternal rejoicing.

ALMA MARY HALL

Alma Mary Hall was born in Astoria, Oregon, March 20, 1889, and fell asleep in Jesus at Lincoln, Nebraska, about midnight, December 2, 1932, after about two years of illness from cancer. The malady brought her but comparatively little intense pain except during the last few days.

During the two years Alma's heart and mind were so stayed on Jesus and His wisdom and love that her mind was always at peace. No one who did not know would suspect that the doctor had told her there was no help for her. She kept up her work at the office up to within a few days before Thanksgiving, and her life in the home was normal and happy.

From early childhood Alma's life was surrounded by the gentleness and love of the Christ's influence. Her father and her grandfather were both ministers of the Congregational Church; and her mother is a loyal member of that church in Lincoln, where Alma also held membership until about seven years ago, when she caught a clearer vision of Jesus as Savior, through her office friendship with Sr. Jennie Stowe. She was baptized in Holbrook, Neb., by Bro. J. E. Cowles and has since identified herself with the Church of God. This break with old beliefs and ways brought heartaches both to herself and her family, but her loyalty to truth as she had been permitted to see truth and her gentle firmness are even now bearing witness to the larger vision of Jesus' saving power that had come to her through her earlier beliefs. And how that vision broadened even for Alma during those seven years! And how she rejoiced in the wonderful and complete power of Jesus to save His children, rejoiced even in the depths of His love and wisdom that withholds blessings so earnestly prayed for. It was this confidence that gave her peace and strength.

The minister of the Congregational Church, Mr. Irvin Ingles, spoke words of comfort to friends and relatives; and Mr. C. F. Stark of the Christian Missionary Alliance in Lincoln offered prayer. Alma and Jennie had been attending the Christian Missionary Alliance services, where they could hear often about the soon coming of Jesus and His power as Savior. Mr. Ingles spoke of the influence that Alma's life and faith had had upon his own, and upon the young people with whom she worked so faithfully. Surely even after she had left his fold he had felt that influence; and it will yet bear clear testimony for Jesus, bringing him and others to a fuller understanding of the Christ to whom they look for salvation.

Alma leaves a kind mother, Mrs. Charlotte L. Hall of Lincoln; two sisters, Mrs. Arthur Bartlet of San Antonio, Texas, and Alta, a twin, of Lincoln; and three brothers, Geo. W. Brooks of Allentown, Pa., and Phillip and Calvin of Lincoln; and many friends in the Church of God and elsewhere to await her resurrection at the return of Jesus.

Alta King.

SARAH S. LOGAN

Mrs. Sarah S. Logan, age 77, wife of Sylvester S. Logan, passed away at her home in Plymouth, Indiana, on December 14, following a long illness. She was born in Summit County, Ohio, June 6, 1855, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harris Yearick, who moved from Ohio to Indiana when she was quite young. She was united in marriage to Sylvester Logan, November 21, 1875; and during all that time they resided in and near Plymouth.

Besides her husband she is survived by one brother, Calvin Yearick of Plymouth. Preceding her in death were her two parents, two brothers, and two sisters.

She had been a faithful member of the Church of God of Plymouth for several years and previous to that was a member of the Antioch church south of Plymouth.

Her life was full of thoughtful service for others; she was of a strong religious nature and a great lover of her friends and her home. Although impaired in health, she remained active in her church duties and love of God; and her last work of love was in gathering with her friends of the Relief Circle and helping to work for the needy, and in this way she exemplified her true Christian character.

She now sleeps in Jesus, waiting for the coming day of hope when she shall stand with her loved ones on the glory crowned heights of God's eternal mountains, when earth shall wear her bridal robes and be wedded to the glories of eternity.

Funeral services were held in the Church of God by J. H. Anderson; and burial was made in the Buck cemetery.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MARK

As we are entering upon a six-months' series of lessons on the life of Christ based entirely upon the record of Mark, we will be interested in learning something of the human side of the Book and its author.

Dr. Marvin R. Vincent, D. D., in his "Word Studies in the New Testament," has given us some helpful information concerning this Gospel, from which we gather the following facts.

"Mark the Evangelist is, by the best authorities, identified with John Mark, the son of Mary . . . He was a cousin of Barnabas, and was, from a very early period, the intimate friend and associate of Peter (Acts 12: 11-17), who affectionately refers to him as 'my son' at the close of his first epistle. The general opinion of the fathers, as well as that of modern authorities, is that Mark drew the great mass of his materials from the oral discourses of Peter.

"The characteristics of Mark's Gospel are justly regarded as indicating the influence of Peter. . . The traces of Peter's quick perception and dramatic and picturesque power are everywhere visible in Mark. While Matthew fully records the discourses of our Lord, Mark pictures His deeds. Mark's is, therefore, pre-eminently the pictorial Gospel—the Gospel of detail."

The time of the writing of this Gospel is not certainly known, but it is supposed to have been produced between the years 56 and 63 A. D. It is generally conceded that it was written at Rome.

THE BOOK OF EXODUS

The book of Exodus takes its name from the principal subject of which it treats, the exodus of the children of Israel from Egypt.

Among many valuable features the book contains, none is of greater interest than the internal evidence it affords of its own inspiration. So logical and natural is the story it tells, and so rich in detail are the happenings recorded, there can be no doubt but that the events narrated were witnessed and experienced by the writer of the book. In support of this view we have the testimony of Moses himself in Exodus 24:4, where it is stated that "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments" which Jehovah had revealed to him concerning the children of Israel and their service before Him.

"PRESENT CONDITIONS IN THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY"

Such is the title of a timely little work by Elder J. H. Anderson on the "Cause and the Remedy" of present world-wide distress and perplexity. It is a booklet of 24 pages, envelope size, that is priced at ten cents per copy, postpaid. It may be secured from the author, J. H. Anderson, Michigantown, Indiana.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The Dixon Sunday School presented a pleasing Christmas pageant last Sunday, December 18, and in addition gave a general program suitable to the occasion on Christmas Day.

In order that the entire working force might enjoy a full holiday on Monday after Christmas we closed our forms on Saturday. The result is that some few items of church news may be carried over to next week's issue.

We rejoice to learn of the degree of success that attended the special effort put on at Holbrook, Neb., recently under the leadership of Bro. F. L. Austin. One person united with the Lord for eternity is an accomplishment worth a lifetime of effort.

The Church of God Sunday School in Oregon, Illinois, continues to maintain its position practically at the top of the list of local churches in attendance and general interest. More than sixty per cent of the pupils come from homes where the parents are not connected with the church. The regular attendance is from one hundred twenty to one hundred twenty-five.

Several of our Sunday schools are conducting teacher training classes for the more thorough preparation of Sunday school teachers. This is a most commendable step. No educational work is more important—none so important, in fact—as that of the Sunday school and church, and those who are to engage in such sacred service should be carefully trained in their duties.

A group from Oregon drove to Rockford Friday night to attend the Christmas program of the Rockford Sunday School. The Sunday school there is composed in part of the children from an orphans' home. The manner in which those fatherless and motherless little folk entered into the spirit of the occasion was most noticeable. The program itself was well presented and indicated much careful and patient work on the part of the teachers.

So much material awaits consideration on the subject of Russia from a prophetic standpoint that we hope to issue another special number in the future devoted to this major division of prophecy. In the present paper we but touch lightly upon some of the most important phases of the subject. Watch for the next Russian number.

The pastor of a Baptist church in central Illinois writes: "My attention has been directed to a copy of your Sunday School Quarterly, and I find a number of our scholars are interested in securing them for study." In the same mail we received an order from his Sunday school for twenty-five copies. We trust they will prove as satisfactory to this school as they have to others.

We wonder if all were as deeply impressed with the spirit and sentiment of the brief editorial on the Berean page last week as we were. It seemed to breathe the very spirit of joyous Christmas time, overflowing with hope and gladness; and like John 3:16 it touched on every phase of the glorious work of Jesus Christ.

"THE DESTINY OF RUSSIA and Signs of the Times" is a cloth-bound volume of 96 pages by that able expounder of the prophets, W. H. Wilson, deceased. While this excellent work was written some years ago and before the recent startling developments in the north, nevertheless it is still of great value to the student of the Bible. The price postpaid is 25 cents.

THE RUSSIAN SIGN

AMONG the excellent smaller works treating of the signs of the times, none will be found more interesting and suggestive than a little book entitled, "What of the Night," by Dr. Arthur I. Brown, published by Toronto Gospel Tabernacle, 22 Kendal Ave., Toronto, Ontario.

In a brief division of the work devoted to Russia, under the subtitle, "The Russian Sign," the author says:

"In some respects this is the most significant and convincing of all. Ezekiel 38:1 states: 'And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal (Moscow and Tobolsk) and prophesy against him, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal . . .

'Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them . . . Gomer and all his bands; and many people with thee.'

"Here is Russia with her allies, or it may be, only some of them—Germany, Turkey, Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya,—'and many (other?) people.'

"On the other side of this tremendous battle of Armageddon are ranged, 'the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof,' and 'Sheba and Dedan.'

"The 14th, 15th, and 16th verses are full of import.

"'In that day when my people Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it? And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, . . . and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.'

"The 11th and 12th verses give the cause of this invasion by Russia of Palestine:

"'And thou shalt say, I will go up . . . to take a spoil.'

"The prize will be the inexhaustible riches of the Dead Sea, literally billions of dollars' worth, a wealth just recently discovered.

"Tarshish and the nations which have sprung from her, include Great Britain and her allies, along with the United States. Sheba and Dedan include Iraq and Mesopotamia, countries which have just concluded alliances with Great Britain.

"The stage is set almost perfectly at this very moment, the alliances mentioned in this startling chapter have been effected. A short time ago, Turkey concluded a 'Treaty of Amity' with Russia, and Germany's close association with the enemy of God is well known."

Apropos to Dr. Brown's last reference to the relation Germany is to bear to Russia it is interesting to note that Maxim Litvinov, Soviet Russian foreign commissar, called on Chancellor Kurk von Schleicher in Berlin on December 19, seeking an extension of credits advanced by Germany and also seeking to finance new purchases of machines and industrial products. According to newspaper reports a semi-official communique was issued after the meeting in which it was said that the conversations of the statesmen showed that "both governments think alike on all important common problems."

Dr. Brown continues:

"Ethiopia, Persia, and Libya, are all under the influence of Russia and ready when the time arrives to take their places in the final conflict.

"Russia openly and blasphemously is defying God. She is making great preparations for the impending cataclysm. She comes from 'the north parts,' in 'the latter days,' at a time when the land of Israel has been brought back from the sword, and returned Jews gathered out of many nations, are dwelling confidently among the hills of Palestine.

"The last detail of this picture is now completed, and, if space permitted, much could be written regarding these most interesting developments. The aim of (the author), however, is not to go into detail, but simply to point out in broad outline the unique and startling developments of scriptural predictions, pointing to the imminence of the Lord's return."

HE WHO at the prospect of suffering or ridicule or embarrassment or disadvantage shrinks from his Christian duty, by that much draws back from his Savior.—F. L. A.

PRESENT CONFLICT

O Europe, Mother Europe! why do you stand today
 With bristling steel and iron front in war's accursed array?
 Why roar your thundering forges, but not to shape the plow?
 Must war's infernal horrors hang forever round your brow?
 Where rolls the icy Neva, where flows the classic Rhine,
 Where Norway lifts her granite brow and shakes her mountain pine,
 Where toils the Finnish peasant on Bothnia's rugged shore,
 And where the brave and light-haired Dane pulls manfully the oar,
 There's sound of coming conflict, as when November gales
 Burst from the icy mountains where Winter trims his sails
 And sends his fleet forerunners, and bids his trumpets blow,
 Before he hurls his shot of ice and musketry of snow.
 The Russian bear is growling on his wild Tartar plains,
 And screams the Austrian eagle from bleak Carpathian chains,
 And France, like couchant tiger, lies ready for the spring,
 With glaring eyes that never leave the German eagle's wing.
 From where the lively Belgian toils ever at his loom;
 From where the sturdy Hollander keeps eye on dyke and flume;
 From Spain's ancestral castles; from everlasting Rome;
 From where the Turk grasps lance and sword to guard his father's home;
 From where the Greeks are stirring, with old ambition's power,
 Where bold Bulgaria trembles with each succeeding hour;
 From where the brave Swiss peasant keeps well his mountain wall;
 From our old Mother Britain, the bravest of them all;
 Comes news of coming conflict and marshalling of men,
 As if our Mother Europe, mad with maternal pain,
 Had in her womb a demon, who, when he has had birth,
 Will let infernal furies forth upon our hapless earth.
 O Thou, before whose presence the trembling nations stand,
 What hidden purpose hast Thou, what awful work at hand?
 Must Earth's foundation tremble, and hell her furies bring,
 For man's great final trial ere the coming of the King?—Selected.

Why I Think the Coming of Christ Is Near

By Norman John McLeod

PRETTY generally do we agree that just preceding the return of Christ to the earth will come a great war that will eclipse all others in intensity. Things, therefore, which would indicate that that great struggle is near would also indicate the near approach of the greater event beyond. Let us consider some things in the present economic, political, and military situation that would point to the nearness of war.

Perhaps the most menacing and spectacular feature of recent times is the rise of Japan. From an insignificant island empire to be considered by nobody she has risen to the point of eminence of one of the great powers. Relatively there are in the world Great Powers, Second Rate Powers, and Third Rate Powers. Of Great Powers there are three at the present time: Great Britain, the United States, and Japan. The Second Rate Powers are such as France, Italy, Russia, and possibly Germany. The Third Rate Powers are such as Poland, Yugo-Slavia, and Roumania.

Nowhere is Japan's rise so spectacularly shown as in naval ratios of the Great Powers. During the World War of 1914 Great Britain must needs have a friend in the Far East to protect her long sea lanes leading thence. She could not be busily engaged in Europe and at the same time send her fleets to guard the transportation of Australian and other troops to France. Furthermore, India needed protection. Very striking is the fact that in 1902 was created the Anglo-Japanese Alliance at the same time an agreement was made among Great Britain, France, and Belgium for the landing of troops in the latter country in case of a German invasion. The stage thus was set early for the war of 1914. Japan was given a free hand in the Pacific Ocean during the war, much to the chagrin of Uncle Sam. In 1917, however, when the United States came into the war, the Lansing-Ishii agreement settled those difficulties, but paved the way for worse ones. It gave Japan and China the excuse to think that the United States and Japan had agreed to Japanese aggrandizement in China.

When the United States failed to ratify the Treaty of Versailles and the League of Nations covenant, many things were left that needed settlement. Among these were the position of Japan in Asia, especially Manchuria and Shantung, and the naval ratios of the Great Powers. At the Washington Conference of 1921 the question of the limitation of naval armaments was uppermost. As a result of that conference Great Britain was to have the ratio of five tons of ships to the United States five and Japan three. But many things did not remain settled about that agreement, and in accordance with the Covenant of the League of Nations the three Great Powers met in Geneva in 1927 in a futile attempt to limit naval armaments. At that conference Japan insisted on a 7-7-5 ratio instead of the 5-5-3 ratio of the Washington Conference. In 1929 at London Japan secured a 10-10-7 ratio. Now, on the eve of a new conference Japan announces that she wants a 10-10-9 ratio.

But these ratios do not tell the whole story. The United States has never built up to her full strength granted at the London Conference and, therefore, does not possess ships in the ratio agreed upon there. Japan is well on her way to the proposed ratio of tonnage, while the United States has not built up to her old ratio. Then, when length of coast line to be guarded and sea lanes to be kept open are considered, Japan has far the greatest navy of the three.

When we look at these facts alone, there seems little cause for alarm except when we review the things that took place before the war of 1914. Time after time there was trouble between Great Britain and Germany in regard to relative naval strength; the pacifists tried to quiet the people by saying that there was no danger of war between the two. But if we know that the Hague Conferences were failures because Great Britain would not allow Germany to build up a "dangerous strength," we see how the newer race will end. From that point of view the great war between Japan and her enemies cannot be far away; July, 1933, is the time that Japan expects to have her navy “Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.”—1 Timothy 4:13.

The Editor's Prayer

WE REALIZE, our Father, that the events of the future are as fully known to Thee as are the happenings of the past. Therefore we come in our human weakness asking Thee to map out the course of our lives for the next twelve months in accordance with what Thou seest is for Thy greatest glory and for our eternal good. So direct us that we may avoid the pitfalls of sin and the crooked paths of iniquity and follow closely the footprints of Thy Son, which lead through the straight and narrow way to the golden portals of the Eternal City. Keep us constantly under Thy protecting care, forgive our transgressions, and strengthen us for Thy service until the Master comes. Amen.

Time

AS WE enter into a new year of grace and of opportunity, we are impressed with the sacredness and value of time. Our probationary period is short at best. We have but few years in which to gain “the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus,” and how swiftly they fly! We now are pupils in the Preparatory School of Life, engaged in striving to acquire the knowledge and the experience that will qualify us to graduate into the University of Eternity when Jesus comes.

Our time for development is not only limited by the brevity of our present mortal lives, but also by the period that will be placed upon our efforts by the coming of the Lord. “Occupy till I come” is the substance of His message to us. And the closer we draw to the day that shall reveal Him, the more diligent we should be in His service, knowing that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

How splendid it would be if we were permitted to go right on from the joyful labors of time into the still more wonderful work of eternity! Just an instantaneous transition from mortality to immortality, and then to be whisked away into the presence of our returning Lord and crowned with power and glory for the greater service that lies beyond! Such is the possibility that lies before us in the near future if we are found in Him when He comes, earnestly engaged in carrying on the task He has assigned us for today.

Ministerial Responsibility

PAUL felt very keenly the responsibility that rested upon him as a minister of the Word. He recognized the fact that he could by no possibility escape the obligation that had been placed upon him by God. “For,” he said, “though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel.”

He was further assured in his own mind that the subject matter of the gospel he preached was of vital importance. It was not for him to proclaim any religious or moral truth that contained an element of good news for those who heard and believed, but he must preach the gospel which had been revealed to him by the Lord Jesus Christ.

He could not put his own interpretation upon it—he must give it to the world exactly as he received it, without additions and without subtractions. There was but one gospel that was “the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek,” and that alone must he proclaim.

What was true in the days of the apostle is equally true today. There is but one gospel by which men and women must be saved; and that gospel must be interpreted by the Bible itself, it must be defined by Jesus who is author and finisher of the faith that rests upon it. No other authority is so great as that of the Son of God. Neither Peter nor Paul, nor any other apostle or disciple, all of whom received their instruction directly from the Lord, can be permitted to put a different construction on the meaning of the truth that saves from that placed upon it by Jesus Christ. (Of course, none of them have ever attempted to do this.) Paul clearly recognized that this was true and warned his correspondents, to quote his own words, “Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.”

The responsibility that rests upon the minister of the Word is a heavy one. He stands between God and men, between Jesus Christ and men, between salvation and men. He is the medium through which the Father reveals Himself to men and points out to them the way of life. He must limit his utterances to the plain, simple truth of the gospel as it is revealed in the Bible.

LOOKING TOWARD THE LIGHT

By Lyman Booth

THE following beautiful lines will serve as the basis of what we will endeavor to present to you in this short article.

"I asked the roses, as they grew
 Richer and lovelier in their hue,
 What made their tints so rich and bright.
 They answered—"Looking toward the light."
 'Ah, secret dear,' said heart of mine,
 'God meant my life to be like thine—
 Radiant with heavenly beauty bright,
 By simply looking toward the light.'"

Through all the realm of organic nature light is the nourisher of life, and is "indispensable to a healthy development and a persistent vitality." The chemistry of the sun transmits inorganic matter into the substances of vegetable growth; distils the fertilizing showers; vitalizes the myriad tribes of insects; evokes the songs of birds; develops in man the red blood-cells which give body to his muscles, marrow to his bones, and thought to his brain; colors the infant's cheek with the glow of health; cheers the sick with healing mercy; in short, the continuance of the physical creation, like its beginning, depends upon the word, "Let there be light." And here the analogy of the spiritual world at once suggests itself—that Christ, in bringing light to man, brings to him a quickening power, the light of life.

If life depended upon our seeing the sun, where would we be bending our eyes but yonder where the blushing dawn, breaking into streaks of gold, foretells the approaching orb of fire? If, then, we desire to see the source of light and life, where would we look but for the rising of the "Sun of righteousness . . . with healing in his wings" (Malachi 4:2)? Then we would hold up before our mental vision the one great object of faith, Jesus Christ the righteous. Then, all our exhortations and entreaties could only repeat the ancient cry, "Behold Him! see Him! our Priest, our Sacrifice." "Behold the Lamb of God which tak-eth away the sin of the world" and giveth life unto it.

John says, "The life was the light of men." Earthly light is clear and makes clear; it shines and gives forth light. In the Scriptures it is the image of Him who is holy and makes holy, who is the living One and gives life, who is truth and leads to truth. "With thee is the fountain of life, in thy light shall we see light." In Christ is the light of life; out of Christ is the night of death.

Jesus said, "I am the light of the world." Once God said, when He created all things, "Let there be light." It was the first act in that mighty drama when the curtain rose on chaos and fell on paradise. After a lapse of thousands of years, God spoke once more, saying, "Let there be light"; and this time it was a Man, a Man like other men in all that makes the sorrows and sufferings of mortal being, and yet in Him "dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

Jesus also said, "He that followeth me shall have the light of life." He was more than a teacher of truth; for he not only gave light, but was the light; more than the guide to life, for He was the light of life. Augustine said, "Light which brings other things to view." Jesus came as the light of the whole world, and not of one people or nation. Not to come forth and walk in that light is to abide in darkness. Not to come to the light will be to die in sin; to die in sin is to die without hope. If Christ does not occupy and fill the heart, the world and self will. One cannot possibly remove the darkness but by letting the light in; neither can he let Christ in except by driving self and the world out. Where this heavenly light is not admitted, depravity and darkness will reign.

Jesus is the glory of the past, the life of the present, the hope of the future, the light of all ages. He is not only the great central light of history, but the light of every soul that cometh into the world. He alone can meet our desires after truth, our aspirations after holiness, and the earnest longings of our hearts and minds

Shining

Are you shining for Jesus, dear one?
 You have given your heart to Him;
 But is the light strong within it,
 Or is it but pale and dim?
 Can everybody see it—
 That Jesus is all to you?
 That your love for Him is burning
 With a radiance warm and true?
 Is the seal upon your forehead,
 So that it all must be known
 That you are all for Jesus—
 That your heart is all His own?

Are you shining for Jesus, dear one,
 So that the holy light
 May enter the hearts of others,
 And make them glad and bright?
 Have you spoken a word for Jesus,
 And told to some around,
 Who do not care about Him,
 What a Savior you have found?
 Have you lifted the lamp for others,
 That has guided your own glad feet?
 Have you echoed the loving message,
 That seemed to you so sweet?

Oh, rise, and "watching daily,"
 Ask Him your lamp to trim
 With the fresh oil He giveth,
 That it may not burn dim.
 Yes, rise and shine for Jesus!
 Be brave and bright and true
 To the kind and loving Savior,
 Who gave Himself for you.
 Oh, shine for Jesus, dear one,
 And henceforth be your way
 Bright with the light that shineth Unto the perfect day!

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

after peace and happiness.

The children of Israel while in the wilderness had a pillar of fire to give them light by night and a pillar of a cloud to guide them by day, to lead them as they journeyed toward the Promised Land (Exodus 13:21), a fitting type of the true Light which an all-wise God has provided to guide the saints as they journey toward that eternal city whose light is the Lamb (Rev. 21:23), that city the gates of which are open day and night to receive the glory and honor of the kings of the earth, where the nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light thereof. For behold! the city bathes itself in the effulgent rays of that Light. Never will the approach of evening dim the joy of its inhabitants.

There will be no need of the sun, moon, or stars when the darkness that now "covers the land, and the gross darkness the people" shall be removed, and the Sun of righteousness is shining. What need of these when Christ Himself is there, the End of the law, the Sum of the gospel, the Desire of the saints, the Glory of heaven and earth, whom all the hosts of the redeemed worship and adore? There will be no need of the temple, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it; and where these are, there will be everlasting shining light. There nature's beauties will never fade, the quiet waters never fail. There the heavenly strains of golden harps will blend in the melody of everlasting songs of praise to Him who is the Fountain of life, love, and light.

May reader and writer be ever found abiding in the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. If growing infirmities should come upon us and waning powers enfeeble our bodies, if memory fails and vision grows dim and all earthly scenes fade from view, may the eye of faith be still looking steadfastly toward the light that "shineth more and more unto the perfect day," when Jesus, arrayed in regal splendor, will be seated on His throne.

THE REALITIES OF HIS COMING

By Mary A. Gesin

---

THE Christmas message which Brother Marsh gave his people brought most vividly before their minds not only the reality of the coming as a babe of the One whose birth we have just celebrated, but the reality of His future coming as well. The contacts we make in our business, social, and home circles are the realities of life, he declared. And God is known to us by a comparison of those same realities. We can measure God in no other way.

The purpose of Jesus' first coming was to show us the Father, and only in knowing Jesus can we come to know God. We see Jesus as an actual man, possessed of eyes that see human need, ears that hear human cries, and hands extended to bless human hearts. Thus can we visualize God as One who is possessed of the same bodily attributes.

"I love to think," Brother Marsh continued, "of Jesus as exemplifying God's love in opening blinded eyes, unstopping deafened ears, and forgiving sinful hearts." The material things which Jesus accomplished in His brief span of life were but evidence of the spiritual part of His nature. It was the things which those about Him heard and saw that gave evidence to them of God's own nature manifested in the person of His only begotten Son.

The shepherds watching on the hillside were tending literal sheep; the stars shone down on the very material rugged hills of old Judea; even the light which frightened the watchers was a light to which they were not unaccustomed, the brightness at midnight being the unreal feature of it.

The wise men, bearing material gifts, were led to an actual manger, wherein reposed a babe as real as any born today. Their eyes beheld the tiny features of the One who was born to be the Savior of men, He in whom lay all the future hope of the world.

"If His first coming to earth was real (and we know it was), His second appearance will be just as literal, just as real, just as tangible," said Brother Marsh. "Listen to the words recorded by Luke in the opening chapter of the Acts: 'And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.' He was taken up bodily, actually; a real cloud blotted the wondrous vision from before their eyes.

"'And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven,' the record continues, 'as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.' Can we doubt the reality of His coming again as we ponder on these words?"

As His first appearing was attended by strange sounds and awe-inspiring scenes, so will His second coming be marked. Paul tells us that "the Lord himself," the real, tangible Lord, "shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." We can only conclude that these words give promise of a definite, real, and actual fulfillment.

"Jesus' coming does not mean to me His approval at baptism (though He does come spiritually then); it does not mean His presence at the death bed of one of His faithful (though He assuredly sustains in that dread hour); but His coming means to me," Brother Marsh assured us, "a real, visible appearance upon earth, bestowing blessings untold upon His own, soon, very soon."

In bringing to you, my readers, a small part of the sermon which those assembled at Oregon enjoyed, my words seem most inadequate to convey our pastor's message. But if the wonder and the joy and the reality of the soon coming of our Lord and Savior seem as precious to you as they do to me, I shall not have entirely failed.

THE EARTH A DRUNKARD

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

"The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard."—Isaiah 24:20.

FROM the beginning the earth has shared the consequences of man's guilt. God has spoken, and it was true. The earth yields no fruit when man yields no obedience, is defiled when man is defiled, and is cursed when man is cursed.

We go back to that wonderful book called Genesis, the seed bed of the Bible, wherein God has planted the seed of all that will come forth regarding His great creation. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee."—Genesis 3:17, 18. God placed a curse upon the earth as well as upon man. It was man's sin and disobedience that brought forth such a curse. And Paul says, "We know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."—Romans 8:22. All this pain and groaning comes from man's sinful ways.

May we go to the history of God's people and discover His principles regarding the transgression of men. In Deuteronomy we have these eternal principles pictured to us: "Therefore thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and keep his charge, and his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments, alway. And know ye this day: for I speak not with your children which have not known, and which have not seen the chastisement of the Lord your God, his greatness, his mighty hand, and his stretched out arm." God was speaking to those who were there hearing Him, to those who knew Him to be a God of His word, to those who had seen the miracles in Egypt, the dry path through the Red Sea, and had eaten the manna which He gave. "Your eyes have seen all the great acts of the Lord which he did."

God said, therefore, they were to keep His commandments, that their days might be long in the land. For the land where they were to go was not like Egypt, that it had to be irrigated, but was "a land which the Lord thy God careth for: the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year." And, "I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil. And I will send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat and be full."

But God also said that if His people did not keep His words His wrath should come upon them and He would "shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit" and they should "perish quickly from off the good land" which the Lord gave them.

God has made this fact clear that as long as the people yield obedience to Him the earth will yield her fruit. But when man disobeys God's laws, the earth will not bring forth her fruit. Can corruption be sown and blessing be reaped?

In the seventeenth and eighteenth chapters of Leviticus have been described the exceeding wickedness and the vilest immorality of the nations which lived in the land which God promised to His people. These are God's words to Israel: "Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things: for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you: and the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants. Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments . . . that the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you. . . . I am the Lord your God."

In the twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus we find a commandment of God given to Israel. The people were ordered to keep a sabbath of years unto the Lord. They were to sow and reap for six years, but on the seventh year they were to do no work at all. The land was to rest and no seed was to be planted and no crop was to be harvested on the seventh year. Then on the forty-ninth and fiftieth years they were to rest for two years and have a great feast to the Lord. In return for obedience to this law the land was to bring forth enough to keep them in plenty over the years of rest. God even told them that they would sow on the eighth year, but their store from the sixth year would last even until the ninth year.

The children of Israel did not obey, and they were taken captive by the Babylonians, and their land was left desolate. As we are told in 2 Chronicles 36:21, the land was desolate and during this time it kept the sabbaths which the people had not kept. God kept His word, and the people were punished when they disobeyed. They were forced from their land which God had given them.

The earth mourns when man sins and reacts to his wickedness. "The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish. The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth."—Isaiah 24:4-6. That is why the earth is no better to us than it is: the curse is devouring it. Man's wickedness is defiling the very ground on which we walk. We have not yet seen the worst of what the world has gotten into, for this prophecy is not completely fulfilled. "The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed (rocked) like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and shall not rise again."—Isa. 24:20.

Then will there be a time of reckoning and judgment. "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit (dungeon), and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited (found wanting). Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isaiah 24:21-23.

After God's judgment upon the wicked we can sing unto the Lord and "say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth: the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved: he shall judge the people righteously. Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad: let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof. Let the fields be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord: for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth."—Psalm 96:10-13.

The earth has shared the consequences of man's guilt; but it will also share in the glory of the righteous, and will rejoice. May we be worthy of that day of rejoicing and gladness.

CANONIZING THE TRAITOR

A CERTAIN Mr. Blumit says, "Only a few years ago none would have thought of building a memorial to Judas Iscariot. This unthinkable blasphemy has been done with great pomp and show in order to demonstrate that Russia's thought is anti-religious, and to justify it as being in line with the misrepresentations of Christ by organized religion, and failure of mankind to follow His law of love and purity of thought. This is throwing down the gauntlet to the Christian world. The story of Judas Iscariot is so much admired in the eyes of Stalin that he is building a memorial to him.

"Judas was a traitor; he betrayed our Lord, and the idea of betraying has given fame to Judas among Bolsheviks. They are worshiping the principle of cunning, betrayal and unfaithfulness. Among other unrighteous things, Iscariotism, the Bolsheviks religion, is given the place of honor. This is not an empty show, but a hell-planned scheme which is systematically put into practice. Russian revolution does not lead, as on eagle's wings, to emancipation and freedom but to treachery and the death of Christianity. This is the Dead-Sea fruit of Iscariotism."—Selected.

MODERN PALESTINE

NO ONE talks about the "depression" in Palestine except the American tourist. Natives scarcely know what the word means. Profits of Jewish farmers who own orange groves, vineyards, or dairy farms have steadily increased since the migration of the Jews back to the country in 1919.

These are among the observations of Mrs. Barnett R. Brickner, who returned recently from a seven-month stay in Jerusalem.

"Palestine has everything this country has . . . and more," she said, "making the life there just as comfortable as it is at home.

"The only thing women don't do as much over there is play bridge," she said. "They seem to devote themselves to more worth-while occupations. They organize public kitchens for the poor.

"Women are particularly interested in education, organizing special classes for the subnormal child and helping with the progress of the schools in general.

"In some ways the schools are more modern than our own," she said. "They have nurses in constant attention and the teachers can spend more time with each child than they do in the overcrowded schools here."

From their seven months' experience in the schools there, both the Brickner children now speak Hebrew fluently and can understand practically anything that is said in that language.

Marketing in Palestine is done in much the same way as at home. The Arabs from the surrounding territory bring their products to the market place, and the housewife chooses fresh fruits and vegetables from their supply. The dairy products and oranges are purchased through cooperative agencies.

"Most of these cooperatives now have loan and saving societies connected with them," she said, "and a more recent development in agricultural cooperation is that of irrigation societies and local orange producers' cooperatives for harvesting, packing, and marketing."

Among the largest marketing organizations are the Wine Growers of Rishow le Zion and Zichrow Yakob with annual sales of about $400,000; the Pardess Cooperative Society of Orange Growers, which will market 1,000,000 cases of the fruit this year; and the Tnuva or Cooperative Marketing Association of the Jewish Agricultural Settlements in Palestine, which takes in nearly all the Jewish farmers engaged in mixed farming.

"One hears much about the lack of water in Palestine," Mrs. Brickner remarked, "but that situation is being cleared up now. Formerly, there was a scarcity of water inland.

"To be sure of being on the safe side, we always boiled the water we drank and soaked the vegetables in water to which we added a few grains of permanganate of potash, but that probably will not be necessary much longer."—The Cleveland Press.

WHY SHOULD WE TITHE?

THE Israelitish people, under the law of Moses, gave to Jehovah a tithe, or a tenth part, of all their increase. "And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is Jehovah's: it is holy unto Jehovah. . . . And all the tithe of the herd or the flock . . . the tenth shall be holy unto Jehovah." (You will notice in this text that the words "tenth" and "tithe" are used synonymously.)

But tithing did not begin with the Mosaic law. Abraham tithed long before Moses was born or the law of Moses was set up. In Genesis we read: "Melchizedek king of Salem brought forth bread and wine; and he was priest of God Most High. And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of God Most High, possessor of heaven and earth: and blessed be God Most High, who hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him a tenth of all." (In Hebrews also, the seventh chapter, the tenth that Abraham gave to Melchizedek is called a tithe.)

Jacob, too, promised a tenth to God, conditionally. Jacob was always a bargain-maker. But he evidently sensed that since he expected God to take care of him and open the way to the supply of his needs from day to day he owed God something in return. So in Genesis we find these words, "And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, and Jehovah will be my God, then . . . of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee."

There are professing Christians today who erroneously think that tithing is an institution of the Mosaic law only, and they object to it. They say: "We are not under the Mosaic law now. Through our faith in Jesus Christ we have come under grace and do not have to obey the commands of the Mosaic law." They tell us that we have no right to talk tithing to them, since tithing belongs to the Mosaic law and not to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

From the texts that have been quoted, however, you can observe that tithing was not brought into practice by Moses. It existed long before Moses' time. Still, even were it true that tithing was a product of the Mosaic law, we can easily perceive that coming under the new dispensation, the Christ's teaching and practice, would inspire us to give and to do more toward the furtherance of the Christ's truth concerning the kingdom, and not less.

If we truly are practical Christians, we certainly shall not give less than a tenth. We shall do as much as was required under the old dispensation, and we shall not stop there; we shall do much more. We need to watch ourselves that we do not let personal selfishness deceive us into using our Christian freedom for the building of self instead of entering into true spiritual liberty by refusing to let selfishness and greed have place of expression in us.

We have to watch ourselves in order to keep from talking religion without practicing it. Jesus said: "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them." In the first chapter of James we read that the man who looks into the perfect law and continues in it, being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer, this man shall be blessed in his doing.

The exact proportion that one should give is not stated specifically in the New Testament. However, giving—giving freely and gladly—is taught all through it.

Jesus said: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over . . . For with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again." He said again, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Jesus commended the widow who cast all of her living into the treasury of the temple. He would not have done so had He thought that she would lack supply by giving her all. He knew the law of giving and receiving and knew, therefore, that she would receive again in abundant measure.

Paul, in addition to much other instruction in giving, said to the Corinthians: "Now concerning the collection for the saints as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper." So we find that in the New Testament, too, an orderly method of giving is set forth. Upon the first day of the week each one was to lay by him in store as God had prospered him. He was to establish a treasury, or storehouse, wherein regularly he should put aside a share of his living that he might have his gifts ready to pass on to the saints at Jerusalem, to those who were giving their time, even their lives, to the work of ministering spiritually to the people.

Today we have our churches, our papers, our religious institutions, our ministers and teachers who are carrying on the Lord's ministry. These workers are supported by the freewill offerings of the persons to whom they minister and of the persons who are vitally interested in their work. In the minds of those persons who know that they should give, who wish with all their hearts to give justly and bountifully in order to keep the divine law of giving and receiving, these questions very often arise: "How much should I give?" "How shall I know what God requires of me in the matter of giving?"

The answer to these questions is, it seems to me: A tenth of my living is the least that I should give. It is my privilege to tithe to God now, just as in olden times it was the privilege of Abraham and Jacob and the Israelites to tithe, and just as it has been the privilege of all people through the ages to tithe. In tithing the splendid promises made to them stand true for me.

In Malachi is the command with its wonderful promise: "Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast its fruit before the time in the field, saith Jehovah of hosts. And all nations shall call you happy; for ye shall be a delightful land, saith Jehovah of hosts." But even in the face of such a promise as this, some one may say: "How can I tithe when I can hardly live on my income now? As it is, I am in debt and have to do without things that I actually need. If God would prosper me, I would gladly tithe."

If you wait until you are prospered as you wish to be, or until you feel that you can afford to give freely, you will never tithe. Waiting until one feels that one can afford to tithe is like trying to find time for God and for the study of His Word. If one waits until everything else is done, one seldom finds any time left for God. In the life of every person who is earnestly seeking spiritual understanding there comes a time when he must begin to take time for God, even if he has to let something else go undone. As a result a sense of peace and divine adjustment is established in his life and in his affairs.

So it is in giving—in tithing. The law is, "Give, and ye shall receive." You give first, and by your giving you open the way to receive. You must find something to give right where you are. If you have what seems to be but very little, do not despise it and neglect to give it simply because it is not a large amount. Give it and bless it; and blessings will return to you multiplied according to the free, abundant thought that you imparted with your gift.

If you have no money, then give of what you have—your blessing; your loving, generous thought and word; your service; or whatever it may be—and the way will unfold for you to give and to receive in increasingly larger and more manifest measure. But you must give in order to receive. There is no other way to true, abiding, joyous, and satisfactory prosperity.

I have tithed for fifteen or sixteen years, and I look upon tithing as having been a very definite means of opening my way to prosperity. Steadily my consciousness of supply and my manifest prosperity have increased since I began tithing, though I did not begin to tithe with the idea of prosperity in mind especially. Like many others, I wished to give but seemed to have very little to give. While I was praying earnestly for more money to give as offerings, the idea of tithing came to me. I began to realize that a tenth of my income, of my manifest living, was the very least that I could give and be honest with God.

So I began to tithe, although I had to exercise increased faith in God in order to do so. Demonstrations of supply began to come almost immediately. I was surprised, for I had not tithed with any thought of increased prosperity coming to me as a result. I had begun to tithe only because of my great desire to give and because of my determination to be as just to God as I knew how to be. The result of tithing, however, both in mind and in affairs, has more than assured me that sincere tithing is of God, that God approves of it, and that it brings sure returns to those who are faithful.—Theodosia DeWitt Schobert in Weekly Unity.

SORER PUNISHMENT

By R. H. Judd

THE writer would have been glad if another pen than his had answered the difficult question suggested in the above title, taken from Hebrews 10:29. He would like to state here his appreciation of the kindly response on past occasions when similar requests have been made.

The subject is by no means an easy one to express. Turning to the Revised Version, it will be observed that the passage begins a fresh paragraph at verse 26 and finishes it at verse 31, starting another at verse 32. It is, therefore, reasonable to suppose that the explanation is contained within the compass of those verses. Closer study of the passage seems to me to point out that the "sorer punishment" is first described in verses 26 and 27, then that of the law of Moses is brought forward in contrast. Thus the two words of our title in verse 29 refer back to those verses.

That there is possibility of a believer falling away, the writer is convinced. Christ Himself speaks of an unpardonable sin. That is one fact I think we must face, and this very passage in Hebrews 10:26 clearly intimates it. Thank God, I believe that the instances are comparatively rare; and Paul in his confidence of those to whom he writes says in thankfulness, "We are not of them that draw back unto perdition, but of them that have faith to the saving of the soul."—R. V.

While the writer, as far as he remembers, has not met those who are convinced that they are not among the company with which Paul associates himself, he has both read of and heard such; and that Hebrews 10:27 exactly describes their condition. (The Greek here means not only "fearful," but "terrible.")

Moses' law followed swiftly upon the evildoer, so swiftly that the witness of two of his fellow men was sufficient for its immediate execution. There was little time for reflection or remorse.

As was pointed out in a previous article, there can be no question that death (literal death) is the wages of sin; but in the goodness and mercy of God it comes to most as nature's way of closing a lifetime. In contrast, there are those of whom God says He will "make an end, yea, a terrible end" (Zech. 1:18, R. V.), and of whom it can be truly said, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Most of us have heard of and read of keen remorse previous to and at the time of death. That the "sorer punishment" occurs in the lifetime of the victim seems to be indicated by the words "fearful looking forward to (R. V., "expectation") . . ."; for he speaks of those still living.

This once more, I think, demonstrates that Scripture is its own interpreter in all doctrinal teaching. Perhaps these brief suggestive thoughts may draw forth others that may be more helpful and to the point.

I WILL DESTROY THE WICKED

By Samuel E. Haney

"I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord."
—Psalm 101:8.

THE text by Rotherham and Moffatt, respectively, reads: "Morning by morning will I uproot all the lawless ones of the land, that I may cut off out of the city of Yahweh—all the workers of iniquity"; "I will be active to wipe out all wicked natives from the land, to root out every evil doer from the Eternal's city."

In this Psalm David personifies his Son, the "greater than Solomon" as referred to in Psalm 110:1, that is, "The Lord (God) said unto my Lord (Jesus Christ), Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

In Psalm 101:1-3 our Lord identifies Himself and gives His rule of procedure concretely: "I will set no wicked (base) thing before mine eyes: I hate the work of them that turn aside; it shall not cleave to me ('they appeal not to me,' Moffatt)."

In verses 4, 5, and 7 the Lord specifies certain sins, namely, "A froward heart shall depart from me: I will not know a wicked person. Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off: him that hath an high look and a proud heart will not I suffer. . . He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight ('shall not live with me,' Moffatt)." Note Revelation 21:27. Sacred relevant comment: "For the froward is abomination to the Lord: but his secret is with the righteous. . . . These six things doth the Lord hate; yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren."—Proverbs 3:32; 6:16-19.

In verse eight the Lord determinately states, "I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord."

In referring to a number of things we unconsciously follow the Lord's rule, namely, beginning with the greatest and ending with the least important. Hence, it should appear that frowardness and pride excel. "Froward" is another way of saying "perverse, obstinately willful." And pride in its multitudinous phases accounts for many evils, self-respect, arrogance, conceit, egoism, vanity, and many other traits that are anti-Christian in spirit. These distinguished qualities of fallen nature being the most abominable of sins in God's sight, as they are the antithesis of Jesus and His apostles' characteristics, those pursuing them take precedence of God's wrath, to which the word "early" applies.

God knew when He created man just how a froward, proud heart would act under the stress of the "great time of trouble" which is now being manifested in all walks of life. Hence, God could say of this class (time being no factor: Isaiah 46:9, 10; Romans 4:17), "I will early destroy . . ." This destruction of those practicing frowardness and pride—which, correctly understood, is self-inflicted by disobedience—is quite prevalent. The number of suicides, which is constantly increasing, is but one feature of self-destruction that reminds us of what is pertinently written: "In those days men will seek death, but will not find it: they will long to die, but death flies from them."—Revelation 9:6, Moffatt. This being true, they take various means of a riddance of self and all this word implies—gas, pistol, drowning, ascending to the top floors of skyscraper hotels and jumping out of windows. Any way out when once the necessary means are exhausted, preventing a continuation of the social pace, ways, and customs of this tottering, sin-cursed world.

Were people to adjust their affairs to the inevitably increasing depressive economic conditions, thereby easing the strife and strain, they would have peaceful minds and quietude for their whole nervous system, preventing most of their physical and mental agony; for health cannot exist with a disturbed mind. And were depressed people, including too many Christians, to act thus and to devote the time they spend on self and idols to the study of God's Word, they would discover the only panacea for troubles and nerve-racking anxiety.

What a pitiable sight it is to see professing Christians suffering the consequence of disobedience, both in spirit and practice, of God's Spirit and ways! Intimating at least the possibility of—Cut off from the city of the Lord versus life eternal! Just in proportion as we separate ourselves from the world, its ways and the customs of its devotees, our contacts with God, through His Word and Spirit, increase and intensify our perspective of eternal life. Transversely, contact with the world and its "blind" dupes increase our unpreparedness for the announcement of our Lord's return and our unworthiness of citizenship in that city that by faith Abraham saw, "which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Whereas, an Abrahamic conception of this eternal "city" should cause all idols and jack-o'-lantern deceptions of this mundane life to evaporate like mist before the sun; thereby transferring all our fears and solicitude from our own hearts to the heart of the heavenly Father.

Therefore, why not let go the world and self and overcome the strife and strain that are wrecking humanity? God is able to keep that which is committed unto Him if we give Him a chance. Such a happy state of mind and heart as a sequence should make a propitious setting for the sixth verse of our lesson: "Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me." Dr. Moffatt's version is more homely and dear, "I look out for the faithful of the land, to have them at my court; men of integrity shall be my ministers."

It is glorious to be a Christian, an "Israelite indeed," these days when "men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." The world epitomizes this state of affairs by the word "depression"; more correctly, oppression, as, oppressed by forebodings, depressed by bad news. But the enlightened Christian takes an opposite view of it; he is actually capitalizing it by its clarification of the gospel and its illumination of his pathway to the kingdom of God.

Some practical demonstrations showing that "destruction" is ever a silent specter in the wake of frowardness and pride: "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall."—Proverbs 16:18. "Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy."—Ezekiel 16:49. "But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride, he was deposed ("made to come down," margin) from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him."—Daniel 5:20.

WHY I THINK THE RETURN OF CHRIST IS NEAR

built up to the strength of her newest proposal. Then let us notice some things in the local political situation in the United States that would indicate that things are quite ripe here for bringing the issue to a head, that will couple in with this situation in naval strength.

Every election in a democratic country has in it the elements of a minor political revolution. But in the United States that is particularly true. We are inclined to be very conservative and to keep one party in power for a great many years. Before the Civil War the Democratic party had one president after another elected. But with the election of the Republicans came a revolution that was truly unusual. Why this political revolution? Economic changes of a major character had taken place: in the North, industrialization; in the South, the development of the opposite kind of civilization, farming based upon slave labor. The election of the first Republican president then was more than a minor revolution, it was a major political revolution.

Then the usual sequel to revolution is war. If we go back to the French Revolution of 1789 we see the same order: economic revolution, political revolution, war. If we come back to our own country, we see that has happened several times. With the election of the first Republican president: economic revolution, political revolution, war. Then with the coming of Cleveland, the first Democratic president after the Civil War: economic depression, political revolution, Spanish-American War. Another case: came the economic depression of 1907, political revolution in the election of Wilson in 1912, war in 1917. Now we have the newest and severest economic revolution taking place, political revolution in the election of a Democratic president, and then—what?

Most people think that the Anglo-Saxon race is the most peace-loving of all races, but those are not the facts of history. Anybody who wishes to follow that subject can study the history in England of the "War of Jenkin's Ear" or the Gibraltar affair, or in this country of the aggrandizement on Mexican territory. Now with the great period of unemployment existing, what better way to use the time of idle men than to put them in the military service of their country? Just why such a scheme has not been proposed in the newspapers can easily be understood, but no doubt many an American diplomat has thought of it, especially those connected with the Morgan steel interests; the Rockefeller oil interests; the Du Pont powder interests; to say nothing of rubber and automobile interests.

These facts, coupled with the fact that the Jewish homeland is developing apace, make the Christian feel that the great struggle is not far away. The only remaining necessity is the proper alliances, offensive and defensive. These alliances we see in the making. Scarcely an issue of the various current events magazines is published that there is no mention of some new treaty of alliance. The most recent one is the Franco-Russian treaty. No doubt secret agreements wholesale exist, but just how the nations will line up need not be an entirely closed secret to the Bible student. It will be the world on one side against the Anglo-American group of nations who are in the position of supporting the Jews.

All the faith that he has will be necessary to make the Christian look on such scenes without misgivings as to his own safety. But let us take the example of Jeremiah, who endured the siege and capture of Jerusalem without suffering harm; or of the Jews, who endured the Macedonian invasions without flinching and were protected in their own cities. When we see all this coming to pass, we should feel a solemn joy in our hearts, and in the meantime: "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee."

THE USE OF THE TONGUE

We should not use our tongues:

1. To rail against anyone.
2. To speak evil of others in their absence.
3. To exaggerate in any of our statements.
4. To speak harshly to the poor or to the inferior.
5. To swear, lie, or indulge in impure language.
6. To make random and improbable assertions.
7. To speak rashly and violently on any subject.
8. To deceive people by circulating false reports.
9. To cover up lip service to the Lord.
10. To take the name of God in vain.—Selected.

"LO, I AM WITH YOU ALWAYS, EVEN UNTO THE END OF THE WORLD."

WHY THE SECOND ADVENT?

IN THE fourteenth chapter of John we find that Christ is to come again for some reason and to do some work. Yet in Matthew 28:20 He says, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Some people think this means that He is here now, but that would be a contradiction of Acts 3:20, 21. We should know what this means. If you have a friend who is starting on a long journey and you say, "I will be with you on this trip," yet you stay at home, what would you mean? Why, that you would be with him in spirit. This is surely what was meant in the above mentioned verse, for Christ has been with His people all down the ages, guiding and directing them in spirit and in truth. He has been helping the church in her troubles, but she longs for the time when His promise in John 14:3 will be fulfilled.

Some people think this text referred to the descent of the holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost; others think it meant the destruction of Jerusalem. They have overlooked the fact that in the last book of the Bible Christ still speaks of His second coming. This book was written sixty years after the day of Pentecost and twenty-six years after the destruction of Jerusalem. He that was dead and is now alive says, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me."—Revelation 22:12.

It is said that Christ returns to each convert and when all are converted, He will have come fully. But the Scriptures teach the contrary in 2 Timothy 3: "In the last days perilous times shall come . . . For men shall be lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God"; also, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Christ warns us to "take heed to yourselves lest that day come upon you unawares, for as a snare it shall come on all them that dwell on the face of the earth."

"All kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him" does not convey the thought of the first sentence in the above paragraph. Instead, it teaches us that the nations do not want Christ to come, as they would if they were converted. Some people quote Matthew 24:14, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Witnessing an accident, however, does not mean that you receive the injury; it means that you see and understand how the accident happened. The same principle applies to this verse. Though it tells that the gospel shall be preached, it says nothing about its reception.

In Revelation 20 we find that Christ shall resurrect all of the dead and judge them. Christ also says, "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." This is the kingdom and King which were promised to David's seed, and this great kingdom shall be "from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." 2 Peter 1:10, 11, tells us that this is an everlasting kingdom. James 2:5 mentions the "rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him."

Friends, if we wish to receive this kingdom we must so live that we will glorify God and fulfill our part in His plan. If we do this, we can well say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" (then the wonderful reward): "henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only; but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Charles Martin, Kokomo, Indiana.

YE NOBLE'S NIGHT AT HOME

YE ANCIENT NOBLE: Oh dear, oh dear. There are so many things to do. I will just have to do the important ones, I guess, and let the rest go. What would the king say if I should come in some day without my sword polished because I had spent all my time polishing my mirror?

THE BUSY BEREAN NOBLE: No, I cannot go with you tonight. It's my night to study the Berean lesson. No; I wouldn't slight my school teacher's assignment, and I am not going to slight my Lord's assignment. Anyway, you may get a thrill out of going there tonight, but I will get a bigger thrill by being in a group with the Lord "in the midst." I want my spiritual nature to be big and strong and healthy whenever the Lord sees it, and it can get that way only if it is fed properly with the "sincere milk of the word."

BUSY AT GREAT TASKS

WHEN we think of a great task, we generally think of a big undertaking, such as, putting up a great building for a factory or a hotel or a beautiful church. And any of these would be a great task, it is true.

In putting up buildings the workmen handle materials such as iron, stone, cement, and wood. For it is of such that buildings are made. Each material has a certain work to do, a certain part to fill in the completed building.

Jesus our Savior was busy at great tasks; but He was not working with iron or stone or wood, He was working with people. And it takes more skill to work with people than it does to work with things. It is more important, too.

No matter how great is the building men may erect, some day it will crumble away, be burned, or perhaps torn down to give place to another. But in working with people Jesus was building for eternity. For those that He healed believed in Him; and if they were faithful all their lives, He will give them eternal life when He comes again.

So, you see, in working with people Jesus was building character, happiness, love, faith, and hope. Aren't these wonderful buildings? Wouldn't you like to be able to help erect some buildings like those? You can, if you want to.

The buildings you build may be very tiny at first; but as you learn more about Jesus and follow His way in all your doings, your buildings will be larger and better as you grow older.

Let's try, each one of us, to build in those about us happiness, for one thing. We will take love for our material to build with, because it is strong, stronger than iron or stone or cement. Love can conquer everything, and we hear some folks say that it could rule the world if men would let it. Never forget that love for others comes from God, for God loves everyone.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Write, "Lesson 3," at the top of the page, and under it, "Jesus, the Great Healer." "He pleased not himself." Then draw a picture of a Jewish house, with a flat roof, and paste a picture of Jesus near the doorway. Next draw a picture of a room with a bed in it and a sick lady lying down, if you can. Just a few lines will do to represent this. In your third square draw the lady sitting up and Jesus taking her by the hand.

Now draw the outside of the house again; cut out several figures of men and women and boys and girls from old papers or magazines and paste them near the door, waiting for Jesus to come out.

For your last picture draw a little country scene—just a tree and a little hill and Jesus kneeling nearby. Below all your pictures write, "A Busy Day." Do not be afraid to try, because the more you do the better your work will grow.

LESSON HYMN

Tune—"Jesus Loves Me"

"Jesus healed the sick and poor
By His wondrous love and power;
Health and strength He gladly gave,
From all evil He would save."

"Yes, Jesus loves me;
Yes, Jesus loves me;
Yes, Jesus loves me,
The Bible tells me so."

FIND OUT:

- The names of the four who helped Jesus.
- How Jesus spent "the sabbath."
- What Jesus did for the man who interrupted the service.
- Where Jesus was a guest that day.
- How He repaid their hospitality.
- What the people of the town did when they heard about it.
- Who were healed by Jesus.
- How Jesus found strength and rest after His work.

"The Great Physician now is near,
The sympathizing Jesus;
He comes the drooping heart to cheer,
Oh! hear the voice of Jesus.

"Sweetest note in seraph song,
Sweetest name on mortal tongue,
Sweetest carol ever sung,
Jesus, blessed Jesus."

JESUS AT WORK

Mark 1:21-45

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 61:1-6

GOLDEN TEXT

My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.—John 5:17.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus at Work.

Aim: To lead the pupils to realize that the power of Jesus comes from God and that He is anxious to use it for us.

Basic Truth: "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."—Matt. 20:28.

I. The Authority of Jesus. (V. 21, 22.) Not only the chief value of Jesus' teaching, but His right and power to be the Savior of the world depends entirely upon the authority under which He worked and taught. No matter how important His teaching may be from an ethical standpoint, its greatest value is to be found in the fact that it came from God. The same is true of His miracles. To relieve suffering is one thing, but to do so by the power of God is another. The positive and assured manner of Jesus' preaching indicated that "he taught as one having authority" in Himself. He did not depend upon others for His information, but received it directly from God. Those who speak with the authority of the Bible speak with the authority of God.

II. The Promptness of Jesus. (V. 23-34.) Mark records more vividly than any of the other evangelists the promptness with which Jesus responded to every demand made upon His time and strength. He never hesitated nor put off to some future time the healing of the sick or the teaching of the multitude. He embraced at once every opportunity for service. In speaking of the work of Jesus Mark uses a word that signifies immediate action twenty-six times in his Gospel. Jesus employed every moment of His time and every ounce of His strength in the service of needy men. If we are to be faithful fellow workers with Him we must "follow his steps."

The Source of Jesus' Power. (V. 35.) The source of Jesus' power lay in His constant intercourse with God. He was as human in His bodily needs as we are. He tired as readily, both mentally and physically. The knowledge that He was the Son of almighty God was not sufficient to support Him in times of great exhaustion. But He found the strength to carry on when "he departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." In prayer we touch the hem of divine power, and our spiritual and bodily strength is renewed for further service to God and man.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

It is evident that Jesus sensed the immensity of His task by the way in which He applied Himself. Mankind was in darkness. He was the Light that was to dispel the darkness. There was no time for delay. Every moment was an opportunity; and every opportunity meant life, light, and liberty to some one or perhaps to a multitude. Time was precious and was wisely used by our great Leader. His ministry was TEACHING and DOING. His message was the gospel of the kingdom of God. His message was one of emancipation: first, deliverance from sin and its attendant evils; second, freedom from the unjust and unequal burdens imposed by an ungodly government. Had the people realized just what acceptance of the offered kingdom would have meant to them in freeing them from their oppressive burdens and the multitudinous curses of an iniquitous age, they surely would not have hesitated. Their rejection of the King, kingdom, and deliverance continued the reign of sin for another two-thousand-year period. The kingdom of God was what the people of Christ's time needed; and today, nearly two thousand years after, we need the kingdom more than any preceding generation.

The world is in a terrible condition. Suffering is coming to be universal. Taxes are taking houses which are the sum total of life's earnings and savings. The efforts of human governments to correct the evils of their own systems are proving futile and ineffective. There is only one hope, and this hope rests in the returning of the Christ and the re-institution of His earthly work. In Him rests the hope of a groaning creation. The first rejection of His work has proved to be costly and has prolonged the reign of sin, but the second effort will be gladly and heartily received.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."
—John 5:17.

Jesus was never idle. He made the most of every opportunity. He said, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."

The Companion Bible says that "hitherto" = "until now," referring to the O. T. dispensation. Now Jehovah was speaking by His Son (Heb. 1:2). Christ was given work while on earth; and nearly everything He did, if not every one, bore witness that He was sent by the Father. John had come to prepare the way for Christ, but the works that He Himself did were greater witnesses than John. See John 5:36.

The true Christian's work is something like that of Christ in that it constantly points the way to the Father and witnesses for the Son.
—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

What are some of the needs of the human race? What needs will God supply for those that are His (Phil. 4:19)? Is there any difference between need and desire? When will God not grant our desires (James 4:2, 3)? Would it be to our best interests if He would do so? Why does Jesus promise to answer our prayers (John 14:13)? Do you consider from the above texts that we would be robbing God by refusing to allow Christ to supply our needs?

What human needs were supplied by Jesus in Matt. 9:6, 7; in 9:27-30; in 9:32, 33; in 12:22; in 19:3-9; in Mark 5:22-42; in Luke 15:11-32? What were the needs of Chorazin and Bethsaida (Matt. 11:20-22)? Could Jesus supply all of our needs without teaching us the difference between right and wrong? Do people need to follow righteous paths to obtain material blessings (Matt. 6:33)? In what way do the following commandments meet human needs: Matt. 5:21-26; 5:27-30; 5:30, 31; 5:43-48? Was Jesus teaching a lesson concerning His own work when He gave the parable recorded in Luke 10:30-37?
—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Have any of you ever visited a hospital? Most of you, I am sure; but I hope you have not been a patient there. You have all watched the doctor as you stood in the hall and saw him go in one room after the other looking after the sick people. And if you have never been in a hospital, you know the doctor that comes to your house or that of your friends when some one is sick. When the doctor has helped one of our loved ones through a serious illness or fixed some one up after an accident, we think how wonderful he is; and we cannot help but love him.

Did you know that Jesus was a famous doctor when He was on earth? How was He greater than any doctor we know of now? What difference was there in His manner of healing? Why do you think He healed—for the honor He gained or the money He received? Tell about some of the different people healed by Jesus. Do you think they loved Him? When death comes into a home, is there anything more the doctor can do? What about Jesus—what could He do at such a time? What can He do even now? Have any of you ever asked Jesus to help the doctor heal some one who is sick?

Special problem: Did you ever know of a time when there were no sick people? Will there ever be such a time? Bring a verse to class that shows us that some day everybody will enjoy perfect health.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

McGINTYTOWN, ARKANSAS

This is to notify the readers of The Restitution Herald that I have moved to McGintytown, Ark., to help in our church work there. This is one of our best organized churches in the South, and some of the best people I ever met live here. I have held a meeting in McGintytown once each year for the past four years, and have baptized several during that time.

Our Oklahoma and Arkansas conference will be held at this place next summer, and we invite all to come and witness the good that has resulted from the work done here.

My new address is Greenbrier, Ark., Rt. 1.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The Christmas program which was staged at the Godwin school auditorium, drew an overflowing house and was splendidly given.

On Christmas Day, in addition to the candy treats for the children from the Sunday school, a complete surprise was experienced when it was found that Bro. Slocum had provided presents for all children who had been present twenty-five or more Sundays throughout the year.

Another welcome surprise to all was a splendid new array of knives, forks, and spoons for the church kitchen, presented by the "Beees Class." This class of active girls has been taught by Sr. Slocum. A much needed pulpit lamp was presented to the church by the pastor and wife, and the Dorcas ladies had just purchased one hundred new copies of "Gospel in Song" for church use, so it was indeed a splendid time of Christmas spirit and fellowship.

Sr. Lois Blakely is spending her vacation at home with her mother, and Mr. and Mrs. Duval (nee Margaret Lyon) spent Christmas with the Siple family.

And now we are bending all attention to the special meetings, Jan. 3 to 15. May God grant that much good may come from them.
F. E. Siple, Pastor.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM AT ELDORADO

On Thursday evening, Dec. 22, a large crowd gathered at our little church to enjoy the annual Christmas program. A beautiful evergreen tree decked with tinsel and snow lighted one side of the church.

The program sponsored by the Ladies Aid consisted of readings and special music by the children of the school. Two pantomimes, "Silent Night" and "Luther's Cradle Hymn," were very much enjoyed.

After this part of the program a very impressive scene was the presentation of a Bible to a little girl, Georgia Padgett, who has attended Sunday school with prepared lesson every Sunday last year, and she missed only one the year previous. How fine it would be if more of us could equal this record.

A treat of candy and apples was given to those taking part in the program.

Juanita Lloyd.

Here you stand at the parting of the ways; some road you are to take; and as you stand here, consider and know how it is that you intend to live. Carry no bad habits, no corrupting associations, no enmities and strife into this New Year. Leave these behind, and let the Dead Past bury its Dead; leave them behind, and thank God that you are able to leave them.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

On Friday, Dec. 23, a surprise was given our pastor, Bro. M. W. Lyon, in the church basement, in honor of his birthday anniversary. Several brethren gave short talks praising his true Christian character, his faithfulness to God, and his untiring labor of love among the brethren.

Bro. Conrad recited a poem entitled, "Our Brother," which he wrote in Bro. Lyon's honor. The poem expressed the sentiments of the entire church; for truly to know Bro. Lyon is to love him. After the recitation Bro. Conrad presented Bro. Lyon with a Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, as a gift from the church.

WE ORIGINATE LITTLE—COPY MUCH

The Exhibit Committee of the General Conference wishes all of our readers a very Happy New Year—happy in the service of the Master and in the hope of His soon return.

We want to remind you, thus early in the year, that by vote of the conference last summer the collecting of items and ideas for exhibit at the General Conference was made a permanent feature of our work.

Last year's exhibit—our first—was good, very good.

Some of the most striking and outstanding features of helpfulness to all included an attractive map of Palestine stitched by girls in a class of Sr. Briggs at Blanchard, Michigan. It cannot but be evident that any children who will devote themselves to such careful study of the map of our Savior's homeland as to enable them to execute the same in needlework, with accuracy, must leave upon their minds a lifelong impression of great value. It is hoped that numbers of Sunday schools or private classes are already profiting by this suggestion presented in sample at the "suggestion clearing house" of the General Conference last year.

Another exhibit of great worth was that by Bro. G. E. Marsh illustrating the use of a reflecto-lantern to show Bible pictures on a screen.

From Arkansas City came an exhibition of posters by which children were taught some of the simple lessons of Christian service. Mrs. A. J. Chaplin, of 702 N. B St., will probably be glad to explain them more fully to those who are interested.

For stamping memory work indelibly upon the minds of young folk, Sr. Louise Brewer of the Brush Creek (Ohio) church illustrated a most fascinating method.

Those who failed to see these exhibits cannot imagine what they missed.

Methods of accurate, detailed, and permanent records for the various activities of the church were a part of the exhibit of the Golden Rule Church of Cleveland, Ohio. These forms revealed the helpfulness of careful and proper records, and indicated their worth for those of later years.

The novel but wonderfully helpful scrapbook designed by Sr. Young of Oregon, Ill., and prepared by members of her Berean class could well be given extensive explanation that it might be copied by many; but lack of space makes it impossible to describe this and many other exhibits that were shown at the last conference.

We wish that we could mention the names of all who cooperated last year to make the exchange of working methods so valuable to the many interested visitors of the exhibit room.

We are already planning this exhibit work for the coming year, and hope in the next issue of The Herald to present a working outline for preparation of the same.

We earnestly desire that the exhibitors of last year will this year better their own marks, and that many others will engage with them in this good work.

Watch next week's Herald.

FRANK W. WILSON

Frank W. Wilson, of Kansas City, Mo., fell asleep in the Lord on Dec. 19, 1932, at the age of 79 years. He was the youngest brother of the late James Wilson, who was president of the Illinois Conference for so many years.

Bro. Wilson was laid to rest in a beautiful spot to await the resurrection call when his beloved Messiah will come to take over the government of this sin-troubled earth. This had been his hope since early youth, when he joined the church at Geneva, Ill. He, with his beloved wife, Kathrine, pondered and studied continually the prophecies and the signs of the times. She was immersed a few years ago at Los Angeles by Bro. G. E. Marsh.

Bro. Wilson leaves two sons, Frances Con-drey, of Kansas City, and Vincent, of Tuc-son, Ariz.

He rests in peace.

Leila E. Whitehead.

FRANCIS RICHARD JONES

Francis Richard Jones was born January 18, 1908, at Eagle Grove, Iowa, to Arthur M. and Genevieve Jones, and entered into rest December 24, 1932, at his father's home in Eagle Grove. Francis had been in failing health for some time, having had a fall at the age of twelve which injured his nervous system; and he gradually became more nervous and more frail. His residence has always been at Eagle Grove, with the exception of a few short stays with his mother at Fort Dodge.

On April 14, 1931, he was married at Gladbrook, Iowa, to Clara Marie Cook of Fort Dodge. To this union was born one son, Orlo Charles, who died November 29, 1932, at the age of six months. Francis did not recover from the shock and grief of losing his son and lost ground rapidly in his fight for health. His last illness was very brief, and unconsciousness mercifully relieved him from his suffering.

He is survived by his widow; his parents; one sister, Olive Burnham of Fort Dodge; one brother, Delbert of Eagle Grove. One brother, Orlo, preceded him to rest on December 28, 1931. He has also five uncles and aunts and several cousins.

Francis received all his schooling in Eagle Grove, having been especially interested in athletics of all kinds. On August 29, 1920, he was baptized at Waterloo, Iowa, into the Church of God, of which he remained a faithful member until the last.

Funeral services were held at the Wilson Funeral Home at Eagle Grove, December 26, J. W. Williams of Gladbrook officiating.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

Published by National Bible Institution
Oregon, Illinois

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resur-rection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortal-ization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Je-sus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. and Sr. Leland T. Hanson of Franklin Grove, Illinois, spent Christmas with his par-ents at Lebanon, Illinois, where they took part in a family gathering.

The Herald will now expect many scholarly articles from Bro. M. W. Lyon of Cleveland, as an indication of the benefit he is deriving from the "Unabridged" which was presented to him recently by his appreciative congrega-tion. Our columns are waiting, Bro. Lyon!

Last Sunday the Rockford (Ill.) Sunday school, which has an enrollment of about fifty, awarded pins for unbroken attendance every Sunday in the year to fourteen pupils. In ad-dition to that, one had been transferred to Oregon who was entitled to such acknowledg-ment and received his pin from that school. This is really a remarkable record for a Sun-day school no larger than the one at Rock-ford.

We are praying for the success of the spe-cial meetings which start tomorrow (Jan. 3) in Grand Rapids, under the combined leader-ship of the pastor, Bro. F. E. Siple, and evan-gelist, Bro. Sydney E. Magaw of Tippecanoe City, Ohio. Knowing the ability of both of these men to arouse interest and to carry con-viction to the hearts of their hearers we feel sure that much good will follow their united effort.

Material is coming in for our special num-ber on the Bible, while instructive articles are already on hand for our Jewish and Life num-bers. Announcement will be made in advance of the various special issues.

We heartily congratulate little Georgia Pad-gett of our Eldorado, Illinois, Sunday school on the splendid record she has made in at-tendance during the past two years. May she be able to continue without missing a single Sunday during 1933.

We deeply sympathize with Bro. and Sr. A. M. Jones of Eagle Grove, Iowa, in the loss of son and grandson so closely to each other. They have passed through much sorrow in the past year, Sr. Jones having lost her father, also, during that time. May God bless and comfort them until the Master comes.

The exhibit provided at the last General Conference of church, Sunday school, and Be-rean methods and materials was of great value from many standpoints. It was of historic worth in many instances, providing us with much information concerning our denomina-tional work in the past. But it was of special value from a practical standpoint, suggesting ways and means of increasing interest, hold-ing attention, and teaching the truths of the Bible. Be sure to read the report of the com-mittee in this issue.

THE OLD-TIME DOCTRINE OF HELL

THE following interesting reply to an inquirer who spoke of the "lulling effect of this doctrine of destruction upon the unsaved," was made by G. L. Young, in a recent issue of The World's Crisis.

"You speak of the lulling effects of this doctrine of destruction upon the unsaved. Well, I happen to know something about that. I personally was brought up in the doctrine of eternal torment. It certainly was terrifying to me; no one can know how much so. And that is all the good it ever did. It never brought me to God, nor caused me to 'flee from the wrath to come.' It was not until I was nearly twenty-two years old, and had accepted the doctrine of the final destruction of the wicked, that I gave myself to God. This is a simple statement of fact. Moreover, under the faithful preaching of coming judgment (from the Bible viewpoint) I have seen men wilt, young men in sin tremble, souls converted. No, in actual fact 'the terror of the Lord' (2 Cor. 5:11) still operates—perhaps more than a false terror would.

"But right along here you omit one thing, viz., the hatred and disbelief oft engendered toward the very thought of a God so unjust, so unloving, so cruel, as to keep men alive forever for the sole purpose of torturing them everlastingly. Take Robert Ingersoll as an example. His father was an old-time preacher—so those who heard him have told me. He was evidently an 'out and outer' on the doctrine of the everlasting pains of hell. But I remember reading Ingersoll's words when, on one occasion, he was talking with Walt Whitman. As a boy Ingersoll had fallen asleep in church. He awoke just in time to hear the preacher (possibly his own father) describe the endless torments of hell. Said Ingersoll: 'From that moment I hated that cruel God in heaven.' And if you read some of his later blatant fulminations against Christianity and the Bible, you will find this often to the fore. And he is but one of many; I might say of many thousands. I have met some such myself; men who later were saved through the preaching of Christ's coming and of conditional immortality.

"This is no fiction, nor guesswork. It is fact.

"Probably a good proportion of the world's infidels were made so, directly or indirectly, by this heathen doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, and its accompaniment—eternal suffering."

Fortunately this old pagan idea of retribution that came into Christian teaching when Constantine forced large numbers of unregenerate and untaught heathen into the church is rapidly losing its hold on even the most "orthodox." It is seldom that one hears a sermon on literal fiery tortures of hell any more, and many preachers are confessing openly that they do not teach it because they do not believe it to be true.

Brother R. H. Judd, who has given as much serious thought to this subject perhaps as any living man, expresses his lifelong attitude toward the doctrine of eternal torment in the following lines, to which he appends a list of questions which we publish therewith.

"'And it shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light.'

"You may think it a passing fancy,
But since I was a child of ten,
I have hated that awful doctrine
That taught unending pain for men.

"I could never believe in heaven
As a place of joy and peace,
While thousands upon thousands suffered
In a hell that will never cease.

"Oh, my God is a God of mercy,
He is a God of justice, too,
But the frightful stain of unending sin,
I could never believe it true.

"My Father in heaven, forgive them,
Those who teach such a crime as true;
And wilt Thou in kindness remember
That 'they know not what they do.'

"Oh, eternal life is the gift of God,
To be shared with Him who died,
That eternal sin might never be
A stain on eternity's tide.

"SOME QUESTIONS:

"Does not the very nature of such a punishment shut out all possibility of any ultimate purpose for good ever being attained? Decidedly so.

"Is not death the only punishment that can be eternal when 'mortal man' is the subject? Most assuredly, 'Yes.'

"Is not this awful doctrine one of the main weapons of the atheist? 'Yes.'

"Is not the Bible statement sufficiently plain that 'the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life'? 'Yes.'

"Are not the terms 'for ever' in Scripture and in secular literature always limited or unlimited by the nature of the subject to which they are joined? Undoubtedly, 'Yes.'

"Is not 'smoke' positive proof of the destruction of that which becomes smoke? Again the answer must be, 'Yes,' for a tree destroyed by fire no longer remains a tree.

"When Christ said, 'Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish,' did He not use the same word as is used in John 3:16? Is not the meaning precisely the same in each case? Again the answer must be, 'Yes,' for in each case it is the life that is lost.

"Why was Adam turned out of the garden of Eden? 'Lest he put forth his hand, and eat of the tree of life, and live for ever.'

"In face of these facts why not accept the literal language of Scripture?"

Our Nation's Debt to the Old Testament

By Calvin Coolidge

The following impressive acknowledgment of the nation's debt to the Old Testament Scriptures is an abridgment of an address delivered by President Coolidge on May 3, 1925, at the laying of the corner stone of the National Jewish Community Center in Washington, D. C. As the nation bows its head in mourning over the bier of a great American, it is inspiring to remember that the one for whom we sorrow was not only a great statesman, but a great defender of the Word of God.—Editor.

THIS is a year of national anniversaries. States, cities, and towns throughout all the older part of the country will be celebrating their varied parts in the historic events which, a century and a half ago, marked the beginning of the American Revolution. It will recall the heroic events from which emerged a great modern nation consecrated to liberty, equality, and human rights. It will remind us, as a nation, of how a common spiritual inspiration was potent to bring and mold and weld together into a national unity the many and scattered colonial communities that had been planted along the Atlantic seaboard.

In a time when the need of that unification, understanding, and tolerance which are necessary to a national spirit is so great, it will recall the fact that the fathers not only confronted these same problems in forms far more difficult than they are today, but also solved them.

Among the peoples of the thirteen colonies there were few ties of acquaintance, of commercial or industrial interest. There were great differences in political sentiments, even within the local communities, while there were wide divergences among the several colonies in origin, in religion, in social outlook.

If we would seek a fairly accurate impression of conditions at the beginning of the Revolution, we must attempt a really continental view of North America as it was in 1775. The group of newborn commonwealths which we commonly refer to as "the original thirteen colonies," and which in our minds represented a considerable measure of nationality already achieved, did not, in fact, even know they would be thirteen in number. No man on the day of Lexington could be altogether sure that the Revolution was more than a New England affair. It might or it might not draw the middle and southern colonies into its armed array of resistance. On the other hand, the thirteen might have been joined by Canada, which was British in sovereignty, but chiefly French in population; by Florida and Louisiana, which were both mainly Spanish. In short, there might have been fourteen, fifteen, or sixteen original colonies participating in the North American revolution against Europe, or there might have been less than a half dozen of them.

I have recounted these scraps of territorial history because, unless we keep them in mind, we shall not at all comprehend the task of unification of nation building that the Revolutionary fathers undertook when they not only dared the power of Great Britain, but set themselves against the tradition of the subordination of America to Europe. As we look back, we realize that, even among the colonies of England, there were few and doubtful common concerns to bind them together. Their chief commercial interests were not among themselves, but with the mother country across the Atlantic. New England was predominantly Puritan, the southern colonies were basically cavalier. New York was in the main Dutch. Pennsylvania had been founded by the Quakers, while New Jersey needed to go back but a short distance to find its beginnings in a migration from Sweden.

There were well-nigh as many divergences of religious faith as there were of origin, politics, and geography. While the early dangers in some colonies made a unity in belief and all else a necessity to existence, at the bottom of the colonial character lay a stratum of religious liberalism which had animated most of the early comers. ## A Prayer for Today

"Each day I pray, God give me strength anew
To do the tasks I do not wish to do,
To yield obedience, not asking why,
To love and own the truth and scorn the lie,
To look a cold world bravely in the face,
To cheer for those that pass me in the race,
To bear my burdens gaily, unafraid,
To lend a hand to those that need my aid,
To measure what I am by what I give,
God give me strength that I may rightly live."

Calvin Coolidge

HONOR to whom honor is due! Of the death of former President Calvin Coolidge which occurred last Thursday it may be said, as of Abner's tragic passing, "There is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel!" The American people have reason to mourn the loss of one who had proved himself to be an able and conscientious executive in the most responsible position afforded by the government of the United States, a loyal and useful citizen in private life, and a sincere supporter of the highest ideals of our people. As another has said, speaking wholly from the world's standpoint, his was "a good life, a great career lived simply, a solid fame borne modestly, a fragrant memory cherished by his grateful countrymen! Such was Calvin Coolidge."

Jesus and the Common People

JESUS was the world's great commoner. "The common people heard him gladly" because they understood Him fully. He spoke their language. He considered things from their point of view. He was interested in all of their problems. He drew His illustrations from the most ordinary experiences of life with which the common people were all familiar.

The gospel, the good news, the glad tidings, which Jesus preached and to which the humble multitude listened so attentively, must have been a very simple message that all could understand. There could have been little that was complex or difficult about it or those to whom it was addressed could not have understood and believed it.

Even the children whom He took so tenderly in His arms could understand something of the beautiful story He had to tell. The young people surely could do so—and those in middle life—and the old folk! Everybody could get something of blessing and comfort from the simple teaching of Jesus Christ.

The common people grasped with joy the sublime lessons of Jesus before the complexities of man's theology had obscured its true meaning.

The common people do not listen with patience, much less with joy, to messages which they cannot readily understand nor appreciate. They must be approached with a common or plain message if their attention is to be attracted and their interest aroused and held.

The most valuable things of life are the most common ones. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the food we eat, the sleep we enjoy—these are the things known to all men, common to all men, yet they are the most valuable of all our earthly possessions.

So it is with truth—the truth we come to know thoroughly and which we make a part of our actual lives. The most important truth is not that which is the most difficult to come at, the complex, hard-to-be-defined profundities of science. Nor is it the hair-splitting theological vaporings and intricate interpretations of biblical symbolisms in which many students of the Scriptures find delight.

The most important truth is the truth that has to do with the common needs of men, success and failure, joy and sorrow, life and death! These great facts and problems of life compose the truth by which men live and in which they find their chief interest and concern. And the message of Jesus Christ—the gospel of the kingdom of God—had to do with these very common things.

That splendid prophetic prayer of David, found in the seventy-second Psalm, is a glorious picture of the answer God is making in the future to the age-long plea of the common people. The eleventh, the thirty-fifth, and the closing verses of the sixty-fifth chapter of Isaiah bring assurance that the needs of the common people will be remembered and provided for in a most ample manner when the King shall come! "They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble."

WE SHALL NOT ALL SLEEP

By George B. Alldridge

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth.—Revelation 14:13.

THE passing away of Sister Young, an aged member of the church in Cleveland, Ohio, has set my mind to do some serious thinking. Two scriptures are reverberating in my mind. I cannot silence them; they demand an expression. The first is Psalm 89:48: "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" The other is found in Hebrews 9:27: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment."

Two other references seem to annul the force of these two, viz., 1 Corinthians 15:51 ("Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed") and 1 Thessalonians 4:17 ("Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord").

Some things even Daniel desired to know; but the words he desired explained, he was informed, were to be closed up and sealed till the time of the end, and then the wise would understand. If, as I surely believe, we are now living in "the time of the end," the words closed up and sealed during the past centuries are now loosed and, it may be, by those who have "ears to hear" understood.

From childhood I have been taught, and it is generally believed by all who are advocates of the premillenarian doctrine, that the "Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Cleveland, Ohio, is a city of approximately one million inhabitants. Sometimes it is reported to the Police Department that a man, woman, or child, as the case may be, is missing. At once every agency at the police disposal is set into operation. By means of radio, telephone, and telegraph a broadcast is sent out to try to locate the missing one.

Suppose Jesus came tonight and, as we believe and teach, all who are looking for His return are caught away to meet Him in the air. Do you think for one moment that the greatest furore the world has ever known would not occur? There would be many who have heard sermons upon this subject but failed to embrace the opportunity of believing and obeying the gospel who would declare that Jesus had returned and gathered His elect.

Would this have any effect upon the world? You say, no, and quote Luke 17:26, 27: "And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all."

I do not believe in the absolute depravity of the human race although a perusal of Romans 1:18-32 makes the case look very bad. Following a terrible national or even local catastrophe, the churches and people generally call upon God for help and deliverance. So then, if they became cognizant of the fact that Jesus had returned and gathered His living saints and raised to life His dead ones, as they surely should if the phenomenon occurs as we teach it will, there would be a universal cry to God for pardon and mercy. The late Queen Victoria declared that if she were living when Christ returned she would be the first to cast her crown at His feet. But Jesus will not come that way; the second Psalm proves this.

I have heard ministers even of the Church of God preach upon the resurrection, declaring that the same identical body as he then had would be raised from the tomb. I shudder to think how I would feel if this proved to be so in my case, for I expect to be like Christ. John, whom Jesus dearly loved, says, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

So then, my brother, if you expect to rise up in the same body as you now have, of course this scripture does not mean you, for you know what you are going to be like. But I cuddle up close to John, for I wish to be found in his company among those now longing to know what I will be like when Jesus calls me.

Suppose I call upon Brother Marsh next summer and I find him dressed in suitable clothes for working in his garden. Probably he might say, "Excuse me, Brother Alldridge, until I change my clothes." In a few moments he appears clothed, ready to meet any personage however distinguished. Now Brother Marsh himself has not changed, but there is a marked change in his appearance.

Let us see if Paul substantiates this thought. Turn to 2 Corinthians 5:1-4: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life."

Note very carefully from what place this house and clothing are coming—heaven. Hence, then, it cannot be of the flesh and blood variety; for there is nothing like that in heaven. So it must be spiritual; and if it is spiritual, then it does not yet appear what it will be like.

Think for a moment of Jesus hanging upon the cruel cross and of this same Jesus meeting Paul as he was on his way to Damascus. After this experience Paul could intelligently write, "For our conversation is in heaven: from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."

We are now spiritually begotten; hence, then, our new birth must also be spiritual. The effect follows the cause. John 1:12, 13 makes this clear; also John 3:5, 6.

In that wonderful chapter of John Jesus, speaking of leaving His disciples, says, "Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more." Do you think He meant that? I surely do. For forty days after His resurrection only His own brethren saw Him. Suppose He had called upon the chief priests and Pilate. What a consternation there would have been throughout the Roman world. There would not be written upon the pages of history anything we now know as the "Dark Ages."

We believe that forty years will pass before the political world will realize that a mighty power is in their midst overthrowing and destroying all who are opposed to it. Forty years before Jerusalem was destroyed Jesus said, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."

It seems from Matthew 13:39-41 that a work precedes the setting up of Christ's kingdom, which is given into the charge of angels. "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matthew 24:31. Following this is the parable of the fig tree.

Since 1873 colonies have been established in Palestine under the leadership and inspiration of Theodore Herzl. The mighty Zionist Movement is moving along upon all lines toward the development of the Promised Land. Even Napoleon and Maurice of Saxony and other men of power and influence have foreseen the advantage to the Jew in promoting this movement. So this thing has been growing quite awhile.

We believe we are surrounded by angels (Psalm 34:7), but no one sees them. In the resurrection we are to become like them (Luke 20:35, 36). Can it be in some things pertaining to our Lord's second coming, we are all at sea? Are His angels now gathering His elect through the portals of death? I can readily see how millions as it happened during the Great War could be called away by death and the world go on following its usual activities and customs.

We all believe that Jesus will raise the dead. Listen to Paul's words: "But some man will say, How are the dead raised? and with what body do they come?" Let Paul answer his own question. "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." You see Paul's argument is that the new plant follows the death of the seed sown.

Had Sister Young vanished from her home, what a hue and cry there would have been among her neighbors and friends. But now we simply say, "She has died," and she will soon be forgotten.

Many saints after death were cremated, in some cases their ashes thrown to the winds of heaven. Surely every sane person will admit in their cases new bodies must be created. Wherein, then, is the difference in instantaneously creating a new body for the cremated saints, dead for centuries, and one who is lying in a casket awaiting burial? Paul distinctly and emphatically declares, "And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be."

There are many things relating to our Lord's second advent which become clear to my mind as I view them in this light. Paul says, "We shall not all sleep." Sleep is a process and a duration; but he qualifies this statement by saying, "But we shall all be changed. . . . in the twinkling of an eye."

Electricity travels at the rate of 288,000 miles a second. Take out your watch and count how many times you can twinkle your eyelid in a second: probably three times, during which time the current has gone round the earth over ten times. God has agencies both animate and inanimate subject to His instant command that the human mind cannot comprehend.

A man who in life was noted as a singer before he died had a record made of his famous song, "Open the Gates of the Temple." I simply put the record in place, turn on the current, shut my eyes, and there in my presence stands Mr. Williams again. If man can do this, what can God do? Read Psalm 139. It will help you to an understanding.

Probably this view may meet with criticism. If so, dear brethren, make it of a constructive character, not destructive. I should like to follow this by an article on "Jesus Is Coming Again"; but I am a little fearful, as I may be judged too radical.

Matthew 24:27 gives us a hint. "Lightning" in the original is "Light-shining." Lightning comes from all quarters of the compass, but the rising of the sun only from the east. Only people who are awake observe the opening of a New Day; those who are asleep do not discern it until the day is well advanced. So personally I expect to die if I am of the elect class and to be instantly changed by being clothed with that house from heaven as was also my Master after three days.

WHAT MUST I DO TO BE SAVED?

WHAT a great and important question! Neither kings of earth nor angels in heaven can ever ask a question that means more to men. This question has been asked thousands of times, yet there can be but one correct answer to it. There is but one Savior—never has been and never will be but one, and He is the only one who has the right to give the answer to this question. He has but one answer, and it is simple and plain, and comes from His own lips. So anxious was He that all men be saved He died on the cross, was buried, arose on the third day and ascended to heaven to make intercession for us. He then sent the Holy Spirit to guide the apostles in telling men what to do that they might be saved. That no mistake be made, and no one misled, He had the Holy Spirit to write out (by using the minds of the apostles) His perfect and complete will, which tells us what to do to be saved. All we have to do is to read the plain words of Christ, and by so doing we cannot go wrong.

He said, "Go . . . teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." He further said, "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to be raised from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Matthew 28:18, 19; Mark 16:15, 16; Luke 24:46, 47).

Now when we examine these words of Christ, what does He say for us to do? Can we understand Him? Is it not plain as can be? First, He commands us to believe on Him. Second, to repent of our sins. Third, to be baptized into the sacred name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. When from a sincere and humble heart, we obey these commands, He saves us, He forgives us all our past sins, and we become God's children.

Jesus told His apostles that they were to be His witnesses, and that He was to speak through them. Their lips would speak His words. He said, "I will send you the Holy Spirit, and He will guide you into all truth." He further said, "It will not be ye that speak, but my Father that speaketh through you." (Compare John 16:13-15.)

Now let us go to Jerusalem and see the apostles, clothed with power from on high, and hear Christ speaking through them. Here is where the convicted, sin-condemned Jews cried out, "What shall we do?" Did Peter tell them then and there the same thing Jesus commanded in the Great Commission recorded in Matthew, Mark and Luke? Yes, Peter answered this supreme question just as Jesus had instructed him. First, he told them to believe confidently that Jesus had been crucified, was now at God's right hand and was Lord and Savior. With deep conviction of sin they believed in Christ, and asked what further to do. Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." He said when this they did they should receive the forgiveness of their sins (Acts 2:36-38).

Thus, we see that the answer given directly by Jesus and the answer given through the mouth of the apostles was the same.

ONE ANSWER TO THREE QUESTIONS

This question is asked three times by different men in the Acts of the Apostles, and answered by inspired men three times, but because of the condition of the sinner who made the inquiry was different in each case, the answer to each case seems to be different. Lest some earnest soul should be confused over these answers let us make the matter clear.

First, we shall take the case of the Philippian jailer in Acts 16:30-40, and examine his question and Paul's answer. At midnight he arose from his sleep, saw the demonstration of God's power in the earthquake, realized he was a condemned man in the presence of a mighty God of vengeance. He fell trembling in the presence of God's ambassadors and said, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" Faith was the first step necessary before he could go forward to where God forgives sin, so they told him to "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," but they did not stop there and say (or even intimate) that men are saved by faith only. Notice the next words of the apostles, "They spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." The word of the Lord says, "Repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Following the word of the Lord the jailer believed the gospel preached to him, repented of his sins, "and was baptized the same hour of the night."

The second example we notice is the multitude of sinners to whom Peter preached, recorded in Acts 2:30-40. They had heard the sermon, been convicted of sin, and believed that Jesus was the only one to save them. All this had taken place in their hearts before they asked the question. Since they had already believed, and had been convicted it would have been wrong to tell them what they had already done, so Peter said, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

Paul's conversion is next in order. He believed Jesus to be an imposter and was on his way to Damascus to punish all he could find who were following Christ. Just before he reached Damascus the Lord laid a heavy hand on him and struck him blind. He cried out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Jesus told him to go to Damascus, and there it would be told him what to do. Three days after this, when Ananias came to him he found him, not like the jailer, who had never heard the Word of God, but he had already heard, believed and repented three days before. So Ananias said to him, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." (Acts 9:1-20; 22:16.)

Now, when we look at these conversions recorded above we find that they all did the same thing to be saved. In each case they heard the gospel, believed it, and were baptized.

Now, why do the answers seem different in each case?

For an illustration, let us take a man who has a rich treasure in the house of a friend in the town called X, and he is traveling toward that place, but does not know the distance. He meets Peter Hamilton and asks, "How far is it to X?" Mr. Hamilton replies, "It is three miles." He hurries on till he meets Timothy Rice and again asks, "How far is it to X?" Mr. Rice replies, "Sir, it is two miles." He quickens his steps and in a short time he meets Paul Jones, and once more he asks the question, "How far is it to X?" Mr. Jones promptly replies, "My friend, it is one mile." Here is the same question asked three times, and the answer is different in each case, yet each man told the truth. The reason the answers of the second and third men are different is because they found him nearer the place than did the first man. Just so with three men who are inquiring the way of salvation. The jailer had never heard of Christ, and he stands for the three-mile hearer. The multitude to whom Peter was preaching had heard, believed and were convicted, so they were to repent and be baptized. Paul had traveled over the road and had passed the mile posts of faith and repentance, so he had the last mile to go when Ananias met him, so he was told to "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins."

NOT LEFT IN DARK ON BAPTISM

Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Many people who have not read the Word of God have been misled, and are in the dark on the question of baptism. Perhaps when they were infants, or even after they became men, some one poured or sprinkled water on their heads and told them they were baptized. They were not baptized, because baptism represents a burial, and a few drops of water will not bury. That no one should be misled, God told us all about it, so we might know whether or not we had obeyed the command. He tells us it was where there was much water; they came unto the water; they went down into the water; were buried by baptism, and were raised up; that the body, the whole body, was washed; and that they then came up out of the water. (Read Matt. 3; Acts 8:30-40; Rom. 6:1-6; Col. 2:12-14; Heb. 10:20-30).

WHERE ARE WE AND WHAT NEXT?

The steps so far have brought us into relation with Christ. God has performed an act, and your name has been placed in the book of life in the presence of angels. What a marvelous thing has been done for you!

God has now added you to the company of believers and your sins have been forgiven, but the battles are to be fought by you, and you must be faithful till the end, and that you may have a crown of life, far away is the final reward of rest and endless joy in God's kingdom, provided you are brave and faithful. You have been born again, you are a new creature, and have begun a new life. Your daily walk, and work, and character, are to be consistent with the teaching of Christ, and you are to practice what you have professed. Jesus included the whole of the Christian life and character when He said, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Revelation 2:10).

LOST BY ENCOURAGING ERROR

There are many good people who will give a hearty amen to all the Bible says on how to become a Christian, and will confess the only way to obey God's command to be baptized is by being immersed. They have been immersed themselves, and would not face the judgment without it, yet for popularity's sake, give their whole lives in teaching and supporting a church that they know is in error. Such people forsake God and His Word for earthly friendship. I have heard men say, "I know the right way to be baptized is by immersion, and I know the only Scripture name to wear is Jesus Christ," yet lend encouragement to unscriptural practices which they confess to be wrong. They do not realize how guilty they are in the sight of God by so doing. Let us read what God says of such. "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (2 John 10, 11).

Suppose I should do just what God tells me to do that I may be saved, and then go and join a church that sprinkles water on infants, and grown people, too, and calls it baptism (though I do not believe it myself), I am guilty of giving encouragement to that which I do not believe, and in so doing I am living a hypocrite, and in this act I lose the fellowship of both God and Christ (2 John 9). Lend not encouragement to that which you do not believe with all your heart.—W. S. Long in The Faith.

TAKE TIME

Take time to think:

Thought oft will save thee from the snare,
Bring thee to cooling streams and bowers,
Spare thee from nursing needless care,
Surround thee with defensive towers;
Yield thee the harvest of content,
Lift thee from dust to starry ways,
Discover comfort heaven-sent
In thy most dark and cheerless days;
Therefore, take time to think.

Take time to pray;

For when thou pray'st the vision is cleared,
The voice is toned, the will subdued,
The dear are to thee more endeared,
The soul's failing strength's renewed;
In prayer the purest words are spoken,
The mind receives heaven's holy light,
The heart is given the Spirit's token,
The hands are charged with wisdom's might;
Therefore, take time to pray.

THE CHURCH OF GOD

By John W. Burget

“When Jesus came into the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?”—Matthew 16:13.

“AND THEY said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.”

Some people say that Peter is this “rock” that the church is built upon, but the Scriptures tell us that Jesus is that “rock” (Isaiah 28:16; Acts 4:10, 11; 1 Cor. 10:4). Therefore, Jesus tells us that upon this “rock,” meaning Himself, “I will build my church.” Jesus only built one church. He did not say, “Upon this rock I will build my churches”; but, “Upon this rock I will build my church,” just one, “and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.” “It” means one, also. This is double proof that Jesus built one church only.

The Father named the church; for Jesus prayed, “Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.”—John 17:11. God could not keep the church through His name unless the church was named after or through Him, any more than you could keep your children in or through your name unless you named them after you.

And Jesus tells us that His Father always heard Him (John 11:42). Would Jesus be much of a Savior if His Father refused to answer His prayers? Therefore, Christ’s prayer was answered; and the church was named, “the church of God,” after the Father’s name.

Paul the Apostle tells us this: “For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to me called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God.”—1 Corinthians 15:9. Paul also says, “For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews’ religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it.”—Galatians 1:13. How could Paul persecute the church of God if there were not a church of God in Paul’s day? He says, “Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.”—Acts 20:28.

Jesus is the One who shed His blood for the church of God; therefore there was a church of God before Jesus died, for Jesus could not purchase it unless it was in the world before He died. Jesus said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life.” His way is by way of the church of God because He purchased the church of God with His own blood.

Also, Jesus is the door to the sheepfold (John 10:1-7). This does not mean that Jesus is a literal door so that you may turn Him around and enter into some beautiful paradise; but it means the way Jesus leads is the door to the sheepfold, and Jesus leads us by way of the church of God. If you climb up any other way, you are a thief and a robber, because Jesus’ way is by way of the church of God.

You may have all the Christian virtues (2 Peter 1:5-9); yet if you do not know which way Jesus went, but climb up another way, what good does that do you? You are only going down the broad highway to destruction; for Jesus’ way is by way of the church of God, because He purchased it with His own blood. This is the straight and narrow way which leads to life everlasting, because Jesus built the church of God and none other.

The Scriptures tell us that Jesus built only one church, but there are many churches in the world. Who built them? We read that the devil has transformed himself into an angel of light; therefore, it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness (2 Corinthians 11:14, 15). This scripture proves that the devil and his ministers are usurping Christ Jesus by building many churches.

We need not be deceived, and get into the wrong church; because Jesus built only one church, and He prayed to His Father to keep the church He built through His name: and Jesus’ prayer was answered; because after Jesus died, the next day (John 18 and 19) He purchased the church of God with His own blood (Acts 20:28).

Therefore, the church has a real name, the name of the Savior’s Father.

The church of God was not built on the day of Pentecost, because the church of God was in existence when Jesus died, as we have seen.

We must not believe false teachers, because Paul tells us that all false teachers are under the curse of God (Galatians 7:8). There were two false teachers in Paul’s day the Apostle tells us about, who preached a false doctrine and overthrew the faith of some (2 Timothy 2:17, 18). We are lost if we are led away by false teachers. 2 John 1:9-11 informs us that if we bid those false teachers Godspeed we are partakers of their evil deeds.

And do you not bid them Godspeed when you let them baptize you? Do you not bid them Godspeed when you take part in and support their works or when you join their church? If you do this, is not your baptism invalid? Were you really baptized into Christ Jesus, or were you only made to be partakers of their evil deeds (2 John 1:11)?

The false teacher is of a body that does not have the right name, for God is taking out a people for His name (Acts 15:14, 17) and calls it the church of God after His own name.

Jesus said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.” “Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Jesus' way is by way of the church of God, which He purchased with His own precious blood that flowed from His side while He hung on the cross of Calvary.

"AS THE truth grows brighter, the crosses grow lighter and lighter."—A. E. Hoskins.

SIGNS OF HIS COMING

By H. B. Hathaway

THE condition of depression we are in is caused by the greed and selfishness of sinful men. But I am thankful the Lord has made known the condition the world would be in just before the Savior would come, and it is a "sign"; and we that are looking for Him can rejoice that that time is getting very near. The perilous times and distress of nations are surely with us.

The rich have done just what is foretold in the fifth chapter of James they would do in the last days. This has caused the depression. James also said, "Go to, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you."

Another very important sign is given in the first chapter of Ezekiel. He saw in a vision in 588 B. C. something that has come to pass in our day. This is what he said he saw in part: the likeness of four living creatures passing through the air. Each had two wings on each side, and the wings were joined one to the other; and they had the hands of a man under their wings. They had wheels; when the wings were lifted up, the wheels were lifted up; and when they went, he heard the noise of their wings like the noise of great waters as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech as the voice of a host.

We can hear the noise as they pass over as a mighty rushing waterfall; but if we hear the voice, we shall have to do so by our understanding and know the Lord is saying by that sign that we may know the Bridegroom is soon coming for the bride.

The twenty-sixth verse gives something in connection that has not come to pass yet. It reads as follows: "And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it."

Matthew refers to a sign that will cause all the tribes of earth to mourn just before the coming of the Son of man. I have often looked up in the sky and wondered what that sign would be. When Jesus was born, a star was the sign; and just before He returns, there will be another sign given. Nahum's "chariots" we have had for some little time, and they were to be in the Lord's preparation day.

I AM A PHARISEE

By Arlen Marsh

"Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in."—Matthew 23:13.

LIKE PAUL, I am a Pharisee. Unlike Paul, I take no pride in the fact. In disposition, character, and statements I am singularly similar to them who won the awful verbal blast from the Messiah. And they had some slight excuse—tradition, position, education. I have not. I am a causeless Pharisee.

With a pride that would put Nebuchadnezzar to shame, I have erected myself on a pedestal and have performed my mental genuflections before the incredible wisdom thereon personified. In common with a multitude, each member of which is in his own opinion God, I acclaim myself as the original fount of all knowledge and authority. They who disagree with me are wrong. They who do what I do not are sinful. For I am always right.

On the slightest provocation, I hearken joyously to the invidious talk of those about me. The next day or week or month I criticise them harshly to other of my neighbors. I place an interpretation upon their acts. They gossip. I gossip. They are to be condemned. But I—I am a Pharisee.

My judgment is unquestionable. My decisions are fair. A boy went to a dance. I consigned him to the pit. A girl smoked. Alas! she had no hope. Both boy and girl were sinners. They had broken, so said I, the commands of God. I acquired a cold that none but me could tell I had. So because I was desperately ill, I remained away from church. I am a Pharisee. I need no church.

An acquaintance went to the theater one Sunday. It was a crime. I read a splendid story of murder and the law, and nursed what little cold I had. My Sunday school class was taught by a substitute, unprepared for his position. But then, I am a Pharisee; and I know that I am righteous.

The elder's son plays cards and drinks. It is unthinkable. It is horrible. It is not to be countenanced. He is not a Christian. What? Is not my judgment perfect? Am not I a Pharisee? Yes? Then all these things are true. I have spoken.

My friends cannot associate with those who have been criminals. I will not tolerate them who do. The skirts of the Pharisee must never be contaminated. Jesus must have been odd, to say the least, to go with the plebeian publican.

Whisperings are passed about regarding a young minister. He is too free with women, people think. He should be ostracized, say I; he is immoral, he is vicious. The Christ forgave the adulterer, but I will not consider the weak character as a possible brother in the church.

I am a Pharisee.

THE SEVENTY-THIRD PSALM

AFTER the long anguish of doubt and misgiving, I am now persuaded that God is good to Israel—at least to the “Israel indeed.”

For long my faith that God ruled justly came very near to tottering. For I was indignant when I saw how well the godless braggarts fare. They know no pain, they enjoy sound health. They are strangers to the toil and afflictions of other men. Hence they become haughty and violent, with their bloated sensuous eyes and their riotous thoughts and fancies. They jeer and indulge in wicked talk, discussing immorality in their lofty way. They rail against everything in heaven and earth. Crowds of like-minded men flock to them, fancying them to be noble fellows. What should the most high God know about it, they say. Why, look at them! Godless as they are, they are always happy, heaping higher their pile.

Ah! surely, thought I, it is for nothing that I have kept my heart and hands unspotted from the world, for the morning of each new day brought me some fresh stroke of chastisement. But for me to speak thus would have been treachery to the Jewish faith. So then I sought to study it afresh, but a wearisome task it seemed.

But in the house of God one day it flashed upon me as I thought upon their future. For they cannot keep their feet: down to destruction Thou hurlest them—in a moment they are clean gone—swept away by terrors, despised as a dream that has haunted a man is despised when he wakes. It was foolish, then, of me to be provoked by the success of the wicked. When the perplexities of life goaded my heart into bitter indignation, I was stupid in Thy sight as a beast, that sees nothing but what is before its eyes.

But as for me, I am continually with Thee. With my right hand in Thine, Thou dost guide me across the journey of life in the way Thou wouldst have me to go; and when the journey is over, Thou wilt receive me to glory. If I have but Thee, there is nothing in heaven or on earth that I long for. And no power can rob me of Thee; for though my body waste away, Thou art my portion forever. It is not so with those who are faithless: they stray from Thee and perish. But as for me, my happiness lies in being close to my God; in Him who is my Lord my confidence is fixed immovably.—Selected by S. E. Haney from the paraphrasing of John Edgar McFadyen.

THE BIBLE

“Within this ample volume lies
The mystery of mysteries.
Happiest they of human race
To whom their God has given grace
To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
To lift the latch and force the way;
And better had they ne'er been born
That read to doubt, or read to scorn.”

OUR NATION'S DEBT TO THE OLD TESTAMENT

beginnings the new continent had seemed destined to be the home of religious tolerance. Those who claimed the right of individual choice for themselves finally had to grant it to others. Beyond that—and this was one of the factors which I think weighed heaviest on the side of unity—the Bible was the one work of literature that was common to all of them.

The Scriptures were read and studied everywhere. There are many testimonies that their teachings became the most important intellectual and spiritual force of unification. I remember to have read somewhere, I think in the writings of the historian Lecky, the observation that “Hebraic mortar cemented the foundations of American democracy.” Lecky had in mind this very influence of the Bible in drawing together the feelings and sympathies of the widely scattered communities. All the way from New Hampshire to Georgia they found a common ground of faith and reliance in the scriptural writings.

In those days books were few, and even those of a secular character were largely the product of a scholarship which used the Scriptures as the model and standard of social interpretation. It was to this, of course, that Lecky referred. He gauged correctly a force too often underestimated, and his observation was profoundly wise. It suggests in a way which none of us can fail to understand the debt which the young American nation owed to the sacred writing that the Hebrew people gave to the world.

This biblical influence was strikingly impressive in all of the New England colonies and only less so in the others. In the Connecticut code of 1650, the Mosaic model is adopted. The magistrates were authorized to administer justice “according to the laws here established and, for want of them, according to the Word of God.” In the New Haven code of 1655, there were seventy-nine topical statutes for the government, half of which contained references to the Old Testament. The founders of the New Haven colony, John Davenport and Theophilus Eaton, were expert Hebrew scholars.

The extent to which they leaned upon the moral and administrative system laid down by the Hebrew lawgivers was responsible for their conviction that the Hebrew language and literature ought to be made as familiar as possible to all the people. So it was that John Davenport arranged that, in the first public school in New Haven, the Hebrew language should be taught. The preachers of those days, saturated in the religion and literature of the Hebrew prophets, were leaders, teachers, moral mentors, and even political philosophers for their flocks. A people raised under such leadership, given to much study and contemplation of the Scriptures, inevitably became more familiar with the great figures of Hebrew history—with Joshua, Samuel, Moses, Joseph, David, Solomon, Gideon, Elisha—than they were with the stories of their own ancestors as recorded in the pages of profane history.

The sturdy old divines of those days found the Bible a chief source of illumination for their arguments in support of the patriot cause. They knew the Book. They were profoundly familiar with it and eminently capable in the exposition of all its justifications for rebellion. To them, the record of the exodus from Egypt was, indeed, an inspired precedent. They knew what arguments from Holy Writ would most powerfully influence their people. It required no great stretch of logical processes to demonstrate that the children of Israel, making bricks without straw in Egypt, had their modern counterpart in the people of the colonies, enduring the imposition of taxation without representation.

And the Jews themselves, of whom a considerable number were already scattered throughout the colonies, were true to the teachings of their own prophets. The Jewish faith is predominantly the faith of liberty. From the beginnings of the conflict between the colonies and the mother country they were overwhelmingly on the side of the rising revolution. You will recognize them when I read the names of some among the merchants who unhesitatingly signed the non-importation resolution of 1765: Isaac Moses; Benjamin Levy; Samson Levy; David Franks; Joseph Jacobs; Hayman Levy, Jr.; Matthias Bush; Michael Gratz; Bernard Gratz; Isaac Franks; Moses Mordecai; Benjamin Jacobs; Samuel Lyon; and Manuel Mordecai Noah.

Not only did the colonial Jews join early and enthusiastically in the non-intercourse program, but when the time came for raising and sustaining an army they were ready to serve wherever they could be most useful. There is a romance in the story of Haym Salomon, Polish-Jew financier of the Revolution. Born in Poland, he was made prisoner by the British forces in New York and when he escaped set up business in Philadelphia. He negotiated for Robert Morris all the loans raised in France and Holland, pledged his personal faith and fortune for enormous amounts, and personally advanced large sums to such men as James Madison, Thomas Jefferson, Baron Steuben, General St. Clair, and many other patriot leaders, who testified that without his aid they could not have carried on in the cause.

A considerable number of Jews became officers in the Continental forces. The records show at least four Jews who served as lieutenant colonels, three as majors, and certainly six, probably more, as captains. Major Benjamin Nones has been referred to as the Jewish Lafayette. He came from France in 1777, enlisted in the Continentals as a volunteer private, served on the staffs of both Washington and Lafayette, and later was attached to the command of Baron de Kalb, in which were a number of Jews. It is interesting to know that at the time of the Revolution there was a larger Jewish element in the southern colonies than would have been found there at most later periods, and these Jews of the Carolinas and Georgia were ardent supporters of the Revolution. One corps of infantry raised in Charleston, S. C., was composed preponderantly of Jews, and they gave a splendid account of themselves in the fighting in that section.

It is easy to understand why a people with the historic background of the Jews should thus overwhelmingly and unhesitatingly have allied themselves with the cause of freedom. From earliest colonial times America has been a new land of promise to this long persecuted race. The Jewish community of the United States is not only the second most numerous in the world, but in respect of its Old World origins it is probably the most cosmopolitan. But, whatever their origin as a people, they have always come to us eager to adapt themselves to our institutions, to thrive under the influence of liberty, to take their full part as citizens in building and sustaining the nation, and to bear their part in its defense, in order to make a contribution to the national life fully worthy of the traditions they had inherited.

Our country has done much for the Jews who have come here to accept its citizenship and assume their share of its responsibilities in the world. But I think the greatest thing it has done for them has been to receive them and treat them precisely as it has received and treated all others who have come to it. If our experiment in free institutions has proved anything, it is that the greatest privilege that can be conferred upon people in the mass is to free them from the demoralizing influence of privilege enjoyed by the few. This is proved by the experience here not alone of the Jews, but of all the other racial and national elements that have entered into the making of this nation. We have found that when men and women are left free to find the places for which they are best fitted some few of them will, indeed, attain less exalted stations than under a regime of privilege; but the vast multitude will rise to a higher level, to wider horizons, to worthier attainments.

This capacity for adaptation in detail without sacrifice of essentials has been one of the special lessons which the marvelous history of the Jewish people has taught. It is a lesson which our country and every country based on the principle of popular government must learn and apply generation by generation, year by year—yes, even day by day. You are raising here a testimonial to the capacity of the Jewish people to do this. In the advancing years, as those who come and go shall gaze upon this civic and social landmark, may it be a constant reminder of the inspiring service that has been rendered to civilization by men and women of the Jewish faith.

May they recall the long array of those who have been eminent in statecraft, in science, in literature, in art, in philanthropy, and in the spiritual life of the world. May they pause long enough to contemplate that the patriots who laid the foundation of this Republic drew their faith from the Bible. May they give due credit to the people among whom the Holy Scriptures came into being. And as they ponder the assertion that "Hebraic mortar cemented the foundations of American democracy," they cannot escape the conclusion that if American democracy is to remain the greatest hope of humanity it must continue abundantly in the faith of the Bible.

JESUS' POWER OVER SICKNESS AND SIN

"OH, how lonely it is, lying here helpless day after day," moaned the poor sick man. "If only I hadn't done that dreadful wrong years ago, perhaps I wouldn't need to be lying here now."

Hark, was that some one coming up the stairs? Soon the door was pushed open, and there stood two of his best friends, who came to see him as often as they possibly could. How sorry they felt for him! He couldn't go out among people and work to provide comfort and care for his aged parents, who were dependent on others.

"Have you heard about the great Healer?" they asked him. "Just a little while ago He healed Peter's wife's mother when they thought she was going to die."

"No, tell me all about Him," the sick man begged. "Who is He, and where is He now?"

"He is called Jesus of Nazareth, and they say that He heals everyone who goes to Him," explained one.

"Yes, and He was in Capernaum just last week," said the other. "I know, for He healed our neighbor's son who had fainting fits, as well as many others who were sick, both old and young."

"But He couldn't make me well again," said the poor suffering man, "because I've been too wicked. I wish you hadn't told me about Him."

Day after day he lay there alone, thinking always of the great Healer. At first he was almost angry because his friends had told him about this wonderful Man; but gradually the evil thoughts and jealousy left his heart, and a great longing filled him.

If only he could get near the Man from Nazareth, perhaps He would be touched with pity for such a great sinner and sufferer as he was. So he mused day after day.

Hurried footsteps were coming up the stone staircase outside! Perhaps it was his two old friends come again to comfort him. But no, it was four of them.

"The great Healer, Jesus, is in town again," the first one cried. "We are going to take you to Him."

Lifting him up, bed and all, they started. No time now for words of regret over his past sins, only a great longing and hope that they might find Jesus! Hurry, lest they be too late to reach Him, that he might once more be as other people!

While they were yet a block away, they could see crowds of people before the house where the Savior was. But on they sped with their light burden.

The closer they got to the house, the more they realized that they never could get through the crowd. The eager light in the eyes of their suffering friend spurred them on to do their utmost for him.

Glancing around, they spied the outer stairway clear of people, and up they went, carrying him easily. On the flat roof they deposited their burden, while they removed the light ceiling that covered the court where Jesus stood speaking to the crowds.

Before the amazed eyes of the onlookers a bed was being lowered from the roof, and on it lay a man unable to move. Why this interruption? they murmured among themselves.

"Son, thy sins be forgiven thee," were the words that reached the sick man's ears, uttered in the kindly voice of Jesus.

It seemed as if a great load rolled from him, a load that had kept him bedfast, unable to move.

"Arise, take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house," said the Healer.

At once he who had lain helpless so long sprang up, rolled up his light bed, and walked back to his home. No need now for his friends to carry him. No need now to lie day after day helpless and lonely and miserable.

A deep peace filled the man's heart. His sins forgiven, his body healed, he could once more go on his way as other men. A great love for Jesus filled his life; and, we think, he told all he met about this wonderful Savior who had forgiven his sins and made him well and strong once more.

LESSON 4. — January 22, 1933

JESUS FORGIVING SIN

Mark 2:1-12

Devotional Reading: Psalm 32:1-7

GOLDEN TEXT

The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins.—Mark 2:10.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus Forgiving Sin.

Aim: To lead the pupil to realize his need of forgiveness and the connection between sin and death, and to believe in the pardoning power of Jesus Christ.

Basic Truth: "The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."—Isaiah 33:24.

I. Jesus' Oral Teaching. (V. 1, 2.) The ministry of Jesus was threefold: He was a Teacher, a Healer, and One who forgave sins. Each of these forms of service was connected with the others, and all pointed to the fact that Jesus was the Son of God, the Messiah of Israel, and the Savior of men. The heart of His oral teaching was the gospel of the kingdom of God. Owing to the carnality of His hearers, He was compelled to approach its presentation from an obviously material standpoint. It is suggestive that the book of John, devoted to the spiritual interpretation of our Lord's teaching, does not contain the word "gospel." It is directed to those who are able to grasp the deeper significance of God's truth. But to the sinful and backslidden Jews Jesus found it was necessary to point out the physical possibilities of the kingdom as they are so graphically painted by Isaiah. Cf. Isa. 2:1-4; 11:1-8; 35:1-10; 65:17-25.

II. Jesus' Healing Ministry. (V. 3, 4, 11, 12.) The purpose of Jesus' healing ministry was to develop faith in His Messiahship and saving power. He did not heal the sick solely to relieve their pain, but to present a concrete example of His power. The friends who brought the paralytic to Jesus under such difficult circumstances were fully persuaded of His ability to restore him to strength and thus more ready to accept the further claims of Jesus regarding His Messiahship.

III. Jesus' Forgiving Power. (V. 5-10.) The fullness of divine blessing in this life and the enjoyment of eternal felicity in the kingdom of God will be experienced only by those whose sins are remitted through faith in Christ and in the gospel which He preached and exemplified. The forgiveness of sins is the one thing that makes eternal life possible, for "the wages of sin is death."

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Sin and sickness are closely associated in the estimation of the Master as given in today's lesson. Christ considered the forgiveness of sins and the healing of the sick as equal. They require like power. Both must come from the same Source. No one has right or authority to claim power to heal by divine means unless he has power to forgive by the same method. Sin is the root cause of sickness. Whoever is the cause, sin is the medium or the line that sickness follows as it pursues its victims. Until sin is destroyed or chained, sickness will be with us. We are not in that period of time when any person can claim the blessing promised in Isaiah 33:24: "And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick." When the great Physician rules over the kingdoms of this world, then shall there be no more pain (Rev. 21:4).

Christ is the only Source and the only One through whom forgiveness can come. To ignore or to reject His plan blocks every avenue of approach to that happy moment when our sins are removed from us. To be able to forgive indicates that the Forgiver is the Master of and the Victor over sin. This boundless Fountain of forgiving grace is free to all. The great Forgiver has shown Himself to be willing and anxious to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. However, it should be noted that forgiveness does not free us from all the effects and ramifications of sin in this age. This blasting blight remains with us to haunt and distress until the last enemy is destroyed, which is death. Forgiveness of sins does not in any manner insure us freedom and immunity from any of the evil effects of sin, such as sickness and death; but it does give us full assurance that in the day of redemption we shall have a body free and immune from all sin and its effects.

—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins."—Mark 2:10.

"The Son of man" is no other than Christ Himself. The first time this expression occurs in the New Testament is in Matt. 8:20, where Jesus said of Himself, "The Son of man hath not where to lay his head." This expression occurs 14 times in the book of Mark, 32 times in Matthew, 26 times in Luke, and 12 times in John. The number "12" denotes governmental perfection.

Christ came with power and authority. He had power to heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the leper, and forgive sins. He taught as one having authority. It was just as easy for the "Son of man" to forgive sins as it was to heal the sick or cleanse the leper. The result was the same whether He said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," or, "Take up thy bed and walk." He was given power from on high and always used it to do the will of the Father.

—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

Jesus' Power Over Sin

Did Jesus claim to have power over sin (Luke 5:20-24)? Jesus came to help what class of people (Luke 5:30, 31)? What is the wage of sin (Rom. 6:23)? ("Wages" was the fish ration issued to Roman soldiers, and it did not constitute their full ration or pay.) Was death the only "wage" issued to Adam because of his sin (Gen. 3:17-19)? What other "rations" were issued? Is death the only "wage" today? What are some of the others? Is God's purpose in punishment that of revenge or reformation? Would it be wise to forestay punishment while sin exists?

Should we consider that Christ's healing indicated He had forgiven the sin? Was His power to heal indicative of His power to forgive sin (Luke 5:20, 21)? Did Jesus come into the world to save us from sorrow or to save us from sin (Matt. 1:21)? When our sins are remitted in baptism, does that free us from suffering for those sins? When will we receive the full benefits of the pardon granted in Christ (Phil. 3:21; Isa. 35; 1 Cor. 15:21-26)?—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

How We May Be Forgiveness

Many of you have heard the story of the bird with the broken wing. A boy once found a bird caught in one of his traps with its wing broken. Moved with pity for the beautiful bird, he took it home and cared for it until the injured wing was healed. He then gave the bird its freedom; but though it soared up into the sky, glad to be able to fly once more, it never could go so high as before. As you grow older, you will find that the wrong things that we do leave their marks upon our bodies or our minds so that we feel them all the rest of our lives.

The beautiful part of the story is that of the boy tending the bird until it was well again. God forgives our sins if we go to Him repentant and determined to do differently, but the scar left by the wrong act stays with us always. Some young people say that after they "sow their wild oats" they will settle down, but it is much better not to do any of these harmful things; then we need have no regrets later. Because Jesus was sinless Himself, He can forgive us. There was no sin resting upon Him for which He needed to ask forgiveness of God, and so He has the right to go to God and ask Him to forgive us.

Special problem: If some one has done a great wrong to me that I cannot forgive, may I go to God asking Him, through Jesus, to forgive even a small wrong I may do? Give a Bible reason for your answer.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

New Year's Day furnished a spiritual feast for our body here. The morning service was devoted entirely to a consecration service at which the church board sat in a body to face the duties of the year before them. When an invitation was given, three splendid adults came forward to consecrate their lives to the Lord; and it was a happy sight for the church. Numerous words of admonition and encouragement were given by members, and the meeting closed with a series of prayers asking for God's help and guidance throughout 1933.

On Tuesday, Jan. 3, Bro. Magaw came, accompanied by Bro. Samuel Hoke of Dayton, Ohio, and the special meetings began that night with a good attendance. Every effort is being put forth to proclaim the gospel during these meetings, and we pray for God's blessing.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

Again we are privileged to enter another New Year. The past one has been filled with sorrow and joy. Some have returned to dust. Others have entered the new life by repentance and obedience to God. May this be our motto: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark."—Phil. 3:13.

We have witnessed during the past year, twelve baptisms. God bless them all. I have preached 137 sermons; and have officiated at four funerals and one wedding. We have a real young people's Berean society with Bro. Alvin Telschow as president. A men's club has been organized with Bro. Spieer as president. The ladies' aid selected Sr. John Teischer for its president. The Bible school superintendent is Sr. George Savage.

Our church officers are as follows: Sr. Chas. Thoms, treasurer; Sr. T. M. Savage, Sr., secretary; Bros. Frank Noyes and Wm. Spicer, deacons; Bro. Walter Skinner, trustee for three years; Bro. T. M. Savage, Sr., and myself, elders. I was called to continue as pastor.

We have a congregation of which I am very proud. It is loyal and faithful, though there be in the world turmoil and unemployment. God help the great family of the Abrahamic faith that we indeed will stand firm for the Word of truth.

Therefore, let us in this glad New Year "put on the whole armour of God, that (we) may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. . . . Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen."—Eph. 6:11, 24. A. E. Hoskins.

We Profit From the Experience of Others

Ultimate Truth Cannot Be Improved. Methods of Presenting Truth Should Be Improved.

Christian life is built upon God's revealed truth. The more vividly God's truth can be presented, the more effective is the presentation. God's truth needs to go in ruts—the deeper they are, the better. Not so with man's methods: here, no ruts should be worn.

Church activity is first of all for Christian development. It should be aimed to reach, to build, to mature, not only the oldest individuals, but also the tiniest child. Christian activity has limitless possibilities for church development. The praying and consecrated life is ever awakened to new visions of activity for making more effective or more permanent Christian truth in church development.

Why not each one strive to perfect and put into effective operation at least one new recipe for advanced results in some phase of Christian activity in the church?

Such are the things that your Exhibit Room at the next General Conference should show to the great advantage of all. Here are some of the things that your committee wishes to have displayed at that time:

1. Church forms:

- Best forms for membership records;
- Best forms for church bulletins;
- Best methods of church advertising;
- Samples of free tracts;
- Financial methods—
- Banks, bags, envelopes, etc.;
- Song book samples.

Bosh! you say. Foolishness! Like other churches!

Don't fool yourselves. The furtherance of Christian truth, like the furtherance of anything else, depends upon getting it into the eyes, ears, and hearts of the people, and keeping it there, rooting and grounding it permanently.

Other churches believe in God. That is no sign the Church of God should avoid holding such a belief—some would seemingly go almost that far rather than to do anything as other churches do!

2. Sunday school methods:

- Class note books and their uses;
- Hand work;
- Chart work;
- Cards and papers;
- Quarterlies;
- Promotion methods;
- Cradle roll materials, etc.
- You add something else.

3. Berean activities:

- Bible study methods;
- Bible study programs;
- Social programs—Christian.

4. Ladies' Aid:

- Samples of things to be made
- For the sick;
- For the needy;
- For the children;
- For shut-ins.

Durable playthings and toys for birthdays, holidays, etc.

Any other Christian aid.

5. Historic records:

- A collection of things of worth for preservation for future years to be of interest and value: old publications; photographs of special workers, of state conference groups, etc.

6. An exchange of ideas that cannot be exhibited in illustration should be written up in a "What We Do and How We Do It" article.

The above is but an outline suggesting the limitless opportunity for real service in this field.

Won't you begin now to put things into careful shape for exhibit of successful methods and equipment for furthering Christian work?

"There's a work for me, and a work for you,—something for each of us now to do."

Exhibit Committee,

Mrs. F. L. Austin,
Mrs. Estal Starbuck,
Mrs. W. J. Halls.

WHY NOT PREACH A SERMON—

On "When Men Forget God," using as a text these words from Psalm 50:22, "Now consider this, ye that forget God—," and show the inevitable results that follow disregard for requirements of the Lord.

W. W. SMITH

W. W. Smith was born June 29, 1850, in Randolph County, Alabama, and died Dec. 24, 1932, at his home in Arkansas City, Kan.

He was united in marriage with Emma Brown at Highland, Kan., Oct. 30, 1875. To this union were born seven children; one son, Ira, preceded him in death. The remaining children are Bert and Mrs. Mauk of Arkansas City; Ernest of Elk City, Kansas; Mrs. E. L. Poulson, Mrs. W. L. Brown, Mrs. Galeski, all of El Campo, Texas.

Bro. Smith for many years was a firm believer in the gospel of the kingdom and would earnestly contend for the faith. But he put off obedience, fearing that he could not live up to the gospel requirements. After much meditation Bro. J. J. Heckman was called to his home in 1920 and baptized him. Thereafter he lived a devoted Christian life. Although an invalid for years he was so patient, uncomplaining and appreciative, that it was a pleasure to minister to his wants.

The last few months he has been practically helpless, having suffered two strokes of paralysis, the last causing death. He was lovingly and faithfully cared for by his wife and other dear ones throughout his affliction. Nothing that brother, sisters, wife, and children could do was left undone. Yet the enemy claimed him; and as the morning sun cast its rays of light over the earth, he peacefully and quietly entered into that sleep that gives rest. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord: "They rest from their labor and their works do follow them."

Besides his immediate family he leaves two sisters, Mrs. Martha Randolph and Mrs. D. C. Robison of Arkansas City; and one brother, John Smith of Dillworth, Okla.; also twelve grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends who miss "Uncle Bill," as he was affectionately called. He had a cheerful disposition and a sense of humor that helped him over many rough places in life, and his wholesome pleasantness helped to brighten the dark places on life's pathway.

Funeral services were conducted Dec. 27 at Zion Church, west of Arkansas City, Bro. George Waters of Newkirk, Okla., officiating.

"Farewell, dear one, thy work is done,
And thou shalt sleep till Jesus comes;
Secure and sweet will be thy rest;
Thou shalt awaken with the blest
Among God's chosen thou shalt stand
With palms of victory in thy hand."
Mrs. A. J. Chaplin.

JOHN W. COCHRAN

John W. Cochran, son of Edmon and Caroline (Palmer) Cochran, was born in Blackford County, Indiana, April 1, 1860, and departed this life Dec. 30, 1932.

Most of his life was spent in and around Knox, Ind., except three years in Kansas. When a young man he united with the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith and lived his entire life a faithful Christian. In early life he was united in marriage with Olive Reed. To this union two sons were born. Both, with the mother, have preceded him in death, one in infancy and Claud at the age of 17. On April 8, 1914, he was united in marriage with Anna Aley; and the ensuing years were spent in a devoted life together.

He was a loyal and faithful servant of his Savior and expressed a great desire to live to see His second coming. He was a man of clean character, and his fine personality gained for him a multitude of friends. He leaves to mourn his passing his devoted wife with her daughters, Mrs. J. D. Van Der Weele and Mrs. Clarence Woods; a half sister, Mrs. Cora Rogers; and a number of nieces and nephews.

We have known Bro. Cochran for the past ten years and we have ever found him a true Christian, one ever ready to help in the Lord's work. The funeral service was held in the Christian Church in Knox. After the service he was laid away in the cemetery at the Eagle Creek Church of God to sleep until Jesus comes.

Sr. Cochran plans on living on in the home in Knox where they have spent several years of happy married life. Remember her in prayer.

J. H. Anderson.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The editor deeply appreciates the annual subscription to "The Christian Herald" sent us through the kindness of Bro. L. A. Boice. "The Christian Herald" is recognized as one of the most popular undenominational journals published, and we find much of value in its pages.

Sr. May Moore of Bartley, Nebraska, ordering extra copies of our special numbers, encourages us in this particular effort, saying, "These numbers will be meat in due season and are much needed. Let the good work go on."

We learn with much regret that Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., pastor of the Plum River (Ill.) church, is in the Methodist Hospital at Omaha, Neb., where he is recovering from an appendicitis operation. Bro. Krogh had returned to the home of his parents at Blair, Neb., for a short holiday vacation when he suffered the attack that took him to the hospital. We pray that the improvement now being shown will result in his speedy and complete recovery.

Through the kindness of Mrs. W. H. Upton of Altoona, Washington, the office force received a generous sample of smoked salmon of very fine quality and flavor. It is put up for shipment in a most attractive manner, and we understand it may be procured by the mail-order process. Sr. Upton did not suggest that we make this announcement, but we do so simply to show our appreciation of her thoughtfulness and for the benefit of others.

"Ultimate truth cannot be improved. Methods of presenting truth should be improved!" This is a statement culled from the appeal of the Exhibit Committee that might well be made the slogan of every religious effort. The saving truth of God never changes; but the trend of the public mind changes with the times, and in order to make our message appeal to moderns it must be placed in a modern setting. The Exhibit Committee is faithfully gathering materials of value from many sources, and the suggestions made in the present article are exceedingly practical and easy to carry out. Why not try some of them in your own church?

Material is being assembled for the special issue having to do with the Bible, its nature, origin, and value; and this also promises to be of much interest.

The special Jewish number of The Herald will be issued January 31, if the Lord permits. We are planning several unique features for this number, and you will want several extra copies for your friends.

The present issue contains two somewhat unusual articles to which particular attention is directed. Bro. T. A. Drinkard answers the question, "Did Enoch Die?" in a way that is thought-provoking and enlightening, whether you agree or do not agree with his conclusion. Bro. Alldridge presents some most interesting thoughts on important features of the resurrection problem. Read both articles thoughtfully with your Bible in hand.

The last issue of The Herald contained the obituary of Bro. Frank W. Wilson, youngest brother of the late James Wilson, who was for many years president of the Illinois State Conference. Bro. Wilson comes of a long line of faithful supporters and defenders of the truth as it is in Jesus and like his forbears was himself an earnest student of the Word. May God comfort Sr. Wilson until the Lord wipes away all tears at the Master's coming.

The executive board of the National Bible Institution met in Oregon for its monthly meeting on January 3. All members were present except the treasurer, Bro. T. J. Ellis of Waterloo, Iowa, who had been notified that his personal attendance would not be required as little more than routine business would be taken up at this time. This fact speaks well for the progress that has been made in financing the Institution during the past two months. The entire board felt greatly encouraged, thankful to God, and appreciative to His people for the manner in which they are coming to the support of the work. Plans were made to broaden the present financial campaign, however, in order that a similar critical condition may not develop later in the year. Brethren, we thank you heartily for the confidence you have shown in us and ask that you continue to aid us to bear the burden of responsibility you have placed upon our shoulders.

DID ENOCH DIE?

By T. A. Drinkard

“And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him.”—Genesis 5:24.

THIS question has been asked the writer several times by those interested in the study of divine truth. To them the above scripture seemed to teach that Enoch did not die and seemed out of harmony with other scriptures that appeared to teach otherwise. I have no desire to present any argument foreign to the teachings of truth. My thought is that Enoch died like other faithful men of old. I submit that God intentionally hid a beautiful truth in the words of the above scripture.

Kindly notice the beautiful division of this verse: (a) “and Enoch walked with God”; (b) “he was not”; (c) “God took him.” Can you point out one statement among these three which teaches that Enoch did not die? The first tells us that he walked with God. How wonderful! Can we say that much—that we walk with God?

Surely the second could not possibly mean that he did not die—quite the reverse, inasmuch as it is written: “And all the days of Enoch were three hundred sixty and five years.”—Genesis 5:23. By admitting our implicit faith in the teaching of this scripture, we are simply forced to say that when those days ended—he was not, he died.

Permit me to call your attention to another scripture bearing directly upon this fundamental principle of divine truth; “Death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam’s transgression.”—Romans 5:14.

I see in this scripture two classes: (a) those who had sinned after the similitude of Adam’s transgression; (b) those who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam’s transgression. Death reigned without mercy over these two classes. The only way out from that death is redemption through Christ.

As proof of this, I offer Hebrews 11:5, which is often used as evidence that Enoch did not die. “By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.” Was it death in Adam which Enoch escaped by translation? By escaping this death mentioned herein would he have eternal life? where is the eternal life given? In Christ?

The translation was by faith, and there is another scripture which expresses the same beautiful truth. Notice very carefully the wording, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed (translated?) from death unto life.”—John 5:24. Are you of faith? Are you “passed from death unto life”? How? From what death does this faith save you?

From Hebrews 11:1-12, the elders obtained a good report. Enoch is included among them. Not only so but Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Sara. And at verse 13 it is said, “These all died in faith,” proof positive that Paul believed that Enoch died the death of Romans 5:12, 14. Yet “by faith” he escaped the death of Genesis 5:24 and John 5:24.

Did Enoch have a stronger faith than Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses? Can you find more faithful characters than Abraham and Joseph? If they were faithful and had to die, how could Enoch escape?

These men of faith could look across the span of ages and see the kingdom of God established in the earth, as Moses saw from the mountain top of Pisgah the land of promise, yet died not having entered therein. By faith in God’s eternal promise they expected at the proper time to assemble in the kingdom of God (Matthew 8:11). May our faith enable us to be translated into eternal life.

WHY GIVE GIFTS

Harvey Krogh, Jr.

“God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son.”—John 3:16.

JESUS CHRIST is the richest Gift that has ever been given to men. He has done more to soften the hearts of men than any other has done. He has comforted the sorrowing, strengthened the weak, and given courage and cheer to the despondent. But His work is not done. He will come again and straighten the crooked paths, destroy sin and death, make all things new, and bring about the restitution of all things. Jesus is the Gift that God gave to the world, to you and to me.

God gave us Jesus because we need Him. But do we really need Him? Oh, yes, my friend, we need Him to take the pain and sorrow out of life, to remove all that is unpleasant, and to bring to us that much-needed “peace on earth” and “good will toward men.” The Christ alone can give us those things which we really need.

There is one very important thing that prompted the giving of this Gift. It is the love of Almighty God. “God so loved the world.” It is that quality called love, or charity, which should bring forth every gift. It is that virtue love that God is seeking within the individual. You cannot show that you love unless you give. Virtues are measured only by the actions which they promote. It is not enough to show your love only to those who love you, “for if ye love those which love you, what reward have ye?” We should love everyone and give to those who are in need.

When we give gifts in this year, let us remember first of all that beloved Gift that God gave to us. And may we let love be the motive and let need be the guide in the giving of all our gifts.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

VOLUME 22

OREGON, ILLINOIS, JANUARY 17, 1933

NUMBER 16

S — O — S

By F. L. Austin

“Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.”

SEEK GOD’S righteousness, not man’s. Seek it as something to be done, not simply to be admired. Seek it to do it now day by day; do not seek it for familiarity, in order that it may be recognized in the future should God manifest it.

It must be self-evident to every reasoning being that, if God’s righteousness were being practiced and lived—heartily—by every human being, there could be none of the present world-wide wickedness, none of the hunger pangs in the midst of superabundance of food, none of the present “distress of nations,” nor of “men’s hearts failing them for fear.”

A lack of God’s righteousness has unleashed every lust of man to the infection of the whole world with that toxin which spawns from human greed, from the uncontrolled “love of money”—toxin which spawns in endless, seething overflow out upon every pathway and activity of life.

Ungodly righteousness has become so well dressed in the habiliments of “a form of godliness” as to have almost deceived “the very elect.” Especially has this deception deluded many of the younger generation. And this is not alone their fault, but the fault of those who in high places are molding them while filching them.

God has so foretold?

A Prayer

O FATHER, we pray Thee, guide our vision that we may remember the nobleness with which Thou hast endowed us and that Thou wouldst be at our right and at our left to purge away the contagion of our bodies and the affections of the brute and to control and rule them.

We pray also that Thou wouldst drive away the blinding darkness from the eyes of our souls and that we may know well what is to be held for divine and what for mortal.

The nobleness with which Thou hast endowed us is the strong music to which we must march, and the way is open to the high mountains of daily endeavor. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—Elizabeth Louise May.

The Power of Jesus' Name

IMPRESSIVE indeed are the assertions of the Scriptures concerning the glory, the majesty, and the power attached to the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Even before His crucifixion wonderful miracles of healing were accomplished through the power of that name; and after the apostles had received the gift of the Holy Spirit, they performed still more marvelous deeds in His name.

The apostles preached in His name, they baptized in His name, they proved the inspired character of their message by “signs” accomplished in His name.

At “the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful” Peter commanded the lame man, “In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk!” And he obeyed.

Paul asserts that we are “justified in the name of Jesus Christ,” with which sentiment Peter agrees, boldly declaring, “Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.” To the former apostle it was divinely revealed that “God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow,” both in heaven and in earth, “to the glory of God the Father.”

“All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all!”

Education and Morals

MUCH has been said of the value of modern education as an incentive to morality. It is contended that the culture of the mind will lead to improvement in conduct. This sounds very logical, very convincing. It is hard for one to understand how the student, who, through the study of history, biography, and the literature of the world is made acquainted with the inevitably disastrous results of wrongdoing, can avoid the conclusion that morality pays.

Mr. Maurice L. Simons, writing in The Chicago Tribune with reference to the night schools of Chicago, suggested that if the unemployed did not attend those schools they would in their idleness “be tempted to commit criminal acts” and that the schools save the students from the penitentiary and the county jail.

Commenting on Mr. Simons' statement another writer (Mr. Frank Hand), says, “What a curious idea this is to attribute to these people criminal propensities of such a degree that they are confronted with the alternatives of either going to the night schools or to penitentiaries or jails! Mr. Simons imagines that mere education restrains people from crime. But education does not create morality. A person may be illiterate and yet be moral.

“Furthermore,” Mr. Hand continues, “Warden Lawes of Sing Sing, in an address to the National Education Association, said that the number of high school graduates among new prisoners in Sing Sing had increased from 19 per cent in 1931 to 25 per cent in 1932.”

This is a somewhat startling and discouraging revelation to many honest men and women who are looking for the regeneration of the race to be brought about by education, or, in fact, by any other purely human means. To the Bible student the discovery contains nothing that is new. Throughout the Scriptures it is clearly set forth that the only hope for the redemption of the world from sin lies, not in worldly education, but in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Whether we approach the problem from the individual, the national, or the world standpoint, we are faced with the conclusion that human efforts along this line are exceedingly fruitless, and that only the power of God contained in the gospel of His Son can redeem mankind from sin. The hearts, rather than the minds, of men must be changed before they will lose their criminal propensities and come to rejoice in truth and righteousness.

JESUS IS COMING

By George B. Alldridge

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1:11.

PROBABLY most of my readers are familiar with Sederquist's famous hymn, "Jesus is Coming." The verse I love reads:

"Jesus is coming, morning is breaking.
See o'er the hill tops gleams of the day,
Shadows are fleeing, nations are waking;
Arm'd for the conflict, in battle array:
Onward to victory, thou Prince of Salvation;
Sound the last trumpet, echo the call:
Strike in thy power, thou 'Stone of the mountain,' Kingdoms of earth, and rule over all."

Upon almost every conceivable subject we hear lectures and sermons broadcast throughout the whole world. Our statesmen and philosophers and politicians galore are seeking a panacea to relieve the world's unrest and wretchedness, resulting from the universal depression gripping and holding mankind in abject terror and despair.

The answer to this unsolved problem is, Jesus is coming. How few of the world's millions know the purpose of His coming! Upon every hand signs artistically arranged are calling the attention of the passer-by to goods for sale and announcing coming events, usually of a pleasurable character; but nowhere do I see the announcement of the world's coming Ruler, the Prince of Peace.

Six hundred years before this mighty Ruler was born, Habakkuk, one of God's faithful prophets, wrote, "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reprov'd. And the Lord answered me, . . . Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come."

My wife has been seriously sick. The doctor grew alarmed, and warned us to be ready for any emergency. As I stood by the bed looking down upon her drawn features, she noticed that I had been weeping. She said, "Pa, if I go it will only be 'a little while.' " What a hold Hebrews 10:37, "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry," has upon my wife's "new mind."

The Apostle Paul early in his ministry caught this spirit. In writing to the church at Corinth he said, "Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Corinthians 1:6, 7. In another place he expresses this same thought by calling it our hope. "That ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope."—1 Thessalonians 4:13.

Would we as God's chosen ones ever remember upon every occasion that the only hope for the world is, Jesus is coming! In every letter we write and in all our conversation our theme should be, Jesus is coming.

The other day Bishop Shrembs, presiding over one of the largest dioceses in the United States, ridiculed the thought of technocracy, or, as he expressed it, any other "cracy," as a possible solution of the world's troubles. He said only God's Son from heaven could solve them and that in Him only is this power vested.

Weymouth translates Acts 1:11, 12: "Galileans, why stand looking into the sky? this same Jesus who has been taken up from you into Heaven will come in just the same way as you have seen Him going into Heaven."

Not being a scholar, I am unable to give you a correct exegesis of the different Greek words translated into English as "coming." So I have to do a great deal of my own thinking by the exercise of sound common sense. If different Greek words are used, to the Greek reading them it surely must convey a different meaning. Then it does so also to my mind, which only understands the the meaning of the English word "coming." To me, then, "coming" has two meanings: an arrival, expected; sometimes reference to the future.

In looking up Strong I find that in some places he defines it as "presence." A good grammarian surely would not say, He is coming, when he is present. (over)

Come, Lord Jesus!

As we sit alone in the gloaming,
Holding sweet converse with Him,
How clear grows the heavenly vision;
The trials of earth, how dim.
We long for the day that is coming,
The King in His beauty to see,
And with all of His waiting children,
Be with Him eternally.

As the shadows of earth grow deeper,
The star of our faith gleams bright,
Remembering His precious promise,
"At eventide there shall be light."
And we list' for the sounding trumpet
That shall say to the dead, "Arise!"
And shall summon His waiting children
To meet their Lord in the skies.

—Nellie J. Whaples.

I am especially interested in Matthew 24:3: "Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" So I find that the Greek word here for "coming" is parousia and possesses two meanings, coming and presence.

Here I am now in a quandary. This word parousia occurs twenty-four times. The Revised Version notes it in the margin twenty-two times as "presence." When I read these references and insert "presence" for "coming," what a flood of light illuminates my mind.

I read again Matthew 24:31: "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." I thought, "Why does he say, 'Winds'?" In John 5:28 he said, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice."

Then I began to think why it takes forty years between gathering His elect and the meeting of the hosts at Jerusalem (Isaiah 16:6; 31:4; Zech. 12:2-5, 9; 14:3). Then like a flash something in my mind says to read John 3:8: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

There it is plainly. Those whom the angels are to gather are those "born of the Spirit." Hence, the world cannot see their departure. Can it be that Jesus is present during the forty years?

Paul says that, according to Weymouth: "For the Lord Himself will come down from Heaven with a loud word of command and with an archangel's voice and the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ will rise first. Afterwards we who are alive and are still on earth will be caught up in their company amid clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so we shall be with the Lord for ever."

Note these two events, raising the dead and gathering those alive on earth, are not simultaneous. The Greek word for cloud is nephele. It means "cloudiness." Does not even this suggest to your mind that the gathering of His elect will be absolutely obscured from the eyes of the world? So, as I learn from these scriptures, it will take forty years to gather those "asleep in Jesus, and those who are alive and remain."

Please tell me the significance of Matthew 25:1: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." The events described in Matthew 24 precede this of the virgins' going forth.

It seems to me, brethren, there is a missing link somewhere here. Let us connect this with Revelation 16. Many Bible students believe that at least six vials have been poured out. Turkey verifies this, and the gathering of the nations. Who ever heard with the natural ear any of the preceding trumpets blown or the voice of the archangels? Then do you think that God will depart from this rule in the pouring out of the seventh vial?

Note carefully: "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done."

Jesus said to John, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne."

Where does the angel pour out his vial? You answer, "Into the air." What is the result? "A great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne." Who constitutes the temple of God? Read 1 Corinthians 3:16, 17; Ephesians 2:21; Revelation 3:12. Can this be made any plainer? Jesus has gathered His elect, which is the temple of God; and this is where you will find His throne.

None of the other vials are poured out into the air, but upon the sea and earth. But the seventh is poured into the air. Why? Because Jesus and His saints are there and constitute the great voice which says, "It is done"; and then follow the events described in Revelation 17.

I know many of my brethren will differ with this thought and still cling to the teaching of the old school, that everything appertaining to our Lord's second advent will be visible to the natural eyes, ears, and understanding. If I am asked when I think the Lord returned to gather His elect I answer, I cannot tell.

But Matthew 24:31, 32 gives some light upon this important question. It is very patent that the gathering of Israel follows the gathering of Christ's elect, and probably they synchronize. Stanley Baldwin recently aroused the members of the British House of Commons as he warned them of the terrible power invested in the newest bombing machines.

Ships are restricted to the waters, armies to the land; but airplanes know no restriction: "In the air." How wonderful! God pointed all this out centuries ago! Now read Revelation 16:21. Any man of ordinary intelligence can see this being fulfilled before his eyes. I understand a talent to be about one hundred fourteen pounds.

So, then, my faith clings to the Word of God as never before; and my whole being is crying out, "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

THE MORNING

AN OLD writer puts it: "The morning is the gate of the day and should be well guarded with prayer. The morning is one end of the thread on which the day's actions are strung and should be well knotted with devotion. If we felt more the majesty of life, we should be more careful of its mornings.

"He who rushes from his bed to his business and waits not to worship in prayer is as foolish as though he had not put on his clothes nor washed his face, and as unwise as though he should dash into battle without arms or armor.

"Be it ours to bathe in the softly-flowing river of communion with God before the heat of the wilderness and the burden of the way begin to oppress. How better can we do this than by rising early and being on time at the throne of grace?"—Selected.

LEST WE FORGET

By M. R. Sansshem

THE human race is never altogether just. It is often unthinking, unsympathetic, intolerant; and it is almost always egoistic, self-centered, selfish. Tasks that he does not wish to do are shifted by a man to the shoulders of another, and usually that other is one who serves many in like capacity. Overburdened, sometimes poor in health, always willing, these "others" are among those forgotten. Unappreciated and unsung service they render, service equal to and frequently far greater than the work of them who are acclaimed.

"The men who govern India—" wrote Talbot Mundy, "more power to them and her!—are few. Those who stand in their way and pretend to help them with a flood of words are a host. And from that host goes up an endless cry that India is the home of thugs and of three hundred million hungry ones."

Well he may have written in like vein of the church. Behind the scenes of every service, of every social, of every program, lies a toll of minor tragedies, frustrated hopes, and broken aspirations; yet they who suffer thus rejoice, for they, at least, have put their faith to work. To those who so have given their lives to the service of Jehovah this little glimpse of life's "backstage" is dedicated, with the sincere prayer that they who read may think . . . and profit. . .

It had been a hard day. Mrs. Leigh, wife of the local pastor, sank into her chair with a sigh. At last she had finished the week's ironing, postponed perforce until Saturday because of the calls made on her time by the church. A five-minute rest would be invaluable. Her eyes closed, and her drawn features relaxed.

But not long. Scarcely had she settled herself comfortably when a pounding on the door dragged her to feet which reluctantly carried her to the source of the uproar. Without, stood the senior deacon, the backbone of the choir.

"Mrs. Jensen has rheumatism," he began apologetically, "and we wondered if—"

"Yes," sighed Mrs. Leigh, "I'll come."

A quarter of an hour later she wearily seated herself at the church organ, wondering hazily when she would be able to prepare Sunday dinner for the visitors from Talbey who were to arrive on the five o'clock morning train and who would have to be met at the station. Two hours of headache and tiredness and playing, interrupted at frequent intervals by gossip and a variety of objections to the anthems selected by the first soprano, dragged by; and Mrs. Leigh slowly drew on her coat in preparation to leave. She would return at eight the next day, she thought, to practice the voluntaries, postludes, and offertories.

"Oh, er, Mrs. Leigh."

"Yes?"

"I'm invited to my brother's for the day, tomorrow; and since I've not been there for a month, I'm going. There's no one else who can take my class of girls, and I thought perhaps—"

"Can't Elsie Grimes take it?"

"No. You see, her gentleman friend is coming; and of course she wants to stay with him."

A fleeting thought of her own twenty-year-old romance. Then:

"All right. I'll take it. Have a good time."

Between ten and two that night, the minister's wife succeeded in making a start on the morrow's dinner and in studying an hour with sleep-drugged brain and eyes on the Sunday school lesson. After inadvertently falling asleep three times, she found herself unable to control her lids longer and went to bed.

The raucous-voiced alarm clock pulled her from between the sheets at six. Her husband long since had met the train and was doing his best to keep the visitors from awakening his wife. At eight, with profuse apologies, she proceeded to the church, occupying herself at the organ until the Sunday school began to assemble.

Church over, she commenced the nerve-racking task of shaking hands with the members of the congregation and listening to their flatteries and criticisms, philosophies and opinions.

"Oh, wasn't that a fine sermon! Your husband works so hard for so small a salary!"

"It wasn't as good as the one last week."

"Yes, I sold that land at an awful loss."

"Doesn't Mrs. Randers buy the most expensive clothes, though!"

"His interpretation was all wrong. That text means this."

"Mrs. Leigh, could you take my place at the Sunday school convention this afternoon? I'm supposed to give a speech, but I want to go with my cousin to visit my uncle. He's quite insistent."

"Sorry, but I can't today. Some other time, perhaps."

She turned away to speak to a stranger about the church services for the day.

"Honestly, our minister's wife is awfully lazy. She won't do a thing for you!"

It was low-spoken, but in a slight hush she overheard it. She stiffened a moment, then relaxed and smiled philosophically. Oh, well, she was the minister's wife. Criticism was to be expected. After all, she had heard the elders and the Sunday school superintendent similarly spoken of, with as little cause.

A Cure for Depressions, Economic and Religious

By Norman John McLeod

THE only sure cure for an economic depression is more depression. Economists are agreed that the only way in which an economic depression rights itself is by getting so severe that it begins to work its own cure. Prices go down so low that the great majority of businesses are forced out, and so the remaining firms may raise their prices without fear of being undersold. As a result they can begin to expand and so are able to hire more men, and the former vicious circle of curtailment and of throwing men out of work is stopped and the process is reversed. That is a very hard-hearted sounding philosophy, but it is the only one that will really work as has been proved over and over again.

Politically, also, the only cure for depression is more depression; for it gets the minds of men down to basic facts and forces them to find a remedy or fail to survive. We see that desperate remedies are taken by even cheap-minded politicians in order to correct the evils of the governmental organization which depression reveals. The same process works socially, for depression is the most powerful force for eliminating economic inequalities. The cure for depression is more depression.

Arising out of business depression are a multitude of elements that cause us to give thanks, not for the fact that men are suffering for lack of employment (that is a sad thought), not because families are left without food (that is a most depressing circumstance), not that we are long-ing to see others tried by starvation and famine (that is an appalling spectacle that calls forth the deepest of human sympathies), but it is the vista beyond that gives us reason to be thankful for the depression. These things that we know must come first are terrible; but we can hope for little in the way of alleviation as long as wicked men govern us, make our laws, and rob us by means of the present economic system.

But in this last phase there is an element that should make us feel sure that the return of Christ is very near. I do not wish to be classed with those who say He is returning this year at any definite time or with those who in any wise set dates for the glorious appearing of the Lord from heaven, but I do wish to emphasize certain facts that it behooves every Christian to notice.

Our industrial system underwent a series of changes during the eighteenth century known as the "Industrial Revolution." In many respects that movement has just started. Industrial development has been going on at such a rapid rate that all other things in our life are out of step with it. We find ourselves living in such novel ways that we lose our heads in more ways than one. Out of this changing system of industry which has supplanted home industry by factories has come one movement which promises to sweep the world and cause the overturning of almost all present governments. That is the Socialist Movement.

Most people do not understand what "socialism" is, and class it all under one big head: "Communism." That is not a true analysis of the case. Socialism is always the outgrowth of industrial and political change, and may be defined as "group ownership." That group may be the church, the school, society, the state, or any other conceivable group. It has taken many forms, the most common being "State Socialism." "Christian" socialism appeared among the disciples of the early church when they had all things in common. "Utopian" socialism has appeared among the various arm-chair politicians who believed in ideal states (perhaps the most striking example of this latter type was the experiment of Robert Owen at Harmony, England, and at New Harmony, Indiana).

Then there are various forms of "political" socialism: in England, the Fabian society headed by George B. Shaw; in France, a large group known as political socialists; in the United States, our own Socialist Party. These latter do not believe in overthrowing present governments, but intend to make them over into socialisms by the ballot.

None of these varieties can be called "communism." Communism is a particular variety of socialism based upon the idea of class conflict ("every man's sword shall be against his brother"). Communism was started by a German Jew named Karl Marx and means a dictatorship set up by the unskilled manual laborer.

The purest type of Communism we know is the Russian "Bolshevism," a word meaning "majority socialists." That type was already in working order when Sir Henry Main visited Russia in 1894 (see his book, The History of Early Political Institutions). There was practically no middle class in Russia. There was on the one hand the extremely aristocratic class, and on the other the pauper peasant who was practically a slave.

In this country, it is my humble opinion, we will never have a socialism of that type. Many things militate against it. We shall have many "Reds" in our midst, but I feel that there is little possibility that they will ever dominate the government; they will cause unending trouble, however.

But there is another thing in the world that is more insidious even than Bolshevism, and that is another type of class-conflict socialism. In Italy we see it in the rise of middle class socialism. The situation there was such that Bolshevism did not take root, but "Fascism" did. (The fasces, a bundle of sticks tied together with an ax in their midst for the purpose originally of beheading the guilty, was carried by a group of men who preceded every Roman magistrate when he approached. It later became the symbol of imperial authority, just as the sceptre became the symbol of kingly power.) We can expect of such a socialism imperialistic pretensions—just what we find under Mussolini in Italy. Fascism is bitterly opposed to Bolshevism because of the old class-conflict idea. The former is of the middle class, the latter of the unskilled labor class.

In the United States much agitation has centered upon the depression phase of our economic system for some time, and so arises, out of the greatest political change our country has ever seen, "American Fascism," called by its founders, "Technocracy."

I have in my hands an article by Mr. Thomas, the Socialist Party's candidate for president at the last election, in which he shows by an item by item analysis that technocracy is Fascism under another name. Technocracy is not a socialism of the laboring class, but is one which can be readily adopted by the upper middle class, the wealthy of our land. It will appeal to the American mind much more readily than Bolshevism. But the very circumstances under which it is born are so peculiar that it is going to cause a great deal of political and economic turmoil. Any socialism, in order to work, must be based upon two things: complete subjugation of the masses, and dictatorship.

Will the American mind stand for such a thing? Yes and no. There is where the difficulty will come. The men in Congress who have been considering voting Mr. Roosevelt the powers of a dictator will find themselves confronted by a dilemma which is not new in the history of revolutions. Just how much will the public stand? The "Reds" will say that the changes have not gone far enough; they will be granted enough concessions to make them hunger for more. The conservative business men will say that it has gone too far. All of the foregoing would be of little interest to the true believer were it not mixed with things of a religious nature.

For some particular reason, perhaps because of the Russian and Jewish origin of this conflict type of socialism, Communism has come to take upon it an atheistic tone. The present age with its indifferentism, led by such men as Dr. Fosdick, is ripe for such things. Though they may profess religion, they use it merely as a means to further their own political and economic ends. Commercialized religion has always been the curse of the world. In the United States more than other countries, religious toleration and political independence are going to make the encounter a very bitter one, for technocracy will be mixed with elements of religion, atheism, and socialism, with enough of the class conflict elements in it to make the turmoil complete.

When that great grim struggle where the Orient and Occident meet in the "Valley of Jehoshaphat" comes, the nations of the West will need the power of Christ to aid them at the crucial conflict. "Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle."—Zechariah 14:3. That will be the only cure for depressions, but before the coming of the Lord "every man's sword shall be against his brother."

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST

By Lottie E. Young

---

WE LIVE in a world of change. Every day—yes, every hour—is different from the one which preceded or succeeded it. Our looks, our habits, our homes, our friends, all change. The great oceans and rivers are changing even the face of the earth; and the sites of huge cities of the past are now covered by the sands of the desert, their very situation unknown.

*"Earthly friends may fail and leave us,
One day soothe, the next day grieve us,"* but if we desire, we can have a friend who never changes—Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever. During His life on earth He was always the perfect Son, the Father testifying on several occasions, "This is my beloved Son"; the loving Teacher, dwelling with the twelve, who did not understand Him and grieved Him often by their idle questions; the great Physician, whose touch brought renewed life and health to multitudes if they but showed faith in Him; the wonderful Friend, always ready with loving words of sympathy even on His way to the cross when He told the women of Jerusalem not to weep for Him, and on the instrument of awful torture when He comforted the dying thief with the promise of life when He came in His kingdom.

This is The Unchanging Christ, whose love is the same now to those who render Him obedience as it was when He trod the earth, even as His warnings of punishment to those who will not have this Man to reign over them are unchanged. He told His disciples that in the world they should have tribulations, but in Him the peace which unbelievers cannot understand; and this has been proven true in the lives of His followers through all ages. His promise still stands as when uttered nearly two thousand years ago: "If I go . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also"; and we know some day it will be fulfilled, for He is the One whose promises are yea and amen.

Truly, "the fashion of this world passeth away," but, according to His promise, "we look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." The proffer of salvation through Christ is the same as when He made it, and the rejection of it—"everlasting destruction"—is unaltered. In which class are we? Are we as faithful in doing the little things as we are in the greater? If so, we shall receive the crown of life which fadeth not away when The Unchanging Christ returns to earth.—Gospel Trumpet.

THE CONCEPTION, BAPTISM, AND CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS

By J. G. Haupt

"And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one."—1 John 5:8.

A MOST interesting verse is found in the fifth chapter of the First Epistle of John. Verse eight of the chapter gives in few words an account of three incidents in the life of Jesus. The verse mentions first the spirit. The Greek word is pneuma, the breath. This word pneuma is universally translated "ghost" or "spirit." A ghost or a spirit is commonly accepted as a being foreign to the earth.

Many years ago the word "baptism" or "baptize" gave trouble to English-speaking people. To avoid this trouble, by common consent the Greek word baptiso was merely transferred as "baptize" and baptismo as "baptism." Many insist that baptism is immersion, but this is far from true. The best Baptist minister or any other in the world might immerse an unbelieving, unrepentant man or woman a thousand times in the Jordan River or any other water and would fail every time to baptize.

Philip and the Ethiopian prince give us a good example. The prince was reading from Isaiah, and Philip began at the same scripture and taught him about the Messiah. When they came to a river crossing, the Prince said, "Here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" The chariot was stopped upon the statement, "I believe with all my heart that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of the living God." Upon this statement, Philip baptized the prince of Ethiopia, a eunuch.

I would not say that baptism is not by immersion, but that immersion alone should not be considered baptism. The next word in the above eighth verse is "water." This evidently refers to the water of baptism in which John, the baptizer, baptized Jesus. God acknowledged this act by having a dove appear upon the head of Jesus and having a voice from the heavens say, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

The third word of the same verse is "blood." This evidently refers to the crucifixion of Jesus, when a crown of thorns was pressed upon His forehead and streams of blood flowed over His face. The conception, the baptism, and the crucifixion of Jesus are thus clearly depicted in the eighth verse of the fifth chapter of First John.

We go back to the last chapter of Zechariah and the first chapter of Luke to find light upon the conception of Jesus. In the latter of these chapters the annunciation of the Christ-child was made by God's angel. Jesus was the only begotten Son of God, begotten by the Holy Pneuma, the Holy Breath. God breathed upon Mary His divine breath, and she became the holy mother of the divine Child. The baptism of Jesus is fully described by Luke. The death of Jesus on the cross is likewise fully given by Luke and the other Evangelists.

1 John 5:7 of the Authorized Version tells a sad story. It was found by early Bible scholars and the revisers of the New Testament that this language, which speaks of three beings in the heavens virtually as God, the Father; God, the Son; and God, the Holy Ghost, was not written by John at all. It is entirely omitted from the revised New Testament.

Parallel words are found in Matthew 28. The same young man who worked his words into the Epistle also showed his hand in the Gospel. God, the Father; God the Son; and God, the Holy Ghost, are foreign to Bible language. God Himself was truly the Father of us all. Jesus was the Son and was truly able to say, "My Father is greater than I." The Holy Pneuma represents God's greatest power. Under that term God did all things.

A VIEW OF THE BIBLE

WILLIAM A. SUNDAY has pictured the oneness of the Scriptures in vigorous and beautiful fashion. "Twenty-two years ago, with the Holy Spirit as my guide, I entered the wonderful temple of Christianity. I entered at the portico of Genesis, walked down through the Old Testament art galleries, where the pictures of Noah, Abraham, Moses, Joseph, Isaac, Jacob, and Daniel hang on the wall. I passed into the music-room of Psalms, where the Spirit swept the keyboard of nature until it seemed that every reed and pipe in God's great organ responded to the tuneful harp of David, the sweet singer of Israel.

"I entered the chamber of Ecclesiastes, where the voice of the preacher was heard; and into the conservatory of Sharon, and the lily of the valley's sweet-scented spices filled and perfumed my life.

"I entered the business office of Proverbs and then into the observatory room of the prophets, where I saw telescopes of various sizes pointing to far off events, but all concentrated upon the bright and morning Star that was to rise above the moonlit hills of Judea for our salvation.

"I entered the audience-room of the King of kings, and caught a vision of His glory from the standpoint of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; passed into the Acts of the Apostles, where the Holy Spirit was doing . . . work in the formation of the infant church. Then into the correspondence-room, where Paul, Peter and John were penning their epistles. I stepped into the throne-room of Revelation, where towered the glittering peaks, and got a vision of the King sitting upon the throne in all his glory, and I cried:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all!"

S O S

Most assuredly. And present-day facts with ever-increased thunderings reverberate in living testimony that God is true, that His Word is sure.

True. The lethal poisons of the lecherous motions of the race have so blinded the eyes to true justice that the masses are nearly insensate to God.

Seek God's righteousness?

How shall the average man or woman, boy or girl, unless some one show him or her? "How . . . shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?"

If conditions ever called to Christians to "come over and help" those in the wild-rushing, rock-dashed current of godlessness, it is today. It is a day for Christians to show their faith by their works.

Useless? God foresaw the great falling away?

Yes. And what He saw is more and more coming to pass. But where did He ever teach that? Therefore, would it be useless to sacrifice in holding aloft the standard of God's righteousness, of Christian loyalty? Not at all.

President Hoover, addressing on November 5 the opening session of the Citizen's Conference on the Crisis of Education, is reported by the press to have said, among other things, "Our nation faces the acute responsibility of providing a right of way for the American child. In spite of our economic, social, and governmental difficulties, our future citizens must be built up now." He closed his fine appeal with the words, "Above all, may I ask that throughout your deliberations you bear in mind that the proper care and training of our children is more important than any other process that is carried on by our government."

In harmony with many others, President Hoover exalts education to first place. But, Christians, is not a knowledge of God and of His righteousness the tip-top of all education? Is there anything more important to anyone than a true knowledge of God and of His righteousness?

Church of God, awake! There is so very much to do in these days of increasing godlessness. If only one half of the money lost in the last three or four years by the people of the Church of God, through deflation and failure of investments, had been lost by investment in Christian service, an ever increasing work would have been built. Besides, each one would be a better Christian today, and quite likely, would be enjoying more of God's blessings.

But there still is much strength laid by. Let us use it to warn others of our times and instruct them of God and His Son. Some will hear, and the workers will be strengthened. Yea, not a few are hungry for the word of righteousness and of life.

Man's greatest need is a true knowledge of God and of Christ. God's one only human agency to convey that knowledge is the Christian.

If we are Christian, let us use our time and power and talent of life in learning and doing Christian service. Let us strive with all our power to save some out of the storm-tossed ocean of godlessness. Let us heed the S O S calls from the mighty deep.

TOWARD THE ETERNAL

ARTHUR SCHNITZLER, famous Viennese dramatist, tells an interviewer that he is very well satisfied with the existing universe except for the fact that man's span of life is altogether too short. The interviewer thereupon asks him if he would be content with a life the length of Methuselah's; and Schnitzler tells him that he would not.

"What," he asks, "are a thousand years compared with eternity?"

Probably most of us have much the same notion as Schnitzler, and this can hardly be encouraging to the medical specialists who are using every resource of science to add a mere ten years or so to our life expectancy. They can expect scant thanks for that. Nothing less than an eternity of living will ever satisfy us. We call ourselves religious and profess an abiding faith, but death remains a mystery which we are not willing to solve.

This, of course, makes for unhappiness. If we could once become reconciled to the fact that life is short and its joys fleeting, we could get along with a great deal less misery. That would seem to be the reasonable thing to do. We cannot live forever; why not admit it, make the best of it, and look for peace and contentment in the days that remain to us, instead of bustling about making ourselves and our fellows miserable by trying to cram the earth and all the heavens into a few short decades?

Unfortunately or otherwise, we are not reasonable creatures. There is in us somewhere a wholly irrational spark that refuses to concede that we are made of clay. Our imagination gives us a glimpse of the things that might be possible for us if we were only given the time to accomplish them, and we never can be satisfied with anything less. Immortal life, universal brotherhood, never-ending peace, happiness for every human being—these are some of the glittering dreams that we have built to plague ourselves.

The quick years pass and generations of men vanish and are replaced by their children, but always these dreams remain. And from being creations of our own desire, these visions end by becoming our masters. They compel us up and on, plague us, make us unhappy, keep us from resting—and little by little we bring them toward realization. We lift ourselves by our bootstraps. Our discontent with life as it is leads us to the colossal task of remolding it into what it ought to be.

Nothing less than eternity and infinity will ever satisfy us; and that extremely unreasonable attitude is precisely the reason why we may look on the future of the race with hope. We are climbing because we are too fine to accept any place than that of master of all creation.—Selected.

SILVER AND GOLD HAVE I NONE

By Harry Goekler

IT WAS the hour of prayer. From every direction people were coming to offer their prayers to God in the temple. Among these were Peter and John, who, along with the rest of the disciples, spent much time in prayer and devotion. Walking side by side, perhaps talking over some of the events of the day, they approached the gate of the temple called Beautiful and started to enter, when their attention was arrested by a man lying by the side of the gate.

This man had been lame from birth, and every day he was carried to the gate Beautiful to ask alms of the people. Seeing Peter and John about to enter, he asked alms of them, so causing the two disciples to observe him.

Peter, fastening his eyes upon him, said, "Look on us." The beggar naturally thought he was going to receive some money from them, but what was his astonishment to hear Peter say, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." And the record says that Peter took him by the hand and lifted him up, and immediately he was able to leap and walk.

For many long years this beggar had been afflicted. For many long years he had depended upon charity. But now all was changed. Whereas before he had received money from kindhearted individuals, now he received strength to walk. What a blessing! And all because a certain man named Peter had given him, not silver and gold, for Peter had none, but the healing power of Jesus.

There are many of us today who find ourselves financially unable to render assistance to those less fortunate than we. Because of this fact, we often say, "What can we do to help when we haven't any money to give?" But let us remember that it is not always money that renders service. A kind deed, a friendly word, a helpful act, these all go to make our lives lives of service. Oftentimes a small act of kindness or a word of cheer will do much to lighten the load for some one else. The giving of material gifts such as money and food is very essential, but many of us cannot do that.

The world today is greatly in need of help, not only from a material standpoint, but from a spiritual as well. Many of us who lack financial prosperity make up for this deficiency by an abundance of spiritual possession. Inasmuch as a true Christian should be ever willing and ready to serve in a spiritual capacity, it behooves each of us to give to our fellow citizens, not only financial assistance, but spiritual assistance, also. Like the noble apostle of old, we should say, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee," whether this be by word or deed.

"THE reward is only to those that conquer. Let us conquer."—A. E. Hoskins.

A CORRECTION

EVERY effort is made by our proofreaders to prevent mistakes, every article receiving at least four readings before it reaches our subscribers; yet in spite of this extreme care a mistake is sometimes made. Such errors are often due to a lack of clearness in the article itself, which the proofreader endeavors to correct. At other times they are the result of a "slip" on the part of proofreader or printer. We are glad to correct such mistakes when our attention is directed to them, although we regret to find by investigation that very few people ever turn back to the number in which the mistake occurred to notice the change.

In an article entitled "The Giver and His Gift," which appeared in the Christmas number, the word "not" was omitted in the opening clause of paragraph three—"This sad fact is (NOT) accounted for." The meaning of the author is in no way changed by this omission, but even strengthened, fortunately, as it is obvious that the author is speaking of those who hold the common view of evolution. THEY account for the existence of polytheism and of all religions on the false basis of evolution.

A second more misleading error is found in the same article, paragraph four, where Brother Judd is made to say (line 4), "not a single PERSON worshiped Jehovah." The word "person" should have been "nation," which changes the thought considerably. We regret these errors.

The area of the Sahara desert, 3,500,000 square miles, is nearly that of the United States including Alaska. Its greatest length is 3,200 miles. In the not far distant future, God informs us that there is to be a glorious change to take place in that sterile region.—Isa. 35:1; 43:19, 20.

FEAR AND THE SUPERMAN

"Today much of the world is frozen stiff by fear," says The Christian Victory Magazine. "Like a paralyzed rabbit before the onflying hawk, the world is smitten; and it cries pitifully for a deliverer. But it does not cry in repentance for the Deliverer it crucified. How dreadful will be that fear when the very powers of heaven shall be shaken? When the actual time for the Antichrist arrives, the world will be distraught with troubles (and the condition will be much worse than it is now) that it will welcome the superman with outstretched arms. Antichrist will not cause and produce the Great Tribulation; but the sinful and upset condition of the world will produce the Antichrist.

"The world is rapidly becoming unified; economically now; before long, politically and religiously. Out of this demand for world-wide union will come the Antichrist. 'The effect of modern inventions,' said James Russell Lowell, 'is to give mankind a common nervous system.' 'Things are rapidly moving,' says H. G. Wells, 'to the world unification of credit and currency.'"

THE TRIPLE NAME

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matthew 28:19.

MATTHEW 28:19 is always quoted as a strong proof of the trinity because it is supposed to contain a trinitarian formula for baptism given by Christ.

But you will notice before starting that it does not read, "names," but "name." Believers are not to be baptized into three names, but one. It will also be observed that there is no evidence whatever here to show that the Father and the Son are the same Person, or that the Holy Spirit is a person at all.

The Father is the only true God (John 17:3), of whom are all things (Romans 11:36); the Son of God is the Christ, neither co-equal nor co-eternal with God (John 14:28); the Holy Spirit is the influence of God, co-eternal, to be sure, but not a separate person.

We are not left in the dark as to what this name is which is the common property of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. It is the name of Jesus the Christ. The disciples understood it so, for they always baptized in (into) the name of Jesus Christ. Acts 2:38; 8:16; 10:48; 19:5; Romans 6:3; Galatians 3:27. There is no instance of their having ever used the triple name or any other name than that of the Lord Jesus.

It is the name which He received of His Father, by which He was exalted above all in heaven and earth. Philipians 2:9, 10; Hebrews 1:4. In that name alone is every Christian service to be performed (Colossians 3:17; Acts 4:12) and the apostles always used it. Acts 3:6; 4:7, 10, 12; 5:38-42; 9:27, 29; 19:13.

1 John 5:7 is also considered a proof of the trinity. This verse is considered spurious by every reputable authority, being absent in the oldest manuscripts and therefore omitted in all the improved translations.

YE NOBLE WITH THE GREAT SOUL

Ye gallant Noble: This is certainly the life to live, basking in the glory of the greatest court of earth. I know the King would like to have more good and loyal nobles in his court. I know of a good prospect. I will go and show him from the sacred records of the past how splendid is the calling of the nobles of the King.

The Berean Noble of great price: Yes, the greatest thrill in this life comes because we are able "to sit together in heavenly places," with our Lord "in the midst." I know that God wants others also to enjoy that privilege, but before they will do it they will need to be trained. I know a friend I can train if I keep at him until he is won. So let us take up our tools, Bereans, the ones given us by God, and let us plant, let us water, knowing that it is God that will give the increase.

HOW TO USE SUNDAY

PERHAPS some of you little folks who read this page have often wondered just how Sunday should be spent, what should be done on that day, and what should not be done. Let us see if Jesus can answer the question for us. You know, He was able to talk to doctors and lawyers when He was only twelve years old and He always had an answer for every question that was asked Him.

In Jesus' time, as you know, what we call Saturday was the day that was set apart from the other days of the week in which to especially honor God. We set apart Sunday to honor Him, because it was on the first day of the week that Jesus arose from the dead.

One Sabbath day Jesus and His disciples, perhaps returning from services at the synagogue, were walking along a little path that bordered on a field of grain. As they walked along they reached out and picked a few handfuls of grain and ate them, for they were hungry.

The Pharisees (you remember, they were the ones who were always finding fault with Jesus) said that it was wrong for the disciples to pick the grain because that was work. These Pharisees had such hard hearts that they didn't even feel sorry for some one who was hungry. They were not much like Jesus, were they?

Jesus asked them if they had not read what David did long ago when he was hungry. That must have made them feel ashamed of themselves, because they boasted how much they read the Scriptures.

Then that wonderfully kind Savior, knowing these wicked men were watching Him, on another Sabbath day saw a man at the synagogue services who had one hand that was all shriveled up so that he couldn't use it at all. Was He afraid of these hardhearted Pharisees, and did He pass the man by without a glance?

While they were all watching Him, Jesus told the man to step out from the crowd so that all could see how badly he was crippled. Did they feel any pity for the poor man? No, indeed, they glared right back at Jesus and him.

Then your Savior and mine bravely told the man to stretch out his arm, which he promptly did. Lo and behold, his hand was just like the other one! And the cruel Pharisees went out and plotted to make away with Jesus.

But nothing or nobody could stop Jesus from doing good, feeding hungry people, healing crippled ones, and preaching the gospel. And these were some of the things He did every day in the week and on the Sabbath, too.

Now we can't heal crippled people as Jesus did, but we can love them and be kind to them in other ways. And while perhaps we are too small to feed people, we can run errands for mother so that she can get her work done earlier and find time for rest or for doing many nice things she would like to do.

Look in the book of Luke, chapter 4, and read verse 16. It tells you that Jesus had the habit of going to the synagogue on the Sabbath, doesn't it? Going to the synagogue in those days was the same as going to church is today. That's a pretty good habit to have, don't you think?

Let's each one of us, as soon as we are old enough to talk, ask mother and father to take us to Sunday school and church every Sunday. Many of you, I hope, will be there every Sunday even before you are old enough to talk. Then you'll have the habit, sure enough, won't you?

And those of you who do not live near enough to go to church, ask mother to have Sunday school right at home in the living room. You might invite your little neighbors to come over and learn about Jesus, too. Soon you'd have a regular Sunday school.

One of the things you might do this very Sunday afternoon is to get father to take you to call on some little ones who do not go to Sunday school and invite them to yours next Sunday. And if you know of some one who can't get out you can call and sing some pretty songs or tell about your Sunday school. Oh, there are so many things you can do on Sunday that you don't always have time for on school days.

Remember, Jesus went about doing something nice for somebody all the time. Let's see if we can't be like Him.

JESUS AND THE SABBATH

Mark 2:13 to 3:6

Devotional Reading: Psalm 122

GOLDEN TEXT

The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath: therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.—Mark 2:27, 28.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus and the Sabbath.

Aim: To lead the pupil to see that the doing of good is right regardless of time or place.

Basic Truth: "God . . . hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."—2 Cor. 3:5, 6.

I. The Sabbath a Day of Rest. (Mark 2:27, 28.) The word "sabbath" first occurs in Exodus 16:23 and is said to be a holy day of rest. "Commonly the word sabbath includes the thought of weariness, which calls for 'rest,' and not infrequently is this its true meaning," says Eld. S. J. Lindsay in his excellent little work on the subject. According to Ex. 35:2, 3, its purpose was to provide an opportunity for rest after labor; and so "the sabbath was made for man." Cf. Ex. 20:8-11; 5:14.

II. The Sabbath a Test of Obedience to Israel. (2:23-26.) The observance of the Sabbath was a part of God's covenant with Israel by which He tested their willingness to obey Him. Cf. Exodus 34:28. It was applied only to Israel and those who joined them by circumcision. Cf. Isa. 56:6; Ezek. 20:12. It was never applied to Gentiles, nor do we find any reference to Sabbath-keeping as a test of fellowship or requirement of service following the establishment of the church of Christ. The Christian has other obligations to observe, like baptism and the Lord's supper; but keeping the Sabbath is not one of them.

III. The Sabbath an Opportunity for Service. (3:1-6.) Not yet having been nailed to the cross (Col. 2:8-17), the law was still in force when this miracle was performed and must be fulfilled (Matt. 5:17-20). The scribes and Pharisees kept the letter of the law, but Jesus observed and taught the spirit of it. The man with the withered hand provided Him with an opportunity to illustrate His interpretation of the law in a practical way.

IV. The Christian Sabbath. Although he is not commanded to observe one day above another (Rom. 14:5, 6; Gal. 4:9-11), the Christian finds pleasure in setting apart one day each week for the service of God; and on that day he is at liberty to do any manner of good for others in the name of the Lord.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

The Master went throughout all Galilee doing good. His Samaritan work was not confined to any one day or set of days. Our lesson teaches us that it was lawful under the Mosiac code to do good on the Sabbath day.

The Seed that came to fulfill the law placed His stamp of approval upon a good act on the Sabbath day. However, this act of mercy on the Sabbath day by the Master should not be used as an opening wedge to desecrate a day set aside for worship and rest. It is lawful and right at all times to do good, but it is not right or justifiable to put off "acts of goodness" to the day of worship when such should be and could be done during the six days of labor. Often people so liberalize the day of worship and rest that it is difficult to distinguish it from a regular work day. Do good, but do not leave all of this "goodness" to be done on a day of worship.

Sunday is not the Sabbath. It is the first day of the week. It does not commemorate creation, but resurrection. Christ was raised on the first day of the week; we worship on that same day. It is not and never was intended as a day of pleasure for Christians. Many professed Christians and the world use it as a "day of pleasure," but not true Christians. Pleasure is not conducive to spiritual life. A person that spends his day in golfing, tennis, boating, hunting, fishing, or at the beach is in no mood or spirit to worship the Father in spirit and truth.

Which rests a person the more, a day of meditation or visiting with those of like precious faith or a day of pleasure with the crowds? Which atmosphere is the most conducive to spirituality? Discuss the type and kind of spiritual life possessed by most people who are pleasure-minded.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath: therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath."—Mark 2:27, 28.

The Sabbath was given to the children of Israel for a sign between them and God, and they were commanded to keep it throughout their generations. There was a death penalty attached for those who did any work on that day. No wonder the Jews found so much fault with Christ for doing things that for them were absolutely against the Father's will. The Sabbath was a covenant between God and the Israelites and was made to teach them that it was the Lord God who sanctified them. See Exodus 31:12-17.

When Christ, the Son of man, came, things were different. Christ was not under the law of the Sabbath; therefore, He was greater than the Sabbath. Christ must have been trying to teach His greatness and that He came from God that He could say, "The Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath."—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

It should be remembered that Hebrew has no possessive form as there is in English. "Day of the Lord" is the possessive case in Hebrew just as "Lord's day" would indicate the possessive case in English.

According to Isaiah 2:12-22, the day of the Lord is a time when: the proud and lofty are brought low; the idols are destroyed; the ungodly hide in the rocks and caves of the earth; God shakes terribly the earth. Isaiah 13 speaks of the day of the Lord as a time of destruction from the Almighty; sorrow; darkening of the sun and moon; punishment when men and children shall be thrust through and wives ravished; destruction for Babylon.

One should study Joel for additional ideas. It will be noticed that it is going to be a time of crop destruction, starvation of people and cattle, fire and destruction, war and bloodshed. More details of the picture of God's wrath are found in Zephaniah 1:7-18. From Zechariah 14:1-11 it is evident that the day of the Lord will extend through the period of His wrath even to the end of the thousand years. It is then a period of wrath and a much longer period of blessing.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

God had given Moses, besides the ten commandments, some rules by which the people might regulate their lives, all of which were for their welfare. But the Pharisees, the strictest set in keeping the law in Christ's day, had added many more of their own—so many, in fact, that they overlooked the good God intended for man; and their laws were a continual succession of "don'ts." For what two good deeds which had been done on the Sabbath did they criticize Jesus and His disciples in today's lesson? The Pharisees continually tried to catch Jesus doing something on the Sabbath which their endless laws forbade in order to get rid of Him.

If we think of our Sabbath—Sunday—as a day on which we "can't" do some of the things we do on other days, the day is spoiled for us. Let us think of Sunday as a day set apart from the other six on which we may do some of the many helpful, noble things for which we may not have time during the week. On this day we should attend church and Sunday school, not because it is our duty, but because after a week of study, work, and other activity, we need the change, the rest, and the worship that we find there.

Special problem: With your teacher's help find something your class can do on Sunday such as calling on absent members, taking flowers to shut-ins, visiting those you might interest in attending Sunday school.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

God is continuing to bless our little church here with rich blessings. As these lines are written, our meetings with Bro. Magaw present are well along in the second and last week; and the church is being strengthened and encouraged by this special effort.

In addition to the three adults who came forward on January 1, three splendid young people came on Sunday, the 8th. Five were baptized Tuesday night, January 10, and another baptismal service will be held before the meetings close. The five baptized were: Mr. and Mrs. Howard King, 146 Exchange, S. W.; Mrs. Helen Brauer, 225 Abbie, S. E.; Miss Doris Conrad, 3715 Keyes Ave., S. E.; and Miss Isabelle Eaton, 147 Walter, S. E. The church is happy to receive these five people into fellowship, and prays God's richest blessing to be ever their's.

It is a pleasure to have Bro. Magaw with us. He is giving us some splendid sermons, and the church appreciates the opportunity.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MORA, MINNESOTA

We have many things to be thankful for in the Lord's work at this place. At present services are being held in town at the Ericksons Chapel each Friday night. Regardless of the weather, our people are faithful and are indeed "reaching forth to the things that are before" them.

By the kindly hand of our State Conference we receive help. It is paying the Chapel rent. The church is very grateful to it for its kindness. A motto in practice: "Living for Others." Sacrifices are being made that this important work may go on. God bless and help them of this community and state that their efforts will not be in vain.

Only last week I came back home from this place with the back of our "Model T" filled with good things to supply our physical needs. The Ladies' Aid gave us a beautiful warm quilt and a small rug. The other things consisted of vegetables, meat, cream, butter, and canned foods. These things were given and accepted in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sr. Wm. Eklund, one of our faithful ones, met with a terrible accident by gasoline explosion in her home. She was badly burned about her hands and face. She smiles through her pain with trust in God and is getting along very well.

May we as a people ever watch for His glorious appearing. "Surely, I come quickly; Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus." God bless the work, of our dear N. B. I. and throughout the world.

A. E. Hoskins.

OUR UNPAID WORKERS

We doubt if many of our readers are aware of the many unpaid workers who devote their efforts to producing The Restitution Herald. We pay for no manuscripts, all that we publish of original writings are contributed by authors who give of their time and ability that you may enjoy the spiritual and intellectual feast which they so ably prepare. Of course this work requires a great deal of time and research on the part of these generous contributors to the common good, yet it is gladly and freely given in the Master's name for the advancement of His truth. Do not forget these servants of God in your prayers.

CONFERENCE NOTICE

The quarterly meeting of the Northwestern Conference of Oregon and Washington will be held March 2 to 5 at Felida, Wash. Many interesting sermons on prophecy will be delivered. It is to your advantage to attend your meetings. Everyone welcome.

Gladys Barber, Secretary.

BRUSH CREEK TO GRAND RAPIDS

Sunday, January 1, saw the Brush Creek (Ohio) congregation hopeful and zealous for the new year. The encouraging features of the work well outweigh our discouragements. In the afternoon it was our privilege to baptize Bro. Elgin Curtis, and at the evening service he was welcomed into the church.

On the following Tuesday, Jan. 3, at 4:30 a. m., we started on our way to Grand Rapids. Bro. Samuel Hoke of Dayton kindly drove his car up here for us. Since our arrival we have made our home with Bro. and Sr. F. E. Siple and family, though many others have also entertained us in their homes. From the outset there has been a good interest in the series of meetings which are still in progress at this writing.

Bro. Siple is a busy pastor, and his congregation is growing rapidly. Two hundred fifty-seven were in Sunday school on Sunday, Jan. 8. Several young folks have already been baptized and others are to be baptized on Sunday, the 15th. Bro. Siple will report more fully of the meeting after its close.

Sydney E. Magaw, Evangelist.

DIXON, ILLINOIS

The Sunday school of the Church of God in Dixon was very encouraging during the past year. To make it more encouraging the coming year we are asking each and every one who is a member of the school, from the youngest to the oldest, to be present at every session. Bro. Wm. Ford, our superintendent, has worked hard to increase the number enrolled and to have better regular attendance. To do this he adopted the plan of giving banners to the classes for perfect attendance, and to classes for the best average attendance. This plan has helped much. Reward pins were given to eleven for perfect attendance during the past year. During the coming year a button for perfect attendance will be given at the end of each quarter.

The election of officers resulted as follows: superintendent, Bro. Wm. Ford; assistant-superintendent, Bro. Payne; Sr. Grace Drew, secretary; Sr. Agnes Eckert, treasurer.

Bro. Conner gives us some splendid sermons on the first and third Sundays of each month. The attendance at the evening services has been very good.

Sickness has kept some of our number away during the past month. Sr. Emma Kelly, who has been very sick, is able to go out again and is slowly gaining in strength. Her sickness has lasted all winter. Sr. Payne, one of our faithful sisters, has taken very good care of Sr. Kelly and Sr. Bertie Drew.

Grace Drew, Secretary.

The Sewing Circle of the Dixon church will continue to meet semi-monthly during the coming year. The first meeting of the new year was held on Tuesday, Jan. 10, at the home of Sr. Ella Gorman. There is always a fine attendance and all are kept busy as bees sewing for the Red Cross. Many garments for women and children were finished Tuesday. During the business session in the afternoon election of officers was held, which resulted in all officers being retained for another year. They are as follows: president, Edith Miller; vice president, Agnes Eckert; secretary, Lila Wagner; treasurer, Leva Missman. The ladies are looking forward to another busy and profitable year under the capable leadership of Mrs. Miller. The next meeting of the Circle will be held on January 24 at the home of Sr. Mary Goodyear, Brinton Ave.

Lila Wagner, Secretary.

A WIDOW'S MITE

There comes to the office from time to time contributions to the Lord's work that touch our hearts with deep emotion. For example, just the other day a friend sent us "a widow's mite" from far away Alberta, Canada, together with the following information concerning it. The contribution consisted of sixty cents "to help along a little," and was from a widow "who has not sufficient food, clothing, and other necessities of life," according to our correspondent who sent the money for her, "but is always anxious to do what she can. She earned this money by patching the clothes of some men, and it truly represents 'the widow's mite.'"

May God bless abundantly this dear sister for the love and sacrifice she manifests and for her splendid example to us all.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Our Bible Class in Pomona on Sunday evenings has embarked upon a series of regular evening church services. Beginning Sunday evening, January 15, Bro. Cecil Smead will give the sermon; and then for seven Sundays following there will be a sermon by Bro. Geo. Lichty. These sermons are to be followed by a period of open forum discussion led by various members of the congregation. We hope that this will develop into a very interesting series of meetings.

Sr. Saylor's niece, Martha Stidham, was married at the "Wee Kirk of the Heather" in Forest Lawn Memorial Park at Glendale, on Thursday evening, January 5. Sr. McLeod played the organ, and Sr. Moore sang. The ceremony was attended by most of the Los Angeles congregation, who also went to the reception held at the home of the bride's parents in Palms.

The Los Angeles congregation is planning a "Prophetic Conference" to take place the first Sunday in February. Plans for the occasion are not yet definite, but we feel sure that the people here will enjoy it very much. The last one that was held took place last year, at which Bro. Young of San Diego was the principal speaker.

The pastor has found a great deal of difficulty in gathering materials for a sermon each Sunday for the younger members of the congregation and Sunday school, which we call for want of a better name a "sermonette," and so has hit upon the idea of having the younger ones give a talk each Sunday to the congregation upon some fundamental doctrine. Bro. Bradley Crundwell began last Sunday by ably presenting his reasons for believing in the near return of Christ to the earth in actual bodily, visible form.

We were much pleased to have present with us Sunday many of the Long Beach people to help to swell our crowd. Also, Sr. Orem from Redlands has come for her annual vacation days in Los Angeles and vicinity. She will be present, God willing, at church services for the next few Sundays. The return of Bro. Ward from his many wanderings has brought back to Sunday school many of those younger members from the church neighborhood who have been absent. We hope Bro. Ward will stay with us if it be for no other reason than that he is able to get these children to come.
Norman John McLeod, Pastor.

Owing to a number of the members being out of the city on the first Sunday, the annual business meeting of the church was postponed to the second Sunday, Jan. 8. The following officers were elected: elders, Bros. J. E. Hammond and E. C. Railsback; deacons, Bros. A. L. Brady and C. L. McCallister; secretary, Sr. Emma C. Railsback; treasurer, Bro. John Saylor.

Sr. Jessie Scroggs, who has been under the doctor's care for the past three months, is greatly improved and is planning to return to work about Feb. 1.

Bro. Cecil Smead, pastor of the Burr Oak, Ind., church, is sojourning in Southern California for a few weeks, visiting relatives and friends. He is teaching our Long Beach and Los Angeles Bible classes, to the enjoyment and edification of all in attendance.

Sr. Thelma Moore and little sons, Dean and Jerry, are in Los Angeles for a brief visit.

Bro. and Sr. Railsback had the pleasure of a visit with Bro. George Renner and family of Wheatland recently while on a business trip to Chico. Sr. Railsback gave a Bible lesson to the young people, some of whom are desirous of becoming obedient to the gospel message as soon as arrangements can be made for a visit to Los Angeles.

An evening was also spent in the home of Sr. Levona Thompson and family of Tulare, talking of the prophecies which indicate that the coming of the Savior draweth nigh. May the Lord bless these isolated ones.

Sr. Harriet Shepherd and Sr. Ida F. Orem of Redlands have been able to be in attendance at services since the beginning of the year.

Bro. and Sr. John Saylor have been spending the holidays with relatives and brethren in Arizona. Sr. Laura McCallister recently enjoyed a visit with her sister in Chico.

Our new Sunday school officers are: Bro. George Rahn, superintendent, and Sr. Mildred Stantial, secretary-treasurer.

MUTUAL SERVICE

Here's a tip: If you have been attending our church, and are interested in the things we teach and stand for, you'll enjoy reading our weekly magazine, The Restitution Herald. Each issue has a children's page, a Berean page, a page of timely and thought-provoking editorials, the week's Sunday school lesson, and many inspiring and scholarly articles on Bible themes. It is a religious journal that is interesting and different. It will visit your home every week for a whole year, to new subscribers for only $1.50. The pastor will be glad to explain further, or you can send directly to the publishers the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill., who will be glad to enter your subscription.—Golden Rule News, Cleveland, Ohio.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The annual reports of the various local churches throughout the country are encouraging. The public is taking much interest in prophetic themes these days, as should be the case.

Bro. Stephen Walker of Toulon, Ill., writes, "I am surely well pleased with the paper. It contains much food for thought." We are glad that so many find help and encouragement in these pages.

Bro. S. E. Boyer, Pelton, Va., writes that he is suffering greatly with pain in his limbs and asks our prayers for his relief. Will others join with us in petitioning the Father on his behalf?

Bro. and Sr. Glyn Starbuck of Rockford, Ill., expect to leave Thursday of this week for Southern California to remain until spring. Their address will be 1721 Court Ave., South Pasadena, Calif.

The special meeting at Grand Rapids has already resulted in several baptisms as well as in increased general interest throughout the church. May God continue to bless the earnest efforts of Pastor Siple and Evangelist Magaw in their endeavors to spread the gospel.

This week we are mailing notices to all subscribers whose subscriptions were due on or before January 1st. Should you receive such a notice after you have remitted for the paper please disregard it entirely. On the other hand, if you are behind in your subscription and can possibly renew at this time it will help The Herald out greatly.

We are grateful to Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Church of the Golden Rule, Cleveland, Ohio, for the recommendation he makes to his congregation in the last issue of "Golden Rule News." This indicates the way in which the local bulletin can be used to support the general work. The Herald in turn will continue to render to the local churches all the encouragement and assistance that it can. Our interests are mutual.

A new subscriber writes concerning the paper: "I have but one kick to register concerning The Restitution Herald: It is not large enough and does not come often enough."

The special Jewish number of The Restitution Herald to be issued January 31, will contain a large variety of articles pertaining to the position this favored people occupies in the plan of God. All special numbers are sent postpaid at five cents per copy.

Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., pastor of the Plum River (Ill.) church, is recovering from two operations, appendicitis and diseased tonsils. Both were performed in the Methodist hospital in Omaha. Bro. Krogh returned to the home of his parents at Blair, Nebraska on Wednesday, Jan. 11.

The Oregon, Ill., church and Sunday school held their joint annual business meeting last Thursday night, a full report of which will be published in our next issue. It is sufficient to say at this time that all departments showed a healthy growth throughout the year.

We wish to commend to your particular attention the article by Norman John McLeod, "A Cure for Depressions, Economic and Religious," which appears on page 6 of this issue. The author presents certain recent political developments in our own country in a most enlightening way. Read the article carefully.

"Land is one of the principal factors" (in the promise God made to Abraham), writes Bro. Norman John McLeod in a splendid article which is to appear in a special Jewish number of The Restitution Herald under date of January 31. Do not miss this issue.

In the same special issue Bro. A. L. Corbaley will answer the question, "Why Were the Jews God's Chosen People?" in which he presents a vivid picture of the chosen people returning to their own land. In addition to its prophetic content the article furnishes much information concerning late developments in Palestine. Remember, January 31!

ASKING FOR BREAD, THEY ARE GIVEN STONES

ONE of the really significant, and at the same time pathetic, symptoms of contemporary life is the number of groups of followers of the occult and esoteric who meet every week in hotels and halls in our great cities. Conventional Christians know little or nothing about these seekers after "truth." Yet their number is legion; and they represent a need which the churches seem to be not satisfying.

As I have watched groups of well-dressed, cultivated folk, mostly women, sitting eager and attentive at the feet of turbaned Hindus, or of American teachers of Hindu cults, I have pondered the problem of why these things should be. Most of these talks that I have heard have been a conglomeration of sheer showmanship—inaccurate orientalism which makes one who knows the East smile at the ignorance and gullibility of the hearers—and a hodge-podge of the philosophies and religions of the decadent nations.

Stripped of their picturesque trappings, these occult teachings are only diluted pantheism, Hellenic egoism, and rituals of breathing and introspection. Most of their devotees pass from one cult to another forever unsatisfied, yet flattered by the assurance that they are not like other folk, but are a superior order of spirits and minds, qualified to be "seekers." Poor things; they have been trying to feed their souls upon stale straw, dug up from the scrap-heaps of the Orient's ancient failures.

These wandering weaklings—for one never meets a rugged thinker or thoroughly educated person among them—represent the self-pitiful group of society. Also they stand as evidence that the churches have failed to meet the spiritual needs of some sensitive souls. Unsatisfied by ordinary church services, they have turned to these poor substitutes.

Over against all occultism and self-worship (I sometimes think that the Japanese sacred Shinto symbol, which is a mirror, to be found in the holy of holies of Japan's greatest shrines, not unfairly embodies this idea of religion) may sensibly be put the clear teachings of Jesus. The Master made no appeal to the self-esteeming few, whose boast is that they are different from and superior to the masses. His message was directed to the great body of mankind, the high and the low alike, grouping them as one in their common human needs. His teaching, He declared, was understandable by the lowly and the childlike. The only ones from whom its meaning is hidden are the proud in mind and arrogant in heart. And His doctrine is best revealed by His deeds.

"There are no liars like the sensations of our bodies," says one of Kipling's characters. A deal of feeling that considers itself spiritual doubt is only physical weariness or indignation. Even John the Baptist, the forerunner, who had himself baptized and recognized Jesus, fell under the prison mood of depression, after he had lain for a time in Herod's dungeon at Macherus. In his loneliness and suffering, he was assailed by misgivings as to whether, after all, he might not have been mistaken. Could it be that Jesus was not the expected Messiah?

Everybody understands that state of mind. Dark hours of discouragement and despair come to all of us wherein we distrust ourselves, our dearest friends, our past experiences, our work, our future, our faith itself. Usually, the cure is fresh air, exercise, and a change of scene. Once Luther's wife, according to a familiar story, appeared in mourning. The great reformer inquired the reason. "Is not God dead?" inquired the shrewd woman, thus dramatically rallying the sagging spirits of her down-hearted husband. Yes, we all can understand the prison mood of the brave Baptist. He at least had the wisdom to send messengers to Jesus to ask, bluntly and openly, the questions that were torturing his soul.

If our Lord had been a theologian, He might have written John a profound letter, buttressing His claims by quotations from Scripture and by deep logic. Instead, He merely said—wise Physician of souls!—"Go back and tell John what you have seen: the sick cured, the blind given sight, the dead raised, and the poor receiving the gospel."

Such was the habit of the Master's mind. He would have every tree judged only by its fruits. The best proof that He was the Messiah was that He was doing Messiah-work. He did what He did because He was what He was.

Christianity's unanswerable apologetic is the kind of work it does in the world. Jesus met human needs divinely; and content with these tidings, John went serenely to a hero's death.—William T. Ellis in Los Angeles Times.

A MEDITATION ON VALUES

---

By Dr. J. W. Lent

---

NOTICE that as one gets along in life one inclines more and more to the philosophical and meditative. One works and "stews and boils and toils and moils"; and after all, what does it end in but a seat by the fireside and a bone to chew on: A realization of how futile are the efforts of mankind beside the plans of the Creator. A never-changing, omnipotent, almighty God, beside evanescent, ephemeral mankind.

Life goes on, ever changing, ever new, supplied from the great inexhaustible store of the almighty loving Father. Depressions come and go, mankind has its big lights in history, great inventions change the face of advancing civilization; but over all the march of the planets is an unchanging procession, and God, the Ruler of all, supervises the dance of the atoms and "the music of the spheres." "Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever before thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God."

THE DESTINY OF THE EARTH

*"One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth for ever."—Ecclesiastes 1:4.
"Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever."—Psalm 104:5.*

THE final destiny of the earth is a subject that should be profoundly interesting to every one. God has informed us by Isaiah the Prophet that He formed the earth, established it, and made it to be inhabited; and then He assures us that He made it not in vain, that it will be inhabited just as He intended. It was made for man and given to man. Earth is man's "mother." He was made out of her dust and is, therefore, a part of her. The Psalmist says, "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men."—Psa. 115:16.

All men, however, will not inherit the earth. The Almighty has given it to all who believe in Him and lovingly obey Him, that is, do His will in preference to their own. He made what He wanted, and it just suited His purpose; and after it was made, He pronounced it "very good." He was satisfied with all the works of His hands.

In peopling this planet God would create a people pecially adapted to it, so that they will be indigenous to the soil. He does all things well. The idea that the earth was formed to raise inhabitants for another world is an absurd thought. In all the Book of God not a hint is given of any such thing. "Faith cometh by hearing" (or reading) "the word of God," and not from the word or the speculations of men. We have but one source of information on this subject, and of necessity but one source of faith.

But when we look through the present religious systems and find that not one in a thousand considers that man's destiny is linked with that of the earth, it has a most bewildering effect. Whence comes this almost universal impression? It is not a divine idea—God does not now miraculously instruct people; and if He did, surely He would not contradict His Word by a miracle! He has not said He would transport the inhabitants of this world to another one; but He has said that that portion worthy of it—the righteous—should "inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever."—Psalm 37:29.

Jehovah, speaking by Daniel, declared that the kingdom

He would set up under the whole heaven should be "given to the people of the saints of the most High" (Daniel 7:27), and speaking by Jesus said that "the meek . . . shall inherit the earth" (Matthew 5:5). "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."—Proverbs 2:21, 22.

As to the possibility that the righteous leave the earth, He has distinctly said that "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven."—John 3:13. On the other hand, we read in Revelation 5:10 that the righteous shall "reign on the earth." The Bible student must admit that we have scriptural grounds for our faith that our identity, as believers in the gospel, is bound up with the destiny of the earth.

How, then, may we account for the near-universality of the opposite view? Whence comes it? Heathen philosophers possessed great powers of mind, mind that nothing in this cosmos seemed to satisfy; and so they partially reasoned themselves into the belief that they themselves—their personality, their ego—survived the death of the body, which was but a temporary house for the real man to live in for a time. They were not quite sure that this was the truth; but they thought it was and hoped it was, nevertheless at times having grave doubts about any life after death at all.

It is apparent that it was from such vain speculations as these that the idea came that earth's inhabitants go to rewards and punishments immediately at death. It grew out of the heathen dogma that the real man does not die; and, supposing him to be alive, of course he must go somewhere; and imagination provided the place. It was a general acknowledgment of the truth of a lie, the first lie recorded in history, that of the serpent who said, "Ye shall not surely die."—Genesis 3:4.

That the very earth in which we live is included in the

The Editor's Prayer

BLESS, we pray Thee, our Father, our efforts to serve Thee acceptably. As the hearts of men are failing them in fear, be Thou with us Thy servants, that we may bring to them the assuring promises of a coming Savior who will relieve them of all their anxieties and establish upon this sad old earth a reign of gladness and of peace. Help us that we may persuade them to believe and to obey the glad tidings which alone can bring to them the forgiveness of sins and the joy of eternal hope.

Religious Developments

ONE of the most interesting, and in some ways encouraging, religious developments of these last days is the widespread interest that is being manifested in the study of eschatology, the science of last things, and particularly that branch of eschatology that has to do with the coming of Christ.

Thousands of intelligent people are seriously seeking answers to the problems associated with the future as it is revealed in the Bible. They are endeavoring to marshal the facts of past and present history in the light of the Word of God and to determine thereby the approximate position occupied by the world today with reference to the focal point of all prophecy, the advent of our Lord.

This increasing concern over the return of Jesus to the earth and the events connected with it may be attributed to two major causes: first, the controversy between pseudo-science and religion, which has developed within the churches into opposing schools of thought known as the Modernist and the Fundamentalist; and, second, the remarkable changes—political, social, and material—that are taking place with such startling rapidity in these days. Both of these conditions are impelling those who still believe in the inspiration of the Bible to question their meaning from a prophetic standpoint.

The Modernist controversy has driven the believer in the supernatural origin of Scripture to study its pages with greater zeal than he has put forth for decades. And as he has approached his study under the firm conviction that whatever he finds in the Word of God is true, he has uncovered many wonderful revelations which he had entirely overlooked in the past; and the Bible has taken on not only a new interest, but a new meaning to him as well.

As his study has progressed, to his intense surprise he has frequently found it necessary to discard, revise, or modify many of his previously held ideas. Also his faith in the great verities of the Christian religion has been strongly fortified as he comes to see in all that occurs around him positive evidence of God's presence in the world. He finds in the fulfillment of prophecy positive proof of the Bible's truth. He no longer gropes in the darkness of doubt and uncertainty, but, like Abraham of old, is fully persuaded that all that God has promised He is able also to perform.

The longer he studies the theme of the Lord's coming, the more deeply he is impressed with the wonder of it all. It is so far-reaching in its effects, so broad in its scope, so enexpressibly grand in its purposes! As the thoughtful and devout student penetrates more deeply into its meaning, he is moved to rapture and to awe.

This is the work of God! It could not be otherwise. It is altogether too great in conception, in accomplishment, and in eternal nature of its final purpose to be the result of man's planning or of man's doing.

The thoughtful are especially impressed with the way in which the coming of the Lord meets and answers all the great questions which trouble the minds of men; how every stratum of society will be affected by it, all races of men enriched and comforted by it. And he sees the reason why "all nations shall call him blessed."

To conceive of the coming of Christ as providing blessings alone for those who are the members of His body today is to deprive Him of the marvelous glory that the prophets declared should come to Him as the Regatherer of scattered Israel and the One who would bring peace to the warring nations of the world.

It is true that His most marvelous work will consist of raising those who sleep in Him and crowning them with immortality, but beyond that splendid accomplishment lies a thousand years of opportunity and of service before He reaches the grand conclusion of His task and turns back into the Father's hands the power and the authority He has wielded since the day it was conferred upon Him at His resurrection from the dead.

Is the World Going Into the Hands of a Receiver?

THIS world of ours is about to go into the hands of a receiver. This is no wild, fanciful statement, but words of truth and soberness, a statement made on the highest and most reliable authority.

The world comes to this final extremity after millenniums of frightful mismanagement by those to whom its interests have been intrusted. The course of human events has been directed by neither right nor reason. Just recently, for example, the world's greatest nations poured out their wealth like water, to gain what? To gain nothing at all; but on the contrary, to engage in a four years' orgy of killing and destroying, causing incalculable loss of life and property, leaving the affairs of the whole world upset. Fourteen years later we still feel the effects of that awful carnage.

After all that could be done for the world by those wielding the greatest power and by those possessing the greatest wisdom; after every form of government has been given the most thorough trial; after two thousand years of the preaching of the gospel; after all that education could do through centuries of effort; after the most marvelous advancement in scientific knowledge; after all that philanthropy and legislation could do to uplift and safeguard mankind; after all this, there is today not a country in the world that is not facing crisis (excepting Palestine), not an area on the surface of world affairs that remains calm, not a spot in the political sky that is not black. Everywhere there is agitation and upheaval.

There is a world crisis in politics, in industry, in finance, in morals. Europe presents a picture of economic and financial chaos. Desperately in need of peace, the world is stirred by the spirit of war. Fear, distrust, hatred, and greed rule in the councils of those to whom the people look for deliverance.

"Half the world is in a state of anarchy; the whole world is menaced by general bankruptcy," says Signor Ferrero of Italy. The disarmament conference in session at Geneva is spoken of by the Vossische Zeitung, a leading German newspaper, as the world's last chance of redemption by the shoring up of the tottering economic structure; and if this redemption fails, the world will go to its doom. General bankruptcy, if it comes, will bring general revolution, which already has swept a large part of the globe. H. G. Wells, noted British historian, goes so far as to say that civilization is doomed. "The red flag will advance to the Rhine, maybe to the Atlantic," he said. "Down will go western Europe in one awful smash. Anarchy will seize upon these doomed United States. Mankind will take to caves and skin panties."

Such being the pass to which our world has come after all its centuries of trial and opportunity and after all that its wisest and greatest men could do for it, what else can the God who created it do but put it into the hands of a receiver? The world is morally and spiritually bankrupt; and that is the real reason why it is so nearly bankrupt financially. Sin is at the bottom of the whole difficulty; creation groans under an accumulated weight of transgression. The Prophet Isaiah foresaw this day, and wrote of it: "Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth. . . The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and rise not again."—Isaiah 24:17-20.

The Savior foresaw this day, and said concerning it in His discourse on the Mount of Olives: "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the power of heaven shall be shaken."—Luke 21:25, 26.

JESUS TO BE THE RECEIVER

But what authority is there for the assertion that the world is going into the hands of a receiver? There is the authority of the infallible Word of God. He who saw the end from the beginning has made provision for every eventuality. He who died to redeem what Adam lost has been appointed earth's Receiver. The Psalmist said of this: "I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—Psalm 2:7, 8. The Prophet Micah wrote of it: "And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion."—Micah 4:8.

The Prophet Daniel foresaw this receivership and said of it: "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to

The Coming King

O watchman on the mountain height,
Proclaim the coming day;
Behold, the spires of golden fires
Point upward far away.

O watchman, bid a sleeping church
Awake, arise, and pray;
The Heavenly Bridegroom soon will come,
And now is on His way!

Coming, yes, He's coming,
The Dayspring from on high;
To end all strife, and bring us life,
The hour is drawing nigh.

Coming, surely coming,
Let all the ransomed sing;
The hills are bright with holy light
All hail the coming King!

the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Daniel 7:13, 14.

TO REIGN FOREVER

The Prophet John wrote of it: "The seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."—Revelation 11:15.

This present world, the age-old theater of sin and rebellion, must pass through the throes of dissolution. A tempest worse than that which destroyed the antediluvian world is before us. Portents of the coming storm are everywhere visible, and men's hearts are failing them for fear as they look into the future. In many minds the anxious inquiry will be raised, Where is there a place of refuge? Through the Prophet Joel is given the answer: "The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call."—Joel 2:31, 32.

Deliverance will be found in the "remnant" of the servants of God. The remnant is the last; and the last body of Christ's followers prior to His appearing, the church of the last days, are they of whom it is said: "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."—Revelation 14:12.—*Leon A. ## HOME MISSIONS

---

A CORRESPONDENT of The Bible Record carries Gospels in his car to give to hitch-hikers he takes up. "I took in nine men one day in going eighty-seven miles. I handed one of them a Gospel and asked him to read a chapter aloud. Then I had the Gospel passed to the next man and he read. I took one man sixty miles, and before I let him out he had read to me the whole book of Mark. To have a Jew read the first chapters of Luke and heartily promise to read to the next man who picks him up; to see a Catholic remove his hat while the Scriptures are being read; to pick up a stranded, penniless couple on a cold rainy evening and bring them thirty-eight miles on their journey toward a promised job, makes me rather indifferent to the warning given me by my friends as to the risk I run in taking in hikers. I hand them a Gospel as soon as they get in the car or I might say I draw a Gospel on them before they draw a gun on me. There is no better time to do personal work than when you are helping a stranger who needs help."—Selected.

FOR CHRIST AND COUNTRY

RELIGION and patriotism are closely allied terms. One is fundamental to the existence of the other. There is not to be found a stable government on the earth which could not have woven into its fabric some sort of religious faith. The history of nations has proven that victory has perched upon the banners of those peoples who kept aflame their religious fervor. On the other hand, history has often proven that nations forgetting their religious element have passed into oblivion. There is a psychology about this that cannot be ignored.

It is an inevitable law that those who choose the highest in the outworking of their lives are the noblest. Whatever may be said about reflex action and all that sort of thing, facts of history prove that faith in God is probably worth while. It may be very well for human egotism to boast of its preeminence, and yet this preeminence fails to accomplish the most important things in life. Sometimes we refer to the days when men were men. The only time when men are men is when they recognize life's highest opportunity and with all their hearts pledge themselves to its undertakings. There is something about religious hope which enthuses one to more ardent endeavor than simply the practical values of this practical life.

Some one has suggested the slogan, "My country when she is right and my country when she is wrong." Such a slogan is certainly not of the highest caliber. If there is any virtue in justice and righteousness, if there is any reason why the righteousness of a cause may be established, then that righteousness certainly is worthy our consideration. It is said that during the great World War one of the great nations which was finally defeated in the strife used the slogan, "Men and God." Humanity will find itself always in defeat when it expresses itself with such egotism. Do we care to recognize God at all? It certainly is becoming, at least, for us to give Him first place in our lives.

The true patriot loves his country so dearly because he loves God more.

That patriotism that conceives of country not in terms of dollars nor military force nor waving flags nor fertile acreage; the patriotism that conceives of country in terms of hearth and home and household, the aggregate of homes that make a nation; this patriotism, I say, is a sacred passion; it belongs with the love one gives his own flesh and blood. The man whose heart does not beat quick to the throb of his country's life as it is thus expressed must be poor and mean indeed.

The Lord Jesus Christ was a patriot. He loved His land and people, and His heart was grieved with their hardness of heart. Moses a patriot; Paul a patriot; John Knox prayed God would give him Scotland rather than life.

The greatest allegiance to country is that of a Christian patriot, the allegiance to Christ which enriches and deepens the allegiance to one's country.—A. B. Rollins in The World's Crisis.

FAITH AND WORKS

By George B. Alldridge

“For the word of God is living, and energetic, and more cutting than Any two-edged Sword, cutting through even to a Separation of Life and Breath, and of Joints and Marrow, and able to judge the Thoughts and Intentions of the Heart.”—Hebrews 4:12, Emphatic Diaglott.

IT is said that Martin Luther's whole life and thought were suddenly changed by one scripture, viz., Romans 1:17: “The just shall live by faith.” Paul, its author, acknowledges it is a quotation by saying, “As it is written.” We look up the original, which reads, “Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but the just shall live by his faith.”—Habakkuk 2:4. Herein are two classes, the proud and those who are humble.

A scripture I often find quoting itself in my mind is Psalm 103:17, 18; “But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.”

Naturally anyone interested would enquire as to what David means by keeping His covenant. An answer to our question is found in Deuteronomy 7:9: “Know therefore that the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations.”

John tells us, “This is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him, and hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.” In another place he writes, “Again a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.”

The religion of Christ is the easiest religion in the world to understand. What a complicated and intricate thing the study of law or medicine is, and, in fact, of all professions, especially theology. One winter many years ago I attended a course of lectures upon this subject—theology. About all I got out of it was to understand the meaning of words, terms, and phrases used by theologians.

I was very sorry when the brethren at the Bible House at Oregon found it expedient to dismiss the feature of the Bible School. I believe these young men and women were being instructed in the essentials of our faith, in the best method of preaching and presenting the requirements of the gospel as laid down in the good Word of God and not as taught in theological seminaries which have evolved the two schools, Modernism and Fundamentalism, that are playing sad havoc in the religious world today.

Somewhere I have read that Martin Luther did not have the same warmth of feeling toward James as he held toward Paul. James wrote, “But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?” and, “What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him?” Luther taught that faith alone was essential; hence, he differed with James and seemed to be in harmony with Paul.

But Paul upon this question is as clear as the tone of a bell. I will quote from the Diaglott: “But now these Three remain,—Faith, Hope, Love;—But of these the greatest is Love.”

Recently I read E. C. Dawson's Heroines of Missionary Adventure. In this book Dawson relates the adventures of heroic women in all parts of the world, of women suffering pain, hunger, and privations of every kind solely for the love they had for men and women degraded and debased by sin, devoting their lives, in many cases even unto death, to win them to Christ.

Archer Wallace, the well-known and popular author, in his Heroes of Peace relates the story of Dr. Albert Schweitzer, one of the most gifted men, who left everything behind in his native Germany to minister to the natives in the most dense jungle at Lambarene in Africa. I will quote his closing paragraph:

“Dr. Schweitzer went back to Africa and to the poor people who so eagerly looked for his return. He had resumed his work among the black people of the jungle, for whom, even as a boy, he had tender sympathy. And so the world has lost a great musician, Strassburg University has lost a great scholar, but the poor suffering natives of the forest have restored to them a man whose love, sympathy, and humility is one of the miracles of modern life.”

His sketch of William H. P. Anderson's work among the lepers in a large leper colony at Chandkuri, Central India; his description of the way the general public treated the lepers before he came to minister to their needs, are heart-rending and seem almost impossible. I will not relate the suffering and condition of these lepers—it is too horrible; but shall quote one of the instances when the child is taken from its mother:

“Often it was very difficult to get a poor woman, stricken with leprosy, to give up her yet untainted child. Such mothers, driven out from the society of others, found in the love of sweet babies the one bright spot in the world and so wanted to keep them. Yet the child would surely become infected before long if not taken away. William Anderson, always firm but ever kind, used patient persuasion. At first the mother would be suspicious and fearful, remembering all the cruel treatment she had received. Then gradually these feelings would give place to confidence and gratitude. The mother, after a great struggle and with eyes wet with tears, would bring her child to Mr. Anderson and say: 'Take her, Sahib, take her; see, I give her to you.' "

Who can read the life of George Muller and the wonderful work he carried on at Bristol, England, educating, clothing, feeding and caring for thousands of orphans, relying absolutely upon God, never making a direct appeal to any man, and not feel his whole being moved and hear Jesus saying, "Which now of these three (a priest, a Levite, and a Samaritan), thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves? And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise."

To me, one of the most wonderful things said about Jesus was Peter's testimony of "how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him." I read this morning Matthew 10. The last verse reads, "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."

It is true that Jesus said, "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth." But read Matthew 25:31-46. This happens when Jesus comes in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him.

Faith does not seem to have a very conspicuous place; but how about love, love as expressed by works? Almost the last word Jesus said to John is recorded in Revelation 22:12: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

Today even brothers pass each other as though they were strangers, all because of a difference in faith. Whoever heard of any division being caused through the exercise of love? Who can read history, especially the exploits of the crafty and cruel Duke of Alva in seeking to reduce Holland and to slay William the Silent (his emissary eventually did) and his devilish compatriot, Torquemada, director of the Spanish Inquisition, and not see what havoc a difference of so-called faith has executed?

Read the biography of William Penn and his relation with the Indians and the history of hundreds of others, both men and women, who were exercised in mind by the promptings of love as well as faith; and note how men are held together and not divided. If before a division was made 1 Corinthians 13 and Psalm 133 were read and thought over, how many would withdraw from their brethren?

Of course, a knowledge of the doctrine is essential; because Jesus said so: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

When I read of the early colonial days especially of the regime of the Puritans, who professed having such a great love for purity of doctrine, the word "doctrine" grates upon my ears. I waive all claims to be considered a doctrinaire; but I desire to be known as one who in simplicity believes that Jesus expressed and exemplified in His life and teaching just one doctrine, that is, the great commandment in the law: "Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

In my reading of all the religions (and I have covered the ground very thoroughly) Jesus seems to sum them all up: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." In doing this an ever-present urge will be in our minds to cultivate and practice what Peter outlines in 2 Peter 1:5-11: "For if ye do these things, ye shall never fail."

THE FORGOTTEN WATERPOT

---

TRAVELING northward from Judea on their way to Galilee, Jesus and His disciples wended their way slowly over the rugged hills and valleys of old Palestine. They were passing through Samaria, and, as it was about noon, the disciples went away into a city to buy food. Jesus, however, remained alone, and, being wearied with His journey, sat down on Jacob's Well to rest. Jesus, you know, was human and found it necessary to rest quite often from His labors.

While He sat there, a woman came to draw water; and Jesus said unto her, "Give me to drink." With these words He began His famous conversation with the woman of Samaria, recorded in the fourth chapter of John.

The woman was surprised that Jesus, a Jew, should ask drink of her, a Samaritan. The Jews, you remember, looked down upon the Samaritans and refused to have any dealings with them. Our Savior answered her query of surprise with the statement, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water."

The woman then asked another question, saying, "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water? Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?"

The Master's answer to these questions was, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Without a moment's hesitation she asked that she be given this water to drink, and Jesus asked her to bring her husband there. She then informed Him that she had no husband, to which Jesus replied, "Thou hast well said, I have no husband: for thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly."

Astonished at His ability to read her past, she said, "Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet. Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship."

Up to this point the conversation had centered mainly around the drinking of spiritual water, but now the subject changes to that of worship. In the Old Testament period, the Jews worshiped Jehovah in a designated place, such as the temple at Jerusalem. But Jesus, bringing as He did a new dispensation, taught the woman this new truth: He declared, "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

During all this time the woman was ignorant of the identity of Jesus. But like all Jews, she firmly believed that a Messiah would come having power to tell all things. Jesus then revealed Himself to her by saying simply, "I that speak unto thee am he."

Here apparently the conversation ended; for the record says that the surprised woman left her waterpot and hastened into the city, where she told them of a man who had told her all things that ever she did.

This short conversation between our Savior and the Samaritan woman is one of the greatest in history. In it are statements of Jesus rich in teaching and truth. In this conversation Jesus pointed to Himself as the great well of life, from which we can draw an inexhaustible supply of water springing up into everlasting life. He revealed the broadness of true worship in the hearts of individuals driving home the great truth that, years later, Peter learned as recorded in Acts 10:34, 35: "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

Is it any wonder that this Samaritan woman, having listened to such wonderful teachings and revelations and discovered that the teacher was the Christ Himself, should forget her waterpot and hasten to tell her friends about this great man? He had taught her more in that brief period than she had ever known. She came to draw water, but left to tell of the Messiah. Wonderful experience! Glorious privilege! May you and I approach this fountain of living water in such a way that we, too, may come to draw and leave to tell of Jesus, the Christ.

THE TRANSFIGURATION

SOME texts are quoted to prove that righteous men go to heaven when they die. Jesus went to heaven, it is true; but then He ascended bodily, and He said to His disciples: "Ye shall seek me: and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so say I now to you."—John 13:33. And yet we are asked to believe that those disciples have been with Him in heaven for eighteen hundred years!

This astonishing demand is made of us on the strength of a few passages of Scripture which are thought to give it every possible countenance. It is important, therefore, that we should duly consider them.

The scene which occurred at the Lord's transfiguration is supposed to be triumphant evidence on the point in question. There appeared on the mount Moses and Elijah, who talked with Jesus. This occurrence was styled by Christ a "vision." He charged those who were witnesses of it, saying: "Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead."—Matthew 17:9.

Now a vision was not always a reality, though it might be presented to the mind with all the vividness and force of a reality. When Peter was miraculously delivered from prison, the record states that "he wist not that it was true that had been done unto him by the angel, but thought he saw a vision." He thus distinguished between what was true or actual and what was but a suggestive impression on the mind, as we see things often in imagination and in dreams when there is not objective reality to correspond with what we thus behold with the mental eyes.

But it may be asked how with this theory we can account for the conversation that took place among Moses and Elijah and Christ. In answer to this question, we should refer to the case of the vision which Peter saw of a great sheet, knit at the four corners and let down to the earth full of all manner of living creatures. He was in a trance when he saw it and heard a voice and replied to what that voice said. But the whole thing took place in Peter's brain.

It is quite possible, therefore, for conversation to have been carried on during the vision of the transfiguration in a similar way. If, however, Moses and Elijah were really present on that occasion, it is still certain that they were not present as disembodied spirits, but as men of form and substance like Christ Himself. Elijah never died; and if Moses was there, he must have been raised from the dead. So the narrative cannot be very successfully quoted in proof of the idea that dead men can live again without bodies.—Selected from the writings of Robert Ashcroft by Rufus A. Curtis.

NOAH'S ARK

"AUCTION SALE—Having decided to quit making Arks, I will sell at public auction, two horses, two bears, two cows, two lions, etc., etc."

Such was the full page announcement in the daily paper the evening before the great flood. For some one hundred twenty years Noah had been preparing the ark and giving warning of an impending flood. But there were no visible signs of a coming catastrophe and Noah was regarded as rather peculiar and anyone who could invent a new joke at his expense was well on his way to notoriety. The paper also carried a statement from the weather bureau assuring the people that there was not a drop of water in sight, while the comic section pictured Noah on top of the ark, pouring water over the edge to make the animals think it was raining.

But scoffers and unbelievers are not confined to Noah's day; there are many people of our own time who feel that it is an impossible story. Many of these, however, are led to doubt the fact of the flood through pictures that present the ark as being about the size of a barn, black dark and air tight. It is our purpose in this article to correct this erroneous view and show the reasonableness of the ark as set forth in the scriptural account.

Since it would be some one hundred and twenty years from the time the first beam was laid until the ark would float, the kind of material was of utmost importance. God provided for this when He directed Noah to construct it out of gopher wood, which is somewhat similar to our cypress and will not readily decay.

"The length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits, and the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits." There are different sizes of cubits, one of which was twenty-five inches and another eighteen. Since our purpose is to prove the possibility of all animals finding room in the ark, we will use the smaller cubit. Thus the ark was four hundred fifty feet long, seventy-five feet wide and forty-five feet high. At different times I have taken a congregation out of doors to "measure the ark." After having some tell us their idea of its length, it is indeed a surprise when four hundred fifty feet are measured off.

"A window shalt thou make to the ark and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above." Here is a source of great difficulty to many. A window, or light, or open space is to be finished a cubit above. Does that mean that all of those animals are to secure light and ventilation through a small opening in the roof only eighteen inches square? Certainly such a thing would be impossible. Only one dimension of this window is given. It is to be eighteen inches and is to be placed above. That is, an open space, eighteen inches wide, is to run the entire distance around the ark at the top of each story, thus giving perfect light and ventilation to the many thousands of animals within.

"And the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof, with lower second and third stories shalt thou make it." The ark had three stories, each with a floor space four hundred fifty feet long and seventy-five feet wide.

"And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark." Probably the average person would have difficulty in recalling one hundred species of land animals, yet there are many hundreds. It has been estimated that there are two hundred larger than a sheep. This would include such animals as the lion, the bear and the cow. There are seven hundred fifty-seven different species of land animals between a sheep and a rat; such animals as the cat, the rabbit and the dog. There are thirteen hundred fifty-nine different species smaller than a rat.

Then there are some ten thousand species of birds; two thousand, two hundred and thirty-one of reptiles and one hundred thousand insects.

Noah was to take two of every species of the unclean animals and seven of the clean into the ark (there are but ten such species mentioned in Deut. 14:4); thus we can see that he had a great number of living creatures to provide for.

Noah entered the ark on the tenth day of the second month of his six hundredth year and left the ark on the twenty-seventh day of the second month of his six hundredth and first year; thus they were in the ark one year and seventeen days.

Our purpose in this study is to prove that it was possible for Noah to put all of the animals into the ark and care for them. Let us not think that it was necessary for Noah to take the largest of the species. There was no need for him to take two elephants weighing two tons each when younger animals would eat less, take less room and be better fitted for breeding purposes.

We have seen that there are many more of the smaller animals than there are of the larger. The average size of all the animals is about that of a common house cat. The government regulations for a chicken house are three square feet for each hen. We will give each average-sized animal five square feet since we want to make sure that they will have plenty of room.

We do not know how Noah arranged the ark but we will say that he put the animals in the lower deck, the food in the second and the four families occupied the third story.

There were thirty-three thousand, seven hundred fifty square feet of floor space in the lower deck making ample room for every animal to have one and two-thirds as much floor space as present day government regulations and have several thousand square feet for the birds, reptiles and insects.

There were over five hundred thousand cubic feet of space in the second story that could be packed with food. The thirty-three thousand square feet of floor space on the upper deck could have accommodated some twenty five-room bungalows with clotheslines and sidewalks making ample room for each family to have their own private quarters. Of course they lacked the radio to make it modern but why worry about that when they had a thousand song birds in the rafters to sing to them?

Noah had one hundred twenty years to prepare the ark. We will give him forty years to cut down the trees, square the timbers and erect the frame work. We will give him another forty years to cut out the boards, lay the floors and put on the siding. In the next twenty years he could split out the shingles and place them on the roof, boil down the pitch and apply it within and without. One hundred years have passed and the ark is ready to float. But there are twenty more busy years until the flood.

"Rooms shalt thou make in the ark." That is, he made stalls for the cows, horses and buffaloes; cages for the lions, bears and such animals; great apartments where he could keep such harmless animals as the sheep, deer, etc., together; he made hives for the bees and coops for the chickens; large rooms with pools for the turtles, frogs and reptiles to live in their natural environment.

The lower deck was four hundred fifty feet long and seventy-five feet wide. We will say that he ran a partition down the center of the ark, making two spaces four hundred fifty feet long and thirty-seven feet wide. Then he could run an alleyway five feet wide down the center of each of these sections making four sections, for stalls and rooms, four hundred fifty feet long and sixteen feet wide arranged so Noah and the boys could feed the animals from both sides of the alleyways. We will give Noah ten years to build these rooms.

This leaves ten years until the flood but they are busy years for Noah for God had said, "Take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather it to thee." The five hundred thousand cubic feet in the second deck could have been partitioned off into great rooms where tons of dried fruit such as raisins, prunes, etc., were stored; other rooms were stored with beans, dried corn and peas; there were great bins of grain such as wheat, oats and barley, while stored in other bins were tons of nuts, hickory nuts, walnuts and many other kinds of nuts.

He was commanded to take of ALL food that is eaten. A large herd of cows provided many tons of cheese; acres of cane were made into blackstrap molasses; there were great bins of apples, potatoes, cabbage, and carrots while another room held tons of honey. Then the greater part was filled with hay, clover hay, timothy hay and a dozen kinds of hay we never heard of.

Noah and his families had access to all of this great store of goods and in addition could have had a different flavor of milk every day in the week; cow's milk on Monday, buffalo milk on Tuesday, camel's milk on Wednesday and goat's milk on Thursday. Then there were also different varieties of eggs; hen eggs on Monday, ostrich eggs on Tuesday, goose eggs on Wednesday, etc.

The great day came. The ark was loaded with its precious cargo. Noah walked up the gang plank, stepped across the threshold and into the ark. Probably some one called after him, "Hey! Do you want some one to help you shut the door?"

And indeed it may have presented a problem to unbelief, for it would probably require the combined strength of ten men to move that door.

But! Look! The massive structure moves! The ponderous door swings round! Unseen hands have taken hold and it closes with a dull thud. "And the Lord shut him in." Ah—Noah's faith has won, and he has become heir of the righteousness which is by faith, having prepared the ark to the saving of his house because he judged Him faithful who had promised. "By faith, Noah."—Hebrews 11:7.—By R. I. Humberd in The Defender.

THE DESTINY OF THE EARTH

redemption that is in Christ Jesus, the Bible clearly states. As it is a large field to elaborate upon, we can only give a brief outline of the subject so that the reader may be encouraged to prosecute the study for himself. He will be richly repaid for doing so.

In the crowning chapter of the Epistle to the Romans Paul says, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us-ward. For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God. For the creation was subject to vanity, not of its own will, but by reason of him who subjected it, in hope that the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only so, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for our adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."—Romans 8:18-23, R. V. The great God-idea, to which expression is here given, is that the redemption of their estate—the earth—is included in the redemption of the saints.

There is such a fitness of things in this that it should commend itself to every candid mind. Man's dominion was lost by disobedience, and the ground was cursed for man's sake. The first Adam left his ruined children a ruined legacy. But it is to be restored and blessed in the second Adam and given back to those redeemed from among men by the precious blood of Christ.

It is an inheritance of glory to the perfect man in Christ Jesus. The history of man and earth shows that they fell together, and the resurrection of our planet to newness of life is just as certain as that of the saints.

The efficacy of the resurrection of Christ, the power of His all-glorifying Spirit, will bring about or result in the re-gensis of all things. Do we not hear Him whispering from heaven (Revelation 21:5): "Behold, I make all things new"? "No more curse" (Revelation 22:3). When God puts His shoulder to the wheel, human science and culture will be put to shame. The power that created the heavens and the earth can emancipate the earth from the repressive curse that has so long kept its forces in check and blasted its efforts to yield its increase. Yes, old earth will be born again—regenerated. He will make the place of His feet glorious; it will be a grand beginning instead of coming to an end; earth will be restored to more than its primeval beauty, order, and glory.

The earth is groaning under the consequences of sin; it is a common distress. It awaits millennial blessedness. Not till then will its groans cease, its sighs be hushed, and its chains broken. Sometimes, indeed, a bright spot is seen; sometimes a smile plays upon its face and reminds us of Paradise. There are patches of sunshine here and there; but they are followed by dark clouds, by thunderstorms and cyclones, tidal waves and pestilence, by famine, fear, and death! O the groans that go up from old Mother Earth.

Long has her bosom been made the graveyard of her children. Oh, the myriads of sin-stricken and plague-smitten humanity—cemeteries piled with the dead! The present disorder and death come from a moral cause. Earth's sorrows date from the hour of man's disobedience. Since then what land has not borne thistles and thorns? Nature still looks painfully into the future, although her eyes sometimes glisten with the gleam of oncoming glories when restitution shall become a fact. Her own resurrection—so to speak—and the life of the very Christ, mingling with all her forces, will wake her to immortal beauty and glory. Thus creation's hope is staked upon the apocalypse of God's Son, and the redemption from death of the faithful of all ages.—The Word of the Kingdom.

SHALL WE USE GOD, OR SHALL GOD USE US?

DR. DIXON, formerly of London, has done helpful preaching in the past. His messages at the Chattanooga Bible Conference, years ago, were signally spiritual and passionately persuading. The multitudes were helped by his ministry. One day he said practically this: "In these days the human is trying to use the Divine instead of the Divine using the human."

Man would use God, but does not want to be used by God. Man would rather control the spiritual than to be controlled by the spiritual. The old natural man does not desire to be an instrument; he has ambition to be the initiator.

Man is willing for God to be a servant, but not willing that God should be a Sovereign. He is willing for God to be his convenience, but not his Counsellor! This is true in such days as these, when the deification of man and the humiliation of God is popular.

These are days when the "haughtiness" of man is "lifted" high and the holiness of God is "brought low," but there comes a day, says the Prophet Isaiah, "a day of Jehovah of hosts upon all that is proud and haughty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low."

The Scriptures show us many men who attempted to make use of God, when in fact they were being used of God.

Pharaoh tried to use God. He seemed to have understanding that he had been raised up by God, for the Scriptures say, "For this purpose have I raised thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth." Pharaoh made a mistake in understanding. He thought the word "my" was for himself, and attempted to translate it: "Show my power and my name throughout the earth." But God said, "My power, my name," and used not the name of Pharaoh. He thought he was raised up, not knowing that he would be brought down. He tried to use God, when God was using him.

Nebuchadnezzar tried to make use of God. He found God an instrument too great for his hands and learned it was far better to yield himself to the hands of God than attempt to handle God with his own hands. He came to a wonderful conclusion as the result of his humiliation under the mighty hand of God. Said he: "Now I, Nebuchadnezzar, praise, extol and honour the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase."

Cyrus was an instrument in the hands of God, and was used of God until he tried to use God. God will not be used of any man; but God will use any man who is ready to be used of God. There are plenty of applicants in the market to purchase the power of God. It would be a personal commodity and convenience.

There was a certain man called Simon who had long been a sorcerer, and knew the secret, and had enjoyed the success of demon power. He was impressed with the power of the Spirit upon Peter and the apostles. He readily saw the superiority of divine power. It was wonderful and sensational. So he quickly went to market with money. He said, as he offered the money: "Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I may lay my hands, he may receive the Holy Spirit." Peter said: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought the gift of God may be purchased with money." He wanted to use God. He saw Peter used by God. Simon did not care for this, because it demanded abandonment, and resulted in persecution. So he thought he would like to use God, and make a little purchase of power for his personal use.

God will use a man, but He will not permit a man to use Him.—H. S. Lerander in The Bible Advocate.

GRACE BEFORE MEAT

DR ALFRED ADLER is quoted as saying that stomach trouble frequently, or usually, represents an attitude of the sufferer's which is directed against some one.

Resentment tends to produce dyspepsia. It is itself a form and the most pernicious form of mental dyspepsia.

Get right with the world if you want your meals to set right with you.

There is only half the truth in the saying that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. The other half is that the way to his stomach is through his heart.

Affection aids digestion.—Selected.

THE CHRISTIAN'S DEVOTIONAL LIFE

WHEN YOU pray, you should not pray as a hypocrite; for the hypocrites pray on the streets for praise from the people. God is watching over you to see if you are believing in Him or are just wanting to be praised by the people. You should go in a closet or in a place by yourself to pray to God.

Because God is watching over you, He knows before you pray what you will ask for; and if you go to church and Sunday school, read the Bible, and believe in Him, He will gladly give it to you.

You should not take thought of the clothes that you wear to Sunday school or church, but go to get the thought of Christ in your mind; for that is worth more than all the clothes or money in the world.

Take no thought of what you eat and drink; for if you do what God wants you to do, He will provide it for you as He provides for the fowls of the air and the lilies of the water. They do not sow and reap, but God takes good care of them.

Do not think of money or riches all the time; for where your thoughts are your heart will be. "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other."

We should not worry about the times now; for if we study the Bible, go to church, and believe in Christ, He will care for us.—Betty Pettinger, eleven years old, a member of Mrs. Geo. Siple's class in the Oregon, Illinois, Sunday school.

I WILL PRAISE THE LORD AT ALL TIMES

Winter has a joy for me,
While the Savior's charms I read,
Lowly, meek, from blemish free,
In the snowdrop's pensive head.

Spring returns, and brings along
Life-invigorating suns:
Hark! the turtle's plaintive song
Seems to speak His dying groans!

Summer has a thousand charms,
All expressive of His worth;
'Tis His sun that lights and warms,
His the air that cools the earth.

What! has autumn left to say
Nothing of the Savior's grace?
Yes, the beams of milder day
Tell me of His smiling face.

Light appears with early dawn
While the sun makes haste to rise;
See His bleeding beauties drawn
On the blushes of the skies.

Evening with a silent pace,
Slowly moving in the west,
Shows an emblem of His grace,
Points to an eternal rest.

"I HAVE CHOSEN YOU"

"JOHN, you may be captain of one side and Fred of the other," said Miss Marshall, the new teacher in the room where Jimmie and John were enrolled.

Now, all the boys and girls in the room liked John immensely. He was straight and square and always helped a person decide the right way. And, besides, he was full of fun, but it always seemed to be good fun. Fred was just as smart as John, just as strong, and knew just as many games, but sometimes he cheated a little, or he was hard on those who were slow.

In this new contest they were to see which half of the room could keep its side the neatest, have the most perfect attendance and best lessons, and keep the "spirit of room." By this, Miss Marshall meant learning to work with each other smoothly, being helpful and kind to those who were a little backward, and telling the truth always.

"I choose Jimmie," said John, for, you know, Jimmie was his "other half," and neither one did anything without the other.

"Charles," said Fred triumphantly. Charles was a new boy who had entered after the holidays, and already he was a close second to John in the hearts of all. And so the choosing went on, and then the sides took new seats so as to be in the half of the room on which their captain sat.

The contest was to close on April 1, and interest never lagged. Many times Fred and Charles were seen together during the two months. Some said Charles should have been the captain. But Miss Marshall, realizing the influence Charles was having over Fred, was glad Fred was captain.

When the day came for deciding the winners, it was found that John's side was ahead. And after the hand clapping was over, Fred made a speech that cost him a lot of determination to make. He said they would have won if it hadn't been for Charles, but he was glad they lost.

Everybody looked surprised, of course, and Miss Marshall asked him to explain. He said when he wanted to do the home work for some of the slower ones, Charles wouldn't let him; when he wanted to clean up under some one's desk, Charles said the rules were each one was to do that himself. There were things by which his side could have won, though unfairly.

"You have won a more important contest, Fred, in losing this one, and that is a contest with yourself. Let's all give Fred and Charles a salute," said Miss Marshall.

Now, long ago Jesus chose twelve men to help Him in His work, healing sick people, and telling everybody about God's wonderful love. All of these men were faithful to their Captain, and tried to do just what He wanted them to, except one.

Every day we have choices to make, you and I. We can choose to keep the "spirit of the golden rule," or we can choose to be selfish. We can choose to follow Jesus in helping mother or father, being kind to sister when she is sick, helping little brother take care of his clothes. And, oh, there are so many little ways in which we can follow our Captain.

That is the way Jesus calls us today. How many of us are going to take our places on His side and help win the contest over bad temper, disobedience, and such, with smiles, obedience, cheerfulness and love?

JESUS CHOOSES THE TWELVE

Mark 3:7-35

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 55:1-11

GOLDEN TEXT

I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit.—John 15:16.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus Chooses the Twelve.

Aim: To lead the pupil to see that the Christian life is a life of service.

Basic Truth: "Be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."—1 Corinthians 15:58.

I. Jesus' General Call to Christian Service. (V. 7-9.) The word "service" expresses the full purpose of Christianity both in this life and in the life to come. Men are being saved to serve God in time and in eternity. The call of the gospel is universal in that it is sent to "all the world" inviting "every creature" to enlist under the banner of Christ in the service of God. Jesus preached to "cities" (Luke 4:43) as well as to individuals. That is, His message applied to the masses. "The common people heard him gladly," and multitudes followed Him. A few among them accepted this general invitation, but hundreds more were benefited by His healing power who never responded to His spiritual appeal. This comprehensive general call is still being sent forth by the church, the Bible school, and the Berean society. A few respond; the majority, as in the days of Jesus, reject the invitation.

II. Jesus Exemplifies Christian Service. (V. 10-12.) The fact that many came for the "loaves and fishes" only did not deter Jesus from supplying their material needs. He was most anxious for their eternal salvation, but as the Son of God He must let the sunshine and the showers of His favor fall alike upon just and unjust. He came, not to do His own will nor to achieve glory for Himself, but to do the will of Him who sent Him and to glorify Him. It is not for our individual salvation that we serve the Master first of all, but that we may help Him in the salvation of others.

III. Jesus' Individual Call to Christian Service. (V. 13-19.) Jesus' work was twofold both as to time and purpose. His immediate effort was to induce people to believe that the kingdom of God was at hand and to accept Him as the Messiah. He was also preparing certain ones to carry on His task after He had left them. This dual purpose remains unchanged. All men are being invited to become Christians, and a selected few are being prepared for Christian leadership and evangelization.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

The work assigned the Christ covered many ages. His earthly ministry was short. To carry forward His great work necessitated the selection of other workers. The first selection was comprised of twelve men, the apostles.

These men were just common folk. They possessed no great ability. They were not selected because they were outstanding and accomplished men, but because they would be willing to submit to the leadership of their Master. They would not trust in their own strength and ability, for they possessed little natural talent. Their weakness would best manifest the power of the Son of God. See 1 Cor. 1:25-27. Their devotion to their new Leader was unqualified. They left all and followed Him. They were remade. This humble beginning with twelve selected men has been enlarged upon day by day for two thousand years. Each day some new workers are chosen, not because of their natural abilities, but because they are willing to forsake all and follow Him. He has need of workers today. Clean up and clear up your record that through your weakness and foolishness the power, glory, and wisdom of the Father may be manifest.

These weak and common everyday men were endowed with great power. They were not limited in strength like the average Christian. They had "power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils." There were other Christians besides these twelve, but they were not the powerful ones that the appointed twelve were. They needed this power to present properly the "kingdom of God" to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. God gives needed strength to all Christian workers but has nowhere promised to bestow the "signs of an apostle" upon the elders or lay workers of this day (2 Cor. 12:12). But if God chooses you for a task, He will strengthen and endow you with power for it.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit."—John 15:16.

I would call Jesus a great organizer. He chose His disciples to carry on the work, but all the time they must abide in Him in order to bring forth much fruit. They could no more bear fruit without Christ than could a branch bear which had been severed from the vine. Christ not only chose the twelve, but He ordained them, that is, He set them apart for His work. We do not know just what kind of ceremony was used in ordaining, but that they were ordained for this certain work gives us confidence in their ability to do things.

They were sent to preach and were told to bring forth fruit. To be able to do this they must work and trust and live near to the Master and abide in Him. It is just as necessary for Christians to abide in Christ to bear fruit as it was for the apostles. Abide in Him, and He will abide in us.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT Discipleship and Its Meaning

A disciple is a pupil and one who believes and practices the teachings of another. Scripturally, are "disciple" and "Christian" synonymous terms (Acts 11:26)?

Is it necessary for a Christian to study the Scriptures (John 5:39; Acts 17:11)? For what should a Christian labor (John 6:27)? Where can we find that meat? How can we become approved of God (2 Tim. 2:15)? How can we please God (Heb. 11:6)? How do we acquire faith (Rom. 10:17)? Is it possible to acquire true faith without studying God's Word (Rom. 10:17)? How is faith made perfect (James 2:22)?

One way to prove one's faith is recorded in Proverbs 11:30. "Wineth" in this text is a fishing term meaning "to angle for." Are disciples supposed to teach the gospel (Mark 16:15, 16)? Do people need a teacher (Rom. 10:14)? Discipleship includes the study of God's Word, the living of His commandments, and the teaching of the gospel to others.

—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Our Call to Friendship and Service

In lesson 2 we found Jesus calling His first disciples, and we compared that to the president of the United States calling his cabinet to help him with the work of guiding and directing the nation. How many did Jesus call to be His apostles? Can you name them? What occupations did the first four leave to follow Jesus? From what positions did He call other men? Why the variety? Which one was said to be the best beloved of His Master? Which one might be called the leader? Who was the treasurer? Were all faithful?

Does Jesus still need helpers? Whom does He need? In what ways does He call today? Are God's ministers the only ones who are called? If you choose an honest line of work out in the world, can you serve God by doing that work the very best you know how just as well as the minister can? How can you call others to service for God even though you are not a minister? Does it make any difference where we serve? What sort of service pleases God? Can the "stay-at-home" serve God as well as the one who goes to distant lands?

Special problem: How does the possession of a talent constitute a call to service? During the week use your talent or ability, whatever it may be, in service in some special way for God. Watch that talent grow.—M. G.

REPORT FROM RIPLEY

On January 8, the Church of God at Ripley, Ill., held its annual business meeting, adopted a constitution, and elected officers for the coming year. A large crowd was present. Our prayer is that by the combined efforts of the new officers and members more work may be done in our Master's service than heretofore.

We adopted the same constitution as the church at Plum River (making a few alterations). Following are the new church officers: elders—J. W. Cooper and George Long; deacons—Herman Lewis and Wayne Laning; deaconesses—Helen Lewis and Verne Lindsay; secretary—Tessa Laning; treasurer—Lorene Fey; Sunday school superintendent—Loren Burnett; superintendent of Bereans—Gerald Cooper; trustees—Fred Paisley, William Fey, and Frank Laning.

We are glad to state that Sr. Cooper has improved since our last report, and Bro. Lelan McDaniels is able to be back at church with us.

The prayer meetings on Wednesday evenings are well attended and evoke good interest. We are studying the book of Acts, the next lesson being on the sixth chapter. We have been having large crowds at all meetings. The beautiful weather has permitted more from the country to be present.

Bro. and Sr. Densmore are visiting their daughter, Sr. Vena Logsdon in Kewanee, Ill. Since the holidays Bro. Densmore has been having rheumatism, but he was better at the last report. Tessa Laning, Sec.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our two weeks of special meetings came to a close on Jan. 15 in a splendid manner. In addition to the five baptized on the tenth, reported last week, there were four more baptized on the closing day. These last are all young girls from our Sunday school and Berean classes, and it is inspiring to see the harvest reaped from the seed that is sown week by week. They are: Miss Edna Carpenter, 47 Washington Blvd., S. W.; and Ila, Helen, and Arlene Hopkins, 240 Walter St., S. E.

The church here appreciates very deeply Bro. Magaw's earnest labors and good sermons, and it is easy to see that he has won for himself a warm spot in the hearts of the people. Bro. Samuel Hoke who drove up and brought Bro. Magaw was also a very welcome guest with our people. The writer has known him and his good parents for some years and was more than glad for our church folks to enjoy his acquaintance.

And now that the meetings are over, we are settling down to a steady, hard pull for the Master with a group of coworkers that could not be excelled. May God bless each one and give strength and wisdom to carry on.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MOOREFIELD, NEBRASKA

We are still holding our meetings in the hall; Sunday school, 10:00 a. m.; morning worship, 11:00 a. m.; evening service, 7:30; and prayer meeting, Wednesday evening. Prayer meeting and Bible study are being held at our pastor's home. There are from 25 to 30 who attend this meeting.

We are to use the National Bible Institution quarterlies in our school, our committee advising them to be the best: a little more costly than some others, but the quality more than makes the difference.

Our Sunday school officers are: Mr. W. Stephenson, supt.; Wilsie McKnight, asst. supt.; Delbert Stedman, secretary-treasurer; Dave Bender, asst. sec. Teachers are Mr. Earl Cowles, Mrs. May Todd, Mrs. Novella Giesler, Mr. Dell Welch, and Mrs. John Stedman.

There is some talk of organizing Bereans later.

Our meetings are very interesting, and the attendance is increasing; so there seems to be a future to this work; we can truly say, like Paul (1 Cor. 16:9), "For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." Some very cunning things are being done to draw people away from our services; but the Lord is with us, and we are going on. Brethren, pray for us.

E. E. Giesler, Pastor.

WHY NOT PREACH A SERMON—

Using as the text Habakkuk 3:2. Here are suggestions for two or more discourses that might be named, "Afraid of the Voice of God"; "A Prayer for Revival"; and, "A Plea for Mercy."

POMONA, CALIFORNIA

A most interesting and timely series of services are being conducted in Pomona at the present time under the leadership of Bro. George P. Lichty. The opening discourse was given last Sunday, January 22, and was in answer to the question, "Who Am I and Where Am I Going?" The subjects that are to follow on succeeding Sunday evenings are given below.

Jan. 29—"Why Was the World Made? Unemployment—How Long?"

Feb. 5—"Should I Believe in God or the Bible?"

Feb. 12—"Does God Answer Prayer? Will His Kingdom Come, a New Social Order?"

Feb. 19—"How Can We Know the Truth?"

Feb. 26—"The New Deal for the Church in the United States."

The services will be held at seven o'clock each Sunday night in the Williams Street Chapel (Church of God). Sunday school is held at 10:00 a. m. and a preaching service at 11:00 a. m. in addition to the evening services announced.

The invitation is extended to ask questions concerning any subject that may be presented.

CHURCH OF THE GOLDEN RULE

This morning (Jan. 15) it would seem that God expressed His approval of our service. In the Sunday school, as an earnest of what was to follow, 181 were present. In Bro. Lyon's adult Bible class 25 enjoyed his simple testimony to the love and faithfulness of Christ in performing the work His Father gave Him to do.

The morning service was well attended. After the preliminary exercises, Bro. Lyon read Romans 8:16-25. The sermon which followed was a masterful effort. The theme of his discourse was "Traveling Hopefully," based upon Romans 8:24: "For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?"

After explaining the meaning and significance of hope from God's viewpoint, he pointed out that Paul, previous to meeting Jesus, had no hope, but after that meeting, on his way to Damascus, realized that Christ was indeed risen from the dead. This hope of a resurrection from the dead became the power in his life which enabled him to pass through the terrible experience recorded in 2 Corinthians 11 without once offering a protest or word of complaint.

Then, as Bro. Lyon quoted 2 Timothy 1:12, his face all aglow, apparently this hope moving him as it did Paul, he almost shouted, "For the which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

As I looked over the audience, I noted that his enthusiasm became contagious; even the children seemed to feel this enthralment and ceased to be so restless. As I looked upon his intelligent face, the words of Paul to Timothy came to my mind with great force: "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." His name is Melville; but I wish it were Timothy, for I see in him more of Timothy than of the English statesman Melville. God is blessing his labors among us. Every activity of the church is healthy and growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

After the service the fellowship of "kindred mind" was so sweet that no one seemed in a hurry to go home. Once again I have seen the blessings of Psalm 133 exemplified among us. May God continue to keep our dear brother whom we all love ever beneath the shadow of His wings and His truth continue to be his shield and buckler.

George B. Alldridge.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Plans are going forward for the Quarterly Prophetic Conference to be held in the Los Angeles church on Sunday, February 5, 1933, both morning and afternoon. In the morning the regular church time will be occupied by Bro. George Lichty of Pomona, whose subject will be, "Will Jesus Come in 1933?"; by Bro. Cecil Smead, whose subject is not yet to be announced; and by the pastor, who will have charge of communion, the subject being, "One Bread, One Body" (1 Cor. 10:17). In the afternoon Sr. E. C. Railsback will spend some time previous to the chief speaker of the day, who will probably be Kieth Brooks of Los Angeles, editor of the magazine, "Prophecy."

Sunday, January 15, Bro. Cecil Smead spoke both morning and evening in the Williams Street Chapel in Pomona; in the morning he spoke on a "Devotional Religion"; and in the evening on "A Reasonable Religion." Both meetings were well attended, and both subjects were ably and interestingly handled.

The Los Angeles church conferred on Sr. E. C. Railsback the title and privileges of a minister of the Church of God in California. This is in recognition of her unselfish and devoted labors for the church both in Los Angeles and Long Beach, as well as other places where our members are found. The occasion was in line with the fact that she has just celebrated another birthday; that birthday happened to be on Friday the 13th, but we trust that it will not be unlucky for her and that she will be able to devote more years to the labor, providing the Lord does not come to prevent the present work.

Sr. Mildred Stantial and Bro. Cecil Smead also celebrated birthdays this past week. We offer them felicitations and many happy returns of the day.

The names of Bro. J. E. Adamson, 987 Weber St., Pomona; and Bro. George Lichty, 350 Chester Place, Pomona, were added to the ministerial list of the Church of God. Perhaps nobody in the church has served more faithfully and over a longer period of years in one place than has Bro. Adamson. Bro. Lichty, though comparatively new to the membership of the Church of God, is a very devoted member of the Pomona church and is also an able speaker. Beginning Sunday, Jan. 22, Bro. Lichty will deliver a series of Sunday evening sermons on subjects designed particularly along the prophetic lines based upon problems of the present day.

THE PROMISES MADE TO ABRAHAM

The salvation of men depends upon the promises God made to Abraham, the father of the Israelitish race. We suggest that in preparation for the study of the special Jewish number of The Restitution Herald which is to be issued January 31, our readers review the promises God made to this remarkable man who is called "the father of the faithful."

The following passages contain a part of those blessed promises in which we are so deeply interested: Genesis 12:1-3; 13:14-17; 15:4-6; 17:1-22; 18:17-19; 22:15-18.

The same promises were repeated to Isaac and Jacob and recorded in the following texts: Genesis 26:2-5; 28:3, 4, 12-18; 35:9-12; 46:1-4; 48:3, 4, 21; 49:8-10; 50:24, 25.

These same promises were renewed to Moses. Exodus 19:3-6; Deut. 7:6-8; 28:13.

They are mentioned by Peter (Acts 3:19-26) and by Paul in his sermon in Antioch in Pisidia (Acts 13:21-23). The latter apostle broadens the scope of their application in Romans 4:13. In Galatians 3:13, 14 he asserts that the death of Christ was brought about "that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles" through Him. In the concluding verses of the same chapter he asserts that all who are baptized into Christ become "Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

A careful study of these passages will prepare our readers to appreciate more fully the meaning and value of the forthcoming Jewish number.—G. E. M.

OREGON, ILLINOIS

The annual business meeting of the Oregon Church of God was held at the church on January 12, 1933. Bro. B. H. Carpenter, an elder, occupied the chair. Following a devotional service led by the pastor, the reports of the secretary and treasurer were presented. In spite of the depression the treasurer reported that all obligations were met.

There were two additions by baptism and three by letter. These additions, however, were counterbalanced by deaths.

The election of officers resulted as follows: F. H. Knodde, trustee; Frederick Claussen, Paul C. Johnson, George Siple, and Charles Gesin, deacons; Mrs. Julia Ordnung and Mrs. S. S. Claussen, deaconesses; Mrs. Mabel Andrew, secretary; Miss Elizabeth Ordnung, treasurer; Mrs. F. T. Rogers, organist.

The following Sunday school officers were reelected: Paul C. Johnson, superintendent; Delos Andrew, assistant superintendent; Miss Mary Reynolds, secretary; Frederick Claussen, treasurer; Miss Alice Gesin, organist; Miss Lois Carpenter, assistant organist.

Ruth Gesin, Retiring Secretary.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Do not overlook next week's special Jewish number. Extra copies are five cents each, postpaid.

We rejoice to learn of the progress being made in southern California. The subjects that are announced for Pomona are timely and of unusual interest.

A note from Mrs. Paul Magnus informs us of the illness of Sr. Blackburn Newton whose address is Cherokee Drive, Bloomington, Ind., and suggests that letters and cards of greeting would be welcome. May all also remember Sr. Newton in prayer.

The church at Moorefield, Neb., is forging ahead under a new organization. Difficulties peculiar to the community have made the work in Moorefield hard and at times discouraging; but under the leadership of Pastor Giesler it is pressing onward and upward in the Lord's service. Pray for its success.

Last Friday Bro. John Reid of Pasadena, Calif., suffered a bad cut in his left thumb while taking up some floor boards. A chisel slipped and cut an artery and a gash that required fifteen stitches to close. He suffered from shock and loss of blood. We pray for his speedy recovery.

Bro. and Sr. Chas. Lapp of Cashmere, Wash., are greatly rejoiced over the arrival of their firstborn, Curtis Charles, on December 31. And we can almost see the smile of happiness on the face of Grandma Lapp, not to mention Uncle Clarence and Aunt Ida and Uncle Paul. That the new arrival may grow up to honor God and be a joy to his parents is our wish.

"I enjoy the Herald very much and derive a great deal of benefit from it," writes Mrs. Ray Maysilles of Tupelo, Miss.

"I love to read the signs of the times and know where we are, that I may have oil in my lamp and be ready when the Bridegroom returns," is the expression of Mrs. A. T. Spindler, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

"As a little word of encouragement: It seems every issue is better than the one before. May God bless all efforts put forth in His work," declares Mrs. Frank Laning of Mt. Sterling, Illinois.

A letter from Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., pastor of the Plum River (Ill.) church, informs us of his rapid recovery from his recent operations, and of a wonderful spiritual experience through which he has passed. We hope for his quick return to his field of labor.

The Oregon, Ill., church was filled last Sunday night by an attentive audience when the pastor gave the second of a series of prophetic sermons in which he is now engaged. He is discussing the prophetic meaning of the situation in the Far East. His next Sunday evening discourse will have to do with India, the topic being, "Why do the Heathen Rage?"

An interesting program has been arranged for a Prophetic Conference to be held in the Los Angeles Church of God on the first Sunday in February. The speakers as now announced will be (D. V.) George P. Lichty, Pomona, Calif.; C. A. Smead, Burr Oak, Ind.; Mrs. E. C. Railsback of the local church; and Kieth Brooks, a well-known student of prophecy who is also editor of the magazine, "Prophecy."

TWO-STEP AND FOX-TROT

By M. R. Sansshem

PERHAPS the most hackneyed question known to ministers and other religious workers is that asked by more or less interested parents: Is it right—not morally, but in the sight of God—for our children and us to dance? Not so strangely as it at first may seem, it is almost always true that the ones whose experience is broadest answer in the negative, with, perhaps, the qualification to be mentioned below; while those whose experience is limited give an affirmative reply. I speak only of active church members.

Principally, of course, the first—and usually older—class present these facts in support of their belief: Few people are temperate in their actions; all young people tend to exaggerate. Consequently, when taught to dance, they frequently (indeed, to be altogether candid, generally) lose all interest in church and devote their time to the dance floor.

Secondly, the world can see no difference between the professed Christian who dances and the average person who does so; and it jumps to the hasty conclusion that there is no value in the church. The waltzing, fox-trotting, Black Bottoming Christian breaks the implied exhortation of Paul to avoid setting an example that may lead to sin in others and the express command to avoid the very appearance of evil. "If dancing is done in the privacy of one's own home," one writer declared, "the harm is not so great; but even so, few indeed are the ones who will be able or content to keep it there."

On the third score, dancing involves contacts which tend more to degenerate than to build character. It is perfectly true that dancing is good exercise; but so are walking and hard work, and they have not nearly the possibilities for demoralization possessed by the out-of-date bunny hug or Charleston, nor do they set a bad example. There are few who enjoy dancing with those of their own sex as much as with those of the opposite one. Many a divorce has had its origin in private and public dances. These two items almost insure that the majority, influenced by the few who are not so affected, dance primarily to satisfy the baser senses; else, too, the popular decollete of women's dance frocks?

It is not altogether the "old fogies" who make these contentions. A San Francisco dancing instructor, observing the effects of his work on his pupils, gave up his place and is devoting his life to an attempt to eradicate what he terms "the colossal evil of all time—the dance." A few young people, also, stand firm against it.

It is not with the purpose of condemning dancers to the eternal death that follows the judgment of the world that this is written, but to set forth a query for the reader to answer for himself. The following conversation, overheard between two high school boys, serves to state my question:

"So you don't believe in dancing," drawled the first.

"No! Do you believe in 'petting' with every girl you meet?"

"Naw! Plenty do, though."

"Uh-huh. What's the difference between huggin' a girl in a car or on a sofa an' huggin' her on a hardwood floor?"

Silence. No answer. I have never heard a reply. Must my curiosity go forever unsatisfied?

MEDITATE ON THESE TEXTS

IN OUR presentation of God's message to mankind we have always delighted to dwell upon God's love and mercy. How often have we referred to Psalm 136, which closes each verse with these words: "For his mercy endureth for ever." And we believe that His mercy will endure forever. We have often cited John 3:16, too, to show the great love that prompted the Father to plan our salvation. We go further, and say that if the love and mercy view of God will not convert a sinner from his evil ways no other means of converting him will ever amount to much.

But are God's love and mercy so great that they will save the sinner without some action on the sinner's part? Let us not overlook the fact that John 3:16 says, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We have expressed part of the verse in italics to show the limitation of that love.

Psalm 136 carries with it the thought of God's mercy radiating out only to them who give thanks unto Him. There are those who enlarge upon the thought of God's love and mercy to the point of including all, whether or not they believe or give thanks. We believe this to be a great mistake and one likely to mislead many. We will here quote some scriptures with appropriate questions:

"But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost."—2 Corinthians 4:3. What does "lost" mean here?

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life; and few there be that find it."—Matthew 7:13, 14. In this text does "destruction" mean life in any form, or is it contrasted to "life" as used in the text? Does the text suggest action on the part of the one that needs salvation, or does it suggest that he will be saved whether he chooses it or not?

"The Lord preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy."—Psalm 145:20. What does "destroy" here mean?

"If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned."—John 15:6. Are dead branches burned to preserve them, or does the burning put an end to them? Shall we continue to give disobedient ones hope, or shall we warn them of wrath to come if they continue in disobedience?—S. J. Lindsay in The Bible Advocate.

JEWISH NUMBER

VOLUME 22

OREGON, ILLINOIS, JANUARY 31, 1933

NUMBER 18

David's Heir on David's Throne

By E. O. Stewart

IN THE announcement made by the angel to Mary, recorded in the first chapter of Luke, verses thirty to thirty-three, three things are made so clear that no one who reads need be mistaken as to their meaning.

First, it is plainly stated that His name shall be called JESUS; second, that the Lord God shall give unto Him, not the throne of His Father God, but the throne of His father David; third, He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever.

In these verses the King, the throne He is to occupy, and the subjects over whom He is to reign when He occupies the throne of His father David are clearly set forth.

The Prophet Isaiah foresaw, and also foretold, that Jesus would have helpers to assist Him in His reign over the house of Jacob. Hear what he says in regard to these helpers: "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment."—Isaiah 32:1.

A prince is the son of a king. Christ "came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."—John 1:11 and 12.

Here are the princes spoken of by Isaiah who are to rule in judgment. Let us hear Jesus as He tells these princes when they shall rule, and over whom they shall rule.

Peter said to Jesus, "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee: what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes

"And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favour with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1:30-33.

of Israel" (the house of Jacob).—Matthew 19:27, 28.

Perhaps a few thoughts on generation and regeneration will help us to understand the subject better.

The record of the generations of the descendants of Abraham is given in Matthew 1:17 as follows: "So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations."

This forty-second generation was the end of the Jewish economy. In their generations God recognized them no longer. The scepter was to depart from Judah, and they were to be led away captive into all nations. They were to abide many days without a king, prince, sacrifice, ephod, and teraphim (Hosea 3:4). The blood of all the righteous from Abel to Zacharias was to come upon that forty-second generation (Matthew 23:36).

Let us begin with Abraham and note some of the things that God required his seed to observe

THROUGHOUT THEIR GENERATIONS

They were to keep the covenant of circumcision forever, in their generations (Genesis 17:7-12).

The Children of Israel were commanded to observe the Sabbath for a perpetual covenant throughout their generations (Exodus 31:16).

The high priest was to offer a lamb continually, throughout their generations (Exodus 29:42).

The Levitical priesthood was to continue forever, throughout their generations (Exodus 40:14-16).

Aaron's lamp was to burn perpetual incense, throughout their generations (Exodus 30:8).

Atonement was to be made (Please turn to Page Ten)

Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee.”—Isaiah 62:3, 4.*

A Prayer of Israel

THOU, O LORD, shalt abide forever,
 And thy memorial unto all generations.
 Thou shalt arise,
 And have mercy upon Zion:
 For the time to have pity upon her,
 Yea, the set time is come.
 For thy servants take pleasure in her stones,
 And have pity on her dust.
 So the nations shall fear the name of the Lord,
 And all the kings of the earth thy glory:
 For the Lord hath built up Zion,
 He hath appeared in his glory.
 He hath regarded the prayer of the destitute,
 And hath not despised their prayer.
 This shall be written for the generation to come:
 And a people which shall be created shall praise the Lord.

—Modern Reader's Bible.

What Advantage Hath the Jew?

“WHAT advantage then hath the Jew?” It is Paul who asks the question, and he answers it emphatically himself. “Much in every way,” he says, “because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.” That is, God has given to them the revelation, the transmission, and the preservation of the Holy Scriptures through which the way of salvation is made plain.

The Bible is, indeed, a Hebrew book. It was written by holy men of the Hebrew race who “spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.” It records God’s dealings with the Hebrew people in the past. It tells of His present attitude toward them. It predicts what Jehovah has in store for them in the future, when they shall be his ministers.

One cannot fully grasp the great fundamentals of revealed truth and omit the Jews from their God-given place in the divine economy. As the chosen of the Most High they occupy a unique and exalted position in the prophecies and, consequently, in the eternal purposes of Almighty God.

Christianity and Judaism

“THE JEWISH mind and heart and soul stand enthroned forever in the Scriptures of Truth,” says a thoughtful and able student of the Word. The Jewish viewpoint is the viewpoint of the Bible. No passage can be rightly understood without taking this fact into consideration, for the sacred Writings speak first and always in Hebrew terms.

Not only is this true, but the first appeal of the gospel was ever directed to the Jew. Peter, who early in his ministry was divinely appointed as a special missionary to the Gentiles, long before Paul received a similar commission (Acts 15:7), always pressed his message upon the Jews first. The same procedure was followed by Paul and Barnabas. It was ever “to the Jew first,” and afterward to the Greek.

The epistles, being without exception addressed to those who were already Christians, do not present so fully the basic facts of the gospel which were preached to unbelieving Jews and to unbelieving Gentiles as is done in the Acts of the Apostles. As we study the history of apostolic preaching as given in the earliest records of the church, we are impressed with its decidedly Jewish trend. The apostles were required to make but few, if any, changes in the current belief of the Jews of that day.

The principal changes that were demanded under the new order consisted of adding the following facts: The reality of the resurrection of Jesus; His right to the throne of David, that is, His Messiahship; that He was the Son of God; and that both Jews and Gentiles may be saved through faith in the gospel.

Now we come to an astonishing fact! Not one of these supposedly new ideas was contrary to Jewish teaching of that day! Each one of these elements was already accepted and advocated by one or more of the Jewish sects except that part that centered them all in Jesus of Nazareth.

According to Jewish thought there was to be a resurrection of the dead. There was to come a Messiah with right to reign on David’s throne. There would be a time when the Gentiles would have equal access to God through faith.

In the light of these facts it is not difficult for us to understand how easy it will be for God to eventually remove the veil from their eyes and cause His people to cry, “Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!”

THE CORD OF DIVINE PURPOSE

By F. L. Austin

AS A ROPE is composed of many threads, so the eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus is made up of many small strands of Divine purpose. And, as the utility of a rope depends upon the united value of all its threads, so the unspeakable greatness and worth of God's all-inclusive purpose in Christ Jesus is the sum total of all blessings and achievements provided for and perfected in the many lesser threads thereof. All lesser strands are necessary. Without them there could be no completed whole.

The Jew is one of the strands in the make-up of the complete Divine purpose. He is essential. Woe to that Christian who would eliminate him and his thread. He is not always in the foreground. In some cases the Jewish strand of royal blue is buried deeply from view beneath the threads of Gentile hue. But, throughout the length of the cord of intertwined promises and purposes of God, from Abraham's day till now, there is not even one little place where there is a gap, or break, in Judah's blue strand. Though sometimes unseen by finite eye, its presence has been constant. And, as the cable-tester of today picks up a tiny strand of wire and speaks thereon throughout the length of the cable, proving that the little strand is intact throughout and is "doing duty"; so the voices of the prophets, now three and four thousand years distant from the speakers, speaking on the Jewish strand of the cord of Divine purpose are being heard. The strand is still intact.

The Jew is but two (Judah and Benjamin) of the twelve-tribed people of God. The other ten of these tribes constitute another thread in this great cord. There is also the thread of the Gentiles. Perhaps it might be nearer correct to liken the Gentiles to several threads, a Gentile group of threads, but not one strand should be omitted from our study and research. God uses them all. No one of them is unnecessary. Together they compose the strength of the cord of Divine purpose as a whole.

At the birth of Jesus a thread of hope became a thread of fact—a thread of royal purple and of priestly-white linen. His, too, is a part of the great cord. Though His thread is now invisible to the carnal eye, yet its influence and strength are by many sensed continuously.

Of the many strands composing the one great cord, one more only will be cited, namely, that of God's church. God's revealed purpose includes His church. Without it His cord of purpose would be incomplete. It has its specific place to fill, its own duty to perform, its particular promises to enter, its definite place in Christ to occupy. It cannot take the place of the Jewish thread, nor that of any other. Nor can another fill its place.

In His promises to Abraham God, in part, revealed a cross section of that great cord. Not that every strand therein included shows upon the surface; for some there hidden from view are only elsewhere brought to light and identified by inspired writers. In referring to these promises let us arbitrarily use numbers as an aid of clarity to the mental picture. Genesis 12:1-7 mentions the following, which are here called strands, found also elsewhere in the make-up of God's purpose:

Strand 1.—Abraham, verses 1 and 2.

Strand 2.—A great nation; "as the dust," 13-16; "as the stars," and "as the sands," 22:17; "a peculiar treasure," "an holy nation," Exodus 19:6, 7; "high above all nations," Deuteronomy 26:16-19.

Strand 3.—Abraham's seed — numerous, Adamic.

Strand 4.—Abraham's seed—"As of one, . . . which is Christ."—Galatians 3:8-16.

Strand 5.—"This land"; "they shall dwell in their own land," Jeremiah 23:5-8; "will plant . . . land"; "no more be pulled . . . out of land," Amos 9:11-15.

God's eternal kingdom, the King of the world, the church-body of Christ, and others, are by inspired writers identified as other strands included in those same Abrahamic promises.

Let the readers of God's holy Word realize that all plans and purposes do not pertain directly to the church. Nor do they pertain to any other one thread in the make-up of God's eternal purpose. Let them recognize that God will as certainly perform His purposes through Abraham's "seed after the flesh," Galatians 4:21-31, as He will perform His purposes in Christ Jesus, or His purposes in His church.

Jewish National Hymn

God, we implore Thee,
End Zion's misery;
Send her Thy aid!
Send Thou her sons to heal—
Wounds which the years reveal,
Woes which at last in weal
For aye shall fade.

God, loving, tender, good!
As if in widowhood,
She weeps for Thee.
Be once more reconciled;
As father pities child,
Pity her grief so wild—
She weeps for Thee.

Now bid her weep no more.
Do Thou her sons restore—
Love-gift from Thee!
Make those who still would stay
In other lands obey
Thy Holy Law, that they
World Priests may be.

For some, by Thy command,
Must live in every land
To make Thee known.
Priests to the world are we;
This is our destiny,
Till all shall bend the knee
To Thee alone!—Anonymous.

“HATIKVOH”—JEWISH SONG OF HOPE

LISTEN to the Jewish children as they sing this, their national song of hope! Their hats are on their heads, for they must be ready to go when they sing this song! The minor melody of the music seems to breathe the bitter sorrow of their long exile.

And thus they sing:

“Lift thine eyes, behold the light!
Turn to the East where dawns the day.
Hope and Faith forever bright,
Guide and protect us on our way.

“Let the tear no longer fall,
Joy shall attend us evermore.
Brightly gleams our City Wall,
Safe is its shelter, wide its door.

“Angel Hope, whose snow-white wing
Bears every heart to realms of love,
O'er our grief thine aegis fling,
Lead and inspire us from above!”

Following each verse comes the ringing chorus, inspiring with its magnetic fervor the hearts of old and young alike:

“Onward, strong and fearless soul!
Yonder stands the shining goal.
Lift up the voice with praises ringing,
Turn to the East where dawns the day!”

THE INDEPENDENCE OF IRAQ A MENACE

GREAT BRITAIN is seeking release from mandate obligation over Iraq and the establishment of that country as an independent state. The Missionary Review of the World calls attention to the fact that in such case Iraq would be a Moslem state and “the rights of its non-Moslem minorities, especially the Christians, would be fatally jeopardized. The danger of wholesale massacre is real; even with no massacres there is a strong probability that Christian children would be forced to attend Moslem schools, and Christian women to contract Moslem marriages. All legal procedure would be in Moslem courts.”

In the area around Mosul the non-Moslem population, numbering about 35,000, is largely concentrated. These would be threatened with persecution and extermination if turned over to a fanatic Arab government. It is suggested that this land, in which live the Christian groups and which was not originally a part of Iraq, be made an independent territory under the League of Nations. This would separate the Christian groups, who, in spite of persecution, have not succumbed to Islam.—The Alliance Weekly.

LAND

By Norman John McLeod

“In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates.”—Genesis 15:18.

LAND is wealth. Land is the source of all wealth. Land also is the cause of almost all troubles between nations, and is the cause of many difficulties between individuals. But God has made it the center of His richest blessing to mankind, as seen in the promises to Abraham and his seed; it is one of the vital considerations in the promises of the kingdom of God.

In the promises to Abraham we read: “Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.”—Genesis 12:1-3.

Here, land is one of the principal factors. Abram was not to go out to see a picture of “heaven,” nor to look at a beautiful piece of sky which he was to inhabit. When the Children of Israel were in Egypt, God told Moses: “And I will bring you in unto the land, concerning the which I did swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for an heritage: I am the Lord.”—Exodus 6:8. The “land flowing with milk and honey” was the goal henceforth of all their journeys.

When they were entering that land, Moses said in the land of Moab: “See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply: and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it. But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them; I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it. I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live: that thou mayest love the Lord thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him: for he is thy life, and the length of thy days: that thou mayest dwell in the land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them.”—Deuteronomy 30:15-20. But the Children of Israel did not obey God, and were scattered to the ends of the earth.

Almost in the same breath with the promise of dispersion came the cheering word that Israel and Judah shall be gathered back to their land. Always these thoughts were together in the minds of the prophets. Never the dispersion without the regathering; never the curse without the blessing! Let us turn our attention, therefore, to the regathering.

Some people have been exercised because the present regathering of Israel is in unbelief. At the meeting of the Jews held in the Temple Israel in Hollywood, California, on Sunday, November 27, at which Mr. Rothenberg, Zionist leader, spoke, many noticed that God was left out of their calculations. The big "I" was prominent instead. The only religious reference in the meeting was to the promises to Abraham. No prayer opened or closed the meeting. No one referred to divine blessing or help. But the various texts in regard to the return of Israel to their land show that that is in accordance with prophecy.

Mr. Rothenberg made one statement that shows the trend of Jewish thought and gives promise of the fulfillment of the prophecies of the return of Israel. He said that the return of the Jews to the homeland was not a matter of a strip of territory running along the eastern shore of the Mediterranean bounded on the east by the Jordan River, but was a problem of the entire Near East. True it is, he said, that the land of Palestine is not filling rapidly with colonists, but that there are a million Jews ready to go there as soon as conditions are ready and that eventually they expect to colonize almost the whole Near East.

That is a project which should give us opportunity for reflection, and should cause us to re-examine our texts on the return of Israel. According to the text quoted at the head of our article the promise to Abraham included more than a small strip of land along the east shore of the Mediterranean bounded on the east by the Jordan River. Genesis 15:18 promises the land from the "river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." Then in the eleventh chapter of Isaiah we read: "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim. But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west; they shall spoil them of the east together: they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them."

A glance across the River Jordan from the land of Canaan into the land of Moab and Edom gives a vivid picture of European intrigue in the Near East. Palestine is under British mandate, and in that section all is well for the Jew. But across the Jordan lies a French mandate known as "Transjordan." In modern times the British have been friendly to the Jews, but not the French. Mr. Rothenberg mentioned the fact that one of the greatest periods of persecution began with the affair of the French army captain, Dreyfus. And even yet the attitude of the French is not friendly toward the Jews.

"The time of Jacob's trouble" of Jeremiah 30:7 could easily come from such a situation. The Near East has always been known as the "powder magazine of Europe" because the boundaries of the various nations are so unstable, being thought to be subject to indefinite expansion by all those peoples. The Jews seem to be no exception to that rule: expansion is their watchword.

But that time of trouble will end as portrayed in Isaiah 63 with the return of Christ. And then will be brought to pass that prophecy of Jeremiah: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; . . . but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people."—Jeremiah 31:31-33.

So far only the part that the Jews play in the great plans in regard to the giving of land have been mentioned. Where does the Gentile come in? Let the Bible answer: "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. . . . For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Galatians 3:8, 9, 27, 29.

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth."—Matthew 5:5. "For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. . . . But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."—Psalm 37:9, 11.

LINKING SCATTERED ISRAEL

IN HIS report to the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, in which he pointed to the increase of Jewish suffering abroad, Dr. Bernhard Kahn, the committee's European director, stated that "to make conditions still worse, anti-Semitism is growing simultaneously in all countries, taking different forms—sometimes social, sometimes political, sometimes economic, on occasion physical attacks and disturbances."

Practically all reports on existing conditions in world Jewry point not only to suffering and want, but what is perhaps worse: the disintegration of Jewish communal life and the disruption of Jewish unity. Despair is setting deep roots in the body of the Jewish people. There is nothing in all its history to compare with the present tragedy.

Fortunately, the leaders of American Israel refuse to become parties to such despair. The recent national gatherings of the Joint Distribution Committee and the American Palestine Appeal reveal that sufficient devotion exists to assure some measure of support for the downtrodden masses in eastern Europe.—Selected.

WHY WERE THE JEWS GOD'S CHOSEN PEOPLE?

By A. L. Corbaley

A BRAHAM lived about four hundred twenty years after the flood. He lived at a time when the world had again gone into idolatry, but he was faithful to the Lord.

In Genesis 12 we read, "Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: and I will make of thee a great nation." The fifth verse tells that Abram and his family reached the land of Canaan, or the Promised Land. In Genesis 13:14-17 God promised to give the land to Abram and his seed forever.

In Genesis 15:5-18 the promise is reiterated and the patriarch is informed that his seed "shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years, . . . and afterward shall they come out with great substance." In the eighteenth verse the promise again is repeated to Abram and his seed.

In Genesis 17 the Lord changes Abram's name to Abraham, and gives him the rite of circumcision as a sign of the covenant. The promise is once more given in Genesis 22:1-18. The same promise is made to Isaac. Genesis 26:1-5. Then in Genesis 28:10-15 it is repeated to Jacob, the son of Isaac.

Now read Psalm 105:6-45, which plainly shows that God had chosen them as His people and given them the land of Canaan to be their inheritance forever. They were in captivity for four hundred years in the land of Egypt, as the Lord had foretold; but God brought them back under the leadership of Moses through the Wilderness of Sinai to the borders of the land covenanted to their fathers; but Joshua led them over Jordan.

In Exodus 19:3-8, the Lord promised Moses, "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." The people answered, "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do."

This made them the Lord's chosen people, and they would still have been the Lord's people, dwelling prosperously in the land of Canaan if they had only been obedient; but because of their sins the Lord drove them out of the Promised Land. Psalm 132:11-18; Deut. 28; Lev. 26. Their punishment was to last seven times.

A time is a year of 360 days; so seven times would be  $7 \times 360 = 2,520$  days. But a day in prophecy equals a year of man's time. Ezek. 4:4-6; Num. 14:32-34.

The ten northern tribes were carried away into captivity by the king of Assyria in 721 B. C. They were scattered and never returned to their homeland. But the southern kingdom, with the city of Jerusalem as its capital, continued until 586 B. C., when Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, destroyed Jerusalem, burned the temple which Solomon had built, battered down the walls of the city, and carried most of the people, including their king, away to Babylon. They were to have no other king till "he (shall) come whose right it is, and I will give it him."—Ezekiel 21:24-27.

After seventy years of captivity in Babylon the Jews were allowed to return to the land of Canaan by Cyrus, king of Persia, who had conquered Babylon. Since that time they never have had a king of Jewish blood to reign over them, and never will till Christ will come and gather them back from all the countries where they have been scattered and will be their King, reigning on the throne of David in Jerusalem. Isa. 9:6, 7; Luke 1:31-33; Ezek. 20:33-44; 36 and 37; Jer. 23:1-8; 30, 31, 32, and 33; Amos 9:8-15; Zech. 8:20-23; Micah 4:1-8; Isa. 11; Acts 15:13-17; Rom. 11; Hosea 3:4, 5; Zech. 12 and 13.

Their punishment was to last 2,520 years. It commenced in 586 B. C., and this is A. D. 1932; therefore, their punishment has continued for 2,518 years, according to the Usher chronology, so their grief and punishment will last but two years longer if this reckoning is correct.

Their deliverance does not come until the return of the Lord: "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes."

In the year 1897 the Zionist Movement was started by Doctor Herzl. The first congress was held at Basle, Switzerland, in the autumn of that year. Now it is a universal movement among the Jews. At the present time 172,000 Jews have gone back to Palestine and are dwelling in the land of "unwalled villages" (107 of them now in the land). Read Ezekiel 38 and 39.

In November, 1917, the Zionists were granted the Balfour Declaration, which gives the Jews a legal right to go back to Palestine and purchase the land from the present owners (who are chiefly absentee landlords). They are planting their holdings in citrus fruits and almost all varieties of agricultural products. They have purchased about seven per cent of the land and constitute twenty per cent of the population.

The League of Nations gave Great Britain a mandate for the country for twenty-five years. The Balfour Declaration gives the Jews the right to make of Palestine a legally secured home for the Jew. While the declaration was originally given by Great Britain, it was confirmed by the League of Nations and also by the United States; so the whole world has declared that the Jew shall have Palestine for his homeland.

It is the only land on earth today where there is no depression, and a thousand more laborers are now needed to do the necessary work. Many wealthy Jews from America and other countries have plantations there and are going to Canaan to make that their future home.

However, great troubles are yet in store for the Jew in his ancient home. The armies of the world will yet come up against Jerusalem to battle (for a full account of this conflict read Zechariah 14 and Jeremiah 25:15-33).

In Ezekiel 17 and 48 we read that the Lord will divide to the twelve tribes their allotments in the land of Canaan, which was covenanted to Abraham and his seed. Then will come to pass the vision of the Prophet Isaiah as recorded in Isaiah 65:18-25; and Israel will once more be in their own land and rest in quietness and an abundance of peace and security, with Jesus as their King. John 18:33-37.

ONE PROSPEROUS COUNTRY

IN THE midst of world-wide depression searchers are able to find one country which is actually shaking off the burdens of depression and was more prosperous last year than it was the year before. And that country lies on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean—it is Palestine, the Holy Land of Christian and Jew. As the New York Evening Post remarks:

“In that little country, not so long ago the scene of bitter strife between Jews and Arabs, it is reported that exports were higher last year than the year before, that the unemployment figures are showing an impressive downward curve, that building activity and general industrialization are steadily going forward. At the great annual fair at Tel-Aviv, for example, the number of exhibitors has increased from three hundred in 1928 to thirteen hundred in 1932. The explanation of this phenomenal state of affairs is that depressed conditions in other countries have caused immigration of a more substantial class of Jews, and that by resisting whatever impulse there may have been to tighten the ban on immigrants Palestine is now reaping the reward of its liberality through definite economic recovery.

“We hope the reports of this situation are fully justified. It is a distinctly bright spot on a none too promising international horizon.”—Selected from The Literary Digest by Mrs. Mary Elma Bell.

JEWISH SIBERIA

THE Soviet Union is fast becoming a world in miniature. Cultural autonomy is offered to all racial and linguistic groups, as evidenced by Ukrainian, Georgian, and Turkoman federal states, and that of the German Volga. The latest addition is to be a Jewish state, described as follows by Ralph W. Barnes in the New York Herald Tribune:

“The Soviet government has decided to establish next year an autonomous Jewish republic on a large stretch of territory in the Amur River region of Siberia, north of the Manchurian frontier, which already has been set aside for Jewish colonization. The territory is called Beerobazhan, or Biro Bidjan.

“The move, it is stated, will give Russian Jews, as well as foreign Jews who have come here, full representation in the Soviet government through the Soviet principle of representation of nationalities. It is interesting to note that, when the projected step is carried out, there will be within the Soviet borders a Jewish national state, an achievement striven for in Palestine without success.

“Information concerning the Soviet plans was obtained by Lord Marley, chairman of the British Parliamentary committee which supports the Society for the Industrial Relief of Jews in Eastern Europe, in the course of interviews he has had while here with officials concerning the Jewish question. The colonization scheme and establishment of the Jewish republic are considered especially important since the Jews are the principal sufferers from the liquidation of the commercial class. There are two and a half million in the Soviet Union. . . .

“The territory of Beerobazhan is about the size of the state of New Jersey, with 3,800,000 acres of virgin soil and forests, sufficient to colonize virtually the entire Jewish population of the Soviet Union. The Amur province, in which it is situated, is, according to a recent bulletin by the National Geographic Society, larger than France and contains almost as varied scenery as the United States. Although the winter temperature is below zero, winter months are often without snow and the short summers are comfortably warm. There are rich agricultural districts and gold and coal deposits. The forests are filled with bears, tigers, deer, wild boars, and wild goats.”

FROM The New Palestine we learn that the Palestine Potash, Ltd., which is the corporation which has been granted the concession to exploit the Dead Sea minerals, has been aided by a substantial investment in it by the Palestine Economic Corporation. The latter company reports “that the concession is for a period of seventy-five years, and that the company is required to work continuously and with due diligence in order to be in a position to produce a minimum quantity of 1,000 tons of eighty per cent pure potassium chlorate during the third year of the concession, 1,500 tons during the fourth year, and for the succeeding years, on an increasing scale, up to 50,000 tons after the tenth year.”

The Hope of Israel—The Hope of the World

“For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain.”—Paul.

THE HOPE OF ISRAEL is the hope of the world! For Israel is the sign people and the promise people as well as the chosen people of Jehovah, the covenant-making God. Not infrequently they have been referred to as the “miracle people of history” because the remarkable manner in which they have been preserved through the centuries and millenniums cannot be accounted for except from the standpoint of God’s miraculous care over them.

If we would know our place in the orderly progress of cosmic events, if we would recognize our exact position in the development of the eternal purposes of God, we must look to Israel, the sundial of prophecy!

Since God called Abram and blessed him, saying, “In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed,” and assuringly promised, “I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth” for multitude, the tribes of the Hebrews have been the peculiar treasure of Jehovah above all other peoples of the earth.

When because of their sin He permitted the Gentiles to come upon them in punishment, He still declared: “Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, . . . neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee.”—Jeremiah 30:10, 11. Resting on the faithfulness of their God, Israel, like Lord Tennyson’s brook, can sing, “Nations come and nations go, but I go on forever!”

The miraculous manner in which this people has been preserved gives promise of the exalted and important position they are destined to occupy in the future.

The hand of God has been stretched over Israel in blessing to an extent that no other nation has enjoyed. What was said concerning their deliverance from Egypt may be said with equal truth of the entire remarkable history before God. “Ask now of the days that are past,” commanded Moses as he drew near to the hour of his death, “since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live? Or hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by temptations, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes?”—Deuteronomy 4:32-34.

Jehovah addresses Israel as His Bride, saying, “As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.”—Isaiah 62:5. He speaks of Himself as the Bridegroom and as the Husband of Israel: “Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed; . . . for thy Maker is thine husband; the Lord of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; The God of the whole earth shall he be called.”—Isaiah 54:4, 5.

Jehovah further reveals Himself to them as their Father, whose great love for them prompts Him to bring them back from their long captivity into their homeland. “Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, . . . a great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn.” O how much the Lord must love His people! “Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.”—Jeremiah 31:8-10.

The shadows cast by the sun of passing events against the sundial of the Jewish race will tell us just where we stand in the chronology of God!

Four thousand years ago, when the Hebrew bondsmen labored amid the horrors of Egyptian slavery, Israel was God’s chosen people. Three thousand years ago, when the silver trumpets of the Levites called the people together for worship under the golden dome of Solomon’s Temple and Israel was the glory of the whole earth, the Hebrew people were still the chosen and the beloved of the Almighty. Four hundred years later, when the throne of David was overturned by Nebuchadnezzar and the people were carried away captive into Babylon, they remained as they had ever been, in their degradation and in their glory, the beloved children of the living God. Still seventy years later, when by the mercy of Jehovah they were brought back out of the land of their enemies, they returned as they had departed, the chosen of the eternal Father.

Two thousand years ago, when John the Baptist came “preaching in the wilderness of Judaea, and saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand,” the Jews to whom he addressed his warning, though now “the lost sheep of the house of Israel,” were still the people of the Lord, beloved of the Father’s heart.

From that day to this, driven from east to west, from north to south, a hissing and a byword among all nations, pursued and persecuted, burdened, alienated, and afflicted everywhere their wandering steps have led, they have continued to be what they were in the past—what they will be in the future—the chosen people of the Lord their God!

And now—now they are going home! Home from the snowy steppes of Russia that have been so often reddened with their blood! Home from the olive-clad hills of Spain, the Spain that once consigned so many thousands of their people to a watery grave! Home from the Land of the Dragon! Home from the islands of the sea! Home from the distant lands where they were driven for their sin!

The Jews are going home! Home to Palestine to the glory of God's faithfulness and for the salvation of the Gentile nations of the world. For the hope of Israel is the hope of the world!—G. E. M.

PRESIDENT-ELECT ROOSEVELT ON ZIONISM

THE following letter, according to Prophecy, was addressed to Mr. Rothenberg on the occasion of the fifteenth anniversary of the issuance of the Balfour Declaration, which assured to the Jews a national home in Palestine and which served to open up the Holy Land to Hebrew settlement and development.

“Dear Mr. Rothenberg:

“I greatly regret that I shall be unable to be present at the meeting to commemorate the fifteenth anniversary of the Balfour Declaration to be held under the auspices of the Zionist Organization of America.

“As you know, I have on prior occasions expressed my fullest sympathy with the purposes of the Balfour Declaration. Out of the World War came a matter of great spiritual significance—the establishment of the Homeland for the Jewish people, recognized as such by the public law of the world. In realization of this aim, the United States played a leading role. I know how close it was to the wish of President Wilson. The formal terms of its expression during the war, the so-called Balfour Declaration, had his personal approval and he did much to have it written into the peace treaty. The subsequent unanimous endorsement of the Balfour Declaration by both Houses of the United States Congress gave further proof of the deep interest of the American people in the purposes of the Declaration and in the fulfillment of the moral obligation which it involved.

“Jewish achievement in Palestine since the Balfour Declaration vindicates the high hope which lay behind the sponsorship of the Homeland. The Jewish development in Palestine since the Balfour Declaration is not only a tribute to the creative power of the Jewish people but by bringing great advancement into the sacred land has promoted the well-being of all the inhabitants thereof.

“I shall personally watch with deep sympathy the progress of Palestine. I extend to your Organization my sincerest wishes for continued success and achievement.

Very sincerely yours,

“(Signed) Franklin D. Roosevelt.”

THE BIBLE THE GUIDEBOOK OF GENERAL ALLENBY IN WAR IN PALESTINE

IN AN interview with Bob Davis, reported in the Buffalo Evening Times, Capt. M. T. Butt of the Fifth Cavalry division of the British army is quoted as follows. In the course of the interview reference was made by the captain to Gen. “Stonewall” Jackson.

“In all the histories dealing with that period,” said the captain, “much stress is laid upon the spiritual side of Jackson. Was he quite so religious as his biographers would have us believe?

“He was the sort of man who did not like to face an enemy on Sunday, but once confronted by the necessity for it Stonewall stepped into his tent or knelt down where he happened to be and asked the Lord for strength to win the battle. His text for conflict was from St. Paul to the Corinthians: ‘Fight not as one who beateth the air.’ Your own Oliver Cromwell was strong for the Good Book and regarded it as inspiration for war.

“And there was Chinese Gordon in the Sudan,” added the captain, “and Gen. Lawrence in India; devout men both, governing not only the troops but their own lives by the practice and precepts of Christianity. Perhaps of those commanders motivated by sacred ideals and biblical literature, the most practical was Gen. Allenby, who directed the victorious campaign in Jerusalem. Before the actual engagement that culminated in the rout of the enemy and the fall of the Holy City Allenby summoned the officers of his general staff and gave explicit directions that the English were not to fire a single shot in territory within two miles of Jerusalem. ‘Refrain at any cost,’ summed up the commander’s instructions. This from him who has come to be regarded as the last of the Crusaders was a great concession. After the victory, the general with fine reverence for the sacred environment entered the city on foot through a side gate.

“Typical of Allenby was his conversation near Jerusalem with an officer at Brook Kidron, which has its source a few miles west of Bethany and flows south. It was at this stream that six lancers in attempting to cross in pursuit of the enemy became mired in quicksands, and despite all efforts at rescue were swallowed up. Lining the shore helpless spectators to the tragedy, comrades of the doomed lancers saw them disappear. Gen. Allenby arrived later in the day, and upon receiving a report asked the officer in command if he ever read the Bible. ‘You will find it the best guidebook to Palestine,’ was the commander’s comment. ‘Every soldier in the Holy Land should take the time to inform himself, through the Old and the New Testament, all there is to know about the country to which he is called to defend the colors. Beware of the streams, brooks and rivers. Read Judges, fourth chapter, and observe what happened to Sisera at the River Kishon, to which he was drawn and betrayed by the prophetess Deborah.’

“The events to which Allenby referred are cited in the scene between Deborah and Barak, the son of Abinoam out of Kedesh Naphtali: 'And Sisera gathered together all his chariots, even nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Harosheth of the Gentiles unto the river of Kishon. And Deborah said unto Barak, Up; for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thine hand. . . . And the Lord discomfited Sisera, and all his chariots, and all his host, with the edge of the sword before Barak; so that Sisera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.'

"As a consequence of the river betrayal the Gentiles and all the host of Sisera fell upon the sword.

"That historic battle along the River Kishon is regarded by Allenby as one to be long remembered, not only for the completeness of Sisera's defeat, but for the more significant reason that Barak had the advantage of familiarity with the scene of action. The British lancers, pursuing the enemy across the Brook Kidron, rode full tilt to death more than two thousand years after Sisera's fatal error in the same land."

"You appear to be pretty well posted on the subject of tactics in Palestine," said I to the captain.

"I don't know that I could qualify as an expert," he replied, "but since taking up the Bible as a soldier's guide-book through the Holy Land I find it invaluable in all other particulars for the guidance of the human race, and I would recommend its constant perusal in time of peace, which I hope is here indefinitely."

DAVID'S HEIR ON DAVID'S THRONE

once a year, throughout their generations (Exodus 30:10).

In these passages you will notice that circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, and all the other ordinances were limited by the phrase, "throughout their generations."

When these things ceased, their generations also ceased. Their house was left unto them desolate. They were led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem is to be trodden down by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

But this degenerate condition will not last eternally. There will come a time of regeneration for the nation of Israel.

With Jesus, the rightful Heir, on David's throne and the twelve apostles as judges to rule over Israel, God will again recognize their generations. This is what Jesus meant when He told the twelve that in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of His glory, they also should sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

THE CORD OF DIVINE PURPOSE

nation divided. Ten tribes withdrew under Jeroboam; and Rehoboam, the royal heir, ruled over Judah and Benjamin. 1 Kings 12:16-21. Compare 11:30, 31.

God's announced purpose in giving Rehoboam one tribe additional to his own natal tribe was "for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel."—1 Kings 11:22. The throne of David's seed is yet to be eternal. See 2 Samuel 7:12-19. Christ is to be crowned thereunto. Luke 1:31-33. It will all be at Jerusalem, the God-chosen city. "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord."—Jeremiah 3:17.

Now, for "David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake," Judah (the Jew) has a specific thread of purpose in the attainment of the eternal purpose of God. That that thread, extending throughout three thousand years, is still intact, is evidenced by the vast reclamation successes of today in and about the city of God—the most favored region of earth during these present unsolved and increasing world problems.

Yes, God's purposes are ever sure. Every component strand of the cord of His eternal purpose will duly perform its part. To the astonishment of the world the Jew is forging ahead in his wonderful achievements. God's purpose in him is rapidly maturing. As each part does its work opportunity for every other strand to be active, in its sphere, duly presents itself. Very quickly Christ will reenter, and greatly increased activity will rush forward. The church will be called to action as never before—not to displace another nor to usurp unassigned blessings, but merely to render to God and Christ that for which she has been purposed.

True, the Jew is exhorted to exercise his choice and turn to Christ. He would then be dealt with not as a Jew but as a Christian. At once his promises are different, his aim and hope change.

We urge him thus to do.

THE PERSECUTED JEWS OF ROUMANIA

THE Secretary of the American Jewish Committee of New York, who has made an investigation of the Jewish situation in Roumania, reports conditions worse than formerly. The king of Roumania, however, has taken energetic measures, according to Mr. Waldman, against the anti-Semites, and it is hoped there will be some marked improvement. A fire in the town of Borsha, believed to have been of anti-Semitic origin, destroyed 123 Jewish dwellings and left fifteen hundred Jews homeless, besides a heavy monetary loss. Delay of the government in settling for this damage has caused these homeless Jews to live in the ruins of their old homes, where they are without proper food or clothing and are now threatened with an epidemic.

CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY

ONE of the greatest errors believed by many who are known as Christians is that God created man with the possession of an immortal nature, or natural immortality. Contrary to this error, all Christians should know and rejoice greatly in the truth that only through the death of Christ was the fountain of life opened to us. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15:22.

God gave us His Son, and there would not have been any use for the sacrifice of Christ on the cross if we already had an immortal nature. A condition of immortality cannot be attained outside the acceptance of Jesus as our Savior. The name "Jesus" means the same as "Joshua," a deliverer, or savior; while "Christ" means "anointed."

So how thankful each one of us should be that a wise and merciful heavenly Father has provided such a free and bountiful gift as His Son as an anointed savior. It is very important to realize that immortality is not a natural condition, but is conditional entirely upon our acceptance of God's one remedy, Jesus the Christ. "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life."—Romans 2:7.

—Josephine Hammond, Anaheim, California.

CHRIST IS ALL

Chief of sinners though I be,
Christ is all in all to me;
All my wants to Him are known,
All my sorrows are His own.
Safe with Him from earthly strife,
He sustains the hidden life.—Selected.

JUST A QUESTION

THE following Bible lesson was submitted by D. G. Harvey, Kokomo, Indiana, a regular contributor to THE RESTITUTION HERALD. It may be of value to those Berean classes which are not using the regular books.

What is the trouble with the world?

Strife, envy, crime, graft, greed, unemployment.

Remedies have been tried, but have failed.

Political, social, and religious plans of men.

Cause of these conditions: Psa. 50:22; Hos. 4:1, 6.

Lack of knowledge of God's will: Dan. 2:44; Isa. 60:12; 5:13; Psa. 2:9.

Man acts contrary to God's will: Psa. 2:1-5; Zeph. 2:1; Amos 8:11; Isa. 8:9, 10; Job 5:12. Man has organized in many ways; why? for the love of mankind or for his own protection? love or selfishness?

Results of man's acts: Zech. 8:10, 11; 2 Tim. 3:1-5; James 5:1-6; 1:10, 11; 1 Tim. 6:9; Micah 2:1-4.

What is wrong? Rom. 1:21-32. Man has forgotten God and developed the lust of the flesh. Gal. 5:19-21.

What must we do? James 5. Take no part in the affairs of the world. Watch and pray as the signs unfold; do not be signs ourselves. Glorify God.

Man will not, cannot, by nature return to God. Only God's kingdom can change man's nature (the world).

ELECTION OF OFFICERS AT RIPLEY

THE Ripley Bereans reorganized January 15. The following officers were elected: president, Gerald Cooper; vice president, Helen Lewis; secretary, Margaret Cooper; treasurer, Thelma Lewis.

Meetings will be held at six o'clock each Sunday evening. We expect an average attendance of eight.

A WORLD BEYOND

Science long watched the realms of space,
A planet's devious path to trace:
Convinced of heaven's harmonious law,
"A world beyond" Leverrier saw.

Thus when he views earth's sins and woes,
With a like faith the Christian knows
There is a world beyond, to prove
God's perfect wisdom, power, and love.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

“Study to shew thyself approved unto God.”

Oregon, Illinois,
January 24, 1933.

Master Charles Timothy Pearson,
Troy, Ohio.

My dear Charles:

You just can't imagine how happy I was when I stepped out on the porch to get the mail this morning and found your card. It made me happy for several reasons. You see, you are the first one to write and tell me that you have started a scrapbook of the Sunday school lessons as they are given on this page; second, because the card was written all by yourself, and I think seven year old boys are just about the nicest ever! And then, you see, I know your father and mother.

Another thing I like so much is your name. Of course, I like the name Charles for one reason because I have a nephew by that name who is a fine lad of twelve years, and I love him very much. He is the joy of his widowed mother, and he says he's going to be a preacher some day.

Then your middle name, Timothy; it made me think at once of that other Timothy whom the Apostle Paul loved and who was a big help to him. The very nicest thing I can think of is that your mother's name is Eunice, and I know she is teaching you, day by day, in such a way that others will thank God for you when you grow up, just as Paul did for that other Timothy. I imagine your mother and your grandmother, too, have often told you about him.

And now, that makes me think of our lesson for February 12. Jesus was telling a story to those who followed Him, and there was such a big crowd that He sat down in a boat, while the people stood all along the shore listening.

He said that once upon a time a man went out to sow some seeds. The seeds fell in different kinds of ground, and I think you know, Charles, that it makes a big difference what the ground is like whether we can expect our seeds to grow or not. Jesus told the story so simply that even a little child could understand it. But, of course, you know He wasn't just talking about a garden; He was talking about a life, wasn't He?

Do you know that tending a garden is much like living a life? If in early life we plant the seeds of honesty, industry, and kindness, we may expect to reap a harvest in later life that is filled with good things. Jesus told His hearers that seeds represent the directions for living that we find in God's Book. If we allow His words to find good ground in our hearts and care well for them, we will grow up to be the kind of men and women He will want to work in His great garden that will fill the earth.

I'm sure the seeds which that other Eunice sowed in her little Timothy's heart found good soil and grew and grew. For they brought forth a harvest of faith and hope and love that has lasted for almost nineteen hundred years and will never end.

How nice it is to think that when we are young is the best time to study and care for the seeds of God's Word that are being sown in our hearts; "before the evil days come," said another preacher, "when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Youth is the best time of life, the time to enjoy the good things, the things that will last and bring us a harvest of happiness in old age.

So, Charles Timothy, I am glad you are working at your scrapbook, and I hope you will spend many pleasant hours and learn much that will help you when you grow up to be a preacher like that other Timothy.

And now for Lesson 6, last week there wasn't room enough for directions for your scrapbook. Clip out the verses in last week's HERALD, fill in the blanks and paste them in your book; also this little verse:

*“Jesus called them, one by one;
Peter, Andrew, James, and John;
Then came Philip, Thomas, too,
Matthew and Bartholomew;
James, the one they called the Less,
Simon, also Thaddaeus;
Twelfth apostle Judas made,
Jesus was by Him betrayed.”*

Now for Lesson 7:

Write at the top, "Two Kinds of Gardens." Then draw two squares. In one, draw stones and thorns and only a few plants. In the other, draw smooth ground and many plants with flowers. Below these, make a list of the things that represent stones and thorns—not paying attention to the Word, the love of pleasure, etc. Opposite this, a list of things that represent good soil—interest in God's Word, thoughtfulness, study, etc.

And now, goodbye, Charles Timothy. I'll write and tell you what we are going to do with our scrapbooks when they are finished. For a little while that will be our secret, but we'll tell it to those who write and say they are working on their scrapbooks.

LESSON 7. — February 12, 1933

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES—FOUR KINDS OF HEARERS

Mark 4:1-20

Devotional Reading: Psalm 119:9-16

GOLDEN TEXT

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.—John 15:8.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Four Kinds of Hearers.

Aim: To lead the pupil to accept the gospel whole-heartedly and to cultivate the fruits of the Spirit.

Basic Truth: "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."—James 1:22.

I. Jesus Teaching by Parables. (V. 1, 2.) Jesus put forth every effort possible to reach the people with the message He had been sent to deliver. Neither inconvenience nor physical need was permitted to stand in the way of His reaching the multitude with the gospel of the kingdom of God. The methods He employed to instruct them were those with which they were familiar. Sometimes He used parables to conceal His meaning in order that only those whom He desired to engage for some particular service might respond. Others would not understand. Generally, however, He chose His parables to clarify, rather than to obscure, thought.

II. The Parable of the Sower. (V. 3-20.) The sower went forth and performed his task faithfully. The seed was good, and he endeavored to scatter it to the best advantage. The results thereafter depended upon conditions over which he had no control. The nature of the soil, the sunshine and the rain, the heat and cold, all these could retard or hasten the development of the crop.

So it is with the teacher of the Word. He may equip himself with an education, with scriptural knowledge, and devotion to his task; but he is not permitted to choose the ground on which he shall cast the seed. He must sow it broadcast on every kind of soil, and the fruitage of his labor will depend upon the nature of the ground it falls upon.

In the interpretation of the parable the sower is not identified, but only the seed he sows. And that is the important thing after all—that and the ground on which it is sown. It is not the worker, but the works, that count.

The gospel reaches four classes: those likened to wayside ground, who give little heed and soon forget; those of the stony ground, impetuous and emotional, but lacking in steadfastness under trial; those on thorny ground, who let the things of the world choke out the spiritual seedlings; and last of all, there are a few who continue to grow in grace unto the harvest.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

The Word of God is being sown today as it was during the time when this parable was spoken. While this parable is concerning the kingdom, the conditions mentioned are true of all peoples. Some seed was sown by the wayside. The sower apparently was unaware of what kind of soil he was sowing in. This seed sown by the wayside was soon devoured. How true this is of the Word of God! We sow the seed with a prayer that it may bring forth fruit, but the enemy in some form comes along and destroys the seed. The efforts were honest, but the results were lacking. Other seed fell in stony ground where the top soil was very thin. For a time it sprang forth in promising form but soon withered away. There are people who quickly receive the Word, but it has no permanent abiding in their lives. Then there is another ground that the seed lodges in. This is thorny ground, and soon the thorns choke out the Word. The fourth type of ground on which the seed is sown is good ground. Here the seed takes root and springs forth, finally to yield in varying portions from thirty to hundredfold. There are four types of soil mentioned in the parable, and only one produces fruit. Of course, we do not know if equal amounts of seed fell on these various types of soil; but is it not true that the majority of our sowing is not productive of fruit? Our duty is, not to worry about the fruit, but to do the sowing and to let God give the increase.

The cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches are destroying much of the seed that is sown and preventing it from maturing and yielding fruit. These are perhaps the most destructive forces we have to combat today; at least, they are the most prevalent. All must be on their guard against these enemies, or they will destroy all possibility of the Word's bringing forth any fruit in our lives.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

All things were created for God's pleasure (Rev. 4:11). The nearer all things work in accordance with His will, the more glory redounds to the Father. The apostles were sent out to draw men and women to the Father; and the more they succeeded in doing this, the more fruit they bore; for this was fruit-bearing: the more the Father was glorified.

A disciple is a follower who has learned to believe in the truth of the doctrine of his teacher. The apostles truly learned to believe their Teacher, Jesus, and went out to work in His name, spreading the gospel near and far so that much fruit was borne and God was glorified.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

We discovered in our last lesson that a disciple must study. Such study should result in godly wisdom. Wisdom is full of good fruits (James 3:17). Just how great is the fruit of righteousness (Prov. 11:30)? What is the fruit mentioned in Jeremiah 17:10? What will be the measure of punishment meted out by God (Jer. 21:14; 32:19)? How can one decide between a real Christian and a pseudo-Christian (Matt. 7:16, 20)?

Christ said: "I am the vine, ye are the branches."—John 15:5. What does God do to aid the branches to bear more fruit (v. 2)? What will happen to us if we bear no fruit (v. 8)? What lesson does Isaiah 5 contain for us? What Christian fruit is mentioned in Rom. 1:13? What fruit of the Philippians was well pleasing to God (Phil. 4:14-18)? Death is the fruit of what (Rom. 7:5)? What works are unfruitful (Eph. 5:11)? What are the fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22, 23)? Can one be led by the Spirit and not have the above fruit? Can we bring forth worthy fruit by our own efforts (Col. 1:5, 6)? Can we, then, obtain too much gospel?—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

How to Hear

How many of you have ever had a garden of your own or helped Father or Mother care for one? Nearly every one of you, I am sure. And is it not fascinating work to get the ground all ready, put in the seeds, and watch for the tiny plants to peep through the ground! We shall be careful not to plant any seeds in the path, because they would not grow there; and if the ground in our little garden is stony, we shall gather up as many of the stones as we can; for we cannot expect the little plants to grow if they are held down by heavy stones. How about the weeds? Oh, we know how pleasant it is to start a garden the first few weeks of spring; but keeping the weeds down in July is not so much fun, is it? And you would not think of planting any weed seeds in your garden.

Do you know that tending a garden is much like living a life? If in early life we plant the seeds of honesty, industry, and kindness, we may expect to reap a harvest in later life that is filled with good things. Jesus told His hearers that seeds represent the directions for living that we find in God's Book. If we allow His words to find good ground in our hearts and care well for them, we will grow up to be the kind of men and women He will want to work in His great garden that will fill the earth.

Special problem: On your class blackboard write, "Character Seed"; draw a line down the center; on one side write, "God-like Character"; on the other name the seeds you must sow to reap such a character.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The finest of cooperation is still being shown in our services here. On January 22 it was necessary to place chairs in the aisle again to accommodate the audience for the morning sermon. The Sunday school numbered 254, even though the secretary, Sr. Hanson, was taking a week off to celebrate the flu. Mid-week activities have been heartily backed, even to a "church-cleaning bee," all of which shows a healthy condition.

Just as these lines are being sent the church here is bowing its head in deepest respect and reverence at the death of Bro. A. K. Richardson, our beloved elder since the founding of this church and a pillar of the faith in Michigan for many, many years. Full obituary and particulars next week.

SHOWING OUR WARES

Did you ever step into a store with no thought of purchasing a certain article; but when you saw one displayed upon the counter, it immediately appealed to you, and you purchased it?

This is exactly what happens in the Exhibit Room at the General Conference. We see Methods and Materials which are entirely new to us and just the thing we need for our own Sunday school, church, Berean or ladies' aid society. Remember the smallest church has something for the largest, and the largest has something that smallest church will want.

So please start now to send in your materials for the Exhibit Room at the 1933 General Conference. If you have not added any new Methods and Materials to your Sunday school or church societies, please send the same ones as last year. In order that all our churches may be represented send at least one thing.

Our first endeavor was a great success. This year our aim is to have it bigger and better. This will mean better working materials for all churches. Better working materials mean better teaching; better teaching means more polished vessels, which are entrusted to us to mold and shape for the glory of God and the Ages to Come.

"TRUTH SEEKERS" COMMENTARY

We suggest that you file your "Truth Seekers' Quarterlies" away carefully for future reference, as they provide a valuable commentary on those portions of the Bible from which the Sunday school lessons are drawn.

During the past two years the larger part of Matthew, Luke, John, and Acts has been covered; and we are now entering Mark. In the Old Testament Genesis and Exodus have been considered with reasonable thoroughness. So if you will keep your quarterlies, you will soon possess expositions of the more interesting and important parts of the Scriptures that will be of help to you for years to come.

A SPLENDID MEMORIAL

What a splendid memorial it would be if some one would establish a fund for the publication of the works of Wiley Jones! Through the efforts of our past secretary, F. L. Austin, the National Bible Institution secured the right to republish any or all of these works, most of which are copyrighted; but it has been unable to do so owing to the lack of funds.

Many are acquainted with the scholarly writings of this able author and would welcome a new edition of his works, which includes "The Gospel of the Kingdom," a book containing ten discourses on this important theme and subjects related to it; "Ten Words," a smaller tract defining the words "soul," "spirit," "hell," etc., and various other publications of equal value.

While we are speaking of the works of Wiley Jones, we would also mention those of M. Joblin, many of which are worthy of preservation and wide distribution, but none of which are longer in print. An effort should be made to republish these and other similar evangelistic works for use in evangelistic efforts everywhere.

Who will volunteer to meet this need?

ELIZABETH DAVIS

Elizabeth Davis was born in England, Nov. 25, 1861, and died at her home in Buffalo, Jan. 5, 1933. On Sept. 27, 1883, she was united in marriage to John Davis. Shortly after their marriage they came to America; and after some traveling through the East and Southeast they settled in Buffalo, where they spent the remainder of their married life. Had Sr. Davis lived until this fall, they would have celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Both Bro. and Sr. Davis were baptized in England by Elder Dolworth, some fifty-odd years ago. This early espoused faith was cherished and defended throughout her life.

Funeral services were conducted from the home at 170 Congress St., Buffalo, N. Y., by the writer, who traced the Bible account of man from birth through life, into death, and again into life by resurrection. Burial was made in Elm Lawn Cemetery in hope of an early resurrection.

Bro. Davis is left alone as far as flesh kin, excepting a niece that has lived with them for twenty-eight years. But Christians are never alone; Christ is always with them. Bro. Davis will find Him a constant Companion and Helper.

OUR FATHER

Our Father who in heaven art,
Hallowed be Thy name.
Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done
In earth and heaven the same.

Give us this day our daily bread.
Forgive, from day to day,
The many debts we owe to Thee
As we forgive, we pray.

Into temptation lead us not,
Deliver us from wrong.
To Thee the kingdom, glory, pow'r
For evermore belong.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Grand Rapids Sunday school is rejoicing over its splendid enrollment. It did not quite reach the 500 mark, but very close to it. In addition to that the basement of the church has been divided into class rooms, provided with an office, cupboards, and other needed conveniences. We offer our congratulations.

Friends on the Pacific Coast, it would pay you, we are sure, to attend the Prophetic Conference at Los Angeles on Feb. 5 and to be present at as many of the Sunday evening meetings at Pomona as possible during the progress of the present series of studies under Bro. George P. Lichty.

Sr. George Sitler of the Oregon church was called to the home of Bro. F. L. Austin in Chicago on Sunday, Jan. 29, to care for Sr. M. A. Woodward who was coming down with the flu. Bro. Austin has also been on the sick list, so the household was much in need of some extra help.

We deeply regret to announce that the Oregon State Savings Bank, with which the National Bible Institution has transacted business throughout its history and which has ever shown us much consideration, has been compelled to close its doors. Our checking account is entirely tied up as a result, but beyond this inconvenience we do not anticipate any serious immediate embarrassment. It will necessitate, however, our meeting the notes held by the bank much sooner than we had expected. Pray for us and remember our needs, which are your needs, as the Lord prospers you.

Bro. A. K. Richardson of the Grand Rapids church had long desired to enter into rest to sleep until the glad resurrection morning. So the sorrow of his loved ones will not be as that of others who have no hope. We pray for God's blessing upon them.

A group of about forty earnest students at Mt. Morris, Ill., many of whom have been attending the Sunday evening prophetic lectures in Oregon, has invited Bro. Marsh to meet with it and assist in planning a course of systematic Bible study. None of this group is a member of the Church of God. May the effort result in much good.

Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Church of the Golden Rule (Church of God) at Cleveland, Ohio, writes that the Teachers' Training Course, which began there on January 10, had an enrollment of 21 at the first session, and 27 at the second. He says, "We are encouraged that the course will result in raising the teaching standards in both Sunday school and Berean society." Classes are held each week.

During the past two weeks we have been compelled to our regret to drop a good many names from our list of subscribers whom we would have been very glad to retain for their sakes as well as ours. Some of these had been in arrears for more than a year. We pray that conditions will so improve that they will be able to renew their subscriptions in the near future, as all need the inspiration and the instruction The Herald provides in these times.

A most interesting and timely series of services are being conducted in Pomona at the present time under the leadership of Bro. George P. Lichty. The opening discourse was given last Sunday, January 22, and was in answer to the question, "Who Am I and Where Am I Going?" The subjects that are to follow on succeeding Sunday evenings are given below.

Feb. 5—"Should I Believe in God or the Bible?"

Feb. 12—"Does God Answer Prayer? Will His Kingdom Come, a New Social Order?"

Feb. 19—"How Can We Know the Truth?"

Feb. 26—"The New Deal for the Church in the United States."

The services will be held at seven o'clock each Sunday night in the Williams Street Chapel (Church of God). Sunday school is held at 10:00 a. m. and a preaching service at 11:00 a. m. in addition to the evening services announced.

The invitation is extended to ask questions concerning any subject that may be presented.

NO DEPRESSION KNOWN IN PALESTINE

INDUSTRY in Palestine is expanding, agriculture and horticulture are making progress, and no unemployment problem exists in Palestine, Robert Szold, chairman of administration of the Zionist Organization of America, told the three hundred delegates assembled for the thirty-fifth Annual Convention of the Zionist Organization in Los Angeles last July.

"While Zionists in common with all others have been forced because of the world-wide economic upheaval, to struggle against great odds, we find that Palestine is definitely going forward. In Palestine as a whole there is a feeling of buoyancy, a surge of self-confidence. The Fifth Levant Fair surpassed all its predecessors in the variety of goods displayed and purchased, and in the number of visitors attracted. The Maccabiad was a unique event which served not merely to demonstrate Jewish prowess on the athletic field, however important that may be, but even more as a welding force for those who came from far and near to participate in and to witness the games, as well as for all sections of the entire Palestinian populace.

"Palestine Potash, Ltd., the company which holds the concession for extracting the mineral salts of the Dead Sea, is ahead of schedule. The hydro-electric power station of the Palestine Electric Corporation has been placed in operation and is turning the wheels of industry. The laying of the pipe line from the Mosul oil fields from Mesopotamia is expected to begin next spring and the construction of the huge oil reservoirs of the Irak Petroleum Company in the Haifa Bay area will commence shortly. The Haifa harbor, which when completed will be equal to any port in the Mediterranean, will be ready early in 1933."

While expressing objection to the fact that the Palestinian government only granted 2,000 immigration certificates this year, Mr. Szold declared that the fact that the Palestine Government found that Palestine could use even that many workers is indicative of the possibilities of Palestine. No other country could find room for these workers now.

Private investment and middle class immigration to Palestine, Mr. Szold said, is rapidly becoming a leading, if not the leading force in the building of the Jewish Homeland. During the past seven months a number of American Jewish immigrants, double that of any corresponding period in the past, left for settlement in Palestine. The number of tourists during the same period was three or four times as great as previously, Mr. Szold added.

A total of 556 capitalistic visas for settlement in Palestine were filed with the Palestine Bureau of the Zionist Organization during the past seven months. Immigration of American Jews into Palestine is virtually restricted to the capitalist category. The Palestine Bureau of the Zionist Organization has on file the applications of several hundred would-be settlers in Palestine who cannot enter under the "capitalist" category, lacking the minimum of 1,000 pounds required for such visas.

The development of Palestine, Mr. Szold continued, is now not only bringing a class of middle class immigrants into Palestine from the more westernized countries, such as the United States and Germany, but it is attracting American capital to the opportunities for profit in business investment there. To further this type of development, Mr. Szold declared, the American Economic Committee for Palestine had been organized and now lists among its membership many leading figures of American industrial life.

A branch of the bureau has been opened in Palestine which will undertake to furnish reports and data and will conduct special investigations in behalf of American Jews with respect to economic opportunities available in Palestine.

The Zionist Organization itself, along with all the affiliated bodies, had suffered a decline of income during the past year. But this was not to be unexpected in view of present economic conditions. At the same time, there has been a marked increase in general sentiment for the movement. The spirit of defeatism has been banished. The increase of anti-Semitism, notably, has no doubt been a cause for strengthening the movement. We have come to realize that the process of enlightenment in civilization is not a sufficient cure for anti-Semitism. The Jewish problem remains, and the most effective answer is to be sought only in the development of a virile national life in Palestine.

JEW'S WHO FINANCED THE REVOLUTION

THE JEWS of America have ever proved themselves loyal to the country of their adoption. They have occupied many important and responsible posts in both state and nation and, as far as we are able to determine, have proved themselves adequate for every duty. Three members of the Supreme Court of the United States at the present time are Jews.

During the dark days of the Revolution it was a patriotic Jew who assumed the difficult task of superintending the financing of the new government, Mr. Robert Morris. Other Jews who contributed liberally for the carrying on of the War for American Independence were the following, together with the amount each paid for the support of the historic struggle with England. Haym Salomon advanced $353,744, none of which was ever repaid; Manuel Mordecai Noah contributed 20,000 pounds (about $100,000): he was an officer of Washington's staff. Isaac Morris of Philadelphia, 3,000 pounds. Hyman Levy of the same city advanced an unstated amount to support the army in the field. Benjamin Levy of Philadelphia and Benjamin Jacobs and Samuel Lyon of New York signed bills of credit for the Continental Congress in 1776 and 1779, and Philip Minis advanced 7,000 pounds to pay the troops of Virginia and North Carolina.

He Faileth Not

I have tried love, and known love to fail,
Have trusted friends and found that friends forgot,
Sought help from my own heart without avail,—
He faileth not.

Neither by day nor night, in age or youth,
In poverty and in the fairest lot,
In sorrow and in joy His word is truth,—
He faileth not.

If I should let all other comfort go,
And every other promise were forgot,
My soul would sit and sing, because I know
He faileth not.

I cannot tell what winds of God may blow,—
What safe or perilous ways may be my lot;
But I have little care, for this I know,
He faileth not.—Anonymous.

The Editor's Prayer

OMIGHTY God of battles, Thou who in days of old hast gone before Thy people, the Children of Israel, to protect them from all danger and to drive out their enemies before them, we, the children of Thy grace, call upon Thee in their behalf again. Remember, O Thou God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob, the God of their fathers, the covenant Thou didst make with them in the past, and hasten, if it be Thy pleasure, the deliverance of Thy long-suffering people. Prepare their hearts by repentance and faith to receive the once-rejected Messiah of Israel as their Savior and Redeemer, we pray Thee in Jesus' name.

When East Meets West

“O the East is East, and the West is West, and never the twain shall meet Till earth and sky stand presently at God's great Judgment Seat.”

Thus Rudyard Kipling sings of the inability of the West to understand and appreciate the East, and of the East to comprehend the viewpoint of the West.

The great English poet delved deeper than he realized into the mysteries of the future when he penned those words. The East and the West, the Orient and the Occident, will ever stand opposed to each other until all nations shall be gathered before “God's great Judgment Seat,” and the One appointed for the purpose and “he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.” The present gathering of the nations in and about the ancient Empire of the Dragon is portentous of the coming of that day.

For thousands of years the history of the world has been written on the plains of the West and of the Near East, but never in the Far East. A change is now at hand.

Writing of the World War and its results, Mr. John Hay “expressed the conviction that the storm center of the world would gradually pass from the Balkans, from Constantinople, from the Persian Gulf, from India, to China, and added: ‘Whoever understands that mighty empire—socially, economically, religiously—has the key to world politics for the next five generations.’”

Bishop James W. Bashford, for many years resident bishop of his church in China, said, according to the author of China and the World, speaking in 1916 during the heat of the World War, “While the Western World War now absorbs our thought, we must not forget that events are moving in the Far East with almost tragic swiftness. The race storm is facing eastward as well as westward, and its effects will be felt in Asia long after the storm has died away in Europe.”

Developments during the past year give much added strength to this warning of Bishop Bashford.

That the danger that threatens the world from the Far East is pressing and exceedingly ominous at the present time is apparent to every thoughtful observer. Dr. Reinsch, United States Minister to China, is quoted as saying as early as 1911, that “there have been great crises in past history, but none comparable to the drama which is now being enacted in the Far East, upon the outcome of which depends the welfare not only of a country or a section of the race but of all mankind.”

Other experienced observers in the East voice similar warnings. Mr. Lovat Frazer declares that “the event most fraught with meaning for the rest of the world is the awakening of the East”; and Mr. B. Putnam Weale insists “the Chinese question is the world question of the twentieth century.”

To appreciate the nature of this world problem fully the student of prophecy should review most carefully the many factors that enter into the eastern situation: the wide sweep of territory included, the vast populations involved, the potential strength and resources of the peoples concerned, together with the culture and civilization that have distinguished this mighty race for so many generations. All of these things are of vital importance if we are to grasp the entire problem and analyze it correctly.

To what does it all point? There can be but one answer, the closing scene of Kipling's poem, when East meets West in the presence of the mighty Judge of all nations: “For there will I sit to judge all the heathen,” declares the eternal God. The long-sleeping nations of the East are being aroused by the ringing call to war. Gradually they are being mobilized for the final conflict in the “valley of decision.” Echoing the Master's words of warning, again I say unto you, Watch!

THE SPIRIT AND THE FLESH

By Samuel E. Haney

"Lead the life of the Spirit; then you will never satisfy the passions of the flesh. For the passion of the flesh is against the Spirit, and the passion of the Spirit against the flesh—the two are at issue, so that you are not free to do as you please. If you are under the sway of the Spirit, you are not under the Law."—Gal. 5:16-18, Moffatt.

DURING these closing evil days especially of what is usually termed "the gospel dispensation" it would be difficult to conceive of any sacred writing more vitally important than the above.

Paul in his epistles is elaborate and unique on the subject of flesh versus Spirit, expatiating on the fact that it is a matter of eternal death versus eternal life. Today it is a battle royal between the "new" and "old" man, Spirit and flesh, with the assurance of safety for those keeping the Lord's "patient endurance": "Because you have kept the word of my patient endurance, I will keep you safe through the hour of trial which is coming upon the whole world to test the dwellers on earth."—Revelation 3:10, Moffatt. In a broader sense, to discriminate, as John explains: "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil."—1 John 3:10. Peter in phrasing the same thought makes it a test for eternity: "Then be sure the Lord knows how to rescue pious folk from trial, and how to keep the unrighteous under punishment till the day of doom, particularly those who fall in with the polluting appetite of the flesh and despise the Powers celestial."—2 Peter 2:9, 10, Moffatt.

Paul elucidates the text: "Those who are in the flesh cannot satisfy God. But you are not in the flesh, you are in the Spirit, since the Spirit of God dwells within you. Anyone who does not possess the Spirit of Christ does not belong to Him. On the other hand, if Christ is within you, though the body is a dead thing owing to Adam's sin, the spirit is living as the result of righteousness. And if the Spirit of Him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, then He who raised Christ from the dead will also make your mortal bodies live by His indwelling Spirit in your lives. Well then, my brothers, we owe a duty—but it is not to the flesh! It is not to live by the flesh! If you live by the flesh, you are on the road to death; but if by the Spirit you put the actions of the body to death, you will live. For the sons of God are those who are guided by the Spirit of God."—Romans 8:8-14, Moffatt.

Death viewed from God's standpoint is quite different from death as seen from man's viewpoint; for God reckons His dead children as sleeping to be awakened at the return of Jesus, and the living unrepentant sinners as dead. John 11:11; Matthew 8:22; Proverbs 21:16; James 2:26.

God is doing business with the heart, not the head, with the new creature in Christ Jesus; that is to say, not with the old Adam-man who in his present spiritual state is doomed to everlasting death. Hence, the importance of the first phase of our text, "Lead the life of the Spirit." Such a procedure as walking in the flesh can be referred to in the past tense, as the Apostle expresses it in Romans 7:5 and 8:9: "For when we were in the flesh"; "but ye are not in the flesh."

Paul emphasizes the point: "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ("put the actions of the body to death), ye shall live." I reiterate: flesh means death eternal; Spirit, life eternal.

The foregoing clarifies Paul's attitude in 2 Corinthians 5:16, 17: "Once convinced of this (read verses 14, 15), then, I estimate no one by what is external (flesh); even though I once estimated Christ by what is external, I no longer estimate Him thus. There is a new creation whenever a man comes to be in Christ; what is old is gone, the new has come." A "new man" (Ephesians 4:24); a Christly mind, the spirit of a sound mind (1 Corinthians 2:16; 2 Timothy 1:7); a "new name" (Revelation 2:17); a "new Jerusalem" (Revelation 21:2); yea, "I make all things new" (Revelation 21:5). And all this for the benefit and pleasure of the new creation in Christ Jesus. Hallelujah! Those who question these sacred statements of Paul and the Apocalypse are challenged to defend their refusal.

By walking in the Spirit the Christian eventually will secure results more fortuitous than the case is with those walking (swayed) according (Please turn to Page Ten)

Get Somebody Else

The Lord had a job for me,
But I had so much to do
I said: "Get somebody else,
Or wait till I get through!"
I don't know how the Lord came out;
No doubt He got along;
But I felt kind o' sneakin' like—
I knew I'd done Him wrong.

One day I needed the Lord—
Needed Him right away;
But He never answered me at all,
Yet I seemed to hear Him say
Down in my accusin' heart:
"Child, I've got too much to do;
You just get somebody else,
Or wait till I get through!"

Now when the Lord has work for me
I never try to shirk;
I drop all that I have on hand
And do the Lord's good work,
And my affairs can run along
Or wait till I get through.
Nobody else can do the work
God has marked out for you.

PAST — PRESENT — FUTURE

By S. A. Chaplin

Sweet childhood hours—life's opening scenes—
How fondly memory backward leans
Toward its first dreams, and ardent prays,
"Let me re-live those blissful days."
How gay was Spring, enrobed in bloom
And dewy pearls, when morn's perfume
And bright Aurora's crimson flush
Were sweet as bridal beauty's blush.
'Neath summer's sun, in sportive race,
I watched the light the shadows chase;
Looked up to heaven's majestic blue,
That worlds of light were moving through:
Then in the streamlet's mirror glow
Looked down on heavens that shone below.
How oft before sin's shadow black
Had yet eclipsed life's shining track,
On mountain heights I wondering stood
In nature's awful solitude,
Before the painted foliage fell
O'er rising peak or sinking dell,
Ere withering flowers were laid in death,
Cut down by winter's killing breath,
And heard prophetic whispers say,
"Youth's transient visions fleet away."

Those years are passed; upon my brow
The snows of time are falling now.
The school-house troops with whom I played
Are slumbering 'neath the yew-tree's shade;
Parents that saw my life-dawn day
Are coffined yonder in the clay;
Green mounds are heaved above the breast
Of sisters in their dreamless rest;
And graven marbles give the date
When children passed the stream of fate;
And she—I name my youthful bride—
Is sleeping by those children's side;
The grass has often grown above
The saints who taught me God to love;
And while I wait the grave for me
Is ready as once, O Job, for thee;
For as I list with bated breath,
I hear thy steps, O coming death!

But Judah's Seers foretell an hour
When death shall lose his cruel power;
That One shall come with might to save,
And break the bolts that bar the grave;
When that dear dust o'er which we tread
In deathless shapes shall leave that bed;
They say upon Fate's farther shore
No "tempests beat, no billows roar";
That fadeless Paradises bloom

Beyond the deserts and the tomb;
That on those shores Jerusalem
Has golden streets and walls of gem;
No sorrows there, no grief, no sigh;
For tears are wiped from every eye;
That the eternal raptures there
The pure, the good, the holy, share;
That sin shall ne'er invade our home
In the delightful world to come!
Then, heavenly Father, me I pray
Give youth eternal in that day.

INGRATITUDE is so great a poison that it destroys the bosom in which it is harbored.

BABEL TOWER STILL STANDS

DR. WILLIAM GREGORY FLETCHER here gives some impressions of the former world metropolis. "As far as vision could reach there was desolation, the abomination of desolation. Ten miles away loomed the ruins of the ancient Tower of Babel, once 450 feet high. It is still high enough to be seen above the vast stretches of willows and date palms."

Dr. Gregory was speaking on the topic, "In the Wake of Abraham, the Columbus of the Old Testament." He served with the British army during the World War in Persia and Mesopotamia.

"To the rattle of machine guns in a battle some miles away, one sultry, sweltering June morning, about daylight, I beheld Babylon for the first time. Our entrance was through a breach in the northern wall, which, despite the leveling work of centuries, is still impressive in height.

"To the right stood the mournful ruins of the Babil fortress, built by King Nebuchadnezzar against attacks from the troublesome north. The sun being risen, we climbed to the top of an unidentified heap of ruins and gazed in silence over the lonely ruins of the city that was once both the pride and terror of the known world.

"Lost sight of for ages, Babylon was found and identified by an enterprising Jew in the eighteenth century, but excavation was not begun before 1811, and continued, in a desultory way, until 1889, when German scholars joined the research, putting in two decades of systematic toil that yielded rich reward, as the Berlin museum shows. Eighty-five cases of priceless records and relics were ready for shipment to Germany when the British army took Babylon.

"Acres and acres of ruins challenge the enterprise, money, and endurance of the archaeologist, despite the fact that the Germans spent nineteen years at the task.

"For thousands of years the metropolis, center of religious life and culture and mart of the known world; vast in area and rich beyond measure, 'the glory of the Chaldees' excellency,' Babylon is now a flag station on the Berlin-Bagdad railway."—The Oakland Tribune.

A Short Treatise on Fundamental Doctrines

(BASED UPON THE STATEMENT OF FAITH FOUND IN THE RESTITUTION HERALD)

By Norman John McLeod

FOR many years we as a people have avoided anything that savored of things of the larger churches. We feel that many times this attitude has been carried too far. Often we have noticed that many of us have not an argument to give when we are asked to present our views. We do not have scriptures to quote, nor do we know where to find them. We think that the idea of a ready reference treatise serves a valuable purpose in providing a brief statement of points in our faith as set forth in the Bible.

The big objection to such statements of principles is that people come to set them up as standards from which nothing must be subtracted or to which nothing must be added. If that attitude is assumed, then we feel that such a thing is bad; but if used as a mere handy set of references, it becomes of inestimable value. We therefore submit the following, realizing that it is only fragmentary and that it needs readjustment to suit the needs of the individual.

1. Q. What does the Bible teach as to the return of Christ to the earth?

A. No subject in the Scriptures is mentioned so often as the return of Christ to the earth; so great an emphasis on any subject shows its importance. After His resurrection He was with His disciples on the Mount of Olives; and while they were talking, He was taken up to heaven out of their sight; and then His followers heard from the angels that appeared: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1:11.

2. Q. When are we to look for Jesus to return?

A. The Scriptures distinctly teach in several places that that time is not known definitely: "When they therefore were come together, they asked him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."—Acts 1:6, 7. "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."—Matthew 24:42.

3. Q. What is the nature of man as revealed in the Bible?

A. Man is a soul and does not possess an immortal soul: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Genesis 2:7. He has no life in himself: "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is vanity."—Ecclesiastes 3:18, 19. "For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion. For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun. . . . Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."—Ecclesiastes 9:4-6, 10.

4. Q. How does man obtain immortality?

A. Only by the resurrection can man obtain life: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Corinthians 15:22, 23. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thessalonians 4:13-17. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." We see then that we have life only through Christ, as stated in Colossians 3:3, 4: "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." The saints shall be immortalized at the second coming of Christ: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."—1 Cor. 15:53-54.

5. Q. What is the relation of the Children of Israel to the plan of God?

A. They shall be restored as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ: "And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1:33. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."—Isaiah 9:7.

6. Q. What is to be the position of the church in the kingdom of God?

A. They shall be joint heirs with Christ: "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Romans 8:17.

7. Q. What position will the nation of Israel occupy in the kingdom of God?

A. It will be the chief nation of the world and will exercise a dominion over all the Gentile nations: "The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the Lord, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel."—Isaiah 60:14.

8. Q. Why was our church formerly called the "Restitutionist" church?

A. Because it laid great stress upon the glories of the earth during the thousand-year reign of Christ as mentioned in Acts 3:21: "Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." These conditions are discussed in more detail in such passages as Isaiah 35.

9. Q. What is the Bible teaching regarding repentance?

A. In order to obtain forgiveness in Christ we must repent from our sins; that is, we must resolve by the aid of Christ to live a new life: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."—Acts 3:19.

10. Q. After repenting, what must man do to be saved?

A. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2:38.

11. Q. Are repentance and baptism all that are necessary for the Christian to do?

A. No. He must live a life of consecration to the Lord: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Romans 6:3-5.

WILL YOU HELP?

By Mary A. Woodward

"Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it."—Proverbs 22:6.

FOR several months I have been thinking and trying to plan in my mind how in some way we might get the children and young people of the Sunday school interested in reading the lesson and the column written by Sr. Gesin devoted to the children. While our dear Sister Hunt was doing such fine work with that column, I often wondered how many mothers were interested enough to spend one half hour with the children reading and explaining those good lessons to them.

And now Sister Gesin has a new thought started: a scrapbook for each one to fill with people, houses, rivers, anything to bring out the lesson she so ably gives them in each paper. Do you realize, Mother, that these are the days to mold the thoughts of these dear children? Do not be deceived with the thought that they are not old enough to understand the stories you read to them.

O, how vividly the time comes to my mind when my own dear little ones, two, three, four years of age, would ask me every Sunday to "hurry, Mama, and read the Bible stories to us." They never tired of hearing them; and long before they were twelve years old, they could tell many of the stories themselves.

A good time to get them in a quiet, peaceful frame of mind, I think, is a little before their bedtime. O, yes, I know just how busy many mothers are about that time; but it will pay you, dear Mother, to leave the work for half an hour while you fill their minds with loving thoughts of the dear Christ's life and His love for children. It will pay a hundredfold.

When you see just a little ahead of you the seed sown taking deep root in their minds and when you see them walking into the baptismal water and giving their young lives to Christ, you will weep tears of joy and thank God you took time to teach them the way of truth, that you set aside the half hour at bedtime to read and pray with them. They will soon learn to look forward to that time with mother.

Sister Mick, Matron of Golden Rule Home, will excuse me for prying into her secret closet of prayer while I tell you how she interests little five-year-old Billy. He is never more contented nor happy than when she gets the Bible or HERALD and reads and prays with him at his bedtime. How glad I am that he never forgets to pray, "God, make Sister Woodward well again." He will never forget these evenings with mother and the Bible.

Sister Gesin's scrapbooks will help the children as they grow older to remember the Bible stories. If you have nothing else, get ten cents' worth of foolscap paper, sew it together in a neat book, and see what you can do. Be sure to write your names after each lesson. "There is a reason."

PERSONAL LIBERTY

By L. A. Boice

THE Women's Christian Temperance Union at a recent meeting in Boston adopted the following resolution: "That the national Women's Christian Temperance Union continue its campaign of education seeking to reach the youth of America with the truth regarding the effects of nicotine; that we urge the strict enforcement of laws forbidding the sale of tobacco to minors; that we continue to protest against untruthful and misleading advertisements; that we appeal to the womanhood of the nation to refrain from acquiring the tobacco habit in the interest of their own health and that of their children."

How did this organization of women dare to adopt such a resolution? Did they not know that they would make themselves very unpopular? Did they not know that they would be considered fanatical? Were they not aware of the fact that the use of tobacco has become so common that even the women are smoking cigarettes, and that to question the habit is considered old-fashioned and strange? Does the Women's Christian Temperance Union want to be considered old-fashioned and laughed off the stage?

There are many other reasons why it might be considered good policy for this organization of noble Christian women to refrain from taking up so unpopular a work. We are led to believe from reports that nearly all men smoke; that soon a large portion of our women will be smoking; and we know that many doctors and even some ministers find the temptation too strong to resist.

How many are ready to help the Women's Christian Temperance Union in their efforts to educate the young people with regard to the evil effects of tobacco? It is probably not worth while to attempt to change the habits acquired by the older ones. It seems to be difficult to break away from the habit when once acquired. It appears to be the wisest course to try to save the younger generation from the nicotine habit.

Why should there be any serious effort to do this? Does it hurt anyone physically? Is it expensive? Is it annoying to those who do not use it? Let us make a brief answer to these questions.

The following was taken from the January number of Good Health: "The late C. W. Barron when a patient at the Battle Creek sanitarium told the writer the following story:

'An internationally known tobacco merchant who had been induced to go to Battle Creek by a vice president of the American Tobacco Company, to be freed from the tobacco and alcohol habits, after returning to New York, called on me and said he had been solicited for a contribution to a fund to be used in fighting the anti-tobacco agitators. I told them I would not give them a cent, for the people have a right to know the harm that tobacco does.'

"The fiendishly cunning allurements and the monstrously unscrupulous misrepresentations artfully displayed in the advertising columns of the magazines and newspapers are enticing thousands, alas, millions, to form habits which cause mental, moral and physical deterioration."

The following quotation from How Tobacco Kills is illuminating: "The effects of tobacco upon the heart have been most carefully studied by many physiologists. All authorities agree that tobacco is a heart poison. A very small dose increases the work of the heart by contracting the arteries and raising the blood pressure. This effect is produced not only in beginners but in old smokers. It is the result of the influence of tobacco upon the nerves which control the heart and blood vessels.

"Numerous observations by thoroughly competent investigators have demonstrated the injurious effects of tobacco upon blood pressure. The normal blood pressure is 120. It is not uncommon to find the blood pressure of smokers 160 to 180."

Volumes might be quoted to show the results of experiments by experts to determine the effects of tobacco upon the system. Occasionally one will report that it is not so serious as the great majority would have us believe, and that moderate indulgence is not to be feared. The difficulty is that there seems to be no such thing as moderate indulgence.

Athletic coaches and directors recognize the weakening effects of tobacco, and those wishing to train for athletics are not permitted to use it.

Is it not surprising that anyone should think that he can take poison into his system, exceedingly delicate and sensitive as it is, year after year, and not suffer from it? He would not think of taking opium, unless he were an opium fiend; but he will take nicotine, only a little less harmful, and try to make himself believe he will not pay the penalty.

In a list of twenty diseases causing death from 1900 to 1904 heart disease stands third. In the same list for 1925 to 1929 heart disease stands first. Will this cause anyone who uses tobacco to stop and think? In recent years many men from fifty to seventy have been taken away suddenly by heart trouble, and the public did not know they were not in good health. The percentage of men is much larger than women. Does this mean anything?

Probably seventy-five per cent of tobacco users are not in a position financially to use tobacco. Suppose this seventy-five per cent had invested the money they have used for tobacco during the last ten years. They would have been in a position to help themselves, to a very large extent, through the depression. It surprises me that so many will use their money for that which injures them when their families need it so much.

A number of years ago I heard the president of a university say that a gentleman would smoke only in his room. Times and customs have changed since then. Now men and women smoke anywhere and everywhere. It is almost impossible to get away from it. No public place is free from it, unless it is the church. If we want to go to a ball game we must expect to be immersed in smoke and ashes. If there is a gathering of business men, the room is filled with smoke, and no one asks if it is unpleasant to anyone. The smoker must exercise his right of personal liberty. The non-smoker is not to have any consultation. It matters not how unpleasant to him it may be, he must not say anything for fear of offending those who insist on their personal liberty.

Time was when there were "no smoking" signs in depots. Evidently they have been smoked out. If one goes very far on a train, it is usually necessary to ask the conductor if he won't request some one to refrain from smoking. Where can we eat, except in our own homes, without being engulfed in tobacco smoke? Sometimes even our homes are not a protection. Some friend forgets to be considerate of the family of his host, as is often done. Sometimes we are entertained by our friends and smoked out, not intentionally, of course, but smoked just the same.

So insistent is the craving for the soothing effects of nicotine that the unfortunate one forgets that there are those to whom it is unpleasant. The non-smoker does not wish to offend and so makes no protest. The unfortunate one thus assumes he has the right-of-way and so proceeds to soothe his nerves.

It is practically impossible for one to use tobacco any length of time without carrying with him a strong odor. I suppose some people, like wives, for instance, become resigned to it and think but little about it. To others it is very noticeable.

All praise to the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

THE FAITH OF JESUS

By James A. Patrick

---

"Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

MANY people have faith in Jesus, but is that the same as having the faith of Jesus? Is there any difference between having faith in a person and having the faith of that person, or having the same faith that person has? For example: many people have faith that Abraham lived. They never question about his existence; but do they have the faith of Abraham, or the same faith that Abraham had? The importance of these questions will appear as we proceed.

Abraham was promised, "All the land thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever."—Genesis 13:15. Again God told him, "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession."—Genesis 17:8. Paul broadens this promise: "The promise that he (Abraham) should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."—Romans 4:13. Paul understood that the promise included the world. So then, Paul had the faith of Abraham, or the same faith that Abraham had, as far as the inheritance is concerned; for he said in another place, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Galatians 3:29.

Now we come back to the thought of the faith of Jesus. In the sermon on the mount Jesus said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Matthew 5:5. He was quoting from the thirty-seventh Psalm. So then, David and Abraham and Paul all had the faith of Jesus.

Not only did Jesus say that the meek should inherit the earth, but in what is commonly called the "Lord's Prayer" He commanded His disciples to say, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." God's will is absolute in heaven, but is it in earth; or has it ever been since Eve ate the forbidden fruit? The answer can only be negative, showing that these things are yet in the future; because the meek do not inherit and never have inherited the earth, nor has the will of God ever been done on earth as it is done in heaven.

How will this be brought about? God said to Hezekiah, king of Judah, through Ezekiel the Prophet, "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown . . . I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."—Ezekiel 21:25-27.

Time and space forbid that I develop this thought by quoting Scripture texts; so I will briefly outline the thought.

The Scriptures teach that Israel was God's kingdom; but when they strayed so far in sin, He overturned their kingdom and said it should be no more till He come whose right it is.

Before Pilate, Christ said He was born to be a King. John 18:37. It was well understood that He claimed to be the King of the Jews, for Pilate wrote an inscription and placed it on the cross, "THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS."—Matthew 27:37. He is the one to whom God is to give the kingdom; and according to Daniel 7:27 that kingdom is to be under the whole heaven, and it will be given "to the people of the saints of the most High." That kingdom is to be "under the whole heaven," and not in heaven. Paul writes in Romans 8:14-17 that those that are led by the Spirit of God are children of God and heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; and Jesus said that such "shall inherit the earth." Have all professing Christians the faith of Jesus, or the faith that Jesus had as given in these various passages?

What earth are the heirs to inhabit? What kind of an earth?

We are told in the Scriptures that the earth abideth for ever, and that God created it to be inhabited. Ecclesiastes 1:4; Isaiah 45:18.

John said in Revelation 21:1, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea." Does that mean that the entire structure of the earth had gone, and that God had created an entirely new one? If this were the case, then the wise man was mistaken when he said that "the earth abideth for ever."

The matter is explained in Revelation 21:5, where God says, "Behold, I make all things new." You will notice that God does not say that He makes all new things, but that He makes all things new. Old things that are already in existence are made new. And observe that the fifth verse closes with the words, "And he said unto me, Write; for these words are true and faithful."

How is this renewal to take place? "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing."—Isaiah 35:1, 2. It is the same old desert, but made new. When the curse is removed, the desert will blossom and the fir tree will come up instead of the thorn.

The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also . . . even we ourselves groan . . . waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."—Romans 8:22, 23. It is the same old body, only redeemed and made new; for "we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Philippians 3:20, 21. What is the antecedent of "it"? Body. What kind of a body? Vile body. What is to be done with "it"? Changed and fashioned like the glorious body of Jesus.

I wish you would notice that "it" is to be changed not exchanged. "It" is to be changed from one condition to another, not exchanged for some other body. So if "it" is to be redeemed and changed and the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" is another body reserved for us, then we will have two bodies. I am wondering what we will do with one of them.

It may seem that we have gotten away from the thought of "the faith of Jesus," but not so. Let us see what the faith of Jesus is on this last thought. When He appeared to His disciples after His resurrection, to convince them of His reality He showed them His hands and His side, with the nail prints in His hands and the spear print in His side. Doubting Thomas was not fully persuaded as to His identity till Jesus said, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing."—John 20:27. Jesus said, "my side." Was it His? It had the spear prints in it; and if it was not His side, He practiced deception. Are you willing to say that He did that?

It is often said that Jesus assumed a body in order to convince His disciples that it was really He. If this is true, He practiced deception in assuming something He did not really have. I cannot believe my Savior did that. Yes, I am sure He practiced no deception; for on one occasion He said, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."—Luke 24:39. "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself." His pierced hands and feet were "I myself." He told them to handle Him and see. That which they could handle was "I myself."

It is quite evident that all Bible writers were of the faith of Jesus. Notice what Isaiah said: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."—Isaiah 26:19. Isaiah said his dead body was going to arise, and the dust-dwellers would awake and sing. The old dead body was going to rise and be made new.

"So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Then the glad song will swell forth, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—I Corinthians 15:54, 55. I wish to call your attention to the fact that the corruptible is to put on incorruption, not something else be made incorruptible. And it is the mortal that is to be made immortal, not something else made immortal.

One question before I close: If we do not have the faith of Jesus, is our faith a Bible faith? And, if not, is it a saving faith?

WANTED! ENCOURAGERS!

ONE of the rules for officers of the British navy says, "No officer shall speak discouragingly to his mate, either on the watch or at mess, concerning the business on which he is, or may be, engaged."

It is not only a good rule to keep up the morale of the navy, but it is a good rule everywhere. There are too many "calamity-howlers," discouragers, and pessimists in all ranks of life. "You can never do it; what's the use of trying?" is the chant they are ever repeating. They throw cold water on every hope or ambition or reform or improvement or good intention and never lift a hand or heart to help bring them to pass.

In the crowds on the bleachers and in the grandstands at the football games, there are hundreds of thousands of encouragers, called "rooters," whose chief business it will be, by song and cheer and yell, to help their team to win. In the game of life there are a lot of young folks struggling and striving against odds. They will win if they get one tenth of the encouragement that the boys on the gridiron get. A word of encouragement, a clasp of the hand, or even a friendly smile helps a fellow to get a new grip on life and himself.

It is said that one of the finest things about William Dean Howells was the way in which he encouraged young writers who were struggling for recognition. Many were helped by him to carry on and finally win out.

"If any little love of mine
 May make a life the sweeter,
 If any little care of mine
 May make a friend's the fleeter,
 If any lift of mine may ease
 The burden of another,
 God give me love, and care, and strength
 To help a toiling brother."

—Selected.

THE SPIRIT AND THE FLESH

to "the lust of the flesh." Flesh, in the matter of eternal life, is always a liability; but the Spirit, under all circumstances, is an asset. Christians' turbulent minds would be calmed were they to note carefully the placidity of the Lord's and His apostles' minds while in the midst of their troubles and physical suffering. Peter's advice is pertinent: "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God."—1 Peter 4:1, 2.

The law versus grace. The Spirit of God liberates the Christian from the law. It lifts him above it; a privilege (blessing) not admissible to fleshly Israel under the law. This brings us to the last clause of our text, namely, "If you are under the sway of the Spirit, you are not under the Law." This accounts for Israel's being called servant while it was under the law, and Christians' being called sons and daughters while under grace. John 15:15; Galatians 4:4-7; Hebrews 3:5, 6. With the Jew it was, "Thou shalt do (or not do) so and so"; while God's children are ever anxious to do their heavenly Father's will. And they are not to be pusillanimous about it, but to "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might" and to "be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." Ephesians 6:10; 2 Timothy 2:1, 3.

Paul summarizes the text: "He who sows to his flesh will reap destruction from the flesh, and he who sows for the Spirit will reap life eternal from the Spirit."—Galatians 6:8, Moffatt.

It is difficult to interest some Christians, even though they expect to meet Jesus when He comes, on any religious topic. Change the subject to something appealing to their fleshly minds, and they become enthusiastic. Dear old gospel, much beloved by some, but much neglected by many who consider it as unimportant as a last year's bird's nest.

Very little thought is given to the "marriage of the Lamb" by many. They are neither preparing themselves nor assisting others to be "ready." There will be no wedding rings distributed at this marriage. But Christians do need to have their "wedding garments" immaculately clean. To reach this point, Christians should be mutually helpful. The Christian giving a hundred dollars for a wedding ring or a thousand dollars for an automobile and ninety-eight cents toward promulgating the gospel is likely to have the "door" slammed in his face and to hear the caustic sentence, "I know you not!" Were all the diamonds and rubies in the world strung into a warp and woven into a mat, they would not make a decent door mat for the kingdom of God, metaphorically speaking. Read again Revelation 21:10-21 and try to visualize "that great city, the holy Jerusalem." Note its foundations that captivated Abraham (Hebrews 11:10). Note the material. And the twelve gates! What a glorious picture! Such is the Christian's future eternal abode here on a purified earth.

Paul puts the whole subject into a nutshell by saying, "For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit."—Romans 8:5. "And these are contrary the one to the other."

So let us get busy assisting one another in our several respective ways in getting freed from the fleshly ideas and in becoming enthusiastic about spiritual matters.

"BECAUSE OF SIN"

By C. E. Randall

"He came unto his own, and his own received him not."

THIS scripture has reference to Christ and His people Israel. In Matthew 15:24 we read: "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

Why did not Israel receive their King? Was it because they could not, or was it because they would not? The evidence is before us that they did not. The Bible is plain in its declarations that Christ endeavored to gather them. We again quote, from Matthew 23:37: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

According to Christ's own words here, He wanted to gather them; He tried to gather them, and "ye would not." Why would they not be gathered? Was not Christ, who was invested with power from the Father, able to gather these people against their wishes?

We shall consider this last question first. It is not a question of what He can do, it is what He does do. It is contrary to the principles of God's plan to force a person into acceptance of Him. He calls, "Come unto me," but He is not a taskmaster that drives. He appeals rather than forces. He induces instead of compelling. It may be described in the following Scripture language. "Whosoever will." They did not will to accept.

We now move to the next question, "Why did they not accept?" There are many reasons. In the first place they were blinded. What or who blinded them? We reply, "Sin." Read Isaiah 29:11-14. We quote Isaiah 59:2: "But your iniquities have separated between you and your God." They were also blinded by having a veil over their faces. This veil was the law. "But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart."—2 Corinthians 3:15. There are some Gentiles in our day even that are blinded by the same veil. They cannot look to the end of that which is abolished.

Why were they blind? They rejected that knowledge that gives light. Isaiah 5:13; Hosea 4:1, 6. They were void of truth; and, lacking this essential, they were in error, and error separates from God.—Church of God Messenger.

THE NEAR RETURN OF CHRIST

THERE is a general admission among professing Christians that Christ will come again; but at the same time there is considerable difference of opinion as to the nature and object of His coming. Some believe that the coming of Christ will not necessarily be an appearing, as they think the statements of the Scriptures regarding it can be fulfilled by His coming representatively, or "in spirit." Others hold that the second advent will be a personal appearing, as real as the first.

I am going to prove to you that He is coming in person, and to carry out a work given Him by His Father. As to the personal appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ, let us turn to Acts 1:11: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

The purpose of His coming is to raise the dead and to establish a righteous kingdom of God on this earth. Therefore, Paul associates the coming of Christ with the establishment of God's kingdom. He said, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."—2 Timothy 4:1. Thus a time is heralded when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ: and he shall reign for ever and ever."—Revelation 11:15.

THE CALL OF THE CHRISTIAN

Not always as the whirlwinds rush
On Horeb's mount of fear,
Not always as the burning bush
To Midian's shepherd seer,
Nor as the awful voice which came
To Israel's prophet bards,
Nor as the tongues of cloven flame,
Nor gift of fearful words,—

Not always thus, with outward sign
Of fire or voice from heaven,
The message of a truth divine,
The call of God is given!
Awaking in the human heart
Love for the true and right,
Zeal for the Christian's "better part,"
Strength for the Christian's fight.

O, then, if gleams of truth and light
Flash o'er thy waiting mind,
Unfolding to thy mental sight
The wants of human-kind;
If, brooding over human grief,
The earnest wish is known
To soothe and gladden with relief
An anguish not thine own;

Though heralded with naught of fear,
Or outward sign or show;
Though only to the inward ear
It whispers soft and low;
Though dropping, as the manna fell,
Unseen, yet from above,
Noiseless as dew-fall, heed it well,—
Thy Father's call of love!

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

THIS fair universe is in very deed the star-domed city of God; through every star, through every grass-blade, and most through every living soul, the glory of a present God still beams.—Thomas Carlyle.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"I am the light of the world," said Jesus.

SHINING FOR JESUS

WHAT do you suppose Jesus meant by putting a candle under a bushel, John?" asked Jimmie of his "other half."

It was Saturday afternoon and raining very hard. The twins had been thinking, now and then, all week about the questions they were to look up for next Sunday's lesson; but they really hadn't got "down to business" until just now with their Bibles open before them.

"You know I was to find out all about lights—what sort of lights they had in Jesus' time and what He meant by these first two verses," finished Jimmie.

"All right," said John, "let's look in Father's Bible dictionary and see what we can find out about lights. Here we are; here's a picture of one. It looks like a dish with a wick in it."

"Here's another that looks something like a teapot with a wick in the spout," added Jimmie.

"Not much like our lights, are they?" queried John. "Our study light that Uncle John gave us for Christmas gives about a hundred times more light, I'll bet."

"Let's read what it says here and see if we can find out what they burned in these funny lamps," pursued Jimmie. "I'll want to be able to tell as much as I can about them."

"Here it is; it says they burned olive oil mostly, but also oil extracted from other vegetables and also fish oil," read John aloud.

"Now about hiding a light under a bushel, what do you suppose Jesus meant?" Jimmie asked.

"Come to the light; 'tis shining for thee;

Sweetly the light has dawned upon me," sang Mother, who was sitting near with her sewing.

Both boys, glancing up on hearing her soft sweet voice, recognized the chorus of the song they all liked so well in Sunday school, "The Light of the World Is Jesus."

"Hiding a light must mean not telling others about Jesus, for one thing," said John.

"Sure, it's funny we didn't think about it before!" exclaimed the other twin. "And as soon as it quits raining, I'm going to go over to Fred's and ask him to go with us to Sunday school tomorrow."

"That's fine," rejoined Mother. "You'll be taking the bushel off your light in a very good way."

"And now for my question," said John. "I am to tell about the mustard plant and how the kingdom of God is like it. Let's see if we can find anything about mustard seed."

"Here it is!" exclaimed Jimmie. "It says it was the smallest seed generally sown in Palestine, and grew to be the largest of all the herbs, sometimes taller than a tall man. That's something, isn't it?"

"Yes, and Jesus was the first one to preach about the kingdom of God, you know; that was a small beginning," said John. "Then He sent out His apostles and disciples, and in that way the news about the kingdom spread over the world."

"And what was that we learned in the lesson a few Sundays ago," asked Mother, "about ourselves being workers together with Him now?"

"That's how the kingdom plant grows, isn't it, Mother, by those who know about it telling it to others?" said John. "Guess I better ask somebody to go to Sunday school, too. I'll ask Bob."

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOKS:

Lesson 8—Shining for Jesus.

Draw a picture of a light such as was used in Jesus' time if you can find a picture of one, or cut one out and paste it in your book. Write under it, "I will let my light shine." Then draw two squares; in one paste the figure of a man sowing seed if you can find one; if not, draw it. Just a few lines will represent it. In the other square draw a large plant with birds resting on the branches. Under these write the golden text for this lesson.

And now, what do you think! We have two more members for our Scrapbook Club. They are Malena Catherine Cleek and George Kime Cleek from Warm Springs, Virginia. They sent me a card saying that they are enjoying their work on the scrapbooks and hope we will continue to have them. Move over, Charles Timothy, and make room for them. That makes four of us—the two boys and Malena Catherine and myself. We have lots more room around our work table; so come and join us, boys and girls.

"If kind deeds and words we sow,
In some life they'll root and grow;
What we sow we'll reap again,
Love and joy, or woe and pain.

"We may help to send God's Word
Unto those who've never heard
Of the Savior's love and care.
Let us spread it everywhere."

LESSON 8. — February 19, 1933

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES—THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM

Mark 4:21-34

Devotional Reading: Psalm 119:33-40

GOLDEN TEXT

The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.—Isaiah 11:9.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Parables of the Kingdom.

Aim: To lead the pupil to see that preparations are now being made for the coming of the kingdom of God in the future.

Basic Truth: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High."—Daniel 7:27.

I. The Parable of the Candle. (V. 21-25.)

A lamp is not brought into the house simply for an ornament or to be hidden in some inaccessible location where its light will be of no value; but it is placed upon a stand in a central part of the room where its illumination will brighten every corner. So it is with the gospel of Christ. It has not been given to us as individuals that we may retain it in our own hearts alone, but that we should let our "light so shine before men, that they may see (our) good works, and glorify (our) Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:16.

II. The Parable of the Growing Seed. (V. 26-29.) Here Jesus is using the mystery of sprouting seeds and growing plants to illustrate the mystery of spiritual growth in the lives of men today to its final fruition in the kingdom when He shall return. One cannot always see the development that follows the planting of the gospel in the hearts of men in this life. The sower may fall asleep in death without observing it. But when those who sleep in Jesus awake to life and understanding at the Master's coming, they will rejoice to see the results of the planting in the harvest of the kingdom.

III. The Parable of the Mustard Seed. (V. 30-34.) The mustard seed is now being planted. That is, the future rulers of the kingdom are now being taken out and prepared for the service they are to render. The spiritual life they are to know fully at that time has already begun in their hearts. And thus the rulership of Jesus is now being exercised over a few. The world cannot see this development of the power that is to conquer all nations eventually, for the "kingdom of God cometh not with observation" (Luke 17:20). When the King returns, its growth will be exceedingly rapid and seen clearly by all.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Our lesson starts out with the thought of light, not a hidden light, but a reflected light. The scripture of our lesson has to do with the kingdom of God. This light, likewise, concerns the kingdom. The kingdom is a kingdom of light and not a kingdom of darkness. There is no darkness in the kingdom of God, neither is there any darkness in the true teachings of the kingdom. The kingdom is not in existence at the present time; but when it is set up at the return of the Lord, the gross darkness that covers the people will be lifted and the brightness of the light of truth will shine into the lives of all. Without the physical light there is no life. Likewise, without the light of the Son of God there is no eternal life.

Everything that is said, even in the name of the Lord, is not profitable for our hearing. Our ears should be open only to truth. Error and truth do not make a good combination. They operate against each other, making both ineffective. We should be just as careful what we hear as we are what we say.

The growth of the kingdom is set forth in a very vivid way. It starts from a small beginning and grows until it fills the whole earth. All of God's plans and works are cumulative and progressive. There is no stagnation or standing still. It is true of the kingdom. It is true of the church. It is true of the individual who professes Christianity. We must grow. There can be no real worth while type of Christianity unless there is growth. There can be no growth without study, and study will not produce growth unless there is a practice of what we study. We must make application of the ideals and truths of the Christian life if we are to grow.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Isaiah 11:9.

This prophecy of Isaiah, like many others, will not be fulfilled until the next age. Like the mustard seed in our lesson, the kingdom will be but small in its beginning; but when its growth is completed, it will cover the earth. As the kingdom grows, knowledge of the Lord will increase until it fills the earth as the waters fill the sea.

What a change that will be from now! So few, comparatively speaking, know much of the Lord, His goodness and tender mercies that are shown us every day. Then all will know Him, from the oldest to the youngest and from the least to the greatest. All will sing His praises and glorify His name.

—L. A. R.

The Spread of Christianity

Did Christ command that the gospel be carried to all people (Mark 16:15, 16)? What is the purpose in preaching the gospel to all people (Matt. 24:14)? Does the return of Christ depend in any way upon the spread of the gospel? Did Jesus teach that all men must accept the gospel before He will return (1 Tim. 4:1-3; 2 Tim. 3:1-7, 13; 4:3, 4)?

Study the parable of Jesus as found in Matt. 13:33. Does the parable teach that the gospel is going to improve the whole world? Does leaven symbolize good or evil? (Study Luke 12:1; Matt. 16:11, 12; Mark 8:15; 1 Cor. 5:7, 8.) Does leaven represent the world as being overcome with good or evil? In the religious sphere does woman symbolize good or evil? (Study Zech 5:7, 8; Rev. 17:1-6; Jer. 3.) Does the parable teach the increase of good or the increase of evil in the world? Is this in harmony with the teachings of Paul as studied above?—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Great Growth From Small Beginnings

In our lesson for today Jesus told another "garden" story to teach His disciples something He wanted them to know. You remember that we read of Him that He went about preaching the good news of the kingdom of God and doing all manner of kind deeds for the poor and needy. The words He spoke and the deeds He did were like the first planting of seeds in our garden. The seeds seem so small, and we wonder if they will ever amount to anything at all. Just so, there were countless numbers of people who needed the Savior's help who could not reach Him; for they were too far away. But the words that He taught have been preserved in the form of our Bible during all the years since, and boys and girls have studied them and made them a part of their lives until all over the world we find people who love Jesus and are trying to serve Him. And, as we found in lesson 3, there will come a time when not only a few here and there will be healed; but when Jesus comes to set up His kingdom on earth, there will not be a single sick, blind, lame, or insane person. All who truly try to serve Him will be made perfect, even as He is perfect.

Special problem: When we pray, "Thy kingdom come," do we mean that man is going to bring this great result to pass, as we often hear it said? How is this great result to come to pass?—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The church here is trying to lift up its head and smile again after laying away Bro. Richardson, one of its most beloved and dependable members. Acting as an elder since the establishment of the church, he gained in his quiet, unassuming way an enviable hold upon the hearts of all.

The closing Sunday in January found 283 at Sunday school, with the church filled for the preaching hours. Interest in the Berean department is on the gain, also, and the Dorcas ladies are doing their part to keep the cause glowing. Next Saturday night is the regular monthly meeting of the "Knights of Abraham," and the men are working on a debate that should add much interest to the occasion.

A noticeable pick-up of numbers and interest in the young men's division of the Sunday school is gladly recognized.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

AMASA K. RICHARDSON

Amasa K. Richardson, youngest son of Charles and Eliza Jane Richardson, was born in Ottawa County, Michigan, April 6, 1854, and entered into rest Jan. 26, 1933, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Arlie Townsend, 134 Allen Road, Grand Rapids, Mich.

He was the last of a family of ten children, six boys and four girls, Byron, Fred, Charles, Frank, Alan, Mary, Emeline, Abbie, and Louella.

When a young lad his parents moved to Jackson County and later returned to their farm near Jamestown, where he spent most of his boyhood days. On Sept. 20, 1877, he was united in marriage to Miss Edith M. O'Dell of Jamestown, Mich. To this union were born five children, three sons and two daughters, Myrle and Arthur of Hastings; Rex D. of Seranton, Pa.; Mrs. Ruth Townsend of Grand Rapids; and Mrs. Beth Mosher of Wayland.

The autumn after their marriage they were both baptized by Elder H. V. Reed of Chicago, who conducted the quarterly conference that fall in Coats Grove, and he remained a faithful, influential follower of Christ until his death. His baptism was in the Little Thornapple River but a short distance from his final resting place.

As a young man he was very active in community and church affairs; and he served for 25 consecutive years as treasurer of the Michigan State Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith, never missing a single meeting of that body, which held its annual meeting each summer at Dutton.

He leaves to mourn his passing besides the widow and children, ten grandchildren, one great-grandson, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon from the South Lawn Park Church of God, of which church he was one of the organizers and officers, with interment in the family lot in Fuller Cemetery, Carleton Township, Barry County.

Bro. Richardson was one of the finest and noblest men the writer ever knew. His faithfulness in upholding the cause has been an example that sheds a wonderful influence over all who knew him. Not only the Grand Rapids church, but our whole brotherhood, suffers a severe loss in the fall of this noble pioneer.

F. E. Siple.

MRS. MARY PETTY

Mary Amanda Beem, daughter of Daniel and Jane Beem, was born Sept. 24, 1850, near Pleasantville, Iowa, and died Jan. 19, 1933, at her home in Sac City, Iowa.

At an early age she united with the Church of God in Christ Jesus, being baptized into the faith by her own father, a minister of the gospel. To this faith she held steadfast and true to the end.

On Feb. 4, 1867, she was united in marriage to Philemon Sleeper. To this union was born one child, Jane, now Mrs. Jane Glass of Sac City. On March 7, 1875, she was married to Edward A. Petty, who preceded her in death 43 years ago. To this union were born three children, Daniel F. Petty, who died Feb. 4, 1926, Solomon G., who died Aug. 7, 1883, and Lola May, now Mrs. Carl H. Larsen of Sac City.

She was a wonderful mother and for her family there was no task too hard for her to do. She not only reared her own children, but helped rear the three motherless children of her son. Her children rise up and call her blessed. She leaves to mourn her going, her two daughters, Mrs. Jane Glass and Mrs. Lola Larsen of Sac City, and ten grandchildren; also three great-grandchildren; one half-brother, John Beem of Venice, Calif.; and many nieces and nephews, and a host of friends.

The funeral services were held at the Neal funeral home, Saturday, Jan. 21, with Eld. A. M. Jones of Eagle Grove, pastor of the Church of God in Christ Jesus, in charge of the services. Rev. C. A. Underwood offered prayer and read the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians.

She rests, awaiting the call of the Master of life, who will reward her for her faithful service to her family and Himself.

FRANCES ELVEY

The death of Mrs. Frances Elvey, following prolonged sickness, occurred on Jan. 21, 1933, at her home with her last surviving child, Dr. Elizabeth Williams, in Maywood, Chicago, Illinois. Born on May 15, 1846, in Halifax, England, it was hers to live a long and useful life filled with many experiences.

She was the seventh of nine children born to James and Hannah Sutcliffe, all of whom she outlived. In 1857 she migrated to this land—even to the Chicago area. At the age of 15 she was immersed into the all-saving name of Christ.

On February 28, 1865, she was united in marriage with the late Charles Elvey, one who was as firm in Christian faith and works as was she herself. Together they pressed forward, always looking to Christ for guidance. Four children were born to them. One by one her loved ones fell under the relentless hand of death, Frank at the age of 2, Cora at 18, Bro. Elvey 14 years ago, and Sr. Minnie Carrell 6 years ago, leaving her ever more lonely.

Sr. Elvey was loved by her children and her three surviving grandsons, as by all who knew her. Her life was that of a true Christian mother. All grieved that a life so true and earnest should be cut off by death, but all rejoice in hope of the glad assured resurrection which shall burst her tomb at Rose Hill Cemetery in readiness for that change that fashions the vile body like unto the glorious body of Christ.

F. L. Austin.

REBECCA EMIGH

The home of Bro. and Sr. Christian Emigh (pronounced "A-my") and the people of Burr Oak, Indiana, suffered a cloud of deep gloom on January 21, 1933, by the death of Sr. Emigh. The short preceding sickness had not been thought serious.

Rebecca Williams was born near Ober, Indiana, to Lorenzo and Sarah Williams on August 6, 1868. She was united in marriage with Christian Emigh at Knox on March 27, 1886. They early made a home at Burr Oak, where they were blessed with the joys of life and health until ten of twelve children born to them were reared to manhood and womanhood, two having died in early life. At the time of her death all but the youngest had been married and located at different points between Kemmerer, Wyoming, and Cleveland, Ohio. Twenty-three grandchildren and a great-granddaughter were among her loved ones.

Rebecca Williams Emigh professed faith in Christ and rendered the obedience of baptism about twenty-five years ago. She at once became a Christian student and worker with the Church of God, and was permitted the joy of seeing her husband and several children and grandchildren lay hold on Him in whom alone is life and immortality.

A congregation greater than could be seated gathered at the church with the grief-broken husband, his whole family of children, grandchildren, and many other relatives, for funeral services. Of her parents' family four brothers survive her. All turned to the sure Word of God for hope and divine promise, the only balm with which to bathe the smarting, stinging wounds that heartless Death thrusts into homes and hearts.

Burial was made in Burr Oak cemetery till He who is the Resurrection and the Life shall call. In that glad day may all those who loved so truly in this mortal life gather with Mother to sing the triumphant song of resurrection. Then may the present shroud of despair be forever shattered by each one being fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body.

F. L. Austin.

MRS. MARY H. CLEM

Mary H. Clem was born Sept. 18, 1849, and died Jan. 19, 1933. She united with the Church of God while but a young girl. Her life proved that her heart was true to God and filled with His love. She remained true to her faith until the last and died with the hope of the first resurrection. Hers was a life filled with service to others. Many were the kind words spoken about Sr. Clem. These will remain as a memorial to her, even though she now sleeps in the cold embrace of death.

Sr. Clem is survived by four children, thirty grand children, and fifteen great-grandchildren.

We pray that the time may soon come when there will be no more death in the land to deprive us of loved ones and leave our hearts depressed with sorrow.

Harry A. Sheets.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., is again back with his congregation at Plum River (Ill.), actively engaged in pastoral duties after his recent illness at his father's home in Blair, Neb.

Sr. Mary A. Woodward is suffering from crysipelas at the home of her son, Bro. F. L. Austin, in Chicago. We pray for her relief.

Our columns this week report a greater number of deaths among the churches than has appeared in one issue for a long time. How our hearts go out in sympathy to the numerous bereaved ones. All have met with the same sad experience. It is the common lot of humanity. But we "sorrow not, even as others that have no hope," for we look for the mighty Conqueror of death to restore our sleeping ones to our embrace when He comes.

Orders continue to flow into the office for the special numbers of The Herald. Close to a hundred extra copies of the last issue were mailed on orders from the brethren. The next special issue will be that of Feb. 28, and will be devoted to the Bible, its inspiration and reliability. Will our regular contributors bear these special numbers in mind as they prepare their manuscripts?

The prophetic series of sermons in progress at Oregon continue to attract large and attentive audiences each Sunday night. Last Sunday evening the pastor spoke on "When the Lions of Tarshish Face the Foe." Next Sunday his theme will be, "Egypt at the Judgment Bar of God." The discourses all treat of prophecy having to do with present world conditions.

WAR'S CENOTAPH

By Arlen Marsh

WAR IS DEAD! Long live Peace! Mars has been conquered! The dove and olive branch hold sway! No cause for fear; the need for it is passed. War is dead! Long live Peace!

So cries the theorist as he cried six weeks before the awful carnage broke loose in 1914. And the thinker, replying to this optimistic utterance, lisps drawlingly, irritatingly, "Ye-e-s-s-s?"

Political and social cliques are as sharply divided as they were before the struggle which hurled whole nations to their doom. That is, they are divided in their conclusions regarding the probability of another world-wide conflict. Concerning the outcome of such a holocaust there is no division at all; there is but one conviction entertained; there could be but one conviction entertained: the next war, if there is to be another war, spells finis, termination. Jerry-built and decadent civilization cannot withstand the shock.

Ormal I. Sprungman, writing in Modern Youth, a monthly magazine taking no work from authors over thirty and intended primarily to express the ideas of the younger generation on important questions of the day, lays down in his "Youth Looks at War" the conception of Mars that is commonly held by college students. In reference to a story of his own tragic war-time experience by a professor at the University of Minnesota, he declares "it made them"—the class—"want to rise up and cry out" against those who would lead us into war.

But despite this thought of the young, bred in the aftermath of old Earth's deadliest battles; despite the fact that four out of five, by actual census taken recently, declare against compulsory military drill for college students; despite the solemn assertion of one writer to a university daily "that all wars are futile, that there can be no winner, that directly or indirectly all participants are losers, that they must be avoided at all costs"; despite the evidence visible in the thirty-seven million men who were killed and crippled in the last one and the three hundred billion dollars that were "wasted—literally blasted away"; despite all this, the call of the great Red God will not be ignored, and the world plunges blindly on toward—War.

Under the caption, "Tonics and Poisons," the editors of Modern Youth weigh Adolf Hitler, German political power, in their balances and label him as poison, "because, backed by munitions manufacturers, he is trying to revive a dangerous type of nationalism, militarism and anti-Semitism, in a movement that attempts to set youth back on the old path that led our elders to cataclysmic self-destruction." Romain Rolland they classify as a tonic, "because he has done more than any other living man to carry on the peace work of Jean Jaures, thus helping in a practical way to prevent the chaos and universal destruction to civilization that would follow another World War."

These unusual analyses contain elements of both optimism and pessimism; optimism, since the authors appear to look toward a Golden Age for the coming generation, an age of peace, prosperity, and happiness, an age developed through the education of the young against the horrors of war; pessimism, since they permit to show, perhaps, unconsciously, their fears that men like Hitler will succeed in their endeavors. They recognize and clearly state the results to follow on the heels of battle, but they hope that those results will have no cause to come.

Dr. Richard M. Elliott recently told his students in elementary psychology that "another war surpassing the last war as much as it surpassed all others would mean the annihilation of the human race." As his reasons for this statement he gave these:

"If another war is fought, disease germs may play their part in the destruction of mankind. Changed or new germs might evolve quicker than we could develop knowledge of how to control them.

"Use of germs in the past war was only a beginning toward the use which might be made of them in the next. If germs were used originally as an offensive weapon, devastated areas would become natural breeding places on a scale which might eventually wipe out both sides.

"I am neither pacifist nor militarist, but these facts indicate the possibility of race suicide in another war."

With such realities as these confronting the human family it is not surprising that the average individual dreads the thought of war. But Peace, goddess with whom all men have flirted unsuccessfully, is not to reign. Hatred, ages old; racial pride; inherent selfishness will answer to the persistent plea of Mars to "beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears." Jehovah's predictions of "multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision" will be fulfilled; and all the power of the pacifist and the diplomat cannot prevent it. The terrors of an earth run amuck will be known as never before; the flood at least was comparatively painless, but men now will die in agonies too horrible to be described. God has told of it, and God has not yet failed.

So, although men may seek to bury it, War's tomb will be a cenotaph, a sepulchral monument erected in honor of one who is interred elsewhere. Strive as it likes to attain it, the human race will never receive the blessings of ensured peace until the establishment for all eternity of the divine empire under the Prince of Peace. War is not buried here, but in the coming kingdom.

In 1492 all Jews were commanded to leave Spain, save those who should embrace the Roman Catholic faith. A number outwardly professed Christianity, but the majority, numbering about three hundred thousand, left the country. A short time ago the Spanish foreign minister invited all Jews of Spanish ancestry to return, promising to do all in his power to facilitate their naturalization. It seems that the new Spanish republic desires to make amends for the treatment of the Jews under the Catholic monarchy.—Sel.

GOD'S GIFT TO MAN

By Harry A. Sheets

THE Word speaks of "wages" which are paid as the result of labor faithfully performed and of "reward" which Christ will give when He comes. It also speaks of the "gift" of God. "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6:23. When will man receive this gift from God? There are three schools of thought as to the time. These are: that one receives life as soon as he believes; that one receives life at death; and that the gift of God is received at the second coming of Christ.

The first theory seems to be based almost entirely upon John 5:24: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my words, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."

"Hath" does seem to denote present possession, but we must remember that in prophecy God often speaks as though a thing were already accomplished. Paul says that "God calleth those things which be not as though they were."—Romans 4:17. Thus in Isaiah 53, written seven hundred twelve years before Christ, God spoke of Jesus and His suffering as though they were already past. Note: "He was despised"; "he was wounded"; "he was bruised"; etc. These things were accomplished only in the will of the Father; but being God, He could speak as though the thing were done. Are the words of our Savior a statement of prophecy, or can eternal life be a present possession? A comparison of scriptures will enable us to decide.

If eternal life can be possessed at once by believing, then it is to be supposed that the apostles had life. We notice, however, that they suffered pain, were tempted and finally put to death. The Scriptures never associate pain and death with eternal life. Paul wrote to the Roman brethren and told them to "seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life." It is evident these brethren did not have eternal life.

Paul never considered eternal life as a present possession.

His teachings everywhere indicate that his hope of eternal life was not at "belief," but at resurrection. He wrote: "For if the dead rise not, then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." "If the dead do not rise, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we are to die."—Weymouth. In Matthew 25:31-46 the righteous are not said to enter into life eternal until after Christ has established His throne and judged the nations.

Paul did not have the hope of eternal life as present possession, and his idea was shared by others. John declares: "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life."—1 John 2:25. James wrote: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he hath been approved he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord promised to them that love him."—James 1:12, R. V. Other scriptures might be added that would prove that eternal life is a promise to be fulfilled in a future age.

We have the assurance that "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit; that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ."—Romans 8:16, 17. An heir is not possessor; yet an heir often speaks of his coming possession as "mine." Jesus, knowing the power of God, spoke of the faithful as having life.

The second theory seems to be founded upon the teaching of the immortality of the soul, a teaching not found in the Bible. A few scriptures will prove that the Bible does not teach that the soul is immortal. "None can keep alive his own soul."—Psalm 22:29. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezekiel 18:4, 20. Jesus "poured out his soul unto death."—Isaiah 53:12. "Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him . . . to deliver their soul from death."—Psalm 33:18, 19. Jesus said: "Fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."—Matthew 10:28. If the soul were immortal, it could not be destroyed.

Dear Lord, Forgive

If I have wounded any soul today,
If I have caused one foot to go astray.
If I have walked in my own sinful way,
Dear Lord, forgive!

If I have uttered idle words or vain,
If I have turned aside from want or pain
Lest I myself should suffer thro' the strain,
Dear Lord, forgive!

If I have been perverse, or hard, or cold,
If I have longed for shelter in Thy fold,
When Thou hast given me some fort to hold,
Dear Lord, forgive!

Forgive the sins I have confessed to Thee;
Forgive the secret sins I do not see;
O guide me, love me, and my keeper be,
Amen. —Good News.

Dangers in the Last Days

THE BIBLE warns of two particularly dangerous delusions that will confront the church in the last days. The strange thing concerning them is the fact that they are exactly opposite to each other. One takes the form of skepticism: "Where is the promise (sign) of his coming?"—the other that of false prophets and lying miracles, which, Jesus declares, will be of such a convincing nature that, "if it were possible, . . . shall deceive the very elect."

The modernist and the worldly skeptic ask the question Peter puts into the mouths of the scoffers, "Where is the promise (sign) of his coming?" These deny the possibility of all signs and wonders of a miraculous nature. On the other hand, "many" will be deceived by false Christs and false prophets who will "shew great signs and wonders" of a most convincing nature.

The first makes one indifferent to prophecy, and the second may lead into deeds of horror. Just last week, a sincere, prayerful, and conscientious family, long convinced that they possessed the gift of "tongues," were "given the power to interpret." Under the command of that "power" the son killed his mother in sacrifice.

Let us be watchful and of a calm mind.

"Because Thou Hast Done This Thing—"

THE remarkable promise in which these words are found was made to Abraham immediately after the successful testing of his faith by the command that he should offer Isaac his only son, the child of promise and the personification of his hope, as a sacrifice unto the Lord.

"Because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son . . . because thou hast obeyed my voice."—Genesis 22:15-18. The thought in the two statements is the same. The reason, which God had, of course, foreseen before Abraham was called out of Ur, why Abraham was chosen for his blessed work that reaches out to all the families of the earth is clearly given.

Because Abraham "believed God"; because he acted in harmony with his professed belief; because he perfected his faith with works of righteousness; in short, because Abraham obeyed the voice of God, he was made the channel of blessing to all the families of the earth. A faith that Abraham made perfect by works was "counted unto him for righteousness." Because of that righteousness God swore "by himself, because he could swear by no greater" (Hebrews 6:13), that He would keep His covenant that reaches down through the ages to you and to me.

The great purpose of God as exhibited in both the Old and New Testaments and clearly summarized in the gospel of the kingdom is to develop a race of men who will fully submit to the will of the Lord in all things, and thus carry out in every detail the eternal purposes of the Creator.

Adam's sin was the sin of disobedience resulting from unbelief. Had he believed God rather than the serpent, he would have continued to exercise to the full the authority which God had placed in his hands at his creation. God's work would have gone forward without interruption. The "Garden of Delight," as it is termed in the Septuagint, would have been extended far beyond the borders of Eden, until the whole world would have been filled with the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. But the wilful sin, the obvious unbelief of man in God, which was followed naturally by disobedience of an explicit command of the most High, hindered (to speak from the human standpoint) the consummation of the supernal purpose; and the blessing which mankind might at once have entered upon was delayed, the pains of mortality introduced, and the wages of sin reaped by an unfaithful and disobedient race.

TIMES OF RESTITUTION

Acts 3:19-21

THE LAMB of God has now been offered. The resurrection has taken place, and He who died has thus been declared to be the Son of God with power. He has ascended on high, leading captivity captive, and given gifts to men. He has sent down upon His servants the Holy Ghost, in the extraordinary manifestations of the day of Pentecost, and in that permanent presence in which He will abide with the church until the Lord Himself shall return.

Peter is preaching his second recorded sermon. Deeply moved by the healing of the lame man at the gate Beautiful of the temple, the people are crowding around the two apostles in Solomon's porch. Peter disclaims for himself and John the merit of that mighty work and the power by which it was wrought. He tells them that Jesus was the Healer; that Jesus is the Prince of Life, the Holy One and the Just; and that in Him alone is salvation.

"Repent, therefore," he cries. "Oh! ye men of Israel, and be converted for the blotting out of your sins, so that the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began."

As the discourse moves thus earnestly and grandly on, the apostles are put under sudden arrest, and spend the night in prison. Examine these words. They present a cluster of great thoughts, every one of which merits the most careful attention.

By the same Spirit that dwelt in the prophets, Peter renews the prophecy of "the times of refreshing." They had not been realized in the history of the church up to his day. He means those signal times of spiritual triumph, rest, and joy, which Christian faith and hope look forward to as the millennium.

As Paul affirms that the destruction of the wicked will issue "from the presence of the Lord" when "he shall come to be glorified in his saints," so Peter also teaches that "the times of refreshing will come" whatever may be true of creature-agencies and powers "from the presence of the Lord," at the same coming.

He also teaches that the coming of these "times of refreshing" depends, in some sense and degree, on the repentance and conversion of the Jewish people; for the true and only defensible rendering of his words is, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted unto the blotting out of your sins, so that, or in order that, the times of refreshing may come." Paul doubtless referred to the same thing when he wrote, "Through their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles. But then, if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"

The Apostle, moreover, connects "the times of refreshing" chronologically with the sending of Jesus Christ, whom the heaven has received. This sending of Jesus Christ cannot be the first sending. That had already occurred when Peter thus spoke. The Lord had both come and gone. Peter had seen Him and lived with Him. He had heard Him, and believed on Him. His own eyes had followed Him as He went up into heaven whence He came. This sending, therefore, must be the coming in glory.

When will this coming in glory be? Peter gives a most certain answer when he says, "Whom the heaven must receive, until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." How explicit and conclusive! "The times of restitution" and "the times of refreshing" are not only contemporaneous, they also coalesce. The differing forms of expression point at differing aspects of the same times. "The times of restitution" include "the times of refreshing." "The times of refreshing" flow from and are a part of "the times of restitution." They are now prophecy. They will become history in that great period currently called the millennium. Peter, therefore, really says that Jesus Christ is to remain where He now is, in the heaven, on the throne of the Father, until the millennium. There can, therefore, be no millennium before the Lord shall come.

Some, indeed, who spiritualize, as it is called, this apostolic statement, insist that "until the times of restitution" means during those times. This, however, is not the natural and obvious meaning of the word "until." It can be gained in this place only by pressure. Besides this it does not meet the wants of those who thus press it. Their theory is that the second coming of the Lord cannot occur until after the millennium. But if they will say that Peter here means by "until the millennium" "until after it," they do not inter-

Always Near

Winter filled my soul with sadness,
Winter swept away my cheer;
Then a voice spoke, touched with gladness,
And I knew a friend was near.

From the darkness soft lights blessed me,
Warmth replaced the winter's chill;
And a sense of peace caressed me,
And each nagging doubt grew still.

Though the shadows some day find me,
Never more will I know fear,
For my memories will remind me
That a Friend is always near.

—The Christian Herald.

pret the Word of God: they wrest it; and they wrest this particular scripture out of perfect harmony with every other scripture which directly touches the time of the Lord's coming.

The heaven whither the Lord has gone will retain Him until "the times of restitution." He will then come again; and, inaugurating those times, He will fill them with the benedictions and all the glories of His kingly presence and power.—Selected from the writings of Willis Lord by R. A. Curtis.

QUESTIONS ON JUDGING

---

1. What warning does Christ give concerning judging? "Judge not, that ye be not judged."—Matthew 7:1.

2. What is Satan called in the Scriptures? "The accuser of our brethren. . . which accused them before our God day and night."—Revelation 12:10.

3. If we bite and devour one another, what may we expect? "But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."—Galatians 5:15.

4. Before attempting to judge, criticise, or correct others, what should we first do? "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."—Matthew 7:3-5.

5. What did Christ say He came not to do? "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world."—John 12:47. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."—John 3:17. "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. . . So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God. Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way."—Romans 14:4, 12, 13. "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things."—Romans 2:2.

6. Who are we not likely to judge and condemn? "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged."—1 Corinthians 11:31. "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned."—Luke 6:37. "For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."—Matthew 7:2. "Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts."—1 Corinthians 4:5.—Selected by Mrs. A. J. Chaplin from Bible Readings.

THE MAN OF CHAINS

---

ROBERT RIPLEY, of "Believe-it-or-not" fame, tells the story of an Indian fakir known as "Sahib Allah Shah, The Man of Chains"—who was for many years a familiar sight on the streets of the city of Lahore, India. He dressed entirely in iron chains, the weight of his strange garment being six hundred and seventy pounds.

He began collecting his chain suit when quite a young man, adding links from time to time until he was completely covered. For thirteen years he bore this burden before he died. To the Indian this queer suit was a mark of great piety, but to us, of course, it was a mark of gross superstition.

But the case of "Sahib Allah Shah," as he called himself, is not so strange after all. We are all familiar with the case of those who go on, year after year, adding to their own burden of life by accumulating evil habits or distressing attitudes of mind.

The writer once knew an aged man who, through the years of his active business career, accumulated a long list of grudges against those with whom he had business dealings. Upon his retirement from business he let younger men take the responsibilities of management upon their shoulders, but he took all his old grudges and hatreds home to keep him company during the years of his inactivity. A more pitiable individual one could scarcely find than this aged man in the midst of his hatreds. Poor Sahib Allah Shah was never more burdened than he was.

Then there was that elderly woman who, having been left a comfortable fortune at the age of forty, became obsessed with the fear that she would lose it through theft or trickery. As a result of her fear she became suspicious of all who tried to have business dealings with her, and although she did not use one third of her income for her living expenses, she could not be prevailed upon to give a single dollar to any church or charitable enterprise. The Indian Man of Chains was no more burdened with his suit of mail than she was with her accumulating fortune and fears.

Still, also, there was that youth who thought it necessary to take up every wasteful habit recommended by the fast set with which he associated. When he had spent all his substance, and the famine arose, he found that he had accumulated a great burden that must be borne all the rest of his life.

How many animosities, irritations, insults and "peeves" cling to us during the course of the week! How many fears, worries, anxieties and unnecessary troubles we cherish! How many superstitions dog our ways!

In view of the burdens we add to our drooping shoulders each day, we can well afford to speak charitably of Sahib Allah Shah, the man of chains, for we are so little different.

This is the glory of the Christian gospel, for it says to all men, everywhere, in the name of Christ, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Roy L. Smith, in The War Cry.

HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD

By George B. Alldridge

"In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar."

PROBABLY many of my readers have noted that most of the writers and speakers for the Church of God and the Christadelphian brotherhood lay great emphasis upon the material phases and benefits that will result from the establishment of the kingdom of God upon this earth. We wish to offer no criticism regarding this feature, as it is absolutely scripturally endorsed by all the writers throughout the sixty-six biblical books. The feature we wish to emphasize in this article is its spiritual phase, that is, its effects upon man himself.

A lawyer asked Jesus upon one occasion, "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Note Jesus' answer: "What is written in the law? how readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself. And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right; this do, and thou shalt live."

I feel that some reader is now saying (quoting Colossians 2:14), "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." To all of which I say "Amen!" But I ask when this happened to you and me? My answer is found in Romans 6:1-7.

But Jesus told the lawyer that if he kept the law as cited by him, then "thou shalt live." Somewhere Jesus must have read this, authorizing Him to make this statement.

Of course, you recall what He said when He was tempted: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." This declaration was not original with Him, His great type Moses said this nearly fifteen hundred years before. Deuteronomy 8:3 reads, "And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live."

Dear brethren, is it not very singular that God should permit His own beloved Son to be tempted exactly as all men are tempted? And note well that Jesus was always cognizant of this fact that He was tempted. Why? Because He was human; and to fortify His mind against committing sin He studied and obeyed the Scriptures at all times, from the days of His childhood until He cried, "It is finished." Now read Hebrews 5:7-9.

When Jesus answered the lawyer, He again quoted Moses: "Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgments; which if a man do, he shall live in them: I am the Lord."

I do not wish to precipitate a controversy, but in passing I wish to say that the Scriptures confirm the thought that man in the bondage of corruption cannot obey the law of God. Read Romans 7, the whole chapter.

On the other hand, the Scriptures teach that absolute obedience to the law of God, in letter and spirit, would entitle all who obeyed to eternal life. Only one man of the human race accomplished this, and He only could say, "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father."

Please read Jeremiah 31:31-34. Note God says that He is going in the age to come to perform a stupendous miracle: "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts." In Hebrews 8:10 this is reiterated with emphasis: that when their hearts and minds enjoy this conviction, then He will be to them a God, and they will be to Him a people.

The agnostic now enquires why, if God has this power to write His law in the heart and mind of man to prevent him from committing sin, did He not do it in the case of Adam and Eve, and thus prevent all the suffering during the past six thousand years?

As this question is hypothetical and thus far from being scriptural, let us consider it in the light of human experience and knowledge. We read that when Adam disobeyed "the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil: and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever."

Now, my agnostic friend, can you anywhere find in the archives of human knowledge and wisdom anything as wise as this? Suppose God had permitted man to live on without dying, would you care to live in such a world as this would be today?

Let me illustrate my meaning. The clever author of The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, Vincente Blasco Ibanez, a few years ago made a tour of the world. I learned a great deal from his experience and observation. I will quote his own words. (Please turn to Back Page)

NIGHT OF TERROR

By Arlen Marsh

NIGHT, black night. Torrents of rain. Heavy, low hanging clouds. Winter in Jerusalem. Faint spots of light pierced the gloom, suspended in mid-air by no visible support. Even the glare from the gigantic searchlights at the airport was noticeably reduced. Silence, an eerie silence. Something was wrong.

Came a low drone of a trio of powerful motors. The transport landed, splashing water in a solid wall on either side as it struck the concrete field. It taxied to the terminal building, went on to the hangar. There were no passengers. No more ships were to fly the established lines.

War loomed. The Moslem Federation and the Russo-Mongolian Alliance were threatening each other and Britain. Commercial interests were the cause; the Jews whom the English protected held too great control of the world's purse-strings for the comfort of the Asiatics, they were pressing for the payment of certain debts. No. Rather, war. The earth held its breath.

In the terminal, a man sat before a switchboard. Perfected control of infra-red rays was conveying him a message from London that no man could tap. He smiled in sickly fashion. At least the United States was promising support to England. Together, the lion and the eagle might yet stem the tide. He stiffened, wrote hastily, beckoned to a near-by messenger. His report to the commanding officer that negotiations had failed was off.

Normally the city was without defences. But now, owing to the flaming threats from massed armies in Russia, Mesopotamia, and Turkey, a strong British force held the district under martial law. All this the man at the switchboard thought. Over rays that none but him could intercept came the news that war had been declared. He reported. The city lights went out. Be prepared.

An hour dragged by. Sentries shivered nervously in wet coats. All was quiet, deathly quiet. Men listened at audiophone detectors, watched bulbs that remained dark. A half hour more. Three red lights flashed. The electric ear had heard something.

At the same instant the anti-aircraft battery, sighted automatically by invisible light rays, let loose with a roar that shook the earth. One hundred twenty shells a minute poured from the mouths of six guns. Thirty seconds of deafening tumult, then utter silence.

From a height of eight thousand feet a lone airplane fell. There was not a man on board. It struck the ground just inside the city limits, shattered itself in the muddy soil. Nothing happened.

A sergeant on patrol hastily adjusted his gas mask and ran to investigate, followed by his men. Their flashlights dropped from nerveless hands, dangled from their belts. Torn by convulsions, they writhed in pools of waters, then lay still, their useless masks giving them the appearance of gargoyles.

Dawn, gloomy and hopeless. An airship circled high above the scene, settled to earth at the airport. The occupants entered the terminal and reported, the photographer rushing his films to the developing room.

"Gas, sir," announced the pilot succinctly. "Probably some form of Lewisite. That whole area'll have to be blocked off, but it may be safe for masks within a week or two. Luckily it was something that sinks in and doesn't spread much. About two thousand dead, I should estimate, sir."

War. The first night. Two thousand common citizens and soldiers dead in one city. Nations were gathering before Armageddon. Jehovah's prophets were being vindicated. This was a foretaste of the struggles to follow. Germs, shells, liquid fire, gas were to come. Jerusalem's streets were to be rivers of blood and filth and poisoned water. The earth was to be punished. It had sinned, and God was preparing to announce judgment in the valley of decision.

"Intoxicated" literally means "stricken with a poisoned arrow," a term used in ancient days to describe a man who had been thus wounded. As a man under the influence of liquor exhibits symptoms similar to those of one poisoned by an arrow, the term became extended.

I DO IT UNTO THEE

Lord of all pots and pans and things; since I've no time to be
A saint by doing lovely things or watching late with Thee,
Or dreaming in the dawn light, or storming heaven's gates,
Make me a saint by getting meals, and washing up the plates.
Although I must have Martha's hands, I have a
Mary mind;
And when I black the boots and shoes, Thy sandals,
Lord, I find,
I think of how they trod the earth, each time I scrub the floor;
Accept this meditation, Lord, I haven't time for more.
Warm all the kitchen with Thy love, and light it with Thy peace;
Forgive me all my worrying, and make all grumbling cease,
Thou, too, did'st love to give men food, in room or by the sea,
Accept this service that I do—I do it unto Thee.

TROUBLES

By Nettie B. Crundwell

A RATHER interesting and amusing story was told by Seth Parker over the radio recently. He said, "Speaking of troubles, I heard a funny story one time about troubles. All the people of the small town were complaining of their troubles, each thinking his or her troubles the greatest.

"An angel came down from heaven and said: 'Take your troubles to the public square and put them in a pile. Then let each one draw a new trouble.'

"They did this. The man with a wooden leg drew a package containing a bossy mother-in-law. The man that had brought the mother-in-law got a package of mortgages. The owner of the mortgages got a bunion, and so on. After looking the new troubles over, they each decided to keep the ones they originally had."

I believe there is a lesson in this little story for every one, especially for Christians. We are prone to think our troubles are the worst sort and that our lot is harder than that of those about us. But really most of us are not suffering very much as yet.

We see trouble-clouds arising in several directions that may bring a great deal more trouble in the future than we have experienced in the past.

Daniel the Prophet says: "There shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time."—Daniel 12:1. Jesus speaks in Matthew and Luke of the same time. He says: "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven. . . . And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars (politically); and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."—Luke 21:10, 11, 25, 26. He adds, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

Just how near, we are not told. Some of us believe the church will be taken out of the time of trouble. And Jesus seems to support the thought. He speaks thus: "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."—Luke 21:36.

In looking over the faithful listed in Hebrews 11 we are led to believe they were tried to the limit before they escaped "all these things." Otherwise, how could their faith have been proven and it have been said of them, "These all died in faith"?

Daniel is not mentioned in the above list. However, I believe his case will bear looking into. It would have been quite easy for God to have said: "I know Daniel. He will prove faithful. Therefore, it is not necessary for him to be cast into the den of lions." Did He do this? No. We find, "The king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions."—Daniel 6:16. When was he delivered? Was it not at the last moment that God sent His angel and shut the lions' mouths?

The important thing for us, then, is that our faith fail not and that we are able to stand before the Son of man. No doubt many of us living today will face the lions' den figuratively. May we have faith and courage, for it will take both, to be able to answer as did the three Hebrew children as recorded in Daniel 3:16, 17: "Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, answered and said to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king."

THE INDICTMENT AGAINST SODOM

By James A. Patrick

"Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness, was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hands of the poor and needy."—Ezekiel 16:49.

JESUS said: "Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man shall be revealed."—Luke 17:28-30.

There are four counts in the indictment against Sodom.

PRIDE

I need not ask if there is any pride in the world today. We need only turn to the society columns of any metropolitan daily and note the doings of the elite to be convinced that pride is the ruling passion with many. Some time ago I read quite a lengthy article describing the coming-out party of a society debutante which cost twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars. And all this in the face of the fact that millions are facing starvation.

FULNESS OF BREAD

This undoubtedly refers to the material wealth of Sodom, and indicates that there was much wealth in Sodom. Remember that Jesus said that as it was in the days of Lot, even thus should it be in the day when the Son of man shall be revealed.

Any wealth in the world today? A few minutes ago the radio announcer said that four thousand people were watching the basketball game between Ohio State University and Western Reserve University of Cleveland. Ninety thousand saw the New Year's game between Penn State and Southern California. The country has an abundance of wealth to spend for anything that will satisfy the flesh; yet,

AN ABUNDANCE OF IDLENESS WAS IN HER

Surely there is an abundance of idleness in the counter-part of Sodom. It is estimated that there are twelve million people idle and an equal number that work only part-time. If a person is employed one day a week, he is said to be part-time employed. How many people are there who are dependent on those that are wholly unemployed and those working only a day or two a week? You figure it. The sad part of it is, these people are anxious to work, but there is no work for them. Besides the idle poor there are the idle rich who will not work.

NEITHER DID SHE STRENGTHEN THE HANDS OF THE POOR

Are the hands of the poor and needy being strengthened in this country today? No indeed they are not. It might be said that the various governments, local, state, and national are feeding the poor.

In Ashland, Ohio, where I live, the Community Chest fund is so administered that the city can hire men to do any work the city needs done and they are paid out of the Chest fund. These men get about seven dollars a week, and are supposed to keep their families on this pittance. They must pay rent, buy fuel and food. Are their hands strengthened? Their bodies are undernourished, their morale is broken, they lose hope.

It is said that the chairman of the fund, one of the millionaires of Ashland, headed the subscription list with a large amount, and then cut the wages of his employes in half. The fund does not strengthen the hands of such, does it?

I am wondering if Sodom could have been any worse than the world of today. If it was, it must have been very bad.

Jesus tells us that with all those terrible conditions existing in Sodom the people went right on with their work and their pleasures, but they were suddenly halted by a terrible catastrophe.

Do not the four counts in the indictment fit the world today? Jesus told us what would be the result. Are we ready? If not, why not?

PALESTINE AND THE NEXT WAR

At a dinner given by the Anglo-Palestine Club, the Marquess of Hartington stated that "if another great war breaks out, Palestine will be the cockpit of it; it was only by chance that it was not the cockpit of the last war."

This utterance is certainly prophetic; the speaker may not be a student of the many prophecies found in Scripture which tell of the massing of world armies in Ai-Megiddo, the Hill of Megiddo, when covetous and anti-Semitic nations will crowd to grasp Palestine as a prize, only to have it torn from them by the Lord of the Land in flaming Person; but he detects with the politician's experienced eye outward signs of coming conflict.—Prophetic News.

MY PAL, THE KING

By D. G. Harvey

"The Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."—Exodus 33:11.

SUPPOSE the king of England were to stoop from his royal position and become a friend of one of the common people, one of the laboring class of his subjects. Let us imagine he takes his friend to his palace. Later hear this laborer boast to his fellow workmen; "The king said"; "I told the king." How exalted that subject would be as he spoke of "my pal, the king."

"My pal," one who knows me, one I know; my best possible friend. Such a one as this will not be found in this age of selfish pride and greed.

But the greatest of all kings, yes, King of kings and Lord of lords, has promised just that very thing to even the lowest, most degraded of the human race, disregarding nationality, color, or sex. He has offered you His friendship. What will you do?

Let us turn to that Book of books, God's own Word, and read again some of the wonderful promises our Lord has made to us poor mortals, yes, to you and to me. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John 15:14.

Friends, yes, more than friends, He has promised to make us co-rulers. Listen: "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."—2 Timothy 2:12. We are to be joint-heirs. Romans 8:17. He has told us by His Apostle Paul that He will come for us and that we shall "ever be with the Lord."—1 Thessalonians 4:17.

Think of it, friends, a king and such a king—not a poor mortal creature such as we, but a glorified King to Whom was granted all power in heaven and in earth. Matthew 28:18. Such power is to come to us (the church) if we are joint-heirs, for He inherits all things.

Even death, our most powerful enemy, was not able to hold Him, The King of kings. Hear His Words: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore."—Revelation 1:18. And again: "Because I live, ye shall live also."—John 14:19.

But, dear friends, watch your step. Our King's friends must be faithful, not only in seasons of plenty, but in famines as well; not one day, one year, "but unto death." Revelation 2:10. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke 6:46. Watch and pray. Go teach all nations.

If we are faithful over a few things, He will make us rulers over many. Oh, the joy, the rapture, when He comes to set up that everlasting kingdom of peace. "The desire of all nations shall come."—Haggai 2:7. Then we can look on His face and see Him as He is, and with joy exclaim, "My pal, the King!"

THE REMARKABLE JEW

FOR centuries, orthodox Jews have been looking forward for God to fulfil His promises concerning them. They do not acknowledge that their past and present sufferings are because of their sins. They do not believe that they are such sinners. They believe that these things have happened as God prophesied simply because they are Jews.

Though they have not believed in our Lord Jesus as their Messiah, but still look for Him to come at some future time, the orthodox Jews have, year by year, kept to the letter of the law and have prayed incessantly for deliverance from this cruel oppression. They believe the Old Testament to be God's inspired Word. They may have failed to grasp the significance of some wonderful prophecies concerning our Lord Jesus and the fulfillment of these by Him, as well as by themselves. They may have failed on account of their blindness through sin to interpret many Old Testament passages aright. But one thing is certain, they have always kept in mind their unique position as God's chosen nation, God's peculiar people. The bitterest persecution has only intensified this realization. Whether in poverty or riches, in positions of trust or in degradation, in freedom or slavery, whether under severest tyranny or lives of ease and joy, it mattered not; their eyes were ever turned toward Jerusalem, their home. In fact, their persecution has sometimes been used by God to thrust them into Palestine.

THE HOME OF THE ORTHODOX JEW

Is it not significant and wonderfully suggestive that the home built by the orthodox Jew is never completed by him? Some time ago I read the following in a paper devoted to Jewish questions:

"The next time you are in London, come with me by Hyde Park; look at the second house by the gate, which belongs to Lord Rothschild, perhaps the richest man in all the world. Look at the marble pillars in it and at the cornices above; one of them remains unfinished. Has this rich man no more money with which to finish his house? There is a deeper meaning than that. He is an orthodox Jew; and every orthodox Jew, when he builds his house, leaves a portion unfinished to bear testimony to the fact that he is not in a permanent abiding place. He looks forward to the time when he will be able to build his permanent home in the holy city of Jerusalem."

This bears testimony to his faith that one day he will worship Jehovah on Mount Zion. After all these years of slavery and serfdom, what a faith! This is why the great Zionist movement has commenced.

WHY THE JEW LOVES PALESTINE

S. B. Rohold said in an address in Chicago some time ago, "The love within the Jew for Palestine knows no end. The Jew of the world turns his face toward Jerusalem when he prays, and the dead are buried facing the East. A few quotations from the Talmud will give you an idea how the Jew feels toward Palestine: 'He that lives in the Holy Land is as though he were without sin'; 'a Jew who lives in the Holy Land is one who lives with God, and he who lives outside, even though the majority in that city are religious, it is as though he worshipped strange gods.' 'He that inhabits the city one hour and dies there is sure of the world to come.' "

In the same address he said, "And many believe that the great day of resurrection shall come, and the Lord's feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives, and Michael shall blow with his great trumpet, and the graves be opened. For those who die in the United States and Canada a channel will be opened underground, and they will roll under the great Atlantic and the Mediterranean until they reach the Holy Land. There are literally thousands of Jews who believe this."

These facts show how much the orthodox Jew looks toward Jerusalem and how strong is his faith. To him, the freeing of Jerusalem from the Turk is the beginning of the great consummation of his hopes; and not only so, but it is the herald of the near approach of his Messiah. The Jew believes that he will have occupied that land before his Messiah comes; hence the reason for the joy that he has in the knowledge that Jerusalem is once more free.

This enthusiasm for his own land was wonderfully expressed at the New York Convention of the Kehillah, or Jewish community, where five hundred delegates met who represented one and a half million Jews of New York City. These delegates rose to their feet in enthusiasm when Professor Israel Friedlander of the Jewish Theological Seminary began to speak of a Jewish republic in Palestine; and they sang the "Hatikavah," the song of hope for the restoration of the Holy Land. It is said that the old Jews and Jewesses kept time with the music by swinging their bodies to and fro. One of the delegates kissed the flag of Judah, which hung there; and it was a signal for a cheer that shook the building.

If the Jew has been quiet about his yearning for Jerusalem, it is because he has had no chance to give vent to his feelings. If the capture of Jerusalem has thrilled Christendom as a great achievement, what has it meant to the heart of the Jew, who is filled with tremendous passion to return to the home of his fathers, to the land which he has an inalienable right to call his home?

The taking of Jerusalem has thrilled the Jew and has deeply stirred the heart of the Christian and has increased the appetite of both for study of God's Word. This event is of great significance to the real, Bible-loving Christian. Jerusalem was taken on December 9, 1917; and on December 11, there appeared in the New York World a striking cartoon representing an old man with a little boy upon his knees. The boy asked, "Now Jerusalem is fallen, what is to happen next?" The old man replied, "Hold on till I get my Bible." This is what the real Christian is doing. He knows that God is revealing the truth of His own Word and that other events are soon to happen, events of great importance in which he is deeply interested.

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES

Our Lord had been speaking of the sorrows preceding the destruction of Jerusalem and then He said, "They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21:24.

We know that this has been literally fulfilled. The destruction of Jerusalem took place in the year 70 A. D. We know that it has been trodden down by the Gentiles ever since; and the last clause of this verse, "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," cannot be figurative unless it is definitely stated to be so. It says that the treading down of Jerusalem shall one day cease; then Jerusalem shall again become the capital of the united kingdom. The Greek word translated "trodden down" really refers to oppression that follows conquest. When will this oppression cease? Our Lord said, "When the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

The expression "times of the Gentiles" occurs only in Luke 21:24, and refers to the period during which the Gentiles rule over that which should have been Israel's. The latter lost it through sin, and were dispossessed by Nebuchadnezzar. If the Jew sinned, he was no worse than others; but because he was chosen for a special purpose and he hindered the early fulfillment of that purpose, God had to punish him.

The "times of the Gentiles" began about 606 B. C., Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, being the first king; and they finish completely when Christ Himself comes to establish His millennial reign. The Jews go back to their own land and possess it, but they make a league with the Gentiles.

The Gentile oppressors will finally endeavor to exterminate the Jew at the battle of Armageddon, but Christ Himself will appear and sweep away their power. The Jews have gone back in unbelief, but "they shall mourn for him."—Zechariah 12:10.

"Thus saith the Lord God, This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her."—Ezekiel 5:5. Her future glorious position is graphically described in Micah 4:1, 2.

With such promises as these, it is little wonder that the capture of Jerusalem is of great significance to the Jew. The troops soon took possession of the whole of Palestine; but when Aleppo and Aleppo Railway Junction were taken, it made a tremendous effect upon the British advance into Mesopotamia. The surrender of the Turk soon followed; for he had to relinquish his corrupt hold on the whole of the promised land, which the Word of God describes as extending "from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates."—Genesis 15:18.—L. S. Harrington in The Bible Advocate.

GOD'S GIFT TO MAN

One that is dead does not possess life in any form. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Psalm 146:3, 4. "For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished. . . . Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."—Ecclesiastes 9:5, 6, 10. From these scriptures it is evident that death is not our hope; it is not entrance into life. Resurrection is our hope.

By this time it has been made clear that the third doctrine regarding eternal life is the correct one. We will receive our eternal life when Christ comes. "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Colossians 3:3, 4. "We are saved by hope: but hope that is seen (realized) is not hope (but possession): for what a man seeth (has realized), why does he yet hope for?" If we now possess eternal life or immortality of soul, why should we hope for it? If we could possess eternal life now through belief, or possess it at death, of what value would the resurrection be to us? How could it add to our pleasure?

It is a recognized fact that before one can become a child of God he must repent and be baptized. Without these two steps he has no hope. See Ephesians 2:12. Contrast with Galatians 3:27, 29: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." We are made heirs, not possessors.

In answering certain questions regarding the resurrection, Paul said: "That which thou sowest is not quickened (made alive), except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be."—1 Corinthians 15:36, 37. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Jesus told Nicodemus: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Jesus described the condition of those born of the Spirit: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." See John 3:1-12. Jesus laid down the mortal at death and took the immortal at resurrection; He died and was born again. He proved His Spirit-birth by appearing and disappearing at will.

The new birth will take place at the time of Christ's second coming. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thessalonians 4:16, 17. Then the righteous will receive the eternal life which is theirs by promise now. Then can it be said: "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and is passed from death into life."—Gospel Searchlight.

THESE, MEN FORGET

BURIED beneath the surface of life's more open happenings are the countless men and women whose labors go unsung and unappreciated. These are the ones who valiantly observe the golden rule in the face of vast temptation; these are the ones who serve humanity and God not because it is good business, but because it is the righteous thing to do. These are the ones whom men forget.

Church calls them forth, develops them in extraordinary numbers. They go to services and occupy a pew. As officials they have no place. But by their examples, their constant adherence to biblical standards, they perform a work equally important with the labors of their leaders.

Others occupy positions as officers. Unpaid save by the satisfaction that comes to every person whose task has been well done, they serve. Often their position is obscure; the work they do is little known; the benefits they give and the sacrifices they make are unappreciated.

So it is with the National Berean Society; so it is with every one of its affiliated organizations. Some one does the work; some one sacrifices his money; some one gives his time, to make the whole succeed. A pause in the day's occupation can well be made to consider those of our number whom men forget or criticise unjustly.

Social Correspondence Committee workers are, for most of us, mere names on a report. That two thousand letters a year are written by them to interest others in God and Christ, to comfort mourners, to cheer the invalids, to keep the isolated in touch with the general progress of the church is little known. Pay tribute to these and to the Home Study Committee members, who teach the Bible by correspondence lessons to all who care to hear.

Long hours are spent in patient research by the Publishing Committee to outline the lessons which you study. Yet all too seldom is mention made of the endeavors it puts forth, except by way of censure. All power to its members.

Then, as is the case with the main body of THE HERALD, the writers for this page deserve much gratitude. Their work is a product of hours of study; and because it is in writing, that work is valuable to others as well as to themselves. And when their copy is complete, the editor must wrack her head in an effort to find something that will fit the space that copy leaves; and there are few more difficult mental tasks than that. Books must be examined, articles copied; editorials must be written; manuscripts must be corrected. And, after such labor, comes the comment from one who writes ungrammatically or illegibly, "You've ruined all my thought by changes!"

For years the same person has served as the Relief Committee, doing an incalculable work among the poor of the Church of God. Hampered by lack of funds, she has succeeded wonderfully in all her tasks. Her labors, too, deserve acclaim. So do the ones whose gifts have made those labors possible.

When one is prone to be harsh in judgment of those who do his work for him, it is well to think on these things. Without pay or financial reward, but because of their desire to serve, they gladly have enabled us by their sacrifices to carry on.—Arlen Marsh.

Owing to a severe storm of the past week, it has been impossible for the regular editor to send the office her copy, the roads being impassable for rural mail. Consequently certain manuscripts contributed recently will have a delayed appearance in a later issue of the paper.

TRUSTING JESUS

JUST now, as I sit at my desk and write these words to you, my little friends of the Page, a fierce storm is raging out-of-doors. A glance out of the window shows people, now and then, scurrying past, their heads bent to protect themselves from the icy wind. The fine, hard snow is driven into every little crack and crevice.

Inside, all is warm and cozy. The fire crackles merrily, defying old Jack Frost to enter. The wind howls around the house, but the sound only adds to the feeling of comfort within.

This February blizzard came suddenly upon us. After a few hours, no doubt, it will pass, and you little folks who are living in this locality will be enjoying snow fights, riding on your sleds, and building snow men.

Perhaps, even as you are reading this, it will be a beautiful day, warm and sunshiny. But we must endure the storm as happily as we may until its fury is past.

Just so, long, long ago a storm came very suddenly on some people whom we have come to know and to love—Jesus and probably Peter and Andrew and some of the other disciples. This was not a snow storm, but just the same it was a dreadful one. For it was a storm at sea.

I think perhaps many of you know the story of this short but violent storm which came upon the Sea of Galilee, when Jesus was resting after a long, hard day's work. Wouldn't it be nice if one of the members of our Scrapbook Club could tell us the story while we all gathered round! Perhaps Jimmie and John, our twins, would join the circle, too.

You know, the Sea of Galilee, whose waters are so blue they look as though an immense bottle of bluing had been emptied into them, is usually calm and beautiful. Set low as it is in the midst of a hilly country, its surface is quickly stirred by the winds which often sweep down the valleys.

After a very busy day, just as the sun was setting, Jesus started out in one of their fishing boats with some of His disciples. And feeling sure that these men who had been fishers knew perfectly well how to handle the boat, Jesus lay down and was soon fast asleep.

Suddenly the cool breeze that had filled their sails became an angry wind. The waves rolled higher and higher; the ship and all its precious occupants were in danger of being sunk. But Jesus, secure in His trust of His heavenly Father, slept on!

Desperately and vainly trying to take in all sails and dip the water out of the boat, their eyes rested upon their Captain—the One who had helped them over many a difficulty before and who had shown greater power than any other they had ever known.

"Master, carest thou not that we perish?" they cried, in accents of greatest fear.

Immediately the One for whom they had left all to follow arose and spoke three simple words, "Peace, be still." And the beautiful Galilee became at once as calm and peaceful as before.

The disciples did not need to wait until the storm had spent its fury, meanwhile risking their very lives. For they had the Savior with them. And as well as they had grown to know Him, they were astonished at His power and said, "What manner of man is this?"

We may not see the Savior actually with us each day of our lives, but He is there just the same. And no matter how small we are, He loves us dearly; and He'll take care of us just as He did of Peter and Andrew and James and John, if we only trust Him.

You're not afraid when you are walking along hand in hand with Father, no matter how stormy it is, are you? Then walk along just as happily with your hand in Jesus' hand every day, whether it is stormy or sunshiny, and He will take care of you.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOKS:

At the top of the page write, "Lesson 9." Under it, "Trusting Jesus." Then draw the Sea of Galilee. Remember it is shaped something like a pear, with the large end to the north. Color it blue, and make the surface smooth. Next cut a sail boat out of paper, and then draw a stormy sea and paste the little boat on it. In a third square paste another little boat on smooth waves. Write underneath, "Even the wind and the sea obey Him. I will obey Him, too."

Don't be afraid to try these little drawings. Get big brother or sister or mother to help, if you like, but do as much as you can yourself.

COPY THIS LITTLE VERSE:

"Jesus calmed the wind and waves;
He controlled them with a word;
By His loving power He saves
Those who trust in Him, their Lord."

JESUS SHOWS HIS POWER

Mark 4:35 to 5:20

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 12:1-6

GOLDEN TEXT

For I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.—2 Timothy 1:12b.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus Shows His Power.

Basic Truth: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:18, 20.

I. Jesus Stills the Storm. (V. 35-41.) The power possessed by Jesus even before His glorification had never been equaled by any man. He had complete control over His entire environment, both natural and spiritual. He transmuted water into wine; filled the empty nets with fish; opened blind eyes and deafened ears; restored life to the dead; forgave the sins of men; and spake the undoubted words of God. He proved that He was all He claimed to be, the Son of God, with authority to speak and act for His Father. In this lesson He exerts His power over the raging sea. It is no wonder that "they feared exceedingly, and said, . . . what manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?"

II. Christ Holds What Fetters Could Not Bind. (V. 1-8.) One miracle of tremendous power follows another in rapid succession. No sooner had Jesus reached the shore after His successful contest with the sea than He was met by another opposer of a different kind—the demented man of the tombs, whose frenzy was so great that no fetters could bind him. But the word of Jesus quelled the spirit of madness at once, and he fell at the Master's feet in worship. What a wonderful, what a glorious power is Christ's!

III. The Spiritual Power of Jesus. (V. 18-20.) As the former demoniac arose from his submissive place before his new-found Lord, he begged the privilege of remaining with Him, but was denied. Jesus had a great work for this new disciple to do, a work that required both courage and faith. He must go forth as a witness for Christ and testify to the cities of the East what the Lord had done for him.

Surely the One who stilled the storm and restored this man to sanity and filled his angry heart with love is able to keep us safe in this present life and crown us with glory in the world to come!

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Jesus and His Father are the sum total of all power. This power is used for the good and benefit of the creatures of God's own making. The power of Jesus which is most evident to us today is His power to save. No matter how low in the scale of human experience and life a man may sink, Jesus has the power to save. Furthermore, He is always willing to exercise this limitless power when an individual earnestly and conscientiously seeks it. The eternal plan of the Father as it centers in Christ is purposed and set forth in such a way that Christ's great power may be brought within the reach of the needy and unsaved.

Jesus not only has power to save, but He has power to keep when the saved person wants to be kept. He allows no temptation to come upon us without providing a way of escape. There never arises an occasion in the experience of any person trying to live a Christian life when he needs to turn away from the Lord Jesus. The Father and His Son have power to keep all who desire, and as long as they maintain that desire to walk with the Father and Son they will be kept; but this power is never exercised against the will and actions of the individual. In these trying times it is encouraging to know that the Son has power to keep us from famine and that "all these things shall be added unto (us)."—Matt. 6:30-34.

The elements are subject to the Christ. While He has power over the earth, sea, and sky, yet He is not exercising that power. These elements are under the curse, like all nature. When He takes direct control in restoring all things spoken of by the prophets, the storms, earthquakes, tidal waves, and all abnormal conditions will be brought under His control. Peace, quietness, and happiness will be the portion of the righteous.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

Paul, through his ministry for the Messiah, learned enough about Christ to feel that he knew Him and was willing to trust Him in all ways; and whom else could he trust except the Father only? The way in which Jesus showed His power in the lesson text today ought to have been sufficient to make any and all believe on Him; but not all were so trusting as Paul.

Paul so sets a good example for all Christians. All of us should be able to say with Paul that we know whom we believe and we are convinced that He, our Savior, is able to keep all that we lay up against the day of reckoning. He will be true and do His part. It is up to us to put our trust in Him and do our part.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

Jesus was born to be a king. He is now ruling on His throne at present. He is now sitting with God on His Father's throne (Rev. 3:21), but God is doing the ruling. The time is coming soon when Jesus will be given the rulership over the nations (Rev. 11:15). This will be given to Him by God for an everlasting possession (Psa. 2:8, 9; Isa. 9:7). King Jesus will not create a kingdom like any we know. He said: "My kingdom is not of this world."

It is evident that Christ is not exercising political power today. He is, however, the guiding head of the church (Eph. 1:22; Col. 1:18). The church must follow His leadership and heed His every command.

Christ is a mighty force even in the world today. Where the teachings of Christ are known and even partially followed, we discover civilization at its best. Jesus gave to the world its highest conception of morality, its finest code of human conduct. Millions of hearts, touched by His great love, are led to seek righteousness and to dispense charity. The teachings of Jesus are still shaping many of the laws and policies of our governments. The Bible is still the world's best seller.

How is Jesus exerting an influence in the lives of your neighbors? Do you think that your community would be as delightful a place as it now is if the influence of Jesus were withdrawn? Just what change do you imagine would take place if His influence were withheld? What influence is Jesus exerting upon our governmental policies? How do those policies differ from those of non-Christian countries?—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Have any of you ever been on the lake during a bad storm? Perhaps when you started out, the air was clear and the sun shining brightly; all was calm and beautiful. But suddenly the sun was overshadowed by a small cloud; the air became chilly; and you were filled with an unknown fear. Gradually the wind rose until it was almost a hurricane; and the big boat, which seemed so safe when you started out on your pleasure trip, was tossed by the angry waves as easily as a piece of driftwood. The passengers who only a few hours before had been so eager and happy were now panic-stricken. If you have not had such an experience yourself, you have all read of many terrible storms.

Now let us turn to the story of just such a trip Jesus and His disciples took one day on the Lake of Galilee. This beautiful lake, the waters of which look as though an immense bottle of bluing had been emptied into them, saw many a sudden storm such as we have just described. Find out the contour of the country around Galilee, and that will give you the reason for these sudden changes. Picture in your minds the difference between the first scene and the second. In the first perhaps many go down into the chilly waters never to come up, but in the second what was the wonderful outcome? What would not the passengers in the first picture have given to have had Jesus the Savior on board?

Special problem: Discuss in class Mark 4:41 and 5:17. Why the difference?—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ELDORADO, ILLINOIS

Bro. C. E. Lapp has been holding a series of meetings here for the past week. The splendid sermons and fine weather brought out a good attendance. While no definite results can be reported, we know the promise of Isaiah 55:2, 3, 10-12, and are sure that the seed sown will come up in due time.

Mrs. Fred Shain.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The kind of blizzard this past week has presented is a real test of the faith and loyalty of church workers, and we have been gratified to observe the percentage who will make real sacrifices. On Feb. 5 splendid audiences were present for all services. Tuesday, the 7th, the church board held its monthly meeting, and on Wednesday night the officers and teachers of the Sunday school had their monthly business meeting. The crowded condition is becoming so serious that something will soon have to be done. We are figuring hard and praying earnestly that God will point out the way in which this may be accomplished.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BLESSED HOPE CHURCH OF GOD Niagara Falls, New York

"How sweet, how glorious is the sight,
When those who love the Lord,
In one another's ways delight,
And thus fulfil His Word."

The above lines came very forcibly to my mind last Sunday morning, when it was our happy privilege to witness the baptism of eight young people into the all-saving name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The names of these new members are as follows: Mr. Arthur Bruce, Mrs. Carrie Ogden, Mrs. Grace Lent, Miss Ethel Moreland, Miss Patricia Sullivan, Celaine Randall, Jack Brown, James Moreland.

It was a pretty sight both to the eye and mind. As the candidates presented themselves before entering the water, all were dressed in white robes; and as that well-known hymn, "There Is Power in the Blood," was sung, we felt the very presence of God in our midst.

And we thank the heavenly Father for these new converts. We are not unmindful of the fact that some of these young people, with their parents, have been members of our church and Sunday school since infancy. And they well remember Bros. Austin, Marsh, and Gordon, the predecessors of our present pastor, Bro. Randall. And again we thank God that their combined preaching has not been in vain.

On Sunday, the 12th, each member will receive the right hand of fellowship, and will also receive a baptismal certificate.

And so our "little church around the corner" marches on both in numbers and zeal. We are very thankful to God that He sent us such an able Bible student as our beloved Bro. Randall. May the Lord bless him and prosper him in the good work he is doing here and at Fonhill, where he resides. Brethren, we ask you to pray for these new additions to our faith and ask the heavenly Father to keep them steadfast.

George T. Rennard, Second Elder.

DIXON, ILLINOIS

On Jan. 29 a very interesting talk was given in our church by Dr. Layman of our city. Dr. Layman spoke on prophecy and his address was enjoyed by a large audience. The old hymns used met the approval of the congregation. Special music was furnished by the Dixon Loyalty League quartette. The Lord's prayer was repeated by the congregation, and led by Mr. George Prescott.

Our Sunday school attendance is very good, and the evening services are well attended. Bro. Conner gives us some wonderful sermons, to which the visitors listen with much interest.

On Feb. 6 Dale Drew had the misfortune to fall while roller skating and break both bones in his left arm.

CHURCH OF THE GOLDEN RULE Cleveland, Ohio

The Sunday school is still on the upgrade, all departments showing progress. The attendance up to this month has steadily maintained the average of 154, established during the fall months. The present enrollment is 218. Thirteen new members were welcomed to the various classes during January.

The Sunday school orchestra is being reorganized under the leadership of Ernest Elshaw.

Mrs. Nellie Halls, the efficient teacher of the Preparatory Class which was graduated in December, has been conducting another group, and the new Preparatory Class held its first session Feb. 5. Members of the former Preparatory Class, with Mr. Conrad as teacher, form the nucleus for a new class which started the first of the year. This class, which is designed for advanced young people of the ages from 16 to 25, will be known as the "Thespian Class." They extend a hearty welcome to all young people. Let them tell you the meaning of their name!

The Teachers' Training Class, held on Tuesday nights, is proving very instructive and interesting. Four sessions have been held to date, with an average attendance of 24. Every teacher in the school is taking the course. The total enrollment is 21. Visitors are welcome, and there are always several present.

The Berean society is steadily growing in numbers and interest. On Friday night, Feb. 3, the Bereans enjoyed an interesting lecture by a representative of the Taylor Bible Depot on the origin of the Bible. The Bereans meet each Friday at eight o'clock.

A division of the adult Berean class is contemplated, with the formation of a new class to study the fundamental doctrines of the Bible. This class is recommended for the newer members who would like to obtain a better working knowledge of Bible teaching.

A large number of faithful attendants have been suffering from an epidemic of the "flu." We are glad of the improved condition of many of these, and are happy to have them with us at our regular services. We are pleased to say that Sr. Alldridge, who has been very ill, is sufficiently recovered to spend a week at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Hawkins.

The untiring efforts of Mr. H. J. Stadden, president of the church choir, are greatly appreciated. The choir is doing things. Mr. Don Swartz, the director, is receiving a hearty response from the entire organization.—Golden Rule News for February, 1933.

MORRILTON, ARKANSAS

If Bro. Marsh will allow me space in our paper I would like to tell the household of faith just how much I appreciate the many good letters that have been written to The Restitution Herald. I have certainly been blessed by reading them, and how I wish that every member of the Church of God would subscribe for this paper, and, after reading it, pass it on to some friend and by so doing we could be a great help in spreading the gospel of the near return of our King. Those who have not been reading this paper have missed something of great value.

May God's richest blessing abide with all those who bear the burden of making the paper just what it is. Mrs. Connie Ramsey.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Prophetic Conference, which is now to be a regular quarterly feature in Southern California, was enjoyed by a large group of between seventy-five and one hundred. Toward the end of the meeting a short business session was held at which the next quarterly meeting was tentatively set for the first Sunday in April, the place of the meeting to be definitely determined later.

Bro. Lichty of Pomona ably presented to an interested audience his discussion of world events in relating his subject, "Will Jesus Come in 1933?" He touched upon technocracy and some other things of the present day; these things have been a special study with him. Following his presentation, Bro. Smead amused and edified the audience with a pointed discussion of the present day "crime wave" in his treatment of the subject: "Lawlessness: Is It the Mystery of Iniquity?" The choir rendered, "Send Out Thy Light," by Gounod. Following the morning discourses, the communion service was conducted by the pastor.

During the noon period a picnic lunch was eaten in the church building and a general visiting was enjoyed. Bro. Saylor and Bro. Lichty found that they were related on both sides of the house; Bro. Saylor's mother's name was Lichty. Many people were there from all parts of Southern California, including Redlands, San Bernardino, Riverside, Pomona, Anaheim, Long Beach, Lynwood, Glendale, and Tulare, as well as Los Angeles. In fact, the meeting could be well said to be a Southern California Conference.

In the afternoon Bro. Adamson gave a discussion of the position of the United States, Japan, and Palestine in relation to prophecy in his discussion of the subject, "The Land Shadowing With Wings." He also brought out his reasons for believing in prophecy. The afternoon audience was almost as large as that of the morning meeting, speaking well of the interest created in the morning as well as that of the afternoon. Bro. Adamson presented ideas which held the attention of his audience throughout. These addresses will be given in The Restitution Herald in the form of a symposium at a later date.

Keith Brooks, the announced speaker for the later afternoon period, could not attend on account of his health, but sent another man to take his place. We were much disappointed that he was unable to attend and give us his views of present-day events in the light of prophecy. But his substitute, Mr. Richards, gave a timely treatment of his belief in the near return of the Lord, drawing his conclusions from the teachings of the Old Testament, chiefly as found in types in the book of Genesis. During his lecture he mentioned the fact that he had prepared many charts on prophetic subjects, and that he would be glad to present them to us at some other time. At the business session which followed he was invited back again by vote of the church on motion of Bro. Hobart.

At a short ceremony Sr. Railsback and Bros. Adamson and Lichty were presented with ministerial certificates, following which each gave a short speech in acceptance of the responsibilities of the ministry.

Everyone who attended greatly enjoyed the exhortations, and we would say to all who are of the household of faith in Southern California: "Be sure to set aside the first Sunday in April for the enjoyment of the good things that will be set before us then."

The second Sunday in February was set aside by the Los Angeles church as "Young People's Sunday." The young people will have charge of the entire church services on that day. We are looking forward to that event with a great deal of pleasure.

On Sunday evening, Feb. 5, Bro. Lichty presented the third of his series of lectures in Pomona. The attendance at these meetings has been quite good in spite of the fact that the weather during the first two meetings was such that good Californians were frightened away. Next Sunday evening he will present the same subject he gave in Los Angeles in the morning. Any of the church at large who have friends in the vicinity of Pomona might give them word of these meetings so that they can enjoy them. Also, when Bro. Lichty has finished his series in Pomona, he expects to hold some meetings with the assistance of some of the other ministers of Southern California in Riverside. If anyone has friends in that city who might be interested, would they please send their names either to Bro. J. E. Adamson, 987 Weber St., Pomona; to Bro. George Lichty, 350 Chester Place, Pomona; or to Norman John McLeod, 1105 Val Vista St., Pomona.

Norman John McLeod, Pastor.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed at an out-of-town bank. Thank you!

CALVIN W. WINCHESTER

Calvin W. Winchester was born in Cuyahoga Co., Ohio, June 20, 1837. With his parents he came to Michigan in the spring of 1854 and settled in Byron township where he made his home until 1915, when he moved to Allegan.

On July 31, 1859, he was married to Cleona E. Ferrell, who died Oct. 21, 1914. To them were born nine children, six of whom survive.

For the last few years he was blind. He had to be led about and walking with a cane. The same cheerful spirit as of younger days stayed with him. Friends were always welcomed with a warm greeting. We shall always remember Bro. Winchester, with his faith strong in the Lord, always looking for an opportunity to converse on the things of God. A cheery smile and a hearty hand shake awaited you.

He was ordained as a minister of the gospel in the Church of God in 1884 and held fast to the faith until he fell asleep in Christ Feb. 2, 1933. Burial was from the West Carlisle church Feb. 5, and he rests beside his wife in the Winchester Cemetery.

He was the last surviving civil war veteran from Byron township and had served with the first Michigan Engineers and Mechanics in that war.

Mrs. Ada Huff.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. D. G. Harvey, Kokomo, Ind., says, "The article by Bro. T. A. Drinkard in the issue of January 10, 'Did Enoch Die?' surely was the only correct answer to the question."

Bro. A. C. Boyer of Stephens City, Va., in commenting on present conditions, says, "I see little prospect of improvement. . . . It looks like the world is almost reeling like a drunken man."

Word from Stanhope, Iowa, brings the announcement of the arrival of Charlotte Ruth at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Sealine. The little lady made her appearance on January 17.

Information reaches us of the marriage of Bro. Edgar Harvey of Kokomo, Ind., which took place recently. Bro. Harvey is a son of Bro. D. G. Harvey, one of our regular contributors. Full information regarding this happy event will come later.

How many of our churches have prayer meetings—real periods of worship when men and women draw consciously near unto God by unitedly calling upon Him in prayer? Bible study classes are essential to the welfare and growth of the church, but a real service of devotion is equally necessary to the life of the body of Christ.

And while we are on the subject of prayer, let us not forget the general work of the church. We are passing through a most difficult period. The Lord has shown us clearly that He is with our effort, that He is standing behind what we are attempting to do in His name. Let us continue to call upon Him both for spiritual guidance and for material support. But especially for the former, for that is what is most needed.

Bro. and Sr. George Claypool, Marshall, Ill., write, "We have been wishing the readers of The Restitution Herald could get the benefit of the prophetic series of sermons being given in Oregon. Remembering reading the essence of one of them that was published recently we would like to have the others." (The editor will attempt to give an outline of these prophetic studies a little later.)

An order for fifty extra copies of our special Jewish number just reached us from Bro. H. W. Patterson of El Cajon, Calif., who is rendering a splendid service through the widespread distribution of tracts and papers. We regret that we could supply but thirty of the number desired, as our stock was exhausted by the unexpected demand that had preceded this order. We are glad that the paper is proving of value in work of this kind. The special Bible number will be out (D. V.) on Feb. 28.

The latest information at hand regarding the condition of Sr. Mary A. Woodward, who has been seriously ill at the home of her son, Bro. F. L. Austin, in Chicago, is that she is slowly improving. We pray that the favorable reports will continue.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed at an out-of-town bank. Thank you!

Owing to the failure of both banks in Oregon, it is difficult for us to cash the checks that reach us. The brethren would confer a great help on us if they would make their contributions and remittances for the paper in the form of postal money orders rather than in checks for a time.

How we rejoice to welcome into our general fellowship the eight who were recently baptized by Bro. C. E. Randall at Niagara Falls! We are personally acquainted with several of the number. This serves to add to our joy in their obedience. May God bless and keep them all faithful until the Master comes.

It would be well for all of our churches, Sunday schools, and Berean societies to follow the example set by the Church of the Golden Rule of Cleveland and organize preparatory classes for the instruction of possible candidates for baptism in the essentials of Christian faith and conduct. This was the practice of the church for more than two hundred years after Christ.

May we also suggest that with our checking account tied up for an indefinite time in a closed bank your financial help is greatly needed to meet the cost of publishing the paper and carrying on the work. The brethren are coming to our relief generously, but we must keep the case clearly and constantly before you all that you may not forget the problem that your board faces at this time.

The progress being made among the various churches is most encouraging. Particularly the interest that is being shown by many from outside the membership. It is clearly apparent that the thoughtful are seeking after the truth of God. The pastor of a large church in a neighboring town, commenting on the fact that many from his locality were driving regularly five miles to listen to the prophetic sermons being given in the Church of God, said, "It is evident that the people are getting something they need for their spiritual up-building or they would not go. My own evening service is so poorly attended that it is actually pitiable." The Word of God is what the people hunger for today.

HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD

"Few travelers in Java fail to visit a stone which bears the name of the 'traitor' Erberfeld, in an inscription which reads: 'In perpetuation of the execrable name of the traitor, Peter Erberfeld. It is forever prohibited to build or plant on this site. Batavia, April 14, 1722.'

"The Erberfeld in question was a rich half-breed, son of a German colonist and a Javanese woman, who, in the eighteenth century, attempted a revolution with the idea of driving Europeans out of Java. He and fourteen of his Javanese conspirators were condemned to death as traitors, although it was suspected that the conspiracy did not threaten Java with any serious danger, and that Erberfeld's chief crime consisted in his possessing rich properties that aroused the envy of the Dutch masters of the colony.

"Erberfeld and one of his Javanese fellow-conspirators, also a leader of the proposed revolution, were accorded the honor of special punishment, which is thus detailed in their death sentence: 'The criminals to be stretched out and tied on a cross, and the right hands cut off. The muscles of their arms, legs and breast then to be torn loose with burning tongs till the ends of the flesh hang down. Whereafter their bellies to be cut open, and their breasts, and their hearts to be drawn out and dashed into their faces: their heads then to be cut off and set up on a pole, and their bodies to be quartered and exposed outside of the city limits, and given to the crows.'

"Above the stone execrating the memory of the 'traitor' there is a plaster head, pierced by a long nail or lancehead. It has all the appearance of a death mask, and is supposed to contain the skull of the hero. Behind this gruesome monument are the fragrant boughs of a tropical garden, and the banana groves make a bower of wide polished leaves over the martyr's head. And to think that it was the Old Protestant Holland which printed and published the greater part of the books, often fantastically untrue, relating the cruelties of the Spanish in America, more than a century before the ghastly execution of Erberfeld and his fourteen companions!

"Such executions have occurred in the history of all nations, that we know. France repeated with Damiens the frightful cruelties suffered by Erberfeld, and within a few years of the latter's martyrdom. These barbarities are of the past, to be sure. But the least we can do is to distribute the guilt for the past with some semblance of equity among all nations without distinction, determined solely by fanaticism and ignorance!"

After reading this awful account I read Genesis 1:27: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." When man disobeyed God and became a traitor, setting up a government of his own, God, who is love, as a punishment sentenced him to death. But not as man executes: as I read this morning, "And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons, he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his people."

But I read also, "And the Lord said, I have pardoned according to thy word: but as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."

It is no use caviling and saying, "Could not the lessons of Evil be learned in a way different from that which God apparently has ordained?" We believe not; otherwise, God would so have arranged it.

When my father was a young man, he was stationed in the Mozambique Channel to suppress slavery. He often told me that in those days the Kaffirs were easily bought over for a string of glass beads; but after diamonds were discovered, glass beads as a medium of exchange lost their value. The tribes of South Africa learned quickly how to discriminate between real jewels and the fictitious.

So humanity after six thousand years of experience with sin and its consequences will have no desire to again place itself under rule and become slaves; but under the new administration with Christ at its head Isaiah's prayer will be realized: "Yes, in the way of thy judgments, O Lord, have we waited for thee: the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee, with my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early: for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

The boatmen upon the River Nile sing as they row. Sometimes seated in the head sheets of the boat is a little boy, who with his sweet treble voice leads the singing; and then all the men answer each verse with a refrain. When I read of this, I thought of Isaiah 11:6: "And a little child shall lead them."

Ah, yes, I thought, these ferocious beasts the child leads truly reveal the spirit inherent in man as the result of sin. But under the influence, personified in a child, and which Jesus says all must possess to inherit the kingdom, the spirit of hatred and cruelty will be eliminated from the hearts and minds of men. Then they will reveal the image and likeness of God.

Now I observe signs everywhere revealing who are the owners of property, and tags upon automobiles giving the key to the names of the owners. But in that day, as in type under Joseph everything belonged to Pharaoh, including the people themselves, everybody will acknowledge God's claims; and inscribed upon everything will be, "HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD."

Ibanez says, "All men are very much alike. We progress, but in a purely exterior, mechanical, material way. We have not yet had the great revolution—that revolution of the soul which Christianity began but never finished, since no Christian practices what he preaches. My impression is that we ought to create a new human soul! That is what God intends to do. "We have got to do away with our selfishness. Then everything will be easy; for the abnegation and the tolerance which are today the blessings of a privileged few will be the common blessing of all men!"

THE SUNRISE KINGDOM

By George B. Alldridge

“Then the sixth emptied his vial upon the mighty river Euphrates; and its water was dried up, so that a road might be prepared for the kings from the rising sun.”—Revelation 16:12, Ferrar Fenton.

EVENTS are so rapidly transpiring in the Orient each day that I find my mind breaking out in song:

“Mine eyes can see the glory of the coming of the Lord;
He is trampling out the winepress where His grapes of wrath are stored;
I see the flaming tempest of His swift descending sword;
Our King is marching on.

“I can see His coming judgments, as they circle all the earth,
The signs and groanings promised to precede a second birth;
I read His righteous sentence in the trembling thrones of earth;
Our King is marching on.”

Students of history are amazed as they read the history of God's chosen people, Israel. A nation of slaves emerging from a condition of bondage, wandering for forty years in the neighborhood of Mount Sinai, then entering a land populated with fierce and warlike nations, defeating and sometimes destroying them entirely, taking up their abode in this new land, organizing and establishing a government under wise rulers.

Two years following the writer's birth, Commodore Perry, obeying the commands of his government, compelled Japan to open her ports to the society of nations. In matters of armament he found the Japanese but little advanced over the condition of the Philistines of Samson's day; and yet today, after a period of less than seventy years, she has conquered a nation alone, a thing which, in the Crimean War fought in 1854-55 Great Britain, France, Turkey, and Sardinia were unable to accomplish! Three hundred years before Commodore Perry's visit, Jesuit missionaries under the auspices of the Dutch and Spanish governments were hospitably received. These Jesuits were followed by commercial traders.

The Japanese soon discovered that the intention of the Jesuits' government was to take possession of Japan as Great Britain, France, and other nations seized India at a later period. As a means of self-preservation the Jesuits were expelled by force of arms. Then followed a period of three hundred years of uninterrupted peace.

The writer in 1885, after graduation from the British Naval Gunnery School as an instructor, volunteered at the behest of the British Admiralty to be sent to Japan as an instructor to assist in training Japanese sailors in the art of modern warfare. The late Admiral Lord John Fisher was at that time captain of the Gunnery school. He remarked that I was too young and that boys were not being sent. Had I been sent, no doubt I would have participated in the Chinese and Russian wars which followed this date.

Following the Boxer uprising in China, a world court adjusted damages; and China had to pay millions in indemnity. I believe our government was awarded eight millions. China paid the money promptly. All the nations interested but the United States took it.

Our government set this money aside to establish scholarships for qualified Chinese students to come and study in our universities. Thousands have taken advantage of this. Today the Republic of China is the result of the propaganda spread by these students among their countrymen pointing out the value that accrues to a country under a government like that of the United States. And if I remember correctly, we sent one of our prominent statesmen to assist China in reorganizing.

To review the history of the dealings of European nations with China and Japan during the past one hundred years would occupy too much space. Sufficient to say, it has been far from meritorious. We have taught them in the use of submarines, battleships, tanks, poisoned gas, and drill tactics; we have taught them how to equip themselves

Prayer on Entering God's House

FATHER IN HEAVEN, I thank Thee for this hour of meditation and prayer. Answer the desires of my heart, not according to my poor thoughts, but according to Thine infinite wisdom and love. Let me not be a hearer of the Word only, but a doer of the work, that Thy name may be glorified in me. Nourish me in all goodness, and of Thy great mercy keep me in the same. Help me to accept the message of this service with an open mind and willing heart. Bless, I pray Thee, him who is to break for us the bread of life. May Thy truth find free expression through his lips that all may be strengthened in faith. Amen.

The Function of Thought

THOUGHT is an abstract thing, but the fruitage of thought is the words and actions. The ability to think and to reason is the power that lifts man above the brute creation.

When God had finished all the works of His hands: the marvels of the starry skies; the beauty of the green-clad earth; the mystery of the restless sea; together with all the creatures whose homes are under the waters, in the air, and on the land, "there was not a man to till the ground."

The planets were circling in the infinitude of space; the material earth had lifted its mountains into the clouds and stretched out its plains beneath them; all forms of animal and vegetable life abounded; but "there was not a man to till the ground." There was no responsible, intelligent head proved to govern it all, no one to direct and control the marvelous creation of Jehovah. So "the Lord God formed man."

All of the mighty works of God were first thoughts, ideas, and purposes, in the mind of the Deity before they became the existent facts of creation. "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens, and every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew. . . ."—Genesis 2:4, 5.

Thought is the basis of all achievement. Nothing but mere existence is accomplished without thinking.

But thinking alone is not enough. Thought must be translated into action before its true value and its real purpose are realized. A thousand men may come with the thinking powers of an Edison, a Burbank, or a Westinghouse, and the world would be no better off because of them. It is only when the thinkers of the world put their splendid thoughts into deeds, it is only when they translate their ideas into actions, that their thinking bears fruit to the betterment of mankind. Had the electric light and the telephone remained but a thought in the minds of Edison and of Bell, perhaps you and I would not now be enjoying the comfort and the convenience of these two remarkable inventions. Had Stephenson never translated into active concrete form his thought concerning the potential power of steam, no mighty moguls would now be dragging long trains of cars through the mountains and across the plains.

Even with the thoughts of God this is true. It was not until God said, "Let there be light," that there was light. It was only when the divine thought conceived and brought forth a material result that it accomplished its important purpose.

So it is with our thinking.

Faith is a matter of thinking. "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?"—James 2:20. Emerson said, "A man's religion is the chief fact with regard to him," and he proceeds to explain that by "religion" he does not mean a man's profession or belief or the doctrinal teaching of his church, but his own personal religion, the principles that govern his conduct in life, the religion that he puts into action, that colors his life and makes him what he is, both in his own estimation and in the eyes of his fellows.

It may be said that every man has two religions: one of profession and creed, and the other of expression and deed. But only the latter is really effectual and vital, for only the convictions that actually govern our actions are worthy of the name religion. Thus the religion of Edison may be said to be the religion of electrical development; that of Burbank, the religion of plant culture; of Washington and Lincoln, the religion of patriotism and good government. For a man's real religion is determined by the motivating principles of his life.

The wise man of old declared that a man is the product of his own thinking (Proverbs 23:7), and Jesus asserts that out of the "treasure of the heart" men bring forth "things"—good or evil—that are realities, material and practical results of the same character as his thinking.

The function of thought is to produce things, definite and positive results of a practical nature.

"THIS IS THE WORK OF GOD"

THE above caption forms a part of an answer of Jesus to the multitude in Capernaum when they questioned Him, saying, "What must we do, that we may work the works of God?"—John 6:28, A. R. V. This question, and also the complete answer of the Lord, should be considered with interest by every disciple. Like the people of far-away Capernaum we are anxious to know what the works of God really are, that we may do them.

Permit me to refresh your minds concerning the circumstances associated with this interesting exchange of question and answer between the Master and His numerous hearers.

On the day preceding the events recorded here, accompanied by His personal attendants, Jesus had ascended a mountain overlooking the Sea of Galilee and sat down under the shade of the fig and olive trees to instruct them more fully in the things of God. The passover was near at hand; and a great company, doubtless en route to Jerusalem to observe the great annual feast, having become deeply interested in the miracles wrought by the Lord, followed Him into His place of retreat.

When Jesus observed their approach, He embraced the opportunity to impress upon the minds of the disciples and future apostles another most important lesson.

Turning to Philip, He asked, "Philip, Whence are we to buy bread, that these may eat?" The recording pen of John explains that Jesus knew what He would do, but asked the question to test the faith and understanding of Philip.

Philip responded, speaking, of course, in the terms of the time and country, that it would require two hundred denarii, which, reduced to our own system, would be a little over thirty dollars, to supply each member of so vast an assembly sufficient to satisfy him. When we realize that thirty dollars would buy bread for five thousand hungry men, we appreciate what an enormous sum two hundred denarii would have meant in those days; and the miracle assumes even greater proportions.

Then Peter mentioned the little lad who was there with the loaves and fishes.

No matter what the occasion may be, nor how solemn and important the event that has brought the people together, be it serious or frivolous, for business, pleasure, or piety—people must eat and drink. So the "hot-dog" stand flourishes, the ice cream peddler prospers, and the sandwich man is in evidence at every public event.

The loaves and fishes of the little vendor were procured and miraculously made to supply the entire multitude abundantly.

Passing rapidly over the intervening events, which include the miracle of Jesus walking on the sea, we hurry on to the following day. It is necessary that we should remember the feeding of the multitude if we are to understand the answer Jesus made to the question of the multitude.

The people, missing Jesus in the morning and suspecting that He had gone to Capernaum, hastened after Him. When they found Him, they said, "Rabbi, when camest thou hither?"

Jesus' response was direct, and indicated the clarity with which He penetrated their minds. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw signs, but because ye ate of the loaves, and were filled."

The great purpose of Jesus was to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God to be established upon the earth. In the course of His doing this, He announced that He was the one divinely appointed to be the king. The miracles He performed, which so aroused the interest of the people, were done solely for the purpose of establishing His claim to the Messiahship and His authority to speak for God. They were signs that God was working with Him.

In answer to their question He said, "Ye seek me, not because of the signs." They were not impressed with the fact that the miracles pointed unmistakably to the Messiahship of Jesus. They did not see in these things the great lesson Jesus wished to impart. They were not led by them to acknowledge His kingship and to accept Him as their sovereign Lord. What they really wanted was to be fed for nothing, to have their living provided without cost to themselves. They wished to have their diseases cured, the blind made to see, and the lame to walk. It was wholly in these material matters that they were interested.

Now we approach the vital part of the lesson.

"Ye seek me . . . because ye ate of the loaves, and were filled. Work not for the food which perisheth, but for the food which abideth unto eternal life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for him, the Father, even (over)

Creation

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.
The unwearied sun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's power display,
And publishes to every land,
The work of an almighty hand.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly, to the list'ning earth,
Repeats the story of her birth;
While all the stars that round her burn,
And all the planets in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And spread the truth from pole to pole.

What though in solemn silence all
Move round the dark terrestrial ball?
What though no real voice nor sound
Amid the radiant orbs be found?
In Reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice;
Forever singing as they shine,
"The hand that made us is divine."
—Joseph Addison.

God, hath sealed."—John 6:26, 27, A. R. V. In other words, Jesus said, "Do not give your entire attention to the material signs, however strange they may be; but rather think of the truth to which these works of wonder point, the truth which they attest. That is, that I am the Christ, the Son of the living God!"

How often the Master found it necessary to repeat this same lesson! In the sermon on the mount He said, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust consume, and where thieves break through and steal: for where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also." Again, near the close of that remarkable sermon, He said, "Seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6:19-21, 33, A. R. V.

Returning to the passage in John the sixth chapter, we harken again to the words of Jesus, "Work not for the food that perisheth, but for the food which abideth unto eternal life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for him, the Father, even God, hath sealed." The sealing was accomplished by the miracles which Jesus wrought by the power of God. The "food which abideth unto eternal life" is the gospel of the kingdom, through faith in which they could eventually obtain the felicity that is to accompany deathlessness when the Lord comes.

It was when Jesus said, "Work not for the food that perisheth," that the multitude asked Him the question recorded at the beginning of this article. "What must we do, that we may work the works of God?"

What really are the "works of God"? In what form of service does God take delight? What act of obedience does He look upon with the greatest favor? There is so little that men can do to serve God. "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. . . . If I were hungry, I would not tell thee; for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof."—Psalm 50:10, 12, A. R. V.

Jesus answered the searching question of the multitude. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent."—John 6:29, A. R. V. What a strange answer! The works most pleasing to the Father's heart are summed up in a single thought: faith in Jesus Christ as the Messiah! All other works of service grow out of that.

To believe that Jesus is indeed the Messiah is, first, like Abraham, to believe God and His testimony that "this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matthew 3:17. Second, to believe in Jesus as the Messiah is to believe that "the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins."—Matthew 9:6. Third, to believe in Jesus as the Messiah includes a recognition of His life-giving power, that He is "the resurrection and the life" (John 11:25), that there can be no eternal life out of Him. Fourth, to believe in Jesus as the Messiah is to believe the joyful message He proclaimed, that old Mother Earth is to be renewed, made beautiful and prosperous and filled with peace by the King of kings when He shall come. All of these wonderful truths and many others are included in the thought that Jesus is the Christ, the Messiah of God.

Believing that all of these blessed and wonderful things are coming to us through Jesus, how can we do less than to seek diligently to please Him, even God the Father, in all we do and say and are? Yes! Jesus of course was right! "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent!"—Editor.

"Of 500 Polish Jewish girls who went to Palestine for Passover, 130 remained in the country, having achieved matrimony," says Mem Shin Hay in the Zionist. He adds, "There's a fine hint for the Zionist Organization here as to how to promote tourism to Palestine."

FABLES

By Emma C. Railsback

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—2 Timothy 4:3, 4.

MANY are the fables of modern religious sects. One of them is founded on the statement of Genesis 6:2 that "the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair: and they took them wives of all which they chose."

The fable is that the sons of God in this scripture are God's heavenly angels, immortal, sexless, lustless beings looking down on the daughters of men and seeing that they were fair. They must have been very, very fair, much fairer than the movie stars of Hollywood, to cause such a calamity in both heaven and earth. Then the nature of these celestial beings was changed from immortal to mortal, from incorruptible to corruptible, from sexless to the masculine gender, that they might take these fair daughters of men to be their wives.

To make the theory sound plausible they apply language from Isaiah 14, which inspiration applies to the fall of the king of Babylon, to these immortal beings which have fallen to mortality. Upon this fable is builded a great system. Many ambiguous statements and inferences are wrested from their contexts to bolster up the theory.

A little meditation and analysis of the context should reveal to thinking people just who were called "sons of God" in the above scripture. Seth was given to Adam and Eve to take the place of Abel, the righteous son. Then in the course of time "began men to call themselves by the name of the Lord" (margin), or "sons of God." From Cain, the unrighteous, came the fair daughters of men. Soon after the intermarriage of the righteous with the unrighteous descendants of Adam, every imagination of the thoughts of men's hearts was only evil continually; and God decided to bring the flood upon mankind to cleanse the earth.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

By Norman John MacLeod

“And the word of the Lord was precious in those days: there was no open vision.”—1 Samuel 3:1.

SO OFTEN do many assume that the “gift” of the Holy Spirit is with us always and that we have it now, or can get it now, in order to do all those wonderful things as in the times of the apostles, that the time seems appropriate for an article on the subject. For any of those who profess to be “endued with power from on high” as were the apostles on the day of Pentecost, little in the way of argument will affect the situation. But, lest many others be drawn into the ways of those doctrines, let us examine the situation.

Which was more important, the healing or the teaching? Or, at another time, which was more important, the healing or the forgiving? Not one of the individuals that were healed by Christ or the apostles received eternal life thereby. Not even Lazarus, who was raised from the dead, lived on indefinitely. They all died! The healing and, in the case of Lazarus, the resurrection were temporary.

What, then, was the purpose of those cases of healing and forgiving? Was it not for the purpose of confirming the Word that was preached by the men of those days? But now the Word is completed.

Not long ago in conversation with a Mormon the question was put to him: How do you know that the “revelation” of Joseph Smith and others were from God? His answer was that they must believe and live in conformity with the Scriptures. Why, then, is a revelation necessary? And, furthermore, I would reject all of the “revelations” of such men; for they are always based on a fundamental error of some sort, in the case of the Mormons, on the doctrine of the immortality of the soul.

On the other hand, the healings were not nearly so important as the Word of God, because for the latter men were imprisoned, were persecuted, and gave their lives: even the life of the Son of God was not so important as that Word, for He gave His life for it. In fact, so important is that Word that Jesus lost His personality in it and became the Word! When the Scriptures were complete, then, the powers of healing and the like were no longer necessary.

Jesus and the apostles could not always perform miracles, nor did they use the gift so freely as many people suppose. Nor did Elijah use his power of the Spirit on a large scale. “And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country. And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country. But I tell you a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land; but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian. And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath.”—Luke 4:23-28. And we read from the pen of the Apostle Paul: “Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletus sick.” Why did he not heal him?

At the time of the birth of Samuel the Word of the Lord was scarce; there was no open vision. We get the idea that, because for long periods some great personality received power to do miracles or the spirit of prophecy from God, somebody always had the power to do those things among the Jews. But there were long periods when God gave no direct word to Israel, and there were many periods of time when there was no leader who had the “gift” of the Holy Spirit. No definite purpose could be achieved by pouring out the Spirit upon men in the power of Pentecost. Those things were for definite purposes at definite periods.

Certainly God is not divided in counsel, and certainly He does not sanction all manner of doctrines. Those who profess to have these superhuman powers of healing and working miracles speak in all manner of ways. Some teach one thing and some another. Certainly God does not lend His sanction to all of these varied doctrines so utterly opposed to each other.

During the time of Joseph Smith there were two very popular questions in the public mind: What became of the “ten lost tribes of Israel,” and who built the mounds that were found in various parts of the United States? Joseph Smith, in order to capitalize on the popularity of these questions, professed to receive revelations which gave him definite information on these subjects.

Such is the usual nature of the doctrine taught by those who profess to have the “gift” of the Holy Spirit. They use that show of authority to prove their particular “pet” theory. They have, according to their own statements, solved that particular thing because God has told them definitely about it. It is an excellent way to silence criticism.

But we read in 1 Corinthians 10:17: “For we, being many, are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread.” The bread represents doctrine. Instead of being a “Babel” in God, we read: “There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."—Ephesians 4:4-6.

In the days of the Apostle Paul evidently "Babel" was already apparent, for he told those that had power to speak in tongues to keep quiet unless somebody would be edified by the speaking. Most of those who now pretend to speak in tongues do not know what they said, nor does anybody else; and even if they did, nobody in particular is edified thereby.

When hard trials come upon us, we endeavor to find a means of escape. Finding that impossible, we use another means of escape which is psychological. When a small boy finds that he cannot have his own way in carrying out some of his wild plans, he passes into the realm of day-dreams where he becomes the hero, and thus finds consolation for the thing that is denied him.

Somewhat the same psychology is in evidence when people attempt to perform healings. They are suffering a great deal of misery, either directly in their own persons, or vicariously in the person of a close relative. They want relief. How will they get it? If only they can have faith, they feel, God will heal the ailments that are besetting them. They do not stop to consider that perhaps that very thing will make them better Christians if they will endure until the end. Not that God is punishing them for their evil doings: that would be too severe a doctrine; for God does not delight in hardheartedness, but in mercy. But perhaps it is not God's will to perform the particular healing that we desire. Jesus prayed to have that terrible cup of suffering removed from Him, but yielded in saying, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done."

Those who profess to do healing say that it cannot be done when there are those present who lack faith, or when the one who is trying to do the healing lacks faith, or the patient is weak in faith. All these conditions are upset by various healings that were performed by Jesus and the apostles, or the facts of the present situation. Jesus could not do healings, they say, in Nazareth because there were those there who did not have faith. But He performed one healing in a synagogue where the particular opponents against whom He struggled during most of His ministry were present: Mark 3:1 ff.

We will certainly agree that the one performing the healing must have faith, but do these people who profess to do these healings lack faith? Would they admit that? No. Certainly, they should make themselves right with God! They are not on the right foundation, or God would hear them if faith were all that were necessary.

Then when it comes to the patient's having faith we see that that is not at all necessary, for many of those that were healed were in such a state that faith was impossible; for instance, in the case where the patient had died, such as Elijah raising the widow's son, the raising of Lazarus and Jarius' daughter, and when Paul brought back to life the young man who had fallen out of the window while listening to his lengthy sermon. Certainly the patient possessed no faith at such times.

Furthermore, these people nowadays never attempt to restore limbs that have been amputated, nor in many cases do they pretend to restore life when it is gone. But we see that that was not impossible at all with Jesus and others who healed. Lazarus had been dead four days, so that his sister did not want the stone removed because she felt that decay had already set in.

Joel 2:23 reads: "Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month." Those who believe that today they receive the gifts of healing, speaking tongues, and the like, invariably interpret this passage to mean that God is going to pour out His Spirit twice on the people of the world. But nothing is found in that text or in any other that says that that is so. We can so interpret it if we desire, but there is not the slightest authority for so doing. Rather is Joel telling of the conditions that will exist after the time of the final regathering of Israel, just as was promised in the Book of Deuteronomy in the twenty-eighth and thirtieth chapters.

In the section of Joel 2 from the eighteenth verse on he is telling of a time such as is found described in Isaiah 35, when Israel shall be gathered back to his land: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh." A foretaste of that time was granted in the days of the apostles, but that is not necessary now. In fact, it might be said of that as it was said to Thomas by Jesus: "Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."—John 20:29.

EXPECTANT OF MESSIAH

A new Messiah, who will become King of the Jewish nation, and whose appearance will put an end to the next world war, is predicted by the orthodox Jews of Palestine. They declare He will be a superman and that His kingdom will be a great center from which will radiate peace and brotherhood extending throughout the entire world. The revelation of the Messiah will be preceded by the rebuilding of the temple, they say, adding that this will cause the enmity of many nations, especially those of the Moslem world. The last world war will focus itself in Palestine; and, at the critical moment, when all appears lost, the Messiah, coming from heaven, will gain a decisive victory. It is said He will immediately be proclaimed King, the first king of the Jewish nation for twenty centuries. Of the 150,000 Jews in Palestine, most of whom have gathered there from the four corners of the earth since the war, at least 50,000 are expecting developments to transpire rapidly until at an unexpected moment the Messiah will be revealed. "The Jews are praying every day for the coming of the Messiah," declared the President of the Town Council of Peta Tikva, the largest Jewish agricultural colony in Palestine.—The Jewish Chronicle of Chicago.

IS EVIL ETERNAL?

HAS evil any rights in God's universe? No! It has no rights of possession. It came into existence by violent and fraudulent intrusion. It is an outlaw that knows no authority, and it is liable to be told to move out at any moment. Sin has no rights because it is essentially wrong. It is the one thing which ought never to have existed in God's fair world. It has no shadow of right to exist, but to come to an end either by reformation or extirpation.

Sin is ever in revolt against God. It began its rampant career through the earth in rebellion and is therefore a rebel to the government of the great Creator. A rebel has no rights—no right to sufferance, no right to possession, no right of asylum, no retreat, no sanctuary, no right of even a fugitive and vagabond. Sin has no right to roam homeless forever, no rights even in the supposed "world of woe" about which theologians tell us so much.

Sin knows no reformation, wherever it goes; it remains the same hateful, ugly thing. God abhors it. There is no place for sin nor for eternal sinners in all God's dominions. There can be no end to sin while there remains a sinner. There can be no end to transgression while there remains a single transgressor. How can "God be all in all" where sin exists?

"What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?"—1 Peter 4:17. A vital question, surely. Of all human problems there are none so vital as that which involves the destiny of mankind. Apart from divine revelation there is no source of knowledge. The Bible having asked the question, the Bible must answer it; or there is no answer. We dare not make any appeal to the philosophies of men to settle so grave an issue. What God says must be final. That is the highest court of appeal. Human philosophy is speculation's blowing hot and cold. Every great principle of which the Bible is an authority, finds explicit statement within its own exposition. The Bible is yea and amen, and is unified by the great principles it reveals.

Everything else in which men seek a solution of the eternal principles of divine unfolding is speculation. This was the case with those great Greek philosophers, Plato and Socrates, some four centuries before Christ. Exceedingly captivating were their specious reasonings, as evidenced by the manner in which the centuries of human thinking have been swayed and turned from the simple and plain teaching of the Word of God. No amount of philosophical reasoning can change the fixed purpose of the Almighty, nor can it settle the question we are now considering, namely, the eternity of evil, or the ultimate of sin and sinners.

We are so accustomed to the presence of evil and good in this imperfect state that it is difficult to conceive of the one without the other. Holiness and sin, joy and sorrow, light and darkness, life and death, birth and old age; we see them all. The idea that there can be, or ever will be, a period when these extremes in life and experience will end and a world be in the which there shall be no sorrow, sin, darkness, nor death, seems the essence of extravagant language and vanity of hope. But the Almighty has declared it in His Word, and such a glorious consummation is essential to a perfect Deity, perfect in wisdom to plan, perfect in power to execute all His "eternal purpose," and supreme in benevolence and goodness to desire it.

We believe in spite of Grecian philosophy, in spite of theological traditionalism or any of the schools of learning, just such a state will eventuate in the economy of God, in which there will not be found one vestige of the satanic conquest. The Word of the Lord has declared it. "He shall gather together in one all things in Christ, and in the name of Jesus Christ every knee shall bow of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth, and every tongue shall confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father." "Let God be true, but every man a liar."

It is inconceivable and irreconcilable with the character of a holy and just God that there should exist two kingdoms, running parallel with each other through all eternity: the one, a kingdom of peace, purity, life, and glory; the other, the kingdom of strife, consummate, culminate wickedness; the one resounding with the praises of God by redeemed men and angels, and the other, with groans and shrieks of untold myriads of the lost. That is not a doctrine of the Bible. It is a relic of Persian dualism and pagan superstition. This horrid dogma of eternal suffering came into the Christian church in the latter part of the second century, with all that goes with it as the legitimate offspring of that first fatal falsehood: "Ye shall not surely die."—Genesis 3:4. It is the scum of the teaching and philosophy of the school of the Dark Ages, which has been handed down and incorporated in the corruptions of the apostate church and has come to be regarded by many as a part of the faith once for all delivered by God as the heritage of His true people.

What, then, shall the end be of those who obey not the gospel?

God has endowed His creatures with reasoning faculties; and reason is not treason, and none can out-reason God or nullify His Word. But men will ever find the revealed will of God to be in strict harmony with His government of the universe. If men will persist in viewing the way of the infinite from the angle of their own reasoning and through the spectacles of their own traditions, their vision must be distorted.

The chief difficulty in understanding God's revealed will is not want of evidence. It is not so much an intellectual, but a moral cause; not so much the want of the faculty to grasp the things of God, but an unwillingness to follow whithersoever the truth leads us.

There are at least three schools of thought touching the nature and duration of future punishment: first, there will be an eternity of conscious suffering or eternal torment; second, that the finally impenitent will be eternally destroyed in the cessation and extinction of all evil; third, that all will be finally restored to the favor of God. These cannot all be right in their conclusions. What is truth? "Thy word is truth." Whatever God has promised to do, He will do.—Messiah's Advocate.

WHY DOES THE JEW SUFFER?

ANTI-SEMITISM means suffering for the Jew. Why is it permitted to continue? Is Christianity responsible for it? Is it an obligation both of the church and of the world, long overdue, to remove the stigma that has rested on the Jew these many centuries and end anti-Semitism forever?

These questions are not new; they have been discussed, doubtless, ever since the first Christian century. And they were in the world long before that, for anti-Semitism was strong in Old Testament times. Recently the subject has been brought before the public again by an argument between a Jew and a Roman Catholic in articles published in journals of their respective faiths and reported in The Literary Digest. The Jewish writer tells us that the Jews are "the villains of the drama of Salvation," and that only a revision of Christian doctrine can put a stop to anti-Jewish prejudice. He intimates that Christians are wrong "because of the status they assigned the Jews in the mystery of the redemption. Jewry is given a central and devilish role in this mystery." Therefore, wherever Christianity has gone, the word Jew "denotes the Rejected People who had once been chosen, who had denied the Savior and crucified Him, who were thus the enemies of God and of mankind."

Another Jew, a rabbi, has made a demand that the Gospels be revised.

The Roman Catholic anonymous writer who answers these arguments takes the ground that the "full moral guilt for the worst crime in history" does not fall entirely on the Jew, but is shared by the Roman government as represented by Pontius Pilate, and he adds, "Christ was put to death by the world of His day."

The Bible is, of course, the only sourcebook from which to get a reliable and authentic view of the Jewish question. Its historical records and its revelations and teachings will show us whether or not Christianity is primarily responsible for anti-Semitism, and why anti-Semitism has been a historical fact through the centuries, from the time when the Israelites were forced into cruelly hard and unfair labor by Pharaoh in Egypt down to the present day when pogroms in Russia and southeastern Europe and anti-Jewish Arab riots in Palestine are front-page news in our dailies.

The divine history in the Scriptures disclose the startling fact that anti-Semitism is primarily from God, not from man. "Anti," as every one knows, means "against"; the term anti-Semitism expresses a situation that is "against the Jew," or the Semite, the Semitic people, descendants of Shem. But surely, one is likely to exclaim, the God who is love could not be so against the Jew as to be the reason for anti-Semitism? Yet that is just what the Word of God tells us.

The Jew is God's chosen people. "Hath God cast away his people?" asked the Apostle Paul; and instantly he answered, by inspiration, "God forbid." Israel is still God's chosen people, and always will be. But almost from the beginning, soon after this peculiar and wonderful and uniquely-favored people were called to come out from the world and be separate, that through them the whole world might be blessed, Israel has been against God. It is a tragic story, and it runs in minor strain through the Old Testament and the New, and has been continuing up to this year of our Lord (and Israel's Messiah) 1932.

Because the Jew has been persistently, deliberately, and continually against God, God has necessarily had to be against the Jew. Plainly He foretold His people in loving entreaty, back in the days of Moses, what must happen to them if they turned against Him. "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known. . . . And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life."

Why should God do this? In order to bring His chosen people back to Himself. For that is what He will triumphantly do.

The supreme sin of the ages was the Jew's rejection of their own Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God. Only because the Jewish leaders demanded this did Pilate, the Roman governor, consent to the crucifixion of Christ. "Crucify Him," they shouted; and, "His blood be on us, and on our children." So long as the Jew continues to reject Christ as the Messiah, the Jew continues to reject God. There can be no true worship of God, by either Jew or Gentile, apart from the recognition of Christ as the Son of God, the Savior of men, and the Messiah of Israel. "He that hateth me," said the Lord Jesus, "hateth my Father also." "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me."

But be it remembered that God's dealing with the Jew in judgment does not excuse nor authorize any anti-Semitism on the part of Christians or Gentile governments. As Christians it is our duty and privilege to love the Jew, to befriend him, and—best of all services—to offer him Christ his Messiah as his Savior. In increasing numbers the Jews are now turning to Christ.

Anti-Semitism will be forever ended when Christ comes again and Israel ends her sin of rejecting her Messiah, who "will pour upon the house of David . . . the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced." "And so shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."—Toronto Globe.

What would be the use of salt if it were not pungent, or the edge of the sword if it did not slay? Accursed is the man who does the work of the Lord deceitfully.—Luther to Pope Leo X, Harvard Classics, Vol. XXXVI, p. 354.

REAL IMMORTALITY

CHRIST preached a real immortality, very different from that believed in by Egypt and Greece. His doctrine on the subject was dogmatically affirmed. It did not rest on assumption, conjecture, or guess. The proofs of it were not such as men might gather from the writings of the philosophers of pagan countries. It was an immortality peculiar to inspiration, and not to be demonstrated independently of it by the logic of the schools.

He brought it to light by the gospel. Apart from the gospel He could never have made it known. This very fact distinguishes it in the most striking manner from all the conclusions upon the subject which men may have arrived at by the inherent force of their own understanding.

If this immortality be a fact, theirs is a fiction of the most pernicious and baneful type. Both cannot possibly be true. Theirs is immortality in tangible and visible form, attainable by resurrection from the dead. Theirs is congenital immortality, His a conditional bestowment. Theirs is held to be a present fact of human consciousness, His is a future inheritance. Theirs is for all, his only for as many as the Father has given unto Him.

Which looks the most real and most likely? There is something about the common view which people take of this question which fails to yield true satisfaction in the test moments of human history. Men and women find it hard work, just before the coffin-lid is screwed on, to persuade themselves that death has not really and truly done its work.

I confess I cannot see anything particularly entrancing in the prospect of a bodyless and impalpable existence. This may be owing to some defect in my mental constitution, but there certainly appears to me to be nothing tranquilizing or inviting in the vague expectations which are popularly entertained with regard to a future life. In Christ's doctrine, however, I can see a definiteness and substantiality and glory which meet all the cravings of my mental and moral being and make it possible for me to hope and trust without violating any reason in the process.

"I will raise him up at the last day." "He shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto the body of his glory." There is nothing ghostly and bodiless about that! I am offered a nature that will be just as substantial as my present one and far more real. For where will the reality of my present organization be one hundred years from now? It will be simply impossible to predicate reality of it at that distant period. It will, in the natural course of things, have completely disappeared from the universe.

But Christ invites me to partake of a nature that will never disappear as long as eternal ages roll, a nature from which the law of sin and death has been eradicated and every atom and pulsation of which will thrill with an energy imperishable and divine. All this is connected in the Scriptures with the immortality which Christ revealed has a reality about it which presents a thrilling contrast to the supposed forms of disembodied felicity by which it is sought to engage the hope and aspiration of men!

No man who believes that when he dies he will be conveyed to the skies has the remotest conception of the manner in which he will employ his celestial activities and spend his time. The occupations of that heavenly existence are generally held to be of a musical sort, and harps of gold are mentioned as a prime attraction. But nobody seems to be at all sure. People are quite willing to leave all such details until they get there. Their hope rests on no real promise, and therefore can hardly be expected to fasten itself on any real features of the heavenly state to which they aspire.

It is very different with the hope set before us in the gospel. That hope is founded on God's covenants, made with the father of the Israelitish nation thousands of years ago. It relates to a state of blessedness to be realized upon the earth at a time when all sublunary affairs will be under the jurisdiction of His glorious Son, and when the authority everywhere will be placed in tried and trusty hands.

"To him that overcometh will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." There is something very real about that. We can understand it. It commands our perfect admiration and sympathy. There is nothing vague and shadowy and sentimental in the prospect. It is precisely what is needed. Were the nations in the grasp of such a government now, what an altered state of things we should see! It is not too good to be true, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it! Is it not, think you, destined to become a divine reality?

These are the things which belong to the Bible system of faith, and they appeal strongly to our sober sense. We can think of them and anticipate them without requiring our reason to abdicate her throne. They satisfy the profoundest instincts of our being, and the most exacting benevolence can ask for nothing more.—Selected from the writings of Robert Ashcroft by Rufus A. Curtis.

TRUE education teaches us to look upon those things which are large as large, and upon those things which are small as small.—Blessing.

with suitable uniforms, take care of their wounded, and organize Red Cross departments. In the China and Russian Wars, their physicians and surgeons proved more adept than our own.

God foresaw all this, as recorded in Joel 3:10: "Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong."

Gibbon has well said, "No Oriental nation is comparable with Japan in the rapidity and success of the process of Occidentalization. We forced ourselves upon Japan less than seventy years ago. Because of their insularity, the Japanese had been able to keep excluded. Submitting to the menace of our cannon, Japan entered the family of nations

"But the Japanese did not propose to have their islands become a happy hunting ground for European and American commercial imperialism. From the day we pointed our cannon at Japan, the Japanese realized what they would have to do to save themselves from slavery. If Japan became Europeanized in two generations, it was solely to remain Japanese.

"This statement is not paradoxical. The Japanese followed the wise course. The possibility of resisting an enemy of superior force depends upon becoming his equal. The history of contemporary Japan—domestic and international—is the story of a nation, conscious of its material inferiority, imitating Europe and America to attain material equality in order to resist the application in Japan of the principle of European eminent domain.

"Never have the Japanese admitted the moral superiority of our civilization or shown any inclination to adopt our religion and our ideals. Consequently the transformation of Japan, under European and American influence, is a transformation in the realm of the practical and material, and not in the realm of the moral."

The whole tenor of Christ's teaching and example is on the side of the pacifists. Did He not say, "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword"?

But we are also to be alert, to observe the signs of the times. All Bible students are agreed, I think, that Russia is the northern Power outlined in Ezekiel 38.

Some claim that the text at the head of this article refers to Israel's returning to their own land; others believe that it refers to the Church Militant's returning with Christ to establish His kingdom. Well, since none of us know for sure, one guess is as good as another.

At one time Turkey and her state religion, Mohammedanism, were a big factor in Asia. Our practice and enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine has taught Japan how to imitate us in the affairs pertaining to politics in the Continent of Asia. Since Turkey, or, using symbolical language, "the river Euphrates," has been dried up, the way is now open. "That the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

Who are these kings? I do not know. But I know that the rising sun is the emblem upon the flag of Japan; and as the Diaglott translates it: "So that the way of Those Kings who are from the sun-rising might be prepared." It looks to me as though Japan is the Power which will precipitate the next world war.

Our fellow townsman, Newton D. Baker, is reported to have said: "Japan has a country that can never support her present population, much less a future one. She has little iron, no coal, no gold. Manchuria is the logical place to get them.

"Russia has an interest there, too. She must go clear around Manchuria to find her thin little stretch that leads to her maritime provinces. Japan got control of that when she won the Russo-Japanese War.

"Russia intends to make sovietized republics of the Chinese territory. Already she has assimilated outer Mongolia and is trying to do the same with inner Mongolia through educational methods. Should this keep up, Russia eventually will creep down through China until all of it is attached to the Moscow system. If Japan permits this, it will make her an idle nation, completely dependent upon Russia for her existence.

"In my opinion Japan feels another war with Russia is inevitable. It will be fought, as the other was, in Manchuria. She does not want China attacking her flank while she is fighting it.

"I believe, and this is only my opinion, the Shanghai adventure was merely an attempt on the part of Japan to show China how foolish she would be to attempt to fight her troops. Japan's present adventure in Jehol, I believe, is to gain control of the pass where a comparative handful of soldiers can prevent the Chinese from attacking Japanese when the war with Russia comes."

Mr. Baker said he was not in favor of economic pressure against Japan except as a last resort, and then it would be effective only if it were a universal move.

There we encounter the old obstacle, that the United States does not belong to the League of Nations. The other nations would not boycott and so throw all Japan's rich trade to the United States. On the question of arms embargoes against aggressor nations Mr. Baker recalled that when Secretary of War he could see no reason why the United States should ship arms to Mexico and was told if they did not Mexico would build her own munitions plants to supply them.

The worst thing in the world is the failure to understand. If we can understand other nations, the irresistible economic factors that move them, we will have more sympathy and more tolerance. The power of making war and of making peace lies with the people. No leaders can stay war if the people demand it. So let us try to reason and to understand.

Mr. Baker urged Clevelanders not to pitch their tents in the camp of another until they have played the searchlight of cold, clear reasoning upon the elements involved. He explained the fact that Japan's military authorities do what her civil authorities promised not to do, by pointing out that the civil and military governments in Japan have no check on each other and that only the emperor himself has control over both.

Robert Blatchford of England is calling upon Great Britain to be prepared; for he says, "Hell is beginning to smoke." He cites two ways of disarming and then sarcastically gives these figures: France talks of disarmament, yet she has a ready-at-once army of 725,000 equipped with 43,000 machine guns, 1,500 trench mortars, 5,400 cannons, 4,000 tanks. In six days France could throw into the field an army of 5,000,000 (including colored colonials).

Here is the puny present-day strength of the British army compared with 1914 (including territorials): oversees and Indian soldiers and reserves, 1914, 741,000; 1932, 467,000. Mr. Blatchford declares America, Japan, Russia, and all the Powers are well equipped with airplanes and gigantic bombing machines all ready for der tag.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?

Acts 11:26

WE READ here, "The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." Then a Christian is a disciple of Christ. Now we must find out just what a disciple is to know what a Christian is.

We find that all through the New Testament there were many disciples, but we do not have a definition of the word from the Scriptures. So let us take Webster's words for our definition: a pupil; now, especially, a follower who believes in the doctrine of his teacher. Also, a term used in place of a disciple is "follower," of which Webster says: "Follower . . . one who attaches himself to another, or his opinion."

We know, then, that a person who is following Christ is also a student of Christ and therefore a Christian.

To be a Christian calls for self-sacrifice, faith, works, and love.

If there were not a requirement for faith, then the infidels and heathen could become Christians for their good works. For many heathen or infidels have more good deeds than many so-called Christians.

Some claim to be Christians because they are satisfied in their own minds that they have done as many deeds as the Christian should.

We should now go to the Scriptures to find the true Christian. We find in John 15:8 that works by faith bear the fruit of the Spirit (Galatians 5:22, 23), and 1 John 3:14-19 tells us of the necessary love by which we can know that we are disciples of Christ.

Christ taught love, faith, works, and the kingdom. Then as Christians we must have this love, faith, works, and the knowledge of the kingdom.

If a Christian, everyone will know these things: "By this shall all know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." So, friends, if you are true Christians, you will love one another. Can we talk about others, bear false witness, or bear tales, and still love one another?

For those who do not claim the name "Christian," let us study this scripture: "When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, (though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples)."

This tells us we must be baptized to become a disciple and a Christian. But before we take that step, let us study a few verses of the Gospel according to Luke, chapter 14, verses 25 to 33 inclusive.

Charles H. Martin, Kokomo, Indiana.

Do not give up. Over the hills the sun still shines. Maybe the stones have cut your soles to pieces, and the dream you dreamed has fallen, broken, to the ground. Do not even gather up the pieces. They will only cut your fingers—and maybe your heart a little, too—as you do. But dream a stronger, braver, better dream. And march on.

There is a reward promised to those who come up through tribulation. Only those who have traveled far can appreciate the sunlight when the mountain top is reached. Only those who have roamed the wilderness will know the greenness of the Canaan fields when the promised land swings out of the starless night.—Helen Welshimer in Girlhood Days.

JESUS GIVING LIFE AND HEALTH

A FINE little lad he was, just half past seven, with a clear pink and white skin, soft fair hair, and large, wondering blue eyes. Little Lawrence was the joy of his father's and mother's heart, the delight of his older brother and sister, and the pal of his baby sister. For a little more than a year he had been going to school, feeling deeply the importance of carrying his lunch box in one hand and his "reader" in the other.

A little country boy was Lawrence, living on a farm, knowing the joys of out-of-door life. There was nothing he liked better than to ride on the pony behind big brother, arms clasped tightly round his waist, when he was barely three years old.

Before long the day came when he was able to ride alone. Proudly he rode down the lane and over the little bridge to show his skill. And long before seven summers had flown over his dear little head he could ride the pony standing straight up on its back with only the bridle reins to steady him.

Not only the pony but all the farm animals came in for their share of his affection. To be allowed to place the feed in the box for the calves or carry a little pail of milk to the pigs was a special privilege, while his greatest delight were the kittens, rolling and tumbling over each other to get on his lap all at once, as he sat in the sunny doorway.

But there was another thing Lawrence enjoyed as much as he did the romps with big brother and his sisters, or feeding the pets, and that was going to Sunday school! You might not think so, dear little readers, but he did, because for all his fun, he enjoyed the quiet companionship of his Sunday school class and listening to the minister afterwards. How he did love those Bible stories!

But one winter day little "Sunny Jim," as some of his friends called him because of his perpetual smile, could not ride down the lane and over the bridge on his sled, nor carry his reader to school. For, along with many others in the country, Lawrence fell ill and rapidly grew worse.

Seeing Mother's grave face one day he clasped his arms about her neck and said, "Mother, don't cry; if I die, Jesus will wake me up."

The pony neighed in vain for little Lawrence to come out for a ride; big brother and sister and baby sister were lonely and sad; even the kittens seemed to pine away. Father's and Mother's hearts were heavy as they went about their accustomed tasks.

For thirteen long years, just thirteen this very week, those who knew him and loved him have been waiting for Jesus to come and wake little Lawrence up. But though the time seems long, they know that Jesus will come one of these days, and once more they'll clasp again in their arms little "Sunny Jim."

And now, my dear little friends, ask Mother to read you another true story, for this is a true story I have just told you. The other true one is about a little girl whom Jesus called back to life and to her loved ones when He was here on earth. Tell Mother to look in the second book of the New Testament and the fifth chapter.

Don't you think it will be wonderful when Jesus comes again and wakes up all the little folks and the big ones, too, that are sleeping in their graves? Let's pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

And now, the next best thing I have to tell you is that last week one day I heard a knock upon the door of our Scrapbook clubhouse, and there stood Edwin Smith, of Tippecanoe City, Ohio, and Richard Lindstrom, of Cleveland, Ohio. Of course, I opened the door wide and invited them in to sit around the table with Timothy, George, Malcena, and myself. Edwin is Timothy's cousin, and he's seven years old; while Richard is not quite six. They both told me about their Sunday school, too, but there isn't room enough now for more.

In your scrapbook for this lesson copy the verse across the top of this page; then write the answers to these questions; last paste the picture your teacher gives you on Sunday, March 5:

Why did Jairus look for Jesus?

What did he do when he found Him?

What did he say to Him?

Did Jesus go with him?

What did Jesus and Jairus hear when they got there?

Who said, "Be not afraid, only believe"?

What did Jesus do to make them all so happy?

Meanwhile, Malcena Catherine and I are lonesome for some more girls to join the club, and the boys always like more company. Don't forget to work on your scrapbooks. Remember, "there's a reason."

LESSON 10. — March 5, 1933

JESUS GIVING LIFE AND HEALTH

Mark 5:21-43

Devotional Reading: Psalm 116:1-9

GOLDEN TEXT

The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad.—Psalm 126:3.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus Giving Life and Health.

Basic Truth: "All things are possible to him that believeth."—Mark 9:23.

I. Jesus, Whom all Men Need. (V. 21-24.) Jairus was a man of high and worthy standing in both synagogue and community. All that we know of him is decidedly to his credit. He must have been possessed of considerable wealth, for he employed servants. Yet the time came when he stood as much in need of the ministry of the Lord as his most humble retainer. He approached Jesus himself. He did not send a servant to beg Jesus to come to the relief of his daughter, because he was too deeply concerned in the outcome. He wanted to make the appeal personally. So it is with all the needs for which we go to God through Christ: we must present them ourselves. The prayers of others in our behalf are helpful, but to pray for our own needs indicates both faith and desire on our part.

II. Jesus, the True Comforter. (V. 35-40.) Our Lord responded immediately to the call made upon His sympathy and help; but while He was on the way to bring health to the suffering one, word reached the father that she was dead. Before the bereaved parent could speak or take any action in the matter, Jesus said, "Be not afraid." He stopped his expressions of sorrow before they were uttered. God often does that for His people by preventing the happenings of dangers which they do not always know are even threatening. In His full statement Jesus gave the one basic principle upon which consolation and answered prayer depends: "Only believe." That was all that was necessary. But faith, like expressions of sorrow, must be genuine to be effective and comforting.

III. Jesus, the Life-Giver. (V. 41-43.) The first purpose of the Lord's return is to do for His own loved ones what He did for the beloved daughter of Jairus, give them life. He came that we might have life (John 10:10); He died and rose again that we might have life (1 Cor. 15:12, 17-20); He is coming again that we may have life (1 Cor. 15:22, 23).

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

The Father is the Author of all life. It is in Him that we live, move, and have our being. This life has been given to us through our first parents, Adam and Eve. We inherit life by birth, the same type and kind of life. This greatest of all blessings is taken as a matter of fact, and seldom do we stop from the busy rush of life to offer a prayer of thanksgiving to the Father for the continuation and protection of it. This life has been given for a purpose. Few people discover, or at least fulfill, the purpose for which they were created. The real purpose for our existence is not for pleasure or the amount of goods that we can cumulate and bring together, but for the glory and pleasure of the Father (Rev. 4:11). Our work of multiplying, subduing, and having dominion over the earth is but a means to an end: that end is God's glory. That is why we are charged with this memorable statement: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Suffering is the result of sin. It is a part of the curse. Mortal bodies under the condemnation of sin are subject to all the ills known to the Adamic family. The redemption price paid by Christ touches every nook and corner of the curse, but the redemption of the body from all the effects of mortality and the curse awaits a future day (Rom. 8:23). Christianity is not an exemption from sickness and suffering, but it is the way of final deliverance. There is immunity against sickness only in immortality or access to the tree of life. Christ's many aids to the suffering and sick were but a miniature of the kingdom of God. Some day they will be practiced in a greater and unending degree. Name some of the sicknesses inherited through our Adamic nature. Name some of the sicknesses brought on through our own excessive ways of living and thinking.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

The Lord did great things for Israel and no doubt is doing just as much for us if we did but realize it. Israel appreciated it and was glad; many of us pass over it and take things for granted. We are so very dependent on the Father and His Son that almost without thinking "in him we live, and move, and have our being."

Jesus healed the sick and raised the dead. He did much for humanity in a temporal way but a great deal more in a spiritual way in that He gave His life that those who believe on Him in this life may be privileged to enter into life everlasting. Do you believe in Him? Is it not worth thinking about?

—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

God has always instructed His people to aid the fatherless and needy. David sang: "For the needy shall not always be forgotten: the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever. . . . The poor committeth himself unto thee; thou art the helper of the fatherless."—Psa. 9:18; 10:14. God provided for such people in the law: "And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest. And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard: thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger."—Lev. 19:9, 10.

John the Baptist taught: "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise."—Luke 3:11. In His first great sermon Jesus did not command, or even teach, the people to give alms. He referred to almsgiving as a custom well understood and regularly practiced by His listeners. He did teach them how to give their alms in a manner that would be pleasing to God.

The early church taught and practiced the care of widows and unfortunate (Acts 6:1-3; 1 Cor. 16:1-3). Paul wrote to Timothy stating that if any Christian refused to care for those of his own house he denied the faith and was worse than an infidel (1 Tim. 5:3-8). The stricken of China or India receive aid much more freely from Christian United States than from their own non-Christian governments. Christianity always labors to alleviate human suffering.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Life and Health Through Jesus

We all like good food, do we not? When we eat a meal composed of food that is body-building, it becomes a part of us and makes us grow. And good health comes from eating good food and keeping our bodies fit. But is that all? Do our minds have anything to do with the condition of our bodies? Suppose good food is always prepared for us; but we continue to exchange cross words with our brothers or sisters, go about with sour faces, and let our tempers get the best of us: will that good food be able to do its fullest duty for us? Do you see, then, that Jesus has something to do for us in keeping our bodies fit?

Some boys and girls have been heard to say that religion has nothing to do with health, but is that true? Where do we find the strength to overcome temptation to do things that surely will result in harm to our bodies? Whose example will help us in gaining control of sharp tongues and quick tempers? All of you who are interested in athletics pride yourselves in keeping your bodies fit. Do not forget that your minds must also be in proper condition, and such help you can get from no one so well as you can from Jesus.

Special problem: In addition to helping us live the best life today what sort of life is Jesus alone able to give? Learn three or four texts that answer this question.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Bro. George Lichty spoke to an unusually large and attentive audience at the Williams Street Chapel in Pomona, Sunday evening, Feb 12, repeating the subject that he gave in Los Angeles the previous week: "Will Jesus Come in 1933?" Before the sermon the choir sang, "Praise Ye the Father," by Gounod. Pomona is seeing more activity in recent months than it has seen for several years.

The young people's meeting in Los Angeles was quite well attended, and several sermons by various of the young people were enjoyed: "The Kingdom," by Ruth Smead; "Immortalization of the Saints," by Charlotte Rahn; and "The Church as Joint Heirs With Christ," by Anna Hammond. Kenneth MacLeod read the Scripture lesson, Ecclesiastes 12. Bro. Smead gave a short talk as National Berean President in which he emphasized the value of that organization in the lives of the young people. We feel that these talks by the young people have been well worth the effort spent, and that the older people as well as the younger ones have received a great deal of inspiration from them. Each young person present received a bookmark as a token of the occasion.

Bro. Smead and his mother and sister and Bro. Hammond visited Pomona to see the people there again before making final preparations for the return trip to Indiana. During his stay here Bro. Smead has spoken several times and has conducted the Berean class in Los Angeles.

The old saying that California has only two kinds of weather, perfect and unusual, affects our church attendance. During the "perfect" weather everybody wants to go to the resorts; and during the unusual weather, many people become alarmed for fear they will melt from the sun or the rain.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

On Saturday night, Feb. 11, the men's organization, "Knights of Abraham," held its monthly meeting. The main feature of the evening was a debate that proved to be both interesting and instructive.

Wednesday, the 15th, was the occasion of the ladies' class meeting, "The Morning Stars." An interesting talk on Parliamentary Rules, together with some special musical numbers helped to make the evening profitable as well as pleasant.

Several of the younger classes have also been having afternoon or evening gatherings recently, sponsored by their teachers, and it is observed that the classes are really strengthened and developed by these efforts.

The adult class in Berean has been studying the subject of evil, and now is having some special lessons on the resurrection. We appreciate the increased interest shown in these lessons.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

THE BIBLE SPECIAL

The next issue of The Restitution Herald will be a special number devoted to the Bible itself as the veritable Word of God. It's contents will be of immense value to the student of the Scriptures, and of undoubted interest to thoughtful readers in every walk of life.

Among the many helpful features to be found in the forthcoming number will be an address by former President Theodore Roosevelt on "The Bible in American Life." It will be recalled that recently we have published addresses on the Scriptures by ex-Presidents Wilson and Coolidge. In our issue of November 22, 1932, appeared, "The Bible and Progress," by Woodrow Wilson; and January 10 of the present year we published, "Our Nation's Debt to the Old Testament," by Calvin Coolidge. In connection with these addresses it will be of interest to know what the "Rough Rider" President had to say on "The Bible in American Life."

In addition to the above mentioned address, George B. Aldridge brings us an excellent article on "The Holy Scriptures." Our former associate editor, Mary A. Gesin, writes helpfully on "The Sunday School Teacher and the Bible." From the fluent pen of a beloved and talented writer of the Church of God in former years, Elizabeth A. Reed, comes an excerpt from "The Bible Triumphant." "How the Bible Came to Men" will be a selection from the writings of G. W. Rader. From W. J. Ervin of London, England, comes the answer to the question, "Why Do Men Reject the Bible?"

These subjects but suggest some of the valuable and inspiring articles which will appear in the special Bible number of The Herald, out next week. Be sure and get your order in early that your friends may not miss this splendid number. The price is five cents per copy.

THE OUTLOOK

The great work of the National Bible Institution is going on! It is pressing forward! In spite of all opposition, in spite of difficult times, in spite of what seemed to some insurmountable obstacles, the work of the Institution is being maintained and its value and importance are becoming ever more apparent to the Church of God throughout the country.

In recognition of this deserved success brethren have been coming to the support of the effort—their effort—in a splendid way. Together with all other similar organizations we have at times been ground into the dust of despondency. But discouragement has been met with a courage born of faith in God and in the righteousness of our effort; and regardless of material facts that threatened to put an end to our work, we press on!

Now that the clouds are beginning to break away in some quarters, confidence is returning to the hearts of some who were the most despondent. But we may not rest. The Lord is coming! The time is short for service. Our means had far better be invested in an effort to spread the gospel than to be found tied up in some closed bank or placed in some speculative stock that has already or may very soon depreciate to nothing in value before the Lord's return.

The printed page preaches the gospel to thousands, and it lives on, and on, and ON! Once put into circulation, the record survives the changing times through which men pass and lives to bless and comfort and sustain oncoming generations.

A school teacher told us a short time ago how much she wished she had put her money into the Lord's work rather than to save it for herself in a bank that failed! God never fails! The resources of the universe are at His command. He invites you to invest your life, your time, and your money with Him! There and there alone it will be safe. With your treasures laid up in heaven it will make no difference to you what failures come on earth. The faithfulness of the Almighty is your security. That is why we may rest in hope.

The National Bible Institution is in every sense of the word a going concern. It is going forward and upward and onward until the Lord comes to take all things into His own hands. Why not place a little more confidence in God (as many others are now coming to do) by investing still more, not of surplus funds, but of sacrifice funds, in this great work?

We are about to send out another special letter of personal invitation to our readers to assist in furthering the cause of Christ by the printed page and otherwise through the work of the National Bible Institution. Your contribution may reach us before our letter does; if so, we will take it that you have accepted the invitation to sacrifice with us in order that the task assigned to the Church of God may not languish for the lack of support.

A business woman recently sent us a check for twenty dollars, stating that she had noticed how many of our faithful old subscribers had been dropped from our list because we could no longer carry them. She said this money was to be used to reinstate as many as we could. Surely God will bless all such faithful sacrifices that are made in such a cause.

G. E. Marsh, Secretary.

MRS LEILA ESHELMAN MEYER

Mrs. Leila Eshelman Meyer died at her late home at Richmond Beach, Wash., Feb. 13, 1933, aged 53 years.

Leila Eshelman was born in Leadville, Col., Nov. 11, 1879. Her mother died three weeks later, and Leila's early life came under the care of her maternal grandparents and later of an aunt while receiving her education in Chicago. At the age of 16 years she came to Seattle to be with her father, Mr. James F. Eshelman, and other relatives. The impressions of her Christian training resulted in her confession of faith and hope in Christ, and her baptism by Dr. Wm. Chapman, pastor of the Advent Christian Church in Seattle. For many years she was a frequent attendant of this church, and her faith and confidence grew stronger with the passing of the years, and sustained her in her trials and sufferings.

Mrs. Meyer was possessed of an unusually patient, forgiving, and happy disposition; and she had the admirable and delightful faculty of making others happy. The evidence of her artistic temperament was everywhere demonstrated in the charming appointments of her home and garden, in both of which she took great joy and comfort. For some two years Mrs. Meyer's health had been declining, yet the end was unheralded, and came as a severe shock to her loved ones and friends.

She is survived by her beloved husband, Dr. J. M. Meyer, a daughter, Mrs. Aileen Miller of Seattle, and two grandchildren. She also leaves an aunt, Mrs. Geo. W. Young of Seattle, and uncle, Mr. A. D. Eshelman of Burlingame, Calif., many cousins, and hosts of loving friends.

Funeral services were held at the University Undertaking Parlors, and interment was made in Acacia Memorial Park in Seattle. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, pastor of the Advent Christian Church.

Lee E. Baker.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

It is time for us to begin to plan for the next General Conference, which will convene in all probability from August 1 to 13, inclusive. May all pray for its success, and determine at once to be present and assist in the forthcoming gathering.

Bro. and Sr. G. B. Sprinkle, writing from Cheyenne, Wyo., say, "We certainly do enjoy reading The Restitution Herald, and pray that it may continue to visit the many homes as long as time lasts."

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed at an out-of-town bank. Thank you!

The Bible special of next week will contain an article from Sr. Lottie E. Young of Seattle, Wash., on a subject appropriate to that issue. Sr. Young's articles are always read with interest and profit by The Restitution Herald family.

During the past six weeks Sr. Mary A. Gesin has been one of the instructors in the Sunday school teachers' training classes that have been conducted by the several churches of Oregon. Sr. Gesin conducted the class for junior teachers which had to do principally with materials and methods. Reports indicate that, as was to be expected, her work was most satisfactory.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed at an out-of-town bank. Thank you!

It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

One hundred and twenty-one at the Oregon Sunday school last Sunday! The attendance continues to show a splendid average increase over last year of 20 to 25.

After a prolonged absence due to illness, Sr. F. T. Rogers, organist of the Oregon church, was welcomed back to her accustomed place by both choir and congregation last Sunday morning.

The report reaches the office that Bro. Arthur Johnson of Sac City, Iowa, has been filling some of the appointments of Bro. A. M. Jones in that state. The next service will be held near Marathon on March 5. Much definite and fundamental teaching is needed everywhere in these days.

The political situation in Germany should attract the attention of the prophetic student in these days. The prophets throw much light on recent developments in that country, and warn of that to which these things point. Let us all be watchful, for the King comes!

Bro. and Sr. Harold Starbuck of Rockford, Ill., made a short visit at Sr. Starbuck's old home at Casey, Ill., recently. They attended Sunday school at the Restitution Church in that vicinity in the morning. A very good report was given of the school. They then hurried to cover the more than two hundred miles to Oregon to attend the evening service there.

GOD'S WONDERFUL WORLD

A dear little lady who cannot hear a word greatly enjoyed the prayer meeting last week at Golden Rule Home. This service was especially planned for her by Bro. Marsh and dedicated to her. With his reflectoscope he gave an interesting and beautiful series of pictures showing some of the wonders on every hand to which we seem oftentimes almost blind, with appropriate texts accompanying. And Sr. Alice Kerr, whose mind and eyesight are keen, enjoyed a happy evening, as well as the many others in attendance.—M. G.

THE BIBLE IN AMERICAN LIFE

By Theodore Roosevelt

AS all of you know, there are certain truths which are so very true that we call them truisms; and yet I think we often half forget them in practice. Every thinking man, when he thinks, realizes what a very large number of people tend to forget that the teachings of the Bible are so interwoven and entwined with our whole civic and social life that it would be literally—I do not mean figuratively, I mean literally—that it would be impossible for us to figure to ourselves what that life would be if these teachings were removed. We would lose almost all the standards by which we now judge both public and private morals; all the standards toward which we, with more or less of resolution, strive to raise ourselves. Almost every man who has by his life-work added to the sum of human achievement of which the race is proud, of which our people are proud, almost every such man has based his life-work largely upon the teachings of the Bible. Sometimes it has been done unconsciously, more often consciously; and among the very greatest men a disproportionate large number have been diligent and close students of the Bible at first hand.

Lincoln—sad, patient, kindly Lincoln, who, after bearing upon his weary shoulders for four years a greater burden than that borne by any other man of the nineteenth century, laid down his life for the people whom living he had served so well—

The Editor's Prayer

MOST GRACIOUS GOD, Thou who hast inspired holy men of old to reveal to us this wonderful message of grace and blessing, we bow before Thee in humble acknowledgment of Thy goodness. As we approach this sacred volume from day to day, may we ever do so with a clear appreciation of its character, that it is indeed the very Word of Almighty God. Open Thou our eyes, we pray, as we scan its pages that we may behold the wondrous things contained therein. Help us to treasure its truth within our hearts that we may not sin against Thee. Give us understanding minds that its warnings, admonitions, and promises may not be unfruitful in our lives. May we each echo the prayer of Thy servant of old and cry, "O how I love thy law! It is my meditation all the day."

The Word of Life

THE BIBLE is God's Word of Life to His people. The only means by which men can be brought to a saving knowledge of Him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life," is provided by the Scriptures. Through its sacred columns come the gracious words, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

The Bible makes vivid and keen our appreciation of our dependence upon God for "life, and breath, and all things." From it we learn that we cannot live without God; that we do not have life within ourselves; that while "the living know that they shall die, the dead know not anything"; that all activity, all hope, all power perish at death. But it also comes to us with the promise of life—eternal life to those who believe—by a resurrection from the dead when Jesus comes!

The Word of God

THE BIBLE is God's message to His people. It is love-prompted, wisdom-inspired, and grace-filled. It is not the product of human reason, "for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." The word here rendered "moved" means to be borne along as on the current of a stream. The men who revealed God's will through the inspired writings were carried forward in their task by the constant power of Jehovah. They had no message of their own; it was all of God. They were submissive instruments in the divine hand, simply uttering the words placed in their mouths by the Lord, and nothing more.

The Hebrew word for "prophecy" conveys the same thought. In the Old Testament "prophecy" is derived from naba, meaning to "cause to bubble up, hence to pour forth words abundantly, as those who speak with ardor or divine emotion of mind." God so filled the hearts and minds of those holy men of old with divine truth that they became overflowing fountains of inspiration, producing a broad and resistless current emanating from the Source of all wisdom and moving onward through the ages, bearing the waters of life to every land and race.

The Word of Hope

THE BIBLE is God's Word of Hope to His people. "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope." Into a world of depression and death Jehovah has sent this assuring message of good things to come, of better days in prospect for His people and for the world.

In the midst of darkness prevailing on every side comes the revealing glory of God's truth, dispelling the gloom and bringing in the sunshine of hope to those who have eyes to see and ears to hear. "Through the tender mercy of our God . . . the dayspring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." But both of these marvelous revelations of divine grace are recorded for our blessing and comfort in the Bible, God's eternal Word of Hope.

HOW THE BIBLE CAME TO MEN

IT IS obvious from the first three chapters in the Bible that while man retained his innocence and purity God met and communed with him face to face. But after the entrance of sin man could no longer look upon the glory of God and exist. Exodus 33:18-20. So in order not to sever his connection with heaven, God must devise some other means of communication.

GOD SPOKE

Oftentimes the Lord would speak to the patriarchs in dreams as He did to Abraham, Jacob, Joseph, and others. For many years after the sanctuary was erected in the wilderness and the Levitical priesthood established, He communed with Israel by the use of the Urim and the Thummim, two stones which were set in the breastplate of the high priest. But man did not always retain the position of righteousness that God could speak to him in this way. We find in the experience of King Saul that his sin had so separated him from the Lord that He would no longer answer him. 1 Samuel 28:6.

The Lord wanted a definite and substantial way of communicating to the people, one that would be authentic and permanent to stand for a witness. So according to St. Paul in his opening remarks in his letter to the Hebrews God did establish a method of speaking through the prophets. God would find some one to whom He could trust His Spirit and would speak through him to the people. 2 Peter 1:21. The person through whom God would speak would write the vision; it then became a prophecy or sometimes a warning. Man could read the future through the prophets. Thus a substantial method of communication was established between heaven and earth, and God could always speak to man through His written Word.

INSPIRATION OF GOD

The great evangelist in his second letter to Timothy, chapter 3, verse 16, tells us that "all scripture is given by inspiration of God." The word "inspiration" is derived from the two Latin words in and spire. The word in is synonymous with the same word in English and spire means to breathe. Hence, the word "inspiration" means to breathe in. So all Scripture was given by God's breathing into the prophets the message that He would have them bear. And as it was thus communicated to man, he received the Word of God which came by His own breath. In 2 Peter 1:21 the Apostle tells us that "the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." From Psalm 33:6-9 we find that the heavens and the earth were formed by the breath of His mouth. Thus the same being used the same power to establish communication with man that He did in creation. Certainly nothing but omniscience could never-faillingly foretell the future.

Human reason dictates that if a supreme being acts it will be entirely different from the actions of humanity; the words spoken will be of different and supreme character. What are the supernatural things of the Bible? There are many, but we will enumerate but one or two in our limited space.

First, there is not a time prophecy within the Bible that has reached its limitation that has fallen short a day. The Prophet Micah in the fifth chapter and second verse of his book tells us that Jesus was to be born in Bethlehem. And Matthew 2:1 records the event of the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem in the days of Herod the king. Paul, emphasizing the accuracy of the plan of salvation to the Galatians in the fourth chapter and the fourth verse, tells us that He was born at the appointed time.

The second, the Scriptures themselves. The penmen number more than a score. Men of different standing in life, men of different dispositions, and men of different walks have been employed to write. Part of the Bible was written by Amos the herdsman; part of it written by Moses the great philanthropist; part of it by David the great king; part of it by Solomon, wisdom personified; part of it by Daniel the prime minister; part of it by the great intellectual giant Saul of Tarsus who was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, the greatest educator of his day; part of it written by the humble fisherman Peter, and some of it by John the beloved. Men of different degrees in life, men holding different interests in the affairs of life. But notice the different environments under which the Bible was given, the different positions in which the writers were placed. Some of it was written among the vales and hills of the Holy Land; some of it in Jerusalem the city of the great king; part of it in Persia's royal garden; and part of it on the ocean-bound and rock-ribbed coast of the isle of Patmos. Written by all these different men, under so many different circumstances, yet the same sweet harmony pervades it all. Each one points out the same disease, sin; they all point you to the only cure, the blood of Christ.

Beautiful Bible

By G. E. Marsh

Beautiful words on every page,
Beautiful thoughts from every age;
Beautiful pictures here and there,
Beautiful lessons everywhere.

Beautiful precepts from above,
Beautiful language, "God is love!"
Beauty and truth where'er we look—
Beautiful, best, most sacred Book!

THE BOOK THAT ENDURES

The Bible is the only book that has stood the test of the ages. No other work has stood so long without changing much of its sub- (over) ject matter. Books on science, history, and even philosophy are continually changing. An author may give us the best that he can produce, he may draw on his mental faculties to their limit, he may search and re-search the pages of others to find cooperation, then place before the public that which is considered a masterpiece. But in the course of a few years, if he wants to keep his work before the people, he must revise it, reform it, sometimes leaving out whole pages, other times inserting pages. But the Bible has never been changed, nor has it ever needed revision except in translation. It stands just the same today as it did two thousand years ago. It sounds the same note of warning against sin, it tells of the same eternal home and the same plan to obtain it. The plan has never been changed nor its purpose revised.

Peter, in his second general epistle, chapter 1 and verses 16 to 19, while speaking of our two senses sight and hearing adds, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy." He then admonishes us to take heed as unto a light that shines in a dark place. The darkest thing known to humanity is the future. What is prophecy? Pre-written history. So in our hands is placed the prophecy of God, breathed into humanity by His own breath which illuminates the dark and dismal future.

God has shown His great care for His Word. Hundreds of years ago during the time of the Ptolemys they were trying to produce a library containing a copy of every book in the world. When after about forty-seven years of collection the librarian reported that they did not have a copy of the Jews' Scripture, it was decided to obtain it. After finding it to be written in Hebrew, seventy learned Jews were employed to translate it into Greek, the modern language of that day. This Septuagint translation, says Funk and Wagnalls' encyclopaedia, was used by Christ and the apostles.

Years afterward, when all the Bibles obtainable were destroyed, this old translation was found; and from it our King James or Authorized Version was translated.

Instead of the Bible growing old, passing out of date and becoming extinct, it is becoming more popular continually; and according to the latest authentic reports there are far more Bibles printed and distributed today than ever before. Though many times it has been exploded by unbelievers, it still bears its same comforting message and stands as the Word of God. Today as in all ages past the Bible stands preeminent, and as one writer has said: "There is no substitute for the Bible as an infallible guide to the nation and the individual. There are books and books, but the Bible is The Book; the only safe and sure 'guide to our feet and the light to our pathway.' A careful reading of the Bible and practicing of its precepts, together with a wise application of the principles therein given, will unerringly point the way to the proper solution of all the troubles of a disturbed world."—G. W. Rader in The Canadian Watchman.

There are approximately 30,000,000 Bibles sold throughout the world annually.

THE BIBLE

By T. A. Drinkard

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable."—2 Timothy 3:16.

I REALIZE that this is one of the greatest subjects, if subject it be, which I could possibly select. For some time I have contemplated presenting a few thoughts thereon. You may not agree with me in my position, affirming its divine origin throughout.

The only way that I can face the unbelieving world with it is to affirm that it is the Word of God. Do you realize what it means to affirm this? Can you realize what it means to deny it? To me it is the height of human folly to criticise or exclude any part therefrom simply because it does not suit our line of thought.

Let me refer to a personal experience in life. While conducting a series of meetings in a certain state, a young man who thought he was firmly established as an infidel and skeptic offered two passages of scripture such as Matthew 2:19 and Matthew 14:3-12 that he believed conflicted. There is no contradiction at all.

Again, a very faithful defender of Mr. Russell's views contended that Mark 16:9-20 was spurious because authorities said it was untrue, although the real reason was that it did not suit their purpose. And there were those who declared that certain passages and chapters were spurious just for the reason they did not teach the human paternity of Jesus Christ.

So it goes! And when we go before the world, is it to affirm that the Bible is the Word of God or do we make reservations? Shall we in affirming that the Bible is the Word of God at the same time affirm that it is verbally inspired? How can we affirm it to be the Word of God and deny verbal inspiration? Can it be done? How? If it be the Word of God, is it not inspired? If inspired, are there any errors therein?

Possibly I may not measure up to what God's standard demands, but I have a deep reverence for the Bible without any additions or subtractions. You have no grounds to fight or oppose the skeptic for his opposition to Bible teaching if you practice the same principle of taking out whatever does not suit your views.

The cry, "Back to the Bible!" should be our guiding star. I have found no contradiction. I have found things which I did not and do not understand, but the trouble is with me—not with the Bible.

The skeptic asks, Is the Bible inspired of God? Can you deny it? Dare you? On your answer depends much. We may talk about what authorities say; and when we study some of their sayings, they are as fickle as the day dreams. When we consult these authors on a given subject and they disagree, which one shall we accept? Yes, "Back to the Bible" with full confidence and trust, abiding by its inspired teachings of divine truth.

I AM A BIBLE

By Arlen Marsh

I AM A BIBLE. For almost a year I have lain here on this shelf, unused and forgotten. Dust covers my Morocco binding, begrimes my pages, and desecrates my perfection.

A year and three months ago I was purchased. My owners have their names in a church book, and they felt that they must have a Bible to keep up appearances. As if God ever cares about keeping up appearances! But they bought me for that avowed purpose. And then they promptly forgot me.

My history is a proud one to be humbled in so peremptory a fashion. I antedate the civilization of ancient Egypt. I antedate the flood. I even antedate creation. For I existed in the beginning in the mind of God. It has been man's privilege to write me at the dictation of my Author. It is man's privilege to read me now, but he does not avail himself of it.

I am one of two hundred books in my owner's little library. Ivanhoe, The Encyclopaedia Britannica, Why We Behave Like Human Beings, Grand Hotel are out in front. But I, who am the most important, lie dormant in my dusty cranny, hidden behind a set of the World's Best Short Stories.

All these would not exist had it not been for me. The art of printing was unknown to Europe until it was desired to place copies of me in the hands of all men. I understand that even now the Bible is the "best seller" of all time. Yet I wonder how many Bibles do their bit and how many are like me. My experience has made me pessimistic.

What's this? Ah, yes! The minister is to call, and I am being drawn from my confinement to find a resting place on the library table. After he has gone, I presume, I shall be sent back here once more. Alas! If only those who own me would take to heart the many denunciations of hypocrisy I contain!

Laws of the nation forbid the placing of anything but a Bible on the flag of the United States and say nothing shall be put upon the Book. Yet, see: I am set in the center of the table; a magazine and then a paper are piled over me. Their flag they will not desecrate; but I am only a Bible, made by God for the benefit of such as these, who, even as I say, love pleasure more than Him.

Gone are the days when men refuse to step upon stray scraps of paper in the fear that they conceal the name of God. Now they will not grant me, who hold in my possession His name a thousand times and more, who was written at His direct command, who represent Him, the courtesy and respect which are my due. Truly is this world awry. Truly is it without sign of balance. But then, I have a Bible's lot; and I should not complain.

I TOO, AM A BIBLE. My cover is torn, covered with the prints of sticky, dirty fingers. My pages, once of pristine whiteness, resemble the hands of a mechanic. My ribbon is in shreds; my back is broken from the effects of long, hard use; and my India paper is as tattered as though improperly deckle-edged.

Although superficial appearances would indicate a hardness of fate almost unparalleled, nevertheless my destiny has been fulfilled. For a Bible's purpose is to teach, and that I have done all my life.

I was sent as a gift to the one who owns me. He was a boy at the time—six years ago. I accompanied him to Sunday school and to young people's meeting all weeks but the ones he had diphtheria. Dust never had a chance to settle on me—I have been moved about too rapidly for that.

But I was not one to be negligently cast aside upon return from church. Quite the contrary. Often my owner has read me far into the night to establish to his own satisfaction the truth or error of something his teachers or his pastor had told him. In several instances, his study has enabled him to correct mistaken impressions others have held about what I teach.

My position is one of honor. He who owns me does not believe in keeping me hid so that none can see he has me. He is not ashamed to be seen carrying me on the street. In fact, he seems to be proud of the opportunity—the privilege, he says—of doing so. He makes no effort to conceal me beneath his coat, but rather carries me openly.

At home, I occupy a place on the desk. My owner needs me too frequently to want to have to go to a bookcase every time he wishes to read my teachings. And besides, he often refers to me when visitors come. Many a time he has proved his point with me when he disagreed with the uneducated opinions of some of those who have been here.

Whenever he goes traveling (and he does so at brief intervals), he takes me with him. The suitcase I was in was jarred off the rack of the coach in which we rode once, and the shock broke my back. And there are spots of ink on me from times he has been studying. But why should these things make any difference? I am doing my duty still.

Yes, I am fulfilling my destiny. Unlike many Bibles, who fall into careless and uninterested hands, I am able to teach one who owns me about the things God wants him to know. But he has to be willing to use me properly, or I should be like the other Books—a failure. Through him who studies me, I have succeeded in reaching many, indeed have claimed some for Jehovah. Undeniably a Bible's lot can be a happy one.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

By George B. Alldridge

“O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day.”—Psalm 119:97.

THE mind of every student of history should be actuated with a desire to imitate and conform his life to the noble example of godly characters with which the pages of history, both sacred and profane, teem.

James exhorts us to do this. You recall the well-known verse: “Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience.”—James 5:10.

We are all familiar with the biographies of many of the noble men and women who devoted their lives as missionaries in opening up that benighted land once called “Darkest Africa.” To my mind one of the greatest and noblest was Dr. David Livingstone whose body lies at rest in Westminster Abbey. What was the secret of his devotion and ministry on behalf of the black man? I answer, his marvelous knowledge of the Scriptures. When only a boy manipulating the intricacies of a cotton-weaving machine, with the Bible open before him he memorized the whole of the one hundred nineteenth Psalm! How did this godly man die? He died upon his knees while in prayer! How his whole life is summed up in these words: “Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.”—Psalm 119:105.

I often wonder, too, if the inspiration of Paul’s words to Timothy did not have something to do with Livingstone’s life. I will quote it. The very writing of it is music and inspiration to my soul. “And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.”—2 Timothy 3:15-17.

I am thinking of Voltaire and his prophecy that one hundred years following his demise a copy of the Scriptures could not be found except in a museum. Today the building in which he uttered this prophecy is being used constantly for the distribution of the Scriptures he so much despised and which has a larger circulation than any other book.

Let me quote again: “Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day, his thoughts perish. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God; which made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is: which keepeth truth for ever.” Wonderful words!

To comment would mar the beauty and truth of these words.

I often chuckle to myself as I read the sobriquets attached to men. Every schoolboy has heard of William the Conqueror. At the mention of his name instantly the mind recalls Hastings and King Harold. How few recall the scene in St. Stephen’s church, Caen in Normandy, at his burial! Before he could be buried, sixty shillings were first paid for the grave. The grave proved too small, so they tried to force the casket in. It broke; a dreadful smell arose; the people hurried out into the air; and he was left alone, stench and all.

I mention this to prove to you how true God’s Word is: “Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return”; “God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth.” Only one among earth’s billions lying in death never saw corruption, and His name is Jesus! Listen: “Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.”—Acts 2:27.

If people would only read and study their Bibles, they would soon discover its authenticity and that actually the voice of God is speaking from its blessed pages. It speaks of three places, viz., heaven, earth, and hell. The record is, “The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord’s: but the earth hath he given to the children of men.”—Psalm 115:16.

Where is hell? Not where Dante in his Divine Comedy says it is; neither is it as Milton in his Paradise Lost proclaims it to be; neither can it be found nor located in any place where the various catechisms of Christendom would lead us to suppose; but it is to be found just where the Bible teaches it is and nowhere else.

I will quote from a book some people say is a beautiful allegory, Jonah. Now, since Jesus quoted from this book and said that it was a sign of the three days He was to spend in hell, I think we are on safe ground. It says, “I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice.” Note that after “hell” is a marginal note, and what does that say? It says, “or, the grave.”

David was a very wise man, so knowing what would happen to his soul in hell after his death wrote about his belief concerning it while he was living. So listen to it and become wise: “For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?”—Psalm 6:5.

David, being a skilful writer and also an able speaker, often gives us the same thought expressed in various styles.

So in another Psalm he says, "What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?" Anybody who has looked into the open grave cannot find a better word than "pit" for it.

I have heard evangelists warn sinners that if they did not accept their views of the gospel they would be cast into the "bottomless pit." Well, the Scriptures will not support this view. In Revelation there are seven references to this particular pit, and I find no sinners there.

The Bible teaches that at death the soul, that is, the whole being except breath or the spirit of life, goes to hell. Please read Joshua 11:11. A scripture often quoted to prove that men live after death is Ecclesiastes 12:6, 7. Well, if you believe it is your spirit which remains conscious and returns to God, then for companions you will have the classes described in Revelation 22:15. This is reprehensible, and everyone who believes it insults God to His face. God is the fountain of all life.

How plain God's Word makes it if you will but read and consider it! Listen to this: "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Psalm 104:29. To prove that it is life which is expressed by the word "spirit," I quote the next verse: "Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created; and thou renewest the face of the earth."

The question may be asked, Why read the Scriptures? To make me religious? No; millions are in the world today who are very religious and yet never open the Bible. To make me a better man or woman? By reading the Scriptures daily, if your life puts in practice its precepts, it will surely make you a better man or woman. But the primary reason for scriptural reading is "to make you wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

Is there any source of information whereby you can obtain the knowledge to answer Job's question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" I only know of one source, and Jesus Himself gives us the answer: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life."—John 5:39, 40.

Sooner or later you and I will be placed in the same condition as William the Conqueror. Then who will release us from the thralldom of death? Only one has been granted this power. Jesus said Himself: "For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself."

Hence, then, we should value the Scriptures and "read, mark, and inwardly digest them," thanking God for raising up able men to instruct us as to the way by which we may obtain everlasting life.

THE Church of God has nothing to fear from infidelity, atheism, or evolutionary teaching. Faithlessness and hypocrisy of Christians—these it is that help to make the cross of Christ foolishness to the world.—James A. Patrick in The Cross of Christ, July 12, 1929.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT

By Mrs. H. V. Reed

The talented author of the following brief article was one of the most profound scholars of the past half century. She was the author of many learned works on the religions and literature of India and Persia, and was an able defender of the inspiration of God's Word.

TO THOSE who are willing to investigate the claims of the Bible we desire to suggest the most tempting field of research that was ever presented to the mind of the student. We refer to the study of prophecy in connection with the record of the historian. This is a theme which can never become uninteresting; for the prophecies of the Old Testament point to the infallibility of God's Word with mathematical precision: they present the evidences of revelation so clearly that infidelity stands appalled before the rich development of truth.

The mighty walls of ancient kingdoms and the magnificent temples of antiquity are the monuments of God's eternal truth. One hundred sixty years before an enemy's foot ever entered Babylon the complete desolation of that Lady of Kingdoms was foretold by the inspired penman. At the time when she was the "glory of the Chaldees' excellency," when her mighty walls and brazen gates bade defiance to the united armies of the earth, even then the eye of the prophet looked down through the long aisles of the ages and in the clear light of inspiration read even the name of the man before whose mandates her glory should fade. So accurate are these predictions that the testimony of those who witnessed the desolate scene in after centuries appears like a repetition of the words of the prophet.

Read the eloquent description of the overthrow of Babylon as found in the language of Isaiah or the mournful wail of Jeremiah; then turn to the classic pages of Xenophon and Herodotus, and they will be found to be but the echoes.

In reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, the testimony of Josephus is a mere commentary on the predictions recorded in Leviticus and Deuteronomy. Read the prophecies concerning Samaria, Ammon, Moab, Idumea, Tyre, and Egypt. They are clothed in the glowing eloquence of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Amos, and Micah. The burning words of ancient truth still gleam upon the sacred page, and the testimony of hundreds of modern travelers confirm their perfect accuracy.

The pages of the standard works in all our libraries record the literal fulfillment of these prophecies which were traced upon the sacred scroll in the distant ages of antiquity. Strabo and Rollin are witnesses for God. Even Gibbon, the highly gifted but infidel historian, unconsciously testifies in every volume to the truth of divine revelation. And Voltaire, in the account of his extensive travels, is also an unwilling witness to the veracity of the sacred writers. But we can only suggest this fascinating theme to the student, with the earnest desire that he will give it that attention which it so richly deserves.

WHY DO MEN REJECT THE BIBLE?

By W. J. Irvine, London, England

OF MANY admirable addresses I have heard on the subject of "Higher Criticism and the Bible," I do not remember one which attempted to give reasons for the tendency of the human mind to reject divine revelation.

That such a tendency exists and has existed in every age, the Bible itself declares. Human documents, such as acts of Parliament, both ancient and modern, have from time to time furnished great lawyers matter for dissension; but this usually arose from want of clearness of language in expressing the objects or intention of the legislating body. The language used lacked lucidity. But no moral or mental barrier stood in the way of an honest interpretation and elucidation of the difficulty. I submit that the attitude of the natural man toward the Holy Scriptures of Truth is altogether different. It is not the language used, but the subject matter contained in it, that raises the difficulty and rouses opposition.

RECEIVING AND UNDERSTANDING

ONE might ask at this point if the revelation of God contains matter beyond the power of man to receive. I do not say to understand; for surely the Infinite, who created all things, must, in revealing Himself to His finite creatures, expose purposes, power, and methods far beyond the comprehension of the greatest intellects. But power to receive does not involve nor imply full understanding, as might be illustrated by natural forces which baffle man's highest skill to grasp and explain. Yet he receives the fact of them and harnesses them to and for his use in spite of their mysteries.

I am of the belief that that portion of divine revelation which deals with what we term natural things can be received and partially understood by man, even in his fallen state. Indeed, the Mosaic account of creation puts less strain upon faith and intellect than do many theories advanced by so-called scientists. Therefore, that being so, we must look for some other reason than what lies in the intellectual sphere for the explanation of the tendency to reject the record of Genesis.

In pursuance of this inquiry we gain help from a reference to Romans 1:19-21: "Because that which may be known of God is manifest in (or to) them; for God hath shewed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened."

Here we have the plain statement that something of God and His character as Creator was within the comprehension of man by the evidences afforded in the "clearly seen" things, such as the sun, moon, and stars; that day and night showed His knowledge.

But man did not follow the light he had. An element other than mental inability intervened. It was spiritual and moral in its nature. Thanklessness and vanity of mind led to a darkened heart, and a supposed possession of wisdom made them fools. Their downgrades brought them to the immoral and shameless conditions described in our chapter. As the testimony of creation was rejected because of vain thinking on man's part, so the revelation contained in the Holy Scriptures is refused by men whose attitude toward God is unfriendly. Their estimation of their own unaided wisdom is a false one.

It must not be forgotten that the fall has left man at enmity with God. It predisposes him to resent anything which injures his pride or proves to him his helpless dependency. Further, it incapacitates his pristine faculties; and, with the indulgence of conceit and rebellion, a judicial blindness falls upon him which is a punishment for rejecting light. Though "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him," I believe the preparation for that power to receive the spiritual lies in the meek acceptance of that portion of revelation which belongs to the natural.

As a lad I never had the least difficulty in receiving Genesis as a proper account of God's creation. I had not sufficient pride of intellect to reject it. And so it is with thousands and millions. And it is something foreign that comes in that makes them reject it.

As an unconverted person you can receive the account of the first chapter of Genesis. I believe the preparation for the power to receive the spiritual lies in the application of that power which we have of receiving the natural. "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God."—Hebrews 11:3. What hinders any man from obtaining that knowledge? Only mental pride. On what other principle could it be proved? No man saw it done. It is its own demonstration. Proud intellect is up against a barrier over which faith alone can lift it. Pride outrages logic and risks damnation rather than surrender. This brings us to consider the solemn words of Christ which may have a wider application and a deeper meaning than we have been wont to perceive:

"Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?"—John 5:45-47.

Does this mean anything less than that man's attitude toward the five books of Moses determines his attitude toward Christ? Unregenerate men who had not the knowledge of God were openly condemned for not having believed Moses, whose writings contained so much of what they could not believe without the new birth. It is analagous to the word spoken by Christ to Nicodemus: "If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you heavenly things?"

It is a logical deduction that the acceptance of the divine record containing earthly and typical things is a step toward receiving the power to become the sons of God by faith in Christ. It is equally logical that pride of heart leaves a man without the power to exercise faith in the larger spiritual revelation which has Christ for its center. In view of this, the evolutionist to whom the Scriptures are known stands on a spot where the rumblings of wrath might be heard were he not so deaf.

With these thoughts before us, what can be said of the man who declares that he is incapable of believing the Bible? We must think that his incapacity to receive the New Testament is the result of offering insult to the Old which he could believe. His impotence comes from the indulgence of ideas which are not indulged by all others of his fellow creatures and in the nature of things need not compel his subjection. "God be merciful to me a sinner," was called forth from a man whose vices were appalling; but his conceits and vanities were gone.

I feel quite sure that the Lord who said: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine," never hid Himself from anyone but those who did not want Him.

Golgotha was the place of the skull, and thither we thankfully go when we are assured that His thoughts and His ways are not like ours. Better the empty skull and the new birth, better the honest confession that our thoughts are vain, but that Christ is the wisdom of God made over to us.

There is a plane of thought above the head and heart of the critics, a plane on resurrection ground. There the perfections of Christ and the perfections of the Word which proclaim Him fill the vision and satisfy the heart.

SPECKS IN THE PORRIDGE

THE critic is comparable to a sickly child who sits looking for specks in its porridge instead of eating it. He may be compared to the leper whose bald forehead proclaims him utterly unclean and condemned to a place outside the camp.

There are things hidden from all but priestly eyes. In handling the sacred vessels of the tabernacle, the Kohathites were to content themselves with bearing the covered holy things. Prying into the secret covered things of God would have meant death to them. "Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden: but they shall not go in to see when the holy things are covered, lest they die."—Numbers 4:19, 20.

It is well to remember that at a critical moment in the testimony of our Lord, when beset by critics, He uttered the words:

"I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight. . . . No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." The knowledge of God is not the heritage of intellect nor of learning, but a revelation to babes. There is a sphere where only Spirit-born eyes can see—a spiritual sphere. But that was not first which was spiritual, but that which was natural.

I declare it to be my belief that any natural man may honestly and sincerely receive the Mosaic account of creation, may receive the facts historically and otherwise recorded in the Old Testament Scriptures, and that the man who does not and will not receive it is never likely to receive spiritual vision and is likely to go down to the grave as a proud, obstinate sinner who knew better than his God.—Moody Bible Monthly.

SAFE ANCHORAGE

---

DID you ever hear people say the Bible was a dull book which they could not understand? Preachers often see nodding heads in their congregations as they expound the Word of God! Even tried and true Christians have been known to go to sleep while reading it; and yet there are many, many incidents described in it which give "thrills" as genuine as any experienced by the "best seller" of nowadays. How vividly the cleansing of Naaman, the leper, is told in 2 Kings 5; while the story of the safe-keeping of the boy Joash and his being brought forth years later as the king of Judah shows how God did not allow the royal line of David to be broken in spite of a wickedly ambitious woman. Gideon with his little band won a great victory, through God, over the thousands of Midianites; and the adventures of David from his slaying of the giant Goliath as a boy all through the rest of his life should be the most interesting of reading for young and old.

Perhaps the most dramatic chapter in the New Testament is Acts 27, which begins, "And when it was determined that we should sail into Italy," and closes with the words, "And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land." If we did not know that the writer, Luke, was a physician, we should think he was a man who thoroughly understood ships and shipping, as he so intimately tells of that stormy voyage which finally landed Paul in Italy and carried out God's promise to him that he should stand before Caesar.

Let us take a look at this ship, which was carrying a cargo of wheat, as well as Paul "and certain other prisoners," to Italy. The centurion, Julius, in charge of them unfortunately thought "when the south wind blew softly" that they could brave the open Mediterranean and reach a safe harbor. Even though we are accustomed to think of vessels nowadays as huge affairs, this boat could not have been very small, as we read there were two hundred seventy-six persons on board; but the tempestuous wind encountered was too strong for the boat, so it was driven out of its course. The storm continued for days; and as neither sun nor stars shone to guide the sailors (this was long before the invention of the compass), "all hope that we should be saved was now taken away." (over)

In this time of extreme danger do you not suppose Paul was constantly praying God to save them? One night he had an angelic visitor, who told him his request would be granted and all on board would be saved. Now he assumed authority, giving directions as to what should be done, and was obeyed. Soundings showed that they were in shallow water; so four anchors were cast into the sea which gripped solid earth, holding the boat steady, and then all "wished for the day."

Cannot we apply this stirring scene to the world of today? We are all journeying and surely are in the midst of stormy times. We have been warned not to do some things or evil would come; but we generally prefer to do as we please and are often tossed on the waves of doubt as to God's purpose in our lives. In the darkness can we hear the Father's voice, and are we telling others how they, too, can be saved from destruction; or are we thinking happiness can be bought with money and are not trusting God's unfathomable grace? Let us note how Paul stood out in the midst of heathen and declared his faith in the one God.

THE BIBLE IN AMERICAN LIFE

built up his entire reading upon his early study of the Bible. He had mastered it absolutely; mastered it as later he mastered only one or two other books.

In this country we rightly pride ourselves upon our system of widespread popular education. We most emphatically do right to pride ourselves upon it. It is not merely of inestimable advantage to us, it lies at the root of our power of self-government. But it is not sufficient in itself. We must cultivate the mind. With education of the mind must go the spiritual teaching which will make us turn the trained intellect to good account. A man whose intellect has been educated, while at the same time his moral education has been neglected, is only the more dangerous to the community because of the exceptional additional power which he has acquired.

Surely what I am saying needs no proof; surely the mere statement of it is enough, that education must be education of the heart and conscience no less than of the mind. You may look through the Bible from cover to cover, and nowhere will you find a line that can be construed into an apology for the man of brains who sins against the light. On the contrary, in the Bible, taking that as a guide, you will find that because much has been given to you much will be expected from you; and a heavier condemnation is to be visited upon the able man who goes wrong than upon his weaker brother who cannot do the harm that the other does, because it is not in him to do it.

So I plead, not merely for training of the mind, but for the moral and spiritual training of the home and the church; the moral and spiritual training that have always been found in, and that have ever accompanied the study of, this book; this book, which in almost every civilized tongue can be described as "The Book," with the certainty of all understanding you when you so describe it.

One of the highest tributes of modern times to the worth of the Bible as an educational and moral influence of incalculable value to the whole community came from the great scientist Huxley, who said: "Consider the great historical fact that for three centuries this book has been woven into the life of all that is noblest and best in our history, and that it has become the national epic of our race; that it is written in the noblest and purest English, and abounds in exquisite beauties of mere literary form; and finally, that it forbids the veriest hind, who never left his village, to be ignorant of the existence of other countries and other civilizations and of a great past, stretching back to the furthest limits of the oldest nations.

"By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized and made to feel that each figure in that vast historical procession fills, like themselves, but a momentary space in the interval between the eternities?"

"The Bible has been the Magna Charta of the poor and of the oppressed. Down to modern times, no state had had a constitution in which the interests of the people are so largely taken into account; in which the duties, so much more than the privileges, of rulers are insisted upon, as that drawn up for Israel in Deuteronomy and Leviticus. Nowhere is the fundamental truth that the welfare of the state, in the long run, depends upon the righteousness of the citizen, so strongly laid down."

The immense moral influence of the Bible, though of course infinitely the most important, is not the only power it has for good. In addition there is the unceasing influence it exerts on the side of good taste, of good literature, of proper sense of proportion, of simple and straightforward writing and thinking. This is not a small matter in an age when there is a tendency to read much that, even if not actually harmful on moral grounds, is yet injurious because it represents slipshod, slovenly thought and work; not the kind of serious thought, of serious expression, which we like to see in anything that goes into the fiber of our character.

The Bible does not teach us to shirk difficulties, but to overcome them. That is a lesson that each one of us who has children is bound in honor to teach these children if he or she expects to see them become fitted to play the part of men and women in our world.

If we read the Bible aright, we read a book which teaches us to go forth and do the work of the Lord; to do the work of the Lord in the world as we find it; to try to make things better in this world, even if only a little better, because we have lived in it. That kind of work can be done only by the man who is neither a weakling nor a coward; by the man who in the fullest sense of the word is a true Christian, like Great Heart, Bunyan's hero. We plead for a closer and wider and deeper study of the Bible, so that our people may be in fact as well as in theory "doers of the word and not hearers only."

FIRST STATE BEREAN SOCIETY

THE following, copied from the diary of the editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD, appearing under the date of Sunday, August 14, 1898, will be of interest to Bereans everywhere, as it records the circumstances under which the first state Berean society was organized and how the name came to be adopted. The incidents given occurred on the camp ground at Marshalltown, Iowa, on the final day of the annual state conference of the Church of God.

"After the evening meeting the young people of the Church of God of the Faith of Abraham organized a union. The originator of the plan, Miss Hester Cummings" (now Mrs. Berry of Gladbrook, Iowa), "was elected state president; Oscar J. Marsh, vice president; and Miss Pauline Eychaner" (now the wife of Dr. J. M. Prime of Omaha), "treasurer." (The name of the young lady chosen for secretary is not given.)

"At the request of Mrs. C. C. Ramsey" (of Philadelphia, Pa., who was present at the conference with her husband, the latter a dearly loved old minister of the church), "I made a motion to name the union 'The Bereans.' It was finally named 'The Bereans of the Church of God.' It was after half past ten before this last meeting (of the annual conference) was brought to a close."

That will point to the pathway of life,
That you may continue steadfastly
Through happiness, sorrow, and strife?

Are you searching the Scriptures, Bereans,
With your hearts overflowing with love?

Are you trying to practice its teachings
For the sake of your Savior above?

Do you seek for its life-giving treasures,
As though you were delving for gold?
Do you praise its great Author in heaven,
For each glittering gem you behold?

Are you searching the Scriptures, Bereans,
With a heart that is longing for truth?

Are you willing and glad to receive it,
While still you continue in youth?

May Jesus, the Savior, be with you,
And teach you the truth day by day;

May He open your hearts to receive it,
For His sake, I earnestly pray.

—G. Eldred Marsh in Present Truth, July, 1900.

Though thirty-three years have passed since its first appearance, the foregoing rhymed and rhythmic advice is still so apropos that all Bereans should read and remember it. An interesting fact about this admirable poem is that it was the first of the author's to be published.

THE MEETING AT THE SEASHORE

"SAMUEL, Mother says we may go," called Esther gaily to her brother, who was out in the little olive grove with Father.

"Fine! I'll run over and ask Uncle James and Aunt Martha how soon they'll be going," answered Samuel.

"And I'll pack a lunch for you," teasingly responded Esther, "for you always get hungry, you know."

Spring was in the air, and a day along the seashore held a special charm for these two.

"How I wish Mother would go, too," sighed the boy, as hand in hand with Esther he skipped along the path ahead of their beloved uncle and aunt.

"You know she's too busy with the housework and the little ones," sympathetically responded the wise little Esther. "But it would do her much good."

"Why are all those people running toward the seashore?" queried Aunt Martha. For here and there on all sides they could see little groups of old and young and even little ones hastening along as though afraid of missing something.

"See the boat setting sail," Uncle James pointed out, "they seem to be watching it closely."

As they drew near to one group, they heard the women speak of Jesus, the great Teacher, and how anxious they were to hear more of Him.

"Oh," said Samuel, "let us follow them, and perhaps we may hear Him speak when He comes to shore, Uncle James."

"Very well, my boy." And the four joined the hurrying crowds, following along the shore and keeping the boat with its precious passenger in sight.

Jesus and His disciples, weary with long hours of preaching and healing, had hoped to anchor and find a restful spot where they could be alone for awhile. But ere they landed, many hundreds were waiting for them, with more coming in the distance.

Jesus, the Healer and Teacher, thought not for a moment of His own feelings, and having a great love and longing in His heart for these who seemed as sheep without a shepherd, began to speak to them of His Father's kingdom, of the time when all would be forgiven of their sins and healed of their sicknesses.

"I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the sheep."

With many such words of love and wisdom the kind and gentle Savior spoke to the listening people, until the sun began to sink behind the hills of Galilee. While He was resting for a few brief moments, the disciples came up, reminding Him that daylight was fading, that soon it would be dark, and the people were without food.

The Savior could not bear to send them away to their homes, hungry and weary, for His heart was filled with love for them. Had He not said He was the good Shepherd, and would a shepherd do thus with his sheep?

"Give ye them to eat," He instructed His disciples, who immediately asked if they should go to the village and buy bread for all that vast number. But the Savior told them to see if they could find anything to eat among the people.

The lad, Samuel, had been standing nearby listening to the Master, his forgotten lunch basket on his arm. Eagerly he proffered his tiny lunch, thinking perhaps others would do the same. To his wondering gaze he saw the disciples seat the people in groups upon the green grass.

Then Jesus, lifting His eyes to heaven, asked God's blessing upon Samuel's tiny lunch; and breaking the little loaves, He passed them to the disciples, and the disciples to the people.

"And they did all eat, and were filled," five thousand people, all from Samuel's tiny lunch. How glad he was he had not eaten it himself.

Walking home in the soft twilight, Uncle James, Aunt Martha, Esther, and Samuel were unusually quiet. When they had almost reached their own doorway, Samuel recalled the words of Jesus as He said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"I'm going to tell Mother that," said the thoughtful boy.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Copy the words across the top of the page; then write, "Lesson 11, The Meeting at the Seashore." Next find a picture of a young boy, if you can, and cut out of brown paper a small basket and paste it on his arm. Now draw the five loaves and two fishes. Remember, the loaves were something like our rolls, only about half an inch thick. Then draw twelve baskets and under them write, "Nothing was wasted"; underneath, Luke 9:43, first sentence.

LESSON 11. — March 12, 1933

JESUS MINISTERING TO THE MULTITUDE

Mark 6:1-56

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 35:1, 2, 5-10

GOLDEN TEXT

The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matthew 20:28.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus Ministering to the Multitude.

Aim: To lead the pupil to appreciate Jesus' interest in all our needs, both material and spiritual, and to believe in His ability to supply them.

Basic Truth: "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."—Phil. 4:19.

I. Jesus Provides Rest. (V. 30-32.) Our Lord never fails to realize our weariness and our pain. It is impossible for Him to do so. It is a part of His nature to bear our "pain" as well as our "sin." (Cf. "Study of the Text," v. 34.) When His newly created apostles returned from the first missionary journey, He realized how tired they were and called them secretly to a place where they could enjoy peace and rest. As they needed both physical and spiritual refreshing, He provided an opportunity for both. He led them into the desert, and in the seclusion afforded there they could recover their strength of body while He brought inspiration to their hearts by revealing more of God's truth to them.

II. Jesus Feels Our Suffering. (V. 33, 34.) When the people recognized Jesus, they followed Him on foot around the borders of the lake in order that they might obtain relief from their sufferings. They had no one else to whom they could go. The priests, who should have instructed and comforted them, despised the common people and had nothing to give them had they been otherwise inclined. But Jesus, when He saw them, "was moved"—agitated—by their leaderless condition and had compassion on them. Jesus is always moved with the distresses of those who need His aid.

III. Jesus Supplies Our Need. (V. 35-44.) When He observed the needs of the people, the Master first took into consideration the means which the disciples could supply by their own power. What they could not provide, He gave to them by a wonderful miracle. Perhaps twice five thousand were fed on that occasion. No matter how great the task, how enormous the demand made upon those who serve Him, when they have exerted themselves to the utmost, whatever is lacking will be divinely supplied. To gain this result, however, we must give all we have and trust God fully for the rest.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Jesus was a real Friend. He was a Friend that "sticketh closer than a brother." He befriended the people in the hour of need. There were no preferences, for He was not a respecter of persons. He did not content Himself with mere comfort, but He endeavored to remove the cause of the sorrow. He was always touched by the feelings of their infirmities. He loved them with a living love. He helped them with real help. Real Christianity seeks to emulate and to practice these real and true ideals of helpful friendship. A real Christian will do good unto all people.

Christ had a compassionate heart, a heart of love. On many occasions He was moved to tears as He beheld the helplessness of the people. They were as sheep without a shepherd. This "shepherdless" condition moved the Master to compassion, and He taught them the way to the sheepfold. No man can have a compassionate heart for the lost and forsaken sheep without teaching and telling them the way to safety and how to reach the sheepfold. Feed the sheep. They are purchased with the precious blood of Christ.

In multiplying the fishes and loaves and giving the hungry that were sitting at His feet to catch the few crumbs of truth that would fall from His lips the Master set a precedent. Those who have plenty must share with the more unfortunate and hungry if they are to practice those principles of Christ. Bearing one another's burdens in the name of the Lord is Christianity in practice. A man's life consists not of the things which he possesses, but of what he does and how he acts in relation to the Christ of God. Share in His name, and you will not lose your reward.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

Seldom do we find Christ considering His own comfort. Once in a while we see Him trying to get away from the multitudes, seemingly for a little rest; but usually He was doing something for the benefit of those about Him. He stilled the waters, fed the hungry, washed the disciples' feet, and humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

His life was just as sweet to Him as ours is to us; but He considered not self, He did and gave for others. Truly great men of today are servants, not lords. Though Jesus was Lord, He did not use His authority in that way, but rather acted the part of a servant and ministered to His fellow men. Shall we follow His example?—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

Jesus Ministering to Human Needs

Upon one occasion Jesus answered a question of His disciples by saying, "The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—Luke 9:56. This statement reveals the keynote of Christ's ministry; it displays His heart of love. He met human needs when He provided food in the wilderness; when He gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, life to the dead, joy to the broken-hearted, forgiveness of sins to the conscience-stricken, hope to those seeking the Messiah. Perhaps the greatest human needs were charitable understanding and the opportunity to try again. These Jesus gave to the human race.

A woman taken in adultery was facing death under the Mosaic law. Jesus gave her hope and the opportunity to try again. How grateful she must have been to the Master to hear His kind words: "Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more."—John 8:11. Jesus demonstrated that He came not "to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

The very human need of Peter was met by the Master in a way that saved that potentially great apostle for future service. Peter was weak and unable to stand persecution and temptation. Jesus knew his weakness and prayed for him. Peter denied his Master, but Jesus did not deny or forsake him. Peter responded to that faith of his Master, steeled his impulsive nature, became the stabilizer of the early church, and died a martyr's death. Jesus had believed in him, and he could not fail. Jesus has confidence in us and has prayed for our well-being. He has met our great human need for confidence bestowed. Can we fail?—H. A. S.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Jesus Feeds the People.

Jesus had now come to His own country, Nazareth. He had sent out His disciples. He sent them by two's. They were to teach and preach, heal the sick, etc. Mark 6:1-13.

They had been gathered together again, and Jesus asked them to go with Him to take a rest. But there was no rest to be had, because the people followed them. They wanted to see and hear what Jesus would do and say.

When evening came, the disciples wanted to send the people away. Jesus said, "No, we must feed them." The disciples could not understand what He meant; so they said, "Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread?"

Jesus said, "How many loaves have you?" They answered, "Five, and two fishes." Jesus ordered them to have all the people sit down. When they were seated, Jesus prayed to God; and from five loaves and two fishes He fed five thousand men.

When all had finished eating, they gathered up twelve basketfuls that were left. Was not Jesus kind to these people?—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

HOW WAS IT DONE?

Not long ago we read that the Grand Rapids ladies, despite the depression, had raised a neat sum of money. We wish we knew how they did it.

Ladies, won't you please write, "What We Did—and How We Did It," and thus lend a helping hand to some one else? Please.

Gen. Conference Exhibit Committee.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

The members of the Church of God of Ripley surprised Mr. and Mrs. Loren Burnett and family Sunday, the 19th, at the home of Mrs. Burnett's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Cooper. The occasion celebrated their seventeenth wedding anniversary. At the noon hour an abundance of food was displayed and eaten in cafeteria style, the honored guests taking the lead while the others followed. After the dinner a very pleasant afternoon was spent in conversation and music. All departed at a late hour, wishing the Burnetts many happy returns of the day.

Sr. Cooper, who has been confined to her bed for a number of months, enjoyed the occasion immensely. Please pray that she may be restored to complete health.

Bro. and Sr. Densmore have returned from their visit in Kewanee to fill their well-established places in our church group.

There are some cases of flu among our members, Bro. Tommy Lewis, Fred Paisley, Sr. Lorene Fey, and little Reva Hetrick being afflicted at present. They are somewhat better.

Our services have all been well attended during the extreme cold weather, and we are very thankful. As we need the strength to labor in these trying times, it surely behooves us to be watching, for we know not the hour our Lord shall come to give life to all who love His appearing and look for Him. Let us all pray.

Tessa Laning, Sec.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The different church families have written a bundle of between 20 and 30 letters to Bro. John Floyd Ball who is spending a good many months in Sunshine Sanitarium. He opens one letter each day as long as the bundle lasts.

One of our Sunday school girls fell into a tub of boiling water and was critically burned; another broke her leg while playing. Sr. Doan is having to give up her activities for a time and recuperate, and Sr. Townsend spent a week in bed. These, together with sickness, difficulties, and worries of others make us long for the blessings that only the great Deliverer can bring. In the meantime the church is carrying on, endeavoring to help and encourage one another and to be faithfully laboring when Jesus comes.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

ONTARIO-NEW YORK

The following briefs are taken from the "Church of God Messenger" published by Pastor C. E. Randall in the interest of the congregations at Fonthill, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Beginning Sunday night, January 29, Bro. Randall has been holding Sunday evening services in Fenwick, Ont. He asks for the prayers of God's people on behalf of the new effort. We recall that some twenty-five years ago, Bro. F. L. Austin, then pastor at Fonthill, put on such an effort at Fenwick that resulted in much good, the fruitage of the work uniting with the Fonthill congregation, the two villages being but a few miles apart.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Commendatory letters are pouring into the office from all parts of the country commenting on the strength and interest of the articles that have been appearing in our columns during the past few months, and The Herald wishes to take this opportunity of passing on to our splendid corps of writers the appreciation of our readers, which we feel is so much deserved.

The men and women who write for The Herald are addressing, according to conservative estimates of from three to four thousand thoughtful persons each week. It is a great privilege to be able to speak to so large a company of people of the things of God.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. and Sr. Arthur Gilbey and family are spending the winter in the sunshine of Florida, at present being located at Orlando.

Bro. C. E. Randall, pastor of the Fonthill, Ont., Church of God, says in his last bulletin: "Jig-saw puzzles are the rage. They are quite characteristic of the times. It is a jig-saw age."

In our next issue D. G. Harvey brings to us a picture of "The Great Stampede." It is an unusual theme, handled in an unusual way. Watch for it.

Bro. J. Arthur Johnson of Sac City, Iowa, will hold services next Sunday, March 5, at Albert City, Iowa, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Frank Boyanovski.

We have an excellent article from the fluent pen of James A. Patrick, having to do with the resurrection, but we are withholding it for our special Easter number which will be devoted to the nature of man and the resurrection of the dead.

Quoting again from the "Church of God Messenger," Bro. Randall's interesting local bulletin: "The other day a man said to the editor, 'I am going to try and quit using tobacco.' I don't know if it is a sin, but it is a filthy habit.' Doesn't this define the whole matter of using tobacco in a very clear-cut way?"

Sr. Wm. Hanson of Grand Rapids, Mich., commenting on the articles on prophecy appearing so frequently in The Herald, says, "We are enjoying them very much. Prophecy and its fulfillment is our everyday diet here." What assurance and comfort the study of the prophetic Word provides to us all in these days of stress!

The attempt made upon the life of President Elect Roosevelt, which resulted in the serious injury of Mayor Cernak, serves to call attention again to the dangerous unrest that continually threatens the peace and security of the world. Nothing but the coming of the Prince of Peace can relieve the situation permanently.

Extras of this Bible Number will be sent out at 5¢ per copy as long as the supply lasts.

We are glad to be able to report that Sr. Mary A. Woodward who has been ill for so long a time at the home of her son, Bro. F. L. Austin in Chicago, is sufficiently recovered to be able to be up and about the house for short periods at a time.

We are glad to learn that Sr. Priscilla Clark, of the Fonthill, Ont., congregation, is recovering nicely from her recent fall. Sr. Clark is a daughter of our late Bro. Peter Bouk, founder of the Fonthill church, and one of the most beloved members of that local body.

The next special issue of The Restitution Herald, out on March 28, will probably be devoted to the Kingdom of God. Will our contributors please keep this splendid theme in mind that we may be able to present the mature thought of our most able writers on this vital subject to our readers in that issue.

The office and print shop are again busy getting out the new quarterly. This will be a most interesting and profitable series of lessons, continuing the study of the Gospel of Mark. Be sure to have your order in for sufficient copies to supply every member of your Sunday school. If you have not used the Truth Seekers' Quarterly yet, send for a sample. You will find this "Back-to-the-Bible" commentary of surprising value.

Sr. Chas. Stedman, Moorefield, Neb., asks us to inform the many friends who have written them since Bro. Stedman's illness, and whose prayers have been offered on their behalf, that she knows that God has heard and answered. While Bro. Stedman is still far from well, he is better than he has been, and both attribute his improvement to the grace of God. Recently they were able to attend services for the first time in more than a year. Throughout their period of special distress she says they have found great comfort and assurance in the promises of the Bible, and find by experience that God is just as good to His people today as He was when the old Book was written.

BACK TO BIBLE

One of the latest and most interesting publications dealing with the outstanding truths of the Bible that has come from the press in recent months is the four-page paper issued by F. L. Austin, the "Back-to-the-Bible" Evangelist, of 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.

This unusual addition to religious literature is gotten up in the form of a modern newspaper, with arresting display "heads" that attract the attention of the reader to the instructive subject matter that follows.

The paper is undated, and so may be used at any time or place where religious advertising that both attracts attention and instructs the interested is required.

The price in quantities is sufficiently reasonable to make it available to any congregation for use in special evangelistic meetings. To those desiring this publication for general distribution it will be supplied at $2.50 per hundred. Address orders to F. L. Austin, 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Illinois.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed at an out-of-town bank. Thank you!

THE ALL-CONQUERING WORD

THE following interesting excerpt is taken from the published report of a speech delivered by an Episcopal minister from Philadelphia, Dr. Tyng, before the American Bible Society, in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, May 11, 1843. The emphasis the speaker placed on the literality of the coming kingdom of Christ is especially impressive. The clearness with which he states his views on the reality of that coming "glorious day" reveals the fact that devout and thoughtful Bible students were rejoicing in the "blessed hope" a hundred years ago even as we are today.

"The diffusion of the English Bible," said the clergyman, "is, beyond all doubt, the great means to which we are to look for the ushering in of that great day which all Christians await; and we trust that the time shall ere long come when that same Bible shall be received as the law of the nations. In that glorious day, when Christ Himself shall be their King,—(I fully believe in the personal reign of Christ here upon earth, when all nations shall meet to do Him homage, and all questions of divisions will be forgotten in the majesty of truth,)—the Bible itself will produce these effects—all else will be found to be but the single bell, or pomegranate upon the breasts of the priests, which, though they may faintly reflect the light which shines upon them, are after all, only the outward part of the man who wears them."—American Millenarian, 1843.

We sometimes sing, "On Christ the solid Rock I stand; all other ground is shifting sand." Are we throwing "four anchors" down so they will hold on this "solid Rock"?

Each one of us may choose his particular anchors, but I think my first would be absolute faith in the Father and Son that the plan of salvation will be carried out to the most minute detail. My second anchor would be belief that the Bible is the Word of God and that all its promises and threats will be fulfilled. My third anchor is frequent communion with the Father, knowing His ear is ever open to the faintest whisper of His children and that prayers are always answered in the way He knows best. The fourth anchor would be a belief that though stormy days are with us God's Spirit will keep those who put their trust in Him "in the hollow of his hand." Earthly things are ever shifting, but spiritual things are unchanging. Are your anchors resting on immovable rock, or dragging in shifting sand?

Acts 27:29 says these tempest-tossed pilgrims "wished for the day." Hundreds of years have passed since then, but we are now earnestly wishing and praying that the greatest day earth has ever seen may soon come, when Jesus shall return and "the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." Then the refrain of the old hymn, "We're home at last, home at last," will prove true.

The Sunday School Teacher and the Bible

By Mary A. Gesin

FROM no greater authority than His own Word can the Sunday school teacher derive wisdom and strength in obeying the Father's injunction to "feed my lambs." God Himself has amply provided us with the materials necessary for our own work; and the methods laid down by the Master Teacher, His Son, are replete with suggestion, direction, and guidance.

The primary element necessary, as all teachers realize, is interest. There can be no learning without it. Surely a Book which has held sway over human hearts and minds for twenty centuries contains the qualities that appeal to human interest. Between its lids the full gamut of emotions is run—love and fear, courage and cowardice, loyalty and frailty.

Do your pupils enjoy history? No more graphic account of the rise and fall of nations can be found than that of the Hebrew nation and those nations interrelated with it.

Do they love poetry? The Psalms of David, the prophecies of Isaiah, the beatitudes of Jesus—all are couched in words of such beauty and simplicity they have never been surpassed nor even equaled.

Is it biography that inspires your students to nobler deeds? The humble Nazarene, whose character and beauty of life shine out undimmed through the ages, is supremely the One to choose as their Ideal. And following along after Him, where can you find biography more charged with power to arrest attention and inspire imitation than that of Joseph, David, Daniel, Moses, Ruth, Esther, and countless others?

Add to all of this the fact that in the Bible is found the gospel, the power of God to transform human hearts from the crumbling clay of weakness and sinful desire to citadels of truth and righteousness; and where else should we as Sunday school teachers turn for guidance?

Perhaps a brief glimpse into the methods of the Master Teacher may be helpful. Did He desire to impress a lesson in humility on His ambitious disciples? He "called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them" (Matthew 18:1-6)—the most practical object lesson conceivable.

Designing to convey to us the spirit of charity and forgiveness toward the lowliest and most needy of God's creatures, He met the accusation of the arrogant Pharisees, after receiving sinners and eating with them, with the simple parable of the lost sheep (Luke 15:1-7).

Precept, parable, and example, all are filled with the truth that Jesus desired to teach, because they were given in terms that were intelligible and that found a point of contact in the lives of His hearers. And this it is well for us as teachers of His Word to imitate. In no better way can we drive an opening wedge into the lives of those under our instruction.

The work of the teacher, though sometimes filled with disheartening results because of lack of wisdom and vision on the part of the teacher or due to environment surrounding the pupil which cannot be entirely altered, is nevertheless rewarded with ample remuneration if in the life of only one is witnessed the miracle of the saving power of God's love. And while we, as teachers, ponder over the precepts of our Textbook and meditate upon its meanings, our own lives should grow more and more like unto that of the great Pattern which we lay down for our pupils to copy, until at last "we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."—Ephesians 4:13.

In no more fitting words can we express our plea for aid and our gratitude for opportunity than in the words of "The Teacher's Prayer," by Carrie Hayward:

"Prepare my heart, dear Lord,
To search Thy written Word.
Oh, may Thy Spirit's light reveal
To me Thy wise, Thy sovereign will.
Deeply upon my mind impress
Thy law of truth and righteousness.

"But, Lord, 'tis not enough
Alone to know Thy truth.
Help me to do, as well as know,
That I may in Thy image grow.
Not only in my mind impart,
But stamp Thy law upon my heart.

"And if Thou callest me, Lord,
To teach Thy blessed Word,
Give Thou the wisdom that I need.
Lead me, if Thou wouldst have me lead.
Touch Thou my lips with hallowed fire,
That I may other souls inspire.

"Not I, but Christ! Be this
My strength, my righteousness.
In glad obedience to Thy will
May I each sacred trust fulfill.
This my one aim as days go by;
My Lord alone to glorify!"

If Not Technocracy—Then What?

By Norman John McLeod

THE Apostle Paul writing to the Galatians has set down one of the greatest maxims of all times: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption: but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."—Galatians 6:7-9.

God has set these things as His unalterable law. The fruit of man's evil nature is always distress. But man throughout the ages has tried to sow thorns and get grapes therefrom; to plant thistles and pluck figs. Such is the nature of the world's newest thing, technocracy. It is the latest attempt to overthrow the words of the Apostle from the mouth of God.

In the present day, just as in the past, men are reaping the rewards of their evil ways. The imagination of man's heart, we are told in Genesis, is evil from his youth up. But occasionally some have risen above the level of evil imaginations and have dreamed of a world wherein dwelleth righteousness. The better things of life come only after the suffering.

Men have sown the wind for years, and then wonder why, in the words of Poor Richard's Almanac, they are reaping the whirlwind. They have wasted their substance in riotous living, and are now eating the husks as their reward. Many of us have sat down to meditate (we have plenty of time in these days of unemployment) and have thought upon the opportunity that was missed to spend that dollar that was trusted to our care in a more worthy fashion. How large loom those sums of money that we spent some years ago on the things which now seem the greatest of luxuries. If we only had that money now, how far it would go toward the things of necessity that now we want.

But that day is gone forever. We are faced with terrifying realities. We are as the drunken man who awakes in the morning and wonders at his profligacy of the night before. Or as the sleep walker who is astonished to find the things he has done in his sleep. How can we make amends for the things done amiss? Is it too late to reform? Men all about us are losing their heads for fear. Riots, strikes, crimes, monstrous blasphemies, evictions, bankruptcies, violence, and counter-violence vie with each other to win the most prominent place on the front pages of the newspapers. The wiseacres are thrown into a panic. Why should all this be? Banks fail, mortgages are foreclosed, whole communities are plunged into want and degradation.

The capitalist says that the machine has been thrown out of order because of excessive competition; he recommends monopoly. The farmer says there is too much production; he recommends that the government buy his surplus product. The laborer says there is too much mechanization of industry; he recommends a new social and political order. For centuries these cries, these voices have been babbling in our ears, until we are beside ourselves. We utter new jargons about prices, war debts, unemployment and business cycles. But little is known even by the wisest what will be the outcome.

Let us patch up our civilization, says the rich man, for it is the best that we have. But the poor man, tired of waiting on airy promises, feels that he cannot starve long enough to see that time of blessing come in. So the conservatives set themselves to survey this broad land of ours to see how long it will be and how the remedies of time and change are progressing. We cannot tell how long this frightful season of want will last; for the schools are inefficient, the church has shirked its duty, the police are corrupt, the rich grind the poor, the poor defy the authorities, and all alike forget God. But, the hungry man says, we will not starve in the midst of plenty, give us to eat.

In the midst of all this confusion, when the nation is torn by strife, nay, when the world itself seems up-side-down, comes a voice across the noise that says, "We have found the remedy!" What is the matter? The machine!

"Many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them."—Matthew 13:17.

The Editor's Prayer

Dear Father, send Thy blessings now
Upon us, as we humbly bow,
To Thee and pray.
Forgive our sins; and lead us still,
To ever do Thy righteous will,
From day to day.

When Death's dark shadows o'er us creep,
Enfolding us in mystic sleep,
Come closer then.
In Jesus' name, and for His sake,
Grant Thou the prayer we humbly make,
Dear Lord. Amen.

What Shall We Do?

THERE is always something that man must do! It could not be otherwise, for he was created for no other purpose than to do the will of Him who gave him being. Doing is the one object of his life. In response to an obvious need—for "there was not a man to till the ground"—the Lord God formed man and placed him in the garden "to dress it and to keep it."

The doing that God requires may be either that of the mind, the heart, or the hand; but whatever it is, it is action, definite, positive, and willing action, that God demands.

If it is knowledge that God wishes us to possess, He does not force it upon our consciousness against our wills, but commands us through His Son to "search the scriptures," further admonishing us by the Apostle to "continue" in the things which we have learned and to earnestly "contend" for them.

If it is faith that God is asking us to exercise, it must be made a matter of demonstration before it becomes acceptable to Him. Addressing Himself to Abraham, Jehovah emphasized the vital importance of faith's being active, rather than passive, by taking a solemn oath: "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord; for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven. . ."—Genesis 22:16, 17. Referring to this impressive utterance of the Lord, James asks, "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?"

If it is a material service that God requires, it must be performed with scrupulous regard for the divine requirements laid down: "As Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the mount."—Hebrews 8:5.

When it comes to the question of supreme importance voiced by the repentant Jews on the day of Pentecost, "What shall we do?" it is expedient that we should most thoughtfully consider the answer made by Peter, and, further, observe how closely his answer followed the outline of conditions on which salvation depends as given by "the author and finisher of our faith" in the great commission.

First, we should notice the force of a singular omission on the part of the Apostle in his response to the question of the Jews. He does not employ the word faith! He does not fail, however, to emphasize the necessity of faith in the strongest manner possible. Actions are always more impressive than words, and so he cries, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins."—Acts 2:38. Repentance, a turning away from sin, and baptism are actions; but they are wholly based on faith, they are actions which would not be performed in the absence of faith. They thus become confessions or evidences of faith.

Throughout the record of God's dealings with men He has always insisted that those who serve Him must do so through faith. In other words, that their service must be the fruitage of their faith in Him. Faith is not an end, but the means to an end. God has many great tasks to perform. He created man to perform those tasks, just as He created angels to accomplish other necessary works (Hebrews 1:14). Faith is the only foundation upon which satisfactory service can be built. We must believe that God is, that His ways are best, and that He is a rewarder of all who diligently seek Him, before we can render that perfect, unquestionable obedience that will enable us to carry out God's purposes completely, both in this life and in the life to come. The first evidence of the awakening of such a faith is indicated by repentance followed by baptism, as required by Peter on the day of Pentecost, and by our Lord in the great commission.

THE WRATH OF GOD

By Samuel E. Haney

"And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed."—Genesis 19:17.

PROFESSING Christians, failing to see the applicability of this text to the human race's present chaotic and disruptive state, are making but little, if any, effectual use of their Bibles beyond an occasional perfunctory reading. Johnny's method of saying his bedtime prayer reminds us of many grown-ups' cursory reading of the Scriptures. The lad kept a copy of the Lord's prayer under the bed mattress. He would hold it aloft, saying, "Lord, these are my sentiments."

Sodom and Gomorrah constitute a typical similitude of lewdness in its most licentious form and are elsewhere in the Bible antityped by God's menacing devastating wrath, thus, "For if God did not spare angels who had sinned, but committed them to pits of the nether gloom to Tartarus, reserved them under punishment for doom: if he did not spare the ancient world but kept Noah, the herald of righteousness, safe with seven others, when he let loose the deluge on the world of impious men: if he reduced the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah to ashes when he sentenced them to devastation, and thus gave the impious an example of what was in store for them, but rescued righteous Lot who was sore burdened by the immoral behavior of the lawless (for when that righteous man resided among them, by what he saw and heard his righteous soul was vexed day after day with their unlawful doings)."—2 Peter 2:4-8, Moffatt.

To prove that the present chaotic and irreconcilable state of humanity, under the biblical word "Babylon," is now incipiently antityping our text and its immediate contexts, please read the thirteenth chapter of Isaiah down to verse 17. The writer cites verses 17, 18, and 19 as follows: "Against them I raise up the Medes and Elamites, who care not for silver, nor gloat over gold; but, bow and spear in hand, fearful, ferocious, young men they cut to pieces, maids they massacre, a child they never spare, on babes they have no mercy. So shall Babylon, the splendour of empires, the proud glory of the Chaldeans, fare as Sodom and Gomorrah fared when God overthrew them."—Moffatt.

"Babylon" figuratively means luxury, vice, depravity, gross immorality, a place of captivity. At this point read Romans 1:24-32 and get the connecting links between type and antitype, the world's ancient and present state of licentiousness. God's children should have no difficulty in recognizing the accuracy of this definition and Paul's concurrent comments; also, the indictment implied of the unregenerate race; and, also, a purport of an antitype of God's sentiment of Noah and Lot's days when "it grieved Yahweh that He had made man," and when He declared, "I must wipe man whom I created from off the face of the ground."—Gen. 6:6, 7, Rotherham.

Man has a mistaken idea of the leniency of God. Jesus, referring to the deluge and the destruction wrought in the plain, said God "destroyed them all . . . Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."—Luke 17:26-30. With most Christians this little "all" is virtually negligible, though they will correctly insist that the auxiliary verb "must" in John 3:7 is indispensable; that the use of "either," "may," or "can" would disrupt God's plan of salvation. Let us be impartial. No one has a right to tamper with God's mandates in defense of man's puny, finite plans.

Jesus' arraignment and sentence concerning Israel (Matthew 23) is pertinent, particularly verse 36: "Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation." Does this fiat prophecy apply exclusively to the epoch during which it was spoken? No; for the reason that fallen man, by not profiting from his experience and observation, invariably duplicates his folly in succeeding generations. This prophecy is both retrospective and prospective.

The sins preceding Noah's generation climaxed in the destruction of the unregenerate race because of its jocularly ignoring the admonition of Noah, "a preacher of righteousness," whose futile warnings by precept and example "condemned the world."—2 Peter 2:5; Hebrews 11:7. Christians unable to see that this very state of affairs now obtains and that Jesus' words to His rejecters nineteen hundred years ago, namely, "All these things shall come upon this generation," apply to our (over)

Zion's Watchmen

Let Zion's watchmen all awake,
And take th' alarm they give;
Now let them from the mouth of God
Their solemn charge receive.

'Tis not a cause of small import
The pastor's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled a Savior's hands.

As shepherds o'er the flock of God
They watch and teach and pray;
With faithful hands they guard and guide
Until the close of day.

May they that Jesus, whom they preach,
Their own Redeemer see;
And watch Thou ever o'er their souls,
That they may watch for Thee.
—Philip Doddridge and G. E. M. generation, also, should be pitied.

For nineteen hundred years prior to Calvary, God, through His prophets, strove as a schoolmaster (Galatians 3:23-25) to prepare Israel to meet its Messiah. The law and the prophecies were read regularly in the synagogues. And yet, "he came to his own, and his own received him not" ("did not welcome him," Moffatt).—John 1:11.

For about nineteen hundred years this side of Calvary, God, through His Son and the Holy Spirit, has been dealing with a "whosoever will" class no longer restricted to fleshly Israel, striving this time to prepare spiritual Israel, the "Israelites indeed," to meet their Redeemer at His return, which, from every angle viewed, is about due. One of many evidences is, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations: and then shall the end come."—Matthew 24:14. This has been done.

God by His Spirit is now pleading with His children as He did by His messengers with Lot and his family: "Haste thee, escape thither; for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither."—Genesis 19:22. God's present plea is, "Wherefore come out from among them (the unregenerate doomed world), and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing (under the sway of the devil); and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."—2 Corinthians 6:17, 18. Yes, God pleads, "My son, give me (not the god of this world) thine heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways."—Proverbs 23:26.

The enemy of life is using all manner of means these days to hold God's children in "Babylon." Notice how the heavenly messengers had to hasten Lot, his wife, and his daughters. They even had to lay hold upon their hands and force them to escape for their lives, to escape to the mountain lest they be consumed. Genesis 19:15-17. Brethren, are we not seeing these very things in various ways being re-acted?

Were professing Christians to stand aloof from the filthy spiritual miasma of this world in its diversified manifestations, they would get a vision of a greater mountain than the "mountain" of our text, namely, the glorious kingdom of God wherein dwelleth righteousness, where "the unclean shall not pass over."—Isaiah 35:8-10.

To triumph in this battle we must let the interests of God and His kingdom rise in our affection just as much above our own interest as their real value is greater. But there is a hard way and an easy way of getting into God's kingdom; and about one in a thousand prefer the easy way. Jocularly speaking, this reminds us of a man's preferring the use of a greased pole to climb up into heaven instead of Jacob's ladder. Let us keep in mind that God will arise "to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth" (Psalm 76:9; Matthew 5:5), a class of people the world usually calls slightly demented.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST

By J. G. Haupt

BEGINNING with Moses and Joshua at the opening of the Old Testament and continuing through the Bible, Jewish writers have given us a continuous series of references to the Messiah, the Christ, the only begotten Son of God.

The prophets especially, both the major and the minor, speak knowingly and in urgent terms of the Messiah of God. The latter part of the Old Testament has very much to say upon this theme. Before the Messiah was born, the Jewish people were in interested expectancy. That the Messiah did not come in the manner that the leading Israelites expected Him was not the fault of the heavenly Father.

The gospel of the Christ, of the Messiah, is a leading topic in all parts of the New Testament. Do not overlook the fact that every writer of the books of the New Testament was a Jew. Several of them were as well trained by education as the best writers of the Old Testament. The remainder show by the style of their writings that spiritual insight, qualities of the mind, and industry overcame all lack of school training.

The gospel of Christ makes it plain that God retained the name of His church. God's church, the church of God, is the only name of the church after the day of Pentecost, when the church was instituted. Beginning at Antioch in the early part of this period, all believers, all disciples, were called Christians. This name of "Christians" for all members of the church has continued to the present day.

All other names of churches have been adopted by members since the Bible books were written. While believers were called Christians in Bible times, the name Christian church is never found. In his epistle to the Romans the Apostle Paul mentions the fact that the churches of Christ, the Christians whom he had visited in his missionary tours, brought greetings to the church at the seat of the Roman government with which he was now to be associated. Each of these churches of Christ, of Christians, was a church of God.

The gospel of Christ is preeminently the gospel of the resurrection, the gospel of the kingdom of Christ, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of heaven. The Christ was Prophet and Teacher until His ascension. The Bible states that He is now at the right hand of the Father as the Christians' High Priest. He is to return to earth as King when those who have put their trust in the Messiah are to rise from the state of death. Of that day knows no man, not even the angels of heaven. Only the Father, who dwells in heaven, knows the day and the hour. Blessed are they who have part in the first resurrection. None of them shall experience the second death. They shall reign with Christ.

I must leave Galatians 3:8 and the double curse pronounced upon all who preach or teach any false gospel for another paper.

THE COMING AGE

By George B. Alldridge

“And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables? He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given.”—Matthew 13:10, 11.

THE other morning I read in the news that a student only sixteen years old committed suicide. This cryptic note he wrote: “Life is a mystery.”

Last Sunday morning in Sunday school Brother Lyon asked the class this question, “Would any of us care to have our lives known from childhood unto the present moment exactly as God sees them?” I noted that none of us answered in the affirmative.

Dr. Joseph Collins has written a series of remarkable books. The one I like best is The Doctor Looks at Life and Death. I feel the doctor will pardon me if I quote a few excerpts which bear directly upon the text quoted at the head of this article.

“To play the game of life skillfully, one must have knowledge. Some people are born with knowledge. It is called horse-sense. Most people have to acquire it and at best acquisition of it is difficult. There is so much misinformation floating about everywhere.

“It is particularly knowledge of ourselves that is needed. Why we are what we are, why we think and act as we do. If people were to tell the truth about themselves, their thoughts, inclinations, indulgences, and inhibitions, esteem for our fellows and likely our self-esteem would get a severe jolt. . .

“Were Mr. G. Bernard Shaw to tell us his day dreams and his night dreams, his thoughts away from reality; were he to chart his instructive and affective pathways, and stick colored pins in them to indicate how far he permitted himself to go and why he went no further; were he to lay his conflicts on the table with an explanation of the way they were created; his name would be known as long as civilization lasts.

“I am not suggesting that it would be for the welfare of the world were men to lay bare their true natures, to be openly what they are privily, to speak as they really think, to act in keeping with motivation; for it would mean the destruction of the ideal in human life and of all its amenities. I mean that we should seek to learn the truth about ourselves, that truth which shall make us free, before we think of revealing it to others.

“Then, it is a question of expediency, taste and discernment how much of it we may impart to others. We lie about ourselves to others, and that is easily explained and forgivable. We lie to ourselves, and that is infinitely more dangerous. We do it consciously and unconsciously; we pretend to be something we are not, we speak of one another quite differently in presence and in absence and we are fearful that we shall be unmasked.

“Organized conventionalism and organized religion are in a large measure responsible for our hypocrisy and fear. The World War gave them both hard blows. It showed up the habitual falsity in which men love to live.

“We shall never rid ourselves of hypocrisy, fear, falsehood, bigotry and prejudice as long as we continue to assert that we are Christians. We are nominal, not actual Christians. We are Christians with our mouths, not with our hearts; in the light, but not in the dark.

“Of the one hundred twenty millions of human beings in this country, there is probably not one who conforms his thought and conduct to the teaching of Christ. Were there one who did, he would be deprived of his liberty by his family, ridiculed by the community and considered a fool and a coward by his friends. It is impossible for one to do what Christ said he must do in order that he shall be saved after the spirit forsakes the body, and have the respect of his fellow man.

“That which Christianity demands is impossible for the vast majority of human beings. Had St. Francis of Assisi not lived Nietzsche’s verdict, ‘There has never been but one Christian and He died on the cross,’ would be in keeping with the evidence.”

Some time ago I attended the obsequies of a man who in life acquired a large fortune. He lacked all which may be considered culture, for his whole life was devoted to making money.

I overheard two men in conversation. They were well-groomed and had every appearance of refinement. Their conversation consisted of how much the deceased had left.

They expressed exactly the spirit of this world. Paul in writing to Timothy said, “For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.”

The world feels the need of a dictator. But where will you find him? In Italy? Nay, Mussolini cannot fill the bill. In Russia? Worse still. In Germany? Hitler has proved that he is not competent. Japan? Yes, if he is permitted to use bombing machines and murder innocent women and children. America? Then under him lawlessness would increase. Great Britain? No, selfishness must not prevail. France? Impossible; nationalism must cease, for that largely causes all wars. Then where shall we go?

Tell me what kind of a dictator you want. • This is the one I have in mind: His name is Jesus.

Do you remember what Henry Drummond said about Him? Well, here it is: "The most obvious lesson in Christ's teaching is that there is no happiness in having and getting anything, but only in giving. I repeat, there is no happiness in having, or in getting, but only in giving. And half the world is on the wrong scent in the pursuit of happiness. They think it consists in having and getting, and in being served by others. It consists in giving and service to others. He that would be great among you, said Christ, let him serve. He that would be happy, let him remember that there is but one way—it is more blessed, it is more happy, to give than to receive."

Oh, if people would only read their Bibles and get God's thought! He tells us just the kind of a dictator He, for six thousand years, has been seeking.

I worship and thank Him because He has found Him. Yes, and over seven hundred years before the Dictator was born, He gave a beautiful description of His character. Now I am going to quote all of it and see if any man of the world's wonderful men meet these requirements:

"And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins."—Isaiah 11:1-5.

Paul says, "That in the dispensation of the fulness of time, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."—Ephesians 1:10.

Do you not see the significance of Jesus' teaching His disciples how to pray and what to pray for? "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Very good, if, as Paul says, Christ is to gather together in one all things, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth. Then the same condition will prevail upon earth as there is in heaven.

It is a remarkable fact that all creeds throughout Christendom use this prayer. Hence, then, when all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, what excuse can be offered? You pray daily for His return; and when He comes, you will not receive Him. So you see why He said, "For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."—Matthew 12:37. So, if you do not believe that Jesus is going to bring heavenly conditions to this earth when He comes, then in the spirit of all consistency quit praying for it.

THE THREE S's

By Lottie E. Young

WHEN I was a girl, I used to love to look through a prism and see the brilliant colors, red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, violet, which came through it when the sun shone upon it. When Jesus Christ was upon the earth, He said, "I am the light of the world," and He is also the Sun of Righteousness. None of us can be all that Jesus is, shining with a pure white light, but we can each have our place; and so this light is broken up into many different colors as it passes through the lives of His followers. Some make a greater showing than others, but each one of us is a part of Him if we shine with His light. He does not want us to try to be something that we are not, but to be that part of Himself that He has given us to be.

Every Christian should be a candle shining in this dark world. In our natural state we are unlighted candles, but a thousand unlighted candles in a dark room would not make the room light. It is only when we have received Christ in our lives that we begin to shine; and the more of His Spirit we have, the brighter we will shine. We are to keep the wick trimmed so that the flame will be seen by all, and we are to keep the windows of our life clean so that the beams may pour out without hindrance.

Then each one of us in his own place and in his own way must give light to other lives and make the one little spot in this world that is closest about him brighter and happier by what he may say and do. We may not be great lamps influencing thousands of people; but we can all be lighted candles, each ready to shine, "you in your small corner, and I in mine."

Did you ever think how many important words there are in the Bible which begin with the letter s? Some of them are "Saviour," "salvation," "sacrifice," while others are "Satan," "sin," "suffering." Then there are three which should enter into the life of every true Christian who wants to carry out the golden rule:

If we read 2 Corinthians 8:5, we shall see the early Christians in the Macedonian churches gave first themselves to God. We all acknowledge God as our Creator and Jesus Christ as our Savior; but are we ready to carry out the words of the hymn, "None of self and all of Thee," and give ourselves so whole-heartedly to Them that the desire to please Them is uppermost in our lives? Happy is the one who can say, "Yes," to this question. Big "I" fills a large place in our lives; but if self is given to God, it is following closely in the footsteps of Jesus, who said, "I do always those things that are pleasing to him."

Another s we should consider is service. If we belong to God, how can we best serve Him? The Bible says we must love the Lord with all our heart, mind, soul, and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves; so the best way to show our love for God is by helping our fellow men in every way possible. How are we going to do it? First, we should strive to point them to the Lamb of God and interest them in the study of the Bible (not just reading with the eyes, but thinking at the same time of the meaning), the work of the church, Berean society, Sunday school, and prayer meeting. But how about visiting those who are not able to get out, reading to the blind, carrying little luxuries to the sick, praying with all, ever remembering the words of Jesus, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me"? The following incident speaks for itself:

"You have had a visitor from the church, I hear," remarked one who called on an old invalid lady. "I suppose she brought you a tract, read the Bible to you, asked you to be sure to come to church next Sunday, and then said good-bye."

"No," answered the old lady, "she did not bring me a tract, but she brought an egg and boiled it for me. She stirred up the fire, drew the blinds to let in the sunshine, and put some wild flowers on the table. She made tea for both from a little package she brought, and purposely forgot to take the rest away. No, she didn't read the Bible to me; but I could read the Bible in her, for she was, I am sure, what the preacher called a living epistle. I could read the Bible in her without my spectacles."

This is true service.

One of the most inspiring parts of the Bible is in Exodus, which tells of gifts for the tabernacle being made. We read about the "willing hearted" men and women who brought the treasures of gold, silver, and precious stones for the adornment of God's house in such quantities that the word went forth, "The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work. So the people were restrained from giving." This was genuine sacrifice, for their ornaments could never be replaced; but their hearts were so full of thankfulness to the Father for His watchful care that they rejoiced in giving, and that is what He wants us to do now.

"Having food and raiment, let us therewith be content" satisfied the Christians in the days of the Apostle Paul. What would he have thought of the "necessities" of present-day Christians before they set aside the Lord's portion! If all practiced tithing, how much of the coaxing and pleading for gifts with which to carry on God's work would be avoided! Our Father has blessed us with hands and feet, eyes and ears, fingers to work for Him, and feet to walk for Him. Let us give Him of our substance so earned, and believe God loves a cheerful giver in the one who is His helper.

The value of all the gold in the world is estimated at $10,847,801,000. And all this, plus all undiscovered, belongs to our heavenly Father: "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts."—Haggai 2:8. He also informs us that, "the fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb."—Psalm 19:9, 10.—S. E. Haney.

AN INCREDIBLE BOOK

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible . . .?"
—Acts 26:8.

PAUL asked this question concerning the resurrection of the dead. He asked it of cultured and enlightened men of the world, who gave him no answer to his question. The fact is, it was incredible to them—past all believing—a thing so altogether unheard-of in the history of the human race that to believe it would be to believe the unbelievable. It was contrary to all experience, and so altogether unlikely as to be "impossible."

All this is equally true of every other doctrine of Christianity. It is all incredible, unheard-of, unprecedented, unique. All the teaching of the Word of God is inexplicable, astonishing, and contrary to all normal ideas. To ask an ordinary man to believe it is to ask the impossible.

In fact, the Bible is full of incredible things. It is all incredible from first to last. Yet millions have believed the unbelievable, have believed it as they believe nothing else, and in countless instances have believed it enough to die for it.

It is all equally incredible; yet those who believe it find heaven on earth in doing so. They enjoy "all joy and peace in believing."

The incredibility of the Bible results from its strangeness. It tells of new things—a different "manner of things" from anything elsewhere known. It cannot be classified among the normal experiences of life, and therefore men find it hard to believe.

SEVEN THINGS

Indeed, the Bible may be termed the Book of the Incredible. For it is a revelation of incredible things. Let us consider seven of these:

It contains incredible prophecies—things quite impossible of human fulfillment—things so strange and unlikely that the very prophets were themselves puzzled, and searched diligently what or "what manner of time" the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify. What manner of time? Like no other times of His sufferings; the time of His glory. Well might Isaiah say, "Who hath believed our report?" Such times could never be! Incredible times! Yet in the fullness of time the unbelievable happened.

Then came an incredible Man. "What manner of man is this?" was the question He everywhere provoked. An unbelievable Man with an unbelievable birth. Born of a virgin! Impossible—yet true! Unbelievable—yet it happened! Everything else about this Man was equally incredible. It was impossible to explain Him, to fit Him into any human category. Indeed, men have been trying to do so for nineteen hundred years, and are still trying. He was wonderful beyond words. He has arrested the attention of men for all time. From first to last—His birth, His life, His claim—were past belief, yet true. Impossible of believing naturally. "Blessed art thou, Simon, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee," must be said equally of every believer in Him, for He is more than flesh and blood can believe.

He had an incredible message. "What manner of saying is this?" cried His hearers, astonished at His doctrine. He spoke incredible things. Never man spake like this Man. They were contrary to all human thinking. "This is an hard saying; who can hear it?" Yet His incredible words are true. They have proved "spirit and life" to those who have received them.

The incredible message discloses an incredible love. "Behold what manner of love!" The love of God as revealed in Christ is a "manner of love" far beyond man's highest conception and is past all natural belief. Man can believe in the pity of God, the compassion of God, the complacency of God, the condescension of God; but the love of God as revealed at Calvary is past belief. "God so loved . . . that he gave." "God commendeth his love toward us in that . . . Christ died." Herein is love! It would have been love to forgive us and befriend us, but what manner of love that we should be called the sons of God! Yet His love, though incredible, is true; and by grace "we have known and believed the love that God hath to us."

It reveals an incredible regeneration. "How can these things be?" said Nicodemus, and millions have echoed the question since. Regeneration has always been inexplicable and therefore incredible to men. "Thou canst not tell . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Men can understand reformation and religion, but not regeneration. They frankly do not believe in God as a power in human life; they find Him incredible. But here again the incredible is true. He is the greatest factor of the history of the past. He is the only explanation of the existence and persistence of the church of God down the ages.

It produces incredible men. "Ye know what manner of men we were among you," wrote the Apostle. Different from all other manner of men. The hardest thing in the world for men to understand is a Christian. Like his Lord, he is in a category of his own. Pentecost produced an entirely new species of humanity, radically different from and quite inexplicable to the world at large. Paradoxical people who prove to be entirely other than they appear to men—"as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, they live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." What can the world make of such manner of men as these? They can understand moral or even religious men, but are utterly at a loss with spiritual men. They only repeat the cry at Pentecost, "What is this?"

And upon these incredible men the incredible message has an incredible effect. "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" writes the Apostle to those who have believed the unbelievable. "Holy conversation and godliness" are the hallmark of the believer. It is impossible to believe the incredible message without becoming holy in walk and conversation, and it is impossible to become holy any other way. Holiness simply does not exist among men as a fact of experience apart from faith in Christ. The man of the world certainly does not believe in it as a working proposition, and writes down those who "profess godliness" as hypocrites. Yet this incredible thing exists and displays itself as the inevitable effect of true faith in the Lord Jesus wherever the gospel is preached in the whole world. It is indeed its greatest credential, its supreme triumph, its unanswerable vindication. Like everything else, it is known by its fruits. Such, then, is the incredible Book and such its incredible effect.—Montague Goodman in The Christian.

THE GREAT STAMPEDE

By D. G. Harvey

---

PICTURE, if you can, a vast herd of Texas longhorns at rest in the early days of the cattle country—cattle not knowing the restraint of fences, almost wild. At some strange noise not understood by the bovine mind, the cattle begin to mill around, restless. Then the dash of the stampede; running wild, blind with fear, the whole herd dashes over a cliff to destruction. While man considers himself as molded of a finer clay, he, like the dumb beast, stampedes at fear of the unknown.

Jehovah God has revealed by His prophet that in the last days there would be a famine, not of bread, but of hearing the Word of God. Amos 8:11. Man, desiring to understand the present events, is milling around seeking light, learning to distrust the churches of Christendom. Men seek to gain light from the heathen cults of Asia and every known "ism" of the age, but like clouds over the desert they are clouds (witnesses, Hebrews 12:1) without water (truth). Jude 12.

Men today, like the bewildered cattle of the plains, fearing the unknown, are dashing into a great stampede, bound for destruction. As Will Rogers says, "People right now are sure of one thing, and that is that the old orthodox, political way of running everything has flopped. There is not a man in the whole world today that people feel like actually knows what is the matter."

But one who tells the end from the beginning knows. Jehovah Himself has said, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." God's kingdom is coming. The prayer our great Teacher taught us to pray, that prayer of countless numbers, soon will be granted.

Sometimes the cowboys who were to watch the herd could stop a stampede, turn it back. But can we of the church turn the mass of mankind back to the gates of truth and hope?

Turn back to the water; there is danger in this mad race of sensational experiment. God's Word only can give that peace which passeth all understanding. Learn from that greatest of all Teachers the lesson of love, mercy, and justice; and the great stampede is over.

FABLES

By Emma C. Railsback

"They shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

WE have looked at the fable founded on Genesis 6:2 and found that the self-styled "sons of God" were descendants of Seth, the son of Adam. This week we will take a look at the one founded on Jude 9, which reads: "Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee."

In Deuteronomy 34:5, 6 we find this fact recorded: "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor; but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."

The fable says that Satan appeared on the scene when the angels of God were burying the body of Moses and that a strong contention arose as to whether Satan or Michael should get possession of his body. This fable fits nicely into others of like nature, such as the immortality of the soul and eternal torment in hell-fire; but devout Scripture students soon learn the folly of such teachings.

Notice first that Jude is speaking of historical facts: the unbelief of the Israelites who were saved out of Egypt with such miraculous demonstrations of God's power; and the unbelief of the messengers, the princes of the twelve tribes, who were sent ahead into the land of Canaan and returned with such an evil report as to cause a rebellion of the whole nation, and their judgment; then he speaks of Sodom and Gomorrah and their judgment.

Let us see if we can find the historical fact referred to in verse nine. But first we must find what the contention is about. The body of Christ is the church. The body of Moses is Israel. This is shown by such texts as Hebrews 3:2-6 and Ephesians 5:24, 25. So we conclude that we must look for some historical fact concerning the people of Israel. Next we find that Jude is quoting from Zechariah 3:1, 2: "And he shewed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan ("an adversary," margin) standing at his right hand to resist him. And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee."

This particular prophecy of Zechariah took place at the time of the return of Israel (body of Moses) from Babylonian captivity, while the Israelites were rebuilding the house of the Lord. Adversaries arose who put a stop to the progress of the work for some time. Finally God raised up two prophets to prophesy and to encourage the workers to proceed with the work of re-establishing the worship of God in their own land. The history of these events is found in Ezra, chapters 4 and 5; and the particular adversary at this time of whom Jude speaks as being rebuked by Michael, was Tatnai, one of the governors of a part of the land. Ezra 5:3.

So, then, we have found the historical fact of which Jude is writing, and his statement is not so mystifying as it first sounds: the angel of the Lord contending with the adversary Tatnai over the reestablishing of the body of Moses (Israel) in its own land with a right to worship God according to the Mosaic Covenant.

Let us keep in mind that "Satan" is a Hebrew word and always means adversary. Fifty-five times in the Scriptures it is simply transferred, not translated; but fourteen times it is translated "adversary" and generally refers to mortal man. Notice 1 Samuel 29:4; 1 Kings 5:4; 11:14, 23, 25; 2 Samuel 19:22.

THE ANVIL OF GOD'S WORD

Last eve I stood before a blacksmith's door,
And heard the anvil ring its vesper chime;
Then, looking in, I saw upon the floor
Old hammers, worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had," said I,
"To wear and batter all these hammers so?"
"Just one," he answered; then, with twinkling eye,
"The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

And so the Bible, anvil of God's Word,
For ages skeptics' blows have beat upon;
And though the noise of Paine, Voltaire, was heard,
The anvil is unworn—the hammers gone.

Apprentice blows of ignorance, forsooth,
May awe with sound, and blinding sparks, death-whirled;
The Master holds and turns the iron, His truth,
And shapes it as He wills, to bless the world.

IF NOT TECHNOCRACY — THEN WHAT?

How will we correct it? More machinery! How will that be worked out? We do not know, but let us do it anyway! Who is this that speaks? The idealist, the dreamer, the politician, all combined: the technocrat! If not technocracy, then what?

Over in the cloistered walks of Columbia University sit some arm-chair philosopher-economists who are taking a survey, also. What are their conclusions? Let us look at the situation through their eyes. Thousands, almost, we might say, millions, of men have been thrown out of employment. Why? Machines have displaced man-power. What are we to do about it? Multiply the number and efficiency of the machines! We can do almost anything by machinery operated by the highly trained technical expert. How strange sounds that sort of a remedy! What will be the operation of such a system? Men are thrown out of employment; well and good, let us all work half time and produce twice as much. There is over-production now; how will you overcome that menace? By distributing to the needy without money and without price. Yes, says the technocrat, we will do away with price. How? By changing the kind of money we have. We will produce money in large quantities based upon the energy produced by machines. What a fine theory! But what will give that money its value? Energy! How will that be determined? By electrical units!

To enter into a discussion of the economic principles involved in this sort of an air castle would be too intricate to essay. But suffice it to say that price is not determined by the material from which the money is manufactured. If that were so, currencies could be inflated with the happiest results. But the history of mankind does not bear out such conclusions.

But, says the technocrat, you must not ask us too much about that, for we have not yet worked that out. The theory was too nascent when it was dragged out of the sacred precincts of the university into the cruel light of politics. But let us say that that money will have no value to anybody but the one who has earned it; therefore, there will be no thieves. Pauperism will be done away, for all of us can possess twenty thousand dollars a year. The idle wealthy class will be eliminated, for we shall all belong to it. There will be no more suffering for want of food, for these "ergs"—that is the fancy name for the new money—will buy all that we want. In other words, these men have found Utopia, that fabled isle of the blest, in the midst of Communism, that sordid child of the Industrial Revolution.

In the mixture of these ideas is enough that is seemingly relevant to the uninitiated to make it sound plausible. What one of us does not want such wonderful conditions? What one of us but would accept the doctrine of plenty when we are on the verge of bankruptcy? They say that under their Utopian scheme there can be no debt, for debts are to be among the items that are to be sent into the limbo of forgotten things along with the price system.

But these cries of the economists of Columbia are an escape psychology to the masses. We are hungry, says the laborer. We will feed you, says the technocrat. How? asks the laborer. With energy, says the technocrat. The laborer is duly impressed by this mystical statement at first, but soon he sees that all is not gold that glitters.

A sinister shadow hangs behind that glittering robe of finespun philosophies. Hunger stalks in the land and will not be quieted by theories. More stern realities press upon the mind. One cannot argue with famine. It is present, unasked, undesired. But one step lies between the hungry man and plenty: violence. The starving man, turned away from his place of employment, passes a bakery. Only plate glass separates him from his greatest need.

How long will he hesitate? Conscience will hold him for some time. But we have come to new times. Restraining influences have been thrown aside. God is forgot.

There is no longer hope of reward or fear of punishment. All those things have been cast aside in the stark necessity of the moment, for he has never been schooled in the faith that anchors the soul in the time of trouble. Comes the whisper: Why should you starve when others more evil are enjoying all the luxuries of life? The deed is done: violence! Multiply the incident by thousands, almost, we might say, millions, and the war is on.

The technocrat seeks help from vain man. His theories are as airy nothings. He speaks of righteousness to come as if a man were able to achieve it by the tortuous way of politics. He forgets that the imagination of man's heart is only evil from his youth up. If not technocracy, then what?

The Christian seeks help from God. We have seen the end of the Lord, that He is merciful. We have seen the power of God, that He is able to perform what He promises. Let us hear what the Lord offers. We read of these things about which the philosopher theorizes in the book of James: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."—James 5:1-8.

Then let us read the consoling words of Isaiah which tell of the times that will come, that give us that pure word of prophecy which is more sure than life itself, that dwarf into insignificance the vain imaginings of the foolish economist-politician: "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. And a man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place; as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. And the eyes of them that see shall not be dim: and the ears of them that hear shall hearken. The heart also of the rash shall understand knowledge, and the tongue of the stammerers shall be ready to speak plainly. The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful."—Isaiah 32:1-5.

"And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, . . . and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."—Revelation 21:1-4.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

THE purpose of the kingdom is to subdue and subject all things unto God, the Father. 1 Corinthians 15:24-28. Another purpose is to bring the promised blessings to mankind. Psalm 72:17.

The kingdom of God will be an everlasting kingdom and will be under the heavens, on the earth. Daniel 7:27; 2:44; 4:2, 3. God has promised His followers the earth for a home. Matthew 5:5; Revelation 5:9, 10. This promise will be fulfilled when Christ comes back.

According to Isaiah 11:4, Christ will consider the poor and they will be judged with righteousness. According to Matthew 5:3, the poor will enter into the kingdom of heaven.

One of the great commandments of God is, "Thou shalt not kill." "Whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment. . . whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause, shall be in danger of the judgment . . . but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire." —Matthew 5:21, 22.

A great change will come over the earth. The inhabitants of one city will go to another, saying, "Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord." Many people and strong nations will go to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem. According to Amos 9:13, 14, the earth will bring forth her fruit abundantly. Some other references are Psalm 72:16; Isaiah 35:1, 2. The curse, which is sin, will be no more. "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Revelation 21:4. God will make all things new. Revelation 21:5. The infirmities of mankind will disappear. "The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped: then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."—Isaiah 35:5, 6. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."—1 Corinthians 15:26. Death and hell will be cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death. Revelation 20:14.

Christ will be the King of the kingdom. Isaiah 9:6, 7; Zechariah 9:9. The immortalized saints will be joint-rulers with Christ. Daniel 7:27; 1 Thessalonians 4:17; Revelation 3:21. The twelve apostles are to be given the rulership of Israel. Matthew 19:27, 28. The subjects of the kingdom will be the nations of the earth. Jeremiah 3:17; Isaiah 2:2; thorty. Psalm 72:9; Zechariah 14:16-19.

The kingdom of God will be small at first and will grow to include all the world. Matthew 13:31, 32; Daniel 2:34, Psalm 72:11. Christ will have power to enforce His authority. When it is fully developed, all the earth will be under its sway. Habakkuk 2:14; Zechariah 9:10; Revelation 11:15; 21:4, 5.

HELP THE OTHER MAN

Some people want a little more Than just a kindly smile;
They need a strong and manly hand
To help them o'er the stile.

It may be that you come nearest
To the one who stands in need:
Then give to him that friendly help
Backed by your word and deed.

Some day, perhaps, you, too, may need
The help that you now give;
And in return you will receive
True friendship's aid to live.

MANY a Berean class lags because of little differences that arise among members or families. It is simply a worldly, fleshly impulse to heed such feelings as that; and a Christian should rise to a higher plane, living above such petty differences.—Berean editorial, July 31, 1928.

CHOOSING THE BEST

“WHY did he throw that stone aside and choose the other one instead, John?” asked Jimmie.

“Let’s ask him, Bud,” replied John after pondering a few minutes.

Just half a block from the corner which the twins had to pass each day on their way to and from school the foundation for a bridge over the river was being laid, and the two boys soon became great friends with the workmen. Almost every day they lingered awhile to watch proceedings, and many a question they asked the men at work.

On the afternoon that we spied them, Jimmie and John had become deeply interested in the choice of one stone and the rejection of another, for they could see no difference in the two. And so they put the question to the mason.

“Well, I’ll tell you, boys, they do look alike to you, but I know this one will not hold up its share of weight and the other one will,” he said. “And if I put in stones that do not fit or that will crumble away, what will happen to the bridge?”

The boys pondered their answer on the way homeward. In imagination they saw the beautiful bridge completed and in use. They realized in part the weight of it and the importance of a firm foundation. But the full force of the workman’s answer came to them later.

A bridge in another direction from town collapsed just as a man and his two sons were driving over it with a wagon and horses. The father and his boys were rescued, but the horses were pinned beneath heavy timbers and were drowned. “All because of a faulty foundation,” so the twins heard many remark.

And, you know, choosing the best stones for the foundation to a bridge is not so very different after all from choosing the best things in life each day—choosing to be honest, to be brave, to keep our minds and bodies pure and clean and strong. For we are building our lives day by day, just as surely as the workmen were building the bridge.

If we want to be useful men and women, men and women who do important things in the world, men and women who are honored and loved because of their attainments, we must build the foundation for such lives now. And when it comes time in later years for us to make important decisions, such decisions will depend on the choices we have made in youth, on the ideals we have built up for ourselves, on the foundations we have laid.

Let’s never forget that Jesus, our Savior, is our great Pattern and Example in all things.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Copy the words across the top of the page; then draw a picture of a bottle and a glass, and print a large NO under it. Next write, “Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.” Under them draw an open Bible, and print a large YES below it. Then write this prayer: Father in heaven, we thank Thee for clear minds and strong bodies, for the warm sunshine, the fresh air, the pure water, and good food that Thou givest us. Teach us to use all these things wisely and well so that our bodies may be beautiful temples to be used by Thee. In Jesus’ name. Amen.

One day last week three of our girls from Golden Rule Sunday School in Cleveland, Alma Carlson, Elizabeth Dodge, and Rose Leighton, were on their way to the Scrapbook Clubhouse when they met Jeanette Siple of that big Grand Rapids Sunday school, who was going their way. When they arrived at the Clubhouse whom should they find at the door but Charles Smith, my nephew, of Forreston, Illinois. Charles opened the door for the girls, and we welcomed these four new members and set chairs for them around our worktable. What good times we’ll have each week working on our lessons! We now have five boys and six girls, counting myself, four of them from Cleveland. Hurrah for Golden Rule Sunday School!

When we are working on our scrapbooks, studying our Sunday school lessons, reading our Bibles, we are laying a good, strong foundation for later life, one that will bring us much happiness when we are grown. And we are having such good times besides.

If at any time you think of something you would like to add to your lessons besides what I have given you, feel free to do so. The lessons are given ahead of time, but if you work during the week on the lesson for the next Sunday, you will have a good lesson and please your teacher, I’m sure.

Remember, “there’s a reason” for keeping your scrapbooks neat and up to date. That’s our secret, isn’t it? Good-bye till next week.

LESSON 12.—March 19, 1933

THE EFFECTS OF ALCOHOLIC DRINKS

Proverbs 23:29-32; Isaiah 28:1-4; Daniel 5:1-4

Devotional Reading: Galatians 5:16-24

GOLDEN TEXT

At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.—Proverbs 23:32.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Effects of Alcoholic Drinks.

Aim: To show the pupil the terrible effects of intemperance from a physical, national, and religious standpoint.

Basic Truth: "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—1 Corinthians 3:17.

I. Physical Results of Intemperance. (Prov. 23:29-32.) Observation, medical science, and the Bible agree in declaring that the use of intoxicating liquor to excess impairs both mental and bodily health and prevents the full use of the faculties. They go farther than that in harmony. They assert that even the limited use of intoxicants is unnecessary and may lead (and frequently does lead) to deplorable consequences. If a company of people under the influence of liquor could "tune in" when they become sober on their past babbling conversation and foolish actions, they could not be other than humiliated and disgusted.

II. National Results of Intemperance. (Isa. 28:1-4.) The wisest of kings declared that "it is not for kings to drink wine; nor for princes strong drink: lest they drink, and forget the law, and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted."—Prov. 31:4, 5. Rulership demands a brain undimmed by fumes of alcohol. If drinking of wine deprives kings of their powers of judgment, it will do no less for "the man in the street," for the home, and for the nation.

III. Religious Results of Intemperance. (Dan. 5:1-4.) It is frequently contended that there is no harm in drinking wine, that it is non-intoxicating. A New York paper vividly portrays the results of the use of wine in a New Year celebration of 1908: "Midnight: Just a few drunken women here and there. But it was genteel intoxication. Nothing but wine. True, its degrading effects were the same as if the cause were the slops dispensed in a mixed ale dive. One o'clock. More drunken women, on nothing but wine. Two o'clock, and more. . . . Some were led off, some staggered off . . . deathly sick, on nothing but wine." Morals and religion and God are forgotten under the degrading influence of wine.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Alcohol has blighted and ruined more lives than any other form of license in which the human family has engaged. A woe is pronounced against those who "mingle strong drink" (Isa. 5:22). It leads to impious follies, inflaming the passions of men and women and causing them not to regard the work of the Lord (Isa. 5:11, 12). It produces "mockers of God" and is fruitful in miseries (Prov. 20:1). The use of liquor inflames the carnal passions in man, inspires murders, prompts rape and adultery, and debauches all the fine instincts of a man made in the image of God. It degenerates and deadens all the senses of moral decency (Gen. 9:22; Hab. 2:15, 16).

Prohibition is not contrary or obstructive to true temperance. We will never see the time under man's reign when there will be temperance in all things. It is too much to expect. On the contrary, intemperance will increase. This is no reason for discontinuing our fight against that great enemy. Our boys and girls need all the legal and governmental protection that it is possible to give them. We should curb every temptation possible. The greatest moral victory the churches ever accomplished was the enactment of the prohibition act. For the sake of our boys and girls let us keep it a law. Why license an institution that is going to debauch, corrupt, and perhaps eternally to destroy the flowers of our land, the boys and girls? Unless the Christian people assume leadership and marshal the forces for moral and civic righteousness in a great crusade against this serpent of every evil, we shall enter a period of crime and immorality never before experienced. Perhaps this will come anyway, but let us be found in the vanguard fighting for the right.—C. E. R.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Alcohol is a poison. Poison kills." Such was the slogan long before prohibition came into effect. It is no less true today. Dr. Kellogg of Battle Creek Sanitarium has this to say about alcohol: "Alcohol never, under any condition, increases the vital energy of the body. . . . Alcohol diminishes, never increases, the energy of the heart and hence is detrimental rather than beneficial. . . . Alcohol is never a tonic or a stimulant."

Dr. Howard Kelley of Johns Hopkins University says: "There is no disease in the world for which alcohol is a cure. It does undeniably cause thousands of cases of diseases. Its use is ruinous to the kidneys, liver, heart, and smaller blood vessels and gives rise to that most common fatality, high blood pressure."

Is not all this, or even a small part of it, equal to or worse than the bite of a serpent or the sting of an adder?—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT

We do not know when drunkenness was first known upon the earth, but we do know that Noah was drunk shortly after the flood. This led to a curse upon Ham, the progenitor of a portion of the human race, and made him "servant of servants" (Gen. 9:25).

Drunkenness and immorality have always been very closely associated. These two sins were, no doubt, what caused the overthrow of Babylon by God through the Medes and Persians. Students of history tell us that in the days of Nebuchadnezzar and his grandson Belshazzar nearly all feasts and social events were accompanied by excessive drinking and moral laxity. Women, becoming drunken, would lay aside their modesty with their clothes and mingle in the dance. Such was probably the type of feast that was in progress when the visible hand of God wrote its condemning message before the eyes of Belshazzar and his thousand lords.

Alexander the Great of Macedon conquered all opposing armies and subdued one of the most stubborn cities ever captured, yet he was conquered by strong drink and filled a drunkard's grave at the age of thirty-two.

Excess in drink not only destroys the morality and spirituality of its victim, but it degrades many with whom he comes in contact. God has condemned drinking from earliest times. Paul in his letter to the Corinthians stated most emphatically that no drunkard could "inherit the kingdom of God."—1 Cor. 6:9, 10.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

"Bob's dad says that this is a free country and that if a man wants to drink he ought to have the right," said John. "He says the law ought to be changed."

"Does he want Bob to be able to buy liquor and drink it if he wants to?" asked Bill.

"Oh, no, I should say not!" answered John.

"Does he want the man who drives the bus on which he rides to drink, or other car drivers they might meet?" Bill proceeded.

"Of course he wouldn't!" declared John.

"But if the law is changed so that everyone has a right to buy it, some of these fellows might, you know," said Bill.

"You're right; Bob's dad's argument isn't any good, is it?" was John's wise conclusion.

Nearly three thousand years ago a wise man warned us about the dangers and evils and sorrows that follow those who use strong drink, but still many have not learned the lesson. The deceitfulness of strong drink is one of its most dangerous points. The first effect is to deaden the nerves and brain to all pain and to dull the conscience to sin so that a false feeling of happiness is established. But soon the temptation to drink more in order to enjoy this false feeling leads to more and more indulgence, and in the end it "biteth like a serpent." Boys and girls, do not take your first drink!

Special problem: Why is drinking a greater menace today than formerly? If you know a railroad employee, ask him what "Rule G" is and why it is enforced.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

McGINTYTOWN, ARKANSAS

The Church of God in Christ of McGintytown called together the people, old and young, on Feb. 26, 1933, and organized a Bible class and a class for the children. C. E. Weaver was elected for superintendent; F. J. Snow, assistant superintendent; Mrs. Arley McGinty, Secretary-Treasurer. Vernon Martin is to be the song leader; Eld. C. E. Weaver, teacher of Bible class; Mrs. Martin, teacher of the young people.

Bible class is held each Sunday at two o'clock. Singing class meets each Wednesday night and Sunday night; and there is preaching by Bro. Weaver each second Sunday night. We invite the old and the young to come and take a part with us in this work, for we need your help and presence with us. Come and bring your children with you, one and all.

Mrs. Arlie McGinty, Sec.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The next Quarterly Prophetic Conference of the Church of God for Southern California will be held in the Williams Street Chapel in Pomona on April 2, 1933. Plans are not yet definite in so far as the actual program is concerned; but three sessions will probably be held: in the morning, in the afternoon, and in the evening. A feast of good things of the Spirit will be offered, as well as food for the mealtime. "Pep" talks are planned for the mealtime. We hope that all those of like precious faith with us in California will set aside the above date and try to attend. Matters of current prophetic interest are to be the chief theme of the day. The only complaint about the last meeting was that there was not enough of it. We ask that the church pray God's richest blessings on our efforts here.

Bro. and Sr. William Prickett arrived this week from the Hawaiian Islands, where he has been stationed for two years on assignment in the United States Navy. He has since taken his way to the Boston Navy Yard, where he expects to re-enlist and then be re-assigned for further duty. Sr. Prickett is staying with her parents, Bro. and Sr. J. E. Adamson, in Pomona until Bro. Prickett is definitely settled. Sr. Prickett has many interesting things to tell of Hawaii and its people.

Sr. Dora Courtney, formerly of Nebraska, but now located at Norco, California, has, after almost four years of fruitless effort, made contact with the Church of God again. She and her husband came to Norco about four years ago, but he died there during the month of January of this year. She was delighted to make the acquaintance of the Pomona brethren.

INDIANA

Bro. Willis Roose, Nappanee, Indiana, has informed me that the Conference treasury is overdrawn; and he seemed to have a somewhat anxious look on his face. Some pledges have not yet been paid; and if they could be received now, they would be greatly appreciated.

There may be others, also, who could spare a little now for the state work; and if so, kindly send it to Bro. Willis Roose, treasurer. F. A. Stilson.

GOOD NEWS

We are all hungering for good news. There has been so much to discourage people from a material standpoint that they need every crumb of comfort they can find. We are glad to be able to provide the faithful supporters of The Restitution Herald and the National Bible Institution with more than a crumb of encouragement at this time.

In completing our income tax report for the year the Institution shows a net gain of more than $800. This is the greatest net gain we have been able to show for years, and it covers a period of the greatest financial distress the world has ever known. May every member of the body thank God for the wonderful manner in which He has blessed our efforts to carry on His work.

Last year the report showed a loss of more than $3,000.

Of course what has been done the past year has been the result of most economical management, much sacrifice on the part of brethren and members of the institutional family. But the net gain was made, and by God's grace and continued favor we are going on—on until the Lord comes!

Another important item of good news which, by the way, is not included in the annual report as given above, owing to the fact that it came after the books were closed, is a splendid bequest in cash from the estate of a devoted sister in California. We will tell you more about that a little later.

It will require the continued united self-sacrificing efforts of the entire brotherhood to carry on the great task the church is doing, but that sacrifice will be made! The funds from the bequest mentioned are tied up for a time, and we must depend upon responses to the letter we are sending to our readers this week for running expenses, but they will come to our relief we know, for they are manifesting widespread confidence in the effort we are making to reduce expenses and to utilize every contributed penny to its fullest value.

May God bless you all.

G. E. Marsh, Secretary.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The pastor and wife were happy to have Sr. Geraldine Miller Stewart of Adrian, Mich., spend part of a day with them recently. Geraldine was the first person that the writer ever baptized. On Sept. 8, 1916, when he was just a boy preacher and Geraldine a school-girl, a carload of us, including her wonderful mother, the late Sr. Lulu Miller, went to the Raisin River for the service. Her visit was especially interesting, as we had not seen each other for many years. We were glad to know that her faith still burns brightly, and she is now a subscriber of The Restitution Herald.

On Jan. 27 the pastor went with Bro. and Sr. Pixley to Sunshine Sanitarium and administered baptism to Bro. John Floyd Ball. Bro. Ball is a tubercular patient who may have to remain at the sanitarium for some time. The members of the church here are doing their best to make him realize he is one of us.

A special weekly class on fundamentals is now being conducted. We hope several will be ready for baptism by Easter.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

PLUM RIVER (ILL.) IS HEARD FROM

The work at Plum River was progressing nicely until colds, whooping cough, and bad roads made the attendance rather irregular again.

It has been a real help and inspiration to have our young pastor with us regularly, not only in the pulpit but in our homes as well. We feel that we are making progress in learning more about the Good Book, and it is the greatest comfort we have in these trying times. We feel fortunate in being able to have regular services and hope we can continue to do so.

Maybe, sometimes, efforts seem wasted in a little church like ours where there is a great deal of indifference in the neighborhood and other handicaps; but these difficulties, like the troubles in our individual lives, may help to make us stronger.

The faithful efforts of Bro. Austin will always be remembered and appreciated here. Sometimes we cannot see the fruit of our labors, but the increase may be more than we know anything about. It seems that a happier, more progressive, and more enthusiastic spirit has permeated the atmosphere since his stay here.

We hope our church will keep on growing and improving; but I guess we will not compete with Grand Rapids very soon, at least not in attendance.

With best regards to all readers of The Herald,
Mildred Crofton, Sec.

Dearly Beloveds in the Lord:

Although so weak yet I can only write a few words at a time, then rest, I must tell you how glad I am to read the good things in our dear Herald.

My handkerchief is close by, and I often have to stop and wipe my eyes; for tears of glad joy fill them so full they will keep running over. I have so many things to be thankful for: my good home and the patient helpful ones in it; and especially am I thankful for my splendid nurse, Bro. Austin. How good God has been to give me such a son, so patient, never tired of asking, "Mother, is there anything I can do for you now?"

I often thanked God for Sr. Stitler, so kind and patient all the time when my mind was all wrong and I did not know what I was doing or saying. She stayed with me until Bro. Austin thought he could care for me, nearly three weeks. She is a splendid nurse, and we all love her. She reached home in Oregon in time to care for some of her own who were ailing. God bless her and her loved ones.

I do hope the members of our Sunday schools will read Sr. Gesin's page and keep their scrapbooks filled with her lessons. They cannot imagine how that will help them even in their school work.

What a splendid article of our long-ago President Roosevelt. How little we can realize the worth of such thoughts, recalled to our memories long after they were spoken. And dear Sr. Reed and Sr. Lottie Young and, O, so many others.

We are sorry for the many sick ones in the Grand Rapids church and elsewhere.

May we all patiently look to the dear heavenly Father for help and guidance. Much love to you all while we wait the Master's call.

Yours, waiting,

M. A. Woodward.

FELLOWSHIP OF SUFFERING

An interesting though pathetic letter reaches us from Sr. J. H. Davis of White Salmon, Wash. Sr. Davis writes of her loneliness brought about by the loss of her husband and a son, and of the widespread suffering occasioned by the inability of the farmers to find a market for their products, high taxes, and the indifference of the wealthy to the needs of the poor. She concludes her letter, saying, "Surely Christ is coming soon. The Herald is all the preaching I have in our faith. . . We all have our sorrows and our privations, but they will be turned into eternal blessings when our dear Lord comes to make all things new."

The universality of the distress that prevails today creates a fellowship of suffering throughout the world, and in the church has a tendency to build us together more closely in the blessed hope of a coming day of prosperity and life through Christ.

HOUSER - PAINTER

That great event which sooner or later comes into the lives of most of us was solemnized on the twenty-fifth day of February, 1933, thereby making John M. Houser and Dorothy C. Painter to journey down the pathway of life as "one flesh."

The event took place at the home of the writer in South Bend, Ind., the honored guests being Mr. Arthur Stilson and Miss Juanita Keller. After the usual felicitations and a luncheon the couple left for parts not generally known.

May the blessing of our heavenly Father always attend them.

F. A. Stilson.

SPECIAL OFFER OF TITHING LITERATURE

The Layman Company, 730 Rush Street, Chicago, will furnish to churches a set of bulletins for a tithing campaign, including one especially written for present conditions entitled, "Tithing in Hard Times." These bulletins have two pages blank for the use of the local church. Price list and samples sent on request include a pamphlet, "Teaching the Church to Tithe," containing full directions for a ten week's program of silent, church-wide education at trifling expense. Please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Sr. Edith Miller, one of the most active workers of the Dixon, Ill., church, who has been confined to her bed for several weeks, is now able to be up a part of the time. We pray that she will soon fully recover and be able to resume her place of usefulness in the congregation.

One hundred and twenty-seven at Oregon's Sunday evening service. The pastor spoke on "The Wandering Jew Turns Homeward." It was one of the extended prophetic series of sermons he has been giving this winter. Sunday school attendance was 130 as compared with 70 a year ago. The enrollment for the regular school is 144; with Cradle Roll and Home Department added it is 200.

Through the efforts of Bro. G. M. Birkey the editor is invited to give a prophetic lecture in the Methodist church at Flag Center, Ill., on the evening of March 14. His subject will be, "The Times in Which We Live," and the address will have to do with present world conditions and their significance. Much interest is being shown everywhere in the study of prophecy in connection with the rapidly changing events among the nations.

Why not preach a sermon on "The 'COMES' of God," showing how many times and in how many different ways God says, "Come," to the children of men.

As we go to press this morning the editor is preaching the funeral sermon of Sr. Rachel Etyre, formerly of Oregon, Ill., but for a number of years a resident of Ottawa in the same state. Sr. Etyre will be remembered by those who attended the Illinois conferences years ago as a devoted and lovable character. Obituary will appear later.

The article by Norman J. McLeod on "Technocracy" appearing on the front page introduces a subject of great interest at this time. A new theory of government is being developed by the scholars of the universities that it is declared will meet the perplexing economic and social problems created by the coming of the Machine Age. While not Communistic, the new political system would do away with the basic idea of profit and substitute for it an exchange value estimated in "ergs." We would welcome further authoritative articles on this subject, as there is a link of fact that binds it up with the coming of the antichrist.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed at an out-of-town bank. Thank you!

NATIONAL CASH REGISTER FOR SALE

We have recently taken in on an account a splendid, nearly new National Cash Register. It is of the latest design and sold originally for $350. A very fine machine and in perfect working condition. ## “JUST SIX BY THREE”

By Arlen Marsh

THE mournful words of “The Cowboy’s Lament” are not altogether unknown even among those addicted to the literature arbitrarily designated as “classical,” although the tune of ineffable pensiveness may have perished from the earth in so far as they are personally concerned. True, they may be unable to recite the little poem; but nevertheless, they, in common with others of apparently more depraved tastes, are forced by the experiences of those whose acquaintance they enjoy to recognize that sooner or later they must be buried “in a narrow grave just six by three,” whether or not that place of peace be situated somewhere “out on the lone prairie.”

For centuries and centuries men have sought to conquer their instinctive dislike of entering “the stone-cold tomb” by buoying up their spirits with the philosophies of the now-unfashionable exponents of auto-suggestion. “Every day in every way,” they insist half-heartedly, “we become surer and surer that we live forever.” And, wonder of wonders! like most such theorists they have enjoyed a certain modicum of success in their endeavors by convincing themselves that they really do live forever.

Perhaps it has been man’s vanity that has lent speed to the serpentine travel of the ill-famed lie which so disastrously insinuated itself into Paradise. Stubbornly the human animal has refused to demean itself by the acknowledgment that Solomon’s humbling assertion holds a grain of truth: “For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast; for,” comments Israel’s third king, “all is vanity.”

Of course, as in all things, there exist more causes than one for the effect now being dragged forth for discussion. Man is egotistic, his head does swell to alarming proportions with his own conceit; but over and above even this universal characteristic lies the fear of the animate to die, a fear as evident in the four-legged brute as in the two-legged one.

Fortunately for what the human biped designates as the “lower orders,” they are unable to amuse themselves (at least, to the best of our limited knowledge) with involved treatises and morbid conversations on the proximity of and probable sensations during death. Man creates such vague theorizings as that expressed by Poe in a letter to Lowell, “I have been too deeply conscious of the mutability and evanescence of temporal things to give any consistent effort to anything—to be consistent in anything”; but such sophistries as this have been denied to the more favored beasts of the field. Instinctively they recognize that they must die, and that is all there is to it.

On the other hand, man theoretically is happier in the midst of his delusion. He should be glad to die; for, in full accord with the tenet of the worship of old Isis, he believes firmly that “there is no hope except in death.” When the Great Scythe finally takes him, so he thinks, he goes either to the eternal bliss of heaven or to the endless tortures of the damned, who suffer in a hell not unlike the inferno which Virgil showed to Dante. In the one case he has no cause for worry; and since it is unlikely that he will ever stoke the fires, he has just reason to be happy, for from heaven he can in some telescopic way watch the anguished writhings of those who were his next-door neighbors.

Despite this joy-inspiring hypothesis, however, man still shudders when death is brought to him for contemplation. He may coerce his mind to a whole-hearted acceptance of Plato’s theory that, since we long for immortality, we actually possess it, for generations; but nevertheless, a kind of atavistic instinct sounds a half-heard and incomprehensible alarm warning of the truth of the Bible’s intimation that death is in dread reality an enemy. He may discredit the text of the pronouncement; but he cannot elude the uncomfortable sensation that the simple statement made by God to Adam, “Dying thou shalt die,” is virtually to come to pass.

These reactions are forcibly suppressed in all save a small minority. The scientist, the atheist, and the agnostic, unable to find an ethereal ka such as that in which the Egyptians professed belief, conclude that the dream of a soul separate from the mortal coil is an illusion. Few others are ready to accept at face value the further expression of Israel’s wise ruler, “Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.” They will not say with Miriam Vedder (“One Midsummer Morning,” The New Yorker),

“Thrushes will be singing
In the meadow still,
Timothy and clover
Ripening on the hill.
Nothing will be changed
Except the fact that we,
Being dead as doornails,
Sha’n’t be there to see.”

After all, there is no more to shatter our conceit in the thought that mollusca, beasts, and men are all of the dust and will return to it again than in the beautiful idea that all had a common ancestor in an inexplicable life-cell. As John Burroughs remarked, “It ought not to be a hard thing to accept the universe, since it appears to be a fixture and we have no choice in the matter.” Similarly it should not be difficult to recognize that sometime each of us must occupy the little space described by “The Cowboy’s Lament.”

But until the consummation of Jehovah’s plan puts an end to it, men will continue to suffer under and to take peace from the delusion that inherently they will live forever. “Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions.”

THEISM OR ATHEISM

PART ONE

PROBABLY at all times of human history there were men who, either in their hearts or openly in word, denied that there was any personal God. But certainly, at no time of past history, as far as we can judge, was such a denial so prevalent as it is now. The skeptical deism of the eighteenth century has passed into the atheism of the nineteenth. Under these circumstances it becomes all who value the great truth of a personal God, such as is taught us in our Bible, to do all that lies within their power to maintain and to advance that truth. The establishment of atheism as a truth would, we are firmly convinced, hand over the race of man to unbridled wickedness, to abject despair, and at length to extinction. In this and, perhaps, some following papers we propose to put forward thoughts which have occurred to us from time to time as we pondered on the great mystery of God.

The state of things in that part of the universe which is embraced more or less in our knowledge is somewhat thus: there are in existence vast material worlds to which we do not attribute any of the actions or thoughts which we attribute to what we call thinking beings; there are also conscious thinking beings such as we feel and know ourselves to be.

Of our own nature we know much, though even in it there are depths which we have never sounded. We are conscious of the possession of what we call life. While we should feel a great difficulty, perhaps an impossibility, to prove its possession, we do not want to prove it, for we know within ourselves that we have it. We are conscious, also, of acting with certain objects in view. We know, also, that we work at will, and at will cease to work. We are conscious of the possession of various passions and affections and aspirations, productive of what we call pleasure or pain, on the exercise of which we pass our censure or praise.

No subject is of greater importance to the Christian world today than that which has to do with the spread of skepticism. The following, which is the first of a series on the same theme, is from the pen of one of the most able religious writers of the past half-century, Henry Constable, author of "The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment," "Hades, or the Intermediate State of Man," and other equally well-known works. The series was selected for re-publication in The Restitution Herald by Rufus A. Curtis.

There are also creatures below man, but in some very important respects like him. They are possessed of life, just as man is. They have reason, though it is of an inferior order and exercised on lower objects. In instinct they are superior to man. They are capable of pleasure and pain, of affection and resentment, and of other affections like those of man.

There are also material organizations of wonderful extent, arranged in marvelous order, productive of certain effects. We need only refer here for a moment to that which is called our solar system. The great central body of light and heat with its planets and their satellites is, indeed, a wonderful system, governed by a marvelous system of law. But, apart from various living creatures which exist or may exist on some one or more of the bodies of which the solar system is composed, we do not attribute to this vast mass of matter qualities which we do attach to man and the creatures below man. To the mass of which the sun or any of its planets may consist, we do not attribute life or will or purpose or hatred or love or many other qualities which we do attach to man or beast and suppose to belong properly to their constitution. No conduct can draw forth from them approval or disapproval. Any works they may perform are done without any conscious object in view. They work by laws which compel them to their works, of which they know nothing and in which they take no pleasure.

Now the question with us is, Whence are all these? It is admitted universally that in their organized form none of them have existed from eternity. Whatever may be thought of the matter of which in whole or in part they may be composed, it is never supposed that they have existed in the form of which (Please turn to Page Nine)

The Editor's Prayer

OUR FATHER, we stand perplexed, and yet assured, today; anxious, and yet rejoicing, as we watch the happenings in the world about us. We are perplexed, not because of the conditions that exist, for all these things have been predicted; but we are perplexed at the indifference and lack of concern manifested by Thy people in the fulfillment of the prophetic Word. We are anxious, not for ourselves; but for the sinful world that faces the tribulation now so rapidly approaching. Keep us faithful, we pray, for Jesus' sake. Amen.
