SHOULD WE QUESTION?

By M. W. Perrine

IS IT proper to question a doctrine or a statement made by an inspired writer for the purpose of instruction in the things pertaining to God's great plan of salvation, the things concerning the kingdom of God, which Paul says are the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believes? While the inspired Word has a much greater influence upon the one who is inclined to take the Bible as the inspired oracle, yet even the writings of uninspired men have their influence to a less degree upon the one who is striving with the whole heart to obtain a knowledge of God and of His Son Jesus Christ, which Jesus declared is life eternal (John 17:3). But we must take our stand upon a sure foundation; and the Apostle Paul says in Ephesians 2:20, "Upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."

Now the question is: How can we be certain that we are building upon that sure foundation? There are multitudes of people, and we meet them almost every day, that are just as sure as we are that they are building upon that good foundation; and by testing their teaching by the Word, which is the only standard, we are compelled to say they are not. We should take the example of those Bereans, who were called by Paul and Silas "more noble than those of Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so"; therefore, many of them believed. Search, and see whether the things taught are true even though they are taught by inspired apostles. Jesus said, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Settle every item of your faith by the Scriptures.

A gentleman said to me, "I have an immortal something within me that is like God, that will never, never die. The Bible calls it an immortal soul which flies away at death and goes back to God who gave it."

A wonderful statement, and of the greatest importance if true. Take Jesus at His word, and search.

God made this statement when He created man: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Gen. 2:7. Just two items enter into Adam's make-up: the dust of the ground to form the man and the breath of life from God that caused him to live. It is said in Job 4:17, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" The man is said to be mortal and made of dust. Was there anything immortal about the breath that God breathed into man? If so, the beasts have the same breath; and so the beasts must have an element of immortality in them, also. See Ecclesiastes 3:19, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Where do you see any evidence of anything immortal in that statement?

When man dies, what happens? Ecclesiastes 12:7: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." "Breath" and "spirit" come from the same Hebrew word and mean the same thing. God breathed the breath or spirit of life into Adam's nostrils, and the same breath or spirit returned to God who gave it. I see nothing immortal in that breath. It came from God and went back to God. No more immortality was in the breath than there was in the dust-made man. He must put immortality on at the resurrection. It would take a philosopher to see anything immortal in breath. Plato saw it and promulgated it, and people believed it without its ever having been once mentioned in the Bible that man has an immortal soul. Nearly the whole world has swallowed that doctrine; only the little flock stands out against it.

Paul says in 1 Timothy 6:12, "Lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called." How could Paul lay hold on eternal life, seeing that Jesus said, "I am the life"? Lay hold on it in the same way that you lay hold on Jesus, by faith, in the same way you lay hold on all the great and precious promises of God. Paul, speaking of Jesus Christ in 1 Timothy 6:15, said, "Which (Please turn to Page 9)

GRANT US LIGHT

O grant us light, that we may know
The wisdom Thou alone canst give;
That truth may guide where'er we go,
And virtue bless where'er we live.

O grant us light, that we may see
Where error lurks in human lore,
And turn our doubting minds to Thee,
And love Thy simple Word the more.

O grant us light, that we may learn
How dead is life from Thee apart,
How sure is joy for all who turn
To Thee an undivided heart.

O grant us light, when, soon or late,
This present life shall pass away,
To rest in Thee until the gate
Shall open on eternal day.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

AGAIN we cross the portals of a new year in the history of our paper. Twenty-two years ago the first number came from the press, and from that day to this it has continued to herald forth the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and the blessed news of a coming Savior. Thousands have been reached with the message of salvation, warned that the wages of sin is death, and inspired to faith and obedience to the gospel which alone can save.

Throughout this entire period it has not been found necessary to change the general policy and purpose of the publication in any essential feature. Its teaching remains the same that it was nearly a quarter of a century ago. An announcement in the first issue from the pen of S. J. Lindsay, its editor, may well be repeated here as expressive of the settled aim of THE RESTITUTION HERALD: "It is the purpose of the management to give the brethren a good, clean, religious paper filled with the best that can be had on the fundamental principles of our faith."

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

MANY serious-minded Christian people are deeply regretting what they term "the passing of the religious press." That religious journals generally are not only losing in circulation but declining in influence is clearly apparent. This condition no doubt is due to the same causes that have produced the present wave of indifference to religion everywhere.

Indefiniteness in teaching and a disregard for doctrine among religious leaders is largely responsible for the situation that has developed. Some years ago the writer asked a business man why men took so little interest in religion, why they did not attend church more regularly. His response, given somewhat apologetically, was this: "Men generally do not go to church or take an interest in religion because you ministers in the pulpits obviously do not believe what you give the people in the pews."

That was a somewhat harsh arraignment of the clergy, but possibly not so unjust as it at first appears to be. What this man meant, as he afterwards explained, was that ministers generally were lacking in definite convictions. They seemed always uncertain of their ground. In their treatment of the Bible they were apparently not altogether sure of its divine authority. The force of their preaching was lost through the doubt which thoughtful men could observe in their manner and expression.

The trouble with the religious press today is that it is coming to reflect the uncertainty of mind of the clergy. This is one of the reasons why it is given over to moral platitudes and political reforms. It can speak on these subjects with more or less assurance. But to be effective and acceptable in religious matters it must be equally aggressive and positive there.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD will continue to speak with positive conviction concerning the coming and kingdom of Christ; the return of Israel; the fulfillment of prophecy; the certainty of life out of death by a resurrection from the dead; the necessity of baptism by immersion into Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, such baptism to follow, not precede, faith in the gospel; and a life guided in its service by the Spirit of Truth as it is revealed in the Bible. The Lord willing, we rededicate the new volume of our beloved paper to this purpose.

God's Longsuffering

By George B. Alldridge

"And account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation."—2 Peter 3:15.

PAUL'S words spoken to the Athenians as he stood in the midst of Mars' Hill are searching to us who profess to be active in God's vineyard: "And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent: because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

We shall complete the text at the head of this article: "Even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you." What was it that Paul wrote? Here it is in Romans 2:3, 4: "And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God? Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and longsuffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?"

The Scriptures offer no consolation to the wicked, who die in their sins out of Christ. "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12. Here is a text rarely quoted (Psalm 73:27): "For, lo, they that are far from thee shall perish: thou hast destroyed all them that go a whoring from thee."

Of course, we all hate sin. I wish to quote one of the world's wisest men, the late Professor Huxley, who wrote: "When I consider the present order of the human race, and realize how hopeless is man's condition, I sometimes feel that it would be a blessing if some friendly meteor or comet should strike the earth and burn it to a cinder."

With what force Paul's words come home to my heart this morning: "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men; but we are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences."—2 Cor. 5:11.

We sometimes in emphasizing God's marvelous love and forbearance treat His judgment somewhat disparagingly. But as Paul stated to the men of Athens, "The world will be judged." This will be the time when men will realize the seriousness of rejecting Jesus Christ, God's well beloved Son. Before Him will be gathered all the nations of the earth; the books will be opened; and He, God's Anointed One, will search every heart under the auspices of His righteous government.

Christ has through His servant John in the book of Revelation warned the world that wars, famine, pestilence, disease, and earthquakes will be poured upon men and that the hearts of men will fail them for fear of the things that are coming to pass upon the earth. They will cry for the rocks and the mountains to fall on them and hide them from the wrath of the Lamb of God. If men but knew what terrible judgments await this Christ-rejecting world!

Jesus said Himself, "And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."—Matt. 24:22. I read Zechariah 13:8: "And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein." This most surely points to the future; and that future is not, according to the signs of the times, very far off.

"Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?"—Heb. 2:3. Oh, to preach in clarion tones that now is this blessed dispensation of grace, now is the time of God's mercy, now is the time when reconciliation to God is made possible! "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Rev. 3:20.

I am well acquainted with Acts 15:13-18, but please tell me who are "the residue of men." Zechariah 13:8 says two parts therein shall be cut off and die. Now listen to the next verse: "And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them; I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The Lord is my God." These constitute "the residue of men."

Did Jesus mean these words: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost"? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

The late Col. Robert Ingersoll said, "This verse (Mark 16:16) is the most damnable verse in the Bible." Some writers say verses fourteen to twenty are spurious.

There are many verses in the Bible our modern higher critics would delight to eliminate, but that wish proves that Hebrews 4:12 is true: "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

How true to human experience the Bible is! For instance, Proverbs 1:24, 25: "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof."

The same writer said in Ecclesiastes 8:11-13, "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil. Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him: but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God."

Was there ever a time in the history of the world when the words of Peter were so true as today? "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Peter 3:3, 4.

Thomas Fuller writes, "It is observable that the Roman magistrates, when they gave sentence upon anyone to be scourged, a bundle of rods tied hard with many knots was laid before them. The reason was this: that whilst the beadle, or flagellifer, was untying the knots, which he was to do in a certain order, and not in any hasty or sudden way, the magistrate might see the deportment and carriage of the delinquent, whether he were sorry for his fault, and showed any hope of amendment, that then he might recall his sentence, or mitigate the punishment; otherwise he was to be corrected the more severely. Thus God, in the punishment of sinners, how patient is He! how loathe to strike! how slow to anger if there be but any hope of recovery! How many knots doth he untie! How many rubs doth He make in His way to justice! He doth not try us by martial law, but pleads the case with us. 'Why will ye die, O house of Israel?' And all this to see whether the poor sinner will throw himself down at His feet, whether he will come in and make his peace, and be saved.

"To sin against law is daring, but to sin against love is dastardly. To rebel against justice is inexcusable, but to fight against mercy is abominable. He who can sting the hand which nourishes him is nothing less than a viper. When a dog bites his own master; and bites him when he is feeding him, and fondling him, no one will wonder if his owner becomes his executioner."

If these words of Jesus burn themselves into our lives, "He that testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus," we shall desire to tell the story of Christ to all the world, once we come to realize that He is soon to return. I wish with all my heart He might come today. O, the joy of seeing Him and knowing that the end of all strife had come!

But I think of the millions even here in my own land who do not yet know Him. Maybe the Lord is delaying His coming so that His own might yet gather souls into His garner. Listen to Peter's words: "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

MANY ARE CALLED, BUT FEW ARE CHOSEN

By J. G. Haupt

FROM the very beginning God called upon man to do the things that had been commanded, but few heeded the wishes of the Lord. As a result, early the great flood came upon the earth. Noah appears to have been the only preacher. The Bible says that he was the preacher of righteousness. In truth, Noah preached that the men and women of his time should do right and not wrong. It seems that wherever he saw a group of men or women that seemed to be bent on something out of the way Noah raised the finger of caution and preached his sermon, "Do right, friends, do right." For years Noah spoke these words even to many thousands. Many were called, but the Bible says that but eight heeded the call. These were Noah and his wife, his three sons and their wives.

Sin continued until the building of the tower of Babel. Sin continued without ceasing. Scarcely a being heeded the wishes of God. The call continued, but obedience was hard to find.

Isaiah gives us the fine parable of chapter six. God selected a vineyard and cleaned it of everything that was against His wishes. He carefully planted it to the best vines that He could find. But the result was only wild vines with poor grapes, for sinful men filled the whole earth.

God sent selected men and women, even apostles; but the human family continued to disobey. God established His own church, God's church, the church of God; but men organized sects of their own choice, and after their own desires followed ways of disobedience. In Galatians 3:8, 9, the inspired Apostle Paul in strong terms tells you and me that if any man preach any other gospel than that which was preached by the apostles, any other gospel than the gospel of God and of Christ, let him be accursed, let him be anathema. This is repeated. To have the curse of God resting upon the preacher, the missionary, the Sunday school teacher, and all others that follow the weekly preaching is a serious matter.

When the Lord comes the second time to establish His kingdom, will He find the one faith on the earth? It is to be feared that the true faith will be scarce. Blessed are they that have part in the first resurrection, for there will be too many that have not been chosen. God does not need you and me. You and I need God.

AMID all the Babel sounds of earth heard amid the gathering of the nations, may we long more and more to hear what God has to say to us in His Word. May we search its pages more prayerfully, more diligently, more unremittingly, as the day of the Lord draws near. May we apply its warnings to the world, its consolations and its promises to ourselves. Christ is coming!

"The Valley of Decision"

By Norman John MacLeod

"And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

WHEN Jesus gave us that famous statement, "God is love," He did not mean to present to us a God who does not discern between right and wrong. The same Jesus that said that and told us that we must love our neighbor as ourselves could show Himself in bold attitudes.

In order to pass from one part of the city of Jerusalem to another, from the gate to the market place, it was much shorter to go across the temple courtyard. By the time of Jesus the temple court had become a scene of great disorder and disgrace. Stock herders drove their herds across the courtyard; all sorts of messengers followed the same route; the people of the city of Jerusalem (which at that time numbered into millions) could not easily raise animals for sacrifice, and so bought from these herdsmen. The rulers of Palestine, always on the lookout for means of making a little money, deliberately made the coinage of the day of diversified quality. Money changers were necessary. Large groups of them were, therefore, in the employ of the rulers of the city. Money changers, those worst of all "harpies," came into the sacred precincts of the temple itself.

Jesus' heart was filled with indignation when He saw them; He drove forth all those menials and set Himself up as a militant young reformer standing guard over the temple courtyard and cleansing it of its filth. Was that a weak-kneed attitude? When He called the rulers of the day, the Sadducees and Herodians, hypocrites, He showed little of the kind of meekness that is often associated with Him. He was gentle toward the weak and distressed and righteous, but to the wicked He was stern and unbending. That was in accordance with the character of God.

God's plan works on a basis of selection and rejection: selection of the good and the righteous, rejection of the evil and the unrighteous. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were selected because of their especially desirable characteristics. On the same basis Ishmael and Esau were rejected. Often those who were rejected were quickly dispatched, as were Ananias and Sapphira. The nation of Israel was selected from mankind, but only those were chosen who were worthy; others did not enter in because of unbelief. Noah and his few were saved out of the whole world because of their righteousness before God; all the rest of the world of his day were rejected because of their wickedness. Out of those of the children of Israel who journeyed toward the Land of Promise only two entered the Promised Land. That was no policy of laxity on the part of God; that was no attitude of indecision and unmoral nature.

With these cases in mind let us read again from Ezekiel 20: "As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: . . . and I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God."

How did God plead with the fathers of Israel when He brought them out of the land of Egypt? Let us cite a few examples. When Moses came down from the mount and saw the people gone into idolatry, he was furious. Did he let the children of Israel off with a scolding? Moses stood in the gate of the camp and called for those who were on the Lord's side; and the tribe of Levi came over. Then a thing which we often overlook happened; Moses, at the command of God, said: "Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour . . . and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men."—Exodus 32:25-29. That is the way in which God deals with rebels who forsake Him. When Korah, Dathan, and Abiram revolted against God and the rule of Moses, the earth opened and swallowed them. When Nadab and Abihu burned strange fire in the tabernacle, they were slain by that fire. When Uzziah in the days of Isaiah presumed to offer incense in the temple, the task of the priests exclusively, he was stricken with leprosy, even though he had been a good king during most of his reign. Then we read of the destruction of the host of Sennacherib and how God dissolved his whole host in one night.

When we read such a passage as that in Ezekiel 38:22, we can expect just such things to happen in that last great battle there mentioned: "And I will plead against him (Gog) with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone." Does that sound like mercy to the willfully wicked? Does that seem like compromise with evil?

There is no mercy promised to the wicked who persevere in their wicked ways. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him (not those that defy him). For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust. . . . But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him. . . . To such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them."—Psalm 103. Even the golden text of the Bible does not offer much consolation to the wicked: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16. Not all people should be saved to everlasting life, but whosoever believed on Jesus.

God is a moral God, a God of justice. We are, therefore, not surprised to read that in that great conflict that will take place in the "Valley of Decision" He will be against Gog; and by implication He will be for Tarshish. Why should God be against Gog of the land of Magog? Because Magog is the land of atheism; because Magog is the home of defiance toward God.

When, therefore, we read in the book of Romans that "all Israel shall be saved," we can be sure that it does not mean every man, woman, and child in Israel; but rather does it mean, in the light of the vision of the valley of dry bones (Ezek. 37) that both houses of Israel will be saved, not merely Judah. First the evil will be purged from Israel, but the same process will take place also among the Gentiles. God is going to plead with them in the Valley of Decision for His people and will turn the tables of the last centuries and will bring the Gentiles into captivity to the Jews. So we read: "Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land."—Joel 3:19. Return for evil as well as reward for good are the plan of God.

After the judgment of the Valley of Decision will take place that other part of the plan of God that is the one which should keep us ever faithful to His commands. The part of the true Christian should ever make him seek to spread the light of the gospel to new minds and new hearts. The part of the true church is to bring others into that fold while there is yet time.

Following the judgment announced upon Egypt and Edom we read: "But Judah shall dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation." Why? "For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: for the Lord dwelleth in Zion." We read also of judgment for the days mentioned in the second of Isaiah when the law will go forth from Zion: "And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Isaiah 2:4. The Valley of Decision is just what the name would imply: a place and a time when God will render His decision between those people who do righteously and those who do wickedly. Will you be on the Lord's side?

Stewardship of the Gospel

THE greatest and most indubitable present possession of the church is the Christian experience of reconciliation and fellowship with God through Jesus Christ. You and I have it as well as Paul and John.

Jesus represents it as the one supremely valuable thing, the highest good, the one pearl of great price for which a man may well part with everything else. He calls it eternal life, worth more than all the world besides. Paul exults in it. To him it is the heavenly treasure, the unspeakable gift. Words fail him as he attempts to describe it.

Christians in all ages have felt that this experience was the greatest blessing; and they have given the indisputable proof of the value they set upon it, when occasion demanded, by dying for it. Millions of Christians, perhaps you and I, would suffer the most dreadful deaths rather than deny the gift or be untrue to the Giver. And the reason is that it is our life; that it means peace, purity, and power; that in it we find assurance of faith, love for God and man, a new uplifting and broadening purpose, a unifying of heart and mind and will, and a freshness of joy and hope so blessed and vital that we know that it will never end.

SHARING THE GIFT

THE whole New Testament assures us that this experience is the gift of God. It is our own, to be sure; nothing is more truly ours; but love demands that we share it with others, and this is the first instinct of everyone who receives it. Indeed, we cannot keep it at its richest and best unless we do share it; and the more we share it, the more we have. We must be stewards of the manifold grace of God.

Oh, the selfishness of keeping it to ourselves! Just think of it! Here, let us say, is a man who has found a cure for cancer which is eating out his life. He secretly heals himself but fails or refuses to tell his glad news to the million sufferers from the dread disease. What would you think, what would the world think, of such a wretch? Yet you have received a cure for sin and sorrow and fear; and your lips are dumb in a sin sick, sad, and despairing world. You wrap your religion in a napkin and hide it in the secret of your own heart; and it is disappearing, eaten by the rust and canker of your selfishness. Is it any wonder that men doubt the reality of your experience if you speak of it or that they refuse to believe that they desperately need it if you never offer it to them? A dumb Christianity, only vocal through the formal preaching of a paid ministry, is more responsible for the world's unbelief than anything else. The fourteen year old son of a distinguished minister once said to me, "How can I believe what my father preaches when he has never said one word to me personally on the subject of religion?"

But, you say, may I not proclaim my glad news by a Christian life? Surely you may. If a man has the spirit of Christ, it will rule his whole life; men will see it in his face, hear it in the tones of his voice, discern it in his decisions and acts and in his attitude toward men and God. But living is not enough without the testimony of the lips. As the testimony without the life is empty sound and repulsive hypocrisy, so the life without the testimony is dwarfed, unnatural, and largely ineffective. We must have both. If we have experienced the blessed life in Christ, we shall find that with Peter and John we cannot but speak it forth. Witnessing is an essential and normal part of Christian living and activity. Jesus said, "Ye shall be my witnesses."

EVERY CHRISTIAN A MISSIONARY

JESUS' one method is, "Every Christian a missionary! All at it and always at it." This method is the oldest, the simplest, the least expensive, the most direct and effective. It is the method of the leaven, the salt, the light. Every Christian is to be a yeast plant, multiplying himself a hundred and a thousand times till the whole is leavened. Every Christian is to be a grain of salt, salting all in his vicinity. Every Christian is to be a ray of light, giving the knowledge of God to all on whom he shines. In other words, Jesus' method is that every Christian will be a witness, a herald, a missionary all the time. The point is that it is every Christian who is to serve thus, the milkman, the banker, the housewife, the child, the laborer, the grocer, the merchant, the professor, the carpenter, and every other sort of Christian, witnessing all the time and in every sphere of life.

Let us forever and finally get rid of the idea that the ministers are to bring in the kingdom. They can no more do it than the officers of an army can win a battle without the rank and file. This enervating dependence of the church on the minister must be ended. Let all the Lord's servants be prophets. Peter said that when the Holy Spirit was poured out, not merely prophets, but the sons and daughters of our household, the young and old, slaves and kitchenmaids, should prophesy. Peter, a fisherman, set the example, and three thousand were converted in one day. Formal, paid preaching alone will accomplish little. It is the unpaid, the voluntary witness, the witness who cannot but break forth in speech and song, who makes the greatest impression. While the church members sit on the fence and applaud or criticise the sword play and target practice of their officers on dress parade, no battle will be won. The rank and file must do the real fighting in a real war, for which we can expect a real victory.

WHY WE BALK

WHY is it that we balk at the simple plan of Jesus? Why is it that men will argue about religion, pay for it, wear themselves out for it, fight for it, and even die for it, and yet refuse to live it and witness to it? The answer is plain. It is because living it and witnessing to it are the hardest of all, and men take refuge from them in what seems less exacting lines of service. I said above that Jesus' simple method was the least expensive. So it is in dollars and cents, but it is most expensive in devotion and self-sacrifice. It demands time, thought, and prayer, faith, courage, and patience. It is just because it costs so much that the church still cannot be brought to adopt it, but our Lord will shut us up to it. All our methods are comparative failures or bitter disappointments. It is very evident that Christ will allow us to win by no other method than His, and the reason is that His loving heart sees that there is no other way really possible or adequate and that no other life is so rich and blessed as that which this way demands.

THE MAIN BUSINESS OF LIFE

BUT all this is empty talk unless we are ready to rise to a new plane of Christian devotion and living, unless we are ready to make the winning of men to Christ and the founding of the kingdom of God the main business of life. A Chicago business man, imbued with this spirit, said, "My business is to preach the gospel; I pack pork to pay expenses." That is the idea which made the early Christians victors in the face of far greater obstacles than we can conceive, the idea that has reigned in the hearts of all the conquering churches in heathendom. All great revivals which prove by their scope and depth that they are the breath of the Spirit start with the great idea that religion is the main business of life and instantly manifest a new and strong impulse to propagate the spirit of Jesus to needy men. They do not begin with new methods, new doctrines, or new philosophies, but with a new wave of divine energy, an intensifying of the religious life, a higher plan of sustained enthusiasm, a deeper spiritual power and earnestness, a rising of religion to the fusing point. It has to be just about so hot before it can really kindle new fires in cold hearts.

Are you ready for this higher devotion? Will you today cease selfishly to keep your religion to yourself and begin as a good steward to dispense the unspeakable gift of spiritual life to others? Will you in prayer today consecrate yourself to soul-winning as the main business of life?

If not, why not? Is it because your religion is so weak and poor that it is not worth offering to others? You can have the genuine article in five minutes if you will really repent, surrender to Christ, and trust in Him. Is it because your life is not consistently Christian? By God's grace you can change it today. Is it because you have become skeptical of men's need of Christ's religion? Look about you with keen and sympathetic eyes on the world's sin, confusion, sorrow, and despair, and think what you would have been without God and without hope in the world. Is it because you do not really love your Christless neighbor? Deeply probe your heart with that question.

The loving response to Christ's call to every Christian to be in his own sphere and way a witness and a missionary will give new life to the individual believer and to the church. It will solve all our problems at home and abroad, spiritual, organizational, social, and financial. It is the test and mark of a living church. The unspeakable gift is bestowed on us to dispense to others. "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."—Frederick L. Anderson.

WAITING FOR CHRIST

"Waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Corinthians 1:7, 8.

WHAT a number of times all through the Scriptures do we find this word "wait." On his dying bed the patriarch Jacob, his mind taken away down to the last days of his descendants on the earth, cried out, surely in ecstatic anticipation, "I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord!"

And what salvation was that for which this man of God, such a long time ago, had waited? Why, it could only have been the same as that for which the people of God now are still patiently waiting. It was that ultimate salvation about which the great God made promises when He spoke of the Seed of the woman yet bruising the head of the serpent. The same thing was in the covenant affirmed to Abraham, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed," and repeated to both Isaac and Jacob.

It was the same also in the Psalms: "I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope. My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning."—Psalm 130:5, 6.

It was the same ultimate and glorious salvation the prophets were constrained to write about. "And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."—Isaiah 25:9. It was also of the coming time of glory the message came to Habakkuk, "For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."

The aged Simeon was also waiting for the Consolation of Israel; so when he saw the holy Child, he cried out, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation." And those who now wait the return of their Lord are plainly told that they, also, are going to see Him, precisely as He is. It is for Him every true believer is called upon to wait. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord." And Paul tells how the earnest expectation of the creature is waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. "Even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Again our thoughts are lifted up to the heavens and the blessed Son of God is there seen waiting the time when His enemies are to be made His footstool. The early Christians were converted to serve the only true and living God and to wait for His Son from heaven, while the earnest prayer of the Apostle Paul was this: "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ."—2 Thess. 3:5.

So thus we see how heaven and earth, and indeed the whole universe, have been set on waiting for the glorious deliverance that surely is coming. The time of waiting has been long. I often meet with dear saints of God who mention how they began the waiting for the return of Christ many a long year since, and still they go on to wait. And what else is there to be done? If we could imagine ourselves as being without that blessed hope, is there anything at all that can take its place? We know there is nothing. The hope of the return of Christ is all we have. There is nothing else in all the universe of thought or being that can take its place. But, thank God, there is no need for us to lose it.

The time of waiting seems long. Any time of waiting is the same. From the time we begin to wait there is always a tendency to impatience. It is the waiting that does it. The longer we have to wait, the more marked is the sense of longing, the more desirable is that for which we wait, the greater is the yearning for its achievement.

It is a real hunger we have. The longing for the return of Christ is deep and persistent. So there arises a measure of impatience. It is a danger, especially for the waiting ones who are getting on in years. The Father graciously recognizes the tendency, and more particularly as the time of the mighty event is seen to be drawing near. "Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."—James 5:7, 8.—The Advent Herald.

PRAISE FOR FAITH

Of all the gifts Thine hand bestows,
Thou Giver of all good!
Not heaven itself a richer knows
Than my Redeemer's blood.

Faith, too, the blood-receiving grace,
From the same Hand we gain;
Else, sweetly as it suits our case,
That gift had been in vain.

Till Thou Thy teaching power apply,
Our hearts refuse to see,
And weak, as a distemper'd eye,
Shut out the view of Thee.

Blind to the merits of Thy Son,
What misery we endure!
Yet fly that Hand from which alone
We could expect a cure.

We praise Thee, and would praise Thee more.
To Thee our all we owe:
The precious Saviour, and the power
That makes Him precious, too.
—William Cowper.

"WHY not study the scriptural meaning and benefits of tithing?" is the profitable suggestion of Elder A. E. Hoskins in his church bulletin.

SHOULD WE QUESTION?

in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords: who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see: to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen." After reading this, where is the mortal that would dare say, "I have immortality"?

But did not Jesus say in John 5:24, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation." Yes, indeed; but is there not such a thing as having a right and title to certain valuable property and at the same time, not being in possession of it? And the owner may not come into possession of it for years.

Let me give you an example of just such a transaction: "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life."—1 John 5:11. Is that not just as truly yours as though you had it in your possession? It surely is, for God is the giver. But where is the life? "And this life is in his Son," deposited in the Son for safe-keeping. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." There is but one way of having Christ. Paul says in Ephesians 3:17, "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." He also says, "Christ in you, the hope of glory." Then you will have the life in the same way as a matter of faith and hope.

Jesus said you will get your eternal life in the world to come (Mark 10:30). Then why claim to have it in this world? He tells you in the same chapter what you will get in this time, but it is not eternal life.

The same false doctrine is apparent in those who teach the going to heaven at death. One lie taught calls for another to sustain it. The doctrine that man has an immortal soul calls for a place in which that soul may dwell between death and the resurrection. So heaven or paradise or some other place must be set apart as the place for that soul to dwell in, notwithstanding Jesus' positive declaration to the Pharisees in John 7:33: "Then said Jesus unto them,"—and we do not wonder at it, for He called them hypocrites—"Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that sent me. Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come." Then to His own beloved disciples He said, "Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me, and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come, so now I say to you." Then add to that what He said to Nicodemus in John 3:13: "And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven."

Then Peter on the day of Pentecost said, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne: he seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell (hades, the grave), neither his flesh did see corruption."

Christ's soul—all there was of Him—rested in the grave three days and three nights; and yet they teach that He went to Gehenna, the hell of the wicked, and preached to them there! What awful lengths men will go to in order to sustain a doctrine. But what about David? Did he go to heaven? Acts 2:34: "For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool."

Will anyone who professes to love Jesus and to love the truth stultify the One "who spake as never man spake," and always the truth? They do nothing less than to make Jesus a liar!

We have no immortality in this life, but we put it on at the resurrection if worthy. "Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep"—the sleep of death—"but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." It is this mortal body that will be clothed with immortality, not an immortal soul, and that at the resurrection. May the Lord help us to believe it.

Surely we have a perfect right to question all these false statements and test them by the written Word. Search!

TO PREACHERS

WHATEVER may be said of Lyman Abbot's liberal theology, he is capable of giving good suggestions as to preaching. We take the following from an exchange:

"The best way to make people attend to the preaching is to give them something to attend to; and the best way to keep a congregation wide awake is for the preacher to be wide awake himself. Let a God-sent man come with the message and the methods of the Prophet Ezekiel, smiting with the hand, and stamping with the foot (Ezek. 6: 11); let the Bedford tinker come with his homely parables and his speech that none can misapprehend; let the honest workingman come with his accent of conviction and his common talk for common people; let the student come with plainness of speech and frankness of utterance, instead of his seminary essays, his Hebrew roots, his Greek derivatives, and his Latinized vocabulary; let him put away his rhetorical flourishes and artistic and artificial tones, and talk to the people, and they will hear him."

—H. H. Jones in the Messiah's Advocate.

Abreast of the Times

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:21. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42:9.

Egypt Still Prosperous

"He shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt."—Daniel 11:43.

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—Former Secretary of Agriculture William M. Jardine, who is retiring after three years as United States Minister to Egypt, said on his return to this country that Egypt still was one of the most prosperous countries in the world and her rich agricultural resources created a new crop of wealth annually of $500,000,000 to $650,000,000.

(The Nile River Valley is perhaps the richest agricultural region in the world. It comprises the Nile River Valley proper together with the Delta. The fertility of the region is due entirely to the river itself, which not only brings down deposits of rich soil from the distant mountains, but also by its annual rise and overflow provides for irrigation. It supports the most densely populated farming territory on earth, having about three persons to each acre of land. Egypt has an important place to play in future prophetic fulfillment.—Ed.)

Oxford Movement Deceives Many

"There shall be false teachers among you. . . And many shall follow their pernicious ways."—2 Peter 2:1, 2.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The Sunday Dispatch gave front page prominence to what is called a Church of England sensation, asserting that the national church was in danger of being split through dissension over the new campaign of "Buchmanism, or the Oxford group movement," which is rapidly gaining ground in England. This movement was termed by its founder, Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman, a native of Pennsylvania, "the answer to all the world's problems in the time of crisis."

The bishop of Durham, a leader in the Church of England, the newspaper declares, "attacks the new teaching. He alleges scandals of 'spiritual exhibitionism,' seemingly luxury and extravagance. The darkest shadow on the movement, he says, is the trail of moral and intellectual wrecks which its progress leaves behind."

Supreme Court Faces Poser

"He shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers' fathers."—Daniel 11:24.

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—Speaking before the Kiwanis Club, Andrew A. Bruce, professor of constitutional law at Northwestern University Law School and former chief justice of the North Dakota Supreme Court, expressed the profound hope that the constitutionality of the National Recovery Act would never be brought before the Supreme Court of the United States for decision. The eminent jurist seemed to question seriously the legality of the act and felt that its extreme measures could be justified only "under the theory of the inherent right of the people to a revolution," but could never be permanently sanctioned.

"There is not a bureaucrat in Washington," Prof. Bruce is quoted as saying, "who has the brains to solve the gigantic problem of the nation's industry."

Palestine Opens a New Gateway

"Ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves."—Isaiah 61:6.

HAIFA, Palestine, Sept. 26.—By forcing back the Mediterranean Sea from an area of about 90 acres, declares a correspondent of The Chicago Tribune, the Palestine Government has opened a new gateway to the riches of the East. It is the port of Haifa, which was built by the Palestine government at a cost of six million dollars.

"The ridge of Mt. Carmel, at the foot of which Haifa is located, affords a shelter for ships from prevailing southwest winds and the shore shelves at an almost ideal slope for quays and breakwaters. . . . Haifa's natural advantages as a port will enable it easily to outstrip Jaffa as Palestine's principal trade outlet, even though the latter is nearer Jerusalem and in the heart of the orange belt."

The opening of this port, which is to take place formally the last of October, means that a vast area of the Near East, "just awakening to western influences, can now be tapped for the trade of western countries with huge financial benefits also for Palestine. Jewish leaders in Palestine assert that trade through their country will be able to reach a population of 46,000,000."

New Crime Wave Threatens

"Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."—2 Timothy 3:13.

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—According to an Associated Press report, Col. Calvin Goddard, director of research at Northwestern University's crime detection laboratory, asserts that it is his conviction that the country is now facing a new crime wave of vast proportions which will signalize its presence in kidnapings, bank hold-ups, mail robberies, and business racketeering. Owing to the heavy tax placed on liquor, he said, the bootleggers would continue to operate.

“THEY THAT TRUST IN THE LORD SHALL BE AS MOUNT ZION, WHICH CANNOT BE REMOVED, BUT ABIDETH FOR EVER.”—PSALM 125:1.

REFLECTION

WHEN I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies; when I read the epitaph of the beautiful, every inordinate desire forsakes me; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tombstone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see the tombs of the parents themselves, I reflect how vain it is to grieve for those we must quickly follow; when I see kings lying beside those who deposed them, when I see rival wits placed side by side, or the holy men who divided the church with their contests and disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the frivolous competitions, factions, and debates of mankind.

A NEW SOCIETY

UNDER the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. William Hanson and Mr. Owen Barney a new Berean society was organized September 20 at Dutton, Michigan, Mr. Barney's pastorate for the Church of God. The society will meet each Wednesday evening at the house of one of the members. These officers have been elected: president, Owen Barney, Dutton; vice president, Mrs. William Hanson, Rt. 3, Caledonia; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Alberta Haines, Dutton. The new organization has ordered ten copies of Senior Book I for study. It gives the Michigan State Berean Society its second local society.

THE WITCH OF ENDOR

“And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?”—Isaiah 8:19.

SAUL had put those of familiar spirits and wizards out of the land, and now he was secretly going to one himself. God had said a witch should not live, but the king was apparently paying no heed to God's commandment. Saul had sinned greatly already.

In 1 Samuel 28 we find a very puzzling story: Saul, fearing the host of the Philistines, inquired of the Lord. But the Lord heard him not, so Saul secretly and slyly went to a woman of familiar spirits, hoping to speak with Samuel. Saul had so much faith in the witch that when she told him what she saw, he thought it was really Samuel. But Samuel had been dead for some time, and how could he prophesy when he was dead and reduced to ashes?

The witch of Endor could quite easily say that the Israelites would be captured, for she knew the conditions in Israel. She could also say that the king and his sons would be killed, for it was a custom then when a country was conquered to kill the king and part or all of the royal family. Then, too, she knew Saul had sinned and that the Lord was not with him.

A FOREST HYMN

The groves were God's first temples. Ere man learned
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave,
And spread the roof above them,—ere he framed
The lofty vault, to gather and roll back
The sound of anthems; in the darkling wood,
Amid the cool and silence, he knelt down,
And offered to the Mightiest solemn thanks
And supplication. For his simple heart
Might not resist the sacred influences
Which, from the stilly twilight of the place,
And from the gray old trunks that high in heaven
Mingled their mossy boughs, and from the sound
Of the invisible breath that swayed at once
All their green tops, stole over him, and bowed
His spirit with the thought of boundless power
And inaccessible majesty. Ah, why Should we, in the world's riper years, neglect
God's ancient sanctuaries, and adore
Only among the crowd, and under roofs
That our frail hands have raised? Let me, at least
Here, in the shadow of this aged wood,
Offer one hymn,—thrice happy, if it find Acceptance in His ear.—William Cullen Bryant.

SHARING THE GOOD NEWS

HAVE you ever been the first one to hear the happy news that somebody greatly loved or very interesting or highly honored is coming to visit your home, your school, or your community? You could hardly wait till you could tell Father and Mother, your teacher, or your schoolmates. The minute you knew it for a certainty you just felt as if you would burst if you couldn't tell somebody, didn't you?

You know, I think that is the way Saul felt after he believed the message that Jesus, whom he had fought against so hard, was really the Christ, the One sent by God to be the Messiah of Israel and the Savior of the world. Just as soon as he had obeyed Jesus' command by being baptized, he started right in to tell those around him this good news. He just couldn't keep it to himself, and he was so full of enthusiasm about Jesus that he showed it in every word and action.

Pretty soon the Jews began to get angry at him; they didn't want to hear that Jesus was their Messiah, and so they plotted to kill Saul. But the disciples, who had been afraid of Saul at first, knew by this time that he was in earnest, and they saved his life. Do you know how? Look in Acts 9:23-25, and find out. It must have been a very exciting night!

From Damascus that night Saul, whom we now call Paul, went to Jerusalem, hoping to help the disciples there preach the gospel. But they were afraid of him, and no wonder! Hadn't he been the one who had put chains on the Christians and dragged them to prison? They couldn't believe he had been converted. But Paul found one friend who stood by him and later went with him on many a trip preaching the gospel. Do you know that friend's name? It has three a's and two b's in it.

In spite of having such a good friend, trouble was still in store for Paul. Because he could speak Greek he went into the synagogues of the Grecian Jews, for he wanted everyone to know about Christ. But they planned to make away with him, and once more the disciples came to his rescue.

Back to his old home town Paul went, and it was there that his dear friend found him and brought him back to Antioch. Barnabas must have been something like Stephen, that fine young man who had been stoned to death for preaching about Christ. The description of the two is a little alike.

For a whole year Paul and Barnabas stayed in the city of Antioch. They taught the people about Jesus, showing them how He came to tell everybody about His Father, going about doing good to all, and spreading the same good news that Paul and Barnabas did. And there those who believed the message were called Christians for the first time.

Now read the last four verses of Acts 11, and learn how these same Christians lived up to their new name. You've all heard the story, no doubt, about the young man who went away up north to work in a lumber camp for a year. When he got back home his friends asked him how he got along among such rough people, because he was a Christian, you know. "Why," he said, "they never found that out!"

Well, that wasn't the way with those first Christians at Antioch. They were trying to follow Jesus' example just as closely as they could. It must have made the disciples at Jerusalem very happy, and it must have helped them to follow Jesus' example better, too.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Write the number and title of this lesson across the top; under it, the golden text. Then draw your little map, showing the shore line of the Mediterranean with Tarsus in its northeast elbow; Antioch, south and east of it down around the bend; Damascus, south and a trifle east of Antioch; Jerusalem, south and a little west of Damascus, even with the north end of the Dead Sea.

Tell what happened to Paul after he was baptized; how he faced death while preaching the gospel. Draw a picture showing a part of the wall around Damascus, a gate to one side; over at the other side two or three men holding on to a rope tied to a basket, and Paul hiding in the basket while they carefully lower it over the wall. Near the gate draw two or three men watching in the other direction. Color the sky dark blue with only two or three stars shining. This ought to make a good picture for your page. Call it, "God watches over Paul."

Write the story of the offering taken up for the poor Christians in Jerusalem, using little drawings in each sentence in place of words, as you have often seen in your Sunday school papers. Then draw two men with their hands on each other's shoulders; underneath write, "Two Faithful Preachers—Paul and Barnabas."

PAUL IN ANTIOCH

Acts 11:19-30; 12:25

Devotional Reading: Colossians 3:12-17

GOLDEN TEXT

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.—Romans 1:16.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Christianity Solves Racial Problems.

Aim: To show the pupil that the gospel is intended for all classes and races of men.

Basic Truth: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation."

I. Foreign Missions Instituted. (Acts 11:19-21.) Forced from their Jewish associates by persecution, the early disciples were driven out among the Gentiles. Having but few of their own race to whom they could tell the wonderful story of Jesus and being unable to keep it to themselves, they preached the gospel to those who were not of the commonwealth of Israel and, no doubt to their surprise, found it appealed equally to them. Thus the first foreign missionary effort began. Each individual from that day to this who has been brought to a knowledge of Christ is indebted for his salvation (as far as human instrumentality is concerned) to foreign mission work. Foreign missionary activity is the most unselfish of service.

II. Home Missions Established. (Acts 11:22-26.) Home missionary work was established by Jesus when He sent out the twelve and later the seventy and restricted their preaching to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." It is natural that one should be more concerned about the salvation of his relatives and friends than he is about that of foreigners whom he has never met. Paul felt very strongly the call of blood and race. His constant desire was the salvation of Israel, although he devoted his life to the evangelization of all races. The disciples at Antioch labored earnestly for the conversion of the people of their own city, building up a strong and active local church, but at the same time found opportunity to carry on foreign work.

III. Christian Benevolence. Acts 11:27-30; 12:25.) Benevolence goes hand in hand with all forms of Christian work. The church at Antioch gave as freely of their means for the material relief of brethren in distant places as they did to help the needy in their own community. The Church of God is not a local body, but a universal one. Our duty reaches out in every direction as far as the love of God and the sacrifice of Christ reach.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Sowing: It is an undeniable fact that under physical oppression the human race multiplies faster. That was true of the Hebrews in Egypt. It was true of the colored race in our own country. It seems to be a quality peculiar to the human race as opposed to the lower orders of animal life. Mankind rises above imposed mental restrictions in the same way, particularly when these restrictions have to do with the religious life. It was so in the days following the death of Stephen, it was so during the Dark Ages, it is so today.

One young woman was heard to say, "I believed things when I was a child because my father said so. Since I am away from home, I have to prove the theory to those who have not heard it. Therefore, I study my Bible more."

Reaping: Now, as ever, God's Word must be carried to new fields by the words and deeds of individuals. Say to yourself, "The Spirit of Christ, working through me, may bring my neighbor to believe on His name." If you are isolated, it may be that by your efforts a church may be established in your community. Are you honestly anxious to be used thus by the Master? Do you study and live toward that end? If so, the reaping will not only consist of the new ones for Christ, but the growth of your own Christian graces will be a part of the harvest.

The steady growth of indifference toward God's Word and the rapid rise of cults in our own country may try the religious mind as thoroughly as the martyrs of early Christendom were tried. The present attack is far more to be dreaded, for it is as insidious as the opium habit. It creeps into our schools and even our churches without warning. Are you prepared to move ahead of this scourge, sowing the Word of God in the hearts of men, women, and children so that they will be steadfast to the end?—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."—Rom. 1:16.

Paul was not ashamed of the gospel, but proclaimed it wherever he went, knowing that it was the power of God to bring salvation to the believer. To the unbelieving one it meant nothing, but to the believer it promised life through the resurrection. Should we be ashamed of the gospel of Christ? No, never. It is the means of making a follower of Christ out of one who knows not the Father nor His Son.

The gospel was preached first to the Jews, but few of them accepted it; so it was then preached to the Greeks (Gentiles), and out of them a people is being taken to love and serve the Master. Like Paul, be not ashamed of the gospel, but believe it, for it brings salvation to all who believe and obey it.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Racial Problems and Their Solution

A complete application of the golden rule would alleviate all racial problems. As it is now, we distrust everyone who does not speak our language. Our foreigners have often entered our land with the best of intentions about becoming good citizens only to find themselves victimized by some who still keep within the letter of the law and by some who do not. They, too, learn to thwart the law.

Of all the religions of the world Christianity alone offers a solution to the race problem. Paul tells us in Galatians 3:27-29: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Christianity, like death, is a great equalizer.

The time will come when Jesus and those who have become one in Him will sit upon thrones to judge "all nations." Then "the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord . . . In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you."—Zech. 8:21-23. Christ, with His saints, must rule until He has put down "all rule and all authority and power."—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATES

Saul, afterward called Paul, arriving at Damascus where he had intended to treat cruelly those who believed in Jesus, found himself one of them because of the "light" that had shone in upon his mind. Imagine the surprise and the fear, also, on the part of those who had heard of Saul's persecutions! How did God use this very persecution to spread the gospel message? Read Acts 9:20, and learn what Paul's first work was after receiving his sight. "Straightway" describes Paul. Discuss the value to one's life of the possession of this characteristic. Paul's life was now in as great danger from the enemies of Christianity as the Christians' had formerly been from him. Even the Christians at first thought it might be merely a trap, but this did not discourage Paul. He at once set out upon his first missionary adventure. The gospel was so wonderful to him, he could not keep it to himself, but must see others accept it, also. Do we have a missionary duty today, regardless of how we are situated?

Starting from Antioch in Syria, to the seaport, Seleucia, by boat to Cyprus, where Paul and his helpers stopped at Salamis and Paphos, we find Paul preaching the very truth he so opposed formerly. What was that truth? What is noteworthy about Antioch (Acts 11:26)? Who heard the gospel message there? with what result (vv. 20, 21)? The famine prophesied by Agabus (v. 28) actually occurred when Claudius was emperor of Rome. Many of the Christians in Jerusalem suffered greatly because of it. How and by whom were they relieved (vv. 29, 30)?—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THIRTY-FOUR BAPTISMS

On Monday night before the third Sunday in August we began a meeting at New Hope, near Westbrook, Texas. On the following Sunday our hearts rejoiced when eight came forward, made the good confession, and were baptized. Leaving Westbrook, we went to Driggs, Ark., where we held a ten days' meeting, and the result was twenty additions to the church at that place. We then went to Havana, Ark., where one week's meeting resulted in six additions to the church at Havana.

It seems that there is an awakening to the gospel call in many places. We read with interest the splendid work being done among the churches. And those little items appearing in The Restitution Herald, "Between You and Me," are a source of comfort to us.

May the good work go on until the Master comes.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Recent days have seen the establishment of a new Bible class at Norco, Calif. Its numbers are not yet large but are very enthusiastic hearers of the Word. They consist largely of the family of Sr. Courtney and what few people Bro. Will Reid has been able to bring over from Riverside. We hope that as time goes on interest will bring others to join this class and enliven its discussions.

By the time this goes into print, the October meeting of the Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of California will be history. But for now we are anticipating a meeting the like of which we have not had before.

We have found such a voluminous correspondence to carry on and so much to write in the way of articles for The Herald that we have scarcely had time to collect our wits for getting into the harness for our fall work. The quarterly conference also has been busy-ing us in our spare moments to keep us from the visiting that we have hoped to do. But those who are scattered throughout Southern California may soon expect to see us and have a good old-fashioned talk on the things nearest the heart of the true Christian.

Norman John MacLeod.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Several changes have recently been made in the working line-up of our departments which we hope will be of value to the cause. The writer, who has taught the men's Sunday school class till recently, is now working with the young men's class, ages 16 to 24, and Bro. Fred Hall is teaching the men. In order to give his time and thought to that Bro. Hall resigned the Berean presidency, and Bro. James Cole is now filling that office. The adult class at Berean is having some interesting lessons and discussions on Thursday nights, and an attendance of forty or more in that one class is not unusual.

The furnace has been rebuilt and put in position, other improvements have been made, and the house next door to the church rented and fitted up by the Sunday school to comfortably care for the classes this winter. In the meantime the building fund is being developed and all look forward eagerly to a much larger building.

IOWA FALL CONFERENCE

The Iowa Fall Conference of the Church of God is to be held at Pleasant Prairie, near Lake View and Sac City, on Saturday and Sunday, October 7 and 8. Let us have as large an attendance as possible.

INDIANA EVANGELIST'S REPORT

The third Sunday of September was a glorious day with the Plymouth church. At the close of the morning sermon, which was on baptism, a lady came forward requesting immersion. Following administration of the ordinance, she, together with a brother and his wife who had been taught the truth and baptized by Dr. Brown, were received into the church. In the afternoon a sister who had previously been baptized was received into the North Salem church.

The following is a synopsis of the work during September, 1933: Twenty-one sermons were delivered: Pleasant View, 13; Plymouth, 1; North Salem, 1; and Hillisburg, 6. Fourteen were baptized: at Pleasant View, 13; and at Plymouth, 1.

The financial report for the month indicates receipts: Pleasant View, $37.25; Rensselaer, $24.60; Plymouth, $12.00; North Salem, $2.50; Hillisburg, $15.50; state conference board, $6.93; total, $98.78. Expenditures: Salary, $83.33; expenses, $15.45; total, $98.78.

In the future our appointments at Plymouth and North Salem will be on the fourth Sunday, Plymouth at 11:00 a. m. and North Salem at 2:30 p. m. The services at Hillisburg will be on the third Sunday in each month.

BEAR, ARKANSAS

Another joyful meeting closed last Sunday evening, September 24. This meeting began Friday night, September 22, in our new Church of God near Bear, "beautiful for situation" in the country in which we live. Bro. L. H. Shelton did the preaching. On Saturday night Bro. Tom Lynch, sister Mary's husband, a policeman, presented himself for baptism, and Sunday evening was set for it. After the morning sermon on Sunday another, Mary H. Kinsey, who had just arrived from Nashville, Ark., came from the choir to present herself for burial with Christ in baptism. Soon after a bountiful dinner, served out-of-doors, the two were buried by baptism.

Brethren, we anticipate the day, if our dear Lord remains away, of having an Annual Conference of the Church of God in our country. So with Jesus' and Philip's answer we bid you, "Come and see." We are to have preaching by Bro. Shelton or some other brother in our new church at least once or more each month, D. V.

Bros. J. M. Dorris and L. H. Shelton have showed themselves to be workmen that need not be ashamed—Bro. Dorris as a carpenter with his money and tools, and Bro. Shelton as a student in seeking to "rightly divide the word of truth." 2 Tim. 2:15, Diag.

Your brother in hope of life eternal,

Richard Alex. Humphreys.

AN UNEXPECTED VACATION TRIP

Stirred by the rapid fulfillment of prophecy in the days in which we now live and the profound significance of events immediately ahead of us, I am taking up an active work in the ministry and begin a series of meetings at Omaha, Neb., Sunday, Oct. 1.

I have prepared a chart, 10 ft. x 4 ft., beginning at the cross of Christ and covering the book of Revelation, especially pointing out the marvelous blessings promised to those who read and hear the things contained therein. There is the warning, also, of bringing upon ourselves the plagues mentioned in this book, should we attempt to add to the things contained therein; and should we take away the words of its message, God will take away our part in the book of life, out of the holy city, and from the things written in this Book. My thought is that God intends that the messages contained in Revelation, as they are unfolded or unsealed by Jesus Himself and become history, are meant for meat in due season to the household of faith. . . .

To me the next world-rocking event is the opening of the seventh seal of Revelation 8; and the events comprehended by this seal will culminate in our Lord's return, first for His bride, and followed according to God's order in the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth. The seven trumpets and the seven judgments cover Jacob's time of trouble. The church remains in the flesh through the trumpet judgments to complete her garments, righteousness of Christ; while at the same time the work of inviting the guests is accomplished, and this is done during the first three and one half years of trouble, followed by the marriage at midnight, with the meeting in the air.

Then follows the three and one half year period of the reign of the covenant-breaking Antichrist, or beast power, during which the seven last plagues will be poured out; this constitutes the most severe part of the great tribulation, and will be world-wide, fulfilling Zephaniah's prophecy (chapter 1) that the whole land will be devoured because of the Lord's wrath.

Praise God for His marvelous grace in the part we take as overcomers on the stage of drama which is rapidly being set in God's program. For the church will be with her Lord and escape the overwhelming scourges which are necessary in God's purpose to bring the remnant of the nations to a place where they will recognize Him as the Giver of every good thing and that He is over all and in all and His benevolent hand will in due time bring the fruition and joy of His promises to Abraham and his seed.

Trusting in God for guidance, wisdom, strength, and every material need, I am undertaking a tour of the East as a vacation. Among others, the following topics will be discussed in connection with the charts I have prepared: NRA: A Distress Cry of a Great Nation; what happens at the beginning and at the conclusion of the seventh and last trumpet sounding (Rev. 10:7; 11:15); Ephraim and Manasseh "in the last days" (Gen. 49); the importance of the study of prophecy, and especially the book of Revelation, at the present time; are many preachers teaching what others want, instead of declaring the whole counsel of God?

Anyone desiring to communicate with me may do so by addressing John Hammond, So. Omaha, Neb., Care Frank Harper, Rt. 5, up to Oct. 7; after that, mail sent to 7735 Hoskins Ave., Chicago, Ill., will reach me. Mrs. Hammond is visiting her oldest son at the Chicago address and it is her suggestion that I spend a few weeks in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and other points before we return to California. En route to California by automobile, if any of our people desire a discussion of Bible truth in a public place, I shall be glad to avail myself of the opportunity. Bro. Harvey Hobart of Los Angeles has been of great assistance to me in my studies of the seven seals of Revelation. He can be reached at 38th and Alameda Sts., Los Angeles, where he conducts a gas station. He is anxious to be of any help to others he can.

John E. Hammond.

ALMEDA PIKE

On Monday afternoon, September 11, we were called upon to preach the funeral sermon of Sr. Almeda Pike of Sanborn, N. Y. The service was not unusual, for such are being held day by day. However, the life of the one that had passed the threescore and ten mark was unusual. It is not known exactly when she was baptized, but it was around sixty years ago, much longer than the entire life of the average person. She was the fruit of that great old pioneer that worked this territory, Elder R. V. Lyon. He has been dead many years, but his work lives on.

Sr. Pike spent nearly all her life in Sanborn, and the greatest fact of all is that that life that was dedicated to the Master in early youth was an honor to Him, even to the eventide.

She leaves her son, William J. Pike; two granddaughters, Martha and Mary Pike; one sister, Sr. Mary Wagoner; and one sister-in-law, Sr. Louisa Sornberger, to mourn her passing. She was laid to rest in the Pekin cemetery to await the Master's call on the resurrection morn.

Subscription Rates.—51 issues per annum, $2.00; 6 months, $1.00; 3 months, 50 cents. Sample copy, Free.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed.

"THE DESTINY OF RUSSIA and Signs of the Times" is a cloth-bound volume of 96 pages by that able expounder of the prophets, W. H. Wilson, deceased. While this excellent work was written some years ago and before the recent startling developments in the north, nevertheless it is still of great value to the student of the Bible. BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Mrs. Tom Savage, Jr., of Waite Park, Minn., in renewing for The Herald, says, "Depression or no depression, we can't do without our paper."

"The Herald seems unusually good of late, and we surely enjoy hearing through it from those we have learned to love," declares Bro. Albert Siple of Hammond, La.

Remember, please, the special gospel number of The Restitution Herald will be issued on October 31, (D. V.), and will be of special interest to those who are unfamiliar with our faith.

We are glad to note the interesting meetings again held in Bear, Ark., and trust that lasting good may come from them.

Bro. and Sr. H. S. Bell and their son Guilford of LaCrosse, Wisconsin, spent Rally Day in Oregon. Though located where they have no opportunity to attend the services of the Church of God regularly they do not lose interest in the glad tidings of the kingdom.

On page ten we are introducing a new feature in The Restitution Herald which we trust will be of general interest and value. This department will not be provided every week, but as regularly as world events seem to require.

Articles designed for our special "Gospel Number" are coming in. Let us give this issue, which is to come from the press Oct. 31, (D. V.), wide circulation among our friends and neighbors.

"When these things," the sorrows and distresses that were to multiply in the last days, "begin to come to pass, lift up your heads and rejoice," declared Jesus, "for your redemption draweth nigh." Now is a time for rejoicing to God's people, both Jew and Gentile.

Writing from her home in Bentonville, Va., Sr. Mary F. Cook, in sending a remittance to help pay off the indebtedness against the National Bible Institution, says, "My prayer is that everyone will respond to this reasonable call. Pray for me, that I may be faithful."

Sr. Mary A. Woodward, beloved throughout the church for the service she has rendered in the past as well as for her Christian character, is seriously ill of pneumonia. Her son, F. L. Austin, is at her bedside in Lansing, Michigan. We pray for her recovery.

This is the time to plan for special fall and winter meetings. Some of the most successful evangelists of the Church of God are available, and this office will be glad to supply their names and addresses and to assist in any other way in putting on special campaigns.

Through the efforts of Sr. T. J. Ellis of Waterloo, Iowa, who secured the necessary permission to publish them, we will present in our next issue the first of a series of splendid addresses on Bible characters which were given over the air recently by Professor Lange of the English Department of Iowa State College of Agriculture.

Oregon celebrated Rally Day and Golden Rule Home Day in connection under very favorable conditions. The weather was delightful, the attendance large, and the various services much enjoyed. The morning service was taken up largely in the presentation of matters pertaining to the Home and its family. In the evening the pastor emphasized the security of the Christian under all circumstances.

With the official lists of ministers in from California, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, and Nebraska, the ministers listed show an increase in these states of twelve. We are anxiously waiting Arkansas, Texas, Washington, Michigan, Florida, New York and Ontario, Ohio, Virginia, the Carolinas, and others. The present list promises to be the most complete and authoritative we have ever issued. Please help us to complete it speedily!

THUS IT BECOMETH US

By Arlen Marsh

THEY stood on the bank of the ice-bound little river, a group of shivering, half-frozen men and women. Armed with a small ax, a man was stamping out into the stream, shattering the coat of ice as he went. They beat their hands against their sides and watched.

The man proceeded to the point at which his knees were submerged in water, pounded at the ice for a few moments, and turned in the hole he had made to face the crowd. "Ready," he chattered through lips blue with the cold. "Any time."

The group on the shore parted, and a woman stepped through the opening and into the water. With clenched teeth she walked slowly to the man who stood waiting in the midst of the stream. He held up a silencing hand.

"In the name of Jesus the Christ and upon your confession of faith," he declared solemnly, "I now baptize you for the remission of your sins."

He immersed her, covering her completely with the icy water. Together they strode to the bank. Hurriedly the party stepped into waiting cars and drove away.

Wilbur Ewalt, driver of the first car in the procession, glanced curiously at his companion. "Everett," he inquired, "why is it that anyone should be so unutterably foolish as to ask for baptism in that form when it's this cold?"

Everett Thorpe smiled. "It's a long story," he returned thoughtfully. "Six months ago Mrs. Eggleston wouldn't have been baptized if it were ninety in the shade, but she's been convinced that unless she is baptized by immersion she has no chance for future life. Since she's like me, she enjoys life; and, also like me, she decided that baptism was a cheap price to pay for it."

The other stared at him. "Do you mean to say," he demanded, "that you consider baptism to be essential to a man's salvation?"

"Nothing else. Even Jesus Himself felt obligated to be immersed, not sprinkled, mind you, but immersed. He told John the Baptist when John objected to it that 'thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness.' It's noticeable, too, that Jesus didn't receive the power of the Holy Spirit until after He'd been baptized. There's one principal difference between His baptism and Mrs. Eggleston's, though."

He paused. Mr. Ewalt looked at him questioningly.

"It was this: Jesus had nothing to repent of, since He'd never committed sin; but the Bible definitely teaches that repentance is absolutely necessary before baptism for any other man. It's an interesting fact that none of the apostles or early disciples ever permitted anyone to be baptized until he'd repented of his past wrongdoing and signified an understanding of the gospel taught by the Christ."

"Huh!" said Mr. Ewalt skeptically. "The Bible doesn't say a thing about having to repent or believe the gospel before you're baptized."

"No? But John the Baptist baptized only when the people confessed their sins; and Jesus, when He gave the great commission, said very definitely that 'he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.' He didn't say that those who believed anything would be saved, either, for just before this He told the disciples to go 'into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.' He implied that people had to believe the gospel, which consists of considerable more than repentance and a half-hearted belief that Jesus is the Son of God, and then be baptized in order to be saved."

The car bumped along the road and swung into a driveway.

"Not even Philip," went on Mr. Thorpe strongly, "would baptize the Ethiopian eunuch until he had told the man about Jesus and His teachings. In fact, he said very definitely, 'If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest,' when the eunuch asked for baptism. And he'd just been teaching the eunuch the gospel. Philip was directly inspired to do all of that, too."

"Um-hum," said Mr. Ewalt defensively, bringing the car to a halt beside a house, "but there were plenty of Jews baptized who hadn't heard the gospel. On the day of Pentecost, for instance."

"They knew it already. As Jews, they'd been taught all their lives that there's only one God, that His Son was to be born to save the world, that a kingdom was to be set up on earth under that Son, and all the other elements of the gospel. They only had to accept baptism as essential—after repenting of their sins, of course. Not only that, but they'd heard about Jesus for at least two or three years before they listened to Peter preach. They must have known what the apostles taught long before Pentecost."

Mr. Thorpe gazed reflectively at Mrs. Eggleston as her car drew up on the right. "She demanded immersion," he observed, "because Jesus was immersed and because He taught immersion. The word baptism means immersion; it doesn't have anything to do with sprinkling. So she decided that what the apostles and the Christ asked of their followers she needed, too. It's a good idea, if you ask me."

"Of course," he concluded, "baptism is for 'the remission of sins,' and it does cleanse all past sins; but it certainly is not intended to protect anybody from sins committed after he's been baptized. His past is wiped out, but his future is entirely up to him. That's a mistake that a lot of people make. They take baptism by immersion as essential and nothing else. But that's only the beginning. The repentance means that they turn away from their sin as well as feel sorry for it."

"If I knew you and you knew me—
If both of us could clearly see,
And with an inner sight divine,
The meaning of your heart and mine,
I'm sure that we would differ less
And clasp our hands in friendliness;
Our thought would pleasantly agree,
If I knew you and you knew me."

Abraham, the Man of Faith

ONE of the really great examples of American sculpture is Lorado Taft's Fountain of Time in the city of Chicago. The casual traveler may be puzzled as to its meaning, but if he stops to examine the facial expressions of the figures which appear to be passing in silent review before the shrouded form of Time, he will long remember the haunting wistfulness for something beyond the present which the sculptor has portrayed in those faces.

Now this desire for something beyond the present, wherein the incompleteness of today shall find its fulfillment in the morrow, belongs to the very essence of religion. Just as we are disposed to think that religion is merely a system of beliefs, so we are inclined to forget that it is also a way of life. Likewise we are inclined to depend too much upon creed and ritual for our inspiration, and we are prone to forget the power that may be derived from the lives of men and women who have sought the things of the Spirit.

It is generally admitted that the great source book of such life experiences is the Bible. Nowhere in all the world is there another book that contains the religious experiences of so many men and women. Young and old, rich and poor, ignorant and learned, good and bad, come and go in an endless procession across its pages, each individual living his own life for good or evil and finally passing from the scene either as a blessing or a curse to those who come after him. And in reading that record, we, like that shrouded figure at the Fountain of Time, watch the march of the centuries and ponder their significance.

Few things, then, are more worth while than to recall occasionally some of these figures whose words and deeds the human race will not willingly let die. One of the earliest of such personalities and one of the most interesting is Abraham, the first of the three patriarchs and the

Through the courtesy of Iowa State College and its radio station, WOI, of Ames, Iowa, we are able to give our readers a series of splendid addresses on Bible characters which were recently delivered over the air by Professor Paulus Lange of the English Department of the college. The choice of subjects and the reverent manner in which they are presented are refreshing indeed in these days of skepticism and speak well for the Christian character of this great agricultural school. The articles were selected by Mrs. T. J. Ellis, who secured permission for their publication in this paper.

ancestor of all the Jews, including Him who is known as the Christ.

Although the account of Abraham as it has come to us is not entirely consistent, the main outlines of his character are sharply etched. Two qualities are especially noticeable; first, his ability to comprehend the will of Jehovah; and, second, his complete obedience to that will. Any speculation concerning the manner in which the purpose and promises of Jehovah were revealed to Abraham is outside my discussion. This much, however, I should like to emphasize: In whatever way the revelation came to Abraham, he acted on it with such complete confidence and such absolute faith that he has become a pattern for all the ages.

Abraham was born in the valley of the Euphrates among the Chaldeans, a people akin to the Assyrians and the Babylonians. Some time after his marriage we find him settled with his father and his nephew Lot in the Chaldean city of Haran, about a hundred and fifty miles from the northeast corner of the Mediterranean, where Abraham remained until his father died. Then there came to him the command of Jehovah, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto the land that I will shew thee So Abram departed, as the Lord had spoken unto him." "The land that I will shew thee" proved to be Canaan, or Palestine, three hundred miles or more to the southwest.

Abraham's faith in the providence of Jehovah must have been sorely tried when he finally reached Canaan. Because the country was inhabited by warlike tribes who were constantly fighting each other, Abraham never knew how long he could remain in any one place. Soon after his arrival, a severe famine devastated the region. To save their lives, he and his household went into Egypt. After his return, trouble arose between (Please turn to Page 9)

WE THANK Thee, our Father, for the opportunity of serving Jesus Christ; for the privilege of being counted among those who labor with Him in the spreading of the gospel; for being permitted to give of our strength of body and mind and of our means to aid in the advancement of Thy great work in the world. WHAT'S IN THE PAPER THIS WEEK

A LETTER from a sister in the East says, "I certainly enjoy reading THE RESTITUTION HERALD, for there is nothing but good in it." As we read this letter, we were impelled to meditate on the place this paper occupies in our church life and to ask ourselves several questions pertaining to it. In what does the value of the paper consist? How much does it contribute to the progress and success of the Lord's work throughout the country? Does it serve to build up the spiritual tone of the body of Christ? Does it stimulate thoughtful, prayerful Bible study? Is it informative and educational in the highest sense? Does it keep our hearts alive and active and watchful for the Lord's coming?

As we continued our meditation, we were prompted to scan the "proof sheets" of the present issue that we might obtain a preview of what regular contributors, augmented by carefully selected articles from other writers, were bringing us in this week's paper.

On the title page appears a searching and appreciative analysis of the character of Abraham, that mighty man of faith and of courage. Sincerely written by a scholar of recognized ability, it brings before us with the vividness of a silhouette the portrait of him through whom "all families of the earth (shall) be blessed." Abraham's love for God, his unselfishness, and the intensity of his faith and devotion to Jehovah are presented in a most helpful and inspiring manner.

"Reconciliation!" What a wonderful thought! The pleading voice of divine love reaches us through the pen of T. A. Drinkard, "Be ye reconciled to God!" Bro.

Drinkard concludes, after a thoughtful analysis of scriptural evidence on the subject, that to be reconciled to God through Christ requires a sincere response on the part of the believer in the gospel by repentance, faith, and baptism; and that "therefore, reconciliation in Christ is conditional."

The responsibility and the obligation of the disciple to witness for Christ is logically presented in this number by Norman John MacLeod. "A great treasure," he says, "has been entrusted to us, . . . and it is ours to carry to a world in darkness." That treasure, he assures us, is that glorious light provided in the living fire of God's Word.

"In education we trust" has proved a deluding motto," we are told in "Can Education Save the World?" a selected article. The author contends that Christianity has not failed, but men have failed in not including in their curriculums "the fear of the Lord."

"It is a dangerous thing to carry a sword," asserts George B. Alldridge in "The Christian Warfare," wherein he contrasts the carnal wars the nations wage with the spiritual battle of the Christian; and he begs us to obey the command of Christ addressed to Peter, "Put up again thy sword into his place: for they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." A timely warning!

The effective simplicity of our Lord's teaching is explained in an article entitled, "Jesus the World's Greatest Teacher." This choice selection will be found to be of special interest to the preacher, the Sunday school teacher, and the Berean leader.

Under the general heading, "Abreast of the Times," a page is devoted to the relating of various events which are of prophetic significance, to which suggestive texts are applied. These call to our attention the fact that we are living in the most important period of the world's history when indications of our Lord's coming are multiplying on every side.

In addition to these articles designed for the older ones, Genniel Carpenter brings to us in the Berean Department matters of interest to young people; Mary A. Gesin provides for the still younger ones on the Children's Page; helpful comments on the Sunday school lesson find a place on page 13; and two full pages are given over to news of the churches everywhere. All of these help to provide a "feast of fat things" for old and young alike.

Jesus the World's Greatest Teacher

How apparently casual and unsystematic Jesus was in His teaching! He had no orderly system of lectures, no logically developed course of study, no syllabus nor bibliography, no textbook nor assigned readings. Now my work is teaching, and I live in an educational institution in an atmosphere of "majors" and . . . "study lists," "grades" and "degrees." Contrast Jesus' casual unorganized approach to the work of teaching. Nicodemus comes to Him by night and asks a question; "a certain lawyer" asks another; the rich young ruler a third; and then Jesus begins to teach. No prerequisites, no matriculation—just a questioning soul and Jesus!

And yet Jesus was a great teacher because, beneath all the apparent disorder and casual nature of His teaching, He was true to certain great fundamental laws which must be observed if truth is to be imparted.

First of all He used sound psychology, although the word itself never once appears on the pages of the New Testament. He talked to people about what was in the focus of interest. An aggrieved man comes demanding that He bid his brother divide the inheritance with him. Jesus seizes the occasion to teach a lesson on the danger of covetousness and the peril of riches. "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" asks the rich young ruler, and Jesus penetrates to his inmost need and instructs him in the way of self-sacrificing service. "Where is the right place to worship?" asks a rather common, tawdry woman, and Jesus teaches her that the spirit of worship is so much more important than the mere place itself.

This would be the ideal way to preach and teach—if one were a walking encyclopedia and universal genius—just let people propose questions and then answer them! Perhaps you have heard of the Negro preacher who, with this sound pedagogical principle in mind, said he would preach on any topic the congregation might suggest. One facetious brother proposed "Pills." But the preacher was equal to the topic. He said: "Brethren and sisters, dar is many kinds of pills—pink pills, black pills, white pills, liver pills, headache pills—but the best pill of all is the Gos-pill," and then he squared away on his course for a good gospel sermon!

But the average teacher is not a universal genius and moreover has a course of study to follow. His task often is not merely how to utilize interest already aroused, but how to arouse interest in the first place, for no real teaching takes place until interest has been awakened. Margaret Slattery tells of being sent into a class of high school boys once to teach a lesson on John Eliot. They weren't interested—they hadn't asked any questions about John Eliot.

The following stimulating article will be found of value both to Sunday school teachers and to preachers. The author, Albert W. Palmer, D. D., is president of Chicago Theological Seminary and well qualified by education and experience to present a theme of this kind. Copies of the article in pamphlet form may be secured from David C. Cook Publishing Co., Elgin, Illinois, at two cents a copy.

So she just sat down and casually remarked: "I never could see how he could do it." Silence. She repeated: "I just never could understand how he could do it!" More silence. Then the boys could stand it no longer. "Who?" they asked, and "Do what?" "Translate the whole Bible into the Indian language without a dictionary or a grammar!" she replied. They were translating Caesar, and suffering in the process, and interest was at once aroused.

Now Jesus' parables were often challenges to the class' interest just like that. He taught people about what was in the focus of their interest; and, sometimes by a parable or aphorism, He stimulated interest—said something that made them ask for more. The good teacher is always doing that.

In the second place, Jesus was concrete. That is to say, He tied up every abstract idea to some vivid unforgettable illustration. Dean Brown of Yale tells about an old professor of homiletics who said: "Young men, the secret of successful preaching is to say something interesting, and then say something more that is interesting, and then say a few more things that are interesting—and then sit down!" A student got up and began his practice sermon next day with the ponderous affirmation, "Every effect must have an equal and adequate cause." "Sit down!" thundered the professor, "that isn't interesting!" No abstractions are ever interesting until they are given concrete application. So Jesus not only taught that God loves us, He put it in the form of the story of the prodigal son; He didn't just say, "Love other people," He told the story of the good Samaritan; He was not content merely to warn people of the corroding effects of luxury, He made it incarnate in the parable of Lazarus and Dives.

Again, Jesus knew the value of surprise. Possibly you have heard of the old lady who said she liked the new minister, that his sermons reminded her so much of the laundry man—"every week he brings home to me something which I have never seen before!" The good teacher does just that. When Jesus told the Pharisees that publicans and harlots would enter the kingdom before them, it was calculated to make a dent on their memories. When He told the story of two men who went up into the temple to pray, the denouement was so unexpected that His hearers could never forget it. How startled that woman at the well curb was when from the safely remote theme of worship Jesus suddenly turned and bluntly said: "Go, call thy husband." And when, to those plotters who brought before Him the sinful woman sentenced to be stoned to death, He calmly said: "He that is without sin, (Please turn to Page Nine)

Can Education Save the World?

AMID cries for bread, shouts for work, janglings of discordant world conferences, rumblings of cannon in nations stricken with nationalism, comes the annual pealing of school bells calling the new generation to the classrooms. High schools, colleges, and universities are opening for another year of study despite the inroads of depression upon their budgets. The flower of American manhood and womanhood is flocking to the institutions of learning, hopeful, bouyant, and determined in spite of economic upheaval.

The American people have developed the philosophy that education is the panacea for every evil in civilization. "Give us the little red schoolhouse, the brick high school, the stately college and university, and we will assure you that the future of the nation is certain success." With such a promise, the educators proceeded to build up the most expensive and elaborate system of education that the world has ever seen. The nation was moving toward Utopia.

Then came the World War, a hideous and bloody demonstration that man's inhumanity to his fellow man had not ceased. Europe, with fifteen hundred years of government, culture, and learning, became the center of the slaughter. The event jolted our thinking processes and caused people to wonder if education could save the world.

Out of the four year conflict came a period of rehabilitation and reconstruction. A rising wave of prosperity swept the country. Educators shouted that education had at last demonstrated to the world that a golden era could be produced. America with its multiplied schools was leading the world. The increase of crime, the rise of the racketeer, the crowded prisons and penitentiaries, were forgot in the lust for gold and glory. While youth was going to school, it was also going mad with license, revolt, and pleasure seeking. In spite of prosperity, the very foundations of society were being shaken.

Depression came suddenly, and with it more serious thought. Failure had marked the promises upon which the American people had built. Bloody warfare, crime, and now economic chaos had been the blows to the twentieth century civilization. Education was not the savior of humanity.

"In education we trust" has proved a deluding motto. Education has taught the younger generation many facts and theories, but it has failed to show our youth how to live. As one jurist declared, "We are putting multiplication tables ahead of the sermon on the mount." The indictment against American education today is that it does not give a sound moral and ethical character to men and women.

LACK OF CHARACTER TRAINING

Warden Lewis L. Lawes of Sing Sing Prison, writing of the faults of the public school system, says: "The American school system, the finest and most comprehensive devised by man, has served the purpose for which it was originally planned. It has reduced illiteracy to a minimum. There is today hardly one citizen in forty who is unable to read; hardly one in thirty who cannot write legibly. It has been a job well done, because that was all that was expected of our schools. And yet, as we review the accomplishment of a century, one thing stands out in bold and sad relief. The splendid and costly educational program that has been the pride of our government through the decades has done nothing—I say this advisedly—nothing to mold the character of our people. Its insistence on scholastics had left no room for character training. There is no moral force in the classroom. . . . The failure of our schools and general educational methods are filling juvenile homes, our reformatories, and prisons."—Good Housekeeping, September, 1932.

Educational methods of the American school system have robbed students of moral and spiritual values. Stressing only factual knowledge, resting their faith upon scientific research and deliberately fostering a skeptical attitude toward all standards of life have caused the low moral standards, the laxity of principle, the loss of a sound philosophy of living among the new generation. The Bible has been ridiculed in many classrooms. Laws and constitutional amendments have been scoffed at by teachers and professors. The home, marriage, and the church have been declared the antiquated relics of a primitive people. What can such educational trends lead to in the thinking processes of American youth? Warden Lawes rightfully said they are leading to homes for the incorrigible, reformatories, and prisons.

During the past few years educators have suddenly awakened to a realization that character training is essential. A. N. Whitehead, in The Aims of Education, gives a concise picture of the need in a sentence: "When one considers in its length and in its breadth the importance of this quest of the education of a nation's young, the broken lives, the defeated hopes, the national failures, which result from the frivolous inertia with which it is treated, it is difficult to restrain within one's self a savage rage."

This educator summarizes the need of American schools in nine words: "The essence of education is that it be religious." Such a need was recognized in the colleges founded in the colonial period of our history. When Harvard College was established, it had for its purpose the training of intellectual, moral, and spiritual powers in its students. "Let every student be plainly instructed, and earnestly pressed to consider well: the main end of his life and studies is to know God and Jesus Christ, which is eternal life—John 17:3; and therefore to lay Christ in the bottom, as the only foundation of all sound knowledge and learning." Such an aim is exceedingly old-fashioned to many present-day educators; and the product they send forth into a troubled world shows too plainly what their philosophy has done.

"That the trend of modern education is away from faith in Jesus Christ is a self-evident fact. Whereas almost every one of the older universities of America was founded by the evangelical church upon a Christian basis, today an institution of higher learning to which the sons and daughters of Christian parents can be sent without having their faith attacked in classroom and on campus is a rare

RECONCILIATION

By T. A. Drinkard

"And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation: to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation."—2 Corinthians 5:18, 19.

THE subject of reconciliation is one among the many outstanding questions of the Scriptures and demands careful study by each one deeply interested in its message. The Apostle Paul, who uses the word and its companion words more than any other apostle, brings very briefly a most wonderful message of divine origin, one that commands our attention and consideration.

It is true that Paul wrote "some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction."—2 Peter 3:16. Not only so, but some who are professedly learned wrest them to teach theories that are contrary to the Scriptures of divine truth. There is no excuse for such a practice. There is such a thing as "rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2:15). It is for you and me to adhere to that God-given command.

The use of the word "reconciliation" and its companion words, "reconcile," "reconciled," and "reconciling," simply means "a thorough change," as in 2 Corinthians 5:18-20; Ephesians 2:16; Colossians 1:20, 21; Romans 5:10. Therefore, with this indisputable fact before us, it does not appear very difficult to see that "God was (and is) in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself" (2 Cor. 5:19) through the operation of His law of life that makes men and women free from sin and death (Rom. 8:2).

By carefully comparing scripture with scripture you will very quickly see that your being reconciled to God in Christ depends on your acceptance of God's terms of salvation. God has given a law for salvation purposes, and to you that law is given. It may be called the gospel of God, the gospel of Jesus Christ; yet it is the law of life in Christ. And, too, it is called the law of liberty, because as the result of your obedience thereto it brings you salvation, or redemption in Christ, by which you reach reconciliation completed.

Then if reconciliation is in Christ, how can you be reconciled unless you get into Christ? Can any man or woman get into Christ without obeying from the heart the requirements of the law of life? That law of liberty does have requirements. They are called "work" (James 1:25). The change (reconciliation) is the work of God in Christ, but in order for it to be effective in our case we must go where the blessing is—Christ.

To teach otherwise is but to dethrone the majesty of law. I do not mean the law of man, but of God; the law of the spirit of life in Christ. That law has requirements that must be met. It commands, yea, demands, that men have faith, not only in God, but in Jesus Christ (John 14:1). It demands that men repent (Acts 2:38). It demands that men be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins (Acts 2:38).

Sometimes we are told that "baptism in water is not a work, performance of which is paid for by Jesus with an outpouring of His grace in forgiveness and salvation." The fact that it is a command from the Master, just as much as the command to repent, is proof positive that we cannot be in Christ, cannot be saved nor reconciled, unless the command is obeyed.

May I call attention to a seemingly foolish command from the standpoint of the flesh? There was a law of circumcision that decreed that if any man child failed to be circumcised he lost his place among the people (Gen. 17:10-14). Today we have a law that says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Mark 16:15, 16. We reach this salvation in Christ. We are reconciled in Christ.

If salvation in Christ can be obtained without going through baptism, then we nullify the law of God through Christ. It is not a question as to God's ability to do other than He did do, but as to what He did. The statement, "Not imputing their trespasses unto them," can only refer to those "whose sins are covered" (Rom. 4:7, 8) because they have been reconciled in Christ; and, since they are in Christ, there is no condemnation upon them (Rom. 8:1). Therefore, reconciliation in Christ is conditional, not unconditional.

Witnesses of the Truth

By Norman John MacLeod

“Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.”—Acts 4:13.

THE SON of man hung on the cruel cross and died even as any other. And the hope of His followers died with Him. They who had seen Him in His triumphs, had seen Him call Lazarus forth, had been with Him when He raised Jairus' daughter, had seen Him make the lame to walk and the blind to see, and had seen Him heal all manner of sickness, despaired. And we hear the scornful rulers say, “He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ.”

The Son of God died even as any other. And the hopes of the Jews died with Him. They who had suffered defeat at the hands of oppressors, had been exiled and restored to worse than exile, had felt the cruel hand of iron Rome, had hailed Jesus as the long-promised Messiah who would rid them of the foreigner as He rode into Jerusalem, lost all hope of freedom. And the heathen soldiers standing by railed on Him: “If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself!” The Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Prince of Peace, was dead. And as He died on that cruel cross, we realize that He left not one written word to tell us His thoughts. The task of writing His truths must be entrusted to His followers. Yet, in spite of that fact, we can be sure of the things that He did and said.

The power of the human intellect to resist information is truly remarkable. We learn many things with great effort, and what we learn does not stay with us. Even those who are university graduates are far from learned because of the things that are done at schools and colleges. Few are the students that study. Few are they who take a real interest in their work. Consequently, we have poor doctors, poor lawyers, poor teachers, and (worst of all evils) poor ministers of the gospel. Even among the best educated few are learned.

Furthermore, the high school of today offers a better education than the university of yesterday. So on still farther back. In the days of the apostles, then, we can understand that the best educated man would be ignorant by our standards. And fishermen were the most degraded of classes at that time. Further, they came from a part of the country despised as producing nothing good, where men were subject to an especially vicious persecution.

Then, too, these men did not write things down at the time they happened. Thomas Jefferson in his old age criticised a description by John Adams of the writing of the Declaration of Independence. Adams said that it happened thus and so, recalling the incident from memory. Jefferson proved from his notes, taken at the time, that Adams was in error. Our memories are not reliable.

Of the men that wrote the accounts of Jesus' life only two were apostles; the others possibly received the material for their accounts second-hand. Add to all this that the Scriptures were handed down to us in a foreign language, that the medieval copyists could not read the languages that they were copying, that the originals are all gone, that what manuscripts we have are copies of copies, that translations seldom convey the idea of the originals, that the Scriptures were in the hands of a group of people who were often hostile to the truth, that almost two thousand years have passed since those things were written down, and that according to modern tests witnesses are unreliable.

An incident in a psychology class shows how unreliable witnesses are. Shortly after the class assembled, the janitor came into the room; the professor had heated words with him; and, as witnessed by those present, the janitor pulled a gun out of his pocket and shot the professor. What actually happened was that the janitor, by prearrangement, took a banana out of his pocket and pointed it at the professor; and out in the hall somebody slammed a board on the floor.

But in spite of all this the Scriptures meet certain tests to show that they are reliable accounts. The fact that they were produced by unlearned and ignorant men under conditions that would make most accounts unreliable proves that the Bible accounts are true. The four gospel stories do not apparently agree on minor points, but that proves that they are more reliable than otherwise. Because people will not report an incident the same, they indicate that they have not connived to make their reports agree. If two witnesses in a law court told exactly the same story upon examination in court, we could be sure that there was collusion between them. The minor disagreements of the Gospels, then, is proof that there was no such collusion.

The Scriptures have been shown by prominent lawyers at various times to be acceptable as evidence in a court room. Those ignorant, unlearned men could not have produced such masterpieces of language unaided. Inspiration is the only solution! Those things that have come to us through the centuries and have been so marvelously preserved for us should give us a feeling of honor and responsibility that should stir our inmost thoughts.

A great treasure has been entrusted to us. We have been given this Word through the power of God, and it is ours to carry to a world that is in darkness, a world that needs that Word. And yet we lag and do not do our best to spread abroad the light that has been given! The story of the Son of God, told by such men as the Bible writers by the power of God, is ours to carry forward. Let us not fail of the great task entrusted to us, even though we are all ignorant and unlearned men!

The Christian's Warfare

By George B. Alldridge

"This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare; holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck."—1 Timothy 1:18, 19.

JESUS surely was a man of peace. Yet, strange to say, He is the author of these words: "Think not that I am come to send peace, but a sword." Luke, in his account, clarifies this. His words are, "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth?

I tell you, Nay: but rather division." Those who were contemporary with Jesus could not have understood the deep significance of these words, as we who are living today do by a knowledge of history and the observation of current events.

I think all students of history will concede that the casus belli for all wars during the Christian dispensation has been largely the different beliefs and interpretations of the Scriptures. Even our own great and terrible Civil War was caused by the fact that those whose commission it was to preach the glad tidings of the gospel to all men prostituted their high office in advocating as sanctioned by God Himself the institution of human slavery!

Shortly before Jesus was betrayed, He said to His disciples, "All ye shall be offended because of me this night."

Listen to what Peter said: "Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death." (I believe with all my heart that Peter meant just what he said.)

"And while he (Jesus) yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people." Then followed Judas' betrayal of his Master.

Now watch Peter; he was no coward, sneaking behind out of sight. The representative of the high priest was Peter's point of attack; and, had the Lord not directed the blow, Peter would probably have cleaved the man's skull. It must have been a light blow, for it does not take much to cut off an ear. If the Lord in His mercy had not restrained Peter, more than one ear and head, too, would have been lying upon the ground.

"Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Here is the reason for all this: "But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled."

It is very evident Peter was not a quitter, even though he "followed him afar off." As the trial proceeded, everything was going against Jesus. Peter had heard Jesus say, "Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and

The publication of the accompanying article calls to mind the passage in 1922 of a resolution by the General Conference of the Church of God which enables any member to register on a printed certificate provided free by the National Bible Institution his conscientious objections to engaging in any form of military service.

he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?" Had Peter at this time possessed the wonderful knowledge revealed in his first epistle (1 Peter 2:19-25), I feel sure he would not have denied his Lord and Master. We can see the significance of Jesus' words, "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."

After our Lord's death Peter's remorse must have been terrible. So Jesus, His great heart of love still yearning for Peter, told Mary Magdalene (she could sympathize with Peter, for had not Jesus done much for her?) after His resurrection to go tell Peter and His other disciples.

Peter, like Saul of Tarsus, could think only that battles can be won by the sword. Jesus never used nor encouraged the use of the carnal sword in fighting His battles against sin. And what were His battles? The same as ours: the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life. Jesus never failed. We do, falling at times, but hopefully rising to renew the battle, only again to be overcome in the ceaseless struggle and conflict.

Sometimes even in the days of Moses victory rested upon the banner of Amalek and again upon the banner of Joshua. But, praise God, as long as Moses' arms were held up, Joshua prevailed. Jesus' arms never grow weary, but are held up continually before the throne of grace upon our behalf. So we should always prevail if our faith recalls Hebrews 7:25: "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."

Do we realize the stupendous faith of Moses? The record of him is, "Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." I tell you, brethren, if any man loved the brotherhood, it was Moses.

Moses, like his great Antitype, loved righteousness, hated oppression, and had a burning zeal for the relief of the wronged; but Moses probably did not see what Jesus saw, for His loyal Apostle Paul saw as he wrote, "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

Sometimes people accuse us who are members of the Church of God of being pacifists. A pacifist is, as I understand it, one who opposes war. I do not, since I realize how futile it is under the present conditions of humanity and since God's Word points out that wars will continue until, as Ezekiel 21:27 reads, "I (God) will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Neither am I a follower of Don Quixote, who was so desirous to fight that he would even engage windmills.

I am not, however, in sympathy with any increase of armaments to irritate our neighbors. To me it is repulsive to think that billions of dollars are spent in training men of the highest intelligence in how to destroy life and property.

We are noncombatants. We are not fanatical, refusing to assist the government in its hour of need. In the Spirit of the Good Samaritan we are ready to assist in ameliorating the sufferings of those who by chance have "fallen among thieves," whether it be by war or otherwise. We should be glad to serve anywhere where we could exemplify the blessed spirit of our Lord and Master, whom God anointed with the Holy Spirit and with power, who went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed.

For this stand in refusing to bear arms to take the life of our fellow man we are called hard names. The elite of Jesus' day, after He had healed the afflicted, called Him Beelzebub; so "the disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord." We are not propagandists going up and down preaching or exhorting people to become pacifists, but we endeavor to preach the glad tidings that God has "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being."

From the days of Noah up to the day Jesus rose from the dead God gave His sign (the rainbow) in the heavens that He would not destroy the world again by a flood. "I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth." So today God's assurance and covenant between Him and the earth is "that he hath raise him (Jesus) from the dead."

Why participate in the things God has warned us not to do? Let us remember Jesus' words: "Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

Where is the sword's place? Surely not hanging at the side of one of the followers of Him who said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Dear brethren, it is a dangerous thing to carry a sword; if you do, then when the sword perishes, you will perish with it. But by all means carry in your heart the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.

WE SHALL BE LIKE HIM

We shall be like Him—blessed thought!

Alas! we are not like Him now.

Less patiently we bear the cross,

Less meekly do we suffer loss,

Than He who our redemption bought

With thorny crown on dying brow.

We shall be like Him—blessed thought!

We shall be like Him—free from sin;

On Him temptation lost its power.

We shall be pure without a stain,

When we that blissful state attain;

Aye! pure without and pure within.

In that ecstatic, longed-for hour

We shall be like Him—free from sin.

We shall be like Him—glory crowned,

Immortal, clad in robes of light;

Beyond the power of aught to harm,

Beyond the sound of death's alarm,

No more by limitations bound

Of time and flesh and earthly sight—

We shall be like Him—glory crowned.—Selected.

BIBLE READING IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

A provision of the New York City Charter, which has been in effect for eighty years, authorizes the reading of the Bible in the public schools. The school principals have discretion in choosing the readings, and any pupils objecting may be excused.

The president of the Freethinkers of America recently brought suit to restrain the Board of Education from continuing the reading of the Bible in the schools. His argument was that the use of public money for Bible instruction was unauthorized and a waste of city funds. The Supreme Court dismissed the suit a year ago. Last month the Appellate Division, on appeal, upheld the decision of the Supreme Court.

In this connection The New York Sun gives the information that "the first stereotyped books printed in the United States were school editions of the New Testament and the complete Bible. They were printed in New York about 1815" by Bruce brothers, two Scotchmen, who "introduced the stereotyping process into this country, and the first books they produced by the new process were those Bibles for the public schools of the city."

Abraham's shepherds and those of his nephew Lot, who had accompanied him from Haran and who in the meantime had set up for himself.

The settlement of that quarrel is one of the classic episodes in the Old Testament. We read that "Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife . . . between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? separate thyself . . . from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left."

Lot being what he was, he selected the fertile plains and allowed his uncle to eke out whatever existence he could on the hills toward the east of the river Jordan. But Abraham bore him no ill will. When Lot fell into the hands of Philistine kings who had been attracted by the wealth of the plains country, Abraham organized an expedition and not only rescued Lot but also regained the booty which had been carried off by the marauders. In return, Abraham asked nothing "save only that which the young men have eaten." Some time later Abraham again demonstrated his love for his fellow men in his fruitless intercession for the citizens of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Although Jehovah had promised that He would make of Abraham a great nation, the birth of Isaac, through whom the promise was to be fulfilled, was long delayed. Notwithstanding, Abraham's faith in the promise of Jehovah remained steadfast, and eventually Isaac was born. But the severest test of Abraham's faith was still ahead of him. The boy was already well grown when Jehovah commanded Abraham to sacrifice him. Human sacrifice, so repulsive to our standards, was a common practice in those days; and the thought of it should not blind us to the essential element in Abraham's character, namely, his faith in the lovingkindness of Jehovah and his implicit obedience to what he conceived to be God's will. Convinced that Jehovah demanded the sacrifice of his only son, Abraham was ready to obey. Because Abraham did not flinch from the ordeal, Jehovah reiterated the promises made to him earlier.

Abram lived to see both his grandsons, Esau and Jacob, the latter of whom was the immediate ancestor of the twelve tribes of Israel, and then he died "in a good old age"—a hundred and seventy-five years according to Genesis—"and was gathered to his people."

And what of Abraham's significance? In Dummelow's Commentary we find the following estimate: "Abraham is one of the greatest figures in the religious history of the human race. Three great religions look back to him as one of their spiritual ancestors, and accept him as a type of perfect faith and true religion, viz., the Jewish, the Mohammedan, and the Christian. The world owes to him its first clear knowledge of the true God, His spiritual and holy nature, and the way in which He is to be served and worshipped. Abraham and not Moses is the father of the Jewish nation, and the founder of its distinctive religion. It was no new and unknown God in whose name Moses spoke to his brethren in Egypt. He was able to appeal to Israel in the name of a God who had already revealed Himself, in the name of 'the God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.'" let him first cast a stone," He gave them the surprise of their not very young lives.

One of our professors said the other day: "When the hour is over, I want the students to know I have been in the classroom." How few Sunday school teachers ever surprise their pupils. The bane of so much teaching is that it is so deadly conventional! Teachers say the things they think they ought to say, the things that sound pious, orthodox, and safe, whereas Jesus said things to startle people out of their smug self-complacency.

This is no plea for vulgar sensationalism. . . . There is a noble sensationalism which does not violate good taste—I prefer to call it the element of surprise.

A fourth great quality of Jesus' art as a teacher lies in the fact that He uniformly led people to the spiritual heights. He had a goal! This is the supreme test of teaching—does it get people anywhere? Zacchaeus might begin with a more or less vulgar curiosity which impelled him to climb up in a sycamore tree to see who this passer-by might be that people were crowding the street to follow. But before Jesus got through with him, he was standing up and saying, "Half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have defrauded any man, I restore him fourfold." So it was with Peter and with Mary Magdalene and the thief on the cross, and many another. Jesus changed their lives by His teaching. He took them somewhere they had never been before, awakened new motives, revealed new spiritual landscapes, evoked new courage and aspiration in their souls. And the great thing is that He does so still. He has been doing it all down the centuries. . . . And He does it today. . . . Jesus' teaching does something to people—they know He has been in the classroom!

May I close by pointing out that even Jesus was not uniformly successful? Read the parable of the sower. It is Jesus' report of His experience as a teacher. Even some of His marvelous teaching fell on stony hearts, met the competition of weeds and briars, withered away because of superficiality and thinness of spiritual living. He was one hundred per cent efficient as a teacher, but He was not one hundred per cent successful. Neither will you and I be. But some success will come, if we are sincere and resourceful and eager—some seed will fall in good soil—sometimes when we know it least. We may have to wait years for our harvest, but it is a great privilege to be associated with Jesus in the great art of teaching His life and His ideals.

Abreast of the Times

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:21. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42:9.

Stems Tide of Crime

"Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

NEW YORK.—Justice Lewis L. Fawcett of the Supreme Court of New York, speaking with regard to the value of Sunday school training, said:

"My experience during twenty-three years on the bench, in which time over 4,000 boys under the age of twenty-one years were convicted of crime before me, of whom but three were members of a Sunday school, has satisfied me of the value of Sunday schools to the community, in helping safeguard it, to the extent to which Sunday schools exist, from the growth of criminals. My experience satisfies me of their value to the individual. In 1,902 cases of suspended criminal sentences in each of which a minister, priest, or rabbi became interested at my request, only 62 of the boys were brought back for violation of the conditions of parole. I believe the reform in the remaining cases (over 1,000) was prompt and permanent. I regard our Sunday schools, including those of all faiths, as the only effective means to stem the rising tide of vice and crime among our youth. Society carried the heavy burden of criminality chiefly because of the lack of religious training of the youth. If all the children could be kept under the influence of the Sunday school and the grown-ups were active in some church, we could close our prisons and jails, instead of being compelled to enlarge and increase their number. The problem of youth is the problem of humanity. There are over 17,000,000 boys and girls in this country growing up without moral training from any source, Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish."

Back to the Fathers

"He shall turn the heart . . . of the children to their fathers."—Malachi 4:6.

CHICAGO, Sept. 27.—Dr. Evelyn Garfield Kadushin, psychologist, Madison, Wis., earnestly advised Jewish women leaders to return to the culture of their fathers, and to recapture the social idealism of the prophets in an effort to offset "the climate of hate in which the Jew lives" (Matt. 5:43-45). Addressing representatives of 90 Jewish women's groups at the first fall meeting of the Conference of Jewish Women's Organizations, Dr. Kadushin said that the "Jews are living in a new environment, a climate of opinion which can only be described as hate. The world is so closely knitted that what happened in Germany is felt here. . . . The cultural background of the Jew is breaking down in the western world, but the group remains. If the Jew, instead of hiding his head in the sand and trying to ignore bitter facts about him, will return to his culture and allow his culture to play about him again, he can capture the social idealism of the prophets, the intense personal ethics of the rabbis, and dignify his life with the folkways and ceremonies of his people." (Ezekiel 18:30-32.)

League of Nations Asked to Help Jews Return to Palestine

"They shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations . . . to my holy mountain Jerusalem."—Isaiah 66:20.

GENEVA, Oct 3.—An appeal to the great powers, particularly Great Britain, the Palestine mandatory power, to solve the German-Jewish refugee problem by promoting immigration into Palestine was made yesterday by Eduard Benes, Czechoslovakian delegate, in an address to the Political Commission of the League of Nations.

Plans were approved which estimated Palestine could absorb 200,000 Jews during the next four years. William G. A. Ormsby-Gore, British delegate, said immigration into Palestine must not be conceived as the sole effective solution of the Jewish refugee question, as the territory must receive Jews from the entire world.

A French representative agreed with the Briton's view that Palestine would be unable totally to solve the Jewish problem. An Australian representative insisted that the Jewish refugees from Germany created a new factor and Great Britain should exert itself to make Palestine a great Jewish nation.

The Earth Trembled

"There shall be . . . earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows."—Matt. 24:7, 8.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 2.—One elderly woman was reported killed, several persons injured, and considerable property damage sustained in southern California, mostly in Los Angeles, by an earth tremor which passed through that region early this morning. Three mild shocks were felt at Long Beach, where many lost their lives in the earthquake of March 10. The shocks were much lighter and less destructive by far than those experienced earlier in the year.

(The prophetic Word indicates that tremendous seismic disturbances will be experienced throughout the world before the Lord's coming and that an earthquake of unprecedented violence is to mark the actual arrival of Christ back upon the earth. Zechariah 14:4.—Ed.)

THE EIGHTH PSALM

Lord, our Lord, o'er earth's vast frame,
How exalted is Thy name!
Who hast set Thy glory bright
Far above the heavens' height.

From the mouth of children young,
From the infant's lisping tongue,
Matchless strength Thou hast ordained,
Thus, Thy vengeful foes restrained.

When Thy heavens I survey,
Which Thy finger's work display,
When the moon and stars I see
Ordered all by Thy decree:

What is man that in Thy mind
He a constant place should find?
What the son of man that he Should be visited by Thee?

Thou his station didst ordain
Just below the angel train;
Glory Thou hast o'er him shed,
And with honor crowned his head.

Thou hast given him command
O'er the creatures of Thy hand;
And beneath his feet hast laid
All the works which Thou hast made;

Flocks and cattle, every tribe,
Beasts that in the field abide,
Birds that through the heavens roam,
Fish that make the sea their home;

Every living thing that strays
Through the ocean's secret ways.
Lord, our Lord, o'er earth's vast frame,
How exalted is Thy name!

A PRAYER

O GOD, who art, and wast, and art to come, before whose face the generations rise and pass away; age after age the living seek Thee, and find that of Thy faithfulness there is no end. Our fathers in their pilgrimage walked by Thy guidance, and rested on Thy compassion; still to their children be Thou the cloud by day, the fire by night. In our manifold temptations, Thou alone knowest and art ever nigh: in sorrow, Thy pity revives the fainting soul; in our prosperity and ease, it is Thy Spirit only that can wean us from our pride and keep us low. O Thou sole Source of peace and righteousness! take now the veil from every heart; and join us in one communion with Thy prophets and saints who have trusted in Thee, and were not ashamed. Not of our worthiness, but of Thy tender mercy, hear our prayer. Amen.—James Martineau.

ILLINOIS STATE BEREAN REPORT

THE Illinois State Berean Society held its annual business meeting at Oregon, Illinois, August 12, 1933. The secretary's and treasurer's reports were read and approved. Local reports were read. These showed a slight decrease in attendance. One society (Marshall) had been discontinued. One new society had been organized at Eldorado. It was moved and seconded that Self-Denial Month be abolished. The motion was carried.

The officers elected for the coming year are: president, Gerald Cooper, Ripley; first vice president, Harry Goekler, Marshall; second vice president, Lyle Thayer, 2008 Bruner Street, Rockford; secretary, Miss Edna Wood, Marshall, Rt. 2; treasurer, Mrs. Mildred Somers, 928 Meridian Highway, Rochelle.

Edna H. Wood, State Secretary.

GAMALIEL

GAMALIEL was a Pharisee and a celebrated doctor of the law who gave prudent worldly advice in the Sanhedrin respecting the treatment of the followers of Jesus of Nazareth (Acts 5:34). We learn from Acts 22:3 that he was the preceptor of Saint Paul. He is generally identified with the very celebrated Jewish doctor Gamaliel. This Gamaliel was a son of Rabbi Simeon and grandson of the celebrated Hillel; he was president of the Sanhedrin under Tiberius, Caligula, and Claudius, and is reported to have died eighteen years before the destruction of Jerusalem.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"The next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God."

A LIGHT IN THE DARKNESS

TODAY we are going to follow Paul and Barnabas over the sea into rough interior trails, preaching the glad news of Christ and His coming kingdom. They never thought once of their own wishes, their own comfort, or their own happiness. And, strange to say, in serving others, they found all these. For the wishes of others, the comfort and happiness of others, became of first importance to them.

Setting sail from Seleucia, the seaport of Antioch, they headed for the island of Cyprus, which had been the home of Barnabas. Cyprus was important for its copper mines and valuable timber. The two missionaries landed at the nearest seaport, Salamis, preached there, and then traveled through the island to the opposite side. Here at Paphos they had an interesting and exciting experience.

You see, the Roman officer, Sergius Paulus, became interested in the gospel and invited the two missionaries to come and tell him more about it. But there was a wicked man named Elymas, who practiced magic, who didn't want Sergius to accept the gospel and thus find out his tricks. It only took Paul a few minutes to tell Elymas what he was and to punish him with blindness from God's hand.

When Sergius saw who had sent this disaster upon Elymas, he realized that there was a God who was higher and more powerful than the gods that Elymas worshiped. And he gave his heart to God and accepted Jesus gladly and fully. It was time then for Paul and Barnabas to be moving on, for many more were still in darkness, worshipping gods that had no ears to hear their prayers and no eyes to see their needs.

And so they set sail once more, landing at Perga and going on from there to another Antioch, this one the capital of Galatia. Remember, the Antioch where the disciples were first called Christians is Antioch in Syria, and this is Antioch in Pisidia. A barren, rugged, mountainous country lay all about, but Paul and Barnabas found a Jewish synagogue in the city. And there on the Sabbath day they entered to hear the reading of the law.

The first part of the Jewish service consisted of prayers, psalms or songs, and reading from the Old Testament Scriptures. Then if there was present in the congregation a priest or a rabbi, he was invited to speak. On this Sabbath day Paul was in the audience, and he was asked to speak. And such a sermon as he gave them!

He began at the beginning and told them how good God had been to them and how ungratefully they had returned His goodness; how when He sent His Son to them they crucified Him. But God had raised His Son from the dead, and He would forgive the wicked Jews for crucifying Jesus, if they asked Him.

The Jews didn't like that sermon very well because they were not yet ready to admit they were in the wrong. You know, we are like that sometimes. If some one tells us of our mistakes, we get angry, unless we are ready to acknowledge that we are in the wrong. It was then that Paul told the Jews that because they refused the gospel he was going to turn to the Gentiles. You know, God had chosen Paul for that very work—to be a light to the Gentiles. And we're glad He did because that takes us in, doesn't it?

The envious Jews plotted against Paul every chance they got, but that didn't stop him from preaching about Christ. And badly it was needed, too, for at all these places in Asia Minor the people bowed themselves down to gods of stone and wood.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

As usual, at the top write the number and title of the lesson, also the golden text. Next draw the shore line of the Mediterranean, locating these places and connecting them with a colored pencil: Antioch (in Syria), Seleucia, Salamis on the island of Cyprus, Paphos on the west side of it, Perga in Asia Minor, Antioch (in Pisidia), Iconium, Lystra, Derbe, the farthest point.

Retracing his steps, Paul completed his first missionary journey, cheering up the churches he had established on his first visit, and starting a couple of new ones. Finally he wound up again at Antioch in Syria, his starting point, where he reported to the elders all that had been done. Do not be afraid to try these little map drawings; they are not nearly so difficult as they sound. The younger ones may have all the help they need.

Next write the story of Sergius and Elymas; draw pictures showing Sergius kneeling before an idol; then Paul coming in with a light in his hand, representing the gospel; then Sergius bowing his head in prayer to God and saying, "I thank Thee that Thou hast sent the light of the gospel to me."

Last, draw two pictures of Paul—one showing him lying down while the Jews threw stones at him; the other showing him standing up beside the stones, saying, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

LESSON 4. — October 22, 1933

PAUL IN ASIA MINOR

Acts 13 and 14

Devotional Reading: Ephesians 2:13-22

GOLDEN TEXT

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16:15.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul in Asia Minor.

Aim: The first duty of the church is to carry the gospel to those who do not know it.

Basic Truth: "They went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."—Mark 16:20.

I. Paul's Consecration to Service. (Acts 13:1-3.) The work of world evangelization is the first great duty and purpose of the church. Those who are to engage in it must be persons of faith and character and ability, both natural and developed. The calling of the evangelist is the noblest of all occupations, for it is a divine work; and those who give their lives to it should be set apart for their sacred task by the prayers of their brethren.

II. Paul's First Missionary Journey. (Acts 13:4, 5, 13-15; 14:19, 20.) Paul's first missionary journey provides a picture of all similar efforts to spread the gospel in strange lands. Sacrifice and danger, success and failure, has interspersed all missionary history. The greater part of Paul's work was done among his own people, the Jews. He thus was a proselytizer in the main. Outside of his work with the Jews he was making proselytes from among Gentile worshippers of strange gods. Practically all home and foreign missionary work consists of winning people away from religious error and converting them to the truth of the gospel.

III. Paul's Pastoral Service. (Acts 14:21-23.) Paul was a man of remarkably diversified abilities. He was the most successful missionary the church ever possessed, and he also proved himself to be a most able pastor. He realized that only the first short step had been taken toward salvation when the individual was convinced of the truth of the gospel and was baptized. Such a one was still but a babe in Christ and must be nurtured and strengthened by constant prayerful labor in order that he might grow into a more perfect likeness of his Lord. To accomplish this purpose Paul appointed elders, men filled with the Spirit of Christ, to lead into the deeper things of God which pertain to personal consecration and spiritual growth. Such service requires men of tender sympathy and broad understanding of human nature, as well as of a knowledge of the Word.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Training of Workers: The newly organized church at Antioch had flourished as new churches sometimes do. The congregation was blessed with several good leaders. Some of them had come on from Jerusalem; others were being trained under these teachers to carry on the work later. And then came the call to Barnabas and Saul to go to other fields of service. There was no doubt a feeling of sadness on the part of those they had converted as the farewells were said, but a spirit of unselfishness is manifested that it would be well for our modern churches to emulate. The established church carried on with a will, but the best workers went on to new fields training still others.

Church Attendance: It is characteristic of Paul and his coworkers that they attended church wherever possible. Their visit at the non-Christian synagogue in Antioch seemed at first to be only a friendly gesture. But on the invitation of the ruler of the synagogue Paul gave one of his most masterly sermons. Because of his kindly method of approach he was invited to speak to them the following Sabbath. Not all of us can be preachers, but we can all show our habits of church attendance and give the answer of a good conscience toward God when asked.

Surmounting Difficulties: The success of Paul and his party in Antioch of Pisidia caused a spirit of envy to rise among the orthodox Jewish leaders, so much so that blasphemous contradictions of Paul's preaching became the order of the day. But above all irritations rose the indomitable spirit of the missionary. In this present time there is a definite trend to minimize Bible truth. Will you, like Paul, rise above the trials and contradictory teachings and carry the message of truth to those who are hungering and thirsting for it? Make the service of Christ the most important thing in your life, so that whether you laugh or weep, work or rest, you will have the will of the Master concerning you always under consideration.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

Christ told His apostles to go preach in all the world. Paul was not one of the twelve, but he came nearer carrying out the command than did any other that the Bible mentions. He went into what were then far countries, always preaching the gospel and converting men and women to the cause of Christ.

The world is still in need of preachers and teachers. One does not have to go to some foreign land to find some one who has not heard the gospel; but in many instances our next door neighbor is as ignorant of the love of Christ and what His gospel will do as is the savage of darkest Africa. There is work for each one who desires to help spread the gospel message.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

"Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. 11:6. "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?"—Rom. 10:17, 13, 14. From the above texts the following is evident: one must have faith before he can please God; one cannot have faith in God without first having been taught about Him; one cannot hear about God without a preacher (teacher). Knowing these steps as He did, Jesus said to His disciples: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16:15, 16. Is not this a commandment to all of Christ's followers? It makes each a missionary to his neighbor. This is a part of the missionary work that is forgotten all too often. The apostles went out into strange lands, but they always left behind pastors and teachers to admonish those who had accepted and to teach others that they might be baptized.

There is more glamor and thrill to sending a missionary to a far-away land than to sending one into the city slums just a few blocks away. Is not our first obligation to those near? The command to do missionary work is plain; but how to do it, or where, is not always so easy to decide. If we will take the matter to Him, God will direct us in the discharge of our missionary obligation.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATES

Paul Carries the Gospel Abroad

Traveling in the days of Paul was not the pleasant and speedy pastime it is today. It meant great sacrifice, untold hardship, and much suffering to journey over the rough seas, through the perilous mountain passes, and into the sparsely inhabited islands that Paul went. Always he was borne onward by the realization of the need of men and women for the good news of God's love shown forth in the gospel of Christ. Paul knew the effect that the gospel had had upon his own life, and he longed for others to know that same joy. Discuss the duty of every young person toward his associates in telling them about Christ and inviting them to Sunday school, but particularly the duty of letting our lives speak for Christ.

In Asia Minor Paul visited Perga; Antioch (in Pisidia); Iconium; Lystra; Derbe, the farthest point. Assign the week before each point to a different pupil to relate the incidents. Make these places real by your map work. Ask some one to give a review of Paul's sermon in Acts 13. Can you explain the difference in the attitude of the Jews and the Gentiles? Memorize Paul's commission (v. 47). Paul never permitted success to turn his head, but humbly kept on serving his Lord. Neither did he permit persecution or hardship to alter his course, always counseling his followers that tribulation would follow them. Are we willing to suffer today, if need be, for our Lord and Master?

From Derbe Paul retraced his steps and returned to Antioch in Syria, this first trip taking practically two years, 47-49 A. D. Locate the new points on your map.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ELDORADO, ILLINOIS

It has been the writer's privilege during the past two months to fill Bro. Lapp's regular appointment at Eldorado, and it has been a real pleasure to hold services with them.

On our last trip we took a group of young people with us for musical support, and we all enjoyed ourselves very much. There is a fine group of workers at Eldorado, and we look for good results to come from their earnest labor.

If all goes well, Bro. Lapp will be back to fill his regular appointment the first Sunday in November. We pray that the church will continue to grow and prosper during the next year as it has done in the past.

Harry Goekler.

DIXON, ILLINOIS

Observance of Golden Rule Sunday at the Dixon church, October 1, helped by a beautiful day and large congregation was an occasion of interest and enjoyment.

Two dear members of our precious faith, Bro. and Sr. Shirley of Rock Falls, were with us for the morning service. It was a pleasure to have them present. Bro. Shirley, who is ninety years old, gave a very interesting talk of the past, telling of his early life and how he had first heard the truth and as a young man obeyed the gospel call and faithfully served his beloved Master all these years. Each passing year makes the promise of the coming Jesus grow brighter and sweeter to these dear ones, who have grown old in the service of their Lord and now look forward to a life of peace and righteousness with their blessed King and Redeemer on through the years of eternity.

Bro. Conner gave a brief history of Golden Rule Home, telling of the comforts and enjoyments of a true home where these older ones under the care and service of a splendid matron, may spend their later years in peace and comfort. When we united in singing the song written by Bro. Marsh in regard to this Golden Rule Home, we could surely feel and say within our hearts as well as with our lips, "We praise Thee, O God, for our Golden Rule Home."

Sunday, October 1, was also promotion day for our Sunday school, the pupils receiving their promotion cards and taking their places in their new classes. Our Sunday school has been showing a steady growth, and the interest manifested by all and the large number of pupils are a source of much satisfaction and encouragement to those in charge.

We enjoyed a splendid talk in the evening on the sermon on the mount, one of interest and inspiration to all of us to help us in our everyday living in the service of our Lord. May we all take the lessons of the great Teacher to our hearts and in our lives, thereby growing in grace day by day, until we may be worthy through His mercy to hear the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

HILLISBURG, INDIANA

On October 3 it was our pleasure to baptize into the all-saving name of Jesus Christ Mr. and Mrs. Don Huffer and Mr. Claryl Huffer. Bro. Don is a son of Bro. William Huffer, who has been one of the leaders of the Church of God in Indiana for many years. It was a great pleasure to see these young people enter the "way of life." Bro. Claryl lost his father, one of our leading members, last January. He and his mother, who is a member of the Hillisburg church, still live on their farm near the church. These parties have been hearing the truth for many years and know why one must be baptized. In the work this year I have noticed that the majority of those who are coming into the Lord are married people. Thus we have another family added to the church and one united in it. We thank God and pray that the good work may go on.

J. H. Anderson.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Last week was prayer and forgiveness week at our church, and it was a real privilege to see the willingness of so many to make definite sacrifices. About forty were present the first (Monday) morning at 6 o'clock for devotional, and a similar sized group reported in sincerity each morning throughout the week. Visible results in spiritual growth and strength are evident.

A pleasant surprise was our privilege the first Sunday night in October to have Bro. Austin unexpectedly step in to service. He stayed over night and assisted with the morning devotions the following day.

Beautiful fall weather has turned the Michigan hills and vales into blazes of radiant colors. Our people appear to have caught the inspiration from nature and feel a genuine desire to honor the heavenly Father.

FACTS CONCERNING PAUL

Born in Tarsus about 3 A. D.; familiar with Greek and Roman culture; educated as a rabbi. Was a bitter opponent of Christianity until his conversion on the road to Damascus, after which he was its most able and fearless defender. He traveled throughout the Empire establishing churches, being greatly persecuted by the Jews. He was finally arrested at their instigation in Jerusalem. History leaves him in a prison cell still preaching the gospel.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The junior Berean meeting presided over by Bro. Bradley Crundwell was the outstanding part of a most successful Quarterly Conference meeting held on October 1 at the Williams Street Chapel in Pomona. The Sunday school demonstration which had been planned for the hour of 9:30 a. m. was somewhat disturbed by the absence of Sr. MacLeod, who was called to Los Angeles to be present at the arrival of a new daughter in the home of Sr. Stantial there. Bro. Adamson occupied most of the adult period by a demonstration of teaching an adult class, Sr. Railsback ending the period by a demonstration of primary methods. At 10:30 Bro. Adamson gave a most forceful address, "The Race That Is Set Before Us," based on the twelfth of Hebrews. Following this sermon, at the invitation we were glad to receive in confession Bro. and Sr. Almus Courtney of Norco, who were baptized in the afternoon and who received the right hand of fellowship in the evening. To close the morning worship Bro. S. G. Elton of Pasadena officiated at the communion table.

At noon, picnic dinner was eaten at the park, after which we returned to the church for afternoon services. Bros. C. E. Hatch, who made a plea for simplicity in the teaching of doctrines; Will Reid, who added to that same plea; and George P. Lichty, who gave a vigorous peroration based on the first five verses of Matthew five, were each allowed a short time. Sr. E. E. Elton and her daughter Hazel rendered a most beautiful duet, which showed by its blend of voices that they had sung together many times before. The discourse of the afternoon (which will appear in The Herald if it passes the editor's desk), "Signs of Christ's Coming: In Israel," preceded a short business session at which the conference board was enlarged; a committee was requested to draw up a group of by-laws for conference government (Bro. Brady and Sr. Railsback were appointed later); and various other items of business were transacted.

At the Berean Vesper Services (which drew words of commendation for Bro. Bradley Crundwell and his young people from several of those present), Bro. Brady (president of the Los Angeles Berean Society) gave a short talk which also is being sent to The Herald. Before the evening meeting a large bouquet which had been brought by Sr. Marjorie Ferrell was bought by the conference and sent to Sr. Stantial in Los Angeles. Sr. Railsback's sermon, "Signs of Christ's Coming: In the Church and in the World," which had its usual noteworthy supply of Scripture quotations will also appear in The Herald. After a session which dealt with the Home at Oregon, Illinois, the conference closed to reconvene in January. People from all over southern California were present, those from farthest away being Sr. Thompson and family from Tulare.

Along with Bro. and Sr. Almus Courtney, who were baptized into the name of Jesus at the conference, we wish also to commend to the church at large Bro. John Adamson and his sister both in the flesh and in the Spirit, Margaret, (both are grandchildren of Bro. J. E. Adamson and children of Bro. J. Edgar Adamson), and Sr. Margaret Lichty (daughter of Bro. George P. Lichty), who were baptized on August 6. These will be members of the Pomona church, as that is their nearest church home.

RICHARD CHASE

Just a little Bible, but to the members of the Kokomo church a constant reminder of one who faithfully finished his labor of love. On the fly leaf is written that all may read, "This little Bible was used by our Brother Richard Chase, who died July 9, 1933."

He was an earnest and faithful student of God's Word, teacher for both the adult Berean and Sunday school classes, a trustee of the Kokomo Church of God. So faithful was he to his duty he had prepared his Sunday school lesson for the day of his death. He now rests, waiting that new day when our Lord will call His own.

May the faithfulness of Bro. Chase be an example to all of us that we, too, may be encouraged to do greater work for our Master and be able to exclaim, like Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."—2 Tim. 4:7.

This little Book was presented to the Kokomo Church of God by the widow, Sr. Lucy Chase, September 24, 1933.

HELEN G. PIER

Helen G. Pier was born near Newark, N. J., on June 27, 1836, and died in Newark on July 25, 1933, having lived practically 97 years in or near that city. She was a daughter of Richard and Eliza Seeley Wanamaker and the widow of James H. Pier. She is survived by one sister, two sons, three grandchildren, one great-grandchild and one great-grandchild.

Early in life Mrs. Pier was baptized into the saving name of Jesus Christ, and she has been an active member of the Church of God from that day. She was an earnest and intelligent student of the Bible, being especially interested in prophecy and the signs of the times, and was always ready to speak a word for her Master and endeavor to interest others in the faith that she held so dear. About three months before her death she fell and broke her leg, but was most patient in suffering. She said to the writer shortly before her death, "What is my suffering with one broken leg compared with what Jesus suffered on the cross for me?" And now she rests only awaiting the call to greater service when Jesus comes.

THE HEBREW PEOPLE

A series of lessons on the chosen people designed for the use of children, but which older ones will find of much value and interest in the study of the subject.

Beginning with the story of Joseph, it leads the student through the entire history of Israel to the regathering of the people at the coming of Christ.

Parents will find these simply arranged lessons a great help in teaching their children the things concerning the kingdom of God.

The book is attractively printed in large clear type and will be sent post-paid at the following prices: Single copy, 30¢; 5-24 copies, 27¢ each; 25 or more, 25¢ each.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

After an absence of some time at the bedside of his mother, Sr. Woodward, in Michigan, F. L. Austin is again at his home at 5439 Ohio St., Chicago.

Sunday was Rally Day at Rockford, Ill., and also L. E. Conner's appointment at that place. Early reports indicate a satisfactory attendance and interest.

Reports of baptisms continue to come in, for which we all thank God. It has thus far been an unusually fruitful year in the Church of God.

Miss Coda Kincheloe of Fairfax, Va., has entered Lynchburg hospital to take nurse's training. We predict that she will be successful in her chosen work, as we know her to be a very capable young woman.

Bro. Cole of the Grand Rapids, Mich., church, was a welcome visitor at the Oregon, Ill., Sunday school last Sunday. He was accompanied by a friend.

Reports from Blanchard, Mich., indicate a good interest is being developed there by Cecil Smead, who was recently installed as temporary pastor of the church, the Sunday evening attendance being especially good.

"Forgiveness Week!" What a splendid idea! Every week is "Forgiveness Week" with God. He is constantly pardoning our offences against His love and kindness. The example of the Grand Rapids church might well be followed by all others. Prayer and forgiveness—they go together, for one condition of God's forgiveness is that we also forgive.

For ourselves we're rather glad it happened that way, that is, that Mrs. Lindsay caught the biggest fish in a recent contest with "S. J." We have fished too many times from the bank of Rock River and caught nothing but the condescending glances of our fellow fisherman while he pulled out the big ones! He can expect little sympathy from us!

Those who gave pledges under the 90 days payment plan have not overlooked their obligation in many instances, but others have not thus far been able to send in their contributions. This money is being used to pay off old indebtedness, and if we are to get a reduction from our creditors it will be necessary for us to have the money within the specified period. Thank you!

The second Sunday in October was observed as Golden Rule Home Sunday in Maurertown, Va., as the first Sunday Pastor Harry A. Sheets observed the day with the church at Dry Run.

Last Sunday marked the first public appearance of the newly organized junior choir of the Oregon church. Its initial work was in every way pleasing. Young people are a great help and inspiration to a church.

A very interesting article entitled, "Signs of Christ's Coming in the Church and in the World," has just reached us from Emma C. Railsback. Sr. Railsback is a close observer of the "signs of the times" and a careful student of the prophecies. Wait for this article's appearance in the near future.

We take this means of warning Eld. Harry A. Sheets that we intend to publish his article, "When the Salt Is Removed," which appeared in the last issue of the "Gospel Searchlight," in The Herald. It is too valuable to be restricted to Virginia alone.

We rejoice to say that Sr. Mary A. Woodward, whose serious illness was recently reported, is steadily improving; while Sr. Wilson, who has been in a hospital at St. Louis for a time, is convalescing in her home in that city.

"How old was God when He made the earth?" a little girl recently asked in the Lutheran church at Oregon. This is a question no more unreasonable than some of the hair-splitting theological vagaries over which older quibblers bitterly disagree.

The modernizing of one of the properties owned by the National Bible Institution in Oregon is nearly completed, and applications for rental assure us that it will soon be producing an income to help in the support of the Home.

The executive board appreciates deeply the splendid cooperation given by our pastors throughout the country for the presentation of Golden Rule Home to their congregations on "Golden Rule Home Sunday." We are already beginning to hear favorable reports on their efforts. Our special thanks go to Elder Adna Hoskins, pastor of the church at St. Cloud, Minn., who made the suggestion more than a year ago that such a service in behalf of the Home should be held.

CAN EDUCATION SAVE THE WORLD?

exception."—M. F. Jamison, in the Sunday School Times, Sept. 17, 1932. Christian ideals have been shattered. The aim of service to others as exemplified by the golden rule has been ridiculed. The survival of the fittest has been stressed. God and His law have been set aside. With such a status of educational trends and teachings do we need to stand amazed at the resulting product? A generation without hope and without God is rapidly growing up.

GOLDEN AGE NOT HERE

Science has not brought the much-promised golden age. Inventions of men have not solved the rising menace of race hatreds, greed poverty, criminal atrocities, and bloodshed. Education of youth as America presents it today is not giving individuals the strength of integrity to face the future. Fathers and mothers are awaking to the weakness of the school system. While interviewing scores of parents who are planning to send their boys and girls to college, I have found an almost universal admission as to the weakness of the high school to give moral character and the pervading fear that higher education will likewise fail. One mother, not a member of any church, declared, "If I cannot send my daughter to a Christian school, I will keep her at home. I have seen too many young people ruined by the high school of this city."

The American educational system is sincerely endeavoring to meet the problems of twentieth century life, but it is failing in the fundamental principle. Solomon presented the basis of true education when he said, "The fear of the Lord is the principal part of knowledge."—Proverbs 1:7, margin. Building upon intellectual knowledge alone, man fails to attain the spiritual values of life that sustain him in crises and that lift him above a mere encyclopedia. Calvin Coolidge said epigrammatically: "Education which is not based on religion and character is not education. We do not need more material development; we need more spiritual development. We do not need more intellectual power; we need more moral power. We do not need more knowledge; we need more character. We do not need more government; we need more culture. We do not need more law; we need more religion."

Higher education is not the answer to the disillusioned world of 1933. Knowledge alone cannot cure the heartaches, the disease of sin, moral corruption, national hatreds, jealousy, greed, and every form of degradation into which our world has plunged. True, education will give man a conception of life, its past experiences and its lessons. Education will broaden his mental powers, develop his appreciation of arts and sciences. Training will make him skillful in vocations, in business, and in professional careers. But when all of this is accomplished, man remains a pitiful husk unless he has the power of Jesus Christ within his life. He might become the most skillful surgeon, the brightest lawyer, or the most talented musician and also be a disgrace to his community, a criminal and a dissolute individual. Only the power of a religion founded upon the teachings of Jesus Christ can keep him from sin.

Higher learning reaches beyond the libraries, the laboratories, and the classrooms. The Master declares to all students, "Learn of me." The outstanding human figure of the New Testament was Paul. He had devoted his life to education. He was gifted in Jewish law, history, and philosophy. Greek culture was a part of his training. He was probably the most highly educated man from the viewpoint of scholarship of all the New Testament writers; and yet he was a savage at heart until he met Jesus Christ on the Damascus highway. But after the fear of the Lord entered his heart, he was willing to give himself in service to the world. Education does not take selfishness from the hearts of men; only the power of love emanating from Jesus Christ can accomplish that.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION NEEDED

AFTER Paul had become an apostle of Jesus Christ, he found that worldly education did not avail; Greek philosophy, Jewish history, and tradition could not save men from sin and degradation. The ringing testimony of a truly educated man is found in his words to the Corinthians: "I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."—1 Cor. 2:2. He had found that the teachings of Jesus Christ were words far surpassing the wisdom of textbooks. He had reached the conclusion that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God" (1 Cor. 3:19).

Such an experience is essential in the hearts and lives of educators today before they will see a reformation in the youth of America. But the state schools are not the place to teach religion, for at once such a move would cause dissension as to teachings and creeds. The church school, sometimes called the parochial school, is the solution of this problem. The church and the school are the two training centers for youth. Above and far outweighing the knowledge of books is the knowledge of Jesus Christ and His love for the world. Beyond the teaching of philosophers and scientists is the teaching of God's Word. Character education founded upon the principles of the Teacher of Nazareth will alone solve the stupendous problems of living in the twentieth century. His life alone will inspire to self-sacrifice and service for humanity. His love alone will take self and greed from the heart.

The world has gone wrong today, not because Christianity has failed, not because the teaching of Christ is inadequate, but because we have forgotten to heed His commandments, to obey His principles, to follow Him in our life. There is no place for a new religion; the old one must be demonstrated in lives of men and women. The youth of America are not responsible for the education they have received. If this education lacks the principal part of knowledge, "the fear of the Lord," it is time for the fathers and mothers of the nation to awake, to give their sons and daughters an education in Christianity as well as an education in mathematics, history, cooking, or chemistry.

Shanghai, the Misunderstood

By Norman John MacLeod

RUSSIAN gold flows over the Khyber Pass into India. There it finds its way into the coffers of Mahatma Ghandi for his campaign of passive resistance toward Great Britain. Always these two great powers, Russia and Great Britain, are at swords' points to each other.

One may shoot down a man who stands and does nothing, but one will probably not do it the second time. For every man one shoots there are three or four more to be shot. One cannot shoot everybody who is doing nothing. That is the problem which Russian gold has brought forward to confront Great Britain in that far off corner of the world in northern India.

The nature of the man of India is that of passivity when he wants to confound his enemies. The quietists of India have exasperated Occidental people at all points of contact. Alexander the Great was so infuriated by the passive attitude of the peoples with whom he had contact in that section of India that he had conquered that he almost went insane with rage. When he conquered them in battle and took large numbers of prisoners, he found that those prisoners were the worst burden that he had. He could not frighten them by threats of death: they were not afraid of death. He could not handle them in any way with which his impetuous Macedonian nature was familiar. So he finally took no prisoners from them. Passivity is the most deadly weapon there is when used as the people of India have used it. Even so does Russian gold sap the vitals of British policy in India.

But India is not the only part of the world that produces quietists. Russian gold and propaganda can flow also in other directions. It finds a favorable foothold many places. In southern China, in the back country of Shanghai and Canton, suddenly appears a good sized colony of Chinese "Reds." They have high-handed methods of attacking their opponents. They capture a town, seize the rulers of that community, and hold them for a high ransom; the people of the town get together and produce the

As Japan again, and with apparent provocation, makes forays into China, the accompanying article, written by a keen student of international relations, possesses a great amount of interest. Daily it becomes more evident that the political imbroglios of the world are working toward the consummation of God's prediction of a great Asiatic alliance.

money; instead of getting out, however, the Soviet group sets up its city government and uses the resources of that town to take another one, and so on in similar fashion. Sovietism has for some time been going its unguarded way in southern China. Passivity is the attitude of these same people toward their government and to a large extent toward their foreign enemies.

But the "Reds" are not asleep in another direction. In inner China and Mongolia the Soviets by their tireless efforts at education have converted large numbers of those people directly to Sovietism. Japan becomes frantic. Something must be done; or China and India, with the help of the Russian hordes, will overwhelm her whole position. Japan acts!

To prevent a union of Shanghai and Mongolian "Reds" is Japan's necessary move. All at once, to the amazement of the uninitiated, the Japanese take matters into their own hands, defy the League of Nations, all of Europe, and the United States combined and launch their armies at Shanghai. For some time she has been hurling her thunderbolts at Manchuria, her hinterland to Korea. The world wonders to see how she can fly in the face of all opposition to fight a war in time of peace against a nation in the name of cleaning up a bandit-infested area in Manchuria. Then, almost without warning, she shifts her scene of action and sends her mighty military machine far to the south and forces the Chinese around Shanghai to submit. Why? Because she fears her worst enemy to the north, the Russian "Reds." If Russia can unite her forces with those of the Chinese Bolsheviks to the south of Shanghai and can combine her interests with those of Ghandi in India, the next thing will be the envelopment of Japan by land and sea and the disappearance of that power as suddenly as she arose. But Japan is not alone in her struggle.

Off across the wastes of Siberia and in the heart of Europe she has a friend, who, strange to say, was the creator of the Treaty of Versailles, (Please turn to Page Eight)

"Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name: bring an offering, and come into his courts. O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness: fear before him, all the earth."—Psalm 96:8, 9.

THE EDITOR'S PRAYER

OUR heavenly Father, we enter into Thy presence for worship. We are here that we may find rest and quietude and peace which alone can come from Thee. At Thy right hand is fullness of joy. Fill us, we pray Thee, with a sense of Thy nearness. May we appreciate Thy presence in our lives. Help us to understand something of Thy love, Thy mercy, and Thy matchless goodness to all men. Forgive all that we have said or done that was contrary to Thy ever righteous will; and in the fullness of time grant unto us the glory of looking upon Thy face, O Lord our God. Amen.

THE SPIRIT OF WORSHIP

ONE of the most blessed experiences of the disciple of the Lord is found in the act of worship. Worship sets aside for the time all thought of self, of reward, of personal gain, and all fear of loss and of punishment, and rejoices in the glory of God's presence. In worship one meditates deeply on the goodness and the greatness of Jehovah, and is moved to a fervency of praise for the privilege of approaching Him.

Worship may find expression in various ways. It may result in the pouring of praise from the abundance of one's appreciation of God, that is, in prayers of adoration and thanksgiving. It may burst forth in "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" spontaneously from the heart. It may inspire a worshipful searching of the Scriptures to discover the very innermost recesses of divine mercy and love. It may consist simply of quiet devout meditation on the blessedness of fellowship with the heavenly Father.

Worship is not restricted to time or place or circumstance; although to have a definite hour for worship, and a quiet suitable place in which to meditate, and to be surrounded by others engaged in the same devotional exercise is helpful. In the house of prayer, the closet of the home, out under the stars, it is possible to draw very close to God; for God is seeking worshipers who will worship Him in spirit and in truth. God is seeking us out that we may be very near to Him! He delights in our worship and will reveal Himself very fully and very wonderfully to all who will come unto Him in faith.

OUR KINDERGARTEN OF CRIME

"NO MODERN invention," asserts Stanley High in the Christian Herald, "capable of good, has been so widely perverted for evil" as has the motion picture machine. The results of a careful survey by scientists and educators reveals the startling fact that of the 77,000,000 Americans who attend the movies every week, 28,000,000, or more than a third, are children between the ages of 8 and 20, and six million are seven years old or less.

In the light of these facts it would certainly be advisable for parents to study the moving picture productions carefully, and to consider the possible influence they may have upon their children's lives. All the religious instruction many receive is the scant half hour spent each week in Sunday school. At the same time they are being taught through the movies from two to six hours or more each week a philosophy of life that is often very nearly opposite to the instruction they are given in the Sunday school.

And as ninety per cent of all one learns is received through the "eye door," it follows that by far the greater part of our children's schooling outside of the public schools is brought to them through what they see in the moving picture theatres.

Among the 500 feature pictures produced in 1930, according to the digest prepared by the commission mentioned, 137 had crime as the principal theme, 44 war, horror, or mystery, and 77 were centered in sex problems. More than half, therefore, were lessons in crime and carnality of the most violent sort.

The author of "Our Movie Made Children" says that among 115 more recent pictures studied, 406 separate crimes were committed. "In 35 of these pictures there were 54 murders; in twelve there were 17 hold-ups; in 14 there were 21 kidnappings."

Pictures painted on the minds of children are never erased, but exercise an influence over them throughout their lives. It has been said "that no modern invention is capable of greater good than the motion picture." What a shame that a means that could be used so effectively for the teaching of truth and the building up of character should be debased to such an extent!

Christian parents who fail to supervise their children's amusements will be held to account for their neglect and for their indifference.

Super-trained Teachers

AFTER reading some of the more recent books upon religious education, I am impressed with the great strides that have been made in theory and technique during the past few years. At the same time I cannot help but feel depressed because of the tremendous burden the authors seem to place upon religious educators, upon those who spread the gospel of the kingdom of God. It would seem that most of them make the work of spreading the gospel something definitely to be attempted only by those of super-training and intellect, something even beyond the abilities of present experts. It is difficult to conceive that this was Jesus' idea, or that it is the idea underlying the Christian religion. Christianity is intended for those of little education as well as those of great culture and knowledge, and it is reasonable to ask if those in high places have been leading us somewhat astray in putting the intellectual requirements they do upon Sunday school teachers and even upon the Sunday school members themselves. I think we will decide at this time that it is not so much super-trained teachers that are required . . . as consecrated teachers.

There is no doubt that we do need better teaching in the Sunday school and that all in our power should be done to make volunteer teachers more efficient. There is no doubt that teachers of young people should keep up with the subject matter being taught in high schools and colleges so that they can reinterpret religion in terms of the mental outlook of the boys and girls of today. But there are grave dangers in relinquishing the leadership in religious education to those governed largely by the point of view of secular education. For there is a vital difference between the aims and ideals of secular education and those of religious education, and this calls for a different technique. In religious education it is far better to have sociologists . . . than it is to have educators in the academic and scholastic sense of the term.

To be sure, this presupposes the need of intensive teacher-training methods of all kinds. The younger generation is, to a large extent, outgrowing the intellectual outlook of the past generation, making it increasingly difficult for volunteer teachers to keep up with the times. There is unquestionably a real need, which is justly recognized by the professional leadership of the country. However, a grave risk is involved in seeking as a remedy the substitution of professional teachers for volunteer workers to make a professional instead of a volunteer lay movement out of the Sunday school cause. And, for the same reason, it is a tremendous mistake to connect the Sunday school so closely with the church that it is entirely governed by the church body. We must preserve a certain democracy in the Sun-

This article, by David C. Cook, Jr., an authority in the field of religious education, provides an interesting amplification of "Can Education Save the World?" which was published in our last issue. It may be obtained in pamphlet form from the David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois. Its first appearance was in the New Century Teacher's Monthly.

day school and on the part of Sunday school officers and teachers if that institution is to continue to function with the old-time power and forcefulness. The remedy is not to govern the Sunday school from top to bottom through the official church organization or by professional leaders. We will need professionally trained leaders as advisers, but only as these leaders come to recognize the fundamental necessity of a democratic Sunday school government.

But to get back to the matter of trained volunteer teachers. It is my judgment that many of our professional leaders and writers are making religious education much more difficult than is necessary. The aim of religious education should be to interpret Christianity in terms of the intellectual, spiritual, and social outlook of the present-day boys and girls. It is not the teacher's aim to instruct the boys and girls in a Christianity suitable for professors of psychology and philosophy, but to guide them in discovering a Christianity suitable to their place in present-day society. While the principles of Christianity are eternal and unchangeable, the applications of these principles and their interpretation vary according to changes in social customs and the organization of society. And they also differ according to the outlook of each boy and girl and each age group; this is the teacher's immediate concern, as education is preparing for life now—that is, life in the group.

All this is fairly simple and will be understood by well-informed teachers. On the other hand, Christian education is suffering from an over-abundance of self-analysis and criticism. It has become too self-conscious. A constant digging up of its own roots to see how it is growing is really interfering with its proper development, and will result in stunting the plant and injuring, if not entirely eliminating, its fruits. The effectiveness of religious education, of spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ, is being minimized by placing the emphasis upon formal definitions. We cannot help but reflect that Christ's methods of teaching were simple and direct, while many of the modern theorists try to make teaching technique something tremendously difficult and complicated—so difficult and complicated that it is impossible of execution. When they become confused and differ with each other in defining aims and in making proper evaluations of the required technique, how may we expect even trained teachers to carry out what the higher professionalism would term an adequate program? If spreading the gospel of Christ requires the services of super-minds, if religious education becomes a matter of metaphysics instead of primarily a matter of inspiring love for God and one's neighbor, then we are forced into an impossible situation, in fact into an absurd situation. (over)

Surely the time has come when all right-thinking people will agree that it is not an effort to make religious education more difficult that is wanted, but an effort to simplify it and make it more effective. After reading the polemic of the religious education modernist as to the inefficiency of all that has gone before in the Sunday school, one wonders what such a leader thinks of the simple, primitive methods of Jesus Christ and of Paul. Certainly, from his point of view, the talks of the Galilean to His uncultured fishermen disciples must seem indeed crude and primitive. And it is not as though Jesus could not have found college men and great teachers to represent Him. He simply chose fishermen instead. Before accepting or taking too seriously the conclusions of super-educators, I would like to ask them what they think of Jesus. I recall the remarks of one young woman who had taken her degree in religious education. I said to this young lady that I sometimes felt that we could learn much by studying the teaching methods of Jesus. She replied that modern educators not only had gotten far beyond the teaching methods which Christ used, but had greatly improved upon His theology. She admitted that, for His day, Jesus was a real leader, but said that the present age had outgrown Him.

It occurs to me that we are in some danger of feeling ourselves superior to Jesus, our Leader, and that we need to get back to Christ in our theology and in our teaching methods. It is this effort to improve on Christ, to put Christianity above humanity, to make it something super-human and super-intellectual, which is killing its real life and forcefulness. This policy is bound to result in a loss not only of Sunday school members, but of church members, because the Sunday school is the feeder of the church. Christianity is primarily a social gospel, rather than an intellectual gospel, and as a social gospel its leadership must rest in the hands of the laymen of the church. It is truly a laymen's gospel, a gospel requiring the leadership and the feeling of responsibility on the part of everyone concerned, including the boys and girls, the teachers and officers of the school and the parents at home.

Education, as it is understood by the educators, on the other hand, is something different. For practical purposes, education is evaluated as effective if it creates knowledge and culture in the minds of those who are to be educated. Educators may find fault with the inadequacy of this statement, but if they do they must at the same time be aware of the inadequacy of the results of much of our secondary and higher education of today in preparing people to live most truly and completely as members of an enlightened nation. Nevertheless, when all is said and done, the acquiring of culture and information is the governing motive of our secular educators, and the fact that the growth and popularity of education in our country has had no appreciable effect on reducing crime is indicative of the fact that character building and spiritual idealism have been made secondary, and to a large extent are non-effective in the educational program.

I doubt if anyone will challenge the statement that in the past fifteen years there has been a growing tendency in many Sunday schools and in some of the newer types of lesson material with which these schools are experimenting to reduce religious education to mere character training. The elements of faith and Christian idealism have been given too scant attention. A disproportionate emphasis has been placed on conduct control by the mere training of the reason and the manipulation of external habit-forming machinery. This is the result of super-intellectual leadership of the kind alluded to above.

Instead of all this, the aim of the consecrated teacher, who has the Christian spirit and understands the personal and social needs of our day, must be to spiritualize every act of life, to put the Christian motive into the solving of every life situation which may confront the pupil. To this end every pupil must be led to a definite commitment of the whole life to Jesus Christ and the spiritual aims of His kingdom. If religion is "the life of God in the soul of man," it is surely pertinent to ask whether we can have any religious education except as we lead our boys and girls to open their lives to receive the life of God through the experience of faith. At least if we are determined to leave Christ out and to imagine that we have gone beyond Him in this super-intellectual age, let us be honest and not talk about our religious education as if we thought it were Christian, for such religious education is not Christian.

ARE YOU SAVED?

DEAR friend, kindly permit the point of this question to touch your conscience and heart, whether you are or are not a member of the church. You may be a member of any church or of all the churches on the face of the earth, and yet not be a member of Christ. Remember that He has said, "When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say, . . . I know you not whence ye are: then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity."—Luke 13:25-27. A man may sit at the Lord's table and yet be cast into outer darkness at last.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."—Matt. 7:21-23. Many, not few, but alas, many who have been popular and powerful preachers wielding vast influence will awake to the frightful discovery when Christ comes again that they are undone forever!—Selected by R. A. Curtis.

Dissecting the Bible

How does it come that we have liberalism? Whence the source of the amazing conclusions of liberalists? It is a fascinating story of human perversity and stupidity. Let us follow it for a while.

It was observed that in the early parts of the Bible—up to Exodus 6—Elohim (God) is used, and elsewhere Jehovah (Lord). The sections containing Elohim were called the “Elohistic” documents, referred to for short as E. The sections containing Jehovah were called Jehovistic, referred to for short as J. Not only did Moses not write anything, declared the critics, but probably he never lived! These two sections were written by different authors—names unknown, hence the designations E and J.

Deuteronomy was still another document by still another writer, and was called D. According to the liberalists, D was actually written only a few months before its “discovery” in the temple during the reign of Josiah. We will say more about this later.

SPREAD OF CRITICISM

BUT criticism was as yet only in its infancy. It was now launched on a long and checkered career. P was soon added to the alphabetical concoctions, being the productions of a supposed priest. Everything was now nicely settled. Each little chunk of Moses’ books was confidently dated and lettered. Then a new sect of scholars came along and rudely reversed the whole sequence. The entire Levitical code was cast down bodily from the beginning to the end of Israel’s history. The E document, from the honor of being the oldest of the quartet, now became the youngest.

It was as if a man who had been standing on his feet suddenly found himself standing on his head. Naturally everything would have an upside-down look, and history was now reconstructed from this new perspective, this standing-on-head position. In this way the whole Mosaic period was obliterated. Whole centuries were dropped out. Liberalists airily furnished the Jews with a whole invented history and manufactured a new social and religious economy. The product of fervid imagination is presented to the Christian world as the “assured result of biblical scholarship.”

In this way the Mosaic laws, the ten commandments, the tabernacle, the Aaronic priesthood, the Levites, the Passover law, etc., became at best only fiction. The whole thing was “a mere figment of the postcaptivity priesthood,” as Bishop Colenso put it.

With hundreds of new scholars now at work like playful pups tearing at the Bible, the dissecting of the Bible proceeded in wholesale fashion. The theological professors of each nation rivaled those of the other nations to see which could make the greatest havoc of the Bible records and produce the most extreme theory.

SPLITTING THE SCRIPTURES

THE four documents were now split up in dizzy fashion.

The original J became J-1, J-2, J-3; E follows likewise; and P gets to P-4. Then, to weld these unwieldy parts together, the ingenious critics, doctors of divinity in the various theological colleges, invented a literary genius whom they called a Redactor, or R. But he soon was split up into R-1, R-2, R-3, etc.

This went so far that a Bible was printed to show all of this. Each section was merrily printed in a different color. It was called the “Polychrome Bible,” or “Rainbow Bible,” as a wag had it. A single verse would have several colors, in one case seven, showing that as many different writers over a period of hundreds of years had been needed to write one verse!

But absurdity became doubly absurd when each of the former sections was discovered to have been produced by whole “schools” of writers! How a reasonable man is to separate these various “schools” (of whose existence, remember, we have no scintilla of evidence) with their several characteristics in the use of the divine names and otherwise flowing on side by side for centuries without mingling in the narrow limits of Judea and later in the exile is not explained; and I do not stop to inquire.

ALLEGED CONTRADICTIONS

HAVING cut the narratives up among the several schools of authors and treated each part as complete, they pit one against the other and mark off the differences as proof of contradictions in the Bible. Then they talk learnedly of the “spirit” as applied to the Bible. Liberalists jauntily assume the utter absurdity of any position opposed to theirs and are so sure they are right that they do not give any time to the arguments of their opponents. Indeed, they are blithely certain no arguments exist on the other side. They are the people, and wisdom will perish with them!

The amazing paradox of the situation is that these theologians, heads of Bible schools where future ministers are being trained in infidelity, tell us most blandly and with evident conviction that when they have convinced people that the Bible is largely composed of fictions, incredibilities, representations of God which degrade and dishonor Him; that it bristles with contradictions; that its moral codes are borrowed from the Babylonians, Egyptians, and Persians; that its religious worship is only a degenerate form of heathenism; that its history is an unreliable exaggeration of power-loving and dishonest priests—they tell us that when they have completely shorn people of all confidence in the Bible as an inspired or even reliable book, they have thus enhanced its value and are performing a service for God! Yes, this is exactly what they claim.

Prof. Kent quaintly expresses the position of the liberalist in the following manner: “Not a grain of truth which the Bible contains has been destroyed or permanently obscured. Instead, the debris of time-honored traditions and dogmas has been cleared away, and the true Scriptures at last stand forth again in their pristine splendor."

LIBERALISTIC FANCY

LIKE human bloodhounds, these modern liberalists take unholy delight in hunting down, multiplying, and mercilessly exposing the supposed mistakes of the Bible. Searching for contradictions is the chief indoor sport of liberalists. There was once an insane woman in an asylum who could not be kept quiet except by having something to tear. So they used to give her pieces of old silk, and she would sit by the hour contentedly pulling them to pieces and listening to them rip. Many liberalists seem like that. They are happy only when exposing some supposed fault in the Bible.

The reader may think that there must be some fire where there is so much smoke, that some of these contradictions and mistakes so confidently exposed by liberalists must be verifiable. Otherwise how could the critics make such claims without being exposed and held up to deserved ridicule?

The mistakes and contradictions of the Bible are manufactured by the liberalists in the following manner: They accept evolution; evolution makes creation as recorded in Genesis absurd. Therefore, the creation account is a myth, or a lie, or an absurdity, according to the taste of the critic. And thus they go through the Bible, creating the very difficulties they assert that they find and expose.

Another instance: These critics say that Deuteronomy was not written by Moses, first because there was no Moses and second because it was written in the time of Josiah by some dishonest priests, hid in the temple, then "discovered" by them to cause the very reformation it did cause, thus giving them additional power! So anything in the Bible that contradicts this theory is put forth to show how full of mistakes the Bible is! Thus they manufacture the contradictions and then point to these contradictions as the reason for rejecting the Bible as authority.

But a time of reckoning has come. The absurdities of the liberal claims have been exposed by themselves in their conflicts with one another, and by recent archaeological discoveries.—Earle Albert Rowell.

Some Scriptural Facts Regarding Baptism

By J. G. Haupt

BAPTISM was not introduced during Old Testament periods. John the Baptist, the forerunner of the Messiah, was the son of the Jewish prophet Zacharias and his wife Elisabeth. As the forerunner he prepared the way for the Messiah, or Christ in the Greek, of the New Testament.

The New Testament opened another Jewish age. Every New Testament writer was a fervent Jew and in ability stood at a par with Old Testament authorities. Through John the Baptist God introduced the baptism of all believers. The first baptism was unto repentance. This word "repentance" signified a change of attitude. This continued until the crucifixion of the Messiah. The crucified Christ rose from the dead after three days in the tomb or hades. These three days had been symbolized by Jonah in the body of the large fish which had held him in prison.

With the resurrection of Christ began Christian baptism, or baptism into Christ. The Bible gives six illustrations of this baptism. A significant symbolism regarding baptism is found in Romans 6:4, which reads, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." The Greek distinguishes between the death state and the act of dying.

The Apostle Paul also wrote the church of God of the Colossians according to the twelfth verse of the second chapter as follows: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."

The Apostle Peter in his first epistle, chapter three, verse 21, says in the literal version, "Whereunto baptism does also now save us, not the washing away of the uncleanness of the body, but the expression to God of a true understanding of the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

In Paul and Peter we thus have pictured the going into and the coming out of the baptismal water as the burial and resurrection of Jesus.

After the crucifixion came the great Pentecostal day. The apostles preached and practiced Christian baptism, or baptism into Christ, from this time forward, their followers continuing the same to the present day. Galatians 3:27 speaks these words: "Besides, as many of you as were immersed into Christ, were clothed with Christ." They put on Christ as a garment, as a protecting cloak.

"He ordered them to be baptized in the name of the Lord."—Acts 10:48. "And having heard this, they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus."—Acts 19:5. "And Peter said to them: 'Reform, and let each of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the forgiveness of your sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.'"—Acts 2:38.

In the epistle to the Romans (6:3-4) the Apostle Paul gives another example of Christian baptism: "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life."

National Recovery Administration

By George B. Alldridge

JUDGING by the number of inquiries made at church last Sunday morning, the "Between You and Me" column is very popular with the readers of THE HERALD. All noticed the request of Brother Jesse Harrold for an article "on the possible meaning of the NRA eagle from a prophetic standpoint."

Whenever something of a phenomenal character transpires pertaining to our national government, immediately Bible students who are alert and watching the signs of the times begin to inquire among themselves whether this has any reference to our Lord's return. This is a healthy spiritual evidence on the part of those so watching, that they are obeying His injunction to "watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

I hope all my readers' minds are filled with spiritual songs, for Paul tells us in Ephesians 5:19 to speak to ourselves "in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in (our) heart to the Lord." Paul means we are to talk and sing to ourselves. Here is a verse of one song I love to sing to myself. If I sing it to others, they are offended, because I have no voice; but I love to hear myself sing it.

"As a woman counts the days
Till her absent lord she see,
Longs and watches, weeps and prays,
So the church must long for Thee.
Come, that we may see Thee nigh;
Then the sheep will feed in peace;
Hushed forever trouble's sigh,
Sin and sorrow's triumph cease."

How differently the Scriptures view men's actions and God's dealings with them. Everything that man executes he views with pride, as expressed by King Nebuchadnezzar: "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" But while these words were in the king's mouth, God declared that he would be so debased that even the cattle in the fields would be in intelligence above him and that he would become as one of them, even living upon the same diet.

How different Nebuchadnezzar's view of the kingdoms that would follow that of which he was the head—the Golden Kingdom—and the view God gave Daniel as He saw them—beastly, so beastly in nature and form that even to us they appear as monstrosities unlike anything in the

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

animal world God originally created. Is it not strange that in this man unconsciously confirms God's Word by designating his governments by the same beastly names? We have the "Lion," "Bear," "Dragons," "Tiger," "Leopard," and "Eagle," all more or less living upon prey.

So, when we read the Apocalypse, we readily recognize that "beast" means "kingdoms."

In this article I am seeking to explain the Revelation only as I personally understand it. God uses man's own illustrations and symbols to convey to his mind what His purpose is in bringing blessing and restoration to this sin-cursed earth! I read in Revelation 4:7, "And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf (bull), and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle."

Who are these? Those whom God has gathered out of the beastly kingdoms. These are the same we read of in Revelation 5:9 as giving praise to the Lamb for having died for them and redeeming them by His blood out of every tribe and tongue and people and nation.

How wonderfully true Ecclesiastes 3:14, 15 are: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past."

Genesis 4:15, "And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him," I do not think refers to a physical mark. Jeremiah 3:3 gives us light upon this: "The showers were withholden, and the latter rain came not; yet hadst thou a forehead of an incestuous wife, thou refusedst to feel shame."—Leeser Trans.

What did Cain say to the Lord? "From thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth." Now what was the mark? Cain's character, of course, registered in his forehead. Everyone today is registering in his forehead the mark of the one he is serving.

In Galatians 6:17 we read, "From henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." Was Paul physically marked? You know he was not. Then what did he mean? When a slave purchased his liberty, the money paid was given to the priest; and the priest in turn recognized the slave as becoming a slave to a new master, or the God he served, while he was practically free, subject to certain periodical duties. If at any time his master or his heirs sought to reclaim him, he had the record of his freedom in the temple.

Paul, once a slave of sin, now became a slave for Christ. So he said if anyone sought to reclaim him it was impossible, as he bore in his body the marks of his new Master, Christ, or His spirit and character.

In Revelation 13:16, 17, 18 we read about those who probably lived in the days of Charlemagne, who was instrumental in permitting an ecclesiastical power to assume rule over the empire he vacated at death. I believe some Bible students consider this to be the "image of the beast" and the mark to be the symbol of the cross and the name expressed as 666, which in Latin means Lateinos, or in English, Latindom, or Latin power, kingdom. Whatever it means, it denotes a kingdom which men must worship and acknowledge.

In verse eight we read, "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." In looking up this word "mark" I noted Strong defines it as "a badge of servitude." I cannot say if Revelation was written in chronological order; but surely, when we read chapters nineteen and twenty, we are reading of the time when Jesus is present.

Forty years ago we had a railroad strike with Eugene Debs at the head of it. Grover Cleveland was president. At Chicago a mail train was held up, the crew having abandoned it. The president sent troops to Chicago to take charge of the train and perform the duties of a regular crew. Governor Atgeld protested, declaring the president had usurped authority invested in the state and its executive. What would he say if living today?

President Roosevelt is setting aside all precedents regarding "states' rights." He is virtually a national dictator, invested with power conferred upon him by congress. The blue eagle is the symbol of his power. All, rich and poor, young and old, must submit to his power; to refuse means to be boycotted.

Industries for years have been running the "open shop." Today strikes are averted by the government's insistence that the factories be virtually unionized. Where will this lead? Labor, when it holds the upper hand, is just as tyrannical as Capital. All who are familiar with the workings of the present regime in Russia recognize this fact.

The NRA is pregnant with power and unlimited possibilities. It is pouring out money like water to keep the government solvent. How can all this money be replaced? All nations are increasing their armament, including our own. The British government and our own have drawn up programs to meet the requirements of the coming struggle. Pacifists, if they will not bear arms, are to be starved into submission. Perhaps allegiance to the blue eagle means more than we now read upon the face of it.

who keeps her eagle eye on the Far East: France. She will not suffer her allies on the eastern side of Germany to be browbeaten from Russian sources; and she will not forsake her ally on the far side of Russia. France's gold pours into Japan even as Russia's gold pours into India and China. What will be the outcome? Will the Russians with their newly found power to organize be able to overcome the energetic wily Japanese at his game of propaganda? Or will the Japanese through their newly found Fascism be able to deal a death blow to Sovietism?

When Mussolini returned to civilian life after the World War, he found Italy in the hands of the Communists with whom he had formerly associated. He took up the cudgels against his former party, however, and started, with the help of his newspaper, a new party known as "Fascisti." It was born of socialist principles, but was bitterly opposed to proletarian socialism such as was found in Russia and had been in power in Italy. The power of the Italian government was being wasted in every respect: corruption existed that would have made even the Directory of the French Revolution seem clean and chaste; the power of the Italian cabinet and the king were nullified by a legislature that was opposed to them.

So arose the Fascist party in Italy. Its chief foe was communism, particularly of the Russian breed. Other nations began to show signs of Fascist leanings to overcome the Bolshevism that was seeping in from Russia. An obscure little article appeared some months ago telling of the creation of a new Fascist society: this time in far off Japan. What was the meaning? Why should the Japanese adopt a thing which seems so foreign to the spirit of that far off Island Empire? Politics makes strange bedfellows!

Into the very heart of Japan itself had crept the spirit of Sovietism led by the Liberalist party. The effect of that propaganda, however, was not to strengthen the military spirit of Japan as it has in Russia, but rather to weaken it. Premier Shidehara held to a policy of non-aggression and anti-imperialism. Japan, he felt, should follow the spirit of the day to reduce her army and navy to the minimum. She should follow in the real spirit of the Washington Conference in disarmament. She should keep her hands off China as far as possible and withdraw her claims from Manchuria as far as was consistent with the protection of her Korean frontiers. Such was the effect of Japanese liberal-socialism.

In the meantime, the Japanese military party could notice the encroachments of the Russians in Manchuria and Mongolia. They could see with their keen eyes on China that Bolshevism was having its way there. Then the London Conference of 1930 fell like a bomb into Japanese circles. Japan awoke to realize that her only safety lay in a Fascist attitude and in Fascist sympathy. Should she fly to the arms of Italy and Germany? So we see the strange anachronism of the "Mysterious Oriental" taking on the forms of the old Roman Empire and making his old Roman salute. Are Japanese Fascists tied to Mussolini and Hitler? Those would be interesting questions to be able to answer. Only time will reveal the strange entanglement of alliances.

Germany feels that she was robbed, beaten, bound hand and foot, and turned over to her worst enemies when the Treaty of Versailles was forced upon her. She saw a wedge of Poland put between her and her province of East Prussia. Furthermore, her telegraph lines were all seized and turned over to her enemies. No communication could pass from Western Germany to East Prussia without being censored by her enemies. Few peoples would submit calmly to such encroachments.

She saw France succeed in encircling her with an iron ring of small nations who would be dependent upon France and the Treaty of Versailles for their very existence. These nations have united with one another in what is known as the "Little Entente." Just recently they have renewed their alliance and have made it more binding: the reason is that Hitler has announced a new drive against the Treaty of Versailles which will begin at once. That drive he hopes will gain the support of several strong parties in the world. Even Great Britain and the United States might help out on such a drive. The natural fear of the Little Entente is that the treaty of Versailles might be altered and that they might be the losers by that revision.

Italy, also, wants revision of the treaty, for she feels that only through her efforts independent of her former allies she gained any spoils of the war with Austria. She has thus naturally drawn herself into closer friendship with France's enemies. Could Japan do likewise? But Italy does not have much in common with Russia, who also wants revision: Fascism could not have anything in common with Bolshevism. Germany has, under her Hitlerite regime, also alienated Italy from her and stands pretty much alone in the world.

The situation in the political arena of the world is one that is full of all kinds of possibilities in all directions. Each nation is checking the other to see that it is not outdone. Each one plays its enemies off against each other. The two great forces at work in the whole thing are not religion as formerly, but the stakes of diplomacy, of commerce and international trade. How will the nations align themselves? Those things are in the hand of God. One chance against another as far as the diplomat is concerned is the order of the day; but "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform."

Japan has friends in Europe, or she could not defy the Russian power as she has done. Russia has friends in Asia as well as in Europe and is playing her waiting game till the proper moment is presented for her to strike. Shanghai is only an incident. Soviet propaganda is at work; Fascism is making its plea. Which will win? Only God, who understands the inflaming desire of human nature, can read that future to know. But we look for the coming of that great Asiatic power from the North and East to go down to Palestine to take its spoil from those people there.

Hasten, oh Lord, the coming of that day, for it is the prelude to the greater one yet to come, is the prayer of the Bible student!

BIBLE STUDY

By C. E. Randall

THE Church of God has always emphasized the need of Bible study. The need of it is becoming more apparent every day. There are several reasons for such study. First of all it is necessary in order to know God's will toward us. It is the only way we can know His will. The Bible is our handbook of instructions. It describes in detail what we should do, how we should do it, and when we should do it. It is impossible to do the will of God when one does not know what that will is.

We need to study the Bible for the inspiration and blessing that come as results of daily meditation. The worshiper that does not study his Bible is never an enthusiastic supporter of God's cause. The "sincere milk" and "bread in due season" can only be found in the Word of God.

For many months a large number of people have by circumstances been forced to live off the fruit of other people. Many are content to continue this instead of attempting to earn their own living. The same condition prevails in the field of church activity. There are innumerable people who are content to eat what spiritual food they can get from other people and never exert any effort to provide their own spiritual nourishment by studying to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth (2 Tim. 2:15). The Bible is the granary that holds our spiritual food. Go to it often; eat heartily of its food. Again, we need to study our Bibles to find out the dangers and pitfalls that lie ahead. There are many red lights on life's highway today; the Bible explains them.—Church of God Messenger.

THE ONE HUNDRED TWENTY-FIRST PSALM

Unto the hills I lift my eyes,
 For from there is my aid—
 From God Eternal and All-wise,
 By whom all things were made.
 He cares for thee through all thy days,
 And never shall He sleep;
 The Watcher over Israel's ways
 Unfailing guard doth keep.
 He shades thee from the day's hot sun,
 And from night's silver moon;
 Until thy life's last race is run
 His guard shall be thy boon.
 He guides thee in thy going out
 And in thy coming in;
 His love shall circle thee about Preserving thee from sin.

Church Forgiveness Week

*"Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors."
—Matthew 6:12.*

TOLEDO, OHIO.—Believing that the church itself should be the first to manifest forgiveness, St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church of this city has "forgiven" more than $26,000 in unpaid pledges of its members. The church has 2,400 active communicants, which is said to be the largest Lutheran membership in America. Rev. S. C. Michelfelder, the pastor, explained the action taken in this way: "We believe," he said, "that many of our people having made pledges in good faith, but unable to keep them, are burdened by the debt they owe the church. We believe that the church which would teach others to pray the Lord's Prayer should be the first to 'forgive.'"

We recall that the Church of God at Grand Rapids, Mich., under the leadership of Pastor F. E. Siple, recently held a "Forgiveness Week," during which time morning devotional services were conducted and an effort made to forgive all wrongs among members.

O Shade of Martin Luther!

"The land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lord."—Hosea 1:2.

WITTENBERG, GERMANY.—Events of portentous significance occurred a couple of weeks ago, according to Time, in "sleepy old Wittenberg," the town of Martin Luther, who made it "the cradle of the Reformation," when 150 brown uniformed Lutheran theological students of Saxony marched into town carrying complete army equipment including campaign knapsacks. They had been sent by the Roman Catholic Chancellor of Germany, Adolf Hitler, ostensibly as a guard of honor to his friend, Dr. Ludwig Muller, the newly elected Protestant Evangelical Bishop of Prussia. The real object of their appearance before the synod, however, seems to have been to cow the delegates into submission to the will of the chancellor and induce them to elect Dr. Muller to the bishopric of all Germany.

"Last week," the report continues, "Dr. Muller was about to mold what amounted to a new German Evangelical Church. He wanted no trouble, no back-sliding at the last moment by conscience-stricken churchmen. The militant theological students were his praetorian guard. Menacingly they faced the Castle Church on the doors of which in 1517 Martin Luther nailed his 95 Theses, the charter of the reformation."

Addressing the synod, Bishop Muller said: "An attitude of our churches of unconcerned neutrality toward the State now belongs to the past! We must all give loyal service to the State, which disavows—definitely and altogether rightfully—any liberal or social freedom of conscience." Recalling Martin Luther's declaration of the equality of all men in the sight of God, the Bishop added: "Equality before God does not exclude inequality among men, which is also willed by God. For this reason all non-Aryans (Jews) must be barred from holding office in the church."

Queen of Sheba Visits Jerusalem

"The queen of Sheba . . . came to Jerusalem with a very great train."—1 Kings 10:1, 2.

JERUSALEM.—Empress Waizeru Menen of Abyssinia, whose husband, Emperor Haile Selassie, "looks like an Old Testament bearded Jew" and traces his ancestry through an illegitimate line to King Solomon, recently visited Jerusalem as did her predecessor on the throne some three thousand years ago.

"According to the scanty native chronicles, Menelek, son of Solomon, was the first king of the Ethiopians." (Abyssinia is now again known as Ethiopia.) As the queen entered Jerusalem, a British band welcomed her at the railway station with the Abyssinian national anthem, "The Lion of the Tribe of Judah is Victor!"

That Ethiopia will have an important place in the events of the tribulation period is apparent from Ezekiel 38:4, 5, and Daniel 11:43. The potential strength of the army is 750,000. The full title of the king, "Negus Negust," means "King of Kings." A debased form of Christianity exists that is similar in many ways to the Roman Catholic.

Next War to be Swift and Deadly

"Their land shall be soaked with blood . . . for it is the day of the Lord's vengeance."—Isaiah 34:7, 8.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—The war of the future will be one of swift attack from the air, in which high explosives, gas, and even disease germ cultures will be rained on the civilian population of the great commercial centers, declared Dr. Charles H. Mayo of Rochester, Minn., yesterday to the Chicago Association of Commerce, according to the Chicago Tribune.

"No class A countries will ever fight another war with massed men. It will be too expensive," the eminent surgeon predicted. "The world must be ready for a quick jump. Planes will drop explosives, gas, disease. Their maxim will be, 'Jump in and destroy as quickly as you can.'"

THE HISTORY OF JERUSALEM

JERUSALEM is a product of the persistent efforts of a people and was not aided greatly by a beautiful site. The location was chosen at the beginning because of its advantage for a capital or fortress, but it needed the hand of man to shape it into a beautiful city. It was at first only a small township, but it became the “Mother of Prophets” and “Bride of Kings.”

When it was still called Urusalem, Jerusalem was an outpost of Pharaoh's troops, chosen because it was at the edge of the desert and on well beaten trade routes. Jerusalem has little timber and a poor water supply. Its industries are all local, and its visitors are nearly all pilgrims. In its thirty-three centuries of history it has been rocked by earthquakes, and sacked by invaders; it has been besieged and blockaded twenty times; has been reconstructed eighteen times; has had two periods of desolation, one after Nebuchadnezzar's invasion, and one after its capture by Hadrian: but this city still lives on.

Jerusalem was settled about 2500 B. C. by Semites. It was a vassal of Egypt until 1400 B. C., at which time Joshua invaded it. There are evidences that the Egyptians maintained a garrison there, but it was in the hands of the Jebusites when the Israelites came in. Jerusalem was then divided into two sections, those of Judah and Benjamin. Then seven years after his accession David united these two and changed the plan of the city. He placed the royal city on the east hill, the site of the temple on the north, and the civilian town on the west hill.

Later Solomon fortified the city with a wall, but it was torn up by the invasions of Shiahak, Jeroboam, Amoziah, Joash, and Amaziah. It was fortified by Hezekiah and later torn down by Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B. C.

In 445 B. C., Nehemiah rebuilt the city, making many important changes, but it was partly destroyed by Ptolemy I in 332 B. C. It was completely destroyed by Antiochus in 168 B. C. After a time the Jews rebuilt part of the city and made a first and part of a second wall to keep the Greeks out; but in 65 B. C. Pompey took the city just as its second wall was being completed. In 54 B. C. Crassus plundered the temple. In 37 B. C. Herod set up a dynasty and attempted to make a cultured kingdom. He sought the aid of Antony and Augustus. The latter is said to have found Jerusalem brick and left it marble.

When a third wall was being built by Herod Agrippa, Titus and the Romans attacked and took the second and third walls in 70 A. D. The Jews were defeated, the city plowed under, and a new city built. Temples to heathen gods were erected in this city; but in 326 A. D. Constantine ordered a few Christian churches built. In 637 A. D. the Romans were defeated by the Turkish leader, Omar. The Crusaders entered the city in 1099, and in 1187 it was taken by Saladin, who repaired the walls. As a result of the World War, Jerusalem was taken from the Turks and was made a British mandate.

At the present time Jerusalem is larger outside the walls than within, making the most rapid growth on the north-west side. Since 1917 the old aqueduct has been cleaned and it now leads water from springs fourteen miles away to a reservoir in Jerusalem, and also one in Lifta. Plans for several garden villages have been made and a chamber of commerce has been organized.

The Government Department of Antiquities has archeological schools of many nations under its control, and it is assisted by a board of representatives from these schools. Six thousand specimens have been catalogued at the Palestine Museum at Jerusalem. These represent only a small part of what is planned to be put on exhibit. A traveler will find roads for year round travel leading to Joppa, Jericho, Hebron, and Damascus. An Armenian patriarch was elected in 1921 with the consent of the British king, and the position of Orthodox Patriarch of Jerusalem has been confirmed by a British commission.

Apart from political and military interest, the city itself has come to mean less and less, but around it memories have grown up in men's minds, visions of an ideal city and a perfect order of society.

And when the lonely winter of our sorrow
Has rounded out for us earth's changing year,
Oh, on some radiant morn what long-hushed voices

"Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right."

YOUR LITTLE WORLD AND MINE

THE very first law a boy or a girl should learn to keep is the law of obedience, because the keeping of that law makes the keeping of all other laws so much easier. It sounds tiresome, doesn't it, but let's think about it a while.

Why do we need law at all? Let's see; think a little! Not one of us lives alone, all by himself, does he? We are all surrounded by people younger and older than ourselves, and these, along with ourselves, go to make up our little worlds.

Each person in your little world has certain things that belong to him, certain rights that are his, certain duties he must perform for the good of all the other people in that world. If no one considered these possessions, these rights, these duties, what a frightful mixture we would have, to be sure! Jack would be running off with Bill's baseball. May would be tuning in the radio to the loudest pitch when Betty had to practice her music lesson. Mother would be going off to a movie when Father came home hungry and tired.

Don't you see, then, that obedience is just acting in such a way as to make our little worlds run as smoothly as possible, showing as much respect for the rights of others as we want them to show for ours? It's really quite simple and not tiresome, after all. For the doing of that is what makes everyone happiest, yourself as well as the other people, big and little, in your world.

And so, we say that learning obedience is the first, the finest, and the most valuable lesson for all of us. It surely follows that the boy or girl who learns that lesson early in life will escape many hard knocks when he grows out of the world of his home and his school, and enters the bigger world of life. For out in this world he will acquire greater possessions, meet with more important rights, and find at his hand greater duties to perform.

Also, when the boy or girl grows up into the greater world of life, he will meet with people who have not learned the lesson of obedience. Then he will see what shipwreck they have made of their lives, what handicaps they have put upon their progress. How glad he will be that early in life he had Christian parents and Christian teachers who wisely taught him obedience.

Paul, that great missionary of whom we are studying this quarter, tells the secret which will help us more than anything else in learning obedience. It's just a little four-letter word, and it's—l-o-v-e. Why, of course, if we have love in our hearts for all the people who go to make up our little world, we just couldn't do anything to make them unhappy. We couldn't use any of their possessions without their consent. We wouldn't think of putting our own rights ahead of theirs. We'd never go selfishly off on our own pleasure when others needed us.

That is why the Apostle tells us that love keeps all law, and he knew what he was talking about. He understood all about the laws of his country, as well as the laws of home, which really are the same after all. And he didn't only tell others to keep them; he kept them himself.

Jesus, our great Example, put it all into simple words when He answered the lawyer's question as to what was the greatest law of all. He said it was first, to love God with all our heart, soul, and mind, and second, to love our neighbor as ourself. These are all that are necessary, Jesus said.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

As before, write the number and title of the lesson, also the golden text, across the top. Write a little theme showing why obedience is the first and best lesson for all of us to learn. Then copy this little story or clip it out and paste it in your page:

The "True Blues" class were enjoying an outing on Saturday afternoon. They had just finished their picnic lunch and were resting a little after their games, before beginning to hike back home. In a shady nook some lovely wild flowers were peeping up above the long grass. Gerald and Geraldine, the class twins, had just begun a lovely rock garden at home, and their eyes eagerly alighted upon these beautiful specimens. "Let's dig just a few and take them home," said Gerald. To this his twin agreed, and they were about to begin digging when John ran up to them. John's father owned the picnic ground, you see.

"Oh, Gerald," he said, "Father wouldn't mind if you took a few wild plants, but say, you know, it's against the law. See that sign, 'Do Not Molest Wild Flowers. Order of County Commissioner.'" And John pointed out a sign in another part of the grounds.

Gerald and Geraldine took no wild flowers home for their rock garden, much as they would like to have had them. "We want to keep the law even if the county commissioner wouldn't see us," they said.

LESSON 5. — October 29, 1933

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY

Romans 13:12 to 15:3

Devotional Reading: Psalm 68:1-6

GOLDEN TEXT

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.—Romans 13:10.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Christian Use of Personal Liberty.

Aim: The Christian should do nothing that may lead another into sin, regardless of how harmless it may be to himself.

Basic Truth: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."—Matthew 7:12.

I. Temperance and the Lord's Coming. (Rom. 13:12-14.) The night of misery brought on by sin is nearly over. The day of the Lord is at hand. As disciples of Christ we should "cast off the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light," that we may be found walking in His steps when He comes. "If we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1:6, 7. Drunkenness and other forms of self-indulgence are performed in darkness that they may not be seen. The Christian should live as ever under the eye of Christ, reflecting His light, for the Lord is at hand. Cf. Matt. 5:16.

II. Temperance for Christ's Sake. (Rom. 14:7-9.) As disciples we are "living epistles, known and read of all men." We are all of the Lord that the world can see. We are all men have by which to judge Him. Christ died that He might be true to His duty to us. We should strive to overcome self with its appetites and passions that we may be true to Him. In all things we should "live unto the Lord," for His sake, for our own sakes, and for the sake of the world which looks to us for light.

III. Temperance for the Sake of Others. (Rom. 14:15-21.) The non-Christian lives for himself alone. He assumes responsibility for no one else. But the disciple of Christ lives for all men. Whatever he does must be done with a recognition of its possible effect on others as well as upon himself. He is responsible to the full extent of his personal influence for their lives and conduct. He must not destroy the value of Christ's sacrifice to satisfy his own desires, nor do that which might cause a weaker brother to stumble.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Efficiency of Service: The new adjustment of business will in many instances call for shorter hours of service. This will mean that each individual must make the most of the time when he is actually in service, else the work will be slighted. The period of service for a Christian is from the time of baptism until death. Since the time of death is uncertain, the true disciple will not wait until tomorrow to do the things that may be done today.

He will begin today to take an interest in things that will help him and his fellows to be better Christians; today he will handle his business as he conscientiously believes Jesus would have him do it; he will start today filling his mind with gems of Scripture that will help him meet temptation; he will begin today adding a Christian atmosphere to his home, his working group, his church.

Christian Liberty: There can be no liberty for self without consideration of others. The girl who grows envious of another's frocks and steals one automatically signs away her liberty. The man who beats his wife because she fails to have his dinner ready at a given time is placed under the jurisdiction of the court. So it is with Christian liberty. The one who by his example or words causes another to fall away from Christ will answer to God for that mistake. The young man or woman who is driven away from church because of your uncharitable criticism will be charged to your final account. May we all keep in mind that Christian works are works of peace and helpfulness that help to edify ourselves and others and that have a lasting effect for good on those about us.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."—Romans 13:10.

Love is of God, and everything that comes of God is not only good, but very good. We love God because He first loved us; therefore, we should love one another. If we love one another, God's love is perfected in us; therefore, we would do our neighbor (fellow man) no ill or harm in any way. Love brings forth good, not evil.

Since love is of God and works no ill to our fellow man, nothing should be done to cause anyone to be drunk or to use strong drink of any kind. Strong drink degrades all who use it; love lifts out of the mire and builds for eternity.

A part of the law was "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth"; but not so with love. Love forgives and makes Christlike.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

The Christian's Use of Personal Liberty

Paul wrote: "Every thing is allowable, but not every thing is profitable. Every thing is allowable, but every thing does not edify."—

1 Cor. 10:23 (Weymouth). This scripture and a similar one in 6:12 are used to prove that when once in Christ all things become lawful. The King James Version does say: "All things are lawful unto me." A careful study of Paul's teachings will prove that a Christian is not allowed to do all things and still attain unto eternal life. Paul was teaching that it was lawful for him to eat all things whether forbidden by the Israelitish law or offered to a heathen god. He said, "I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself." He, therefore, could eat what was considered unlawful by the Jews. He could eat the meat offered to idols because, knowing an idol was nothing, he "cateth to the Lord" and "giveth God thanks."—Rom. 14:6, 14. Because of his knowledge Paul could give thanks to whom due. He did not eat to the idol, but unto God; therefore, all things were permissible, meaning that it was permissible for him to eat all foods. As to bodily actions not all things were permissible. He did not have the liberty to get drunk or to commit adultery. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God."—1 Cor. 6:9, 10. No, it is not lawful to do all things. It is not permissible to do anything that might cause a weaker brother to sin. Rom. 14:20, 21; 1 Cor. 8:9-13.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATES

A New Way of Life

We pause in our following of Paul's footsteps through Asia Minor to study a temperance lesson, the text of which is taken from one of Paul's many letters. Paul was deeply interested in those to whom he had taught the gospel, and he was anxious that they should know the blessings which come from the service of Christ. Most of those whom Paul had converted had been worshippers of idols, and among them drunkenness and immorality of all kinds were the common thing. Now he had shown them a new way of life and taught them the things that Christ would have them do, and he was anxious that they should grow in this Christian way. They were "babes" in Christ and had to learn how to walk just as a baby does. They stumbled often and made many mistakes, but Paul was very patient with them. He had to tell them many things which we think, perhaps, they should have known; but remember the idol worshiper was surrounded with a darkness about which we know nothing. Yet there is much that we need in Paul's instruction. Discuss in class Romans 13:10, 13; 14:13, 19, 21; 15:1-3. In these verses every boy and girl may find much to do in following in the footsteps of Jesus. Notice that Paul never required of others anything he was not willing to do himself but was at all times an example to them. The teacher will find much to think of in this regard, humbly realizing the opportunity and responsibility devolving upon one in his position, knowing that Christ will stand by His true follower today as He did by Paul.—M. G.

TO BRO. AND SR. A. J. EYCHANER

Recalling that next Sunday, Oct. 22, 1933, marks the passing of another milestone in your long life together, The Restitution Herald takes this way of offering its congratulations to you both on attaining to the 61st anniversary of your marriage, and at the same time acknowledge the indebtedness of the Church of God in America to Bro. Eychaner for the splendid and lasting service he has rendered the cause of Christ during his many years in the ministry. We thank you, Bro. Eychaner, and pray that God's blessing will continue to rest upon you both until the Lord comes.

MINNESOTA CONFERENCE

The Fall Conference of the Minnesota Church of God was held September 29 and 30 and October 1 at Mora, Minnesota. The following ministers were present: Thomas Savage, Sr.; Adna Hoskins; John Denchfield; Virgil Thoms; and Richard LeCrone. A splendid spirit prevailed, and we feel much good was done. The time was fully occupied with helpful Bible study and inspirational sermons, each minister assisting.

Mrs. E. J. Randall, Sec.

OMAHA AND BLAIR

The Omaha and Blair Churches of God feel much benefited by the recent visit of Bro. Hammond of California, who gave many interesting and instructive sermons on the book of Revelation. This was made plain by a chart which he made, and we all feel that it was through divine guidance that many of the truths were brought forth. It is felt that he has created a great interest in Revelation and caused a deeper study in this book.

Bro. Hammond is traveling east, where he will continue these sermons. From there he will return, traveling through Nebraska and back to California. He states that he will be more than glad to visit any group or isolated person and bring his truths to them. It is our earnest prayer that all will derive the same benefits of Bro. Hammond's sermons as we have.

Edna Kjargaard, Cor. Sec.

MOOREFIELD, NEBRASKA

We are glad to report an increased attendance at both Sunday school and church services. Several attended the baptismal service at Curtis Lake last Sunday afternoon, when four obeyed Christ in baptism. Their names follow: Mrs. Winniefred Reutzel, 62; Mrs. Susie Kugler, 48; Miss Dorothea Kugler, 13; Irene McKnight, 10. All of these reside at Moorefield and have attended church and Sunday school ever since we organized a little over a year ago. Mrs. Reutzel was sprinkled when a girl of 17, but now wished to be buried with Christ in baptism for a resurrection from among the dead. Mrs. Kugler never made a profession of religion until now. The girls belong to the Bereans and are a credit in every way to the society. A letter from any of the Bereans to the girls and from any of the older members of the Church of God to these mothers will be very much appreciated. There are many others that are almost persuaded to become Christians. Pray for these.

E. E. Giesler, Pastor.

BOSWORTH, MISSOURI

Information has reached us that F. L. Austin, the "Back to the Bible Evangelist" of Chicago, has been asked to conduct a special series of meetings for the brethren at Bosworth, Mo. Bro. Austin is a biblical scholar of long experience and of unusual attainments, and his work is especially valuable because of the high spiritual influence that pervades his presentation of saving truth.

As an evidence of their expectation of a successful meeting, the brethren have ordered a new supply of "The Gospel in Song." It is intended to continue the effort as long as a satisfactory interest on the part of the public is indicated.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The fall of the year, bringing its brilliant colors, also brings its share of pain and suffering. Sr. Thomas recently submitted to a major operation; Vivian Witham, one of our former Sunday school girls, was hit with a car and very seriously injured, requiring a long hospital stay; Bro. James Cole is pained by very serious injuries to his mother in an automobile accident; Sr. Rachel Moore has been ill; and others have been in suffering and sorrow. These changing scenes in the drama of life keep us humble and make us appreciate our family relationship with a loving Father and our elder Brother, the great Physician.

The various departments and activities of the church are being advanced eagerly and earnestly, and all are looking forward now to our seventh birthday, October 29.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING IN CANADA

The following communication from Eld. A. E. Hoskins, pastor of the Church of God in St. Cloud Minn., but who is now engaged with C. E. Randall in holding a series of special evangelistic meetings in Welland, Ont., is of a most encouraging nature. Bro. Hoskins writes in part as follows:

"As you know, our meetings are being held in Welland, some five miles from Fonthill, Ont., and a good interest is being shown. Over sixty per cent of the attendance are strangers. They have thus far kept 'coming back for more,' the seats being largely filled at each service.

"Bro. Randall, with his chart 6x15 feet in size which covers the back stage of the room, is interesting the people with his dynamic messages on prophecy and the present condition of affairs, holding his audience spell-bound.

"Bro. Randall is doing a splendid work at Fonthill and also at Niagara Falls, and in both places he and his wife are beloved of all. Let us pray earnestly for their continued success, even unto victory.

"I am happy to report our work in St. Cloud, Minn., is doing remarkably well in our absence. Bro. Savage, who is occupying the pulpit, is giving the folks some fine sermons, and our people are coming out to support him splendidly. This speaks for itself, showing the loyalty of the church and that our past efforts are now bearing fruit. The spirit of Christians, 'Love thy neighbour as thyself,' is truly very evident in St. Cloud.

"We will be at Welland (D. V.) three weeks. I will report more fully later. Pray for us."

A. E. Hoskins.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

Reporting briefly on the tour through the Northwest which they have been making since General Conference, Bro. and Sr. Clarence E. Lapp tell of the beautiful weather they have experienced, but more particularly of the gracious reception they have received everywhere.

Recently Bro. Lapp has preached at Wenatchee and Cashmere for the brethren, and on October 1 he was invited to fill the pulpit at Sunnyside First Brethren Church, where he had attended for 16 years in the past.

At Puyallup he held one service and renewed his fellowship with Bro. A. L. Corbally. He also writes of a pleasant visit with Sr. Lottie E. Young in Seattle.

The party, which includes Bro. and Sr. Lapp and the latter's mother, Mrs. Edna Brewer of Ohio, will call at Felida, Wash., and Corvallis, Ore., en route to Los Angeles, where they will spend a short time with the brethren.

From southern California they will start on their return trip to Illinois, calling on the way at Tempe, Ariz.; the Grand Canyon; Moorefield, Holbrook, Blair, and Omaha, Neb.

Bro. Lapp senses the pressing need of continued evangelistic work on the Pacific Coast. He feels that an able experienced evangelist should be kept busy out there and that if this could be done much good would be accomplished.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Bro. and Sr. Ray Saylor of Tempe, Arizona, came to Long Beach October 1 for the purpose of taking Bro. and Sr. L. E. Rich back to Tempe with them that Sr. Rich may have the benefit of treatments by an expert physician of that place. Sr. Judan reports that Sr. Rich stood the journey well. Let us all pray for God's blessings on these treatments, that Sr. Rich may soon be fully restored if it be God's will. The Long Beach Bible class is being held in the home of Sr. I. W. Gould, 1867 N. Chestnut St., at the present time.

Sr. Elizabeth Railsback is being confined to her room by arthritis since her recovery from the broken hip. We pray also for her speedy return to a normal condition.

Sr. Betty Blackwell was elected secretary of the Home Department work of the Los Angeles Sunday school on October 8. We feel that she will do good work along this line, for she is a willing worker.

On Sunday, October 15, a neighborhood Sunday school will be started in the home of Bro. and Sr. Roy Judan, 1001 N. Holly St., Compton. These meetings will be held at 2 p.m. under the supervision of the Los Angeles workers. It is hoped that these efforts will be the means of bringing not only the children but the parents into the truth.

Sunday, Oct. 8, Bro. MacLeod spoke to a well filled house on "The Stone of Daniel's Vision: Is It Great Britain?" Many remarks of approval were heard. There were some present who had not been able to be with us for a long time.

Bro. D. B. Jackson is not feeling quite up to standard at the present time, and we miss him from services.

The junior class of the local Sunday school which is taught by Sr. Railsback, is entering into a contest on the study of the life of Paul. You will hear from them later.

Bro. MacLeod is resuming his work with the Santa Ana class Monday evening, Oct. 9. This class is held at the home of Sr. Elsie Elliott, 1911 N. Main St.

Sr. Olive Wood of Riverside is preparing to enter the Golden Rule Home at Oregon in the near future. We shall miss her smiling face from our quarterly gatherings, but we know that her life will be more pleasant in those congenial surroundings.

Sr. Mary Dawson has been on the sick list recently but was able to be out to services with her family October 8.

Emma C. Railsback, Secretary.

THE HEBREW PEOPLE

A series of lessons on the chosen people designed for the use of children, but which older ones will find of much value and interest in the study of the subject.

Beginning with the story of Joseph, it leads the student through the entire history of Israel to the regathering of the people at the coming of Christ.

Parents will find these simply arranged lessons a great help in teaching their children the things concerning the kingdom of God.

The book is attractively printed in large clear type and will be sent post-paid at the following prices: Single copy, 30¢; 5-24 copies, 27¢ each; 25 or more, 25¢ each.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES

In his introduction to the Acts of the Apostles Luke informs us that he wrote the book some time after he had completed the Gospel that bears his name. Both histories were originally prepared as personal letters addressed to Theophilus, who was apparently a close friend of the writer.

From intimations provided in the book itself we find that Luke was a traveling companion of Paul during two separate periods and wrote as a personal witness of the events recorded, probably under the immediate influence of the Apostle.

The great value of the Acts lies in the fact that it provides us with the only authentic history we have of those stirring years that marked the establishment of the church of Christ throughout the Roman world. The trials, the sacrifices, and the sufferings of the early missionaries are vividly painted.

In addition to the historical value of the book, it contains a clear outline of the teaching and practice of the apostles at that time. From the sermons recorded and from the references made to the preaching of the apostles among both Jews and Gentiles we learn that their message consisted in "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." The resurrection of Christ to them was the seal by which God assured all men that Jesus was the Christ, the Messiah, the coming King and Judge of the future kingdom upon earth.

The book closes with a dramatic record of the final days of Paul spent in a Roman prison, but spent in "preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence."

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

Published by

National Bible Institution

Oregon, Illinois

Subscription Rates.—51 issues per annum, $2.00; 6 months, $1.00; 3 months, 50 cents. Sample copy, Free.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. L. E. Conner will spend next Sunday with the church at Morse Mills, Mo. Before returning to his home in Dixon, Ill., he will drive to Maey, Ind., near which his son is located on a farm.

The news from Europe is most depressing from man's standpoint, but very promising from that of prophecy. The protests and the agreements and conventions of men will never put an end to war. Only the coming of the Prince of Peace can do that.

An interesting little work entitled, "Christ's One Church Forever," has been received for review. It has to do with the unity of the true church of God. We plan to present a more detailed outline of the book a little later.

The pastor of the Oregon church is invited to give a prophetic address in Rockford, Ill., next Friday. Every opportunity should be embraced to get the vital truths of the Bible before the world at this time.

We rejoice to learn through the news items from California that Sr. Olive Wood of Riverside has decided to make her future home in "Golden Rule" at Oregon. Sr. Wood in coming to Oregon is returning to the vicinity of her childhood home, where she has many friends and close relatives who will give her a most hearty welcome.

Attention is called to the revised words of an old familiar hymn of praise, published on page 16, which many have loved for years but, owing to the unscriptural character of some of the verses, could not conscientiously sing. "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty!" There is a world of devotion in the words, and the music of the hymn is worshipful and dignified as suits so sacred a theme.

The last state conference to submit its ministerial list is Michigan. Our records are still incomplete. Will isolated pastors and evangelists kindly send in their names and addresses that the official listings may be corrected before the date of publication?

Writing from her home in Eureka, Calif., Sr. Richard E. Powell says, "I enjoy the paper so very much as we are far from any of our churches." May God help us to make The Herald an ever welcome visitor in the homes of His people everywhere.

The series of studies on Bible characters by Prof. Lange of Ames College hereafter will not be published in consecutive issues of the paper, but will appear from time to time during the next few weeks as special features. They are worthy of most careful thought.

Mrs. Mary A. Gesin and daughter Alice left Saturday for St. Louis, where the daughter is to undergo treatment for two or three weeks. Any desiring to send greetings to them will address them as follows: 4528 Geraldine Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Articles continue to come in for the special gospel number. Among others R. H. Judd, Emma C. Railsback, Lyman Booth, Mary A. Gesin, George B. Alldridge, C. E. Randall, Gerald Cooper, and Rufus A. Curtis have prepared splendid material for this issue, which will be sent out under date of October 31. It should be widely distributed.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Williams of Rochelle, Ill., accompanied by their daughter, Mrs. G. E. Marsh of Oregon, spent a few days last week visiting relatives in Kentucky. They returned with no visible indications that they had traveled the historic "dark and bloody ground" of Daniel Boone.

MOSES, THE DELIVERER

WE HAVE already considered briefly the character of Abraham. We noted especially the old patriarch's confidence in the will of Jehovah and his unquestioning obedience even if it should necessitate the sacrifice of Isaac, his only son, on whom depended all the promises made by the Almighty.

I should like now to call your attention to another great figure in the Old Testament, namely, Moses. As in the case of Abraham, many details of his life have been obscured by the centuries, but again there can be little doubt concerning the essential nature of the man; his extraordinary ability in many directions; his dogged perseverance; and above everything else, in spite of occasional falterings, his firm conviction that if he followed the will of Jehovah all would be well in the end.

It is desirable to remind ourselves right at the outset that in Moses we are confronting a man the like of whom does not appear in every century. One glance at Michaelangelo's statue of the seated Moses offers conclusive evidence. We note especially that look of unswerving determination. No question there concerning the worth whileness of the task assigned to him by the Almighty.

According to the biblical account, the life of Moses falls roughly into three periods, each about forty years in length. During the first third of his life he was at the court of the Pharaohs in Egypt, at once a child of the enslaved and despised Israelites and the adopted son of a royal princess. In the thirteenth century before Christ Egypt had already made great progress in the arts and the sciences, and Moses appears to have mastered all the learning of the day. Regardless of his own good fortune, however, Moses could not forget the misery of the Israelites. Thus it happened that in a quarrel between an Egyptian and a Hebrew he took the part of the latter and killed the Egyptian. When this got noised about, Moses fled for his life into the wilderness of Sinai, a semi-civilized region inhabited by cattle and sheep herders.

Thus began the second period in the life of Moses. Finding a friendly reception and realizing the folly of returning to Egypt, he married a daughter of his host and became his partner. Try to visualize the situation. Here was a man forty years of age, trained in the best universities of his day, accustomed to all the pleasures and luxuries of an oriental court, suddenly transplanted into the semi-barbaric routine of a herdsman's life.

This was to last for forty years, certainly much longer than Moses had ever dreamed. But the exiled scholar and courtier apparently spent little time in self-pity. He was much too big for that. Instead he was pondering the fate of his enslaved brethren in Egypt. How could they be helped? He pondered for two score years before he was firmly convinced that the times were ready for their deliverance and that he was the chosen instrument of the Almighty to lead them out of bondage. Let us suppose for the moment that Moses had died at this point in his career.

He would have been one with the countless millions who pass into oblivion unnamed and unsung.

But in the case of Moses it was ordained otherwise. With most lives the account has closed on the eightieth birthday. Not so here. In fact, the career of Moses was just beginning with the eighth decade of his life, and it was to continue for another forty years. I shall not attempt to describe that life for you. Although it contains material for an epic equal to the greatest ever written, no poet has dared to attempt it. To be sure, it is difficult to improve the biblical account. One must read it for himself in order to appreciate properly the audacity of that hermit of the desert in pitting himself against the entire political and economic forces of the Egyptian Empire. One must read it in order to understand the difficulties, the discouragements, and the unutterable weariness that must have overwhelmed that dauntless spirit again and again as he led a horde of selfish, hard-hearted, and stiff-necked reprobates through semi-arid regions for nearly forty years, guarding them against attack from desert tribes, providing them with the necessities of life, weaning them from their idolatrous inclinations, and establishing a law and order among them which has influenced all western civilizations.

And what was his reward? A glimpse from afar of the land promised to his people but into which he was never to set foot. "Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died. "His eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated." Undoubtedly many of his contemporaries counted him a failure and a fanatic. He was not always certain of himself. But he hung on; although he did not share in the reward, he knew that the task he had set himself was all but done. And today, more than thirty centuries later, his example still guides and inspires the human race like some far-off mountain peak which continues to reflect the rays of the western sun long after the range from which the pinnacle rises has sunk into darkness.—Published by special permission of Prof. Paulus Lange.

HOLY, HOLY, HOLY

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty!

Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee;
Holy, holy, holy, merciful and mighty,
God our Redeemer, great Thy majesty.

Holy, holy, holy! though the darkness hide Thee,
Though the eye of sinful man Thy glory may not see;
Only Thou art holy; there is none beside Thee,
Perfect in power, in love, and purity.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty!
All Thy works shall praise Thy name, in earth and sky and sea;
Holy, holy, holy, merciful and mighty,
God our Redeemer, we would worship Thee.

Signs of Christ's Coming: In Israel

By Norman John MacLeod

THE JEW who walks down the street on Saturday to attend his synagogue meeting has gone through formulae the like of which would be extremely annoying to a Christian. He has eaten a breakfast prepared the day before; he dare not eat an egg laid by a hen on the Sabbath day; he dare not lift a weight heavier than that of a dried fig; he must walk no farther than the required length set down as a Sabbath day's journey. To the Christian he would appear to be formalized, ritualized, legalized, almost we might say sterilized.

Occasionally the exclusiveness of the Jew will cause the Christian to curse him and possibly persecute him. At best, the Jew is the offspring of the adversary: for did not he kill the Christ, they say. In like manner the Jew would disdain everything that the Christian would hold sacred: Jesus was an imposter; the Gentile Christian is not of the "Chosen People" and, therefore, can have no hope and is nothing more than a dog. If the Christian ignores the orthodox Jew, the Jew cannot ignore the Christian, for the latter has been too severe on him.

But in spite of the apparent diversity (which we might develop at length) of principles and interests of the two groups, they have several things in common if analysis be carried to the bottom. Judaism has principles which are likewise basic in Christianity: (1) belief in one God; (2) Israel is God's Chosen People; (3) they are to be regathered to their land; (4) Christ is to come to reign over the Israelitish kingdom; and (5) hence, that kingdom will be restored. Upon these principles both Orthodox Jew and Christian might unite if seen in their proper perspective by both groups. Because of this common groundwork of principles the position of the Jew is of vital concern to both. Both systems wait upon movements among the Jews for a vindication of their individual aspirations. For in Israel will be found one great sign, the regathering, which points the way toward the great central point of both religions: the second coming of Christ.

This article, delivered by the author as a sermon before the last Quarterly Conference of the Churches of God of Southern California, provides a resume of the present fulfillment of prophecies regarding Israel and offers some interesting speculations as to the future status of the Chosen People.

For centuries the Jews have waited for the coming of that great leader promised by God through the mouth of His prophets. Always has that hope been mingled with despair, for conditions are associated with the coming of the Messiah showing that the long expected day has not arrived to relieve them of their lot of affliction.

From bondage in Egypt, to wandering in the wilderness, to vicissitudes of unfulfilled conquest, new captivities and the like, the Jews came to their great leader David. Surely the glories of God's kingdom were about to be fulfilled! But with the passing of David and his immediate successors, gloom fell upon the weary Israelites, for God had not given them world dominion. From that short period of glory they went into worse exile yet, as is said in Ezekiel 7:24: "Wherefore I will bring the worst of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses: I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease; and their holy places shall be defiled." All this was in accordance with what had been prophesied many times, but perhaps never more forcibly than by Moses: "The Lord shall bring thee, and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone."—Deut. 28:36.

But they returned from their first exile after seventy years. The Prophet Isaiah, when predicting their exile, had also told of the fall of their enemy, the king of Babylon, and of the coming of one "Cyrus" who is called the "anointed." But the disappointed Hebrews found that instead of "saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundations shall be laid" he merely allowed the Jews to do those things with royal assistance. They must look for another "anointed" from among their own nation. Surely they had found him in Zerubbabel, of the seed of David.

In spite of their chagrin at the number of people who went along, they set out over the dreary way that led back to the homeland singing (Please turn to Page Eight)

“HE BEING DEAD YET SPEAKETH”

How wonderful Thy works, O Lord!
In wisdom Thou hast made them all;
And in accordance with Thy Word,
Before Thy majesty we fall.

In all Thy Word and works and ways,
Thy goodness and Thy glory shine;
Thy love inspires our songs of praise,
And warms our hearts in every line.

In Thee, our God, we live and move—
And for Thy bounties rich and free
We offer now our grateful love,
And pledge our lives and all to Thee.

May all we say and all we do,
But show our high and holy aim
To keep the heavenly prize in view,
And glorify Thy gracious name.

THE LORD'S WORK GOES ON

WITH the discovery of the ruins of an old church that was destroyed about seventeen hundred years ago at Amphipolis, Greece, we are reminded that not a single church established by the sacrifice and suffering of Paul in that country or in Asia Minor survived for more than a few hundred years. In most localities where he labored not a vestige remains to indicate the fact that gospel seed was faithfully sown and watered with martyrs' blood throughout that land.

But God's work goes on! Nothing can stay its progress! The seed sown in southern Europe so long ago came to a full fruitage, and its ripened seed pods of spiritual life were carried on the spreading winds of Time into all parts of the world and here and there found lodgment in good and honest hearts and brought forth fruit again.

Let us, therefore, not be discouraged should our efforts apparently come to naught, should they not remain active and fruit-producing in any one locality, “for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.”

THE TUNE CHANGES .

THE tune sung by the chancellories of the various nations concerned in the latest international imbroglio now at a standstill in Geneva has changed remarkably during the passage of the past few months. Where once was an ode to peace there is now a hymn of hate, with all the accouterments of war accompanying the change in theme and tempo.

Whereas in May United States Ambassador-at-large Davis was observing to the assembled delegates at Geneva that the prospects for peace were great, today he washes his hands publicly of the inevitable war. Nor were these changes unforeseen. Henry Morgenthau and Lloyd George had predicted such conditions months before they actually occurred. Only those too blind to the realisms of diplomacy to make open confession were unwilling to admit that war has been unavoidable ever since the deadly farce staged at Versailles in 1919.

That diplomats would find themselves powerless or, indeed, unwilling to combat the onrushing tide of war during the period immediately preceding the return of Christ has been biblically established too well to require confirmation here. Joel, Daniel, Jesus Himself, in common with a host of other prophets, were chosen to the task of making public the fact that such circumstances as those now prevailing would come to exist. The very fact that, despite the work of peace organizations and half-hearted diplomats, Mars has supplanted Peace is ample justification for our belief in the fulfillment of Bible predictions.

Precisely where the inauguration of a definite militaristic policy by Chancellor Hitler of Germany, Dolfuss of Austria, and the cabinet of Japan will lead is by no means certain. In general, of course, it can lead to nothing but war; but how soon or in what place it is impossible to say. The hints at an Austro-German alliance, the definitely established Little Entente, the desire for a permanent military and economic alliance of the Balkan states, and the hopeless tangle at Geneva might seem to indicate Europe as the starting point of hostilities; but the forays of Japanese troops in China and the intimations of a Japanese advance into Siberia give luster to the theory that Asia will be the focal point of the coming war. At any rate, study of world affairs will benefit any Bible student.—A. M.

How the Bible Grew

By Lottie E. Young

THERE are so-called Christians who say they have no use for the Old Testament, as it is largely a book of history, that the words and deeds of Jesus Christ and the Apostle Paul are all-sufficient; but behind the gospel of "life only in Christ" lies God's plan of salvation, and one cannot separate the Old Testament from the New. What God began to reveal through first a man, then a family, next a nation, He brought to fulfillment in the person of Jesus Christ; and what the Savior began to do and teach when on earth was continued, as recorded in the Acts and Epistles, "after a cloud received him out of their sight."

Pentecost marks the birthday of the church, when thousands of Jews from many lands were gathered at Jerusalem to celebrate their great festival; and when they heard "these Galileans" speak in a multitude of tongues, they were amazed. As a result of the inspired words of the Apostle Peter, three thousand converts were made; and the returning throng of pilgrims carried the news of the newborn faith into the remotest corners of the Roman Empire.

It seems strange to us to think of a world full of sin and suffering without a Bible telling of a loving Father and a hope for the future, and stranger yet to think it was through severe persecution that this truth was spread through the world. If an open fire is fanned violently, we all know living embers are sent in many directions; and as, in the course of years, the immediate followers of Jesus seemed likely to settle down in Jerusalem and forget the command of the risen Savior, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation," awful trials came which scattered them into the cities of the Gentiles so that these, too, might hear of a Savior who came, lived, and died that all might be saved.

When one realizes that by the end of the first century the apostolic church had preached Christ from Babylon to Spain (three thousand miles) and from Egypt to Rome (before the days of railroad, steamship, telegraph, radio, or any other of the marvels of the present day), the question forcibly presents itself as to how it was done. God was simply working out His plan of salvation through human means, some of them being the following:

The Jews have ever been merchants, and through heathen conquests and persecution thousands had been scattered throughout the Roman Empire, taking with them the knowledge of one God as against the many deities of other people. This will account for the synagogues the Apostle Paul found everywhere in which the gospel was first presented, and where some converts were generally made to the new truth.

Though Rome was dominant in war, Greek was the universal language of commerce, furnishing the tongue with which the Apostle Paul preached the gospel and in which his Epistles, which were sent to many different tribes, were written, all being able to understand it.

The Roman Empire was so mighty it was able to impose its laws upon much of the inhabited earth, its roads penetrating to the utmost bounds of the known world, furnishing paths for the ambassadors of the cross to tread. And so this "New Way" was carried by soldier, merchant, official, slave to all parts.

The fourth great help in the spread of Christianity was its nature. The Roman world was a hard and hopeless one; its religion of immoral gods and heroes was openly scoffed at by the intelligent leaders; and as one reads the inscriptions on ancient tombs, he is struck by the utter darkness as to the future. No wonder that the preaching of the gospel which told of a Father who loves and a Son ready to die that future happiness might be had for all those who put their trust in this "good news" brought many converts! What did Paul and others preach to a scornful world?

First. A crucified Man. This to self-satisfied Jews was a stumbling-block and to learned Greeks foolishness; but to those who believed, "the power of God, and the wisdom of God."

Second. A risen Christ. Triumphant and joyfully they witnessed to the certainty that God had raised Jesus from the dead; and as He had said, "Because I live, ye shall live also," death in its most terrible forms was calmly endured. In Quo Vadis the crazy Nero saw a group of Christian martyrs kneeling on the bloody sand of the Colosseum, singing a

God's Precious Word

Thy Word is like a garden, Lord,
With flowers bright and fair;
And everyone who seeks may pluck
A lovely cluster there.
Thy Word is like a deep, deep mine;
And jewels rich and rare
Are hidden in its mighty depths
For every searcher there.

Thy Word is like a starry host:
A thousand rays of light
Are seen to guide the traveler,
And make his pathway bright.
Thy Word is like an armory,
Where soldiers may repair;
And find, for life's long battle-day,
All needful weapons there.

O, may I love Thy precious Word,
May I explore the mine,
May I its fragrant flowers glean,
May light upon me shine!
O, may I find my armor there!
Thy Word my trusty sword,
I'll learn to fight with every foe
The battle of the Lord.

—T. H. Gill.

hymn, undaunted by the horrors around them, and he said, "They see something! What is it?" And the answer came from one who knew, "They see the resurrection!"

Third. The early return of the Savior. While they had never seen Him, they believed the words of Paul, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." These triumphant words have been of inestimable comfort to more than these Christians to whom they were written.

Fourth. A gospel of active love. Jesus had said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," and it was this brotherly care for the helpless, the feeding of widows and orphans, the solicitude for sister churches suffering from famine, that impressed the hard Roman world to exclaim, "Look, how these Christians love one another!"

The same world, though vastly different in externals, confronts God's people today. Wickedness and crime are rampant, bitterness and cynicism are widespread, the pall of unbelief and hopelessness darkens the sky. If it could be said nearly two thousand years ago, "The night is far spent, and the day is at hand," how much more should we who are away down the stream of time lift up our "heads and rejoice," for our "redemption draweth nigh." Conferences and Bible schools are over for the season. May the cares and follies of this world not cause us to forget the helpful words spoken at these gatherings, but may the seed sown have fallen into such "good ground" that an abundant harvest may be the result.

THE HIGHER LIFE

"And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them."—Exodus 25:8.

THE above instruction was given to the Israelites while they were in the wilderness. The Lord wanted to dwell among them. They needed His presence, for without this they would be lost. His presence was seen in the burning bush; the fire was there, yet the plant was not consumed. By the movements of the pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire the Lord not only showed them for forty years when to travel and where to camp, but also lighted up the camp every night. The power of God was also seen in a miraculous manner over the mercy seat (Lev. 16:13).

Let me also call the attention of the reader to the presence of the Almighty as it is revealed to His servants at the present time. If the silver thread that unites us with the throne be broken, we are in the dark. Those who have passed from death unto life rejoice in the presence of God, and they hear that still small voice that Elijah heard in his day (1 Kings 19:12). We should not permit a disconnection between us and the great King of the universe. In this enlightened age we should not be ignorant of the power of God as the twelve were who said they had never heard whether there were any Holy Ghost or not. Ample provision has been made that we can enter grace and grow up into Him in all things. We need the Spirit to make known to us our standing and our relationship to the Father and the Son.

The majority of persons are traveling through this world without chart or compass, without having a living connection with the Lord. They seem to be satisfied even when the golden thread between them and God is broken. They have not tarried before the Lord as Jesus told His disciples to do (Acts 1:4, 5, 8; Luke 24:49). They endure religion, but they do not rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Something is lacking in their Christian experience, and therefore they are up one day and down another. They are not stable soldiers of the cross, and we can easily distinguish the difference in spirit and disposition between the two classes. There is, however, another class of people in the world who trumpet their religion wherever they go. They have much to say about the Spirit's power, but in works they deny the Lord.

"He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked."—1 John 2:6. "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him."—1 John 2:29. "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law."—1 John 3:4. "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother."—1 John 3:10.

The above scriptures present the distinguishing marks between the two classes, showing that profession does not necessarily mean possession. Therefore, an individual might preach Spirit, Spirit, Spirit, in thunder tones, with much outward demonstration, and deceive many; but unless he does bear the fruits of that Spirit, it is only clouds without water, it is only an empty bladder. The inward sign that our names are in the Lamb's book of life and that our sins are covered with His blood is the Spirit's witness in our hearts and minds revealing to us our standing before the Lord and that He accepts us as His children (Rom. 8:14-16). But the outward sign and that which our neighbors notice is the fruits of righteousness in our lives. Says inspiration, "By their fruits ye shall know them." An apple tree does not bear thorns and thistles.

Reader, which side will you choose?—J. F. Jensen in The Bible Advocate.

Signs of Christ's Coming: In the Church and the World

By Emma C. Railsback

THESE are signs of our Lord's early coming not only in Israel, but in the church and the world as well. Brother MacLeod has given us a graphic description of signs in Israel, and I wish to call your attention to the scriptural statements concerning signs which will take place in the church and in the world, many of them being fulfilled at the present time.

From the Apostle Paul's instructions to the Thessalonian church we learn that sudden destruction is coming upon the world as a thief in the night. They have not heeded the warnings that have been all around them, they have positively refused to listen; therefore, they are taken unawares. The nations of the world are proclaiming peace and safety; they are saying, "Peace, peace," when there is no peace. The Apostle tells us that this is an indication of the "times and seasons" which precede the sudden destruction that will come upon the world. The church is not in darkness concerning this greatest event in history; therefore, the Apostle terms them the children of light and of day.

In 2 Timothy 3:1-5 we find a word picture of "last-day" conditions which are being fulfilled to the letter in the present time. The Apostle uses nineteen adjectives to describe the exceeding sinfulness of man in these last perilous days when evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. All an intelligent person needs to do to be convinced that the present is the time foreseen by the Apostle is to read the daily papers. With the reports of crime of every description are found suggestions of how to check the crime wave and blasphemous utterances against God because of the depression, such as the following clipping from a Lynwood, California, daily.

"Not satisfied with inflicting the worst depression in history upon us, the good Lord has given us a topsy turvy year in 1933. It will be a year long remembered for the monkey wrenches thrown into the economic machinery.

"Here are a few of the afflictions visited upon us by an all-wise and inscrutable God:

"Twelve millions of people out of employment. Other millions barely existing from hand to mouth.

"Foreign governments and corporations repudiating or defaulting on their honest debts due us.

"Destructive tornadoes and cyclones sweeping over the land.

"Cloudbursts and flood waters destroying everything in their path.

"Abnormal heat waves, leaving humans prostrate and

This article, also delivered as a sermon at the last California conference, is a fit corollary for Brother MacLeod's address on the prophecies relating to Israel. At no time in history has the church or the world been in such a condition of flux as at present, and this condition Mrs. Railsback interprets in the light of the Bible.

crops seared to destruction.

"Hail storms that wiped crops from the face of the land in certain localities.

"Wholesale kidnaping and gang domination.

"Business paralysis everywhere.

"Millionaires cheating the government out of their income taxes.

"Enough to satisfy even the most pessimistic growler—but we're still smiling, although a little wan."

The proclamation to the Gentiles to prepare war, to wake up the mighty men and let all the men of war draw near, to beat plowshares into swords and pruninghooks into spears, as foreseen by the Prophet Joel (3:9-12), is going forth at the present time. All nations are arming to the limit, and they are reaching an equality of armaments according to those who have studied such matters which means that war cannot be far off. The skill and diplomacy of the heads of all nations are being exerted to avoid an international conflict, while the best brains of the world are at work to keep down revolutionary upheavals and in trying to meet radical changes in economic and political methods. Had anyone predicted twenty-five years ago that in so short a period such a condition could come upon the world, he would have been classed with fanatics.

Our Savior, in Matthew 24:37-39, comparing the days of Noah with the times preceding His second coming, explains that they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away. He makes no serious charges against them. They were following God's established laws, just as you and I are today, eating, drinking, and marrying. But when we look at the record of conditions in those days found in Genesis 6, we learn more of the particulars about this evil generation which was destroyed by the flood. "The sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all they chose."—Verse 2.

These self-styled sons of God according to Genesis 4:26 (margin) were the seed of Seth, the righteous son of Adam. They called themselves by the name of the Lord, or sons of God, by way of comparison with sons of Cain, the unrighteous son of Adam. As a result of the intermarriage of the righteous with the unrighteous sons of Adam, giants were born in the earth, righteousness faded out of the picture, and every imagination of men's hearts was only evil continually. Noah only was found upright in the sight of God.

In the antitype, the modern self-styled sons of God have seen the daughters of men that they are fair, and they have taken them wives of all they chose. In other words, the nominal church has been married to the world; and giants have been born into the world, giants in sin and crime of every description; and every imagination of men's hearts is only evil continually.

“The church and the world walked far apart
On the changing shore of time.
The world was singing a giddy song,
The church a hymn sublime.”

But alas! who can discern the church from the world at the present time? They have been walking hand in hand these many days; their practices and pleasures are the same. This is the evident meaning of the warning sign given by the Savior. God said His Spirit would not always strive with man, yet his days would be a hundred twenty years.

Noah, a preacher of righteousness, no doubt warned that wicked and adulterous generation of coming judgment, but they heeded not; and they probably scoffed, as Peter in his second epistle (3:3, 4) has warned this present evil generation that “there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.”

This scripture is being fulfilled in our ears at the present time. Scoffers are saying, “O, I have heard these things preached for the past fifty years.” Well, what if they have? Does that make them any the less true? The longer the time of God's longsuffering and patience, the more will men harden their hearts against God. They do not like to retain God in their knowledge; therefore, God will give them over to a reprobate mind. These warnings should be sounded out for one hundred twenty years to fulfill the type.

Another of the signs given by the Savior is recorded in Luke 21:25, 26: “And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.” “Distress of nations, with perplexity”—is there a nation on the earth today that is not in distress of one kind or another? “The sea and the waves roaring” symbolizes the political turmoil found in all governments of the world. It is said that Rome is now the diplomatic center of Europe, that Mussolini's skill and diplomacy are unexcelled, that he strongly disapproves of Chancellor Hitler's anti-Semitism.

These conditions are significant to the student of prophecy. The world stage is being set for the man of sin. Men's hearts are truly failing them for fear in looking after the things that are coming on the earth. Knowing nothing of God's plan, not accepting the Scriptures as His revealed will, they can see the hopeless condition of world governments and only chaos ahead. Some have pinned their faith to worldly possessions, which have taken wings; and self-destruction follows.

The Apostle James gives a striking sign of last day conditions in chapter 5:1-8: the oppression of the laborer by the rich employer, who keeps back his hire by fraud, causing the oppressed to cry out against the oppressor. This is taking place at the present time, and cries of the poor have entered into the ears of the Lord. James exhorts the brethren to be patient, knowing that this condition is a sign that “the coming of the Lord draweth nigh,” that the “canker” of hoarded gold will be a witness against the oppressor and will not be able to deliver him in the day of the Lord's wrath (Zeph. 1:18).

The antitypical days of Noah are described by Paul in 2 Thessalonians 2:1-3 by mention of the falling away from the faith which must precede the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is decidedly a sign in the church. Modernism has gone a long way in destroying faith in the Scriptures.

A book written by an ex-bishop of the Episcopal Church entitled Communism and Christianity lays bare the falsity of the doctrines of the orthodox churches. He says that he is an old man and regrets that he has spent his life preaching lies. He claims that Christianity as a religion has collapsed. It has promised the world peace and good will, and there has never been more of strife and hate. He attacks the doctrines of the immortality of the soul, of heaven and a hell of eternal torment, and of the trinity. He states that the consistent Christian says heaven is my home, while the consistent communist says earth is my home.

And so we see how the false teaching of the orthodox churches has driven men into skepticism and infidelity. Yes, it has done more to bring about the present conditions of unbelief in the world than indifference or any other form of godlessness. Intelligent men cannot accept the thought of a loving heavenly Father consigning any of His creatures to endless torment in an ever-burning hell. They are told that the Scriptures teach these awful doctrines, and they discard it all as a fabrication of some human mind.

False Christs and false prophets claiming divine powers, almost deceiving the elect, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared with a hot iron, are with us. The time has come when the people will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts they have heaped to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they have turned away their ears from the truth and have turned unto fables.

In these days of stress, dissipation, delusion, and sin, how comforting it is to have an understanding of what all these conditions signify, to be able to look at Jehovah's chart and see just where we are on the stream of time. The assurance of the Apostle Paul that there is a crown of righteousness laid up for all those who love Christ's appearing, those who have purified themselves even as He is pure, is worth more than the highest worldly position. “What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch.” Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

DAVID, THE KING

AMONG the Old Testament figures there have been few which have appealed so much to the Christian world as David, the second king of the Israelites, who reigned about two hundred fifty years after Moses and about a thousand years before Christ.

In the two hundred years between the entrance into the Promised Land and the reign of David many changes had taken place in the fortunes of the Jewish people. Without being aware of it the twelve tribes of semi-barbarians had become a settled and united people with a monarchical form of government. Like all other nations, the quality of its kings varied; but among the earliest was also one of the best, namely, David, the son of Jesse.

David, it will be remembered, had no other start in life than that which a poor sheep-herding father could give him. Yet it is not for his rise from poverty and obscurity to power and fame that David is known to posterity. Others who have risen higher from meaner beginnings are lost to history. Neither does David deserve any great credit for clarifying the idea of God. His contribution in this respect was certainly less than that of either Moses or Abraham. David was neither a philosopher nor a theologian; and many of the Psalms which are traditionally ascribed to him were, in the opinion of modern scholars, written by others. Nor is David noted for his saintly life. Only with many exceptions would one care to set him up as a pattern for either young or old.

Nevertheless, David remains one of the best loved characters in the Bible. The reason for it, it seems to me, lies in the fact that with all his faults he is one of the most human and the most idealistic of men. This may be said, I think, in spite of the many things in David's life that no one could approve. We must also bear in mind that the moral standards of his day were vastly different from ours. Furthermore, David was not only a man of enormous energy, but he was also a soldier and a statesman in an age when Greece was just rising above the horizon of history and Rome was still buried in the darkness of primeval barbarism.

David's personal qualities are revealed as clearly as anywhere in his relations with Saul and Jonathan. Saul, the first king of the Jews, disobeyed the command of Jehovah, given through the Prophet Samuel, that he should utterly destroy the heathen Amalekites. When, thereupon, Samuel announced to Saul that the crown would pass from his family, the king was overcome with periods of prolonged melancholy. To drive away these attacks, he secured a skillful harpist, who was none other than the shepherd youth David, already anointed to be Saul's successor as king of Israel. David rose so rapidly in Saul's favor that he was soon the royal armor-bearer. Furthermore, Jonathan, one of the king's sons, was much attracted to the youth. Lastly, Michal, Saul's daughter, fell in love with David; and to win her to wife, David killed twice the number of Philistines which Saul had stipulated in lieu of the dowry.

By this time the popularity and ability of David had aroused both the envy and the wrath of Saul. As a matter of fact, Saul had disregarded the dowry in the proposed marriage with his daughter because he had hoped that David would perish in his campaign against the Philistines. When he came back not only alive but successful beyond expectation, "Saul saw and knew that Jehovah was with David." Under such circumstances it was inevitable that "Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul was David's enemy continually."

The immediate effect of this antagonism was an attempt on the part of Saul to kill David; the second was that for years David led a kind of Robin Hood existence, partly among the Philistines, partly among those of his own tribes who were friendly toward him.

The bond between David and Jonathan, celebrated in the literature of the entire Western World, grew stronger with passing years. Regardless of many opportunities to kill the king, David consistently refused to lay hands on the anointed of the Lord; nor did he permit his men to do Saul personal harm. Saul's career, which had gone from bad to worse, came to an end in a great battle with the Philistines. David was so little pleased with the death of his enemy that he caused his slayer to be put to the sword; and then he composed that magnificent dirge, found in the first chapter of 2 Samuel, which ends with the lament, "How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war perished!"

Much else there is that one would like to say about David. I sometimes think the true character of the man nowhere revealed itself so clearly as during that fateful hour when the Prophet Nathan recited the parable of the poor man whose ewe lamb, his sole possession, was taken from him by a rich neighbor with "exceeding many flocks and herds." Few scenes in the literature of the world are more dramatic than that moment in which the Prophet with accusing finger and devastating anger exclaims, "Thou art the man!"

If David had been a Herod, Nathan would have suffered the fate reserved for John the Baptist. Instead, the conscience-smitten monarch acknowledged his guilt, cast himself upon the earth, refused to partake of food, and did penance for his sin.

And therein lies the greatness and the inspiration of those Old Testament characters. None of them were perfect; none of them pretended to be. With few exceptions they lived in an environment where the law of the jungle prevailed. Yet somewhere they had gotten a gleam of something over and beyond the present, something which raised them above the brute and brought them nearer to the stars. Again and again they stumbled and fell, but they never stayed down. That is why I like to read about them.—Published by permission of Prof. Paulus Lange.

psalms of joy and led by dancing girls. But when, after they had returned to the dreary wastes of Palestine, they found that this was no Messiah for whom they were looking, they turned in despair to other pursuits.

Then came that other greater prophet. And the question that John the Baptist sent to Jesus sums up the hope and the longing and despair of the whole Jewish nation: "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?"—Matt. 11:3. Then that glad day came to the people of Judea when He rode into the city in triumph and was hailed the long-awaited Son of David. But for most of them again disappointment! And finally, the most bitter trial of all, their city was again destroyed, and they were scattered over the earth. The skeptical and the doubter among them no longer looked for the Lord to come: had He not disappointed them many times already? But still the orthodox Jew looked and longed for the time when the Messiah should come and should lead them into all ways of truth.

For many years the hopes of the Jews were in a state of recess. Little there was in life to give courage to the forlorn hope that was once "God's Chosen People"; "behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts," and "lo, they were very dry" in the words of the Prophet Ezekiel. "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim," said the Prophet Hosea (3:4). But the Jew could not remain ever in that state, for the Lord had also spoken other things by the mouths of His prophets.

The despot of Prussia, Frederick the Great, thought well to bring all bright minds to his court regardless of race. Many Jews came and received favor at his hands. They saw the light of freedom again beginning to dawn. The French Revolution brought them out of their Parisian Ghettoes to carry terror into the hearts of Catholic kings and dissolute nobles. Though restoration of that monarchy later brought them temporary disillusionment, a taste of freedom had made them long for more.

Gradually the idea came to be prevalent among them that they could be proud of their race and religion and could feel that they were God's Chosen People even though in exile. Attempts were made to buy lands from the "unspeakable Turk," but such schemes were doomed to failure. But at last came the full burst of the religious Zionist Movement. In the depths of the heart of the orthodox Jew lingered that longing for Zion, that thirst for the homeland that God had promised him. But the realization of that dream has brought many things with it: hopes and fears for the Gentiles; hope and despair again for the Jew.

No sooner did Zionism get under way as a great religious crusade than the other necessary accompaniments were seen. In order to obtain free access to that homeland, the Jew must secure the aid of powerful allies; that was done. But in getting that aid, many handicaps were also brought along. The welter of politics must be entered: for are not politics and a homeland and king necessary corollaries? Then must come the speculator and the merchant, for the farmer, even though a pioneer in restoring a wasted land, must have tools with which to work. A modern farming crusade cannot be carried on with ox and wooden stick plow! One thing has led to another, until today we wonder how far the movement has gone.

Upon the course of Jewish events rests the indication to the orthodox Jew and the Christian alike of the nearness of the coming of Christ. The regathering is taking place; when will the restoration come? The people are again in their land: what else do the Scriptures teach must be done there before God is going to send His Son to take charge? How many Jews must go back to the land? How much must take place there before the nations from the north and east will come down to take their spoil; before the nations from the west will go to the tardy defense of Jerusalem?

Further in our text we read: "Afterward shall the children of Israel return (they have done that in large numbers), and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days."—Hosea 3:5. That gives us little chance to determine by itself just what the status of the Jews will be. But we read again: "And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them." (They have done all that.) "And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."—Amos 9:14, 15. What will happen? How far must this process go before the great and terrible day of battle will come in Megiddo?

Zionism is a complicated movement: it is not only religious and political, it is also social and economic. Just what has been its progress? Will an examination of events in the land give us any clew as to the nearness of Christ's return? Migrations to Palestine have gone on more rapidly than we commonly suppose: just recently, when 200,000 German Jews asked to go there from the oppression of the Hitler regime, they were told that there was no farm land available. Does that mean that all Palestine is under cultivation? 6,000 German Jews have gone there, mostly since a year ago. The British Government objects to any more going there for several reasons: no more land is available unless expensive irrigation projects are undertaken; no land is available unless Arab farmers are dispossessed; the rising tide of Jewish immigration is likely to interfere with British schemes for reaping the profit themselves; and Britain fears too strong a Jewish power in so vital a spot in her strategic communications with the Far East, for who knows that some other nation might scheme with the Jews to oust the British from their wealthy mandate?

But regardless of the influx of new immigrants, the land has developed beyond the wildest dreams of Zionists and non-Zionists; the increase in the population is noted in the rise of such cities as Tel-Aviv, which in 1919 consisted of 2,000 inhabitants, but is now running close to 100,000. That sounds like figures from a southern California chamber of commerce! Its industries have grown accordingly: so greatly has the orange crop increased that orange land has risen to a point that investments are yielding only a small margin of profit. Jewish speculative instinct is running riot. The age of the "Pioneer Farming Zionism" has passed, and the age of the speculator has come. Social upheaval all over Jewry in its disturbed condition has led many a Jew, even though not religiously inclined nor suffering from economic despair as in Russia and eastern Europe, to turn his thoughts to Zion. Economic disaster which has stalked throughout the world has not yet found its way to Zion: surely, here is an opportunity for the Jewish trading instinct to find itself!

Economically the future of Palestine is practically assured. Political prestige usually comes with economic self-sufficiency. How long will the British and the Arab be able to keep the Jews of Palestine from seeking political independence? Just as long as they are inferior in numbers and wealth, and no longer. Socially the new homeland cannot yet compare with the other countries from which the Jews have returned. Traces of nationality that have been adopted from other parts of the world must be worn off by a mingling of various national groups of Jews. Pioneer social conditions still exist.

What of religious Zionism? It has almost been lost in the shuffle. But needless to say Jewish synagogues are a foregone conclusion: they have arisen and will arise. But the crowning feature is the sentiment connected with the temple. It must be restored to complete the age-long desire of the orthodox Jew, who still forms the backbone of the Hebrew colonies of Palestine. But here the hardest point of all to attain will be found. Arab prejudice will keep the British uneasy and thus keep the Jew from attaining his dream. But indications point toward the accomplishment of even that. The religion of Mohammed is in a state of decline that promises its extinction within a few years if something is not done to revive it. Even among its adherents it is fast losing its force. It is much more decadent than even the much declining Christianity. It is divided into so many sects, Turkish, Arabian, and Indian, that almost no unity exists. On the other hand a renewed Judaism, born of hope and vigor of new activities, is coming out of the rest of the world. With the hand of God working in Israel, how soon will these things come to pass?

In the crucible of war many things are wrought. I have mentioned a great war that is gathering in the Far East that will eventually extend its tentacles into the Holy Land. Dr. Wellington Koo, the learned Chinese diplomat, says that unless the League of Nations does something immediately to enforce its decrees against the Japanese in Manchuokuo the world will soon witness another major war in the Far East.

The Zionist Movement lagged until the last great war: then how quickly events moved! Religious Zionism that waits upon the coming of Christ is lagging; what might not another war do? As far as human eye is able to discern, all the prophecies in regard to Palestine are fulfilled but the restoration of the old time religious services. Morris Jastrow, Jr., the late Jewish historian, says that every Jew expects to see the old temple worship restored even to the animal sacrifices. What a thrill that thought gives us when we read in the book of Malachi: "Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the soocerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. . . . But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall."—Malachi 3:4, 5; 4:2. "And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3:1.

That is the event toward which we all turn our attention. How soon it will come, mortal man cannot say; but as far as we can see, all that remains is the establishment of that worship which will be acceptable to the Lord and the setting up of that kingdom of God which will come in the midst of war, the instrument of the wrath of God. Oh, hasten the day, Lord God, is our prayer and supplication!

"BITS OF ABILITY"

"It is quite true," said the woman with glowing eyes and white, white hair, "it is true that we have no great or brilliant leader in our congregation; no one with wealth; no one with leisure time. But each one of us has a bit of ability. Each one of us can do something for the kingdom of heaven. Let's put our bits of ability together, dedicate them to Jesus, and see what He will do—not for us—but with us!"

Thus spoke a humble servant of our Lord.

And do we find here the secret of all the big, fine things that have been done for God on this earth?

"Bits of ability," dedicated to God, always triumph. Gideon and his three hundred; the well-nigh empty cruse of Zarephath; Dorcas and her needle; the five loaves and two fishes; that "certain widow," who gave "two mites"; the humble Galileans of the apostolic company; Paul, with his "thorn in the flesh" and fettered by prison chains; Aquila and Priscilla, with their tent-making tools; the church at Jerusalem town, "scattered abroad" because of "great persecution"—all these were but "bits of ability," consecrated to the glory of God and the kingdom of heaven.

Little woman, we thank you for your fine phrase. And may we, through the grace of Jesus, change "bits of ability" into "bundles of power" to the glory of His name.

Abreast of the Times

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:21. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42:9.

Compulsory Military Service

"I say unto you, Love your enemies."—Matt. 5:44.

CHICAGO, Oct. 5.—That the Methodist Church has officially taken a definite stand against its members taking part in war was reasserted at the recent Rock River Conference of that denomination. In the report of the committee on public policy, social service, and state legislation, it was urged that compulsory military training be dropped at the University of Illinois and asked that Methodist students be exempt from such training if they so desire "in accordance with the official position of the church."

The committee cited the case of Ennis Coale, Methodist student at the University of Maryland, who sought exemption from military training on the ground of the official pacifism of his church. His appeal for exemption was refused and he was sustained in the lower courts, only to have the decision overruled by the Supreme Court of Maryland. According to the Chicago Tribune Coale will appeal his case to the United States Supreme Court.

The General Conference of the Church of God passed a resolution August 17, 1922, providing for individual appeals for exemption from military service on the grounds that the Church of God as a denomination had declared itself opposed to such service. The General Conference could go no further than this owing to the fact that the Church of God is congregational in government, and each local body must act independently in matters of this kind.

Disarmament Conference Fails

"We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble!"—Jeremiah 8:15.

BERLIN, Germany, Oct. 14.—With the dramatic if not altogether unexpected withdrawal of Germany from the League of Nations and also from the Disarmament Conference, the possibility of another great European war becomes menacing and imminent. Lloyds of London declares that according to the best international observers the chances that a general war will break out on the Continent within the next eighteen months are two to one. Authorities concede that the final hope for disarmament as a result of the Geneva conference is shattered by Germany's decision, that the temporary suspension of military preparations that has been maintained during the negotiations is now ended, and that the feverish competition in armaments which contributed so largely to bringing about the World War will now be resumed with vigor.

According to the Manchester (England) Guardian Europe will "be mastered by the fear of war which fills the background of these (Geneva) negotiations," and if the Conference fails, as it seems destined to do, "more than half of Europe will not sleep at night!" The Guardian might well have included all the rest of the world in that final statement, for if a general European war does come, it will be impossible for nations elsewhere not to be sooner or later embroiled in it.

Arming of Gomer

"Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company."—Ezekiel 38:7.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 15.—"There was hope of averting hostilities in Europe," said Henry Morgenthau, recently chairman of the American delegation to the wheat conference, "so long as there remained a chance of effecting a reconciliation between France and Germany. With the rise of Hitler to power that hope departed. . . . I have reasons for conviction that Germany is not so 'disarmed' or unprepared for war as many have assumed. It would be found that she has rifles, small arms, ammunition and infantry equipment, with industrial facilities for further supply."

The Cost of Repeal

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?"—Isaiah 55:2.

VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 12.—A few years ago when the strict prohibitory law of British Columbia was up for repeal, the "wets" affirmed that to repeal prohibition and substitute government sale would result in much profit to the government, balance the budget, reduce taxes, and extinguish the provincial debt of $34,000,000. Those who favored repeal also declared that drinking would be reduced and intoxication eliminated eventually.

Under government sale the public debt more than doubled during the first three years, according to the National Enquirer. Taxes have gone to the highest level they have reached in the history of the province. The last year of prohibition the liquor bill was $909,884. During 1923, the first full year under government sale, it jumped to $9,275,993, or more than ten times the amount spent the last year of prohibition, and by 1930 it had reached $16,489,693, eighteen times the amount spent for liquor under prohibition.

The Canadian repealists contended that prohibition breeds contempt for law. "In 1919 under prohibition the British Columbia jail population was 686. By 1931 under the government sale regime the number of inmates in the jails had climbed to 3,741, a jump of 441 per cent." At the same time convictions for drunkenness mounted to 46 per 10,000 population. New York City, perhaps the wettest spot in the United States under prohibition, had six convictions for drunkenness to 10,000 population.

SCIENCE AND CHRISTIANITY

IN THE current discussions of the relations of Christianity to science, there is one fact that seems to have dropped out of notice; yet it is full of meaning and deserves, for Christianity's sake, to be raised and kept before the public. Who, or what, has raised science to its present commanding position? What influence is it that has trained the investigator, educated the people, and made it possible for the scientific man to exist and the people to comprehend him? Who built Harvard College? What motives form the very foundation stones of Yale? To whom, and to what, are the great institutions of learning, scattered all over this country, indebted for their existence? There is hardly one of these that did not have its birth in, and has not had its growth from, Christianity. The founders of all these institutions, more particularly those of greatest influence and largest facilities, were Christian men, who worked simply in the interest of their Master. The special scientific schools that have been grafted upon these institutions are children of the same parents, reared and endowed for the same work. Christianity is the undoubted and indisputable mother of the scientific culture of the country. But for her, our colleges would never have been built—our common schools would never have been instituted. Wherever a free Christianity has gone, it has carried with it education and culture.

Now, if Christianity is the foe of science, has she not taken a singular method of demonstrating her enmity? Today, as freely as ever, she is feeding the fountains of scientific knowledge. Her most devoted ministers, crowned with the finest culture of the time, preside over the schools which educate her enemies. Where is the sign of her illiberality, the evidence of her timidity, the lack of confidence in ultimate results in all this? The easily demonstrable, nay, the patent, truth is that Christianity was the first, as she remains the fast and fostering, friend of science; and all attempts to place her in a false position will be sure to react upon those who engage in them. The devotion of the Christian church of this country to education is one of the most notable facts in its history; and there is nothing to which it points with so much pride and satisfaction as to its educational institutions.

The radical difference in the standpoints of the two parties in this great controversy explains the controversy and shows its motives at their sources. To the man of faith all science is a knowledge of God, through a knowledge of His works and His processes. That which increases the knowledge of the great Creator of all, through the study of His creations and His methods, is regarded as a purely Christian work. That which enlarges the mind of man, gives him power over nature, carries him farthest toward the Being in whose image he was made, comes within the office of Christian teaching. Science is thus the handmaid of Christianity and will in all coming ages be cherished as such. To the man of science who rejects faith, science is simply the study of nature. He sees no God where the Christian apprehends Him. He finds in matter all the potencies which produce its combinations, qualities, life. He dismisses a personal God from the universe and makes of himself only an exalted brute. The real controversy touches simply the question of the existence of a God. The question of revelation is practically nothing to the ultra scientist, because he does not believe in the personality revealed.

Now, if this is simply a question of opinion, we would like to ask—granting for the nonce that there has been no demonstration on either side—which opinion has been and is most fruitful of good results to the world? Can motives be found in that of the ultra scientist sufficient to elevate a race to knowledge and culture? Would our country be as learned, enlightened, scientific, and polite as it is today if a community of ultra scientists had settled Plymouth colony and Massachusetts Bay? We presume that no man would be so simple as to suppose it would. Where, in that science which recognizes no personal God, is to be seen the motive of self-sacrifice which would have founded the institutions of learning that are the glory of our country? It is not there; and, if not, is a lie better than the truth? Has it more vitality, more munificence, a better estimate of human nature, more power for human good, more liberality, than the truth? These are questions that it would be well for scientific men to answer in a scientific way. Simply to show that the Christian idea of a personal God is one which leads to the abnegation of self in devotion to the common good; simply to show that there is something in the Christian scheme which furnishes motives for making mankind happier and better, and happier and better than any scientific affirmation or negation can make them, is scientifically to demonstrate that a personal God lives and that Christianity is a scheme of truth. Would it be hard to show this? It certainly would be impossible to show the contrary.—J. G. Holland in Everyday Topics.

WORKING AND PLAYING TOGETHER

HAVE any of you ever held court? When a few in your crowd disagree on something or other, have you called the rest together and tried to settle the question? It's a pretty good way to bring about peace, and sometimes the only way you can. Next time there is an argument or difference of opinion between some of you, try this way.

First choose a judge, some one that has plenty of good common sense and is impartial. Then choose speakers from each side. Let the speakers present their opinions fairly and without interference. Then let the judge give his decision, and all of you do just as the judge decides.

Another thing! All courts, you know, are founded upon laws; and the most important law to keep in mind for your court is the golden rule. Treat the other fellow just as you want him to treat you. If everyone in your crowd will do that, your troubles will be settled almost before they begin.

Well, even the early disciples had their differences! And today we will follow our dear friend Paul as he goes to "court" to help try to settle one of them. He had just been back in Antioch a little while from his first missionary journey when he was commissioned to take Barnabas with him and go to Jerusalem.

Can you see Paul as he starts out with a little company of brethren? In the East, you know, they had a very pleasant custom of going part way with a friend when he started out on a journey, just as many of you boys and girls go part way home with a friend who has been visiting you. The little company of church people, we are sure, visited along the way, talking of how good God was to them in sending Jesus to be the Savior.

We can just imagine Paul telling them again how wicked he had been, without intending to be wicked, and how the light sent from heaven had shown him the right way to go that day on the road to Damascus. Also, he no doubt told the brethren always to love the Lord Jesus and be true to Him.

As the little party traveled toward the south along the coast, in every village they met Christians, because Philip, another evangelist, had preached there fifteen years before. And when people meet each other, they always talk about the things that are dearest to them. Can you guess what they talked about as they met these new brethren?

Paul told them for one thing about his missionary trip into Asia, and we read in verse three that his new-found friends were very, very happy that others had heard and accepted the gospel. About three hundred miles in all they walked from Antioch to Jerusalem.

When they arrived at their destination, the leaders of the church first of all wanted to hear all about Paul's missionary trip. Just imagine, preaching the gospel to people who had never before even heard of God or of Jesus! That is what Paul had done, and the elders of the church were anxious to hear all about how he had succeeded.

Afterwards they held "court," and there were several of the apostles present—Peter, John, and James, our Lord's brother; others also, Mark and Titus, perhaps. The first speaker was who? Why, Peter, of course! And the judge, who was he? None other than James, the brother of Jesus.

The question to settle concerned many of those whom Paul had converted—Gentiles. Should they, as Christians, keep all the laws the Jewish Christians had been keeping? The wise judge said no; but that if they believed on the Lord Jesus Christ and obeyed Him, they would be saved.

Then they all went home peaceably, agreeing with the wise judge, each doing his part to spread the gospel and teach those who were in darkness the new way of life. And, you know, we teach more by our actions than we do by our words.

What would have happened if Paul, for instance, had thought he knew more than James did and had not stood by the judge's decision? You all know what happens to your nice game of baseball when one or two won't agree with the umpire. Let's remember the golden rule every day.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

For this lesson write the story telling how you made peace between two who were quarreling; how a friend made peace between you and some one else who had an argument; or how you wish you had made peace instead of keeping up the trouble that had been started between two of your friends.

Copy this:

"I've won my point; I've had my way;
But I'm not happy, strange to say;
I thought with joy I'd long recall
This hour—it isn't so at all."

LESSON 6. — November 5, 1933

PAUL IN JERUSALEM

Acts 15:1-35

Devotional Reading: Romans 8:1-11

GOLDEN TEXT

Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.—2 Corinthians 3:17.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul in Jerusalem.

Aim: To show that false teaching is dangerous and leads to trouble in the church and in society.

Basic Truth: "These were more noble . . . in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so."—Acts 17:11.

I. Paul Meets With False Teaching. (Acts 15:1-2.) Men who speak without divine authority provided by the Word of God and who seek a personal following rather than to advance the cause of Christ cause a great deal of distress in the church. Paul met with this difficulty; and rather than attempt to settle it himself or with the aid of the local church, he submitted it to the consideration of the leaders of the church in general. "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety."

II. Paul Attends a General Conference. (Acts 15:3-21.) "The apostles and elders," representing the experienced spiritual leaders of the church throughout the world, "came together to consider" the matter of dispute that had arisen in the church at Antioch. There is nothing to indicate that the question was presented for the discussion and decision of anyone but the "apostles and elders," the teachers of that period. Before any teaching that differs from the generally accepted view of the church is presented to the public, it should first be submitted to a council of experienced church leaders and Bible students.

III. Paul Accepts the Decision of the Council. (Acts 15:22-31.) Organized work of any kind cannot be carried on without establishing and maintaining some standard of purpose. The men who insisted that Gentiles must be circumcised were forbidden to teach their subversive doctrine in the church at Antioch. Had they continued to do so, a division would soon have appeared; two parties opposed to each other would have been giving their time and attention to disputing within the church rather than to spreading the gospel to the outside world. The restoration of harmony in the congregation no doubt brought as much rejoicing as did the knowledge that the Gentiles need not keep the law.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Dissension: The church at Pentecost and for a short time afterward worked in absolute harmony under the direct guidance of the Holy Spirit. But with the declaration of the gospel to the Gentiles there arose new conditions for consideration. The Gentiles were as steeped in the traditions of idol worship as the Jews were in the traditions of the fathers. But the Jewish Christian felt an unjustified sense of superiority because of his prior call.

How often today we find the same condition existing. John Doe and his wife helped to organize the church in their locality, and certain customs have been adhered to ever since. After years of changing conditions some one suggests that a variation in the worship program might be helpful or that one or two new officers are needed. Or, possibly, the minister has baptized some one whom they do not like. Many problems of lesser or greater import may arise to which John Doe objects because of habit, not because of conscience. But because of his seniority he insists on his will being supreme or he will "stop coming."

Authority: Unfortunately, there is often a lack of the spirit of arbitration shown by the early church in its trouble. A group of people representing both sides of the controversy was sent by the church to Jerusalem for the advice of the apostles and elders. They recognized the authority vested in the apostles. It is true the church has not the miraculous guidance of the Holy Spirit now. But in its place we have the record of God's will concerning us. Let us, like the people of Antioch, place our disputed points before some one in whom each faction has confidence. Be sure the one appealed to will study the problem by a comparison of similar problems in the Word of God. And when the decision has been rendered, may God give us grace to accept the result as did the devout men of Antioch.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."—2 Cor. 3:17.

In 2 Corinthians Paul is comparing the law with the gospel. Keeping the letter of the law amounted to little, but keeping the spirit of it was quite another thing. Keeping the letter of the law was keeping it for fear of punishment, but keeping the spirit of the law was keeping it because it was right; and as long as right prevails, we are free to do as we please.

Just so, if the Spirit of the Lord is in us, we do what we do to please Him; and as long as we please Him, we are at liberty to do as we like; but all we do must be something that pleases the Father and His Son. The Father's will must be our will; and if so, the Spirit of Christ will be in us, and our only wish will be to please the Father.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS Heeding the Voice of the Church

Everywhere in the New Testament the church of the living God is spoken of as a governing body which has the right to exercise great power over its members. Jesus taught that if a brother had been offended he was to go to the offending brother and seek reconciliation. If he failed, he was to take one or two others with him and make another attempt. If the offender still refused to heed, the matter was to be taken to the church for final settlement. Matt. 18:15-17. Again, Paul taught that if any had any trouble with a brother he should not go to law before the unjust but should lay the grievance before the church and abide by its decision. 1 Cor. 6:1-8.

Thus Jesus and our special apostle each referred to the church as final authority. Since God has placed the church in a position of authority, it is easy to understand that to refuse to heed the voice of the church is equivalent to refusing to heed God Himself. The same individual would still be subject to the judgment of the church, for "do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?"

The heads of each church are its elders. We must heed them. Paul's last charge to the elders of the Ephesian church was: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God."—Acts 20:28. An overseer is one having authority over some group; in this case the group is the church. Again, he commanded Timothy to "preach the word; . . . reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine." God has established the authority of the church over its members and the authority of the elders over the church. In obedience to Him we must heed the commands of both.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATES

Looking to the Church for Guidance

Between Paul's first and second missionary trips he stopped in Jerusalem to confer with the elders of the church on questions which troubled many of the Gentiles to whom he had taught the gospel. This is the first Christian conference on record. The teacher should explain to the class how God had chosen Israel for a particular purpose—to exalt His name before the heathen; how they were His people for centuries, during which time they often strayed off into idolatry; how, when their long promised Messiah came in the person of Jesus Christ, they crucified Him; how God then turned to the Gentiles. Show how the Jews came by the feeling that the Gentiles were "outsiders," and it was hard for them to think the Gentiles could be included among God's people. All this led to the discussion before the conference at Jerusalem, where the Jews thought the Gentiles should perform the same rites required of the Jews.

In your Christian service you will find many questions and problems that will puzzle you. You may go often to God's Word for guidance. But in youth it is hard to find "the answer" sometimes to our doubts. Go to your pastor, your Sunday school teacher, or an older friend in your church for advice. But always seek guidance from one whose faith is firm and sure, so that your own may be strengthened. And when the storms of life break heavily over you, may you find a safe anchor through your faith in God and His promises.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

PLUM RIVER, ILLINOIS

Our Sunday school has been going along very nicely since Rally Day. We have had an attendance of 30 the past two Sundays, which is only five less than Rally Day. The Sunday school hour was changed back to ten o'clock, morning worship at eleven, and evening services at 7:45.

There will be no church services here on Sunday, October 29, as the pastor will be at his home in Nebraska for a short visit, the Lord willing.

Harvey Krogh, Pastor.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

At the close of the morning sermon October 15, four adults came forward for baptism. Three of these have previously done active church work over a period of years, and it does our hearts good to have them now come with true and fuller understanding to be buried with Christ and to carry on the good work.

Next Sunday, our anniversary, we hope to have guests from both the other active churches of the state, Dutton and Blanchard, and also to have their respective pastors, Bros. Barney and Smead. F. E. Siple, Pastor.

RALLY DAY AT GOLDEN RULE CHURCH Cleveland, Ohio

Sunday, October 15, was Rally Day at Golden Rule. 215 were present at Sunday school. The adult class led with a new high of 49 in attendance. Watch this class; they are really working hard to increase attendance and interest in the Lord's work. The classes caught the true spirit of Rally and helped to make the program educational and inspirational to all. We hope to add many new members to our Sunday school during the coming "Rally Year."

A Sunday school library was inaugurated and thirty-six books were donated the first day. Our goal is two hundred volumes by next Rally Day.

One face was missed by all, that was the smiling face of our assistant superintendent, Bro. J. O. Conrad, who is in the hospital with a broken leg. We pray earnestly for his speedy recovery and return.

The church services were well attended both morning and evening. Several of our shut-ins and isolated members were in attendance. The pastor emphasized the need to carry the "Rally" spirit through our year's activities and make of it a "Rally Year." The morning sermon, "The Remnant," and the evening, "Mother Eve," were both of much spiritual value.

Our church exterior has a brand new coat of paint and our church lawn has been beautified with an eight foot Norway Spruce, the gift of our earnest member and worker, Bro. Geo. McMurtree.

We are hoping and praying for more workers in the Lord's vineyard as a result of our Rally Day endeavors.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Mrs. Ora Burnett (for self and another); Fred C. Smith; Mrs. Anna Fales; Mrs. Elizabeth O. Frier; Mrs. A. M. Linsenmeier; Mr. and Mrs. M. Feters; Jessie M. B. Kauffman (for another); Mrs. E. F. Orchard; Mrs. Susan T. Long.

IOWA FALL CONFERENCE

There was a good turn-out at the Fall Conference held at Pleasant Prairie near Sac City, Iowa, October 7 and 8. Many precious truths of the Bible were presented by Bros. J. W. Williams, A. M. Jones, and H. S. Hunt.

Sunday afternoon it was a pleasure to witness the baptism of Harriette Ruth Fales of Storm Lake by Bro. J. W. Williams in the lake bordering the city of Lake View. We hope this young lady in her early "teens" will find much comfort and strength in having her life hid in Christ at this early age. After the baptism a communion service was held at the church.

Bros. A. M. Jones and J. Arthur Johnson have been working faithfully around Storm Lake and Marathon. Folks came from Clarks-ville, Cedar Falls, Eagle Grove, Stanhope, Storm Lake, Gladbrook, Sac City, and Lake View. Sr. D. M. Spencer of Gentry, Mo., is living with her daughter Agnes (Mrs. Guy Selleck) this winter; we were glad to meet them at the meeting. As a whole, the meeting was very enjoyable.

Bro. Williams stopped on his way home and gave the Stanhope congregation a sermon on the "Natural Mind and the Spiritual Mind."

Esther Sealine, Cor. Sec.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

Again it was our privilege to work with the Church of God at Arkansas City, Kansas, in a series of meetings from October 8 to 15. Bros. Drabentstott and Clayton Long of Hartford City, Indiana, Sr. Magaw and our son Malcolm accompanied us on the trip. The brethren at Arkansas City are to be highly commended for their labors this past summer. With much zeal and with but little finance the erection of a church building was undertaken, and though yet incomplete it served very well for this first series of meetings within its walls. The church measures thirty by fifty feet, is well built of brick, and has full basement beneath. It is hoped that by next spring or summer the structure may be ready for dedication.

On October 13 it was our pleasure to baptize into Christ Bros. Burt Smith and Raymond Werneke, both of Arkansas City. The baptismal service was held at Walnut River east of town. We pray God's richest blessings upon these new members and upon the church as a whole.

On the closing Sunday it was our privilege to conduct the first wedding ceremony in the new church building, when Miss Faye Morgan became the bride of Mr. Raymond Werneke.

On our return trip we stopped off at Indianapolis for a two or three hour visit with Mrs. Magaw's Aunt Ella Skinner, who a few years ago visited the Holy Land. Her hospitality and interest in the Lord's work were much to be enjoyed. We left her with her promise to attend our fall series of meetings at Brush Creek, Ohio.

SPECIAL MEETINGS AT BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

Beginning on November 19 and continuing through December 3 our special annual fall meetings will be held at Brush Creek. Bro. J. H. Anderson of Michigantown, Indiana, will be present to assist in these meetings from November 21 on throughout the balance of the meetings. Pray and plan for the success of this coming effort. Begin your plans to attend.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

There was a reception Tuesday evening, October 10, at the home of Bro. and Sr. W. F. Hoskins to honor Bro. Richard LeCrone and to welcome him into our midst. We thought that a better acquaintance between pastor and congregation brought about in this way would be helpful to all concerned. Sr. Hoskins as hostess had planned a nice little program which was enjoyed by all. The rest of the evening was spent in visiting, after which a dainty lunch was served. Upon leaving, Bro. LeCrone was given a gift of silver.

The Ladies' Aid met this month on Thursday, October 12, at the home of Sr. J. B. Gaspar. An enjoyable afternoon was spent in a social way following a year of quilting after which a lovely lunch was served.

The Sunday school officers and teachers met with our pastor at the home of Bro. and Sr. Floyd Mills Wednesday evening, October 11, to make plans for a Rally Day program. They decided to make November 5 our Rally Day and to make it the beginning of a Rally Year.

Our Bereans meet now on Thursday evenings. There is a good attendance and much interest is being shown. Most of the subjects are chosen by the young people themselves. The adults are meeting at the home of Bro. and Sr. Herman Ruhn for their first Bible study and prayer meeting of the season this Wednesday evening, October 18.

Bro. John Deuchfield visited over the week end here with the church people. He is planning to leave soon for work in the northern part of the state.

Sr. Floyd Mills has been ill the past week with quinsy; and Sr. William Ruhn has been carrying her hand in a cast due to a bruise.

Mrs. Herman Ruhn, Church Clerk.

WERNEKE - MORGAN

At high noon, Sunday, Oct. 15, 1933, following a sermon on "Christ's Love for His Bride," a beautiful wedding ceremony was performed in the new Church of God edifice in Arkansas City, Kansas, when Miss Faye Morgan became the bride of Mr. Raymond Werneke. Miss Taylor, a friend of the bride, and Mr. Richards, a friend of the groom, were bridesmaid and best man; Miss Hamilton, another of the bride's friends, played the wedding march and sang "At Dawning"; Bro. Chas. Morgan, father of the bride, led his daughter to the altar and gave her away in marriage. The groom is a business man in Arkansas City, and the newly-weds will begin their married life in the home town among many friends. Following the marriage at the church a wedding dinner was served at the groom's home. We pray for these splendid young people a long and happy marriage and lives of richest blessings from the Lord whom both serve.

Sydney E. Magaw.

ZECHIEL - GROSVENOR

On Thursday evening, October 19, 1933, at our home in Tippecanoe City, Ohio, it was our privilege to unite in marriage Mr. Ferris Zechiel of Culver, Indiana, and Miss Leona Grosvenor of Bourbon, Indiana. Many will recall having met these young folks at our last General Conference at Oregon, Illinois. On the day following the wedding the newly-weds left for Winchester, Indiana, to attend a religious conference for young people. In a few days they will return to the groom's home near Culver where he is engaged in farming. We trust and pray God's richest favors upon them throughout a long and happy married life.

MRS. KARL EYCHANER

Emma Stewart was born in Charlotte, N. C., on October 16, 1890, and died, after a long illness, on September 11, 1933, in Asheville, N. C., where she had spent some time in the hope of regaining her health. She was united in marriage with Karl K. Eychaner on December 29, 1910, in Tampa, Fla., which city has been their home. She is survived by her husband, Karl Eychaner; her mother, Mrs. Stewart, who has devotedly nursed her during her illness; and her father and brother, R. P. and W. J. Stewart of Palmetto, Fla.

Emma Eychaner had many friends who loved her for her quiet, unassuming ways, and for her sterling qualities of mind and heart. Of a cheerful, hopeful disposition, which continued throughout many years of patient suffering, without word of complaint she made a brave fight for life. She will be remembered by many Iowa friends who met her, when in August, 1923, she and her husband attended the Iowa Conference at Waterloo, making the trip from their home in the South to attend the conference and to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Eychaner of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

The funeral was held in the late afternoon of Tuesday, September 12, from the Tampa Funeral Home, which was filled with beautiful floral offerings, the services being attended by many sympathizing friends. Rev. Hardin Branch of the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church conducted the services. She was laid to rest in the Tampa Cemetery, awaiting the Master's call.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Delayed reports of two Iowa weddings that took place during the summer and which are of interest to many of our readers have just been brought to our attention. The first is that of Miss Bernice Fish of Maxwell to Mr. Harlan Witmer of the same place, which occurred on June 10, 1933; and the second is that of Miss Bernice Sealine and Mr. Leonard Anderson, both of Stratford, which was consummated on August 26, 1933. Although a little late, The Herald prays for a long and happy life, overflowing with God's blessing, for these young people.

Word reaches us from Waterloo, Iowa, that the treasurer of the National Bible Institution, T. J. Ellis, has been obliged to retire from active work with the Illinois Central Railroad, by which he has been employed many years, owing to "his heart, which is not strong enough to stand the work." We regret Bro. Ellis' inability to go on with his regular work, but at the same time feel that he has served his company faithfully and deserves retirement. May God continue to bless him in whatever lot his life may now be cast.

An Appointed Time

By C. E. Randall

WHAT a great God we worship! How marvelous are all His works! When He formed His plan and purpose, He knew exactly what He wanted to do, how He wanted to do it, when it would be started, and when it would be completed. God's clock of time is accurate; it never is slow, it never is fast. There is a time and place for all His doings. All these appointments are kept on time.

God told Abraham that his seed would be a stranger in a land that was not theirs and would serve and be afflicted four hundred years. Four hundred years is a long time; but when the period was up and the appointed time arrived, even in the "selfsame day" God remembered His promise and delivered the children of Israel from Egypt (Gen. 15: 13; Ex. 12:17).

Speaking through the Prophet Jeremiah, God foretold of the seventy year Babylonian captivity. At the appointed time God in a miraculous manner delivered these people. So dependable and accurate were these appointments of God that Daniel was able through the study of Scripture to tell that the time of deliverance was at hand.

Four thousand years prior to the event God told and promised the coming of the "Seed of the woman" which would bruise the enemy's head. During this long interim many had embraced the hope of Christ's birth and redemptive work. Some gave up hope, but there were a few at the time of Christ's birth that were waiting for the "Consolation of Israel." When the star appeared, they recognized it and knew that it was the sign of that great event which had been appointed four thousand years previously (Gal.

4:4). When the appointed time came, the Christ was born.

The end of the "times of the Gentiles" has likewise been set for a certain time. Nations cannot and never have gone beyond the "bounds of their habitation." Their times have been "before appointed" (Acts 17:26). The end of the world has been set for a certain day and hour (Matt. 24: 36). It will come at the appointed time. "For at the time appointed the end shall be" (Dan. 8:19; 11:27, 36, 40; 12: 4, 9, 13). While we do not know the "day or hour" of Christ's second coming, yet when we see certain things coming to pass as foretold and predicted by God, we are told to "look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28).

All signs indicate that we are at the close of this age, that soon "he that shall come will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. 10:37). To those who are "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" it will be a day of great rejoicing; but to those who have been indifferent and have grown cold it will be a day of great mourning, and the sinners will call for the rocks and mountains to hide them from Him that sitteth on the throne. The world is full of signs of Christ's early coming and is aflame with strife and trouble. We have many sorrows, but they are just the beginning of the sorrows that are due the old world of sin. The wise will see these many signs and will take heed and prepare themselves for His coming.—Church of God Messenger.

HUNTING GOLD

IN THE early days of the settlement of the West, men went into the mountains seeking gold. Some found fine gold mixed with the sand of the flowing waters, but which, being in such fine grains, seemed not worth the time and labor required to separate it; so the searcher continued on his way looking for the large deposits and quick wealth. In later years, when life was well spent and younger men, or those of more patience, had through much labor and constant effort panned out untold wealth from the rivers, the old prospector realized his mistake.

So it is in seeking the good things hidden in God's Word. Many people hunger and thirst for more of the spiritual food and a closer walk with God, but are passing by the fine grains of kindness and love that are the manifestation of a divine nature, promised to those that diligently seek. "Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11:6.

"Without faith" is the cause of many a wrecked life that at some time has earnestly sought the higher ways but had rejected knowledge that comes through the study of the Word. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. 10:17. Why is it so difficult for people to realize that it is impossible to learn of God except by hearing or reading His Word? Any subjects of occupation of this life must be studied either by experience or reading in order to be useful. The following of that trade is then but manifesting faith obtained through learning.

In the early times God spoke direct to His people, or in dreams, or by angels. Everything He did was to teach them that His creative works were all for their benefit and His pleasure. All He required was faithfulness to Him and kindness to one another. The dealings of those days have been recorded for our benefit that we may learn of the plan and purpose of creation.

Jesus came as the greatest of all teachers, fulfilling in His life the true condition of the mind toward God and fellow beings, the condition called spirituality, or the spirit of God. While He was with the people of His day, they looked to Him for strength, comfort, and consolation. As long as He was present, they failed to develop a personal character built upon faith. When assurance of God's power over death had been given by example, Jesus was taken away with the promise to return and gather the faithful ones. During His absence He promised the Holy Spirit should be given to those that love Him. He said the Holy Spirit is the spirit of truth. In that case the person receiving the Holy Spirit will have a mind desiring the truth and must follow the instruction of Jesus in saying, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."—John 5:39.

If the Scriptures testify of Jesus and we love Him, then we should study them to learn of God's purpose and how He used Jesus to fulfill that purpose. "These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me."—Luke 24:44.

This, then, is our method of obtaining faith: hearing the Word. Make it a personal study to gain personal faith through diligent seeking. Even Peter in later years said, "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord."—2 Peter 1:2. Then a knowledge of God brings grace and peace. Grace is the favor or love of God, and comes only by knowledge that produces faith. The kind of faith that is diligently followed by virtue, which is strength to overcome and stand firmly by that which the knowledge teaches, is the just requirement of God.

To this is to be added temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity as evidence of that divine nature. "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall." What comfort in these words, to be assured that what God requires is not unreasonable nor impossible, but just that which is for our own good, and satisfying even in this life. "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."—Micah 6:8. Jesus said that the Holy Spirit is the Comforter. When Jesus was here, He was the comfort of the people in that they looked to Him for a message of truth, physical benefits, and a source of peaceful meditations. After His departure the Holy Spirit was to bring to the mind all things He had told them. These were comforting messages of the power of God concerning His purpose in the earth and Jesus' return to gather the sleeping saints and faithful living.

"For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—2 Peter 1:11. Through the Holy Spirit the apostles were able to bring to their remembrance the things Jesus had said, that they should be recorded and preserved for future generations. Thus we have access to the words of Jesus and His love that assures us of the promise of the Holy Spirit which creates a love for truth, the spirit of truth, within us a comfort. All this combines within the sincere seeker of the Holy Spirit a deeper realization of God's power in transforming or re-creating a man in righteousness and true holiness. As was the old prospector who sought the gold and neglected the precious grains, so is the Christian that neglects to pick out the precious truths offered by all the prophets which, applied to the character, will develop into that divine nature, of which it is said, "Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them."—Psalm 119:165.—Roy Davison in The Bible Advocate.

The King's Gospel

By J. W. Williams

WHEN the King came, because He was also the Prophet, He preached. His message was the gospel of the kingdom. It consisted of the proclamation, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand."

This was also the message of His advance herald, for John preached, saying, "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was also the message of His twelve ambassadors, for He told them to preach, saying, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." A varied form of this gospel was also what the seventy additional heralds were told to preach, "The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." For in other places in Matthew's and Luke's accounts what one calls the kingdom of heaven the other calls the kingdom of God.

The thought of God's sovereignty over Israel was not new to them. Their king's throne was in their inspired historical records called "the throne of the Lord." The change from judges to kings did not shift the sovereignty. In both forms of government God was the real Ruler: the judge or the king was merely His representative. Hence, when the King of the Jews announced the kingdom in His gospel, it was well understood by the Jews that it was the restored Israelitish monarchy, as the disciples expressed it when they asked, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"

For restitution was a familiar idea to them. Isaiah had predicted, "I will restore thy judges as at the first," reenforced by such prophetic promises as Ezekiel's, "It shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him," Jeremiah's, "The days come when I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and execute justice and judgment in the earth," and Micah's, "Bethlehem . . . out of thee shall he come." So Peter could properly speak of "the times of restitution" (Acts 3:19). Hence, though the disciples were mistaken as to the time of this restitution in Luke 19:11, they were more cautious later when they asked their question as to the time of restoring the kingdom to Israel. (Please turn to Page Nine)

PRAYER OF DEDICATION

Most gracious Father, with humble hearts we come asking Thee to accept at our hands this special issue of our paper, which we hereby dedicate to the proclamation of the gospel of Thy Son. Bless to Thine own glory this our earnest efforts to advance Thy truth among men. Amen.

GOOD TIDINGS

"BEHOLD, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people!" These words which rang through the Judean hills so long ago have now encircled the earth and brought hope and comfort and rejoicing to myriads of sorrowing hearts. So wide and deep and satisfying is the truth they reveal concerning God's love for men and the way in which He has made provision for their redemption from sin and its dreadful results that it sets the heartstrings vibrating with ceaseless joy.

The old, old message has lost nothing of its power with the passage of the years. It is still as vibrant and inspiring as it was two thousand years ago. And while its promises are not as yet fulfilled, one of its blessed purposes is being accomplished daily—it is bringing hope and comfort to sorrowing men and women everywhere. Nothing but truth, the heart-satisfying truth of God Himself, could do this. The reasoning of men, the efforts and the promises of men, can never bring the joy to the suffering world that the simple assurances of the gospel provide, for the gospel only "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." O let the glad news ring out again! Let it echo from the mountain peaks and be carried by the waves of the ocean to the farthest reaches of the earth, that all may know its saving power and be made to rejoice in the salvation it affords.

THE GLORY OF THE GOSPEL

SO VAST is the scope of truth covered by the glad tidings of the kingdom of God that it is quite impossible for one to grasp it all in a lifetime. The endless ages that stretch away before the saved ones after the Master comes will continue to unfold in constantly changing scenes of glory the wondrous possibilities of God's purposing.

And it is all included in this one enticing word gospel! Life and home and peace and joy—the hopes for which men have suffered and sacrificed and died; the loftiest aspirations, frustrated by mortality today; the fondest desires, unrealized here; the most holy cravings after God—these, all these, will be fully known and endlessly enjoyed throughout eternity in the new heavens and the new earth—the end and aim of the gospel!

"For the joy that was set before him" our Lord endured the cross and despised the shame. He caught a vision of the eternal world—not of heaven, that was to briefly be His home, but of the earth, to which He would speedily return and with the glory of His presence fill with fadeless beauty, deathless fragrance, and supernal love! On the Mount of the Ascension He stood gazing into promise-filled future, with

"—All eternity before Him there, While those He loved were coming —and the dawn

Was on the hills—the birds' song on the air.

How beautiful"

He was now the Master of Life! He had conquered death for every man, and He realized the greatness and the far-reaching effects of His victory. And now He stands looking into the glowing future for the glory that is yet to be revealed when you and I, with the saved of all the ages, shall stand beside Him on the shores of the timeless sea, enthralled and speechless with the wonder of it all, the grandeur of it all! God's kingdom on the earth! Our home for evermore!

THE GOSPEL

By Lyman Booth

"And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed."—Galatians 3:8.

WHEN God called Abraham to leave his native land and kindred and to go into a strange land, He said to him, "I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 12:3. Paul calls this promise "the gospel." The adjective "the" denotes but "one gospel." It is always mentioned in the singular number and never in the plural. It is a definite gospel. It is mentioned as "the gospel of God" (Rom. 15:16), "the gospel of Jesus Christ" (Mark 1:1), "the gospel of the grace of God" (Acts 20:24), "my gospel" (Rom. 2:16), "the gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 4:23), "the gospel of God" (Rom. 1:1), "our gospel" (2 Cor. 4:3), "the glorious gospel" (1 Tim. 1:11), "the everlasting gospel" (Rev. 14:6).

Since there is but one gospel and since it was first preached by God, all of these terms apply to the one message. God being the author of it, we may with perfect propriety refer to it as "the gospel of God." No matter what phrase His agents use in referring to it, the meaning is the same definite gospel. If there were more than one gospel, how could we know which one is intended by the phrase "the gospel"? No one could tell with any degree of certainty. But when we say, "The gospel of God," we know positively the one intended.

Faith and hope are based upon the solid foundation of the one gospel. There being but one, it can produce but one faith and one hope. Paul taught the Ephesians that there is one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one God and Father of all (Eph. 4:4-6). The gospel contains the evidence that produces faith, and faith begets hope. We can have neither faith nor hope in a message or statement in the absence of the necessary evidence of its truthfulness.

The word "gospel" is of Saxon origin and means "good news," "good message," or "good spell." If we let the Bible define the word, we shall find it means "good news," or "glad tidings." In Luke

4:16-18 Jesus said, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor." This prophecy which He read is recorded in Isaiah 61:1 and reads, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek." We notice that what Isaiah calls "good tidings" Jesus calls "the gospel." Therefore, we conclude that the gospel means "good tidings"; and Paul calls it "glad tidings" (Rom. 10:15). The Prophet Isaiah said, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings . . . of good."—Isa. 52:7. From this testimony we conclude that "gospel" means "good news," or "glad tidings." But these terms alone do not clearly and fully convey to our minds the nature or character of the news or tidings. To say to a friend, "I have good news for you," does not give him any idea of the nature of the news. He would not understand what the news was until I told him, unless, perhaps, he may have been expecting favorable news, and even then he could only guess at my meaning.

It was even so with the Jews when Jesus came preaching the good news of the kingdom. They had been given to understand that the kingdom of Israel would be restored under the rulership of the Messiah, who would deliver them from Gentile rule. Though His preaching was good news, they did not accept it, and rejected Him because He did not come in the manner in which they thought He would. When the angel brought glad tidings to the shepherds, they did not understand the nature of the glad tidings until he said, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11. That they considered the angel's message glad tidings is proved by the haste with which they journeyed to Bethlehem.

Since God preached before the gospel to Abraham and Abraham believed Him, has the Lord made known to us the subject of the gospel or glad tidings which His

Good News

Good news! He is coming! Our King!
Be ready to meet Him, He says;
And throngs of bright angels He'll bring
To join in our anthems of praise.
His sign shall appear in the heavens,
In the clouds of the air He will come,
And those unto whom it is given
Shall enter His banqueting room.

The rocks and the earth will be riven,
The dead from their graves will arise,
When shall come the new earth and new heaven
With our glorified Lord from the skies.
Then the city celestial will brighten
The world with its glory and power;
Every heart that has loved Him will lighten
With joy and with peace in that hour.

Good news! He is coming! Our King!
Almost the long warfare is o'er;
When the earth shall triumphantly sing,
When there shall be weeping no more,
When the sun and the moon shall not shine
More brilliant than light we will see,
For the Lamb in His splendor divine
The light of the city shall be.

Therein shall all faces be glad;
All hearts be uplifted with praise;
Not even a memory sad
Shall mar the delight of our days.
Then let us be ready, and still
Watch and pray for His steps at the door,
That His peace so enchanting may fill
Our souls, and be ours evermore.

Modern Youth and the Age-Old Gospel

By Mary A. Gesin

REGARDLESS of his status in the world of today one is constantly confronted with the bewildering assertion that the faith of his fathers is no longer adequate for modern youth. The contribution of the twentieth century in the field of religion has been rather a subtraction than an addition, for in educating man to high and ever higher attainments in the realms of philosophy this age has taken away his strongest anchor and abandoned him to that weakest of all supports—his own desires.

A multitude of creeds and "isms" has failed to furnish a substitute for that faith which weathered every storm and stress of life. For the modern man, though he no longer believes in a God with a plan and a purpose for His creatures, nevertheless feels the need to believe in something. Hence, he continually seeks new shrines before which to kneel, shrines which more often destroy than preserve his faith.

But perhaps the modern mind has arrived at this confusing and devastating crossroads through altogether apparent means. When professedly enlightened Christian educators aver that we can no longer picture God as the Father of mankind, how can we expect an intelligent person to believe in Him as the One who "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life"? When prominent ministers of the gospel contend that God is a principle, not a personality, why expect that youth will fear to offend such a God or will strive to emulate the example He sets before him?

But, after all, it is no new thing that the faith of their fathers has failed to satisfy the youth of the land. At the peak of every age man has become so imbued with a sense of his own importance and his own attainments that he begins to doubt the simple teachings of his predecessors culled from the pages of the Book of books. And following fast upon the heels of doubt and disillusionment comes immorality of every kind, the sweeping away of all barriers, finally bringing ruin and oblivion for that people. A survey of the history of the world will serve to prove that assertion correct.

From Pericles, who lived more than four hundred years before Christ, to the Apostle Paul, who found the Athenians rejecting the faith offered them and spending their time in hearing or telling "some new thing," among educated men everything was in dispute: "political sanctions, literary values, moral standards, religious convictions, even the possibility of reaching any truth about anything." How true of even our own time and our own "educated" men in this "enlightened" century!

If, then, this confusion and consequent period of dissolution has been peculiar to every age, are we not safe in assuming that man is at fault, not the faith of our fathers?

The lack is not in the gospel, which has the power to save that it always had, but in man, whose greatest offense toward God always has been and still is unbelief.

When youth is robbed of the stabilizing influence of a faith in the gospel of salvation, he is thrown back on his own resources, which are often destructive. And this most apparent fact clearly proclaims that only outside of himself lies the power upon which he can rely. The very evident results when the restraints engendered by a faith in God are removed declare only two loudly that in man "dwelleth no good thing."

The faith that sustained as keenly intelligent a mind as that of the great Apostle and which caused him to discount the worldly honor and advancement that might have justly been his due should be sufficient for the modern "educated" youth. The heroism that enabled Paul to count as naught the extreme sufferings he endured for the proclamation of the gospel that saves certainly had its source in a divine power, even in the Author of that gospel.

Assuredly no other than God Himself could have inspired the words uttered by an ancient writer, when he declared, "I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." And that more than fifteen hundred years before the first appearance upon earth of his Redeemer!

Without a doubt the One for whose coming Job awaited is identical with the One from whom Paul expected to receive the reward for fighting the good fight of faith. His life was filled to the brim with attainment, gratification, though not of self, the pursuit of that which brings lasting happiness to himself and those about him. A life devoid of faith in God, spent in pursuit of self-gratification, brings also its toll of suffering, but at what a cost! It could never wring such words from one at the end as those uttered by the Apostle who said, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed."

If only one, still in the younger years of life, upon reading these weak and halting words should decide to discard the vain traditions of men and choose instead the saving power of the gospel of Christ, what inestimable blessing would result! May you, my dear young reader, say with the great song writer:

"My hope is built on nothing less Than Jesus' life and righteousness;
I dare not trust the sweetest frame,
But wholly lean on Jesus' name.
On Christ, the solid Rock, I stand;
All other ground is sinking sand."

ADOPTED SONS

By Emma C. Railsback

GOD had only one begotten Son after the natural order. He was also God's Son after the spiritual order. All others on whom God's name is called must come into Him by complying with the divine laws of adoption, which are made very clear in His Word. The Apostle Paul speaks of adoption in a number of places. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law . . . that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4:4, 5. "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."—Rom. 8:15.

Now what are God's laws of adoption into His spiritual family? James states (1:18), "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." John 1:12, 13: "As many as received him, to them gave he power ("right, or privilege," margin) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were begotten (Diaglott), not of blood, nor of the will of man, but of God."

James tells us that God begets by the Word of truth, and John states that belief on the name of Christ constitutes a divine begetting. The Apostle Peter speaks of being begotten again (1 Peter 1:3): "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." The apostles had all been begotten by the Word of truth, belief in Jesus as the Christ; and Peter made the good confession when Jesus asked, "But whom say ye that I am?" Peter replied, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

But in spite of this begetting, when they saw their Lord and Master yield to arrest, suffer all manner of reproach, finally die upon Calvary and be laid away in the tomb, their faith died, too, and they returned to their old walks of life, that of fishing. Yet when convinced of the resurrection of Christ, they could shout the blessings and praises of God, who had begotten them again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. This incorruptible seed, the gospel, which is God's power to save; the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ, which are the Word of truth implanted in the hearts and minds of men, with obedience thereunto constitute a divine begetting to the spiritual life.

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3:1, 2.

In 1 John 5:1 we find this statement, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him." Now to believe that Jesus is the Christ means to believe that He is the seed of the woman that is to bruise the serpent's head, that He is the promised seed of Abraham, the antitypical Passover lamb, the antitypical manna, the smitten rock, the serpent lifted up, the child that is born, the son that is given, the One on whose shoulder the government will rest, the root and offspring of David, the long promised Messiah, who is to restore the kingdom to Israel and to reign over the house of Jacob forever and of whose kingdom there should be no end.

The Savior explained to Nicodemus that water birth must precede Spirit birth, both of which are absolutely essential to an inheritance in God's kingdom. This order of first hearing the Word of truth, the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, belief and obedience thereto in the waters of baptism, which is a type of burial and resurrection and the means whereby we put on Christ, was the practice of the apostolic church.

So when John states, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," he has reference to the begotten state, the embryonic condition, through which all of God's adopted sons must pass before reaching the Spirit birth, before becoming partakers of the divine nature, before mortality can be swallowed up of life. And the context shows that John has reference to this condition, for he concludes that "every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

Following the divine begetting, growth and development must take place: grow in grace and knowledge; add to your faith, virtue, and to virtue, knowledge; crucify the old man; walk after the Spirit, not after the flesh; be not conformed to the world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind; be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Then, after having complied with all these divine laws of adoption into God's family, we are exhorted by the Apostle Paul in Romans 8:23 to wait "for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Christ is the firstborn from the dead, "afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." Then the waiting for the full adoption into God's family will be ended; then the adopted sons of God can say, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Facts Concerning the Kingdom

By Rufus A. Curtis

"When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women."—Acts 8:12.

JESUS was anointed "to preach good tidings" (Isaiah 61:1). The "good tidings" that Jesus preached are termed "the gospel" (Luke 4:18). It is also termed "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God" (Luke 8:1). In Luke 4:43 "the kingdom of God" expresses the sum and substance of the gospel, which was preached before unto Abraham, which contemplates the blessing of "all nations" through "Abraham and his seed," "which is Christ" (Gal. 3:7-9, 16, 27-29). Jesus not only instructed the people concerning "the kingdom of God," but He commissioned "his twelve disciples" "to preach the kingdom of God," also (Luke 9:1, 2, 11).

The kingdom of God is of paramount importance to all things else; hence, the divine admonition, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:26-34. Even in these turbulent days of lawlessness and unemployment, the question of "What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" is of secondary importance to the needful preparation for an "entrance" "into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1:4-11; Acts 14:22).

God's call to us is "unto his kingdom and glory" (1 Thess. 2:12). We should "give diligence" to make our "calling and election sure" (2 Peter 1:10). This kingdom which the God of heaven will set up "shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."—Daniel 2:44.

This divine theocracy in the fullness of its manifestation will be neither ephemeral in character nor local in power, for God has said, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—Psalm 2:6-8; 89:34-36. This involves a post-resurrection event (Acts 13:30-33). "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."—Daniel 7:27.

There need be no mistaking the chronology of these marvelous events. It is when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ," who "shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11:15). Quoting again from the prophecy of Daniel, we read, "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Daniel 7:13, 14. This rulership of God's resurrected and anointed Son will extend "unto the ends of the earth" and include in its scope "all nations," until through His beneficent rule "the whole earth" will "be filled with his glory."

This exposition of the gospel, consisting of an analysis of the scriptures bearing upon the kingdom of God, is one of the few original contributions from Mr. Curtis, whose selections for the paper have long been of interest to its readers. The author's residence is 1825 First Avenue, Dayton, Ohio.

No amount of sophistry can make these "wondrous things" of prophecy find their fulfillment without the personal, visible, and premillennial coming of the absent Nobleman, who "went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return" (Psalm 72:18; 1 Thess. 4:16, 17; Acts 1:9-11; 2 Tim. 4:1, 7, 8; Luke 19:11-15).

As this kingdom will have "no end," transitory "flesh and blood" creatures, whose "life" is compared to "a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away," will necessarily have to "be born again" if they ever enter into that "Spirit" existence like their adorable Master, who now lives "after the power of an endless life" (1 Cor. 15:45-50; James 4:14; John 3:5, 6; Psalm 110:4-6; Heb. 7:15, 16). When earth's rightful ruler comes, He will make "wars to cease unto the end of the earth" (Psalm 46:6-10; Isa. 2:1-4). "Sorrow and sighing" will give place to "songs and everlasting joy" (Isa. 35:10; 25:7-9). He, whose omniscient eye can scan the interminable past and the limitless future, has declared, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Rev. 21:3, 4. "And there shall be no more curse."—Rev. 22:3.

In that blissful "regeneration," "when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory," He will say unto His faithful followers, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 19:28, 29; 25:34). Although numbered with "the poor of this world," I am an heir "to an inheritance" that is incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeless; which is "ready to be revealed in the last time" and includes in its marvelous scope God's "kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."

Brethren, "Rejoice evermore" (1 Thess. 5:16), for soon "thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty: they shall behold the land of far distances" (Isa. 38:17, 20-22, 24).

The Gospel of Resurrection

By C. E. Randall

THE hope of resurrection is a part of the "gospel of God" (Rom. 1:1). Through resurrection the goal of the "gospel of the grace of God" is realized (Acts 20:24). Resurrection is the only door through which those who have "fallen asleep in Christ" can ever enjoy the full blessings of the "gospel of your salvation" (Eph. 1:13; 1 Cor. 15:18). Resurrection makes possible the benefits of the "gospel of his Son" reaching all who have died in Adam, "for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (Rom. 1:9; 1 Cor. 15:22). Resurrection makes the "gospel of Jesus Christ" possible to the millions that have never heard it and have died but who some day will have opportunity to hear and be taught it (Mark 1:1; John 6:45). Resurrection gives life and hope to the "gospel of the kingdom," for it is only through resurrection that those who lived in faith and died in hope in ages past and all who have been felled by the enemy death can ever live to come from the "east and west, and sit down . . . in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 4:23; 8:11).

Resurrection is a "common salvation" that has been promised to all mankind; not that all peoples will be raised with the same type of life and body, but "as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life" (Rom. 5:18). The "justification of life" which is a "free gift" reaches out as far as the "offence . . . to condemnation." Ultimately, this "justification of life" from death caused by the Adamic offence will reach out until both "just and unjust," "small and great," yea, and the sea will give up her dead, and death and hell (margin, "grave"), also; and all will hear the voice of the Son of God (Acts 24:15; Rev. 20:12, 13).

Christ has the "keys of hell (grave) and of death," and the keys that open these prison houses of death are the resurrections, when all will be "made alive. But every man in his own order" (Rev. 1:18; 1 Cor. 15:22, 23). It is through resurrection that Christ will "ransom them from the power of the grave." It is through resurrection that Christ will redeem them from death. It is through resurrection that Christ becomes death's "plagues." It is through resurrection that Christ becomes the grave's "destruction" (Hosea 13:14).

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Have these "good tidings of great joy" reached "all people"? Will these "good tidings of great joy" reach all people? Will the millions of people made in the image of God and after His own likeness who have died because of Adam's transgression without ever hearing of these "good tidings" ever have the "great joy" of hearing about the "Saviour of all men"? Ah! the promise is here, what will become of it? Our God is a covenant and promise-keeping God, He will fulfill. We have our answer in resurrection. Oh glorious resurrection, the life-giving handiwork of God is our hope and stay! The resurrection is the only way through which the "grace of God" as evidenced in the death of Christ when He tasted "death for every man" can bestow its full blessing (Heb. 2:9).

The blessing promised through Abraham when God said, "And in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed," can only be fulfilled through resurrection. There are more families that have lived and died since this promise was made that have never heard of it than there are those that have been told. Resurrection overcomes this barrier (Gen. 12:3; Acts 3:25, 26).

Resurrection is necessary for rewards. "And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."—Luke 14:14. When we realize how all-important resurrection is, we shall join in chorus with Paul in saying, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—Phil. 3:11. It is easy to understand why he was willing to be "called in question" "touching the resurrection of the dead" (Acts 24:14, 15, 21). Paul could not understand why people should think it a thing incredible that God should raise the dead, and he stood ready to be accused and judged for his defense of the gospel of resurrection (Acts 26:6-8). The cause of his persecution was his espousal of the "hope and resurrection of the dead" (Acts 23:6).

The gospel of resurrection is a vital part of our message. The carrying out and fulfillment of God's plan and purpose is dependent on the "resurrection of the dead." The hope of the church rests in the resurrection. "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15:16-18.

OUR GOSPEL

By Gerald L. Cooper

SO MANY times we hear people ask the question, "But do you think that certain Scripture is for us? Wasn't it given to the Jews alone? Or wasn't it only for the apostles?"

For answers to these questions I would refer questioners to 2 Timothy 3:16: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." While there may be parts of the Scriptures that do not refer to us or to the times in which we live, either directly or indirectly, yet it is profitable for us to read for doctrine, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness. It is, then, our gospel. Let us see what it meant to the people of old and what it means to us.

The meaning of the word "gospel" is "good news." The first "good news" that we have record of in the Bible is found in Genesis 3:15: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." What is this good news? The promise of a Redeemer to destroy sin from the earth. This is the promise along with others that God's nation Israel had before Christ came to earth the first time. When He came, they did not realize it, for they were looking for some one with kingly splendor and great power to come and conquer their enemies. Enough believed, however, to form the nucleus of present Christianity. This Christianity, among true followers of it at least, has the same good news to buoy it up that the Jews had and have. We who attended the General Conference heard in a sermon there that one Jew said, "The Church of God believes much as we do. We are both looking for the coming of the Messiah."

The angels' song that was sung on that night some two thousand years ago is also a part of our "good news." "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke 2:14. To the Jews, some of whom heard this song, it meant no more oppression by other nations and being allowed to live their lives in peace. To us it means more, much more. Today we are living in a time of turmoil such as the world has never known, with no prospect of its being any better permanently. Especially is it hard for the Christian, for a true Christian business man will not condescend to the low methods involved in making money in business today. Neither is there good will among men. Peace on earth, and good will toward men! What a glorious promise!

It is our gospel! The promise of Jesus' early coming is our "good news." Pray for it to be soon, brethren, for then "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Rev. 21:4. What a glorious culmination to all our hopes!

THE GOSPEL MESSAGE OF JOHN 3:16

By R. H. Judd

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

THE verse I have chosen to consider is perhaps the best known gospel text in all Scripture. It is the basic gospel text with every section of evangelical Christendom. It is truly a wonderful text and has been instrumental in bringing blessing, not only to thousands, but to millions, of men and women. A little quiet study of the verse may reveal to us some of the reasons for its unquestioned popularity.

Probably the first point of interest is its attractive simplicity. There is no attempt at sublimity of language, though the importance of the subjects treated cannot be estimated. Its words are simple, everyday words of easy comprehension to the average mind, every one of them expressing the thought desired without any necessity whatever of seeking a substitute for making its meaning clear. It starts out, as the Book itself starts out, with definite assertion of the existence of God. "For God . . ."—"In the beginning God . . ."

On the authority of the Canadian Christian Crusade there are now sixteen million atheists organized for the express purpose of overthrowing the Bible and eliminating the memory of God from the earth. When their feeble efforts have ceased and they themselves are buried in the dust of the earth, God will still remain, for He is from everlasting to everlasting and His "years are without end."

The Book itself begins with the statement that "God created . . ." Our text begins with the equally striking statement that "God . . . loved . . ." Note the contrasts—"God created the earth . . ." "God loved the world . . ." We have proof abundant of the first, for "the heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork." That He could not have created a world of such boundless resources—seen and unseen—without love would seem to be a reasonable conjecture; but that it was not the "world" of mountains and valleys, flowing streams and majestic forests, of rolling seas and mirrored lakes, that drew forth from God Almighty the wonderful statement of the Creator's love may be gathered from the fact that the early account of creation, though remarkably brief, teems with detail concerning the atmosphere, the sun, moon, stars, birds, beasts, and fishes, and of shade trees, fruit trees, and the grasses of the field. Not one of these, nor all combined, were sufficient to draw forth the declaration that "God loved." It was the "world" of living men that God loved.

His wonderful works and His mighty acts give us some means of understanding His power and His might, but how can we comprehend His love? It is so incomprehensible to the human mind that it can only be understood by comparisons emphasized by the word "so." The statement that "God so loved the world" exemplifies this fact, for it intimates that there is a standard of measurement by which we may be brought another step nearer to "understanding and knowing" Him who is "the only true God" (Jer. 9:24; John 17:3). A further thought will make this clear and show us how every word in this wonderful verse is necessary that we may get its full significance.

Before considering the comparisons alluded to, let us add the next two or three words to those we have already noticed. We will underline these. "God so loved the world, that he gave . . ." Here is a fact well understood in human affairs, that true love always results in action, and its first spontaneous gesture is to give, and in giving to seek to give what will best represent the value of our affection toward the one to whom our gift is made. Then what did God give? He gave His only begotten Son.

This brings us to the point of our remarks with reference to comparisons. Here we have the relationships of parenthood and sonship brought in, and the full meaning of that little word "so" begins to dawn upon us: "God so loved the world, that he gave."

Many of the well known sayings of the world are trite with truth, but the one that states, "True love is blind," is wide of the mark. True love gives, as we have said, but it always gives of its best and gives with a purpose in view. Wonderful indeed are the facts of God's love for mankind and the gift of His only Son, but John 3:16 might as well never have been written had it stopped there. Thank God it did not. What, then, was the purpose? "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

I wonder if you have ever thought of these words just quoted as being equivalent to the statement that not anyone has eternal life, for "whosoever" includes every unit? If eternal life is offered to "whosoever" (and that includes me, and it includes you), then no one can be immortal, man's opinion to the contrary.

Again we ask, What, then, was the purpose? Again we reply, "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Can any purpose for mankind be greater? The great need of mankind is life, for in the midst of his days he is "cut off." "For thy pleasure they were and are created." But there will be a new creation in Christ Jesus.

The fond hope expressed by Zacharias that through the King who should follow his son Israel should be "delivered from the hand of our enemies" seemed now about to be realized, though later it was dashed to earth by the King's execution; so the disciples later sadly said to Him in their failure to recognize Him as they walked together to Emmaus, "We trusted that it should have been he which should have redeemed Israel." For David and Isaiah had promised that He would break the oppressor to pieces and espouse the cause of the poor and downtrodden.

The King had seemingly fed this hope by choosing twelve judges with a view to seating them on thrones over the twelve tribes when He should reign; and later He had appointed seventy, evidently to constitute the restored council of elders instituted under Moses. Thus He organized a completely restored government with Himself as King, and so He announced Himself in His gospel. But since He foretold His death, He knew He could not wear the crown till He should bear the cross, but His followers did not know this. The spirit of self-righteousness prevented them from seeing the Lamb of God for sin in Him who was prospectively also the Lion of the tribe of Judah. The Jews, also, said that they had heard out of the law that when Messiah should come He would abide forever as a reason for disbelieving His declaration that He would be lifted up on a cross.

But He knew, as written later of Him, that He appeared in the end of that age to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself and that before the glory that should follow lay the thorny path of the sufferings. So the secret of the date of the restoration of the kingdom must not then be divulged, for Paul says that if the rulers had known the secrets he was then writing to the Corinthians they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. To accomplish this sin offering He must offer Himself to Israel as their King and be rejected on Calvary. In doing this He must make His message a national offer, presenting Himself and His organized government to Israel officially, at the temple, and to the rulers.

But the kingdom gospel operated individually as well as nationally, for individuals accepted what He offered in His gospel when the nation rejected, and to them He gave the same individual blessings that would have come to the whole nation if they had accepted. To the sick He gave the same health that will be all Israel's nationally in the coming kingdom, and to bereaved ones He brought the comfort of resurrection life for their dead as He will in future give to the nation restored national life, as Ezekiel 37 promises. The riding of an unbroken colt and the stilling of the storm gave them temporary enjoyment of what will be permanent among the animal creatures and the peace of nature when He reigns without interruption by death.

Thus the miracles were a foretaste of the kingdom and samples of what then will be, and so made it at hand by making future kingdom conditions present. Therefore, He told the seventy to say to the people when they performed these miracles that the kingdom had come nigh unto them. For when the monarchy of Israel was in operation in the days of their kings, miracles were present. Hezekiah's sickness was healed, and the widow's son was raised. Elijah smote his enemies dead by word of mouth, as Peter also did to a couple later. Thus the miracles which attended monarchy were not lacking when He said the kingdom was at hand. So when He read the prediction of the Prophet in His home town in the public service in the synagogue, that He was sent to bind up the broken-hearted and comfort all that mourned, He said, "This day is this scripture fulfilled."

The same message also warned of the day of vengeance, to correspond with the judgment of the ungodly in the kingdom and with the miracles of judgment, such as the blinding of Elymas, the death of Ananias and Sapphira, and the cursing of the fig tree. It was not the kingdom that brought this comfort to the broken-hearted, but the King Himself, as a Savior present to them, a kingdom at hand because a King present.

The miracles called attention not so much to the future kingdom, but to the King then present. He was of preeminent importance. He told the Samaritan woman, "I am he," and the same to the man healed of blindness in Jerusalem. John says that all the signs written in his record are for the purpose that people should believe that Jesus is the Christ. The preaching of the gospel to the poor and the forgiveness of sins by the King are of greater benefit than the healing of disease or the feeding of the multitudes with loaves and fishes; so Paul emphasizes this forgiveness solely in Colossians 1:13, 14 when speaking of people then being translated into the kingdom. Mary exhibited this at the feast in Simon's house, showing the grateful love that follows forgiveness.

The kingdom was in the above sense so close at hand to them then that the King told a certain scribe that he was not far from the kingdom when he correctly comprehended the love just mentioned above. He also told the scribes and Pharisees that the publicans and sinners were entering the kingdom then, before they themselves did, and that all men were pressing into it. If the kingdom had not then come upon them in that sense, the scribes and Pharisees could not have shut it up against men and forbade those who were entering it to do so, as He said again. And if a concrete kingdom had not been among them, it could not have suffered violence by those who seized it by force, as He also said. In seizing John and beheading him they had done violence to the kingdom in the person of one of its officers, as they later did to the King Himself and the twelve judges whom He had chosen.

We cannot now properly preach the King's gospel because we cannot proclaim it at hand and make it so by miracles as He did and as He told the twelve and the seventy to do, and show that the kingdom had come upon the people then, as indicated by the miracles they did (Luke 11:20), but we can feast our hope on the prospect of the near return of the King to bring the kingdom permanently, not alone by miracles which temporarily made it present then and later vanished away, as Paul said in 1 Corinthians 13:8-10 that the miracles would cease, an imminent event when he wrote those words. This is the reason we cannot proclaim the kingdom at hand and make it present by miracles.

The error of claiming the power to perform some of the miracles, such as healing and tongues, and failing on some of the other miracles of mercy, such as stilling storms and raising the dead, becomes yet more manifest when we consider that the gospel of the kingdom at hand was accompanied by another form of kingdom signs, the miracles of judgment. When the kingdom comes in the future at the coming of the King, judgment will be inflicted upon the nations; so when the King and His officers proclaimed the kingdom present at His first advent and made its presence evident by bringing the merciful kingdom blessings of food, health, and life from the dead, they also made the judgment conditions of the kingdom present by the judgment miracles. The fig tree was smitten for fruitlessness, Elymas was blinded for blasphemously contradicting Paul's preaching, and Ananias and Sapphira were smitten dead, all three miracles by mere judicial pronouncement. For the same power of the Holy Spirit that could cure blindness and raise the dead in mercy could blind and kill in judgment.

The purpose of both classes of miracles was to confirm the gospel, prove the preaching true. The preaching said the kingdom was at hand; the miracles made the kingdom, in conditions, present. But most modern claimants of miracles do not even believe in the coming of the King and His kingdom; hence, the discrepancy between such claims and the scriptural relation of the miracles to the kingdom becomes manifest. No one should claim miracles without proclaiming the kingdom and also proclaiming it at hand, as they did then; and contrariwise, no one should proclaim the King's gospel of the kingdom present without the performance of the attendant miracles; and when miracles are claimed, the more difficult merciful ones of eye-opening and resurrection, and of judgment blinding and death, should be performed in evidence of the proclamation of the King's gospel, for mutually exclusive religious bodies both claim such easier ones as healing and tongues. When Jannes and Jambres counterfeited a few of the lesser miracles of Moses, he went on and worked some more difficult ones which the magi dared not follow in attempts at imitation. So if the true church can perform miracles, it will confute all false ones by more difficult works.

Though the hope of the establishment of the kingdom two thousand years ago vanished with the ceasing of the miraculous kingdom signs, the hope of its early coming with the return of the King is now a cheering prospect. Soon the void of hunger will be filled by Him who can multiply loaves and fishes; the pain of sickness will cease from the citizens of that holy land; the tears of bereavement will give place to the joy of reunion. The carnivorous beasts will live in amity with those which previously were their prey, and a little child will lead them forth in peace. The ransomed of the Lord will return to Zion singing when sorrow and sighing flee away forever. He who appeared once to put away sin by sacrifice will appear the second time to save unto them that look for Him. If we share with Him the fellowship of His sufferings, we shall with Him occupy His throne. Having borne His cross, we shall share His crown.

“FOR THE WAGES OF SIN IS DEATH; BUT THE GIFT OF GOD IS ETERNAL LIFE, THROUGH JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD.”—ROMANS 6:23.

HOW TO STUDY THE GOSPEL

IN AN ISSUE of THE RESTITUTION HERALD that is devoted especially to articles on the gospel of the kingdom of God it is only right that some mention should be made of the best ways for studying that gospel. Undirected or un-systematic Bible study is always of some benefit; but it is obvious that, particularly for the beginner, some outlined course of study is the best.

With this idea in mind the authors of the lesson books published by the National Berean Society put forth every effort to keep their lessons in exact harmony with the Bible and to have them teach the essential elements of the gospel taught by the Christ. How well they succeeded in their purpose is amply testified by the growth of Berean societies and the large independent use that is being made of the books by Sunday schools and individuals.

The new series of senior books is especially designed for the study of the gospel; indeed, the first volume of the series is entitled, The Gospel Plan, and furnishes an outline of the things that must be believed before salvation can be obtained. The following books, Life and Immortality and God's Kingdom (the latter of which will be off the press within a few weeks), take up phases of the gospel for exhaustive study.

All three of these books constitute an excellent theology for the Church of God, being composed altogether of lessons on the truths set forth by that body. Each of the volumes would be beneficial for subject study by any student, whether experienced or inexperienced, young or old.

Any one of the volumes of this series may be obtained by addressing the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois. Their price is 25 cents a single copy, 22 cents a copy for 5 to 24, 20 cents a copy for 25 or more; all books are sent postpaid immediately upon receipt of an order. Information regarding other publications, including free tracts, will be supplied gladly.

But the National Berean Society, feeling that not even these lessons will be of the greatest possible benefit unassisted, has not stopped with the publication of books. It has also provided committees for the direction of those who wish to study the Berean outlines under supervision of expert teachers.

Two such committees have been created: the junior section, which works with those under fourteen; and the senior section, which works with those older than fourteen.

Mrs. Virginia R. Kincheloe, Box 33, Fairfax, Virginia, is in charge of the former committee; Miss Verna Himmelright, 206 South MacDonald Street, Attica, Indiana, controls the senior section. Either chairman would be very glad to hear from anyone interested in such work.

IOWA BEREANS

AN INTERESTING communication comes from Sister Blanche Harland concerning the Berean work at Waterloo and Cedar Falls reading as follows:

The Waterloo-Cedar Falls Berean Society held their annual election on September 10. The following officers were chosen: president, Ronald Howe, 1036 Newton St., Waterloo; vice president, Mrs. J. L. Harland, 1118 Rainbow Dr., Cedar Falls; secretary and treasurer, Miss Ferne Moore, 200 Norwood St., Waterloo.

The society decided to have three classes this year if possible. In the adult class the members take turns leading, the leader being appointed each time by the Berean president. The young people's class is under the leadership of Mrs. J. L. Harland, but some of the lessons are led by members of the class. The junior Berean class is taught by Alta King.

SUBMISSION

O Lord, my best desire fulfill,
And help me to resign
Life, health, and comfort to Thy will,
And make Thy pleasures mine.

Why should I shrink at Thy command,
Whose love forbids my fears?
Or tremble at the gracious hand
That wipes away my tears?

No, rather let me freely yield
What most I prize to Thee;
Who never hast a good withheld,
Or wilt withhold, from me.

Thy favor, all my journey through,
Thou art engaged to grant;
What else I want, or think I do,
'Tis better still to want.

"Come over into Macedonia and help us."

CARRYING THE LIGHT TO EUROPE

You boys and girls who like stories of adventure can find no more thrilling ones than those that happened to the Apostle Paul. If you like stories of the sea, storms, and shipwreck, you will want to read how Paul was saved from death in the waves; if you like tales of the overland trail, you will hold your breath while you follow Paul through mountain passes into the wild interior. In all the books in your school library you'll not find one more absorbing. And best of all, the stories of Paul's adventures are true, every one of them! There is no make-believe about them.

One night, as Paul and his new helper, Silas, lay asleep, Paul had a dream. And the dream seemed so real to him that after he awoke he couldn't believe it was only a dream. They were now over on the west coast of Asia Minor, a long way from home, and they expected to visit many more places in that neighborhood.

But in his dream Paul heard a man calling to him to come over into Europe and preach the gospel. Paul and Silas hadn't thought of going out of Asia into Europe, and so we know it was God who sent that dream to Paul. Just think of being the first person to carry the light of the gospel into Europe! That's what Paul did, for we read that immediately they planned to go.

"Immediately" says a lot, doesn't it? It tells us one of the most important things about Paul. Are you an "immediately" person? Or are you an "after awhile" person? Remember, the "immediately" person is the one who amounts to something when he grows up.

Who do you think was the first person in Europe to accept Jesus? Why, it was a woman; she was a business woman, and her name was Lydia. We read that she sold "purple," and that means the very finest of material, the kind from which the kings' and queens' robes were made. So it was probable she was wealthy; and after she and her family were baptized, she invited Paul and Silas to come and make her house their home. We know Paul and Silas had a comfortable home at least while they were in Philippi—except one night which they spent, where do you think?

If you like stories which make you hold your breath, read what happened that night. In Acts 16:22-34 you will find the story. Who do you suppose sent the earthquake?

And who was it gave Paul and Silas courage to sing under such painful conditions? In a letter Paul afterward wrote to the church he started in that city, he said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." He most likely was thinking of the night he spent in prison there, for one thing.

Soon after this they left Philippi and went to Thessalonica, where the envious Jews wouldn't let them preach in peace. And so Paul and Silas had to leave at night secretly in order to preserve their lives. They came to a city whose name is well known to all our boys and girls and young people—Berea. Many of you have memorized that verse in Acts 17 which describes the Bereans.

Notice that it says in verses 11 and 12 the Bereans heard Paul preach the gospel; then they studied their Bibles to see if he was telling them the truth; and then, when they found that he was, they believed. A good plan to follow, don't you think? And now we'll leave Paul at Berea for today.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

First, the number and subject of the lesson and the golden text. Next, the little map. Draw the shore line of the Mediterranean Sea as before and continue it up around the west coast of Asia Minor. There you have the Aegean Sea, between Asia and Europe. Find the city of Troas on your Bible map and locate it on your own map, writing "vision" under it.

Now draw the shore line of Macedonia, and locate Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea. Connect these places with colored pencil. Paul stopped for just a brief time at a couple of other places near these, but we will not locate them.

Then write the story of the night in prison; make it just as real as you can. Draw little pictures to illustrate it. Don't forget about the jailer washing the bruises he had made on Paul's back. That showed he was really converted, didn't it?

Draw a picture of the people of Berea studying their Bibles and write underneath the words of Psalm 119:105. Paste in any pictures you may have showing Paul at one of these places.

"I like to think when day is done
And toil begins to cease,
That I have tried to do my part
In bringing others peace."

PAUL IN MACEDONIA

Acts 15:36 to 17:15

Devotional Reading: Matthew 5:10-16

GOLDEN TEXT

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.—Acts 16:31.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul in Macedonia.

Aim: To show that every opportunity should be embraced to preach the gospel.

I. Paul Sees a Vision of Need. (Acts 16: 9, 10.) The call to Christian service does not often come in the form of a vision as it did in the case of Paul. It more frequently reaches us through our recognition of the need of all men for the Lord Jesus Christ and the gospel of which He was the heart. Probably no Gentile or Jew in all Macedonia was actually at that time praying or consciously desiring the coming of some one to teach him the way of life; but God saw the need and sent Paul the vision, and he immediately responded to the appeal.

II. Paul Teaches Beside a River. (Acts 16:11-15.) Paul had given himself wholly to the Lord. His body, with the strength of all its members; his mind and heart, with their faculties, affection, and powers; his entire life, with all its hours, days, and years, all had been consecrated to God's service through Jesus Christ. Therefore, wherever he found himself and whatever the time might be and to whomsoever he might be with, he taught the joyful message of salvation through faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Wherever men and women met for prayer, for business, or for pleasure, Paul, also, was there preaching the Word!

III. Paul Preaches in a Jail. (Acts 16:16-31.) Paul and Silas probably held the first "jail meeting" in history. In spite of the fact that they had been beaten with many stripes and cast into the dungeon of the inner prison because they had cured a poor demented woman and deprived her masters of the profit they had gained from her deceitful claims, these men of God did not cease their ministry for Christ, nor did they show the least anger toward their persecutors. On the other hand they "sang praises unto God," voluntarily remained in prison when they might have escaped, and gladly led their jailor into fulness of faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ!

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Desire: How many have planned the course of their lives only to have it frustrated at every turn! The young woman who plans a career as a pianist may find herself at twenty-five with one arm hopelessly crippled from arthritis. The young man who plans for a life's work in surgery finds before the end of the first year's study that his eyes are growing dim. Picture Paul and his party as they worked their way eastward in Galatia planning to penetrate the Asian provinces to carry the Word. What turned them back we do not know, except that it was God's leading.

Their next plan would lead them into Bithynia. But again "man proposes and God disposes," for they followed a westward way.

To say that "if we want a thing enough we can accomplish it" shows a lack of faith in God's guidance. For God has unmistakably changed the course of men's lives at times. The young woman may feel that she could devote her musical talent to church service. The young medical student may have an earnest desire to save lives. Why, then, should obstacles be placed in their way?

Realization: Paul accepted the vision as a suggestion that God had work for him in the colonies to the west, and the promptness with which he set out is mute testimony of his earnest purpose to serve God. How often two courses of action which seem to us to be equally right give us pause! As surely as we pray and keep ourselves in a willing frame of mind, God will eventually open the way to the thing that will bring the greatest blessing to His work. Had Paul gone into Asia in spite of the obstacles, perhaps we would not now be studying his history and epistles. If we continue to kick against the pricks, the realization of our ideals will be only ashes. If we make God's way our way, the realization will be contentment in this life and a crown in the life to come.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

Wherever Paul went, he preached the gospel; therefore, when the jailor asked, "What must I do to be saved?" Paul was ready with the answer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." But that was not all, belief was followed by baptism. When one really believes, he is moved to repentance and baptism, then a holy life. This is the Christian life.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." The Christian life is the only true life, for it brings joy in this life and in the world to come life everlasting.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

The Gospel and World Peace

It is generally believed that God gave the gospel to the world so that it would receive, among other things, world peace in this age. This is not the teaching of Scripture. True, Jesus did say: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." Here He was not speaking of peace as opposite to war but rather of "peace with God." Rom. 5:1. This is evident from His next remark: "Not as the world giveth, give I unto you."—John 14:27.

On the contrary Jesus said: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword."—Matt. 10:34.

The purpose of the gospel in this age is not world peace or the establishment of God's kingdom on the earth, but rather to take out from among the Gentiles a people for God's name. Acts 15:14. The Israelites and the Gentiles killed the Prince of peace, then refused to repent, and thus forced Jesus to delay the day of universal peace.

When Jesus comes again, "he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Isa. 2:4. All of this is to be accomplished when the nations are rebuked by Him who rules from Jerusalem. "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."—V. 3.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATES

Finding and Following God's Way

Paul was not content that merely the people of Asia should learn about his blessed Lord, but he longed to preach in other lands, also. And God wanted him to go still farther, too, for in this lesson He sends him a call in his dreams. Paul and Silas found a new helper on this trip, one who was young and energetic, who had had good training in childhood (Acts 16:1). How fine for a young man to be chosen to assist an older one in doing God's work! This was such a great work—bringing the gospel of God's love to people who had never heard of it. Wouldn't you find joy in teaching the gospel to one who had never heard of Jesus? Just what does it mean to teach the gospel? What did Jesus teach when He taught the gospel (Matt. 4:23; Mark 1:14; Luke 4:43)? Find out all you can about that kingdom. That will be God's way of bringing joy to the people of earth. We are sure that is what Paul taught the people of Europe, for he wrote about it in his letters to them—the book of Philippians, 1 and 2 Corinthians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, etc. The teacher should assign two pupils to tell the story of the slave girl and of Paul and Silas in jail; several others to look through Paul's letters and find references to the resurrection, the coming of Christ, and the blessings that He will bring. Learn 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17.

Trace on your map Paul's second missionary trip, starting from Antioch in Syria overland to Derbe, Lystra, Iconium; over the provinces of Phrygia and Galatia to Troas; by water to Neapolis, Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea. Next Sunday we find Paul at Athens.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

Beginning with November our preaching service will be on first and third Sundays of each month instead of second and fourth.

Our next service will be November 5. A welcome awaits you.

F. A. Stilson, Pastor.

STORM LAKE, IOWA

A card from Anna Boyanovsky announces that two sermons are to be delivered at the residence of Anna Fales at Storm Lake, Iowa, on Sunday, November 5. The hours of the services and the speaker are not named, but further information can be obtained by addressing Mrs. Boyanovsky at Marathon, Iowa. All in the vicinity who can attend are urged to do so.

KANSAS - OKLAHOMA

The Kansas-Oklahoma Annual Meeting at Arkansas City began on October 8 in the new church building.

The interior of our church is unfinished yet. The church brethren, by hard work, made it very comfortable for our meeting. One dear sister donated the material for the ceiling and willing hands put it on. Other dear ones donated the money to put in the wiring, others the fixtures inside and out. Seats were rented to seat the church, also a pulpit; and at the last moment two gas stoves in the basement were connected, and we had heat in all the building the following week.

But even though there were handicaps this time, we all feel amply repaid in having this meeting and having Bro. Sydney Magaw of Tippecanoe City, Ohio, with us again. He brought us many messages of divine truth. We will have this spiritual food to feast on in the days to come, helping and strengthening us.

There were two baptisms: Bro. Raymond Werneke and Bro. Bert Smith accepted and obeyed the gospel call and were buried with Christ in baptism Friday afternoon, October 20, in the beautiful Walnut River.

The meeting closed Sunday night following communion service. Bro. Magaw and party started on their homeward journey Monday morning, and we trust it was safely made and that God's richest blessing may attend them all in their work of love for the Master.

Sr. Lorena Waters Southard has had a backset and is very sick yet. Pneumonia was at first thought to be the cause, but now it is thought to be of a different nature.

Bro. Waters and family need your prayers. They have passed through deep afflictions the past year. Sr. Waters passed away September 26 just after our conference closed last year; and his daughter, who keeps house for him, has been ill for about four weeks. Their address is Newkirk, Oklahoma.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin, Secretary.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Wm. M. Huffer; Mrs. Page Mills; Miss Anna E. Drew; R. L. Funk; Miss Alma Brandt (for self and another); Mrs. J. Hoffman; Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Cook; Miss Effie Harris; Mrs. Mae Mick (for another); R. A. Humphreys; Miss Abbie H. Fiske; H. H. Stebbins; Mrs. A. M. Scroggs; S. T. Shirley; Mrs. Allen Claypool; Mrs. Alice Williams.

NIAGARA FALLS - FONTHILL

The annual Fall Meeting of the Blessed Hope Church of God was held Sunday, October 29. No services were held at Fonthill, Ontario, on that date. Adna E. Hoskins of St. Cloud, Minnesota, who, with C. E. Randall, the regular pastor for the district, has been conducting a series of meetings in a hall at Welland, Ontario, was the outside speaker.

The program for the occasion as released on October 20 follows: 10:00 a. m., Sunday school; 11:00 a. m., A. E. Hoskins, speaker; 12:00 noon, dinner; 2:30 p. m., C. E. Randall, speaker; 3:30 p. m., communion; 5:30 p. m., supper; 7:30 p. m., A. E. Hoskins, speaker. No sermon subjects were announced in the church bulletin. All meals were served in the church, cafeteria style.

On Sunday, October 15, the entire Gardiner family and Janet Nicholson of Lancaster, New York, attended services held at the Niagara Falls church. They were expecting to return for the Fall Meeting.

The pastor of the two churches has moved into another residence at Fonthill.

Adna E. Hoskins filled the local pulpits during October. His messages, according to all reports, "were greatly enjoyed."

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The pastor regrets very much having been away from home when the car load including Bro. and Sr. Hammond of California and Bro. Smead of Blanchard, Mich., stopped on the 24th. We are thankful, though, that Bro. Smead will be with us for the daytime part of our anniversary Sunday, returning to Blanchard for the evening meeting.

Our church at a business meeting Oct. 24 adopted a "moral code," which will be found in the next issue of The Herald. We trust that this code will be of value in giving a frankly stated position on the points involved, so that all teachers and workers will have a uniform footing on which to stand.

We are thankful that many of our people have been privileged to attend the Century of Progress at Chicago throughout the summer and fall. Some of the most recent families to attend have been the Townsends; Brandons; Halls; and Bro. James Cole, who attended while returning from taking his family to Rockford, Ill., for a visit.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MARSHALL, ILLINOIS

During the past summer it has been the writer's privilege to act as pastor for the Salem Church near Marshall. Services have been held the second and fourth Sundays of each month and if weather and roads permit will continue throughout November.

Splendid interest and attendance have been manifested at all services, especially the Sunday evening service. The attendance on the evening of October 22 totaled more than 100, of whom more than half were young people. It is really gratifying to see this fine attendance, and we sincerely hope that it will continue.

"PRESENT CONDITIONS IN THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY"

Such is the title of a timely little work by Elder J. H. Anderson on the "Cause and the Remedy" of present world-wide distress and perplexity. It is a booklet of 24 pages, envelope size, that is priced at ten cents per copy, postpaid. It may be secured from the author, J. H. Anderson, Michigantown, Indiana.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

In order to give the space to articles on the gospel we are omitting "Abreast of the Times" from this number.

Mrs. Emma O'Byrne of Golden Rule Home celebrated her 89th birthday last Thursday, at which time the missionary society of the M. E. church, of which she has long been a member, gathered with the Home family to offer their congratulations and best wishes.

"I think there are wonderful articles appearing in The Restitution Herald," writes Mrs. James Prime of Omaha, "and we enjoy the paper very much and look forward to receiving it on Thursday."

In your study of the gospel number of The Herald, do not forget that the National Berean Society sells the Bible lesson book, "The Gospel Plan." The price is 25 cents a single copy, 22 cents a copy for 5 to 24, and 20 cents a copy in larger quantities, all postpaid. Orders will be filled promptly.

The editor joins with our readers in expressing his gratitude to our splendid corps of writers who have made this special issue possible. Some articles are of such length that it has been necessary to continue them in our next number, and others have been condensed (much against our desire) just a little to fit them into the limited space of the paper.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

anointed Son came to preach? Jesus answered the question when He read Isaiah's words, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel." That Jesus fulfilled the mission for which He was anointed is proved by the testimony of His apostles. Mark 1:14 reads, "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." Matthew 4:23 reads, "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Matthew 9:35 reads, "And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Thus we learn that the motive that prompted Jesus to preach to the multitude who gladly listened was His desire to present to them the good news of the kingdom. Indeed, He could not have given them any better news, for it is recorded that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:27). In this prophecy the kingdom is located on earth, not in heaven, neither in the hearts of men. It is to be an everlasting kingdom.

The Prophet Isaiah gives a brief account of Jesus' work: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."—Isa. 9:6, 7. There can be no greater nor firmer assurance that Isaiah's prediction will be fulfilled than that the Lord of hosts will seat His Son on David's throne to rule in peace and with righteous judgment and unerring justice forever.

That the kingdom of God was the subject of Christ's preaching is evident from His own words, "He said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent."—Luke 4:43. He was commissioned or ordained by His Father to preach the gospel. The record shows that He faithfully and fearlessly fulfilled His mission.

Christ's mission was to preach the gospel and to save His people from their sins. In speaking to Joseph concerning the birth of Jesus the angel said, "Thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1:21. If Jesus will save His people from their sins, it is evident He must do it through the preaching of the gospel. In His first sermon He "came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark 1:14, 15. He thus made it necessary that people should believe the gospel, and repent.

That Christ considered preaching the gospel of the kingdom of the greatest importance was shown when He said to His apostles, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness."—Matt. 6:33. Seek the kingdom in preference to all worldly goods such as food, raiment, and shelter. He meant that they should be devoted wholly to God's service and not let covetousness or anxiety divert their attention or divide their services, thereby teaching that if we gain the whole world and fail in gaining an entrance into the kingdom we shall be poor indeed. A thousand worlds sink into utter insignificance when compared with "the eternal weight of glory" to be realized in the kingdom.

After Christ was raised from among the dead to die no more, He spent the last forty days He was with His apostles in instructing them in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God (Acts 1:3). When He directed them to the ministry of the gospel, He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

James spoke of the gospel of the kingdom as the only hope of his poor oppressed brethren. He said, "Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"—James 2:5. The most valuable inheritance to which a Christian can become an heir is the kingdom. An heir is not a possessor, but is an expectant possessor. (Concluded next week)

GOOD NEWS

By George B. Alldridge

"Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."—Luke 2:10.

DURING these days of the depression people of every country and clime are yearning for good news. Preachers and writers are telling doleful stories of coming events, emphasizing the righteous judgments of God soon to be visited upon the inhabitants of the earth. This is proper and in harmony with the teachings of Christ, the prophets, and the apostles. I recall Acts 24:25, "And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee."

We all remember that when that great heart, John the Baptist, lay confined in his lonely dungeon in the prison of the gloomy castle of Fort Machaerus he had no hope but in Jesus.

John's influence as a preacher was so great that we read, "Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judaea, and all the region round about Jordan." In introducing Jesus to these immense crowds, John said, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."—Matt. 3:5, 12. In Luke 3:9 we read, "And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire."

There is no question but that John was filled with the Holy Spirit even from his birth (Luke 1:15), so his utterances were always inspired by the Holy Spirit. Yet we read in Matthew 11:2, 3, "Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?"

There are some characters in the Bible that just fascinate me. John the Baptist is one. So faithfully and loyally to God he delivered his message! But this One whom he introduced as "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world": where was the fan in His hand, where was the axe that was to fell the trees of unrighteousness, and where was the unquenchable fire? Jesus had heard John tell all this; so John, so dear in the sight of God, gave way and said, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?"

Now listen to Jesus' reply and let these words burn themselves into your soul as they did into John when his disciples reported Jesus' answer. "Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended

John was well acquainted with the history of his people, as were also Paul and Stephen. They knew God in His power of justice, the mighty God of battles in destroying nations and even empires, dethroning wickedness in high places. Even Jesus said upon one occasion, "Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets. Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?"—Matt. 23:31-33.

God has always been longing ever since He created man for man to understand Him as a God of love. So in His beloved Son Jesus God revealed Himself. Through human flesh He revealed to us the very essence of God Himself, which is, as John says, love. I like to read Hebrews 2:16-18: "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted."

What is the good news of the gospel in a nutshell? Here it is, so simple, so plain, and the need of every man: "For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—Luke 9:56.

What constitutes men's lives? Josiah Strong says, "Superfluity on the one hand, and dire want on the other—the millionaire and the tramp—are the complements each of the other." The one who is rich needs the saving of his life equally with the one living in abject poverty. "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

Before Jesus was born, His mother Mary announced His mission. "He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree. He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away."—Luke 1:52, 53. Proving how God was with His Son, by a strange coincidence the first text Jesus preached from actually verified this prophecy of His mother, uttered before His birth! "And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it is written, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

Remember Our Forgotten Man

By Arlen Marsh

ALTHOUGH few members of the Church of God are aware of the fact, the debt owed by them to an almost forgotten religious leader is an enormous one. Upon the shoulders of James Arminius (the Latinized spelling of the original Dutch Hermanns) rests the responsibility for systematizing the biblical evidence concerning the much discussed problem of divine predestination. Calvin's work was copied frankly from Augustine; and Augustine, in this as in many other matters, had evolved an abstruse theory in order to reconcile his personal opinions with the obvious statements in the Bible.

The science of logic is too frequently ignored in the teaching of Christianity, but Arminius, stirred to a righteous indignation by the mighty onslaughts of the Calvinists, determined to establish the scriptural evidence that predestination of men's acts was not a fact. With this thought in mind, he devoted a considerable share of his life, which extended from 1560 to 1609, to an effort to correlate the texts bearing on man's free agency and to uncovering the fallacy of the conclusion that God had selected definite men for salvation regardless of their individual characters.

These opinions held by Arminius were radically opposed to those expressed by Calvin in his famous assertion that "from all eternity God chose or elected some men—certain definite persons of the human race—to everlasting life; that He decreed or determined certainly and infallibly, and not conditionally and mutably, to bring those persons to salvation by a Redeemer; that in making this selection of some men, and in decreeing to save them, He was not influenced or determined by anything existing in them or foreseen in them—such as faith or good works—by which they were distinguished from other men, or by anything out of Himself, or by any reason known to us or comprehensible by us; and that this eternal purpose or decree He certainly

This brief monograph, with its companion exposition by R. H. Judd, provides an exposition of a subject that has aroused much discussion among all religious groups and for which men have fought and died. Arminius, forgotten man of Christianity, is here brought to public attention as the successful expounder of a doctrine considered by many to be one of the most important teachings of the Bible.

and infallibly executes, in regard to each and every one included under it; while all the rest of men not thus elected He decreed to pass by,—to leave in their natural state of sin and misery, and finally to punish eternally for their sin."

Contrary to the hypothesis laid down by the eminent Calvin, Arminius' theory was that

"God has from eternity decreed to give eternal life to as many as repent and believe, and foreseeing who shall repent and believe He has determined to give life to these. The 'peremptory' election of individuals to life eternal proceeds only on the foreknowledge of their faith and obedience, so that, as the Remonstrants explicitly affirmed, the decree proper in predestination is that decree by which it is determined on what grounds or conditions God assigns sinners to salvation." (Marcus Dods, D. D., Encyclopedia Britannica.)

Obviously these two conclusions differ most decidedly, although both are based upon the conviction that Jehovah rules among men. On the one hand is the belief that God forces men to perform each act of their lives, whether it be evil or good; on the other hand is the idea that God leaves men open to choose between good and evil, ordaining only that those who voluntarily seek the good and abide by it will be granted eternal life. It is this last thought to which the Church of God clings and which, indeed, is expressly taught by the Bible.

Proceeding on the foundations laid by Arminius, it becomes easily apparent that God has at no time in history controlled the acts of men to the point of dictating whether or not they shall do certain things or not do them. Various circumstances have been allowed to come into existence which influence men's activities, but they have come into existence as the result of natural causes. The contention that Jehovah's love has established that specific men will be saved while others will be (Please turn to Page Eight)

I THANK THEE, LORD

God, You have given me beauty
 In flowers and shrubs and trees,
 In music of running waters,
 In brawling of honeybees,
 And so, as I turn the furrow
 Or labor with scythe and hoe,
 In silence I am adoring
 The glory the angels know.

God, You have given me kindness
 In harvests of golden grain,
 In Jesus, whose hands are solace
 For dreams that are dreamed in vain,
 And so, in my humble toiling
 From dawn till the shadows start,
 I silently lift to heaven
 The gift of a thankful heart.

A NEW POINT OF EMPHASIS

FROM the beginning of its denominational history the Church of God has been aggressively protestant in its method. That is, it has waged a relentless warfare of protest against religious error, and especially against such teaching as was found to be opposed to the great principles of truth for which it stood.

Believing the gospel to consist essentially of the things concerning the kingdom of God to be established when the Lord comes, it gave particular attention to His coming and to the nature and location of the kingdom over which He was destined to rule. Thoroughly convinced it was to be on the earth, the church consistently taught that to deny that fact was to deny the gospel. And for this reason it continued to protest earnestly against the teaching that the eternal abode of the saints was to be in heaven.

This belief concerning the place of future reward and blessing led to another difference of faith between the Church of God and other religious bodies. Resting its conviction on the plain teaching of Scripture that "the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," the church rightly contended that belief in the inherent immortality of the soul was unscriptural and also inconsistent with the thought that the earth was to be the eternal home of the saved. Therefore, it protested vigorously against the generally accepted fallacy that the righteous go to heaven and the wicked to a hell of literal fire at death. Both good and bad, contended the Church of God, must await the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead for final judgment.

Upon these two cardinal principles, the kingdom on earth, and life only through Christ and a resurrection from the dead, rested many other important and interesting facts of revelation, such as the regathering of Israel, the restitution, the new heaven and the new earth, and kindred promises of grace and glory to follow the Lord's return.

All doctrine contrary to its own teaching it combated as vigorously as it advocated and defended what it believed. It is seen, then, that the Church of God devoted almost, if not quite, as much effort to the overcoming of error as it gave to the proclamation of truth. Its opposers on the field of religious controversy followed the same tactics. Each denomination advocated and strenuously defended its own tenets and sought to undermine and disprove from the Scriptures the contrary teaching of all others. And in every instance the Bible was the final court of appeal.

This situation, however, no longer obtains in the religious world. Many ideas most tenaciously held in the past have been quite generally discarded or have been made ineffective through disuse. So few and so indifferent are the advocates of the old ideas of heaven and hell and the immortality of the soul that it seems almost a waste of time to devote much effort to attacks upon them.

But with the withdrawal of these unscriptural doctrines from the field another champion of error challenges our courage and faith. It is the rapidly growing group within the churches which denies the inspiration of the Bible. Here is a foeman-worthy of our steel! He is armed with the test tubes of science, with the sophistry of philosophy, with all the accouterments of the modernist bent on the overthrow of the miraculous in all its forms! Here, we declare, should be our new place of attack! The integrity of the Bible should be our new point of emphasis! Here we should place our heaviest shells of truth and of argument, for on the truth of the Bible rests the entire superstructure of our faith.

The Fruit of Thought

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

"I hate vain thoughts: but thy law do I love."—Psalm 119:113.

DID you ever realize while thinking that your thoughts might eventually be actions? Actions are the product of thought. Thought not only produces actions, but it makes character and forms personality. When we think good thoughts, our character is built up and made better; but when we think bad thoughts, the reverse is done.

Psychologists tell us that if we think of pleasant things our thoughts will tend to make for us pleasing personalities. If we think of our work all of the time and brood over the unpleasantness of our labors, we are bound to be weary. On the other hand, if we sing (whether we can sing or not) and think of the joys of life and the blessings from the Lord, we will not be so tired when the day is ended.

Thoughts have a great influence on all of us. When a man continually thinks of how he can get even with one who has harmed him, his natural tendency is to become cruel and heartless. If one dwelt on such things too long, he might go to almost any means to avenge.

There is another line of thought that we often follow. It is when there is impending danger, and we think of all the things that might happen to us or some one else. This is called worry. Now to think requires nerve energy; and if we use too much energy worrying, we will not have enough to meet the difficulty or danger when it does come. So we see it is very important that we direct our thinking on the proper things. Of course, it is easy for me to write this and tell you just how and what to do; but I am trying to follow this advice, too.

Jesus knew all that the psychologists of today know about thoughts. Our Savior implied that thoughts were almost the same as actions when He was giving His wonderful sermon on the mountain side. Jesus told the people that they had heard it said that they should not kill and whosoever would kill would be in danger of the judgment; but He said to them: "Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment."—Matt. 5:22. Some people think that is an unfair way of looking at things, but Jesus knew that thoughts produce actions and that it is not always the fault of the thought that the action is not produced.

Suppose a man intended to murder his neighbor, but this neighbor moved far away before he had the opportunity to kill him. Would not this man be a murderer at heart since it was not his fault his neighbor escaped? Surely the thought would have become the sinful deed.

David was a servant of God who thought upon things that build character. Though David was a sinner, yet he probably was not so sinful as you and I would be if we had some of the temptations David had. We know that David meant well, because we have many of his thoughts in the Psalms. We also have God's testimony concerning him: "I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart."—Acts 13:22.

The first Psalm is a striking example of good thoughts. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." Just think what a blessed land this would be to live in if all men had their delight in the law of the Lord and thought about it every day.

David knew the advantages of thinking of the proper things. He said, "I will remember the works of the Lord: surely I will remember thy wonders of old. I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings."—Psalm 77:11, 12. David really felt his religion and meditated much on God's works. The eighth Psalm is an example of that meditation: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" Thoughts such as these will make one humble before his Creator. When we remember God's great works and all that He has done for us, our character is molded and fashioned in a way that is pleasing to God.

The beloved Apostle Paul concludes the lesson on thought in his letter to the Philippian brethren. "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure,

A Psalm

Lord, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle?
Who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

He that walketh uprightly,
And worketh righteousness,
And speaketh truth in his heart.

He that slandereth not with his tongue,
Nor doeth evil to his friend,
Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour.

In whose eyes a reprobate is despised;
But he honoureth them that fear the Lord.

He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.
He that putteth not out his money to usury,
Nor taketh reward against the innocent.

He that doeth these things shall never be moved.
—Modern Readers Bible.

whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:8. Oh! that we might all think on these things, and we would have no time to think on things that are not good to think on!

If these few words inspire just one person to think on the things that build character and produce good conduct, I shall be exceedingly happy, for happy is he whose efforts are not in vain.

With the help of our Savior let us think on the things that are true and honest and pure, and may the meditation of our hearts be acceptable in the sight of our Lord,

The Mystery of Life

By Brayton E. Crandall

ONE of the commonest things in the world is life, and yet it is one of the most mysterious things. It appears to me that a mystery can be nothing more or less than the plain admission that we lack the understanding of an existing fact.

I wish to recall to your mind the account of a man who but a few years past desired to peek through the curtains of the future. This he hoped to do by administering to his body an anaesthetic with an apparatus especially designed for that purpose. It was possible by automatic control for him to administer one drop more each day. At last the final drop came. He has not been back to tell us what he saw as he hoped to do. Had this man acquainted himself with the divine law of God concerning man and believed it, he would have known the results of such efforts.

Imagine, if you can, the degree of eyesight a man must possess if he were to peer down through the grave, up the other side unto the resurrection and the day of judgment, down through the thousand year reign of our Lord, and so on. Read Revelation 20 and 21.

It is evident that life had become a mystery to this man not only in this world, but also in the one to come. We remember Paul's words recorded in 1 Corinthians 1:20 that God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise.

Taking up the subject of life, we read in the first chapter and second verse of Genesis that the world was without form and void in the beginning. Thus it was that it must be formed and inhabited with life. But from whence came this life? If these words are untrue, then there is but one thing left for us to believe. Has it always been as we find it today? Again this idea would be contrary to the law of standards. For understanding has taught that each performance of past and present has a beginning.

Thus we are convinced that somewhere there was a beginning of life. Shall we welcome the idea that life sprang up from dead organic matter without any apparent cause? Not even is this true in our present day with plant life, for a plant must start from a tiny germ placed within what we call a seed. But what shall we say of human life? Did it come from the ground as a plant and later become the subject of experiment, being changed to what we now know as birth?

Let us imagine for a moment a tree of humanity. We will say this tree budded and blossomed, and after the blossom passed away a tiny infant hung dangling in the breeze fed by the sunlight above and elements of the earth beneath. At what age and by what process did man receive his sight, hearing, power of thought and speech, and other gifts that man is known to possess? If it were possible for man to begin life in such a manner, why should there be any change to the present method?

We find that some of our noted scientists have given years in study and experiment combining various chemicals and dead organic matter in futile efforts to produce life. What would it have meant to those of the proven faith had but one attempt proven successful? Nothing less than the undermining of the precious Word of God, leaving those that have given much time and study with a desire to build up for themselves and others a better and lasting future. It would mean robbing humanity of every possible authority by which to live and to die. It would mean the ending of one hope and the beginning of another hope. We thank God that He has not permitted these things to happen.

Physicians all over the land admit that diseases commonly known to the human system begin from a germ possessing life. Must it be said in a land among civilized society that life must come from life only, that we do not seek the living among the dead because the dead know not anything (Eccl. 9:5)?

Why have we spent time and effort in an attempt to tear down the Scriptures when they afford proof in abundance everywhere about us for their foundation? Why has man been so unmindful of God and His promises? As I picture the countless numbers about me, I think of those souls of priceless value on their long march to sure destruction. Where may the key be found that will open those hearts of stone that they may be filled with that incomparable love of God?

Man's days are fast coming to an end. God is emptying His vial of great wrath upon the fallen race of humanity as His last attempt to persuade His loved ones to recognize Him. Let us not keep Him waiting; let us be prepared and waiting for Him.

JESUS, THE CHRIST

IN JULY, 1922, H. G. Wells contributed an article to The American Magazine in which he discussed the six greatest men that had ever lived. Those of you who are acquainted with the writings of this extraordinary man, especially his Outline of History, know how intensely his versatile mind is interested in the welfare of humanity. What he says about Jesus in that article is of more than ordinary interest for two reasons: In the first place, Wells does not include Jesus among the six greatest men because in his opinion Jesus towers so far above all other human beings that comparison would be useless. In the second place, Wells is not a professing Christian.

The following paragraph attracted me particularly: "The historian," says Wells, "disregarding the theological significance of His life, writes the name of Jesus of Nazareth at the top of the world's greatest characters. For the historian's test of greatness is not, 'What did a man accumulate for himself?' or 'What did he build up, to tumble down at his death?' Not that at all, but this, 'Was the world different because he lived? Did he start men to thinking along fresh lines with a vigor and vitality that persisted after him?' By this test Jesus stands first."

Mr. Wells also sets forth the chief reasons for this commanding position of Jesus. "We sense," he says, "the magnetism that induced men who had seen Him only once to leave their business and follow Him. He filled them with love and courage. Weak and ailing people were heartened by His presence. He spoke with a knowledge and authority that baffled the wise and the subtle. But other teachers had done all this. These talents alone would not have given Him the permanent place of power which He occupies. That place is His by virtue of the new and simple and profound doctrine which He brought—the universal loving Fatherhood of God, and the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven."

Because of H. G. Wells' wide acquaintance with social and political theory, his estimate of the effect of these teachings is of more than ordinary value. He believes that the two doctrines of the Fatherhood of God and the coming of the kingdom of heaven are "the most revolutionary doctrines that have ever stirred or changed human thought." The followers of Jesus, in his opinion, failed to grasp the true meaning of their Master's teaching. For that matter, "No age has even partially understood its tremendous challenge to the established institutions of mankind. But the world began to be a different world from the day that doctrine was preached; and every step toward wider understanding and tolerance and good will is a step in the direction of the universal brotherhood, which He proclaimed."

Certainly one of the most significant thoughts in these paragraphs is the remark that no age has even partially understood the tremendous challenge of the teachings of Jesus to the institutions of mankind. One needs but slight acquaintance with history to appreciate the force of that comment. And along with that appreciation comes this disturbing thought: If the gospel of Jesus has been but inadequately understood in past ages, how well is it being understood by our generation? How much superior to our predecessors are we in that respect? Is it not barely possible that our preoccupation with natural science, physical well-being, and rapid accumulation of wealth has made us even less sensitive than some previous ages to those intangible values which Jesus emphasized?

Let us consider for a moment the doctrine of the Brotherhood of Man. How does it square with the principle of "dividends first"? How does it square with the idea that capital investment is the primary consideration, no matter what happens to the worker? Or what would Jesus say of a nation that has the resources to produce all the food, all the clothing, all the shelter it needs—yes, with a little extra effort could produce twice as much as it needs—yet it has ten million workers without the ghost of a chance to make a living for themselves and those dependent upon them? Does it not under those circumstances come perilously close to mockery to speak of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man?

Or what would Jesus say of a commonwealth that cannot keep its public schools going except by exploiting the appetite for alcohol among its weak-willed citizens?

It is a commonplace to remark that as a nation we have become cynical and disillusioned. But nations are merely individuals of a larger growth; and whether we like it or not, we cannot escape that penetrating question of Jesus which every generation for these nineteen centuries has answered in one way or another, "Whom say ye that I am?" There is no avoiding it. We may shrug our shoulders and turn away in indifference, yet a shrug is an answer; and history will judge us both as individuals and as a nation accordingly. As individuals, we may soon be forgotten; as a nation, we stand in the floodlight of eternity. No, there is no escaping the question.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;

Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,

Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,

And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and the light.

The implications of that choice have never been set forth so clearly as by that humble Carpenter who was cradled in a manger and who, blameless of all evil, like a common criminal was crucified upon the cross. That is why mankind made His advent the dividing line between the centuries.—Published by permission of Prof. Paulus Lange.

"A Place Called Armageddon"

By Norman John MacLeod

"Let the heathen . . . come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge the heathen."

STRATEGIC position is one of the keys to the history of a geographical site. Especially is that true from the fact that the history of the world is largely molded by warfare. In spite of the fact that modern history teaching soft-pedals wars, warfare determines the advances, decay, and destruction of civilizations. A nation may build up a great intellectual culture; but unless it has a strong military position, it may fail to pass its learning to succeeding races. More warlike groups come in and destroy the works that it has built. No city in the world represents a greater geographical influence on history than the strategically important city of Megiddo.

Through two passes in the hills of southern Galilee the armies of the invaders have surged. The one pass leads to the eastern part of the Valley of Esdraelon and leads from thence to the Valley of Jezreel and on to the Jordan Depression. The other leads into the central portion of the Valley of Esdraelon near the site of the city of Megiddo at the "Hill of Megiddo"—"a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." When the conqueror has gone north to the region of Syria and Phoenicia, he has gone through these two passes. When he has gone south, he has passed through the same defiles in the hills of southern Galilee.

From time immemorial, then, the "Hill of Megiddo" has been the scene of great decisive battles in the Near East. When the Egyptians drove out the Hittites and set up an Asiatic empire, the final decisive battle that broke the Hyksos (Hittite) power was fought at Megiddo. Later, when Rameses II attempted to restore that empire which had been lost during the time of the weakling Tut-ankhamen, the chief battle was fought at Megiddo. When the tribes of Manasseh and Issachar went into the land of Canaan to take possession, they broke the alliance of the Hittites and Perizzites at Megiddo.

But one of the greatest tragedies of Hebrew history was enacted at the "Hill of Megiddo": Necho went up to fight against the Babylonians at Carchemish, and Josiah went out against him and met him at Megiddo and there was slain; and the light that was to fail went out; the righteous boy-king who walked in the way of David his father met his death at Armageddon and was gathered to his fathers. Ever since that day the city of Megiddo has been associated with sorrowful tradition among the people of Judah. But conquests of ancient times are not the only ones for which Megiddo is famous.

During the Middle Ages the final defeat of the Crusaders, which spelled the doom of the Latin States of Palestine, occurred at Megiddo, as the Turkish armies burst forth from those same defiles of the hills of Galilee out into the Plain of Esdraelon at that spur of high ground "called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." When Napoleon tried in vain to cripple the colonial empire of Great Britain by conquering the Near East, his army fell upon the Turks from the same narrow passes of the hills of southern Galilee. Down the valley his army chased one Turkish army toward Jezreel; up the valley his army drove the Turks supported by the British navy into the city of Acre; and at the site of the "Hill of Megiddo" he finally drew up his host in array to march away again toward Egypt to the abandonment of his grand scheme. But when armies went in other directions than toward the north, they also used the same passes and the same fields of battle near them.

Armies passing south to the fertile "rosy plain of Sharon" would turn westward into the Valley of Esdraelon and then south again at Megiddo and the surrounding passes. Almost without exception the decisive battles were again fought at Megiddo. So also, going eastward from the Mediterranean, the Plain of Esdraelon affords the best access to the Jordan Valley; going westward toward the seacoast, the Valley of Esdraelon again provides the avenue of approach. The crossing of the two routes is inevitably at Megiddo, the greatest battle ground of the Holy Land. The armies of Assyria, Babylonia (Chaldea), Persia, Macedonia, Rome, the Syrians, Turks, French, and British have all fought battles at Megiddo as they went in one direction or another. But a new importance attaches to that situation.

In rebuilding the land of Palestine the British have found that the best way to get oil to the seacoast at Haifa is through the same Valley of Esdraelon; battleships are in its harbor; any future military operations in the land of unwallled villages is bound to be in the same valley. Megiddo takes on a new importance as the place of future battles. The prophets have, therefore, named it from God as the scene of the greatest battle that mankind has ever fought in the last great day of the wrath of God. Ancient Megiddo will be connected with that great burying ground mentioned in Ezekiel and in the other prophets where there will be a great slaughter.

So in the book of Revelation we are not surprised to read: "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. . . . And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."—Rev. 16:14, 16.

THE GOSPEL

By Lyman Booth

AFTER our Lord's ascension He called Paul to testify or preach "the gospel of the grace of God." That Paul obeyed the summons is proved by the abundant labor he wrought and the trials and tribulations through which he triumphantly passed. Although he had been a merciless persecutor of Christians, he "labored more abundantly than they all," that is, all of the apostles (1 Cor. 15:10).

This wonderful change in Paul's life and labors was wrought through a belief in "the glorious gospel of Christ" (2 Cor. 4:4). His zeal and love for the truth of the gospel sustained him throughout his eventful Christian career and enabled him to endure the elements of many dangers and perilous adventures. It seems that all the anxieties and toils were heaped upon him. He left his footprints on European and Asiatic soil as he journeyed from place to place to preach the gospel. The deserts saw him struggling with their sand storms; the rivers were breasted by his arms; the deep held him many hours drifting solitary on its billowy surface. Again and again the ocean cast him shipwrecked to land. Disputing in the synagogue, working at the loom, singing at midnight in the prison, kneeling and mingling his tears with his farewell prayers on the Syrian or Milesian shore, preaching amid the marble temples on Mars' Hill at Athens, thanking God and taking courage on the broad stones of the Appian Way, clanking his chain while writing in his hired house in Rome: where and in what labors do we not find this most fervent man, this vessel of God's election for the founding of His church?

The five Jewish scourgings, the three Roman beatings with rods, the three shipwrecks, and the stoning at Lystra all disclose to us a life of incessant adventure and toil (2 Cor. 11:23-27). After all these experiences he said, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

It is astonishing the work accomplished by this one man. What would have been the changes in this world's history if he had never been born? Think, if you will, of the influence of his work upon the morals, the history, and literature pertaining to the development of the human race. As a model he shows that if one works with unflagging zeal God will work in him mightily. Therefore, if we labor more abundantly, we shall find God's grace laboring in us. We are not to wait for God, but to work. We are not to wait for Him before obeying His command to work. Work while the day lasts, work and rely wholly upon God in the expectation of a glorious reaping. The more we work and the more earnestly we work, the easier our labors will be; and by and by our rejoicing will be great in the Lord.

With what confidence and hope may the weakest engage in his task? We have a perfect right to feel in all our work for God that He works in us, that in all our words for Him it is not we, but the Spirit of our Father, that speaks in us. If we humbly and prayerfully labor to crucify our weaknesses and wait for Him to enshrine Himself within our affections, strength will come to us from the overflowing fountain of His infinite love, and we shall be able to say with Paul, "It is not I, but the grace of God in me."

Paul was the most efficient gospel preacher the world has ever known, excepting our Lord. He was fearless and unashamed, for he wrote to the Roman brethren, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."—Rom. 1:16. The gospel is the power which God has ordained to save sinners. John has written, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."—John 3:16, 17.

Mark 1:14, 15 reads, "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, . . . Repent ye, and believe the gospel." Mark represents a belief in the gospel as necessary to salvation and John adds belief in God's Son. Mark used the word "gospel," or good news, or good message, and Jesus came preaching the same message; hence, there is no difference in believing in Christ and believing the gospel.

On the day of Pentecost Peter, in speaking of Christ's name, said, "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12. Jesus said to Thomas, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14:6. Also, "No man cometh unto me, except the Father which sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day." The power which draws men to Christ is the gospel. The drawing power is based upon the sure promises of God. All promises of good and valuable gifts made by one person to another have the effect of drawing the two close together in mutual friendship. Even so it is with the gospel promises. No stronger promises could be made than those which God made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

God said to Abraham, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 12:1-3. That promise was good news to Abraham but did not contain all the news that God held in store for him, for God said to him after Lot was separated from him, "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever."—Gen. 13:14, 15. This promise conveys an everlasting title to all the land embraced therein. God could not have given him a more precious promise, for in order for Abraham to possess the land forever he would have to be given a life equal in duration to the limit of the title, which extends for all eternity. Since life is the most precious possession one can have, there could be no better and valuable gift to man than an unending life and a home that would endure forever.

Where is there a person upon receiving a like promise whose heart would not pulsate with unbounded joy? No wonder Abraham built an altar and worshiped his God! This promise includes Abraham and his seed. Paul has declared that the seed mentioned is Christ. He said, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ."—Gal. 3:16. Paul wrote to the Romans, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Rom. 8:16, 17. This scripture intimates that if there be no sonship there is no possibility of inheriting the things contained in God's promises. Discipline and suffering alone will not avail in bringing God's blessings to us.

In the relation as sons we are heirs of God's kingdom. This honorable and intimate relation we hold by adoption and regeneration. There can be no sonship outside of Christ; and we cannot be Christ's without faith; and without faith we can have neither Christ nor inheritance, for who can possess God's goodness but they who love Him? And who can love except they who know of His love? And where will He make His temple but among the lovely and pure?

The promises God made to Abraham included the whole world, as is shown in Paul's statement in Romans 4:13: "The promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." This heirship comes through the gospel; and this agrees with Daniel, who said, "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High," thus proving that when heirship gives place to possession the seed will possess the world jointly with Abraham.

All who are joint heirs now will be joint possessors then. Though poor in this world's goods, they are rich in the faith of the gospel that reaches forward to the time when heirship will terminate in joyful possession. Then the glorious gospel will have completed the work of salvation for which it was ordained. All heirs will be happy, immortal possessors of the world. Then God's will will "be done in earth, as it is in heaven." When God will be all in all and over all, His eternal glory will shine and fill the earth made new.

A LAYMAN asks, "Why so much talk about unemployed ministers, when there are so many hundreds and thousands of men, women, and children in America unchurched?" Is it not time to put on a "House to House Campaign for the Church?" Let us make the church and its program as important and as aggressive as that of selling safety pins, dish cloths, and brooms!—Selected.

THE ORIGIN OF EVIL

By R. H. Judd

THIS is a subject which puzzles many persons, and numbers of writers have written much on the subject, some indeed going so far as to blame God and say that He actually caused it. Others say that it must have preexisted Adam, else the devil could not have tempted Eve.

Is not the whole subject really a simple matter to anyone who will quietly accept Scripture statement on the matter? Two texts seem to make this very clear. Romans 4:15 says, "Where no law is, there is no transgression." Is it not plain, then, that when Adam was put under law (as he certainly was) he alone was responsible for either keeping the law or breaking it, and if he broke it sin would originate with him? Thus understood, the Bible statement that "as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin" is absolutely sound; and we have a simple explanation of the origin of evil that eliminates the necessity of the volumes that have been written.

In proof of the contention that God actually planned sin, was responsible for sin, Isaiah 45:7 is frequently quoted; indeed, it was quoted in friendly discussion at the tea tables at the last Fonthill gathering. I pointed out at the time that "evil" in that verse had not the sense of sin, but evil in the sense of calamity following sin. Since then I have had opportunity to go further into the study of the verse, but have not had the opportunity of passing on the information gained.

Careful reading of the verse will bring out the fact that there are two sets of antitheses, the first, "I form the light, and create darkness"; the second, "I make peace, and create evil." Sin is not the antithesis of peace, but war is. God's people Israel were promised peace in their land if they obeyed Him; they were promised war from without if they did not obey, even to driving them out of their own land.

damned, regardless of the individual attributes and characters of those men, is laid bare as a fallacy from beginning to end.

Arminius based his affirmative argument upon Romans 8:29, 30: "Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified." It is evident from these two verses that God ordained simply that those who He knew would be faithful would be saved; there was no coercion involved: each one of those who were to be given eternal life would receive it solely on the basis of a reward earned by his own voluntary action, not as a payment for the work of a slave. Those who God knew would be righteous would be saved; but God Himself left the way open for them to choose the righteous course for themselves.

The well known statement in John 3:16 that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" is set entirely at naught by the argument that men are deprived of the will to choose for themselves. There was no purpose in the Christ's death for men if a certain definite group were to be saved regardless; there is no purpose in teaching the gospel or in wasting time, money, and labor in an effort to carry God's message to all the world if these things have no effect upon mankind. "Whosoever" means precisely what it says; whosoever believes in the Christ is to be saved, despite the futile protestations of those who contend that only definitely selected men and women are to be saved.

Locke's plaintive declaration exposes the feelings of many of those who believe in the Calvinistic doctrines: "I cannot have a clearer perception of anything than that I am free, yet I cannot make freedom in man consistent with omnipotence and omniscience in God, though I am as fully persuaded of both as of any truth I most firmly assent to; and therefore I have long since given off the consideration of that question, resolving all into the short conclusion that if it be possible for God to make a free agent, then man is free, though I see not the way of it."

The primary difficulty in the discussion of this subject is the fact that people are in many instances incapable of differentiating between downright coercion and simple knowledge. God knew that Adam was going to sin, and He laid His plans accordingly; but He firmly commanded the man whom He had made, "Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it." Now the references in the Bible establishing the immutable, unchangeable character of Jehovah are too numerous to need repetition. If God, therefore, ordered Adam to refrain from eating of particular fruit and then forced Adam to eat it, these texts declaring that God does not change are false. The same may be said with equal truth of sin today. There is no purpose in attempting to live a righteous life if God forces men to act as they do act, for salvation or damnation will come regardless of what efforts they may attempt to exert; God commands them not to sin and then obliges them to do so—quite obviously there is neither immutability, justice, nor love here. Yet this is the conclusion that the Augustinians and Calvinists would have us reach.

The very language of the great commission issued by the Christ destroys the strength of the argument that the Almighty has established irrevocably that certain individuals are to do things which require condemnation while others are to do things that receive eternal life as a fit reward. "Go ye," said Jesus, "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." As has been said, to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature would be utterly useless if it were predestined who was to be saved and who was not. That the gospel be preached to those ordained to salvation might be necessary, but that it be taught to those who were absolutely denied any possibility of anything pertaining to salvation would be the height of folly. And God commands nothing that is folly. He is omniscient, He is all-wise.

Logically, it is impossible to conceive of a God who at one moment issues definite commands that righteousness be done and at the next moment orders some individual to commit the grossest iniquity. Yet this is precisely what the advocates of the Augustinian system of predestination would have us to believe. They teach on the one side that God never changes and on the other that He constantly countermands and contradicts His orders.

It is certain, too, that if Calvin be correct there is no such thing as temptation. The Bible statements that Jesus endured temptation and resisted it become false in the light of Calvinistic reasoning. For, if God directed that His Son resist temptation, there was no desire to yield to it and, consequently, no test of character on the part of that Son. God was doing the work, not the Son. And so it is with common men. If God directs our every act, there is no such thing as sin, for God is wholly righteous (Dan. 9:7); yet the Bible very definitely declares that sin exists not only in some, but in all, men (Rom. 3:23). However, assuming for the moment that the Calvinistic view is correct despite its difficulties, it immediately becomes obvious that such texts as, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," are entirely devoid of meaning, since nothing evil can exist in a creation governed absolutely by a wholly righteous Deity.

James, in the last chapter of his epistle and the final verse, presents an interesting problem for solution by the exponents of the individualistic view of predestination: "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." The doctrines of Augustine lead to the belief that God has created both good and evil (an erroneous interpretation of Isaiah 45:7, which refers only to peace and war). Assuming again that God does create evil—sin—and that He does control absolutely every individual life, it is evident that James made a gross blunder, or else that he was holding out a promise without significance; for it would be, under the Augustinian theory, entirely impossible for a sinner to be converted, since God would force him to continue in his sinful ways regardless of his possible personal desire to leave them.

With these and similar arguments Arminius, father of the group predestination view, voiced his protests against the fallacies in the Calvinistic and Augustinian reasoning. A careful study of Ephesians 1, which is largely used in proof of individual predestination, makes it clear that it is the church as a group that God ordained to salvation, and not the separate persons who make up the church. The mere fact that God knew in the beginning of time which persons were going to accept His teachings does not in any way signify that He obliges anyone to accept them. The gulf between foreknowledge and coercion is a wide one.

Abreast of the Times

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:21. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42:9.

German Church and War

"I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you."—Luke 6:27.

BERLIN, Nov. 4.—In a recent interview, according to The Literary Digest, Reichsbischof Mueller, head of the German-Christian Church, was asked whether his organization gave sanction to a program which appeared to call for war. "You forget," he said, "that Jesus warned us that there would be wars and rumors of war. We German-Christians want peace. But there are dark days ahead. We would be false to our mission if we failed to help the nation prepare for them."

One of the complaints said to be frequently made against the church of republican Germany was that it failed in this point. "The old church," said a prominent German-Christian churchman, "was out of touch with life. Here we have a nation, mobilized and in uniform. What do we churchmen find? We find that there are not even suitable hymns for the men to sing while marching. But we will remedy that; we will fit the church to the spirit of the times. One day, even, we will have a hymn as good as yours—how do you call it?—'Onward, Christian Soldiers.'"

Commenting on this militant spirit of the new German-Christian Church, Stanley High, writing for The Digest, remarks: "That is the prevalent attitude. That art is best, in Nazi Germany, which has something military in it; that music is most acceptable which glorifies courage; those books are most popular which rationalize force; those personalities, past and present, most exalted which have won or talk as though they were ready to win fame in the field.

"It is significant of all this," he continues, "that military service in the war is the only ground on which a Jew in Germany can demand fair treatment. He may not get it even then. But the point is that a Jew, by Nazi standards, can hope to rise to the level of a civilized being if he or his father fought."

Such seems to be the general spirit of Germany today. "Europe's 'next war' is no longer merely the bogey of scaremongers. The bogey seems to have put on flesh and blood."

(The Augsburg Confession which forms the doctrinal foundation of the Evangelical Lutheran Church everywhere does not forbid, but rather encourages, participation of Christians in war. Article XVI, treating of Civil Affairs, says: "They teach, that lawful civil ordinances are good works of God, and that it is right for Christians to bear civil office, . . . to engage in just wars, to serve as soldiers, . . ."—Editor.)

Peace Palace Discord

"Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven."—Genesis 11:4.

GENEVA, Oct. 20.—Commenting on the withdrawal of Japan and Germany from the League of Nations during the past year, a newspaper correspondent, reminded of the fact that the magnificent palace for the housing of the League is to be completed in 1935 at a cost of $9,000,000, is moved to ask, "Must that become an empty shell?" We also recall the Palace of Peace, erected with funds provided by Andrew Carnegie and dedicated with the highest hopes that world peace was then practically an accomplished fact in 1913, the year before the World War.

Referring to the tragic aftermath of this effort, The Literary Digest remarks that "like the Tower of Babel the Peace Palace, or its mission, was overtaken by a confusion of tongues." And then The Digest asks, "Is this to be the fate of every edifice created to penetrate the Heaven of Peace?" As the Scriptures present the question, so do they also provide the answer: "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it."—Psalm 127:1.

Cities Ruled by Underworld

"Babylon the great is fallen . . . and is become the . . . hold of every foul spirit."—Revelation 18:2.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—According to United States Senator Royal S. Copeland of New York, certain cities of this country are almost wholly ruled by the evil forces of the underworld. Senator Copeland, as chairman of the senatorial subcommittee on rackets and kidnaping, has been investigating crime in the big cities for several months.

In an address before the Chicago Chamber of Commerce the New York statesman declared that though he "trembled" over the increase of crime he was still hopeful that the nation would rise to the emergency and deal successfully with the situation. "The present situation," he said, "is a challenge to organized government. There can be no doubt that certain communities are now dominated by the rats of the underworld. This statement sounds sensational, but the records of crime prove it."

However dreadful the present urban condition is with regard to criminal activities, it will drive the average citizen to welcome the righteous rulership of Christ and induce "the inhabitants of one city (to) go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts."—Zech. 8:21. The coming of the Lord alone will bring in everlasting righteousness.

"I WILL PRAISE THEE, O LORD, WITH MY WHOLE HEART; I WILL SHEW FORTH ALL THY MARVELLOUS WORKS."—PSALM 9:1.

THE HOPE OF THE CHURCH

IT HAS been truly said, "Brevity is the soul of wit," but in my case today brevity is the soul of truth, for I am expected to tell in about three minutes what is the hope of the church.

To be very brief, I might answer this question in three words, "Lord Jesus Christ." Therefore, if you will bear with me for a few moments, I shall endeavor to point out what the Scriptures say regarding this hope.

In Colossians 1:18 we read, "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence." And in the twenty-fourth verse: "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you (Paul is speaking here), and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church."

To us, the knowledge of God is the ultimate attainment of life. Intellect, the great lesson of creation and revelation, and Paul's conception of his union with Christ in death underlie the whole tenor of the Apostle's appeals to a separated, holy, and consecrated life. We were raised together with Christ and seek the things that are above; we died, and our life is hid with Christ in God; Christ who is our life, will be manifested (Col. 3:1-4).

It was a radiant vision and one of which the great Apostle never wearied. It was attributable to nothing less than the great love with which God had loved him. For us, as members of His body, that vision waits; and in battling against the lusts of the flesh, the fascinations of the world, and the power of that which opposes good, viz., sin, there is no position more fraught with the certainty of victory than this of our resurrection standing and privilege. Our relationship to our Lord Jesus Christ is the most intimate and precious of all spiritual ties.

Interwoven in this and in itself a part of the consummation of the hope of the church, is the glorious appearing of our Savior from heaven for the accomplishment of His Father's purpose, that the whole earth will reflect His glory. Therefore, the church and His body are one; Ephesians 5:30: "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." We are not only "in Christ," but "in the Lord"; and in such a relationship we should remember always and value our privileged position in that we are participants of His love, grace, and operation of the Spirit.

Finally, as we review the pages of history, the phases of unfolding prophecy, and the nearness of the consummation of the hope of the church, let us join with Paul in Ephesians 1:3, 4: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."

The above article was delivered as an address by A. Leonard Brady, president of the Los Angeles Berean Society, to the last Quarterly Conference of the Churches of God of Southern California during the special Berean service. This part of the conference was called a "vesper service," and was entirely in charge of the Bereans—a valuable suggestion for other state conferences.

THE ATTRIBUTES OF DEITY—UNITY

God is one and alone. This means that He is not one of a class. There is not another to constitute a class. Each man is numerically one, and has the unity of a personal existence. But there are many individual men. The unity affirmed of God is that He is one and alone. There is only one God.

The evidences of this unity come: 1. In the cosmological argument which demands an absolute First Cause for the world. An absolute First Cause must be one. 2. In the attribute of personality. A person is a unity. 3. In the unity of the universe. Everywhere, on earth and in all the astronomical systems, the forces, laws, movements, and order constitute a singing harmony. One thought pervades the universe as an immeasurable organism. All worlds seem to respond to the same law of gravitation. The light from distant bodies, through the spectrum, shows the same qualities. The unity of the universe proves the unity of the Thinker, of whose thought and will it is an expression. This unity of the structure of nature may, indeed, be said to prove only a unity of counsel. And on the principle of simple induction from the unity of nature, it must be confessed, it could reach no further. But viewed in connection with the preceding evidences, it carries strong confirmatory force.—M. Valentine in Natural Theology.

"We love him, because he first loved us."—1 John 4:19.

WHY DO YOU WORSHIP?

TODAY we find our busy missionary in a large city in Greece. It was a pagan city, and by that we mean its people worshiped gods made of gold and silver and stone. As Paul stood on the streets of Athens looking about him, his heart was filled with pity for those people. They knew nothing at all about the God that Paul loved, and they had never heard of Jesus.

The reason they bowed down to their idols and worshiped them was that they were afraid not to do so. They were afraid their gods would bring some punishment on them, such as terrible storms, dreaded diseases, fires, or earthquakes. So, you see, fear was the thing that made them worship.

Is that what causes us to worship our God? Not at all! We worship Him because He is so good to us, because we love Him and He loves us. We bow down to our God because He is the very best Friend we can have.

As Paul walked along the streets of Athens, he saw one statue with these words carved on it, "TO THE UNKNOWN GOD." "Ah," thought Paul, "that is my God, for He is the One they know nothing about." You see, they were afraid they might miss one god and make him angry, and so they erected an idol to one they called the unknown one.

Here was Paul's opportunity, and he didn't let it slip. He preached them a sermon on this unknown God, explaining to them that He was the only true God, the only One who could hear their prayers and understand their needs. He was the One who gave them all things, who was right at hand if they would only try to find Him.

Imagine bowing down to gods of wood and stone after hearing about a living God! But we read that some of the people mocked. And that was just like the people of Athens. They were always looking for some new thing.

Now let's see what difference fear and love make in our lives. Do you know any children who are afraid of their parents, really afraid of them? What sort of children are they? Why, they try to have their own way without their parents knowing it. They hide things from Father and Mother, and try to deceive them, because they are afraid of punishment if they are found out.

But the children who love their parents try to do the things Father and Mother want them to do. They try to please their parents because they are so good to them. They know that when they disobey they must be punished, but they take the punishment knowing they deserve it.

It's just the same way with God, dear children, for He is our heavenly Father. You who have fathers who you think are the finest and best fathers in the world will understand God's love that much better. And how happy you ought to be because you have such fathers.

You know that Father wouldn't give you anything that could possibly harm you. That's the way with God. Everything good comes from Him. He loves you and wants to see you happy. Now don't you see how very much better it is for anyone to worship God because he loves God, rather than because he is afraid of Him?

How foolish the Athenians were for not accepting Paul's God. Just think of keeping right on praying to gods who had no ears, when they could talk to a God who is close by us at all times, listening to every word and caring for us always. We read that only a few chose Paul's God, and so he had to go on to another city.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Write at the top of your page the number of the lesson, also the subject and the golden text. Then draw a map of Greece. It has a very irregular outline, and you can make it as wiggly as you want to and not be very far wrong. Locate Athens and draw a line from Philippi in Macedonia south to Athens. Philippi, you remember, was where Paul preached in our last lesson.

Now draw some of the streets of Athens, showing several statues, and print on one of them what Paul found and used for his sermon text. Add any pictures you have which show Paul preaching.

Copy this prayer:

"At night I kneel by Mother's knee
To thank God for His care;
I thank Him for the many things
That made the day so fair.

"I thank Him for the nighttime,
For stars and moonlight, too;
I thank Him for my parents,
And friends so kind and true.

"And then I say, 'I lay me down
To sleep' all through the night,
And ask Him to watch over me
Till morning brings its light."

PAUL IN ATHENS

Acts 17:16-34

Devotional Reading: John 1:1-14

GOLDEN TEXT

In him we live, and move, and have our being.—Acts 17:28.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul in Athens.

Aim: To show that when knowledge of God is obtainable ignorance is no excuse for unbelief.

Basic Truth: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near."—Isaiah 55:6.

I. Paul Sympathizes With Idolaters. (Acts 17:16-21.) As he waited in the great city of Athens for Silas and Timothy to rejoin him, Paul did not waste his time in sight-seeing. The things he saw moved his heart to deepest sympathy for the citizens of that city of almost countless idols. That human beings, made in the image of God, should demean themselves by worshiping blocks of stone and wood which they had formed with their own hands filled him with compassion, and he tried to stir up his fellow Jews, who believed in the true God, to a sense of their responsibility in the enlightening of the Athenians. His own knowledge of the gospel and the ignorance of men concerning it places an unavoidable responsibility upon every believer to teach the truth.

II. Paul Preaches to Idolaters. (Acts 17:22-29.) The success of preaching and teaching rests very heavily upon the manner in which the instructor approaches his subject. Paul took as his text the inscription on a heathen idol, "TO THE UNKNOWN GOD." He acknowledged the entire truth of the inscription. He agreed perfectly with its assertion. There was such a God, and He was unknown to the majority of men. And Paul's first duty was to declare Him to those who did not know Him. He then kindly reasoned with them from their own poets that a real God could not be made of gold, silver, or stone. How much better that method was than it would have been for Paul to ridicule their most sacred convictions, however absurd they may have appeared to him!

III. Paul Teaches the Resurrection and Coming of Christ. (Acts 17:30-34.) No gospel sermon is complete that does not mention the death, the resurrection, and the return of Christ. These facts comprise the essentials of saving truth. Jesus is coming to raise those who sleep in Him and to rule the world in righteousness for God. This is the gospel.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Ignorant Worship: There is at the present time in our own land a vast army who, like the Athenians of Paul's day, ignorantly worship an unknown God. They feel within themselves the need to worship. They see about them the evidence of a Creator, and they say, "I am sure there must be an overruling Providence to guide the course of the universe."

But wonder of wonders! They cannot give an idea of God's plan for the races of men, nor of His outline of salvation for "whosoever believeth and is baptized." This appalling ignorance is due to a lethargy on the part of the laity, and to the fact that the religious leaders have failed in their responsibility of declaring the true God to the world. The nominal church of today has become so hedged about with organization, social and political, that there is little time to teach the indwelling of a loving heavenly Father.

Intelligent Faith: "The Modern Reader's Bible" makes Hebrews 11:1 read, "Now faith is the giving substance to things hoped for, the proving of things not seen." The disciple of Christ, then, must know who and what God is and the plans He has set forth in His Word for the good of mankind. In short, there must be definite knowledge in which we testify our faith by our deeds. There must needs be an unfeigned faith that carries us through every vicissitude of life. A feeling that an overruling providence will guide is not enough. We need an intelligent understanding of the almighty God and His program for the universe.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"In him we live, and move, and have our being."—Acts 17:28.

God created or made all things. He created man in His own image and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life that he might live. Without the God-given breath we would be as dead men. Paul was trying to present the true God to the people of Athens and make them realize their dependence on Him.

All along the ages men and women have been dependent on the heavenly Father for the very air they breathe, the food that they eat, the clothes that they wear, and everything that goes to make up life and health. If we could just be made to realize this dependence, no doubt we would be more humble and trusting, trying ever to please the God on whom we must rely.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Seeking and Finding God

Jesus told His disciples: "Seek, and ye shall find."—Matt. 7:7. From this we might feel that we could find God by seeking for Him. God told Israel that "ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. And I will be found of you, saith the Lord."—Jer. 29:13,14. These are very similar to the words of James 4:8. "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." The only way to find God is to seek for Him. When Israel "in their trouble did turn unto the Lord God of Israel, and sought him, he was found of them."—2 Chron. 15:4.

One is truly seeking God when he can say: "With my whole heart have I sought thee." "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." Or when one can feel that "the law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." "Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart."—Psalm 119:10, 11, 72, 2.

Man in his sinful state is going away from God and is heading for destruction. If he would find God, he must do a right-about-face (repent) and seek Him diligently; then God will reveal Himself. Cornelius, the Roman centurion, was a man that sought God as best he knew. Of him it was said that he was "a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always." God sent Peter to him to tell him what he ought to do. After the word had been preached to him and he had accepted it, God sent the Holy Spirit upon him, and then he was baptized as commanded by Peter. Cornelius drew nigh unto God, and God drew nigh unto him.

It would be well for us if we would heed the warning of Isaiah (55:6): "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near."—H. A. S.

PRIMARY

The Unknown God

Paul had gone to the city of Athens. Here the people worshiped idols made of stone and wood. They had many different gods. They said when it thundered that some god was causing it. Then, for fear they had missed worshiping some god, they made one and called it the unknown god.

This was what Paul found when he arrived. He must have felt sad to see these people worshipping idols.

At once he commenced teaching them. He told them there really was a God whom they did not know.

He then stood on Mars' Hill and preached to them about the true God up in heaven. He taught them that God had made all things, that He gives us breath, and that their very lives depended upon God. He taught them about Jesus, about His death and resurrection.

When he came to that part of his talk where he said others would be resurrected, also, some of the people made fun of him. But others believed Paul and no doubt became Christian men and women.

Today people say our dead ones will not be resurrected; but Paul teaches us in our dear old book, the Bible, that they will be when Jesus comes again.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

KOKOMO, INDIANA

Bro. C. A. Smead, Bro. and Sr. J. E. Hammond, and Ruth Smead paid us an unexpected visit on Friday, Oct. 27. Bro. Hammond gave us a very interesting and instructive discourse on the book of Revelation, using his large chart. The little church was well filled for such short notice. We regret that they could stay over only one night. A week of study of such a subject would be all too short. We hope to meet Bro. and Sr. Hammond next summer during the conference season. We rejoice with the brethren at Blanchard, Mich., that they are able to have Bro. Smead's services there.

The work here seems very slow. Often we become very discouraged, there are so many churches in Kokomo. Many new missions have sprung up in all parts of town. Many doing welfare work seem to be very successful, but we have never felt able to finance that work to any great extent outside of our own members. But we feel we must keep up the effort. God will give the increase.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our seventh Birthday Anniversary, October 29, was a most inspiring and pleasant occasion. Attendants from Kalamazoo, Dutton, and Blanchard helped to make the day more pleasant.

The Sunday school numbered 323, and the house was packed to capacity for the other services of the day. The morning sermon by the pastor was entitled "Our Seventh Birthday." Following this, dinner was served in the basement to about 250, and then at 2:30 Bro. Smead gave an interesting sermon on "Signs of the Times." Baptismal service followed, and the church was happy to have four splendid adults go through the watery grave in honor to their Lord. These are: Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Stevens, Conrad St., S. W.; Mrs. Wm. Shepherd, Hillcrest St., S. W.; Mrs. Nelson, 210 Himes St., S. E.

The evening discourse was given by the pastor, entitled "Take Off Your Shoes." At the close of this the hand of fellowship was extended to the ones listed above. Also Mrs. Robert Melville, 203 Himes St., S. W., was received into the church as an associate member.

Many different ones worked hard to make the day a success, and we thank God fervently for such occasions. F. E. Siple, Pastor.

Tell it, if the telling of it will bless the children; if it will comfort the aged; if it will bring hope to the hopeless; if it will encourage the depressed; if it will make people love more and draw closer to God.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Elmer Hanson, only son of Sr. Sarah Denison, is critically ill with the type of tuberculosis known as Addison's disease. He has been confined to his bed for more than six months, and we are sure that he would enjoy cheery letters from the church family. His address is Oak Park, Minnesota, Rt. 1.

Sr. Mary A. Gesin and daughter Alice returned to Oregon last week from St. Louis, where the latter has been undergoing surgical treatment for an injured eye.

In a beautifully written letter Sr. Mary F. Wolf, whose address is in care of H. C. Hoagland, Rt. 2, McCook, Neb., says that she is in her 80th year, and is hoping that the time will soon come when we will be delivered from sin and sorrow by the Lord's coming. This is also our prayer, Sr. Wolf.

In renewing for the paper Bro. and Sr. Levi F. Coffin, Holloway, Mich., say, "We would not like to be without it as it seems like one of the family. We have always taken it. We find it as good as ever and sometimes better!"

Sr. Lucille LeCrone, pastor of the church in Blair, Neb., writes appreciatively of The Herald, and says that the influence of the paper is increasing in eastern Nebraska. Sr. LeCrone is an accomplished young woman, a graduate of the Bible Training School, and is doing a fine work in her home community, which is, as Jesus declared, the most difficult field in which to labor.

Bro. John Hammond of California, with his wife and daughter, Ruth, made an overnight call at Oregon recently. Bro. Hammond was asked to explain his very interesting interpretation of the book of Revelation while here. Owing to the unannounced nature of his visit, no public meeting was held. Bro. Hammond is a deep student of the Word and has given the most mysterious book of the Bible a great deal of devout study.

Particular attention is called to the "Code of Morals" adopted recently by the Grand Rapids church. It seems to us that this is a splendid idea and worthy of consideration by our churches everywhere. Read the code carefully on page 15.

Sr. Olive Wood of Riverside, Calif., reached Oregon last Friday and is now nicely settled in her room at Golden Rule Home. She attended church, Sunday school, and Berean meeting on Sunday, thus beginning her residence in Oregon with a full day of spiritual activity.

Orders continue to come in for the gospel number of last week, and we are glad to be able to fill them all thus far. Those who contributed articles to this number have reason to feel that their writings will be widely read and deeply appreciated.

Sr. H. E. Shepherd of Redlands, Calif., writes, "The paper is such a comfort to me alone as I am here in Redlands." The Herald is a visitor that brings cheer to many hundreds of alone ones.

The next special issue of the paper will be the Thanksgiving number. We would like to have this paper contain many short letters from our readers expressing their thanks to the heavenly Father for His goodness to us all. It would also be a splendid opportunity for us to show our appreciation with gifts to the general work. Who will be the first to respond to this suggestion?

An interesting letter from Bro. and Sr. Enos Elton of Tustin, Calif., tells of a home that is consecrated to the Lord. Bro. Elton feels that the attempts of the government to overcome the depression are almost futile, and that the only hope for world-recovery is the Lord's coming.

"Last evening we had the first good rain since spring," writes Sr. Ida M. Shepard of Madera, Calif., on Nov. 1. The climate of southern California is very much the same as that in Palestine.

"Mr. Harman has been having work of late, so we are very thankful to the Lord, for we know it is He that cares for us through this depression. We are trying to sacrifice all possible for the Lord's work," writes Sr. Russell Harman, Grabill, Ind. Bro. and Sr. Harman have been faithful supporters of the general work throughout the entire period of distress. But it was done by much sacrifice. Praise the Lord for such faithful brethren!

FROM MRS. RILLA RICHARDSON

The following letter from Sr. Rilla Richardson of Hudsonville, Mich., Rt. 2, is of such general interest that we feel we should give it space in The Herald. Writing under date of Oct. 30 to renew her subscription, Sr. Richardson says:

"I cannot afford to miss one copy of so valuable information on the signs of the times. It has been a regular visitor in our home for fifty-six years. I have had personal acquaintance with several of its (present) contributors, and also with others who are sleeping, and I feel it is a personal friend, a spiritual and intellectual adviser, and I dearly love the truths it advocates. I feel assured Christ's appearing is near as prophecy is nearly complete in consummation. And how I long for the change!"

Strictly speaking, of course, our present paper has not been published for the fifty-six years mentioned by Sr. Richardson; but its name and spirit and teaching are the same as those of its several predecessors of earlier years, and The Restitution Herald has come to be recognized as the rightful inheritor of the reputation, goodwill, traditions and teachings of the various publications of a similar nature that have gone before it. In this we feel it is the child of splendid parentage.

The forerunner of The Restitution Herald and its immediate predecessor, The Restitution, was founded by Joseph Marsh, the grand uncle of our present editor, in Rochester, N. Y., nearly ninety years ago. Since that time it has been published under the editorial supervision of various able men, including such revered names as Thomas Wilson, A. J. Chaplin, H. V. Reed, and others.

May the name RESTITUTION continue to hold out hope to the sorrowing until the Lord comes.

A TEACHER'S PSALM

For the joy of sharing what I know of Thee,
I give Thee thanks, O Lord.
For the opportunity of partnership with Thee,
I praise Thee, O my God;
For Thou hast placed before me Thy people
That I might instruct them.

And Thy little ones
That I might lead them.
Thou hast trusted me to lay my hands upon them,

And even as the skilled potter molds his clay
into a lovely vessel,
To shape their lives and make them beautiful.
I thank Thee, Lord, that Thou hast not left me unguided in my task,

That Thou hast given me for my help a Great Example,
Even Thine own Son, Jesus, mankind's greatest Teacher.

Oh, make my hands all gentleness, like His;
Oh, make me full of sympathy and quick to understand;

Oh, make my heart all love for Thee, and for Thy children!

Father, as a teacher of those whom Thou dost love, make me like the Christ.

Change of Address.—When ordering change of address be sure to send us both old and new addresses.

Receipts.—The change of date on your address label is your receipt. If date is not changed in two weeks after payment of subscription, please notify this office.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

THE GREAT SABBATH

"The Great Sabbath, or What Jesus Will Do When He Comes and Restitution Begins" is the title of a new and interesting tract of 28 pages by Elder J. H. Anderson. This excellent little work presents the Sabbath question from a new and refreshing viewpoint. For sale by the author, Elder J. H. Anderson, Michigantown, Ind., or J. H. Stepp, Dana, North Carolina, at Fifteen Cents per copy, postpaid.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed.

A CODE OF MORALS

THE South Lawn Park Church of God, Grand Rapids, Michigan, presents the following as their understanding of a basis for ideal Christian living. These points are not to be used as a test of fellowship, but it is our purpose and desire as a church to encourage our members constantly to grow nearer the perfect Christian character that would be manifested by observing these moral rules.

1. The use of profanity, vulgarity, and unclean speech is wrong and very much to be deplored.

2. The use of tobacco is looked upon as an unclean, lustful habit leading away from, rather than toward, godliness.

3. Dancing, especially the public dance, is considered an unchristian pastime, leading many to sensuous desires and lowering their lives. The ideal Christian will avoid this because of the possibility of others being led astray.

4. Card playing, using the uchre deck, is considered a bad example and unwise for the Christian worker. Beano and other gambling games and devices would also be avoided by the ideal Christian.

5. Attendance of shows and other places of amusement where the moral tendency is downward should be avoided. Especially should the Christian discourage the attendance of shows on Sunday.

6. Honesty and fairness in dealing with others is a necessary Christian characteristic.

7. Gossiping, or the unnecessary talking about the wrongs or mistakes of others, is considered one of the most serious offences. We urge each member to search for and endeavor to correct his own mistakes, and thereby to encourage others in Christian living.

8. Wine, beer, and other alcoholic drinks should never be used nor encouraged by the true Christian.

We ask all members to bear in mind that their first duty in life is to God and must be exercised in service to God's family, the church. We also feel that a true child of God will recognize that at least one tenth of his income belongs to the heavenly Father and should be used in religious work.

GOOD NEWS

I WISH that sermon Jesus preached upon this occasion had been recorded. It must have been wonderful, for it says, "And all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." Jesus never wandered from His text, He never generalized, He never indulged in the cowardly method of innuendo; Jesus always had a direct message from God to deliver to His hearers. So He began His sermon by a definite statement, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."

Dear brethren, when we write or preach the good news of the coming kingdom, let us follow Jesus in refraining from emphasizing "the day of vengeance of our God," but proclaim in clarion tones the good news that through the gospel God will "comfort all that mourn."

How much we hear and read these days about "the coming Armageddon." To my joy and surprise I find a writer says, "Armageddon in the Hebrew means the mountain of the gospel, or the mountain of fruits and abundance." So now when I hear some one with doleful face and tone read Revelation 16:16, I rejoice and almost shout for joy as I recall Isaiah 52:7: "How beautiful upon the mountains (the mountains of Armageddon) are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!"

Even Paul could not forbear and quoted part of this: "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things."—Rom. 10:15.

The World's Fair (A Century of Progress) opened my eyes as I went through the Hall of Science and the Hall of Religion and the Food Exhibit. I thought I understood Romans 8:18-23; but since I have seen the wonderful machines for use by those to whom "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" applies, I see how God's great heart of love is driving back the curse, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life."

As a boy, I worked with my grandfather upon a farm. We knew no other methods than those used back in the days of Ruth in the fields of Boaz. But now everything is done, or can be done, with machines, thus eliminating all laborious work; and as far as I know, probably God's hand may be in the present great national movement known as the NRA. The purpose of it is to increase wages and to shorten the hours of toil. Everywhere machinery is brought into requisition at every available point, so that one man can now produce what it took several men to do a few years ago.

God, it seems, is unloosing the pent-up powers of nature unknown to our fathers. Society is organizing itself among the various trades and professions, which will be the more easily handled by a dictator when the opportune moment arrives, and that is not far off. Thus God, through the experiences man is now passing through, is educating the masses, who will readily acquiesce to the new order when they recognize the government as under the Lord Jesus Christ and His saints.

A book written many years ago sums up the gospel in these words: "The great battle of Armageddon will be the greatest and fiercest ever fought by the sons of men on earth. Slavery was as the killing of a dog, despotism the slaying of a wolf; while the money power is the fiercest and most cruel tiger that prowls the forests of sin. But the Lion of the tribe of Judah, in that great contest on the battlefield of Armageddon, will lay the monster bleeding, dying and dead at His feet, and brotherly love shall triumph gloriously that day over selfishness and sin. The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor the lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh comes; and unto Him shall the gathering of the people be."

On the field of Armageddon, under Jesus Christ's sweet influence and example, men will choose brotherly love and renounce selfishness in every form. Then will the power of Satan be loosed from nature; the devil will be driven out of the world; and God will bind him and cast him into "the bottomless pit" and shut him up and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years are fulfilled (Rev. 20:3).

Isaiah, with a vision of things to come as clear as John's on the isle of Patmos, wrote of this time: "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."—Isaiah 55:12, 13.

"The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Isaiah 11:6-9.

"They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands." "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days. . . . And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them."—Isaiah 65:20-22.

"They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it."—Micah 4:3, 4. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."—Rev. 21:4. And Jesus shall see the travail of His soul, and be satisfied.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Heading Toward a Dictator

By George B. Alldridge

"Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him."—Ezekiel 38:2.

VISCOUNT SNOWDEN is one of Britain's ablest statesmen. Anything he may say is well worth listening to. An article in the Sunday Chronicle of September 3, 1933, addressed to the Trades Union Congress meeting at Brighton, England, warned them that "nothing which is happening in Germany, appalling as these things are, equals the tyranny and cruelty which is the ordinary routine of the Russian system of dictatorship—which the Trades Union Congress condones."

Twenty years ago a preacher holding membership in the Church of God who proclaimed that in a few years Europe, if not the whole civilized world, would be controlled by a dictator would have been laughed at by the intellectuals and branded as a "futurist," one who taught the setting up of an Antichrist, which in the light of the profound knowledge expressed and revealed in the writings of the intellectuals was a puerile doctrine. Brethren, it behooves us all in these wonderful days to keep our minds open and progressive, keeping step with our divine Master, realizing that we are now living in the day of His preparation.

Think a moment over these words, "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."—Daniel 2:44.

All Bible students of prophecy will agree that the times in which we are now living are hovering very close to those described by Revelation 17:12, 13: "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast." Note these are the elements who make war with the Lamb.

In the light of this, how significant are the words of the second Psalm: "The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his anointed." In the light of events now transpiring at Geneva—the disarmament crisis—I wonder if Obadiah 7, 8, and 9 have any significance?

You recall Ecclesiastes 3:14, 15: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past." Now let us quote Obadiah: "All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border; the men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee (Germany): they that eat thy bread have laid a wound under thee; there is none understanding in him."

The question now is, Will Germany abrogate the treaty she signed with her enemies at Versailles? If she does, then all thought of disarmament will be abandoned and there will be a general scramble to arm ready for the impending conflict. To show how the wind is blowing in this direction, Jewish chemists have informed the French Government that Germany is secretly manufacturing poison gas upon a large scale; to meet this intimidation, a firm of French chemists has discovered a poison gas so deadly that the formula for producing it they refuse to divulge, even to the French Government, unless France is invaded!

TO THEE, OUR LORD

To Thee, our Lord and Savior,
Our thankful hearts we raise,
In humble adoration,
In joyful songs of praise.
O draw us, loving Father,
To Thine own shelt'ring side,
For in Thy blessed keeping
We ever would abide.

Though sin and war and tumult
On every side may rage,

May we look up with rejoicing,

4,355,000 REASONS FOR CHRIST'S COMING

AND not one of them named in the Bible! It would not be difficult for us to enumerate a great many reasons for the Lord's coming from the Scriptures themselves, but here are nearly four and a half million reasons for His speedy return for which we need not look individually in the prophets of either the Old or New Testaments. And yet they are, perhaps, the most convincing of all arguments that can be brought to bear upon the people of the United States, for they have to do with that country exclusively. Almost limitless reasons of a similar nature might be advanced in all other lands of the earth, but these mentioned here are applicable to America and to America alone.

The World War failed to "make the world safe for democracy" or for any other form of government. The World Court, the League of Nations, and the many disarmament conferences have without exception proved ineffectual in their efforts to bring peace. Education, treaty-making, and even Christian efforts have been equally futile in this matter. Nothing that men have attempted by which they hoped to put an end to war has accomplished the purpose for which such efforts were planned, and we face today greater danger from a universal conflict than we faced in 1914!

On the fourth of March, 1917, Woodrow Wilson was inaugurated as president of the United States, having been elected, as was the case with the majority of congress of the same period, "to keep us out of war," which had been devastating Europe for nearly three years. But in just one month and two days after being inducted into office President Wilson was forced by pressure of public opinion to join the Allies in the great struggle.

The World War was never a "popular" conflict in this country, as were the Revolution and the War among the States, and it was immediately discovered that volunteer service would not be sufficient to provide the millions of soldiers that were required to overawe and defeat Germany and her allies. For this reason conscription was immediately put in force, and 4,355,000 men, the flower of our country's manhood, were impressed into the armies of the United States.

Of these millions of young men 126,000 died or were killed in action; 234,300 were wounded, and 4,500 were made prisoners or reported "missing" at the close of the war. Altogether our total casualties were 360,300.

Of course, our country entered the war very near its close, and the losses sustained were by no means so heavy as those of the nations which were engaged throughout its entire progress. The Allies mobilized a grand total of 42,188,810 men, of which more than five million were killed, nearly thirteen million wounded, and over four million prisoners or missing. The entire casualties among the Allies were 22,089,709, or 52.2 per cent of those in their armies.

In addition to these vast numbers of men engaged, killed, wounded, and missing, the Central Powers mobilized 22,850,000 men, and suffered from the death of 3,386,200; wounded, 8,388,448; and from prisoners and missing, 3,629,829. Their total casualties were 15,404,477, or 67.4 per cent of the men mobilized.

The loss in manhood to the world as a result of the war was: killed, 8,538,315; wounded, 21,219,452; prisoners and missing, 7,750,919; total, 37,494,186. This is 57.6 per cent of the 65,038,810 men mobilized for the war. Nearly 60 per cent were thus numbered as casualties.

Another great war is just in the offing; and in spite of all that men may do to prevent it, 4,355,000 (probably many millions more) will be demanded from American homes to carry it on! Your son, my son, the beloved sons of all the homes in our country, will be thrown into the maw of War. Nothing but the coming of Jesus Christ can put an end to war! "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

Morality and Christianity

By E. O. Stewart

A MORAL man is one who does not indulge in breaking the law of his country. A Christian is a follower of Christ.

The moral law is laid down in Exodus 20:13-17. It reads as follows: "Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour. Thou shalt not covet."

If there were a nation on earth today where none of these five commandments were broken, people would say, "There is a Christian nation." Because, generally speaking, that is man's conception of Christianity.

Let us go a step farther. Let us study carefully the case of Cornelius, in Acts 10. Cornelius was a devout man. He feared God with all his house. He gave much alms to the poor, and prayed to God always.

If you were to see an individual manifesting such fruits today as Cornelius manifested, would you not say, "There is a Christian"? I am sure that you would, almost to the man. It would offend you, perhaps, for anyone to tell you that such a devoted, God-fearing, praying man was not a genuine Christian.

This devout, praying man had not received the light that makes men Christians, or followers of Christ. Hence, he was told to send for Peter, who would tell him words whereby he and his house should be saved (Acts 11:14).

When Peter came to the house of Cornelius, he preached to them, telling them how Jesus had been crucified and raised the third day, and that whosoever would believe on Him should receive remission of sins (Acts 10:39, 43).

As Peter spoke these words, the Holy Spirit fell upon all them that heard the word. And the circumcised Jews that came with Peter were astonished when they heard them speak in tongues.

Why did they speak in tongues? Why did they receive the gift of the Holy Spirit before water baptism, contrary to the way Peter had preached it on the day of Pentecost? He had preached on the day of Pentecost, "Repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," Why had the Holy Spirit fallen on the Gentiles before water baptism, and why did they speak in tongues?

Paul explains that tongues are for a sign to the unbelievers. And these Jews who went with Peter did not believe that God would grant repentance to the Gentiles. Hence, the tongues were for a sign to those unbelieving Jews that God made no difference in Jews and Gentiles who believed in Christ.

WHAT MUST WE BELIEVE?

IN ORDER to be a follower of Christ, one must first believe in his heart that God raised Jesus from the dead (Rom. 10). After he has believed and confessed this, he must obey from the heart that form of doctrine which has been delivered by Paul (Rom. 6).

The gospel which Paul delivered first of all was that Christ had died for our sins, been buried, and been raised from the dead (1 Cor. 15).

How may we prove that we believe this gospel? "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."—Col. 2:12. "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 3:21.

After one has confessed with his mouth the Lord Jesus and believes in his heart that God raised Him from the dead, it becomes necessary to show his faith in God's power to raise him from the dead by answering that good conscience toward God in the act of baptism. In this one shows his faith in the miraculous operation of God, who has raised Christ from the dead, and by so doing one proves that he also believes that God will raise him from the dead.

Hence, Peter says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which . . . hath begotten us again unto a lively hope (a hope of living again) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 3:4.

What does the resurrection of Christ mean? It means everything pertaining to the kingdom and fu-

As Time Goes By

By E. O. Stewart

Once a man and twice a child,
A truthful saying goes:
Our life is but a little while;
It has its joys and woes.

From childhood days we pass to youth
Those care-free days of thrill;
'Tis there our fogy parents check
Our stubborn selfish will.

The parent knows, he's passed that way,
He sees the danger line;
He's not so fogy as you think:
Youth, keep this thought in mind.

Your parents think a lot of you;
They taught you how to walk;
They feel that you should reverence them
In action, deed, and talk.

Upon your arm they'll soon depend
For just a little while;
Then they will be what you have been,
Once more a helpless child.

ture life. Without His resurrection there could have been nothing but vain hope. He had been crucified and buried. His disciples had lost their hope in the redemption of Israel's kingdom, for they had trusted that it was He that should redeem Israel. Every hope had vanished as they beheld the great stone rolled in the entrance to the tomb where lay the One they had forsaken all to follow. He had been the friend of mankind. He had healed the sick, cleansed the leper, raised the dead, opened the blind eyes, fed the multitudes, and stilled the waves. But He had been conquered by His enemies, who had challenged His power to save Himself as He had saved others, and He had failed to do so. It seemed vain to hope in Him for any further aid.

But the third morning dawned, bringing strange messages to their dead ears. Women who were early at the sepulchre had reported His resurrection from the tomb.

They had seen Him and talked with Him, and knew beyond a doubt that He was alive.

Soon the disciples were convinced that He was alive, and they were aroused from their dead, hopeless condition, coming out of their graves, so to speak, begotten again unto a hope of living again by the resurrection of their Lord; and they went forth with glad tongues and appeared to many in the Holy City, telling them of His resurrection.

These are the things that a moral man must embrace in order to become a follower of Christ, or a Christian. Then he must live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ (Titus 2:12).

This hope realized will be the end of all our trials and disappointments. It will bring to our tongues glad songs of a new day, and we shall feel the very presence of the One who suffered and died that we might share His glory.

SHOW FORTH

"I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvellous works. I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High."—Psalm 9:1, 2.

THESE beautiful words follow the eighth Psalm in which the Son of man, our Lord Jesus Christ, is prophetically seen in His exaltation in the earth with all things put under His feet. The praise with which the ninth Psalm begins is the future praise of Israel, when that nation is redeemed and shows forth His marvelous works. Then this redeemed people will be indeed a praise in the earth. The nations of the earth and all creation will join in the "Hallelujah" of that glorious day, when earth's rightful King is manifested.

As long as this great consummation is not reached, God receives praise from those whom He has lifted into a more exalted position in His Son than the position which redeemed Israel will occupy in the age to come. To us who are in Christ He has given the nearest, the best, the highest place. And He looks for our appreciation, that we praise Him for it. As we enter with our hearts into the depths of redemption, so beautifully revealed in Ephesians, the Spirit of God, our indwelling guest, fills our hearts with worship and our lips with praise. What a blessed privilege to praise God at all times! And this we shall do if we contemplate the marvelous work He has done for us and the marvelous place into which He has brought us by His wonderful grace.

But our lives, our conduct among a perverse generation, a generation which are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, must show forth His marvelous work. It is no doubt the highest thing to praise and to worship the Lord, but that praise rendered in the spirit and truth will shape our conduct. What need there is in the perilous times of the last days, the days of worldliness among Christians, the days of indifference and a multitude of other things, for God's true children to remember that they are saved out of this present evil age! Not to be conformed to it, but to be transformed (Rom. 12:1, 2) is God's command to us. His Spirit will keep us and enable us to show forth in our conduct the marvelous work of redemption. While the masses run after the things that perish and love the world, we must show that we have a better hope, better things, and that it is a reality with us, "crucified unto the world, and the world crucified unto us."

In 1 Peter 2:1-10 we are called a holy priesthood and a royal priesthood. As holy priests we are to offer up spiritual sacrifices. This is praise, and it occupies the first place. And after we have exercised this holy priesthood in the presence of God, we are to be royal priests. As royal priests we are to go out to men, move among them, and show forth the excellencies of Him who has called us from darkness into His marvelous light. What an honor it is to be called to this! We are to represent our adorable Lord among men. That is what we are as Christians down here, representatives of Christ. Well may we hide our faces in shame and confusion when we all think of our failures. Well may we go before Him and weep over our stumbling walk. Yet He remains faithful. His light and love which shine upon us are undiminished. His power will overshadow us so that we can "shew forth his marvellous works." But oh, remember! it begins within. Let your heart be in His presence, and your feet will follow.—Selected by R. A. Curtis from Our Hope.

JUDAS, THE BETRAYER

IN ESTIMATING the mental and spiritual stature of a man we are inclined to focus our attention too much on what he accomplished and not enough on how he began. There are, to be sure, individuals who from birth appear to be set aside from the rest of mankind through their extraordinary capacities for good or evil. Such examples are, however, the exception rather than the rule. The great majority of those who in later life attract attention did not at first differ noticeably from their associates.

Now it has been customary in the Christian church to look upon Judas Iscariot as one of the most depraved of wretches, one of those exceptional instances who from the beginning was destined for an evil end. Admitting at the outset that any view almost universally accepted is likely to rest on a fairly solid foundation, the question nevertheless suggests itself whether Judas did not have more in common with mankind in general than the most of us are willing to admit. Isn't it possible that our reverence for his victim has caused us to exaggerate the inherent depravity of the betrayer? In other words, if Judas had betrayed one of his fellow disciples, would the world view him with anything like the same abhorrence?

Let us try to visualize the situation in which Judas found himself. We know very little about his early life, but Mark tells us not only that he was one of the twelve but also that he was called about the same time as the others. Now it would appear that these circumstances should throw some light on the personality of the man.

In the first place, it seems unlikely that Judas was a thoroughly vicious character. We can hardly imagine a soul completely abandoned getting any comfort out of a prolonged association with Jesus and the eleven, or for that matter being tolerated for any length of time by Him and His disciples. Thus it seems hardly credible that Judas Iscariot was by nature a thoroughly vicious personality.

In the second place, there is some question whether Judas was ever so completely obsessed by the desire for wealth as some would have us believe. If Judas was interested above everything else in the making of money, why didn't he follow some other trade or profession? It is extremely doubtful whether either teaching or preaching was much more lucrative, relatively speaking, in those days than it is now. There are many reasons why both these professions should appeal to thoughtful and idealistic people as well as to some others, but the fortunes that are being accumulated in those walks of life have rarely been among the inducements.

That Judas had an eye for money cannot be denied. The mere fact that he was, so to speak, the treasurer of the group throws some light on the matter. But that in itself certainly should not be counted against him. Apparently some one had to assume the responsibility for the funds of the group. Furthermore, as we can see from the attitude of the disciples toward the woman with the precious ointment, Judas was not the only one who thought in terms of shillings and pence. Finally, as far as the actual betrayal of his Master is concerned, Judas for reasons which will be indicated presently probably never dreamed that the outcome would be so tragic. The Master had escaped from His enemies so many times before, He undoubtedly would do it again; and if Judas could slip one over on the chief priests and incidentally increase the treasury by thirty pieces of silver, why not? The worst that can be said of him so far is a certain blindness to spiritual values, a readiness to play fast and loose with moral principles, a willingness to risk the welfare of his Master for immediate material gain.

Note also the reaction of Judas when he discovered that Jesus was condemned. When he realized what he had done, he "repented himself, . . . cast down the pieces of silver into the sanctuary, . . . and he went away and hanged himself." Disregarding for the moment the moral issues involved in suicide, the repentance of Judas and his subsequent despair indicate some survival of spiritual sensitiveness. Otherwise he would not have been disturbed by such emotions.

If this analysis of the character of Judas is at all correct, then he becomes typical of an attitude of mind only too prevalent in our own day, an attitude that does not at the outset intend to endanger spiritual values for the sake of material advantage, nor does it have any desire to sacrifice the welfare of humanity for personal gain; but—it isn't quite strong enough to resist the temptation of taking a chance and hoping that all may turn out all right in the end. Unfortunately, as in the case of Judas, sooner or later circumstances will go against the individual or group playing that kind of a game. Then there sets in the inevitable deterioration of moral fiber, which may not end in suicide, but which certainly will result in spiritual bankruptcy.

Last fall after the election a young man not a native of Iowa expressed his regret that the governor of his home state had not been re-elected. The youth, who had been entertained at the governor's country estate, had been duly impressed by the urbanity of his host and the magnificence of his surroundings. When the young man was reminded that the governor's diversion of state funds for his personal use had almost landed him in the penitentiary, the youngster merely shrugged his shoulders and replied, "What of it? They all do it."

As has already been indicated, an attitude of that kind is not necessarily vicious. It is not necessarily a mark of absolute depravity. But it does show a lack of appreciation for the spiritual values of life. It is a betrayal of the principles set forth by Christ. It is the brand of Judas.

A Picture of Our Civilization

By Norman John MacLeod

WE ARE a product of the living past. We are here because of it. We cannot separate ourselves from it, even if we would.

Why am I here at this moment? It is due to a series of circumstances and the way in which my ancestors acted toward those circumstances. Only by mere chance was I born in California. But not only by one chance, but by many of them. One of those is that a European discovered America; that particular group of Europeans, however, settled too far south because of the drift of ocean currents and the direction of the winds from Spain: otherwise, this nation would be Spanish, and I might never have been born outside the British Isles.

After many such historical circumstances my mother and father met in Canada, and after forming an acquaintance agreed to meet again either in California or Australia. He went to Wyoming for five years, she stayed in Canada. In the meantime one of my father's friends decided to go to California; they also happened to be friends of my mother. Hence, the toss of fortune decided that my parents would cast their lot in California, rather than in the far off island continent south of the equator.

Just why Pomona was chosen out of all the state of California might be a most interesting thing to analyze. At that time it presented little of the things that have made it peculiarly a city of churches, homes, and orchards. It was a bare tract of semi-desert land with little to attract the settler but a fertile soil. And just why choose California out of the whole world: that is fascinating to contemplate.

So we are all a product of the past and of the reaction of our parents to its circumstances. Just so is our civilization a product of the past. You are a picture (perhaps strangely and wierdly colored) of your past. Our civilization is a picture of the past. In order to understand the various parts of our lives and the things we do, we must understand our past. That does not mean that we cannot help the things we do, but it shows that we are decidedly influenced by our past. Certain things are determined in our lives beyond our power to add or detract, but we can determine how we will adjust our lives to those things.

Let us examine our civilization in the light of God's Word. He has given us a picture of our civilization in the book of Daniel. Nebuchadnezzar had a dream, even as you and I. But the dream left him. He was puzzled. What could it mean? Daniel came to his rescue. You know the story. Daniel, the man of God, could interpret the things of God; the king could not.

"Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."—Daniel 2:35.

Is that not true now? The people of God can understand the things of God better than the people who are acting as God's tools in enacting the drama of history. The man of God can stand aside and look at our civilization and understand it. He can gain comfort from the things of God, even though man is making a failure of handling his own affairs.

One thing in the image has impressed Bible students: the image as a whole stood there and was struck on the feet. Men in examining this part of the story have expected that the nations would live again. That either those same people would be resurrected and come back to reenact the scenes of history or that those same institutions would be recreated by another people are two of the common explanations.

But neither one of them is necessary. The whole image stands on its feet today. It is a picture of our civilization. Our civilization is a product of the intermingling of those represented there. Our science is a conglomeration of the astrology of Babylonia and Persia with some of the truly scientific findings of Greece and Rome added thereto. It is a mixture of truth and superstition. Our government is a thing of long growth in mismanagement from Nebuchadnezzar to Franklin Roosevelt. It was aptly called "Leviathan" by that great English philosopher, Thomas Hobbes. Our social customs and our learning are a product of those habits which have been ingrained into us from various parts of the past that we have inherited. Our etiquette bespeaks outworn customs of a very remote past. Yet how tenaciously we cling to such things.

Our religion is not completely and solely a pure Christianity by any means. In fact, our minds are so completely saturated in pagan tradition that it is difficult for us even by a study of the Bible to find out just what real Christianity was in many of its particulars. So overlaid has Christianity been with pagan customs and traditions, to say nothing of those added by the Jews, that only with great difficulty can we penetrate to the real Christ beneath all that rubbish. The whole system of our culture stands today ready to be struck in its weakest point, the kingdoms that exist at the present day.

If those ancient kingdoms were to stand and be struck down by the stone yet to come, then the stone would have struck the image in the most logical part—the head. But it struck the feet because that was the particular group of governments that should be in existence at that time. "In the days of these kings," says the account in Daniel.

Civilizations last, though kings pass and kingdoms crumble. Though the ancient city of Babylon lies buried beneath the crumbling ruins of other later cities covered over by the desert sands, its civilization is still ours. Every time we count eggs by the dozen or figure things on the basis of the seven day week we are living according to Chaldean tradition.

And so we could trace the trail of Leviathan through the things that we do. Those things which have become habits with us are hard to change. Only with the greatest efforts at salesmanship do we finally discard an awkward way of doing things because our ancestors have done them that way. Even the dynamic personality of Theodore Roosevelt and his great popularity could not persuade us to simplify our spelling of many words. Why? Simply because of habits!

But elements of Egyptian civilization are still ours: our system of Latin letters which we use can be traced to its origin in Egyptian symbols chiselled on the walls of the pyramid tomb temples. Assyrian theories of government and military tactics as well as their interest in the stars and moon are found in our modern science and government today. Why not, then, include them in the dream of Nebuchadnezzar? Why did God leave them out?

Many Bible students have said that it was just the universal empires that were included. If that explanation be accepted, then Chaldea should have been left out and Egypt and Assyria included, for the latter two kingdoms were far more universal in their scope of territory than the other. Some have said that because of their control of the land of Palestine or the nation of Israel were they found represented in the image. If that were accepted, then Turkey should very definitely have found her place there, as well as the Saracenic Empire and modern Britain. In fact, some more prominent Bible students have tried to find these latter empires in the image by some symbolism or another.

Those particular empires were chosen because it was a vision given for the enlightenment of the people who were trodden down by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The people of God from Daniel's time onward would not be especially concerned in the things of the past: the persecutions through which we have passed are never so troublesome as those of the present or those that we are anticipating. The book of Daniel was given for a comfort to those who were suffering under the cruel persecutions of the nations of that time. Why, then, are we interested in fulfilled prophecy?

At General Conference this summer interest was shown in fulfilled prophecy beyond the expectation of the teacher. Why? Because it is the desire of each one of us to know just where we are in the stream of time. Just what things in the books of prophecy are fulfilled? That will give us a good indication of what is left to look for to come on the earth.

My interest in prophecy has been largely in that field for that reason. If we can turn over the pages of Holy Writ and say this has been fulfilled, or can say with Christ,

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears," we are satisfied that that thing is not yet to come.

Will Roosevelt be the last president of the United States? He said himself that if the Recovery Act fails of performance in bettering conditions and bringing them back to normal he would be the last president of the United States. That statement might be interpreted in several ways: that disaster has overwhelmed the United States and its civilization is doomed; or that because of the failure of other expedients he will set up a dictatorship; or that because of the failure of those expedients a revolution will come.

Our particular interest in the study of past tense and present tense prophecy is "how long shall these things be?" If we are to take the word of the president, we can be almost certain that he will be the last chief executive of the United States. His expedients cannot bring back normal conditions. Normal conditions are part of the security promised by the Word of God to come when Christ sets up His kingdom. They cannot come before then.

Neither Roosevelt's nor any other person's expedients can change the picture of civilization. It was given to us many years ago. It was set in a mold of disaster long before Franklin Roosevelt was born. Neither he nor any other man can direct "Leviathan"; only God through His Son can do that.

But the most comforting thing about fulfilled prophecy is that we can see by it that God fulfills His word. God does not change. "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"—Num. 23:19. We are sure that His promised word will be done just as surely as He gives it. The finger of God points to events as certainly as anything that can be.

We may differ on fine points of the image of Daniel; we may think that one thing or another is true; but we are certain that when the times of the kings there illustrated come to a close, when their wickedness is come to the full, when the harvest is ripe, then will God put in His sickle and the winepress overflow, for the wickedness of man is great. When wickedness comes to the full, then will the picture of our civilization be changed and our world undergo a complete revolution that will bring in the time of peace and prosperity for which we are all longing, when "the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem"; when the "lame man (shall) leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."

"The King in His beauty is coming,
His form soon descending we'll see,
Attended with hosts of bright angels,
Lo, Zion is waiting for Thee.

"Our harps, which have hung upon willows,
Shall be strung anew to Thy praise;
In shouts of thanksgiving and honor,
To Thee, King of beauty, we'll raise."

IS GOD PARTICULAR?

By D. G. Harvey

"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Proverbs 14:12.

IN THIS age of many beliefs or creeds the question often arises, "Does it matter what I believe? Is God particular?"

At one time I heard a minister declare, "The way to the kingdom of God is much like the roads to any large city. There are many roads, but all reach the same goal."

But is God particular?

Perhaps I sacrifice many so-called pleasures of this world; perhaps I sacrifice much for the church, both time and wealth. Is that the all-important? "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice."

Consider Adam, our first parent. Did he sacrifice? Yes, even life itself; but he did not obey. Was God particular?

Cain—did he not sacrifice? Ah, yes, of the "fruit of the ground"; but it meant nothing. Was God particular?

Saul was commanded to destroy all the Amalekites and all their cattle, but he reserved the best of the sheep and cattle for sacrifice. Then it was that the Prophet Samuel spoke those words of truth, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." And Saul was rejected as king of Israel. Was God particular?

Jehovah has given us certain requirements. They must be met. Does it make any difference? Do they matter so much? Did it matter to Adam? Cain? Saul? Does it matter to you?

God has promised you the highest reward, a work of honor, and a King and Priest. He has promised to teach you all things.

But you must meet the requirements.

Before one can have faith in God, he must first have knowledge of the existence of the Deity. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is."—Heb. 11:6. As we understand Paul's reasoning in Romans 10:14, one must hear first before he calls on God. One may see in the work of Nature the hand of a supreme Power, but one must know that God before he feels the need of repentance.

Faith in God increases faith in God's Word. With that faith (confidence) the Bible becomes the guide in the Christian's life.

Our next requirement is repentance (Acts 3:19). To repent is to regret the past sinful acts and reform. "Surely that is all that is required," reasons man. But is God particular?

You must now show your faith and repentance by the third requirement, baptism (Acts 2:38). But why be baptized? "For the remission (forgiveness) of sins." "Surely that must be all," reasons man. "My sins are forgiven, there is nothing against me." No, nothing against him and nothing to his credit. He stands a blank. Is God particular?

The next requirement is the hardest step of all. Our duty henceforth is to be worthy of our Lord, our Example. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. 12:1. "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love."—Eph. 4:1, 2.

Baptism is only the starting point in the life of the Christian, never a goal. You and I, after baptism, are under a new law. "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."—Eph. 4:14, 15. "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen."—2 Peter 3:18.

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." Is God particular? Which will you choose, the way of God or the way of man?

In all thy debates let truth be thy aim, not victory or an unjust interest.—William Penn.

DANGEROUS DELAY

By Charles Martin

ONE Sunday night in a small church where a minister was conducting a revival meeting, using the subject, "The Name of Christ and Things Concerning That Name," he noticed a small group of possibly twenty-three sitting in a corner. The odd thing was that they appeared to be of the high school age, and he wondered how many were Christians.

The next night these same youths were again together; and, as he was speaking on the subject of "Baptism," he wondered if any of these had the true water baptism as set forth by the Word of God. Determining to know them better, he decided to get them to remain a few minutes and have a talk with them. So on finishing his discourse he passed quickly to the place where they had been sitting and, after a few preliminary remarks, he brought forth the question, "How many of you have become Christians?" Of the entire group only four had accepted Christ as their Savior.

In talking he asked how many believed the things contained in the Scriptures. Six replied that they could not accept the Bible because it was not in harmony with science; others said that it did not satisfy them for the reason that, since men died and were buried, it would do no good to deny themselves the pleasures of life. He promised to relieve their doubts on this matter, so the next evening his subject was, "Resurrection," showing that all living and dead could be placed in the state of Texas; and they saw by his figures that it was possible, and two requested baptism.

The next evening his topic was, "The Kingdom: Where, When, and Who Will Be There?" This seemed to please some, as he had three more candidates for immersion.

One said that she believed and intended to be baptized, but not at this particular time; but she would before the meetings were closed. One girl standing a little apart from the rest seemed to be worried over something, but would not say what it was at the church.

Later, in talking to her chum, she said that she wanted to do right and be baptized, but every time something seemed to say, "Not now," or, "Wait a few days," and, "It means you can't have good times," so she decided to wait for a month or so.

After the meeting closed, three days later the minister was driving down a paved road on his way to a town a few miles away. Around 3:30 or 3:45 he approached a large school and slowed down; and, seeing his young brothers and sisters in Christ, he decided to stop and chat with them. The others entered a school bus; and the driver, not knowing they were not all in, drove rapidly away.

The minister then decided to overtake the bus, which was some distance away, and drove rapidly behind. They were still in the outskirts of the city when he saw the bus suddenly fall over on its side and noticed at the same instant a large red object which had come dashing from behind a large row of business houses. On closer inspection it was seen to be a large steel interurban which was a few minutes late and running fast to make up the lost time.

He was by this time upon the scene of the accident. The air was filled with moans of those in mortal agony and pleadings of those who were imploring God to help them. They had not accepted Him when in health, but had waited until the moment of death to call upon Him. Later, those who were injured and placed in the hospital were called by the grim Reaper; and only those who had been left at the school were left alive. Truly it is written of life, "It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."

What if you were to come face to face with death suddenly, as this group did? Are you ready for death to claim you as its slave until He comes to release all that are in the grave, or are you as the one who keeps putting it off till some better time? Remember, this is the day of salvation, and delay is dangerous.

You may come face to face with death any second or anywhere at the time when you least expect it. May you all be prepared to face death and say, "Christ has bruised the heel of death, and I know that in due season it will be destroyed and all who are worthy escape from its chains to live forever with the Man of sorrows."

THE FUTURE AGE

By Mrs. L. H. Chase

Oh, when will righteousness prevail?
Oh, when will sin and sorrow cease?
Not till Jesus comes to reign,
Lord of life, and Prince of peace.

Oh, come, Lord Jesus, quickly come,
And take the scepter in Thy hand;
And cause the nations, every one,
To bow the knee at Thy command.

Then will the law from Zion go,
Bid all the nations to draw near;
Up to Jerusalem they'll go
To worship Christ once every year.

'Tis then the prophets will awake,
And from their dusty beds will sing,
And Abraham, with all the saints,
Shout victory o'er death and sin.

He will the earth restore for man
And in the garden plant the tree—
The Tree of Life: oh, that's God's plan,
The leaves shall for the nations be!

No sickness then will there appear,
Neither shall lovely infants die;
But sinners at an hundred years
Under the curse of God shall lie!

Then scattered Israel will return;
To their own land them Christ will bring,
And then as subjects they will learn
To worship Him, their Lord and King.

He whom they pierced will they behold!
And deeply mourn for what they've done;
And, as the prophets have foretold,
No longer will reject God's Son.

Then David's throne He'll build again;
The ruins thereof He'll restore,
That Gentiles, too, may seek His name,
And worship Him for evermore.

vocate*, 1867.

“THE ancients marveled at the bubbling spring; some went so far as to worship fountains. Much is made clear, however, when we know that behind these welling springs are great reservoirs of water, far back in the hills. God is the great reservoir of the ages, and in the Lord's Supper we place ourselves in an attitude to receive of His fullness.”

Abreast of the Times

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:21. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42:9.

Jews Flocking to Palestine

"So shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men."—Ezekiel 36:38.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 31.—It is estimated that since the beginning of the present year 50,000 Jews have emigrated into Palestine from Europe alone. This influx is said to coincide with the period of persecution inaugurated by the Nazi government in Germany, a large proportion of the emigrants being from that country.

During the year 1932 Palestine had a net increase in the Jewish population of approximately 10,000 as compared with 3,000 in 1931. The total increase in the past two years is seen to be at least 60,000. The first nine months of the present year saw twice as many Jews enter Palestine from Europe as the entire Jewish population of the Holy Land numbered forty years ago.

British Battle Arabs at Jerusalem

"In that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people."—Zechariah 12:3.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 29.—British police battled twice against crowds of excited Arabs who were demonstrating against increased immigration of the Jews into Palestine. The first clash today, according to Associated Press dispatches, took place at the Damascus gate (through which Paul passed on his journey that resulted in his conversion) this morning, and the second this afternoon at the Jaffa gate.

Arab rioting has continued for more than a week in various parts of the country; a number of Arabs have been killed and many more injured. A corps of special constables is being enrolled for duty in Palestine cities, including Jerusalem, Jaffa, and Haifa. "The end is not yet."

Making Drunkards for Profit

"Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink."—Isaiah 5:11.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—One of the most astonishing acknowledgments ever made by government officials concerning the success of the 18th Amendment was made today by Dr. J. M. Doran, Commissioner of Industrial Alcohol, when he predicted, according to The Chicago Tribune, that Americans will drink only 80 million gallons of hard liquors in the first year after repeal, less than half the record for pre-prohibition years, because "the steady drinker has vanished since the days of John Barleycorn."

"In the heyday of the wet era it was the habitual drinker . . . who kept corks popping and taxes tinkling into the government till," Dr. Doran declared. The college boy drinker of today, with his cocktail parties and intermittent "bats," is regarded by Dr. Doran as a less dependable source of consumption and taxes than the pillar of the old saloon. "A habit is a habit and doesn't spring up overnight," the commissioner said in explaining his low consumption estimate. When the country was drinking 100 to 160 million gallons of whiskey, brandy, rum, and gin before prohibition, most of it was going to habitual drinkers, according to Dr. Doran.

Curing Boys of Crime

"The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."

WARWICK, N. Y., Nov. 11.—In this little town of less than 3,000 population is located the State Training School for Boys. This institution, which was recently dedicated, is conducted along no traditional lines. Its youthful "students" are subjects of intensive study of a staff of specialists including psychiatrists, physicians, and criminologists from the New York Medical Center. It has been found that the cause of delinquency in boys is frequently to be traced to some physical source.

The Literary Digest relates this story illustrating the purpose of the school:

"And then the teacher whacked me on the knuckles," sobbed the boy.

"What was the matter?" asked the parent, of rare understanding and patience.

"I don't know. I kept adding up wrong and my head hurt."

"One of the devil's own brood," said the teacher privately. "The boy's incorrigible, a malingerer. He won't pay attention," said the teacher to the parent.

"Sinus trouble," said the doctor, after an examination. "No wonder he adds up wrong."

When the Great Physician comes with His healing power and takes away sin, no one will say, "I am sick."

"We All Hope to Come"

"Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come."—Acts 26:7.

CHICAGO.—"Saturday night we said good-bye to three chalutzim, the first to leave Chicago for Palestine. We wish them a happy journey. We know they will find satisfaction in that land to which we all hope to come." The Daily Jewish Courier comments thus of the deathless hope of Israel, the return to the land of the fathers.

FORGIVENESS

“But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.”—Mark 11:26.

WHAT an important if, and what a momentous promise depends on obeying that one command! Surely nothing could be more necessary to any man than God's forgiveness. Without it, the utmost measure of righteousness to which he could attain would be as nothing, for he is lost without God's grace and love.

Sometimes we forget about our duty in forgiveness. We have faith in God's great goodness, and never doubt that He is willing to pardon every sin of ours. We murmur, “Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors,” never realizing that if we were forgiven in exactly that manner, we might not be forgiven at all.

It is not easy to forgive an offense against us, but on the other hand, it is hard to contemplate without misgivings the dire results of not doing so. Sometimes we find people admitting without shame, even with pride, the fact that they have been offended, and the offender is not forgiven. But they go to church every Sunday, and possibly even to prayer meeting. It is easy enough to disobey, but isn't it dangerous?

THE BIBLE

THE BIBLE, like its Author, is not the “I Was,” but the “I Am,” the immediate, the present ever new, not in mere words, but with perfect consistency in highest life and thought. It is indeed a pitiable subject to hear certain people crying to make out by violent language, which they mistake for reasoning, that the Bible is obsolete, a garment not fit for this day's wearing, but worn out. Some may wish this; preachers are not ashamed to do this! They have lived on this old Book all their lives; it has kept them and their family in food and lodging for five and thirty years, and yet they have nothing to say about it, and would rather read Tennyson than Isaiah! They like the last book out, which they do not understand, or the last novel, which is a cruel hemlock or strychnine to the soul. What are they? Swindlers and faithless ones, who mislead the innocent, hirelings who hunger for the prey which they should guard, bandits who steal the young and unsuspecting. I can respect in some grim fashion the infidel, who blas-phemes and who rejoices in his pillage; but the man in the pulpit who insults the very Bible on which he lives and reviles the profession which he has climbed—I charge that man with worse crimes than blackened Barabbas or damned Iscariot.—Joseph Parker.

MY RESPONSIBILITY

TO BE a friend in need, regardless of trials and persecutions; to be willing to help him who requires aid, regardless of my own desires; to be humble, to be meek, to be joyous in service; to take pleasure in forgiving those who injure me and to seek the good in those who are my enemies; to see the beautiful in life and to ignore the sordid; to be honest, courteous, and truthful in spite of petty irritations; to walk ever in the steps of the Messiah; to observe the golden rule in all particulars; to do my best to make peace among those who quarrel; to educate myself and to maintain my health so that my service will be of the best; to lend all of my talents, whatever they may be, to the work of God; to trust those who are my friends and brothers in the church in spite of widespread gossip; to grant aid to the fallen and to encourage him to rise; to pour the healing balm of Christianity upon the damage wrought by sin: herein is my responsibility.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS

FOR the nineteen years of its existence the National Berean Society has endeavored to fulfill the object expressed by its constitution: to aid young people and their associates in Bible study.

Passing time has brought decided changes in the religious world. It is no longer possible to argue successfully with people on their beliefs in the Bible; if they possess any knowledge of it at all, they must be approached from the angle from which political propaganda is issued—with an interesting story; a whimsical article; but above all something, anything, that from the outset will grip attention.

With this idea the Society is publishing a series of tracts for free distribution, tracts which it attempts to keep in both appearance and style modern, interesting, and as good literature as non-professional writers can make them. Order a supply. They will be mailed postpaid.

PREACHING AND LIVING THE GOSPEL

PERHAPS most of you boys and girls who read this page live in the smaller towns or in the country. But all of you have been in a large city often enough to know that there is a great deal of confusion there, at least to the outsider. People seem to be rushing hither and yon, bent on work, pleasure, kind deeds, mischief, and what not! If you stand to one side and watch, you can't help but wonder what it's all about.

Paul, our beloved missionary, had come in his journey to another great city—a city much like one of the big cities of our day. And we imagine we see him standing to one side watching the faces of the people passing by. You know, Paul understood people very well, and he could look down into their hearts and feel their needs, their sorrows, and their joys.

This preacher had a great deal of love in his heart for people. And as he studied this new city in which he was going to labor, he saw in the faces of its men and women just the sort of lives they were living. Our faces, you see, are mirrors of our hearts; they show what we think, what we do, and what we are.

Haven't you sometimes passed some one on the street who was a stranger to you, and yet you felt you knew that person had a kind heart because of the look on his face? Another perhaps showed a sour and grumpy disposition just by his expression. That's just what Paul could do, read people's character, only so much better than we can.

One of the first things Paul did was to find a quiet little spot in the midst of bustling Corinth for his home. And it was with two dear Christian workers who made their living by the same trade he did. As you grow older you will learn that you will always find friends wherever you go, friends who help and cheer you over the hard spots, if only you do your part.

Can you see these three who loved Jesus surrounded by people who knew nothing about Him? There was a big task before them, for as in all big cities there was so much to take time and attention from better things. And Paul would perhaps often have been discouraged had he depended upon himself alone.

But Paul had One to lean on who had all power, who told him just exactly what to do and say, and who healed him when he was worn out from long journeys and rough treatment. Read verses 9 and 10 of Acts 18, and learn how his unseen Helper cheered him in Corinth.

If God told Paul not to be afraid, he needn't worry even though he should be arrested and taken into court. If God told him that he should go ahead and preach about Jesus, he wouldn't hesitate even though the envious Jews plotted against him. And if God told him no man should set on him to hurt him, he couldn't stop preaching even though he was accused falsely.

And all these things did happen to him! But nothing could shake Paul's faith in the God he worshiped, nor cause him to stop telling people all about Jesus and His love. For, you see, Paul lived just what he preached; he himself followed the great Example which he set before others.

Verse 11 tells us that Paul stayed in Corinth a year and a half, teaching the Word of God. What do you think were some of the things he taught? How new all these things were to the people of Corinth, who had given their lives over to all sorts of sin and wickedness! But we read that "many hearing believed, and were baptized."

From those few words we know Paul taught them that Jesus died for their sins, that by believing and obeying they would be forgiven, and that Jesus had risen from the dead to be their ever-living Savior. We know Paul explained to them just how going down into the water and coming up again represents Jesus' death, burial, and resurrection.

They were shown also that God expected them to live a different life after coming up out of the water, for they were called "new creatures in Christ Jesus" after baptism. It wasn't so easy for them either, but they had the same Helper to lean on that Paul had.

PAUL IN CORINTH

Acts 18:1-17; 1 Corinthians 1:1 to 2:8

Devotional Reading: 1 Corinthians 13

GOLDEN TEXT

I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.—1 Corinthians 2:2.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul in Corinth.

Aim: To show that divisions in the church and contentions in the family are detrimental to success.

Basic Truth: "Foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes."—2 Timothy 2:23.

I. Paul Warns Against Divisions. (1 Cor. 1:10-18.) Jesus Christ is the uniting link that binds all the members of His body together. To maintain that unity the purity of the gospel must not be impaired by the teaching of men. Misunderstandings may and do arise at times which are due to the inability of all men to see alike on any given question. Such disagreements are sometimes apparently unavoidable. But divisions that are brought about by human leaders are always unjustified. When one says, "I am of Paul," and another, "I am of Apollos," and still a third, "I am of Cephas," all three are committing sin. Christ alone stands as supreme Leader of the church. No other leadership must be allowed to separate the members of His body. Teaching, preaching, admonishing, and baptizing must all be done in the name of Jesus Christ. Individual preferences for certain ones must not be permitted to stand in the way of the progress of the Lord's work among men.

II. Paul Teaches Simplicity in Preaching. (1 Cor. 2:1-5.) Education of the highest order is desirable in the ministry. The broader and more complete his educational background is, the better fitted the minister will be for the task before him. Yet it is not desirable that he make a parade of his learning. In fact, quite the reverse is true. The more simply and plainly he states the conditions and the rewards of salvation, the more fully will he meet the purpose of his call to service. Education should help him to do this. The necessary truth of the gospel is not complex. The only object of Christian teaching is to express in such a way that all can understand the gospel of the kingdom of God and to impress upon men its value and the necessity of believing and obeying its provisions in baptism and in a life of service before God.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Unity of Speech: The confusion following the attempted building of the tower of Babel was very like the confusion in most church organizations of the present day. Not that humankind means to cause confusion. Quite the contrary. But in our short-sightedness we do not see beyond the man who brought us the gospel message to the Divine Power.

"Brother Doe baptized me, and he always interpreted this text thus."

"But I am sure Brother Doe is weak in his knowledge. Brother Green taught me this other way before he baptized me, and I have never had occasion to change my mind."

As the argument waxes hotter, the unconverted man on the side lines decides that "if those who have been baptized do not agree, there can be no purpose in it all." Had A and B talked on numerous texts on which they agreed and studied to learn the mind of God, they would have grown closer together and C would not have been driven away.

Unity of Purpose: Perhaps the underlying cause of all this is a failure on the part of the teacher to impress God on the mind of his hearers rather than self. For the unlearned in the Bible there are a few great principles to be taught as the Word of God explains them. And the teacher of the Word is responsible to man before God for carrying these things to the world. If the teacher fails to convince the hearer that God is to be heard and served, not the teacher, then there is a lack. The one who says, "I shall stop going to Sunday school if you move away," may be expressing his feeling, but he is revealing a weakness in the teaching.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

Paul seems to have been a very conscientious man; and, as he had been chosen to carry the gospel to the Gentiles, he did his work well; therefore, he shut out the worldly things and set his mind on Christ and Him crucified, for that was the basis of all his teachings. In fact, it is the basis of all gospel messages.

If Christ is taught, it is His crucifixion and resurrection that counts; if the kingdom is preached, it depends on His death and resurrection. If life beyond the grave is set forth, again we must depend on the crucifixion and resurrection. In fact, not a single thing can be taught about the future life and the kingdom without building it around Christ's life, His crucifixion, and His resurrection. No wonder Paul wanted to know nothing else.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

There should and must be a strong bond of unity among members of God's true church. Before the day of Pentecost they "all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication," and on Pentecost they were "all with one accord in one place." Later in the day three thousand were added to the church, "and they continued stedfast in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers . . . and all that believed were together, and had all things common." "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul." See Acts 1, 2, 3, 4. Later Paul taught that "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—Gal. 3:28. To the Ephesians he wrote: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."—Eph. 4:11-13. In the sixteenth verse he speaks of the church as a body "fitly joined together and compacted." "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body . . . For the body is not one member, but many. . . . But now are they many members, yet but one body."—1 Cor. 12:13, 14, 20. Because of this unity there "should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it."—Vv. 25, 26.

There should be unity of teaching among God's people. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."—1 Cor. 1:10. One might add other ways in which there should be unity.

Following Jesus, Not Some Man

At the time of our lesson today there seemed to be some trouble in the church at Corinth. Paul heard of it and wrote to them.

The people in the church had become divided. Some said they were followers of Paul; others, followers of Christ; and so on. And trouble immediately followed.

Paul said, "Was Paul crucified for you?" or, "Were you baptized in Paul's name?" Now of course they were not. Jesus was the one who had been crucified for them and in to whose name they had been baptized.

He taught them that they should all follow Jesus and not any preacher.

We have those things happening today. Some say, "Oh, I'm not going to Sunday school. I just don't like that teacher." And we forget that that teacher has been trying hard to teach us about Jesus and what He wishes us to do.

Keep in mind what Paul said to the people at Corinth. Remember that we go to church and Sunday school to learn, not just to be entertained by some one whom we think is especially nice.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

BOSWORTH, MISSOURI

Bro. F. L. Austin has just closed a series of meetings at this place, beginning October 15 and closing November 3.

There has not been so good attendance nor so much attention given by those out of the Faith in a number of years as during these meetings. Everyone seemed sorry to see the meeting close. They expressed themselves by word and action.

I hope if time runs on and our lives are spared Bro. Austin can be with us again.

Frances W. Williford, Sec.

NIAGARA FALLS-FONTHILL

The meetings at Welland came to a close on Saturday night, Oct. 28. A splendid interest prevailed throughout the series. To many the teachings were entirely different from anything they had ever heard. The prospects are very bright in this new field. It was our pleasure to meet many new friends, and they are of a class that is anxious to know the truth that makes us free. All attending the services were anxious for regular work to be carried on. We hope arrangements can be made so this desire can be met. Pray for the continued efforts in this field.

Studies on Revelation were resumed with the Fonthill church on Monday, Nov. 6. The Falls Bereans, also, are studying Revelation.

Adna E. Hoskins, who assisted with the Welland meetings, went with the pastor, C. E. Randall, on the evening of Friday, Nov. 3, to Lancaster, N. Y., where a service was held for the church members there.

Sr. Congdon, Syracuse, N. Y., attended the Fall Meeting held at Niagara Falls on October 29. Sr. Lilian Railton and her sister, Mrs. Guest, returned to the latter's home at Fredonia, N. Y., following the Fall Meeting. They planned to go on to Cleveland to visit relatives and friends.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The regular monthly board meeting was held November 6. The business end of the church work is being carefully attended to. A nominating committee has been chosen and will be ready for a report at the yearly business meeting and election of officers the first Friday in December. A very noticeable development in the members of the board has been evident the past year. Fuller and deeper realization of the duties and responsibilities of the various officers has brought admirable changes.

The ability of our choir is beginning to attract attention, and they have been asked to sing at functions at other places.

God is being good to us, and we appreciate His favors deeply.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BLANCHARD, MICHIGAN

Since September 16 it has been my pleasure to work among the good people at Blanchard, Mich. At present we are having preaching at both morning and evening services in the church, and on Thursday evening at a schoolhouse southwest of Blanchard—the Shepherd School. We find that people both in and out of the faith are thirsty for light on the events of the near future, the events surrounding the second coming of Christ.

My stepfather and mother, Bro. and Sr. J. E. Hammond, and my sister Ruth of Anaheim, Calif., were here on October 22. Bro. Hammond gave a lecture on his chart which is designed to explain the book of Revelation at the morning service. We were very much interested and would have liked him to tell more about it at the evening service, but an auto accident rather shook up the family and prevented it.

I accompanied them to points in Indiana the following week. We found the folks at Bremen as hospitable as ever and going strong in the Wednesday evening Berean class led by Sr. Senff. They are also much interested in Revelation, and were very attentive to Bro. Hammond and his chart. We enjoyed a short visit in South Bend, also.

At Burr Oak Bro. Sydney Magaw was holding a series of meetings, and we enjoyed an evening there.

The people at Kokomo were gathering at the church Friday evening when we arrived there. Bro. Hammond gave the chart lecture. The enthusiastic turn-out called to mind the week's meetings held there in September. Kokomo is a factory town, and work is scarce; but the Lord's work goes bravely on. We hope to be there again soon for another series.

I was glad for the privilege of attending the seventh church birthday of our Grand Rapids church. The building was simply packed full, including the aisles and platform, when the people crowded in from classes. I had heard it was that way, but one must be there to realize it. The Lord is blessing them with a great physical and a fine spiritual growth. It was good to meet with the Knights of Abraham and to see the wooden sword, symbolic of their use of that greater Sword of the Spirit. It was a pleasure to see some of the folks from Blanchard there drinking in the inspiration of the day.

The song service conducted by the ladies one night recently proved very true to form in all that was done, being appropriate and inspiring.

In conclusion I want to say it is a critical time here as every place else, and we so much need the help of God and the mutual helpfulness and fellowship of others of like precious faith. So pray for us and for the success of God's work in Blanchard.

Cecil A. Smead, Pastor.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Special meetings at the Burr Oak, Ind., church began October 24 and closed November 5 with Bro. Sydney Magaw of Tippecanoe City, Ohio, as speaker. Bro. Magaw brought us some wonderful messages of truth upon which we shall feast for days to come.

On November fifth an all-day meeting was held with a basket dinner at noon. We were pleased to have with us friends from Bremen, Plymouth, and Nappanee. We were surprised and pleased to have Bro. Earl Thayer of Rockford, Ill., with us. He gave us an inspiring message in the afternoon.

It was a very beautiful and touching scene when many friends gathered at the river after the afternoon services when three young girls, Mary Belle Osborn, Marjorie Hatten, and Margaret Overmyer walked bravely into the cold water and were buried with Christ in baptism by Bro. Magaw. We pray God's guiding arm may be around them to keep them lest they should fall.

Mrs. Mary Hatten.

From October 24 to November 5 it was our privilege to work with the Church of God at Burr Oak. Many homes welcomed us, and a good interest was shown in the meetings toward the close of the series. On the closing Sunday afternoon Bro. Thayer assisted with a sermon dealing with the Christian's authority and responsibility of preaching.

We are pleased to present to the brethren three new members, who were baptized on Sunday, November 5, in Yellow River near Burr Oak. They are: Mary Belle Osborn, Marjorie Hatten, and Margaret Overmyer, all of Culver, Ind. These girls come from Church of God homes where the parents have taken much interest in training them for Christian service and, though yet in early youth, they add much encouragement to the faithful ones who are carrying on the church duties. We pray for the girls an active and beautiful life for the Lord; and for all the congregation at Burr Oak we pray God's richest blessings both now and in the age to come.

Eld. Sydney E. Magaw.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

We feel sure our readers appreciate the fact that we seldom burden our news pages with appeals to delinquent subscribers. We always feel that you want the paper continued even if you do not immediately send in your renewal. But owing to the fact that the price of book paper has advanced sharply and found us unavoidably without a stock on hand, we are asking those who happen to be behind in their subscriptions at this time kindly to renew at once, that we may have the money to pay for the paper used in The Herald. Will you do this for us, please? Look at the label on the wrapper; it will tell you just where your subscription stands. Thank you.—Ed.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

The following items of interest are taken from "Golden Rule News," the bulletin published by M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland.

Rally Day was a wonderful inspiration, with a packed Sunday school (215) and large attendances at both church services. We appreciate the cooperation of everyone in making it a success. It was a fitting inauguration of our Rally Year program.

After careful study of our resources and our needs, the church has set for itself a three-fold aim, to be realized between now and next Rally Day:

1. More worshipful services, with special emphasis on punctuality.
2. Enlistment of everyone in at least one of the church's activities.
3. At least $200 to be paid off on the building debt.

Our aim is to marshal all the talent available in a united effort to rally for the whole year around the standard of the Master, giving everyone, if possible, an opening for the use of whatever talent he has.

Sunday school growth has now reached the point at which congestion of classes threatens to impair seriously the teaching efficiency. After serious consideration of this problem, decision has been reached to proceed at once with plans for an addition to the church building this fall. The estimated cost of an extension of the basement to the rear lot line to give an additional space of 20x30 feet, for material and excavation, and exclusive of other labor, is $658.

If you think sardines are packed close together, you should peek in at Mrs. McMurtree's class of girls parked on, in, and around the back stairway in the Sunday school!

The new Sunday School Library is off to a good start. Beginning on Rally Day with 36 books, it now has over 50 volumes, and more coming all the time.

Have you joined our Volunteer Prayer Band? This is a new movement whose object is to study and practice prayer. The purpose of this group is well expressed in its motto: "Lord, Teach Us to Pray."

The pastor is giving a series of sermons on Old Testament characters at the Sunday evening services, which have so far been well attended.

Mrs. H. H. Hawkins is in Lakeside Hospital, where she underwent an operation on her throat October 30. We rejoice that she is recovering splendidly.

MARY LOVANDA KELLEY

A constant adherent of the one faith to the day of her death, Sr. Kelley went to sleep October 13, 1933, at the age of 89 years and 10 months. She was laid away to await the Savior's call in Decker Cemetery near Blanchard, Mich., October 15. Elder Allen of the Advent Christian Church in Sylvester officiated at the funeral with the writer assisting.

She leaves to mourn her passing three sons: Almon E. of Blanchard; Charles H. and William E. of Snohomish, Wash.; two daughters: Ida A. Hall and Eudora D. Walker of Blanchard; ten grandchildren, eleven great-grandchildren; also a number of other relatives, besides many friends which she has made during her 68 year sojourn in Michigan since she came here from Canada with her husband, who has preceded her in sleep. In all those years she has shown by her Christian labors that she dearly loved the Lord, His coming, and His Scriptures. Indeed, her mind was clear to quote the Scripture to the last of her days. She loved to meditate upon "the Lord, the righteous judge." "Behold, the judge standeth before the door." "Behold, I come quickly: and my reward is with me."

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The first of our readers to respond to our invitation to send in their expressions of thanksgiving for publication in our special issue the last of the month was Sr. E. Pendleton, 1132 Third St., Webster City, Iowa. Who will be next?

Through the kindness of F. H. Knodle of Oregon we will soon begin the publication of a series of studies by D. M. Hudler, who up to the time of his death some years ago was one of the most successful evangelists of the Church of God.

Approval of our new department treating of the news of the day is general. Bro. H. H. Hawkins of Cleveland, Ohio, voices the sentiment of many others when he says, "I like the page, 'Abreast of the Times,' and hope you continue it through these troublesome times."

Our attention is called to an unfortunate omission made in the report of the special meeting held in Arkansas City, Kansas, recently. We regret that through some error the name of Bro. Drabenstott of Hartford City, Ind., was not mentioned. Bro. Drabenstott taught the afternoon Bible classes, and his work was deeply appreciated by all who were fortunate enough to be assigned to his classes.

"One dear shut-in sister says she would do a little fasting to save money to keep The Herald in her home before she would do without the spiritual food it contains each week," writes Sr. A. J. Chaplin of Arkansas City, Kansas. Speaking for herself, Sr. Chaplin says, "I assure you we appreciate The Herald. I do not see how anyone can do without it. We all watch for its coming every week."

"May the richest blessings of our heavenly Father be with the untiring effort to continue sending us a good paper, for we enjoy its many splendid articles immensely," wrote E. O. Stewart when submitting his excellent contributions to be found on page 3 of this issue.

Please do not overlook the request "To Our Subscribers" on the opposite page. By the closest economy we have carried the paper through the long period of depression without missing an issue or reducing its size in any way. But costs are advancing; and we must, and we will, meet them with your generous cooperation.

The junior choir, under the able direction of Sr. Azalia Winfrey, added much to the special Armistice Sunday evening service at the Oregon, Ill., church. This church has a splendid group of young people who are taking an active and interested part in the work of the congregation.

The first to send in a Thanksgiving offering this year are Bro. and Sr. John E. Miller of Troy, Ill. In sending their generous remittance they write, "We are alone this winter. Maurine Mae entered nurse's training school in September at the Jewish hospital in St. Louis. Farming conditions are no better—they seemed to be worse for awhile."

We rejoice with the Golden Rule Church in Cleveland, Ohio, in the fact that they are finding it necessary to enlarge their church building at once to accommodate the rapidly increasing Sunday school. It takes prayer and consecration and much personal work to accomplish such results.

golia, which belong, of course, to the Soviet Union. He thinks the aggressive spirit of Japan will bring war to pass. If so, this will be the most serious war the world has ever known, because it will draw in other nations that have interests in that part of Asia. He also thinks that the world will back Japan against Russia.

It seems to the writer that the foreign policies of Hitler and Mussolini are along parallel lines, viz., expansion toward the East, or as the ex-Kaiser expressed it, "A place in the sun." There must be sooner or later a clash; and do you not see that Palestine, located so centrally among these powers, must necessarily be the battle ground for this impending crisis?

During the Great War the Allies were at a standstill until virtually a dictator (General Foch) was appointed. In this coming struggle history will repeat itself, only upon a larger scale. Snowden says, "A dictatorship cannot be maintained without the suppression of all political and civil liberties, and a working class dictatorship would be as ruthless as an aristocratic or capitalist dictatorship."

At present Mussolini holds the trump card; how will he play it? Italy, like Japan, must find room for its increasing population. Will he judge this crisis as the opportune moment? During the Great War Italy abandoned Germany. Will Mussolini now prove to be her friend?

Hitler in his recent speech withdrawing from the League condemned Great Britain for the cause of all her troubles and flattered Germany's old enemy France. How true Proverbs 26:28 is: "A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it; and a flattering mouth worketh ruin."

In this present crisis the headlines of the newspapers say, "Hands Off, the U. S. Tells Europe." Yes, but Europe does not forget that our president wrecked the London Economic Conference and that he stands for a big navy.

A strong sentiment is abroad in Europe to form a confederation to be known as the United States of Europe, Great Britain and Russia to be excluded. Commercial interests are already forming along lines similar to our trusts to limit production and stabilize prices. All industries are to be governed by a scientific board. Centralization seems to be the new war cry in the religious, commercial, and soon probably the political worlds.

I should like to quote excerpts from foreign newspapers as to how they view the working of the National Industrial Recovery Act, but I must refrain as I have no desire to be charged with the crime of lese majesty.

(Bro. Alldridge here included with his manuscript an article written by J. Baker White in The London Post. Since the paper is copyrighted, THE RESTITUTION HERALD can publish nothing but a synopsis of the article, which is entitled, "The Big Shuffle."—Ed.)

Old alliances of European nations are being scrapped in favor of new ones. The historic Austro-German combination has been broken by Hitler's ardent militarism and his encouragement of a Nazi (pronounced "Nahtzee") revolution in Austria. France has sought friendship with Russia and Poland as a protection against the German rise to power. The Little Entente has been made permanent. Belgium and Switzerland are preparing themselves for German aggression. A plot to extend the Hungarian throne to Prince Otto, its heir, is being actively fought by Nazi forces. Dollfuss of Austria and Mussolini of Italy have reached an understanding. Roumania and Turkey have allied themselves with Russia. Bulgaria looks to England for aid. Britain and Scandinavia cement their relations with trade treaties. All Europe looks for war.

MIRACLES

By C. E. Randall

PEOPLE generally consider miracles as evidence of divine authority and blessing. When Christ was offering the kingdom to Israel, He accompanied His message with kingdom conditions. Kingdom conditions are miracles when compared to things of this present evil world. The blind received their sight, the deaf were made to hear, the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk. Of course, these were miracles, but they were kingdom conditions (Isa. 35:5, 6). When the kingdom is set up, these miracles will be of daily occurrence.

A few signs were given in establishing the church in order that Jews and Gentiles alike might understand that both were acceptable to God (Acts 10:1-33). However, the Pauline epistles are silent in regard to promise of or continued performance of these signs and wonders. And these messages are the ones given to and concerning the church of the mystery (Eph. 3:4-11). Laying claim to and applying promises given to and spoken concerning the kingdom and making them fit the church has always been the practice of the majority of Bible readers, notwithstanding that we are cautioned to "rightly divide the word" (2 Tim. 2:15).

The only promise of miracles in the last days that we have a right to anticipate concerns the beast power. It is told us that the Antichrist that is to come "after the working of Satan" (2 Thess. 2:9) will perform "signs and lying wonders" and he will do "great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men" (Rev. 13:13, 14). By the performance of these miracles he deceives those that dwell on the earth.

The Antichrist receives his power from the great deceiver of mankind, the one that deceived our first parents in the garden with the statement, "Ye shall not surely die." The inspiration under which this teaching was conceived is the same inspiration under which it has thrived and is thriving today. It is from people whose doctrines are founded on this false doctrine that claims to miracles come. Can you see the inspirer?

CHRISTIAN PATIENCE

By Lyman Booth

"For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise."—Heb. 10:36.

THESE were the words of Paul to the Hebrew brethren: "Hold fast the faith, with patience and thanksgiving." All other virtues and graces require patience to make them perfect.

"Patience is the root and guardian of all virtues," impatience is the enemy of all. Impatience disquiets and makes us weary and to lay aside our armor and to forsake difficult duties. Impatience listens to nothing, receives no advice from any source, fears nothing, has little or no hope, and perseveres in nothing but restlessness and fault-finding.

The offices of patience are as varied as the numerous ills of this life. We have need of it with both those who love us and those who do not. We have need of it for the least as well as the greatest things. We need it amidst our troubles and daily burdens. We need it in the weariness of our bodies and in our mental struggles. We need it in the hours of sickness and pain and in the decline of age, in disappointments, bereavements, losses, injuries. We need its help to conquer sin within and temptation without, that we may secure blessed and everlasting peace. In all these things, from childhood's little hurts to the martyr's sufferings, patience is the strength whereby we endure all evil for the love of God whom we dare not offend.

In Romans 8:25 Paul wrote, "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." There are many infirmities that we cannot overcome if we are lacking in hope. There are peevishness and impatience, fear and doubting. But hope in God and patience quiet them and remove the occasion of their working and make us humble. Though we may not be responsible for our whims, we are accountable for the way in which we act while under their influence. When our endeavors fail to quiet them, we are to rely on hope; and if hope should weaken, there are moments of quiet waiting left, "quiet waiting" which in other portions of Scripture, especially in the New Testament, is termed "patience." While hope

This essay on the value and necessity of patience in Christian living comes from one whose years are sufficient to give him full practical appreciation of the virtue lauded by Paul. The author's present address is 4318 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

looks to the future, it is the duty of patience to rest quietly, calmly in the present, and not to worry; to be satisfied where God appoints and with what He has given us. Patience is properly placed after hope. Hope belongs to youth, patience is the lesson learned in maturer years under Christian influence.

In Romans 15:4, 5, we read, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope. Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded one toward another according to Christ Jesus." How wisely Paul has written, for the Scriptures contain more than most of us can learn.

We need no voice from heaven nor brilliant vision of light to make us happy, for there is enough in "the volume of the Book" to cause our hearts to burn with the fire of love. It tells of the pardon of the deepest guilt, sanctification of the polluted, rest for the heavily burdened, salvation for the lost, Christ for our comfort, and the kingdom and its glories. We are told of these things for the express purpose of giving us joy and consolation.

What a grand ending of mortality! How many are the strong, tender, and most sacred ties that bind us to God no man can tell. We have abundant reason for living for God's glory. He made us and has preserved us in life and provided for all our necessities. He has been most merciful and gracious, besides being very abundant in goodness and in truth. He has borne with us, pitied us, and redeemed us by His Spirit, and called us out of darkness into His marvelous light.

To the Thessalonians Paul said, "Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father." If our hope is proved by our exercise of patience and our faith by the work which it produces and our love by the

"MEAT THAT YE KNOW NOT OF"

AFTER a wearisome journey Jesus reached the city of Sychar, paused at Jacob's well, and asked a woman who was drawing water for a drink. Then followed the remarkable exchange of questions and answers recorded by John. At the conclusion of the conversation the disciples approached, and perceiving how tired and probably hungry the Lord must be, besought Him, saying, "Master, eat. But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of." Observing the perplexity His answer occasioned, He continued, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."

Here He but repeated the thought with which He had met one of His temptations in the wilderness, when He said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Jesus realized that the most important of all necessary things was a spiritual diet. He knew that unless one fed constantly on the "bread from heaven" the spiritual nature would speedily perish and the individual would be reduced to the plane of the animals, with no higher thought nor purpose in life than to eat, drink, and sleep, that he might survive.

The Bible provides a spiritual diet of great variety. It brings to the one who "hungers and thirsts after righteousness" all that he needs to supply the craving of his appetite. Job, even in the time of his misery, found it sufficient for every purpose, and cried, "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food!"

Writing to Timothy with regard to the value of the Scriptures, Paul declared that they were able to furnish the man of God thoroughly for every good work; that they met every demand for teaching, correction, and instruction in righteousness that could be named.

To enjoy to the full the spiritual diet which the Bible so amply affords, it is necessary that one should vary the viands of which he partakes at the Lord's table. Our Apostle mentions the necessity of doing this in several places, and at the same time asserts that the diet must be regulated according to the "age" of the individual and his power to assimilate that which he receives. All Christians do not require the same kind of food. Writing to the Corinthians, Paul says, "I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able."

He then pointed out their weaknesses. They were still ruled by their carnal natures. They still lived as worldly men live. And, consequently, they could not grasp and utilize the "things of the Spirit of God," the "strong meat" that went to the mature in faith and knowledge.

Just as the human body requires a constant supply of vitamins A, B, and C, to produce health and strength in nerve cells and tissue, so the spiritual natures of men must be continually provided for by the truths contained in the Bible. Our faith must be daily strengthened by the knowledge of prophecy fulfilled, our hope built up by feasting on the promises of God, our love cultivated by meditating on the love of God and of Christ so clearly shown in the Scriptures, our desire for worship satisfied by the devotional teaching of the Psalms, and our appreciation ever increased and deepened through prayer and study of the inspired Word.

Let us, then, throw wide the doors of God's Dining Room, the Bible, and draw up joyfully to His loaded board, and partake freely of the nourishing spiritual food He has so graciously provided for our good, that we may "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The Passing of an Age

By H. A. Sheets

"A good man obtaineth favour of the Lord: but a man of wicked devices will he condemn."

WHEN Moses came to the close of his work as the leader of Israel, he still felt that he wanted to perform one more task; so he called all of the people of Israel before him and gave them a parting word of admonition and warning. A word of encouragement is just as necessary today before Armageddon as it was then before Canaan. Moses spoke at length on the blessings that would follow faithfulness to God as well as the punishments that would reward iniquity and disobedience. The wisdom of his words and counsel has been adequately proved by the subsequent history of Israel.

We are facing important days; days in which we see "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth"; days filled with hope and fervent preparation for the Christians.

We are watching the life ebb from an age which has not proved its right to continue. Neither God nor man has been adequately served. Selfishness has been the predominating and ruling force. No great attempt has been made for righteousness. God cannot place His stamp of approval upon an age so predominantly evil. The end is in sight.

Christ, the prophets, and the apostles all warned that this age would end in strife, famine, and disease. We have reason to believe that these conditions are approaching reality. The influenza epidemic in 1918, as well as the black plague of the Middle Ages, should be a warning of what can come. God's Word will be proved true.

For several years men have been dissatisfied with the abundance of God's blessings. They have cried that overproduction has lowered the prices until it is hard to exist. Man is now trying to control production by his own efforts. This interference with God's work will result in famine—and higher prices. Revelation 6:5, 6 gives us a picture of this time of high prices and scarcity. Here, again, the love of money is proving the root of the evil.

Another sign of the end of this age is the cry of peace. The Bible has declared that man's efforts for peace would result in war. This is very evident at this time. Nations are still crying for peace but ordering war materials just the same. War is so certain that the statesmen are asking, "When will it start?"

The churches in Germany have ceased to pray for peace. Their only prayer is that the Fatherland may be ready when it does start. New church hymnals are being prepared which justify and glorify war and war heroes. The rest of Europe is very little different in its viewpoint from Germany.

"The Passing of an Age" is taken from a letter issued by Bro. Sheets under date of November 4 to the members of the Virginia congregations. The letter composed the last issue of The Gospel Searchlight, long an organ for gospel teaching among Old Dominion Churches of God.

High officials of Japan are openly advocating war with England with world markets as the spoil. It is evident that they are preparing for a titanic struggle.

Nearly every American newspaper of importance is warning almost daily of the coming conflict. God's judgment day is almost here.

We must retain our faith in an all-wise, all-merciful, all-powerful God. He is still supreme ruler and will protect us if we continue in well-doing. Did not Christ command: "Pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man"—Luke 21:36. Remember, "God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Thess. 5:9.

The temptation to do evil and to seek worldly pleasures and amusements is increasing daily, and the faith of many is growing cold. Paul warned us that the time of trouble would be preceded by a falling away (2 Thess. 2:3); and Jesus Himself asked the question: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18:8.

The trial of faith is becoming severe, but let us remember that "he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron."—Rev. 2:26, 27. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, . . . I will write upon him my new name."—Rev. 3:12. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Rev. 3:21. These promises are all to the "overcomer," but surely they offer ample inducement to press on.

The other side of the picture is presented to us by Paul in 2 Thessalonians 1:7-9. He states that "Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."

Brethren and friends, let us press on with complete conviction that "he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death."—Rev. 2:11.

The Home of the Dead

By George B. Alldridge

"The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men."—Psalm 115:16.

A FEW days ago a gentleman called at our home to transact a business matter we wished him to take care of. Upon leaving, he left with us a few cards. On one is printed among other things these words:

"He washed me in His all atoning blood;
My sins are all forgiven,
I'm on my way to heaven,
Walking in the light of God."

After perusing this, I thought of 1 John 1:7: "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." I could not recall one text which would authorize the author of these words, "I'm on my way to heaven," to make such a statement.

Upon reflection, I thought how many millions of people past and present endorse these words and really believe that heaven is to be their eternal home. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8:20.

Usually when people are on their way to a place, they know exactly their destination, having previously inquired by the aid of guides and maps something of the city or country they are about to journey to.

The Bible, the only reliable and authentic guide which gives us information relating to the final destiny of humanity, gives a very vivid description of that place. The translators of our Bible call it hell! Scholars inform us that this should have been translated "the grave."

I could quote many texts describing this place. Psalm 88:10-12 will suffice: "Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? . . . Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?"

Every honest and intelligent person will admit that while his actual experience will not verify these words of the Psalmist his knowledge and observation will, and deep down in his heart he knows that in this place sooner or later he, too, will find his last home. Unless some power unknown to science and revealed only in the Bible delivers him from this condition, he must eternally remain.

Where is heaven? Who can answer me? No human being can locate it. The Bible gives us a vivid description of it. Its inhabitants are immortal. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God" (1 Tim. 1:17) "who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see" (1 Tim. 6:16). Read also Isaiah 6:2, 3.

Heaven occupies a particular location, for we read in Isaiah 63:15 Isaiah's prayer. "Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength." In Isaiah 66:1 we read, "Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool."

This wonderful being we address as eternal God and Father is not confined to a particular location, although His throne and center of strength seem to be. "Abram said to the king of Sodom, I have lift up mine hand unto the Lord, the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth."—Gen. 14:22. Hence, we see that the whole universe is God's realm.

God is responsible, and no one else, for this wonderful universe. It reveals His love, wisdom, justice, and power. Why did He create all this? The Prophet declares it was not created in vain. God does nothing in vain; there is a purpose in all His doings. "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."—Rev. 4:11.

Some day God's glory will fill this whole earth. In Habakkuk 2:14 it is proclaimed, "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." The margin reads, "Or, by knowing the glory of the Lord."

There was a time when man possessed this knowledge, that is, of God's holiness and perfection. But he lost this knowledge through sin (Ecc. 7:29). "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." God proposes that man shall again possess not only this knowledge but also a character to sustain it. Taking him at death to heaven would not accomplish this, but rather it would mean his eternal destruction.

No being is so wise as God. Hence, whatever plans God has outlined must be in the nature of the case the very best and wisest. So God created the human family to be inhabitants of this earth and constituted them to live and dwell upon it.

If when we die we go to heaven, why is it that God speaks so much about what He intends to do for us here upon earth and tells us nothing of what is going on in heaven? We read in the Scriptures:

"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Then the old heavens and the old earth did not contain righteousness: that is why they are to be destroyed.

Oh, but somebody will say, "This is all figurative." Surely it is. But the people who constitute these old heavens and old earth are real persons, just as real as you and I.

I want you to read Revelation 12:4-9. Note all this happens in heaven. If we take all this literally we get nowhere. Yet some people who believe in going to heaven at death believe that this is when the devil put up a big fight in heaven and was cast out, taking with his tail the third part of the stars of heaven. If all this happened in heaven, the place of God's abode, then sin must exist there also!

The Bible teaches that sin came into existence, and with it death, by or through the disobedience of our first parent Adam. The Bible also teaches that God intends to put sin out of existence. As man was the instrument of bringing sin into the world and with it death, God's plan is by a man to destroy sin and death and to establish life and righteousness. So when we read about the devil's being the author of sin, we know more than God does, for God says it was man.

If we say that this devil is a fallen angel, cast out of heaven, we know more than Jesus, for in speaking of the resurrection of the dead He said, "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." So if the devil is an angel, then of course he can never die. But as I read Hebrews 2:14 I learn that the devil "had the power of death," and that Jesus through His death destroyed him, "that is, the devil."

What power took the life of Jesus or caused His death? You answer, "Sin." Very good, then sin is the devil; and when each person dies, as far as he is concerned the power which caused his death dies to him. Now here is where God steps in, and my whole being rejoices as I hear my mind quoting John 3:16, 17.

If we are left in the grave how could God fulfill this promise? "For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."—Psalm 37:9-12.

Two things are here promised: the cutting off of the wicked and the blessing bestowed upon the righteous, viz., "Inherit the earth." Jesus and David agree. Matthew 5:5: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth."

Somebody may say, "It will be heaven to me to be where Jesus is." This is just my sentiment. But that cannot be in heaven. Kindly read Genesis 17:7, 8.

Since Jesus and His saints are to reign upon the earth, of course as such earthly rulers they will be occupied; and Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 6:2, 3 just what that is, viz., judges. That confirms his statement in Acts 17:31.

Prehistoric Man

By Gerald L. Cooper

THE term "prehistoric man" evidently applies to the men living prior to the time the writing of history began. As the art of writing was not perfected until about 4000 B. C., the prehistoric age included all time before that.

But let us consider something else. According to Usher's chronology of the Bible, 4000 B. C. was about the time Adam was created. Therefore, the so-called prehistoric man was living before man was created if we attempt to believe both the Scripture and popular history.

We can find much about prehistoric man by studying the most inferior races of today such as are located in South America. Our chief source of information, however, may be found by digging in old ruins buried deep in the earth. How do we know these ruins belonged to these particular men? Could they not have belonged to the people living just before the flood? And could not the flood waters have deposited all of the dirt on the relics found in the ruins?

The prehistoric man is supposed to have lived in three different periods: the Paleolithic, or Old Stone Age; Neolithic, or New Stone Age; and the Metal Age.

The man of the Paleolithic Age used stones, roughly hewn for his tools. He was a hunter and fisher; he lived in a cave; he had no domesticated animals except the dog; and he knew nothing of the arts. By the end of the period he could use fire and could sharpen his tools fairly well.

The Neolithic man advanced in that he could sharpen his tools with more ease and learned some architecture.

Man came forward much more in the Metal Age. His tools, of course, were much improved over the stones he had previously used.

The first prehistoric man was, according to Wells, a man-like ape. Through the process of evolution he developed, supposedly, to his present stage. We find no record of this in Genesis the first chapter, where it tells of the creation of man.

Man was next supposed to have been a very primitive human living in caves and being very savage. His language was very indistinct and his brain was differently developed from present-day men.

Much of this is true, no doubt, but it is ridiculous to read some present-day stories by so-called intelligent men who attempt to tear down the truth of the Bible. Just last week I read an article by a modern writer teaching that the scenes of the book of Genesis were laid in Egypt and that Moses himself was a son of an Egyptian princess.

What fancy! Let us not believe any of these stories of early man, but seek rather the Word of God given in that Book of books, the Bible.

Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles

WITH the exception of Christ, there is no figure in the New Testament of such heroic proportions as Paul of Tarsus, the Apostle of the Gentiles. In that respect, as in various others, he reminds one of Moses. Both men possessed powers beyond those of ordinary mortals. Both men were highly educated, even though the training of Paul probably was somewhat narrower in scope.

Because of their enormous physical and spiritual drive, both swept away opposition that would have stopped lesser men. Both battled against the prevailing trends of their day. Moses fought the idolatry and polytheism that prevailed among the Israelites; Paul pitted himself on the one hand against the Pharisaism of the Jews and on the other against the licentiousness of the pagan world. Finally, both died with nothing but the assurance of faith that their labors had been worth while. Moses was permitted to see the Promised Land from afar; Paul with the eyes of faith beheld the kingdom of heaven.

From a purely historical point of view it is difficult to overestimate the service which Paul rendered the Christian church. Through him the gospel of Jesus became a world religion not only in principle but also in fact. As is clearly brought out in the book of Acts, there was a strong faction among the immediate followers of Jesus who tried to exclude all Gentiles unless they entered through the door of Judaism.

Although Paul, who had been reared and educated in the strictest tradition of the Pharisees, could appreciate the Jewish point of view, he resisted the pressure of the conservatives and finally carried the day. Apparently many years passed before the Christian congregations in Jerusalem and other Jewish centers reconciled themselves to the changed outlook; but in the meantime Paul carried the gospel along the eastern and northern shores of the Mediterranean. If the traditional Jewish customs and ritual had been made an essential part of the teachings of Jesus, it is almost impossible to conceive how it could have made any effective headway either in the city of Rome or in the empire as a whole.

Paul further served the early church through the pastoral letters which he addressed to the congregations which he had founded and to some of his disciples. These letters are of great importance for two reasons. In the first place, they reveal more about the personality of Paul than is known about any other character of the ancient world. In the second place, they have served down to our own time as a major guide and inspiration to the Christian church.

It is impossible to summarize the many-sidedness of Paul's thinking in a few moments, but it is relatively easy to indicate his basic point of view. To him the Christian life was not something static but something which, once attained, could be sealed up and set aside for the rest of one's natural life. It was nothing like that. It is in the Epistle to the Philippians that he has set forth in matchless prose his ideal of the Christian life: "Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect: but I press on, if so be that I may lay hold on that for which also I was laid hold on by Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The energy which vitalized every phase of Paul's life was his unshakable faith in the gospel of Jesus. He strikes the note in the opening chapter of the epistle to the Romans: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

Nothing can part him from the lovingkindness of God. "I am persuaded," he tells us, "that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Exposed as the Apostle was to the constant enmity of both Jew and Gentile and to the ever present dangers of travel, he experienced much hardship and suffering. The well known account of these tribulations can scarcely be repeated too often: "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of rivers, in perils of robbers, in perils from my countrymen, in perils from the Gentiles, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren."

In all this, however, there is no trace of regret. To the congregation at Philippi he writes thus: "I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse." In the second epistle to Timothy, written while Paul was awaiting execution in Rome, we hear for the last time that note of indomitable faith. Having conquered the ills of the flesh, he was not to be intimidated by the fear of death: "I am already being offered, and the time of my departure is come. I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."

Thus both in life and in death the Apostle to the Gentiles became the supreme example of Christian living. More keenly than any of his contemporaries, Paul recognized the universal implications of the gospel of Jesus. Scholars may question his theology, but none can deny the spiritual stature of the man. What Jesus said of a certain woman, we may say of Paul: "Wheresoever the gospel shall be preached throughout the world, that also which he hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of him."

The Riches of His Grace

By M. W. Perrine

HAD it not been for God's favor as manifested in His dealings with the children of men, the whole human family would have been destroyed from the face of the earth long ere this. It is only through the wonderful favor of our heavenly Father that we are not cut off in His wrath, but are still permitted to function as a people down to the present time.

The whole world is lost in sin; and the Apostle Paul declares in Romans 3:10, "As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one." And further, speaking to the church (Eph. 2:1), "And you hath he quickened (made alive spiritually), who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."

His grace is manifested not only in this world, but also in the world to come. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." A present salvation from your sins and a future eternal salvation are reserved in heaven for you. "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Peter 1:5. That is when Jesus comes.

So this great salvation which comes to us through Jesus Christ is God's favor; and we receive it by faith; and it cannot be earned by our works, no matter how much we do; nor can we buy it with money, for we by right belong to God, for He purchased us with the blood of His own beloved Son. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The grace of God through faith placed us where we are—in Christ Jesus—so making us new creatures in Christ Jesus. "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ." Then Paul says (2 Cor. 6:1), "We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

Then Paul wrote to Titus (2:11), "For the grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world: looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

Paul, writing again to Titus (3:5), says, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost: which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour; that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life."

Justification under the law was a matter of works. That was why Paul asked the question of Galatians 3:21, "Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." It is a matter of faith; but it must be confirmed and attested by our works, for faith without works is dead. Faith introduces us to our Lord Jesus Christ, who John declares is full of grace and truth (John 1:14).

Paul designates the whole great scheme of salvation "the unsearchable riches of Christ." Why unsearchable? Because you may search from Genesis to Revelation, and you will never find it in its fullness till you come to God's Word that was made flesh and that dwelt among us full of grace and truth.

And you will never be made a partaker of its benefits until, as Jesus said to the Jews (John 6:51), "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat? Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him."

You can only eat His flesh and drink His blood by the grace of God by faith; and you can manifest it to the world and show your faith in it by partaking of the loaf, an emblem of the body of Christ, and drinking of the fruit of the vine, an emblem of His blood. Then wait patiently till He comes.

The Apostle Paul went forth carrying these life-giving truths to the Gentiles as he records in Ephesians 3:8, "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."

But these Gentiles were sinners even as all others were, for Paul said, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Then he asks the question, "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." A wonderful work of grace, by which we get rid of our sins and are made new creatures in Christ Jesus!

Then in the fourteenth verse Paul says, "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace. What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness."

So we can see what wonders the grace of God accomplished through obedience. No wonder Paul exclaims, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

CHRISTIAN PATIENCE

labor which is its result, then we may know that hope and faith and love of God will abide in and with us. Then hope will clothe itself with the garment of sweet patience. It will wade through rivers of blood; it will endure all things for the joy that is set before it. Therefore, patience is called "patience of hope," because it is hope that buoys us up in the exercise of patience and long-suffering until the time arrives when patience exchanges the cross for the crown.

In Paul's letter to Timothy he warned his son in the gospel against the love of money and the strife of words that begets envy and railings, and said, "But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness."—1 Tim. 6:11. Paul had seen so many drawn into this whirlpool and "drowned in perdition" that he advised Timothy with more than his usual earnestness to flee as far from them as possible and thereafter to follow after righteousness and godliness, and in addition to follow after faith and love as the fundamental principles of the Christian life, and lastly to have patience and meekness of spirit, which denote the proper conduct of the Christian amid the opposition and enmity to Christ's gospel. What was godly advice and instruction to Timothy should be none the less to Christians of the present time.

James said, "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience, but let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

Of all graces God desires that the reality of faith should be made manifest. We work by love, but live by faith. If, then, we have faith, we must expect trials. Grace is not crowned until after it has been exercised. Faith must be tested before it is proved worthy of praise. To the wicked every grace is a snare, but to the godly every state brings a blessing, and their prosperity brings thankfulness, their adversity works patience. Afflictions serve to prove or test our faith, and by the blessing of God to bring forth fruit with patience; and patience brings the quiet fruit of righteousness.

The little trials, those which involve nothing loftier or more sublime than the incidents of everyday life, those trials which are attributed to tongue and temper, make a great demand upon our patience and a greater draft upon our ability to endure. But we should never become discouraged because good things come so slowly. We should never fail to do daily the good things which lie at hand. Let patience have its perfect work that it may bring forth heavenly fruit unto the Lord. True grace aims at nothing less than perfect holiness; but to obtain this there must be the exercise of patience first, then faith, hope, and prayer.

James has much to say about patience and long-suffering. We read, "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. . . . Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy."—James 5:7, 8, 11.

We find James uses "patience" for "long-suffering," which is a greater degree of patience; for patience is enduring afflictions without murmuring and injuries without revenge, but long-suffering is the extension of patience to that which Paul calls "its perfect work."

The husbandman has long patience till he receive the early and latter rain. The winter frost must mellow the seed lying in the ground, the rains of spring must swell it, and the summer sun with the latter rain must mature it. Thus it is with us. God is not unjust that He should forget our labor of love. We may meet with many difficulties, hardships, and trials; but we shall reap even more good than we have sown, for He that gives seed to the husbandman and bread to the eater will abundantly multiply the seed we have scattered and will give us fruit of our toil to eat. Therefore, let us be patient and steadfast and firmly place our affections on Him and His promises.

There are two ways in which the prophets became examples to us: in suffering and in patience. Our attention is called to their suffering to calm our discontent and their patience to waken our imitation. Let us, therefore, be imitators or followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.

God's people and the people of the world have different principles: the Spirit of God to guide them into all truth and the spirit of the world, which seeks pleasure. They have different lights and rules: those of faith and sense. All the blessings for the good are fixed upon conditions of humiliation and suffering. Hence, James says, "Happy are they that endure," and thrice happy are they who endure unto the end, for they have a blessing now, but a greater in the "sweet bye and bye."

In Job's affliction and suffering there are two notable features: his advancing God and debasing himself. He expressed nothing but good for God and lower thoughts for himself. James holds him up before us as an example of patience in our misery and suffering. While Job was very patient, God was very pitiful; and His mercy, which lightened the trial of Job's faith, was in haste to relieve his suffering. "Job's history is peculiarly fitted to show us, when afflicted, not so much Job as a perfect model, as to show the Lord as the friend of the afflicted."

We are advised by Peter to add temperance to knowledge, patience to temperance. The two virtues are coupled together. We need temperance, self-government, self-control; those things that will make temperance necessary will expose us to that which will require patience. But no matter how tangled the skein may be, we must be diligent in the exercise of patience, that we may make our calling and election sure. Though the way may seem dark at times, faith says, "Be not dismayed." Though the mariner may not see the polestar, the needle of his compass that points to it tells him the way he is going; even so, we have the compass of divine love directing our course and telling us we are pressing forward toward the haven of "eternal rest."

There are times when our affairs are taken out of our hands, and we are forced to stand aside and wait patiently for the slow process of development. We sow the seed, but we cannot force it to immediate harvest. We must let Nature do our work for us. Growth is the most natural and healthy method, and yet it requires long and patient waiting. When our affairs move slowly, we are apt to worry; and when they get tangled, instead of quietly waiting, we thrust our hands into the snarl and make it many times worse. The best things in this world are grown, not made in a minute. He who would have the best and most enduring things, either temporal or eternal, must pay the price of patience for them, even if it be under the burden of sorrow and suffering. Therefore, the Christian should "rejoice, and be exceeding glad" that he has something really worth while for which to wait.

Patience may be relied upon when the loftier qualities within us fail. Faith may waver, hope may weaken, even love may fade or fail; but patience awaits the summons of all whom it can serve. The child who, when angry, can count ten before speaking is on the road to become a patient man or woman. The husband who thinks twice before he speaks and retains the word that would wound another's feelings is entitled to the praise due to "one who ruleth his own spirit." The wife and mother who is patient and tender amid the cares of her home is by-so much a saint.

Lost patience is never regained. We may be patient next time, but the impatient, cross word cannot be recalled, not even with earnest prayers and bitter weeping. It may be forgiven, but it has left a sting not easily forgotten. How necessary, then, is the exercise of patience! Remember that this, with its burden of grief and suffering and waiting, will mean more to us when we realize it is the pathway to the next age, when temperance, patience, and love will rule through the eternal years.

PATIENCE

By Mrs. H. V. Reed

Ye have great need, O weary hand,
When sunset's gold shall flood the land,
And find thy daily task undone
While evening shadows slowly come.
But rest is here, and rest is thine:
"It shall be light at evening time."

Ye have great need, O watchful eye,
So often raised to One on high,
Watching for light to rift the cloud
While earth is wrapt in night's dark shroud.
Though tears may fall like ceaseless rain,
Thine eye shall brighten soon again.

Ye have great need, O weary feet,
Whose restless fevered pulses beat
O'er thorny path and rocky height,
In noontide's heat or starless night;
But on the crystal river's shore
Is peace and rest for evermore.

Ye have great need, O weary heart,
Whose quiv'ring cords would gladly part
If but the burning cross be riven
Beneath the loving hand of Heaven—
Today forget the cruel strife
And crown with patience all your life.

"Rest in the Lord, and wait for Him"
Though days be dark and hope be dim,
Through martyr-fires with naked feet
Be loyal still, while heart shall beat,
For hope and promise both are thine:
"It shall be light at evening time."

Abreast of the Times

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:21. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42:9.

Nazi and the Labor Unions

"Whether he shall be a wise man or a fool, yet shall he have rule over all my labour."—Ecclesiastes 2:19.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—"For the first time in history," declares Labor, "an entire nation has been placed on the 'We Do Not Patronize' list of the American labor movement. That action was taken by the American Federation of Labor in the closing hour of its convention last week. After listening to a comprehensive report of how the Hitler Government of Germany had obliterated that country's labor movement overnight and inflicted unspeakable atrocities on trade union leaders, the convention voted for a rigid boycott of 'all German goods and services.'"

So engrossed have we been with the anti-Jewish attitude of the Hitler Administration that its persecution of the 31 unions comprising the General German Trade Union Association has been overlooked. A close observer of conditions in Germany asserts that on May 2 the Hitler Government outlawed all trade unions and confiscated their property, arrested their leaders, took over the labor banks, cooperatives, and all similar organizations. The entire situation in Germany at this time is significant from a prophetic standpoint and should be carefully studied. But of this we may be assured, the cry of the laborers, like the cry from suffering Israel, is being heard by the God of righteousness and of justice; and judgment is near.

Drive Against Kidnaping

"The law is not made for a righteous man, but for . . . murderers, . . . for menstealers."—1 Timothy 1:9, 10.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—True bills were returned against three men now in custody, charging them with the kidnaping of James Hackett, a Blue Island gambler, for the second time. Mr. Hackett's wife is said to have paid $75,000 for his release in the first instance and $1,500 on the last occasion.

The gang of which the men just indicted were members is said to have collected a total of $500,000 in a dozen kidnapings during the past three years.

Since the abduction of the infant son of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh on March 1, 1932, which aroused the horror of the world, both state and national governments have enacted laws putting into force severe penalties for this crime, and at the same time the authorities have engaged in an energetic effort to apprehend the criminals.

But in spite of all that has been done, kidnaping continues to flourish, and those involved in it reap an enormous harvest in ransom. Nothing but the all-seeing vigilance of the King of kings will put an end to the practice.

Italy and Hungary Withdraw

"The ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly."—Isaiah 33:7.

GENEVA, Nov. 13.—Following the example of the Italian delegation, which withdrew from active participation in the Disarmament Conference last Saturday, the Hungarian representatives announced today their intention to remain in Geneva merely as interested observers. The contention of the Italian Government that the present Disarmament Conference was sterile without the presence of Germany, whose withdrawal was recorded in "Abreast of the Times" in our issue of October 24, is thus supported by Hungary today. As a result, observers said they believed the present negotiations were doomed to failure.

The British delegate, Arthur Henderson, who is president of the Conference, in a personal message which was read to the House of Commons tonight, threatened to resign as president unless the governments change their attitude regarding arms. The announcement came as a sensation and a climax to a debate on disarmament in which the British Government was severely criticised for its policy at Geneva. Mr. Henderson said, "I have not decided to resign, but the present situation is most unsatisfactory. Unless there is a change in the present situation I cannot continue as president of the Conference. No results are likely to be achieved by the attitude adopted by the delegations at a recent meeting."

One by one human efforts, however honest and sincere they may be, fail to beat the world's swords into plowshares.

Mussolini Kills Capitalism in Italy

"As with the buyer, so with the seller; . . . the haughty people of the earth do languish."—Isaiah 24:2, 4.

ROME, Nov. 14.—In one of the most startling addresses of his dramatic political career Mussolini today forecast the eventual abolishment of the Italian Chamber of Deputies and sounded the funeral knell of capitalism and liberal institutions in Italy. Speaking before the National Council of Corporations, the most powerful business organization in the country, the Premier declared that "today we bury economic liberalism" and that "all Socialist parties in Europe are fragments."

He denounced capitalism, and mentioned Ivar Krueger, the late "match king," and Samuel Insull, former utilities manipulator of Chicago, now a fugitive in Greece, as examples of this system. Mussolini's substitute for both capitalism and Socialism would be the corporative state which would exercise a rigid control over profits.

WANDERING THROUGH THE MAZES

ALTOGETHER too many students and teachers of religion wander through the mazes of their Bible lessons with a keen memory for texts and a poor ability to apply them. Nor is this intended to be a hackneyed tirade against those who are so unfortunate as to be incapable of saying, "This text means us!" when it does mean them.

The fact of the matter is that a lesson outline is considered by the majority much as the law and the prophets were considered by the Pharisees, a hard and fast rule which can neither be altered by a single jot or tittle nor be interpreted in any way except as some Bible verse which itself needs interpretation explains it.

Take, for example, the problem of faith. Lesson 3 in Senior Berean Book I is on this subject. The average teacher arises before the class and asks dully for some one to offer a definition of the word "faith." Promptly some bright scholar replies unctuously, "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And he thereupon settles back in his seat with the complacent appearance of one who knows a task has been excellently performed.

Now it is highly commendable to know that verse in Hebrews which defines faith, but it is equally commendable to be able to express the meaning of faith in one's own terms. After all, Hebrews 11:1 stands for nothing if scholar and teacher are unable to explain why faith is the substance of things hoped for and why it is the evidence of things not seen. No wind ever blew that had less significance than the quotation of words which cannot be defined.

It is up to the teacher, therefore, to require more than quotations of verses familiar to every Bible student from the years of his infancy. It is up to the teacher to demand why and how faith can be what it is; what the students think it is; what Webster thinks it is; what the history of words tells it is. If there is a disagreement as to the meaning of faith, thrash it out; don't look astonished and gaze at the dissenter as if he were guilty of heresy.

Of course, faith provides only an example. There are a thousand other problems equally abused in the normal Bible class. The kingdom of God, for instance. And the matter of Paul's journeys. The kingdom is to be ruled with a rod of iron, and Paul went from Troas to Samothracia. These are facts, but left alone they signify nothing at all. Tell what your own ideas as developed from Bible study on the Christ's rulership are: how it will affect the criminals, the diseased, the paupers, the nations, the Christians. Find out what conditions prevailed where Paul went: Were they immoral? Were the people students, and, if so, why? What was the existing religion before Paul began to preach; what were its practices; what kind of a following did it have? Forget for a moment the verses you have known from childhood and think. Exercise your imagination. Consider what effects the coming of the Christ and the trials met by Paul would have on you; then take up your abstract texts.

And remember in the course of your study that there is such a thing as a daily newspaper. Books and magazines and pamphlets and the daily papers can be of inestimable service in teaching the Bible. Don't talk about the ancient, moth-eaten "Signs of the Times"; talk about something alive—Germany and the Jewish persecution, the possibility of another war and its probable effects, the crash of democratic government—anything that indicates the Christ's coming is near; but make it specific and apply it to the Bible texts that many repeat like a ritual.

The essence of the whole thing, then, is this: Do things in an interesting way, not in the way that your ancestors for a thousand years have done them. In their day, their way was right; but their way is far from right today. Use your Bible, of course; but use your reason, also. Tuffy Johnson may talk about dead cats in the political world, but there are more dead cats in Berean classes and prayer meetings and Sunday schools than he has ever dreamed of. When wandering through the labyrinth of Bible teaching and study, do not fail to make your teaching live!

Arlen Marsh.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

A SET of ten new Bibles, badly needed, was recently purchased by the Golden Rule Berean Society.

The Berean society is our original young people's organization; but it appears that the young people, for whom it was intended, have been practically squeezed out between the upper millstone, the adults, and the nether millstone, the children. So some of the younger young people met and organized a new society, which is to meet every second Wednesday night of each month at the church for a short lesson period to be followed by a social program. Mrs. R. V. Spencer was elected president, and Miss Louise Aufmuth secretary-treasurer. All young people are invited.

"So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed."

SOME THINGS THAT ARE ETERNAL

BETWEEN last Sunday's lesson and today's our busy missionary has finished his second trip and started on his third. Paul made his longest stay in the city where we find him now—Ephesus—called, "the Light of Asia." He took with him two good helpers, Erastus and Timothy.

Traveling westward through a pass in the mountains over the highlands of the interior, Paul and his companions bravely faced many dangers and endured all manner of hardships. They knew that the hand of God clasped their hands and led them over the hard places just as surely as if they had seen it. It was that which gave them courage to go on.

Ephesus was a busy city, the leading one in Asia Minor at that time. Here vast trade was carried on with other countries of the world; beautiful buildings had been erected, the most famous one the temple of Diana. All in all Ephesus was a very proud and wealthy city. But it was a city that knew nothing about Jesus.

The walls and pillars of this temple of Diana were of gleaming marble; more than one hundred beautiful columns supported its roof; and it took over two hundred years to construct it, costing thousands and thousands of dollars—all just to hold an image that was shapeless and blackened by age, before which many came from all over the world to kneel!

Don't you feel sorry for people who know nothing about God and who think an idol can hear their prayers? And don't you just ache to tell them about Jesus and His love and mercy? That's just the way Paul felt when he saw the people spending their time and their money for something that brought them only disappointment in the end.

As usual, Paul at first preached in the Jewish synagogue every Sabbath (Saturday) morning and evening, paying his own expenses by working at his trade through the week. You all know what his trade was, I'm sure. But when Paul saw that the Jews were set on their own evil ways, he found another place and this was in a school-house, where he could teach the people about Jesus every day.

In this city of false magic Paul was given a special power to work true miracles. Find out what interesting and helpful things Paul could do for those who needed his help so much. Read Acts 19:11, 12. As always where there is one true person doing God's work there are many who are not honest, like the seven sons of Sceva, who pretended they could cure people, too.

When the people saw through their dishonesty they believed what Paul said and thanked God that they had found the right way to live. And they proved their words by their deeds in a most unusual manner. Learn the story of the big bonfire and find out how much was represented in our money.

You know it doesn't do any good to say we believe in Jesus unless we show it by our everyday actions—by the way we treat our companions, by the way we obey our parents, by the way we cooperate with our teachers; in fact, by every way. These people of Ephesus learned that from Paul away back there almost nineteen hundred years ago, and it's still true.

Today that marvelous city of Ephesus is only a desolation where wild beasts hide, and the glorious temple of Diana a ruin covered over by the muddy deposits from the river. But the teachings of Paul still shine forth as brightly as ever from the pages of God's own Book, and the gospel that he preached has the same power to change men's lives that it had so many hundred years ago.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Across the top of your page write the date, number and title of the lesson, and the golden text. Then draw your little map of Asia Minor, with a colored line from Antioch in Syria (the place Paul always started from) through the countries of Galatia and Phrygia, into the city of Ephesus on the Mediterranean seaboard.

Write a little story about the temple of Diana, and show how Paul hurt the trade of those who sold images and what they did about it. You will find this in Acts 19:23-41. This was an open-air theater and probably the largest in the world, seating almost 25,000 people. Who finally quieted the mob?

Now look in the book Paul wrote to his church at Ephesus, the book of Ephesians, and copy the words he addressed to the children of the church, chapter 4, verses 1 to 3. Do you know where you can find similar words in the Old Testament?

You boys and girls who read this page each week, won't you drop me a card and tell me how you like it and what improvement I might make in it? I'm waiting to hear from you.

LESSON 10.—December 3, 1933

PAUL IN EPHEBUS

Acts 18:18 to 20:38

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 40:18-23

GOLDEN TEXT

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake.—Matthew 5:10.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul at Ephesus.

Aim: To teach the pupil that it is sinful for one to trust to magic rather than to God.

Basic Truth: "When they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God?"—Isaiah 8:19.

I. Paul Preaches the Kingdom of God. (Acts 19:8-10.) In willing obedience to the great commission Paul preached the gospel of the kingdom of God everywhere he went. On every occasion he presented it "to the Jew first"; and when they would no longer receive it, he taught it to the Gentiles. As far as results are concerned, Paul's experience was the same as that of evangelists today: some of his hearers listened attentively; meditated thoughtfully; compared what he taught with the Scriptures (Acts 17:11); and when all was found to be in harmony with the Word, believed and were baptized. Others, however, opposed themselves without reason, and forfeited their opportunity of salvation.

II. Paul's Word Confirmed by Miracles. (Acts 19:11-16.) With no written record of the life of Christ with its substantiating miracles available, it was necessary that God should give to the early missionaries power to perform miracles to convince the people of the divine source of their message. Paul was ever very particular to point out to all who witnessed such deeds of power at his hands that they were done by the authority of God exercised through the name of Jesus Christ, as in the case of the healing of the cripple recorded in Acts 14:8-15.

III. Paul's Efforts Rewarded. (Acts 19:17-20.) Men do not always see the results of their faithful planting of the word of truth in the hearts of men, but it was in this instance given to Paul to witness most splendid fruits of his labor in Ephesus. His teaching was not merely theoretical nor dogmatic, but spiritual, causing many to turn away from sin, confess their faults, and lead regenerated lives. This increased righteousness in the church no doubt did much to give the gospel weight in that community.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Special Miracles: There has always been a specific purpose for the working of miracles. Moses vs. the magicians of Pharaoh's court, Elijah vs. the priests of Baal, Jesus' healing, Paul's immunity to the bite of the serpent—all were performed with but one thought in mind, and that to glorify God. All were performed by men who were in direct contact with God and who gave the glory of the power of healing to the God who sent them forth.

Superstition: In every land, including our own, we find those who unwittingly believe in witchcraft and demons. Those who invoke the use of the split bean as a cure for warts, who refuse to walk under a ladder, who use incantations to dispel certain diseases, and those who believe in the fortune teller's art are following in the footsteps of the witch of Endor and others of her ilk. Such were the seven sons of Sceva, the Jew.

There is abroad in the land today the same spirit which these men showed. Men and women who wish to forward their own desires take an unfair advantage of men and women who are hungering for God and for Christ. They use the name of the Lord in their work to lend it credence with the people, thus deceiving many. Unfortunately, few people question far enough to discern right from wrong. They fail to heed the advice of John to "try the spirits whether they are of God." When one comes to you saying, "I have miracle-working power," look first to the life of the individual. Then, lest they may be self-deceived, find whether the miracles wrought are really giving greater glory to God in the eyes of the world; or whether, like the sons of Sceva, the "miracle worker" is using the name of Christ for selfish ends.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake."—Matthew 5:10.

"Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."—2 Tim. 3:12. On first thought, this sounds rather discouraging; but when we take into consideration the sufferings and persecutions that our Savior endured for us, we should realize that our persecutions are so few that there is no comparison between them and Christ's.

Christ was persecuted for righteousness' sake, and so was Paul; and when we are, if it, too, has been because we have been righteous or followers of Christ, we may rest assured that in time a blessing will be meted out to us. Christ won out, so did Paul; and just that surely we, too, may win if we endure as did they.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS Facing Conflict With Christ

A king once wanted to study geometry by some easy method, but was informed by his instructor, Euclid, that "there is no royal road to geometry." So with salvation. There is no easy, peaceful, effortless road to eternal life. The road traveled by Christ is the only road that leads to life. Daniel was cast into a den filled with lions; John the Baptist was beheaded; Jesus "had not where to lay his head"; and Paul suffered the "loss of all things." Jesus said He came to give a sword, and not peace. He sent His disciples out into the world as "sheep in the midst of wolves," warning them that they should be hated because they "hated me."

We know further that Jesus commanded us to take up our cross daily and follow Him. The cross stands as a symbol of conflict between man's carnal desires and loyal service and devotion to God. This conflict will continue as long as we are carnal, for the fleshly nature wars against the Spirit.

The gospel is being preached today to "take out from among the Gentiles a people for his (God's) name." These will become sons of God. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."—John 1:12. This verse does not sound like conflict, but the strife is there. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."—2 Tim. 2:12. The conflict, with its reward, is again referred to in Revelation 2:26, 27. This conflict, though very discouraging at times, can be won through Christ who "strengtheneth" all. The reward is worth the effort.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATES

How to Meet Opposition

Paul's second missionary trip covered three years, half of which time he had spent in Corinth. Now he must return to his starting point and report. At the port of Corinth, Cenchrea, he was taken sick before he could set sail. As soon as he was able to travel, Priscilla and Aquila accompanying, he started for Ephesus. Here he found such willing hearers that they begged him to stay, but he felt he must hasten to Jerusalem, promising to return later. Aquila and Priscilla remained in Ephesus to carry on the Master's work there, while Paul continued to Jerusalem to keep the feast of Pentecost. What special work did Aquila and Priscilla find at Ephesus (Acts 18:24-28)? What would have happened if Aquila and Priscilla had not known the gospel as well as they did? Paul had evidently taught them much.

This lesson finds Paul at Ephesus on his third missionary tour, which began at Antioch in Syria, then through the provinces of Galatia, Phrygia, and on to this city. Ephesus was called "the Light of Asia," being the capital of the province of Asia and chief city of Asia Minor. In the busy, wealthy, and artistic center Paul spent nearly three years, preaching the simple gospel of Christ. Ask a pupil to bring a description of the beautiful temple of Diana, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. The Greeks were fearful that their goddess would be despised when Paul came into their city. Again God gave him the victory (Acts 19:35-41).

Finish on your map the second trip and begin the third, using a different colored crayon.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

NORTHWESTERN CONFERENCE

The quarterly Northwestern Conference of Oregon and Washington will be held December 1, 2, and 3 at Felida, Wash., the first service being held at 11:00 a. m. on Friday.

All who possibly can are urged to attend. There are many important questions which will be discussed and now, if ever, is the time for the Christians to meet together to learn and to instruct others and to pray for strength to face the tribulations which are fast appearing on the earth. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, . . . but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."—Heb. 10:25.

Word has just been received that Bro. and Sr. Railsback of Los Angeles, Calif., will be at the conference.

(Miss) Gladys Barber, Sec.

CORVALLIS, OREGON

We are glad to report that Bro. and Sr. C. E. Lapp and Sr. Edna Brewer arrived at Corvallis, October 14.

Bro. Lapp gave three discourses, which were timely and instructive and greatly enjoyed by all, at the local Church of God. Bro. Lapp also conducted the Bible class on Sunday morning. The attendance on Sunday evening was 19, the greatest for several years. The average throughout the year is about 6. We must not forget to mention that Sr. Lapp was the organist and that she is a very talented musician.

We are very glad to have had the privilege of meeting these three and of having the visit in our homes. They will always have a standing invitation to come again.

After listening to the inspiring talks and observing the ability and sincerity of our young brother for his work, we realize how very much the people of our Northwest need a shepherd for this flock.

We pray that God will bless and safely guide our brother and sisters to their homes.
Gladys Barber.

RENSELAER, INDIANA

"The work here is progressing nicely and the membership of the local church is doing much work in spreading the precious Word of God. Bro. J. H. Anderson was with us again last Sunday and brought us good news concerning the activities of the Jews during the big conference held in September.

"In closing I want to ask that I be remembered in the prayers of the brotherhood, hoping that when I have finished my course I will be able to say with the great Apostle Paul, 'that I have not shunned to declare all the counsel of God.'"

The above paragraphs are taken from a personal letter from Bro. Paul N. Magnus, who was granted a ministerial license by the Indiana Conference last summer. We are glad to learn of earnest workers being called into the public service of God in these trying times.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB

G. Long; Howard H. Hawkins; Mrs. Eva L. Page; Mr. and Mrs. Paul C. Johnson; Mr. and Mrs. M. Fetters; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Netts ($5.00).

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The Dorcas society of our church has sponsored an entertainment which has been given five different times at three different school auditoriums. It has developed some real talent, aroused lots of interest, and helped the organization quite a bit financially.

In order to accommodate the attendance and various activities of the church, a great deal of work has recently been put on what we call the "annex." The house next door to the church is rented by the Sunday school, and the Dorcas and some classes have helped to buy materials for arranging partitions, decorating, etc. The big end of the work has been done by Bro. Townsend. By using this "annex" we can get along with reasonable comfort this winter.

Preparation is being made for our Thanksgiving service at 8 a. m. How much we have to be thankful for!

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

The Golden Rule Church of God at Cleveland, Ohio, will hold a congregational Thanksgiving service at 9 o'clock on Thanksgiving Day morning. The observance will be preceded by a series of inspirational meetings to be conducted during Thanksgiving week from Sunday to Thursday at 8 o'clock each night.

A committee has been appointed to select a new hymn book suitable to the particular needs of this church.

In connection with its last local bulletin the church issued a blank to be filled out by the membership in which each one was asked to designate the particular kind of service he was prepared to give, such as teaching in the Sunday school, assisting in the musical program, helping with the new building, etc.

In presenting the general plan and purpose of the congregation for the year the pastor, M. W. Lyon, made the following statement:

"The collapse of prosperity was not the result of a breakdown in distribution, but of a breakdown in character. The church builds character. Gospel recovery is even more vital to our country's welfare than industrial recovery! Golden Rule Church is alive to that fact. It wants to meet the challenge of our critical times by helping build character in the lives of our citizens and of those who will be tomorrow's citizens. If we could double our active workers, we could probably quadruple our effective work. Do you want a part in it? Will you join us in our Gospel Recovery Act for a Rally Year of united effort?"

"Every department of the church is actively working toward a year of more effective service . . . All are in need of workers. . . Results will be tabulated and we will endeavor to utilize the service of everyone who volunteers, in some line of work. Some will wish to enlist for several kinds of work, but everyone is urged to enter at least one. Not only members are invited, but all who wish to support this effort. . . ."

"The Master is calling for the consecration of our talents, whatever they may be, however small they be. Unused talents deteriorate and are lost. Talents used increase the more. As we approach the Thanksgiving season, let us bring our thank offering of loving service, and lay it at the feet of the Master!"

AN INTERESTING JOURNEY

The following is taken from an interesting letter from C. E. Lapp, who is now on the final part of his return journey from the Far West with his wife and her mother, Sr. Brewer of Ohio. Bro. Lapp writes from Moorefield, Neb., under date of Nov. 13, 1933.

"Just imagine us away out here in this cold region with the ice a quarter of an inch thick on the streams, after our recent experience in Arizona and southern California!

"We arrived here Saturday night, and at the request of Bro. E. E. Giesler, pastor of the church, we began at once a series of special meetings that are to continue each night until we leave.

"We surely had a wonderful time with Bro. S. J. Lindsay in Arizona. Of course you couldn't guess what we did while there! We went up to the Coolidge Dam and caught some real nice bass. I have a picture for evidence!

"We saw the Grand Canyon, Petrified Forest, and Painted Desert, but could not assimilate all of these wonders in so short a time. We are all enjoying the trip immensely."

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

Rally Day at Eden Valley was November 5 with a program by the Sunday school taking the place of the regular Sunday school and morning worship services. A crowd of 112 attended this service. Rally Day as the beginning of a Rally Year was especially stressed.

Talks were given by Superintendent Herman Ruhn, Primary Teacher Mrs. W. F. Hoskins, Intermediate Teacher Mrs. Herman Ruhn, Young People's Teacher Richard LeCrone, and Adult Teacher Mrs. Alvin Bennett. Following these talks were the primary and intermediate classes and singing by the young people's class, also a sermonette by Mrs. Earl Brassard of the adult class. Bro. LeCrone then closed with a short inspirational talk.

During the service papers containing lists of work in connection with the church, Berean, Sunday school, and Ladies' Aid to be checked by those willing to work in the capacities named, were handed out. At the close of the service these were collected and given to the pastor to help him as a working basis. He reports a very good response.

Although the crowd was not so large as usual on Rally Day, much spiritual interest was evident. The attendance and interest the following Sunday indicate that the church is rallying for a Rally Year.

Sunday evening worship has been discontinued due to poor attendance, but the Wednesday night prayer meeting and Bible study and the Thursday night Berean meetings are blessings to all who attend.

Bro. LeCrone has moved to Eden Valley and now has a room at the O. J. Hubbard home, where he intends to make his home at least for this winter.

The Ladies' Aid met November 9 at the Herman Ruhn home. A crowd of over thirty was present, and work was begun on a butterfly quilt. The ladies are having a quilting this Thursday, Nov. 16, at the home of Sr. Clayton Woods.

Mrs. Herman Ruhn, Clerk.

FROM MRS. LILIAN S. RAILTON

Writing from Fredonia, N. Y., where she is visiting at the home of her sister, Sr. Lilian S. Railton of Fonthill, Ont., sends an interesting message as follows:

"I do enjoy the splendid articles in The Restitution Herald, and feel to thank God for our blessings. In these days when men's hearts are anxious and many are fearful of world conditions we can thank our Father for the light of truth.

"May God's blessing attend the noble efforts put forth by our workers at Oregon."

Those who supply the articles which are so greatly appreciated by our readers, and the management of the paper, are encouraged to continue their efforts through such letters as this.

SPERRY CLAYPOOL

Sperry Claypool, son of Elisha and Sarah Ann (Nicholson) Claypool, was born in Dolson Township, Clark County, Ill., Feb. 20, 1868, and died Nov. 16, 1933. He was married to Rosa Arbogast April 20, 1890. She passed away May 11, 1894. To this union was born one son, Alpha.

On September 12, 1897, he was married to Nora Combs. They had three children: Orphir; Polyda Elezebeth, who died in May, 1903; and Osby.

Mr. Claypool leaves to mourn his absence his faithful wife; the three sons before mentioned; six grandchildren; four sisters, Mrs. Eliza Clapp, Mrs. Mary Clatfelter, Mrs. Charity Ross, and Mrs. Bell Garver; together with many other relatives and friends.

His entire life was spent within a mile of his birthplace. He had been for many years a regular attendant at the church services and Sunday school of the Salem Church of God, of which his wife and children were members.

The funeral services were conducted by G. E. Marsh, assisted by Harry A. Goekler, pastor of the Salem church, which is located a few miles northwest of Marshall, Ill. A very large gathering of friends attested the esteem in which Mr. Claypool was generally held.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Thanksgiving letters and contributions continue to reach the office which indicate that our special issue of November 28 will be unusually interesting. Watch for it.

With deepest regret we learn of the death of Sr. Ola Hillis of Pasadena, Calif. Sr. Hillis has been suffering for several years from an affliction of the lungs. The funeral was conducted by Norman John MacLeod, pastor of the Los Angeles church, and the obituary will follow for a later issue.

It is reported that Bro. Eugene Howard of South Pasadena, Calif., is critically ill at his home in that city. Bro. Howard has been a most faithful defender and supporter of the work in Kansas, where he formerly lived, and also on the West Coast. We pray earnestly for his recovery.

Mrs. S. C. Chaplin has very kindly sent us a splendid photograph of the new Church of God structure at Arkansas City, Kan. It is a most attractive building and presents a dignified appearance in keeping with its sacred purpose. We regret that we are unable to have a cut made for the benefit of our readers, but the picture will be displayed in the Exhibit at the next General Conference.

Mrs. Vertie Sitler of the Oregon, Ill., church has been called to Chicago to assist in the care of Sr. Mary A. Woodward at the home of F. L. Austin. Sr. Sitler has had much experience in nursing, and we are glad that so competent a person will be in charge at the bedside of one so generally beloved.

Sr. Mary A. Woodward, mother of Bro. F. L. Austin, is now located at the home of her son in Chicago. We are glad indeed to learn that she is regaining her strength after her recent illness, and pray that she will soon be fully recovered. Her address is 5439 Ohio St., Austin Sta., Chicago, Illinois.

It is now time for us to plan for the giving of presents in memory of our Savior's birth. Nothing more desirable and fitting to the occasion could be chosen than a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald. We are striving to improve it all the time and believe that the new year will see several distinct advances made. Why not send The Herald to your friends as a constant reminder of the time when He shall come again and fulfill the angel's promise of "glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men"? Remember, the price to new subscribers is only $1.50!

"There is, in fact, but one and the same method of interpretation common to all books, whatever be their subject, and the same grammatical principles and precepts ought to be the common guide in the interpretation of all. Theologians are right, therefore, when they affirm the literal sense, or that which is derived from the knowledge of words, to be the only true one; for that mystical sense, which is incorrectly called a sense, belongs altogether to the thing, and not to the words."—Ernesti.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BAPTISM—

by S. J. Lindsay

This is a treatise on the significance, importance, and mode of baptism by one of the most able Bible teachers. The subject is presented in an interesting and logical manner, setting forth the biblical truth that baptism by immersion in water, following a definite belief in the gospel, is essential to salvation.

HELL—WHAT IS IT?

Anonymous

A concise study of all the occurrences of the word "hell" in the Bible, giving the original Hebrew and Greek words from which it is derived, and showing "that through the Bible excepting in twelve instances, hell has reference to the grave and the grave condition." In the remaining instances it does not refer to a place of eternal torment.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

LET us note the teaching of Jesus. We have seen how Israel was thoroughly indoctrinated with the theory of divine ownership. They often had lapsed into idolatry, and therefore had passed through many bitter experiences.

But when Jesus came, Israel was free from idolatry. The Prophet of Nazareth did not need to rebuke His nation for that sin. The theistic ideal was fully recognized, even unto the tithing of mint, anise, and cummin.

The message of Jesus, therefore, was not to establish the doctrine of divine ownership, but to interpret it. The church needs to hear that interpretation again today, for divine ownership is the first fundamental of Christian stewardship.

It is a great surprise to many people to learn how much Jesus had to say on the subject of property or money. He spent much time on this topic.

Today ministers are often criticised for mentioning money by people who clamor for the gospel. If there is no relation between money and the gospel, then Jesus spent much of His precious time in preaching something that was not gospel, and a large portion of the New Testament deals with a foreign theme.

It is asserted that one verse out of every six in Matthew, Mark, and Luke is on this subject. This was the theme of the majority of the sermons and addresses of Jesus. Sixteen of His thirty-eight parables deal with the right or wrong use of money.

So much of the Master's teaching on this subject is recorded that space will not permit us here to touch the hem of the garment. If you will take your Bible and place a silver star beside every passage that deals with this theme, when you are through you will have a "Milky Way" from Genesis to Revelation with the galaxy most multitudinous about the "Star of Bethlehem." Let us begin with the sermon on the mount, which contains the fundamentals of His coming kingdom.

Matthew 6:19-34 will remain forever the undimmed classic on this subject: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt. . . but . . . in heaven. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." So if your heart is right, your possessions will be used in such a way that it will mean treasures in heaven.

"No man can serve two masters. . . Ye cannot serve God and mammon," i. e., money.

Now follow the Master's wonderful lessons on divine providence. How many today are refusing to use their money for any great cause in the world! They say, "We've got to live, we've got to eat and dress." Jesus says, "Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink. . . Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not . . . yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? . . . Why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies. . . even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field . . . shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? . . . But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these (temporal) things shall be added unto you."

In Matthew 19:16-22 is the story of the rich young ruler. "Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." This is a commentary on Matthew 6:20, 21. But the young man went away sorrowfully, for he had great possessions.

This young man's trouble was in his conception of ownership. If he had regarded himself as a steward it would not have been hard for him to part with that which was another's. But he considered it his. This was the thing that stood between him and salvation. Christ put the test to him as God did to Abraham. But he could not stand that test.

Had he met the test as Abraham did when God told him to offer his child, Jesus in all probability would have stopped him as God stopped Abraham, giving back his boy and infinitely more; for He did not want Isaac's blood, he wanted Abraham's heart. So Jesus did not want the young man's money. Jesus is putting the same test to us today. To meet it we must become stewards.

After Jesus' interview with the rich young ruler, He said, "Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. . . It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle."

Yes, it is easier for a man to give up his wealth as long as he holds to the pagan conception of ownership. As long as he holds this theory, he will keep his wealth though it damns his soul. This is the trouble with the church today. There is no hope for us unless we drive out the last vestiges of paganism and become Christian to the core.—W. C. Tiffin in Present Truth Messenger.

NINETY MILES OF BIBLES PRINTED

A 470,000 foot bookshelf, long enough to reach from New York to Philadelphia, would be required to hold all the Bibles published during one year, according to an estimate made by the Bible Guild. The Bible as a best seller is still in a class by itself, with an estimated total of 36,500,000 volumes turned out by the presses of the world in a single year. This includes copies of the entire Bible, Testaments, and books or portions individually bound.

Here are other figures indicating the extent to which the Bible is being published and distributed:

Seven hundred volumes a minute, day and night, is the average output.

If stacked side by side as in a shelf, they would make a line ninety miles long.

In the United States alone, close to 14,000,000 volumes of the Bible were published during one year.

This is four times the number of books and pamphlets in the library of Congress, the largest library in the western hemisphere.—San Francisco Examiner.

Gratitude

I thank You for these gifts, dear God,
Upon Thanksgiving Day—
For love and laughter and the faith
That makes me kneel to pray.

For life that lends me happiness,
And sleep that gives me rest,
These are the gifts that keep my heart
Serene within my breast.

Love, laughter, faith and life and sleep,
We own them, every one—
They carry us along the road
That leads from sun to sun.

"Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men! For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness."—Psalm 107:8, 9.

MY GOD, I THANK THEE

My God, I thank Thee, who hast made
The earth so bright,
So full of splendor and of joy,
Beauty and light;
So many things are here,
Noble and right.

I thank Thee, too, that Thou hast made
Joy to abound,
So many gentle thoughts and deeds
Circling us round,
That in the darkest spots of earth
Some love is found.

I thank Thee, Lord, that here our hearts,
Though amply blest,
Can never find, although they seek,
A perfect rest,
Nor ever shall, until they lean
On Jesus' breast.

WHEN THE WORLD GIVES THANKS

LOGICALLY enough Thanksgiving Day has always been a religious festival. It was called into being through the spontaneous outpouring of gratitude felt by our American forefathers after they had gathered their first harvest on these shores in 1621. They recognized God as the bestower of every good thing; and when their bins were overflowing and their storehouses amply supplied for coming winter, they were impelled to lift their hearts in prayer and their voices in joyful songs of praise to Him.

We may be, and we should be, appreciative of all that our fellow men do for us, but at the same time we should never overlook the fact that they are but the instruments of divine Providence. The material gifts they so generously supply are obtained by them from the exhaustless storehouse of the heavenly Father. They are as much indebted to God for that which they have to give as we are indebted to them.

We sometimes feel that there can be no greater sin than the sin of ingratitude. Israel was constantly reminded of God's continued goodness to it and of its consequent obligation to Him in many impressive forms of worship. The offerings were all designed for this purpose, and especially the "thank offerings."

Israel is not the only nation that has been signally blessed by God. His kindness and love are everywhere apparent. "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." But men have not always recognized the gracious hand moving in their affairs, and even "when they knew him, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful."

The time is coming, however, when the entire world will be brought to realize and to acknowledge both the goodness and the mercy of the beneficent Father. They will be made to feel their dependence upon Him as no people, not excluding Israel, has ever been made to do, for their self-confidence will be totally shattered by the losses and sufferings they will bring upon themselves by submission to the Antichrist. After their spirits have been broken by adversity and disappointment in men's ability to rule the world successfully, their hearts will be in a receptive mood to listen to the new law that will go forth from Zion for the government of mankind.

Then it is that "it shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts."—Zech. 8:20, 21.

All the world will have ample reasons for worshiping Jehovah in those days when He will have established His kingdom, filled the earth with material prosperity, and brought about universal security and peace.

It will be as true of the world as it was of the Psalmist so long ago, "I will praise thee with uprightness of heart, when I have learned thy righteous judgments."—Psa. 119:7. "For when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—Isa. 26:9. When "mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other . . . the Lord shall give that which is good: and our land shall yield her increase" (Psa. 85:10, 12), and the whole wide world will give thanks unto God for His goodness.

Golden Rule Home Gives Thanks

By Genniel Carpenter

JUST as far back as memory can take me, "The Home" was a very important institution in my life, as were Sunday school, church, conference, and the Training School. In that large and attractive building, crowning its hill with so much dignity, Sister Thayer once taught a Berean class of small girls and boys, including me. As I approached the familiar back porch, I thought with sadness of the dear old people of Golden Rule Home whom I had known in my childhood and whom I could no longer look forward to seeing there; but the anticipation of greeting other old friends who remained and meeting new ones was pleasant indeed. And then one of these very same old friends, in the person of Sister Chaffee, was answering my knock and inviting me inside.

After removing my wraps and getting warm, I enjoyed a period of conversation with the different members of the family. Some were reading, some were writing letters, some were chatting with each other, but all graciously allowed me to interrupt to meet them and "get acquainted." We made a sort of tour of inspection upstairs, too, stopping at the room of the latest newcomer, Sister Olive Wood, formerly of California. Hers is a pleasant room with south windows. Sister Wood is quiet and unassuming, but it did not take long to discover that she was already endeared to her companions at Golden Rule Home for her kind ways.

Sister Mick, the beloved matron of the Home, was taking a brief respite from her busy day—all her days and hours are full, with so large a family and house to take care of—when I found her. As we talked, I was impressed with the sweetness of her nature, and I could not help noticing how it showed in her face. She gave me some favorite lines of hers, these from "America the Beautiful," by Katherine Lee Bates:

"America, America, God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood, from sea to shining sea."

And this little prayer:

"TEACH US TO PRAY"

"O Lord, may we observe this day set apart for thankfulness. Dear Father, Thou hast been very good to us. The blessings of the year have been abundant. From scourge and pestilence, from storm and flood, Thou hast protected us. We recognize Thy hand in all of our experiences. May our lives be a living testimony to our love of justice, righteousness and peace, throughout all the world. In His name. Amen."

Sr. Kerr is quite deaf, and one might suppose it would be difficult to interview her; but she is so good-natured and obliging that we had a fine "talk," in spite of having to write out one side of the conversation. Upon being asked what she was thankful for, she gave a brief but very comprehensive answer: "I am thankful for everything under the sun that God has given me," she stated simply.

In Sister Chaffee's room was a pleasant air of "busyness." She was making a rug, and the finished product she showed me was very pretty. We talked together for awhile, and she promised me a Thanksgiving message later. Since then she has been ill; but she sent me a little note, nevertheless. She says: "Something to be thankful for is God's promises. 'Whosoever cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.' His Word has been my guide over fifty years. He is still my strength and shield."

Sr. Wood took me to see Mrs. Steffa, a quiet, kindly woman whom it is a pleasure to meet. After a few minutes' conversation, I went downstairs with Sister Mick to see the remaining members of the family.

In the big southwest room we found Mrs. O'Byrne, with whom I spent a truly delightful half hour, discovering some mutual "friends" among the poets. After discussing Hawthorne, I was glad I had not criticised him when I found he was a relative of hers! When asked for a Thanksgiving message, she laughingly declared that hers would be very witty if brevity is the soul of wit. She said, "I am thankful for the unasked mercies in my cup of blessing."

In the next room was "Grandma" Crowell, who was truly an inspiration to meet. Though she is blind and helpless, all her associates attest to her good nature and cheerfulness. There is a lesson in that for us all. So many who have most to be thankful for are least thankful!

In the kitchen I found Mr. Mick, who, like many other good people, is quiet. When cornered, however, he said he had "about everything" to be thankful for, as he was in good health and pleasant circumstances. Last, but certainly not least in importance, though he is in size, little Billy Mick gravely announced that he was thankful for food, for God, for his mother, and for flowers. Mrs. Mick supplied the interesting information that Billy likes flowers very much indeed. He proudly displayed a cardboard glass of milk, fork, knife, spoon, and plate made by him in school, and tied his shoe string neatly to show me he could. Then he was off to play outdoors.

By this time it was getting late, though I could not understand where the time had gone so quickly. Before I left, I heard some interesting-sounding plans for a surprise present for a member of the family whose birthday was the next day. As I drove home in the early winter dusk, I reflected with pleasure on the events of the day, and I realized that I was thankful, too—thankful for the acquaintance of these older people, whose experiences proclaim the goodness of God; thankful for the understanding and kindness of those who care for them; and thankful for the institution of the Golden Rule Home.

Out of the Night a Song

By Mary A. Gesin

"Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice."

THE letter written to the church at Philippi by the Apostle Paul has often been termed the Epistle of Joy, and how fittingly! Perhaps a true appreciation of the spirit of it may only be arrived at in contemplation of the conditions surrounding its writing.

Paul had finally attained the long-desired goal of his career—the opportunity to teach the gospel in the capital city of his country. That he must do so under chains and imprisonment did not deter his victorious spirit. Alleviate his suffering as they might and permit him liberty as much as possible, the fact still remains he was a prisoner, chained to a guard, enduring weary hours, an aged soldier of the cross. Before him lay the certain prospect of death at the hands of the relentless Roman Government.

With these pictures in mind read and re-read the book of Philippians. Note the many and varied expressions of joy and hope. Even as he dictated the words, scenes from his life at Philippi must have passed before his inner vision.

There he had been flogged; the scars on his stooping form were still visible. He had been cast into the inner prison, a description of which defies the modern writer. A vermin-infested, disease-laden dungeon, no sunbeam by day nor star gleam by night lighted the weary hours. But hark! his voice rang out in songs of praise and thanksgiving to the One under whose everlasting arms he rested.

Remembering his miraculous deliverance, Paul assured the brethren at Philippi that the things which had happened to him "have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel," and "forgetting those things which are behind," he pressed forward with joy and certainty of reward.

Cultural as the study of the history of Paul's time may prove and fascinating as the perusal of his life may be, the real benefit is lost when not applied to one's own life. Today, as truly as in the case of Paul, though not in like intensity, afflictions await us. But we cannot know the meaning of many of the most precious promises of God in all their fullness until we have drunk deeply of the cup of sorrow and disappointment. It is then that they shine out with a clear and steady light, causing us to exclaim with Paul that nothing—tribulation, distress, famine, or peril—can separate us from the love of Christ.

Some one has aptly said that joy is resistless as an antidote for grief and as a witness for Christ. Paul knew that in its fullness. Can you not, despairing Christian, see in his illumined words hope, courage, even thankfulness for your own portion in life? Let us presume that in every trying circumstance you are enabled to order your life with the thought in mind that "the Lord thinketh upon me"

(Psalm 40:17). With that prospect doesn't every tangle right itself?

It may be you have lost nearly all of those worldly possessions which meant so much to you. When one door closes, another opens. This loss may be the means of allowing you more time or opportunity for fuller work in the service for which Paul gladly surrendered every earthly advantage. And how much better fitted you are to serve others if you have first learned the lesson you would impart.

Perhaps just when you have planned to accomplish a certain good thing, your hopes are frustrated. What results, if you are yielding yourself to God's molding? Patience comes, that most valuable and enviable trait of character. Paul speaks of it in such joyous words in Romans 5:3 and 2 Corinthians 7:4. We can be thankful even for tribulation if it cultivates patience, which is not all resignation, but is a quality compounded of courage and faith. Courage to go on, and faith to know that finally God will bring about the consummation, if it is truly a good thing.

All of these lessons from the pages of life but fit us for better service, broaden our sympathy, intensify our courage, increase our faith. Paul, the man so well fitted for his task, found it to be true. He expresses the thought so well in the opening words of his second letter to the church at Corinth. God comforts us, he says, in all our tribulations, that we may be able to comfort others. Paul found reason for thanksgiving under the most trying conditions imaginable. Can we not give thanks in much less harrowing trials?

The Apostle's words, as we read and re-read them, form a sort of triumphant song in our hearts, and nothing can daunt us as long as we sing. Note this: "Holding forth the word of life, that I may rejoice in the day of Christ . . . and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy." And this: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy." Nothing of the craven heart in these words!

The founder of so many of the early churches realized that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and that only do we "through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." But he also appreciated the value of a courageous spirit in facing these same tribulations, and he declared that "none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy" (Acts 21:24).

He declared that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." If he who suffered so greatly could afford to disregard the circumstances surrounding his life and pen for us such glorious words, can we do less for those about us?

Let us never forget there is a top to every hill, but real happiness comes only in following God's leading. May we learn to pray from the depths of sincere desire:

"Lord, give me joy—
Life brings so much of sorrow;
Help me to bravely bear my pain;
Give me Thy strength for the tomorrow
That I may lift my head and smile again.
Lord, give me joy."

"Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."—Psalm 23:5, 6.

THANKSGIVING FOR GOOD NEWS

By R. H. Judd

Oh let us thank the Lord this day,
For the pages of our HERALD.
It sheds much light upon our way,
Does THE RESTITUTION HERALD.
Our daily sheets are full of news,
Of evil tidings, sorrow, shame;
The lustful enjoy the wicked choose,
And scorn heaped on the Savior's name.
They tell of crime, they tell of war,
They tell of graft, and shameful deed;
They tell all this, and they tell more,
They tell us now we need no creed.
For God is not in all their thought;
He loudly knocks, they hear no call;
So long have they the evil sought,
His voice they do not heed at all.
Oh glad the change from that to this,
THE HERALD'S news is news of bliss;
THE HERALD'S news is news of life,
Sorrow ended, no more strife.
No more toiling, no more pain,
No more grinding the poor for gain;
No more hunger, no more thirst,
Hearts sore broken, ready to burst.
No more sadness, no more crying,
No more sickness, no more dying;
No more wars on land or sea,
Old things past, for the new to be.

THANKFULNESS

By George B. Alldridge

"Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me."—Psalm 50:23.

How insignificant is our best effort put forth to please God! How significant are the words of Jesus to His disciples, "So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do."—Luke 17:10.

The Psalmist points out a way which is possible for every child of God, and that is to offer praise to God: in doing this we glorify Him.

How can this be done? I am glad that Paul points out the way. So I read in 1 Thessalonians 5:18, "In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

There is a new life begun in us which seeks to express itself by offering praise and thankfulness to its Author. "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes us free from the law of sin and death." The old life manifested the spirit and disposition of the carnal nature; but the new nature, the divine, manifests the spirit and disposition of the spiritual nature.

No artist is satisfied with his best effort. While the effort may bring him some satisfaction, the ideal lies in his heart, and to attain this is his constant ambition.

In our hearts there should be what Peter so beautifully describes: "But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."—1 Peter 3:4. For this above all else I am truly thankful.

By our choice of this we find it congenial to our new natures; and as we thus glorify God, God reciprocates it by beautifying our lives with all the graces of the Spirit, which in the end bring glory to God. Jesus gives the key to unlock this mystery in Matthew 5:16.

It is a wonderful thing to be in fellowship with God, to converse with Him as a man does with his fellow. The only one of our race who attained this perfectly was the man Christ Jesus. Why? Because His life always was bringing glory to God, and the chief element was His spirit of prayer in the giving of thanks.

Jesus is God's unspeakable gift to man, and it is only as we reflect Him that others will be able to share with us His love and spirit.

To my mind the spirit of thanksgiving continually showing forth in our lives is a manifestation toward God and man that we seek only His glory and the establishment of that glory here upon earth.

"Thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head."

"BE YE THANKFUL"

By Lottie E. Young

TO PAUSE in the midst of life's bustling activities and for one day recall with thanksgiving the mercies of God has become a national custom in our land. It is essentially a Christian custom, for it was instituted by those sturdy God-fearing men whose Christian faith brought them to the bleak shores of New England, and whose hearts were moved with gratitude to God for all His benefits to them. They recognized Him as the Giver of all blessings.

First in the thought of most people who observe Thanksgiving are the material benefits which they enjoy. They thank God for good crops, business prosperity, health, and success, which is eminently right and proper. But after all, these are not the most important things of life. They are the incidentals which Christ promised would be added to those who seek first God's kingdom and righteousness. The essential things are the spiritual benefits received from the Father of lights.

The Apostle Paul was not thinking of any special day or occasion when he exhorted the Colossian Christians to "be thankful." He was urging a spirit of thankfulness that would make every day in the year a Thanksgiving Day. The spirit of thankfulness, like the spirit of prayer, should ever be in our hearts. A thankful person is a happy person; just to know the blessing of sins forgiven is enough to make one thankful all his days; and yet how very few out of the population of the world, or even our highly favored nation, could be found to say they were really happy.

I was reading recently of an elderly woman who had lost her husband, was crippled with rheumatism, and whose livelihood was a rather "hand to mouth" affair, all combining to give her a decidedly grumbling disposition. One day a friend gave her what was called a "Blessing Box," and asked that she drop a penny in it each time she felt she had something special about which to be happy. She promised to do so and kept the box in sight, but the pennies which went into it were few and far between. However, one cold and stormy night as she crept into bed, she thought, "How thankful I am for my bed; a penny shall go into the Box immediately"; and once she began to think over her blessings, some of which might seem trifling to us, perhaps, it was a penny nearly every day.

The thought came when she was lying awake one night to begin with the alphabet and think up a blessing for the letter, so beginning with A it was a comfortable Arm Chair, B of course stood for her Bible, while C was Clothes, D was a good Doctor, while E was Eyes and Ears, and so on. Soon she was able to sing, "Count your blessings, name them one by one, and it will surprise you what the Lord has done," and really mean it.

So Paul counsels to "let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which ye are also called in one body," and then adds, "And be ye thankful." If the peace of God ruled in every heart in the United States at this Thanksgiving season, what a glorious time it would be! If every quarrel were settled; if every unkind thought were forgotten; if jealousy, wrath, evil speaking, envy, and all other "fruits of the flesh" were put away, what cause for real thanksgiving there would be!

It may be too much to expect this of the world; but, Christians, this is what God is asking of you! Unto this, "ye are called in one body." How are we measuring up? The church can be no stronger here than its individual members. It is a personal matter with each of us. Let us take this Thanksgiving season to examine our own hearts and see how they are meeting the requirements of this text.

"I THANK YOU"

By Lyman Booth

TO SAY, "I thank you," may come from an ungrateful tongue, or from the depths of an appreciative heart. "I thank you" does not always express the speaker's candid thoughts, for it is too often used as a matter of form. It has become a custom to say, "I thank you," for favors done or upon the reception of a gift, whether or not the speaker really expresses his inmost feelings, for too often they are almost forgotten as soon as uttered.

But the truly grateful manifest their appreciation in generous deeds or in cheerful, helpful service. True gratitude is born of love, and love is always ready and anxious to serve. Service is more expressive of thankfulness than words, or kind deeds than honied phrases.

The day appointed by the law of our land for thanksgiving and praise to God has almost arrived. Men give thanks to Him one day alone, while all other days will reach His throne perhaps in levity. Men sing songs of praise for "the blessings that hallow our days." They think not of the result should the sun shine but one day in the year, nor how the world would survive if the heavens gave rain but one day in three hundred sixty-five.

How easy to forget that "God maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."—Matt. 5:45. He showers His blessings upon both alike. Therefore, all should be thankful at all times.

Paul exhorted the Thessalonians, saying, "In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God." This is a duty which Paul never forgot. It is an obligation, for it is the will of God concerning those in Christ Jesus, and not a mere optional exercise.

We should be thankful for our countless blessings, both temporal and spiritual, and remember that God is better to us than we justly deserve.

"God is good and true, and then
As praise is comely on the lips of men,
Let thankful praise daily arise
To God's pavilion in the skies."

THANKSGIVING

By Emma C. Railsback

THANKSGIVING and praise belong to the Lord for His goodness and mercy and for His precious promises to those who love Him. In these times of political turmoil among the nations and other innumerable evidences that Gentile times are drawing to a close, how thankful the true Christian should be that the Savior has said: "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

We are also thankful for many temporal blessings, among others the opportunity of working in God's vineyard, helping a little here and a little there, to bring the light of His Word to those who are seeking to know the significance of present world conditions and inquiring the way of salvation. Let us work, watch, and pray.

PRAISE AND GRACE

By J. G. Haupt

RAISING Jehovah is one of the prime demands made on the believer. The verse,

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise Him, all creatures here below,
Praise Him above, ye angel band,
Praise Him, ye saints of every land," gives a noble expression as to the duty of him who trusts and obeys.

The saints, the holy ones, are in the Scriptures all that trust in the Lord and do His will. It was God only until the Messiah, the only begotten Son of God, was begotten by the Holy Pneuma, the Holy Breath, of God, for God breathed upon Mary His divine breath, by which she became the mother of the divine Messiah child, the Christ.

The Epistles not infrequently give us the devout benediction in holy words, "Grace be unto you from God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ." These words have a holy meaning for the devout member of the church of God, to everyone who was named a Christian from the early days of Antioch, where the church of God accepted the divine appellation of Christian for every believer.

The reader will note that everyone who does not believe is an unbeliever. This Anglo-Saxon word is, in the Latin and the Greek, expressed by a word of exactly the same meaning, namely, "infidel." An infidel is simply an unbeliever. No infidel will have part in the first resurrection. As to the resurrection, the Bible states that the rest of the dead did not rise until a thousand years were passed. The time of the first resurrection (1 Cor. 15), according to the Apostle Paul, will bring all the believers out of their graves and will change all living believers in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, to immortal, incorruptible, spiritual bodies.

To all believers the benediction has come in holy words from God Himself, "Grace be to you from God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ." So be it, Lord God, for we accept the heavenly benediction.

"I will sing and give praise."—Psalms 108:1.

"THANKSGIVING AVENUE"

"And be ye thankful."—Colossians 3:15.

DO I BELIEVE in Thanksgiving Day? I certainly do. I believe that every day is one for which we may be thankful, and in which we may find something to be thankful for. The Bible is well laden with thanksgiving from the time recorded in Exodus, when Moses and the children of Israel sang that wonderful song of deliverance, down to Revelation, where that mighty host is seen standing before the throne singing, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, . . . be unto our God for ever and ever."

We may rightly join with our Pilgrim Fathers once a year in a general thanksgiving for our freedom and land of liberty with all its blessings; but as Christians we have more and greater blessings to be thankful for. The great Apostle went as far as to say at one time, "In every thing give thanks." It is a very pleasant and beautiful place to live on—"Thanksgiving Avenue."

Some may ask, What have I to be thankful for? If you stop to "count your blessings," you will find them many. Suppose you have had a hard time; be thankful it was no harder. Have you had sickness? Be thankful it was no worse and that you yet live. Some one may ask the writer: "Were you thankful when death entered your home and took your children?" I answer, "No, but I was thankful that they could be with me and I with them, to give care to the very last." I was thankful they could say, "All is well." I was truly thankful that in the very last moments of my dear daughter's life, as I sat with my arms around her, while her last words were, "It is all right," that I could reply, "Good-bye, Lizzie, we will meet you in the morning."

Thus, in spite of all that may come, we may find something to be thankful for. Now, kind reader, let us make the day which has been set apart as a special day of thanksgiving one in which we shall be brought nearer to God, nearer to the hearts of suffering humanity, and thus nearer to the great purpose for which we are here in this world; then, with hearts filled with thankfulness, go forth to help bless others and cheer them on life's pathway, and some day in the future, with all the redeemed host, we may join in the glad song of thanksgiving and praise to Him who has loved us and washed us in His own precious blood.—H. A. Mitchell in Messiah's Advocate.

SIGNS OF CHRIST'S COMING

By C. E. Randall

"Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not."—Matthew 24:26.

THE above scripture has reference to the coming of the Lord. It is a warning. It is apparent according to this scripture that some will proclaim the coming of the Lord before He actually comes. There is no need to be misled or fooled concerning this event. When the Lord comes, there will be no doubt as to the event. It will not be necessary to guess. It will be such a momentous event that the world will be rocked to its very foundations.

No, the world will not see Him in person when He comes for His church; but when the church is caught up and God's Spirit is taken out of the world, mankind will know what has happened. They will run from sea to sea to find the Word of God then, but will not find it (Amos 8:11, 12).

When the church is translated, two great things must take place: the resurrection of the "dead in Christ" and the change from mortality to immortality of the living in Christ; and together will they be caught up to meet Christ (1 Thess. 4:16, 17; 1 Cor. 15:51-54).

There was no resurrection of the dead in 1914 when a certain group made a second guess as to the Lord's coming. Neither will the righteous be caught up "one by one," but the resurrected dead and the changed living are to be translated "together." This resurrection and change is to occur in "a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump" and is not to be scattered over a period of years.

Until these events have taken place, do not believe people when they say: "He is in a secret place." Let all this guessing be to others.—Church of God Messenger.

TITHING A BLESSING

THE giving of tithes is as ancient as the days of Abraham, and was practiced by his grandson Jacob. It was enforced upon the Jews by statutory law from their nation's dawn, existing in force until their national death at Calvary's cross. It was tithe-giving before the law was proclaimed at Mt. Sinai, but it was tithe-paying from thence onward to its expiration with Christ upon the tree (Col. 2:14-17; Matt. 23:23).

As Christians were never under the law by which the Jews were governed, no one is in duty bound to pay tithes, or any stipulated amount; but all are enjoined, throughout the Scriptures, to give liberally and to honor God with their earthly store, not of necessity, but voluntarily and cheerfully.

"Give," says our Savior, "and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again."—Luke 6:38.

It was under the old covenant that God addressed the Jews, saying: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Malachi 3:10. "Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."—Prov. 3:9, 10. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."—Prov. 11:24, 25.

If these words were full of encouragement to Jews, how can they be otherwise to Christians? If the Almighty so wonderfully blessed the tithe payers then, what rich blessings are in store for the tithe giver now? And if the Jews were by law compelled to pay a tenth, should not Christians be as liberal and thankfully give as much?

"I have shewed you all things," says Paul in Acts 20:35, "how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened: but by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want: that there may be equality."—2 Cor. 8:12-14. "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give: not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. 9:7. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."—1 Cor. 16:1, 2.

These scriptures, coming as they do to us, are freighted with instruction and should be pondered over with serious and earnest thought. To give cheerfully, lovingly, and systematically as the Lord prospers one pays in the highest sense; and to give a tenth of one's increase seems but reasonable, just, and right. The giving of one tenth equalizes all in every condition in life; because all give alike their tenth, according to their net income. Of many Christians today it may be said as of Jacob and his vow (Gen. 28:20-22), that their covenant with God, to return His one tenth, was the beginning of their success in life.

Considering tithe-giving from a financial standpoint, it is the best partnership ever formed, the best contract ever made, and the best agreement ever entered into since becoming a Christian. In the giving of tithes there is that constant reminder of one's stewardship, as also of Him to whom he belongs and with whom he is associated. All these combined and considered produce in the heart of every disciple of the Lord Jesus the gratitude due our heavenly Father for our hope through Christ and for the life, health, and earthly store He so richly bestows.

The regular giving of the tithe is but a token of affection, because God is honored with the property disbursed to the many needy causes and institutions engaged in the lifting up of humanity; and the amount of our sacrifices measures the extent of our interest. In systematic giving of tithes there is also that spirit of Christianity imparted, so needful, so helpful, and so stimulating in these last days of worldliness that its practice should be cultivated and extended as time hastens us on to the judgment.—J. August Smith; selected by F. H. Knodle.

THE LORD IS AT HAND

NEVER were more truthful words uttered than those by the Apostle Paul in Philippians 4:5. In my experience of over thirty years I have found it was precious. In the ups and downs of this fleeting life I have proved those words, and know them to be true and a present help in every time of need. The words of our God are yea and amen to those who trust and obey Him in the sunshine and in the storm. He is at hand in the morning's dawn and the noonday's brightness, and also when the sun hides his shining face. Our Lord is with His people still, an ever-abiding friend, a present help.

It is blessed to know we are not to war this warfare alone. The arm of our divine Master is underneath us. Need we fall? No, He is divine, and His almighty power has been manifested all the way along the coast of time, where we have traveled. Our Lord has been true, He has never left us. In sickness and in health, in storms or sunshine, it has been all the same. Has He supplied our needs? Yes, He has. Shall we trust Him for the future these few last fleeting days, just before the judgment? Yes, let us afresh buckle on the armor, and our strength will be renewed to finish up life's journey here. The Judge standeth at the door. The Lord is at hand. Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him. And all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him.

The testimony is, "Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."—Rev. 3:11. Will anyone lay down the armor here and lose the crown just at the breaking of the day? The old prophet whom God sent to Bethel and who before Jeroboam and at the altar filled his mission there well and obeyed the word of God to him would not eat bread nor drink water nor take a reward. He started straight for home or the place from whence he came. But ere he finished his walk he stopped and sat under an oak. There the false prophet overtook him and persuaded him to go back with him and eat bread and drink water. He disobeyed God and lost his life.

Now may the Spirit of God our heavenly Father rest with power upon His church and people, that we be led not by false prophets, but in the line of God's prophets, Jesus Christ being at the head. He it is who leadeth us to victory and everlasting life. Tired and weary ones, sick and afflicted, our only balm is in Jesus. He it is who can and will do us good. Dare trust Him, and in a little while He will come and will not tarry.—Amos Harmon in The Messiah's Advocate.

"GO, AND SIN NO MORE"

In the judgment hall at Jerusalem,
They brought Him the woman of sin,
Her partner in guilt had escaped them,
But the woman must die for her sin.
And there, in her guilt and contrition,
With downcast, but pleading air,
In that gentle and holy Presence,
Stood the woman so guilty and fair.

Then clamored her haughty accusers
For the life of that daughter of sin,
But were hushed by the loving Savior
Who came a world to win.
For this is the answer He gave them,
To Pharisees all make it known:
"He that is sinless among you,
Let him first cast a stone."

Then stooping He wrote in the sand at His feet,
Awaiting what now may betide;
But soon they had all forsook Him,
Save that stricken one at His side.
Then with voice more sad and tender
Than is heard on Time's cold shore
Spake—"Neither do I condemn thee;
Go, and sin no more."

Oh! kind and compassionate Savior,
Oh, pitying love divine,
No love in this world of sorrow
Will forgive like that love of Thine.
Oh, Thou who on Calvary's mountain
Thy life did gladly give,
That vile but repentant sinners
Might come to Thee and live—

Look Thou in tender mercy
On those who err today,
And as Thou forgavest the darkest sins,
Oh, turn not from us away.
May we read in the blue dome above us,
May we hear when the tempests roar,
"Neither do I condemn thee;
Go, and sin no more."

Abreast of the Times

"This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:21. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them."—Isaiah 42:9.

Greatest 'Quake on Record

"There shall be . . . earthquakes, in divers places. . . . The beginning of sorrows."—Jesus.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—What is said to have been the most severe earthquake ever recorded on the seismographs was reported yesterday from observatories in all parts of the world. By bringing together the data obtained from all the stations it has been determined that the center of the 'quake was in a remote and probably uninhabited section in the vicinity of Baffin Island, where "there were no tall buildings to be shaken down and no lives to be lost."

"I never heard of one happening so far north," said Rev. Joseph Lynch, S. J., in charge of the Fordham Seismographical Laboratory. "Usually we look for earth tremors in the equatorial belt, where the centrifugal force is the strongest."

Japan-China Alliance Rumor

"Ye shall hear of wars and rumours of war: see that ye be not troubled: . . . the end is not yet."—Jesus.

SHANGHAI, China, Nov. 21.—According to The Chicago Tribune Press Service it is reported that Akira Ariyoshi, Japanese Minister to China, and Maj. Gen. Neiji Okamura, vice chief of staff of the Japanese army in Manchukuo, have made a secret proposal to Chinese military authorities by which Japan is willing to abolish the puppet state of Manchukuo providing China is willing to unite with Japan in a military and economic alliance similar to the present Japan-Manchukuo arrangement.

If such an agreement were reached, the Japanese Army, it is said, would undertake to protect China against aggression by land (with probable reference to Russia), while the Japanese Navy will assume the protection of China from American or European naval aggression.

Such a union of Japan and China has been looked for by students of prophecy for a long time. (See "Gathering Clouds" in this paper of June 13, 1933.)

Soviet Russia Recognized

"Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, . . . of Meshech and Tubal."—Ezekiel 38:3.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 17.—Announcement was made today by President Roosevelt of the formal recognition by the United States of the Union of Socialistic Soviet Republics, the Bolshevik regime in Russia. Since the overthrow of the Kerensky Government on November 7, 1917, the United States has maintained no diplomatic relations with Russia whatsoever. The principal reason why recognition has been withheld was the fact that the Soviets refused to acknowledge the validity of the debts contracted by previous Russian Governments with this country and certain of its citizens.

Among the more significant matters agreed upon by President Roosevelt and the Russian Commissioner, Mr. Litvinov, are the following:

A joint statement saying that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Litvinov had exchanged views "with regard to methods of settling all outstanding questions of indebtedness and claims" and that they hoped for a speedy solution of these problems.

A joint Roosevelt-Litvinov statement expressing the hope that all outstanding debt questions may be settled as soon as possible.

An agreement by Russia not to permit its agents in the United States to propagandize against our Government and its institutions.

A Russian guarantee of legal protection for American nationals, establishing their rights to fair trials.

A Russian guarantee of religious freedom for Americans in Russia.

It is to be desired, but scarcely to be anticipated, that the relations of the United States and Soviet Russia will prove permanent and mutually satisfactory. The ideals of the two peoples are too divergent politically, economically, and religiously for them to remain long in sympathetic accord.

To the student of prophecy the outcome is of special interest owing to the important role Russia is to play during the tribulation and to the fact that God's judgments have already been declared against her.

Beyond the Stratosphere

"No man hath ascended up to heaven, but . . . the Son of man which is in heaven."—John 3:13.

BRIDGETON, N. J., Nov. 21.—Lieutenant Commander T. G. W. Settle of the United States Navy and Major Chester L. Fordney of the Marine Corps, landed in a swamp near here tonight, after their successful attempt to reach the stratosphere for the investigation of the cosmic rays. The daring voyagers attained a height of 11.17 miles above the earth, breaking all previous official records, the record recently claimed by two Russians, 11.8 miles, not having been officially recognized.

Men have circled the earth for ages and populated all continents and the islands of the sea, but all attempts to escape entirely from its surface have failed because "the heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men."—Psalm 115:16.

“COME NEAR, YE NATIONS, TO HEAR; AND HEARKEN, YE PEOPLE: LET THE EARTH HEAR, AND ALL THAT IS THEREIN.”

OVER four billion dollars, or one and one-half times the assessed valuation of all the property in the city of Chicago! That is the stupendous total of the mortgages held in the United States alone on farm lands and buildings. In the state of Illinois the amount of such mortgages has reached well over $200,000,000; in California it has climbed to something over a billion.

These debts are the primary cause of the nation's hard plight. In the effort to refund or to pay in full the sums represented by these figures, it has become impossible for the farmers, and, consequently, for most city dealers, to make a profit on their money and labor. Every business and every nation are rapidly coming to the same predicament.

Under the law of the jubilee, instituted fifteen hundred years before the birth of the Christ, it was impossible for Israel to saddle itself with such colossal debts as these. Indeed, mortgages and debentures were an unknown quantity, for land itself could never be transferred from one owner to another. The use of the land, known in legal parlance as the usufruct, could be leased for a period not to extend beyond the next jubilee year, a period which in no case could exceed forty-nine years.

Israelites were not permitted to sell themselves as slaves, although they were permitted to own slaves; but they could bind themselves to their creditors as hired servants. Normally this period of servitude was concluded at the inauguration of the sabbatical year next following the time the servitude was commenced; but by submitting to having his ear bored with an awl, the servant bound himself to service until the year of jubilee. With the coming of the jubilee, all slaves and servants in Israel, regardless of their nationality, were freed and returned to their own homes.

Not only were the jubilee periods marked by the emancipation of servants and slaves and the abrogation of leases, but the cancellation of all debts was also a legal part of the ceremonies of such years. Regardless of size or normal duration, every debt in the land was declared as paid. As a natural result of all these facts, there were no wide divergences in the individual standing of the members of the Israelitish society.

The jubilee years, also, were periods of great rejoicing.

“Earth's Jubilee,” as the accompanying article is entitled, is based upon lesson 44 in Senior Berean Book 3, to be published in the not distant future. It was delivered on Sunday, November 19, as a sermon at Oregon, Illinois.

Obviously, release from debt and worries that go with financial difficulties would alone cause considerable joy; but added to these was an unusually intense worship of God, a time of thanksgiving, a time of praise.

According to the prophecies of Isaiah and other of the Old and New Testament writers, these jubilee years will be repeated on a grander scale in the kingdom to be established on earth with the return of the Christ. Describing this time, Isaiah wrote, “And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.”

As in the ancient system of jubilee, this surcease of trouble, economic, political, and social, will be due to a conclusion of the problems which now beset mankind. Debts will present no difficulties, for “they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.”

But release from financial troubles in itself would not be responsible for the “everlasting joy” noted by the Prophet. Ill health, pain, and fear do not make for much temporary joy, let alone that of a permanent variety. Eradication of the sicknesses which now afflict men would be necessary before the predictions of Isaiah could be completely fulfilled.

Relief from disease is actually to occur. According to Isaiah, “the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.” Not only, therefore, will sickness be abolished, but with it will go the unease that accompanies a conscience troubled with thoughts of sin committed in the past and for which requital has not been made.

And when, added to all this, is the assurance that death itself is to be destroyed, we exclaim with Mr. Smith:

“This is the prospect of the kingdom come;
This is of all the prophecies the sum;
As now in heaven, so on earth 'twill be—
Death and the tomb then gone eternally,
The saints as luminous as midday sun;
All thought of bliss that man can have outdone!”

AN AMBASSADOR IN CHAINS

THERE is one thing I hope you boys and girls have noticed about our beloved missionary, the Apostle Paul, and that is his unfailing courtesy. No matter how others treated him, he returned only the very kindest treatment to them. And that was because his heart was filled with love for everyone and he knew he had not done the things they accused him of doing.

You know, when you are in the right you don't need to get angry and shout harsh words back at some one who says you have done something wrong. It's only the one who really has done the wrong that gets excited. And that is something of what Paul meant when he said in today's lesson that he tried always to have a clear conscience toward God and man.

Here we see Paul accused by the Jews of taking a Gentile into the temple, and that was considered by them as a very wicked thing to do. Not many years ago the Palestine Exploration Society brought to light an inscription on a part of the old temple wall which reads: "No man of alien race is to enter within the balustrade and fence that go round the temple. If anyone is taken in the act, let him know that he has himself to blame for the penalty of death that follows."

This was the danger facing Paul if his accusers should win their case. But they were in the wrong, for Paul had not taken a Gentile into the temple. Just because they saw him walking on the street and talking to one, they supposed he had taken him into the temple. And this shows how they hunted for something, anything, by which they might accuse Paul of doing wrong.

Now read Acts 23:16-22, and learn who it was saved Paul's life after forty men had sworn they wouldn't eat nor drink until they had killed Paul. Can you see the young lad going to tell his Uncle Paul about it? He had to be very careful, for if this band of murderers caught him it would mean death for him, too.

Find out what Paul did and how the captain protected him. Just think of having an escort and a bodyguard of two hundred soldiers, seventy horsemen, and two hundred spearmen! Thus was this minister of the gospel of peace brought to Caesarea in safety.

The captain had sent a letter to the governor stating Paul's case, and when the governor read it, he ordered

Paul kept in prison until the day of his trial. And if you've ever read anything about Roman prisons you know what dark, vile, and loathsome places they were.

You'd think Paul would have given up preaching. He was a very fine lawyer, you know, and he could have earned a good living at that profession. Why do you think he kept on? It was love for Christ and the desire that others should know about the Savior, wasn't it?

Often he was comforted in his dreams by the Lord appearing to him and telling him to keep right on, that He would be his Helper. No one could be a quitter with such a Helper as that! Besides, Paul had always kept a certain ambition before him; that was to be able to preach the gospel in Rome. And he was daily getting nearer to his goal.

In the verses in today's lesson we see what a fine lawyer Paul was, as he pleaded his own case. And he won; at least, he wasn't declared guilty of death. Notice how honest his speech was.

First, he said he'd gone into the temple to worship and had not been trying to stir up trouble. Then he acknowledged that he did have a different belief from the majority of the Jews, for he followed the "way," which was their name for Christ. He stood before them with a clear conscience ready to answer any charge against him.

Felix, that wicked and cruel and greedy ruler who had once been a slave, knew that Paul spoke the truth. He ordered the jailer to allow Paul to have visitors and said that some day he wanted to learn more about Paul's "way" of life.

When that day came and Paul showed Felix just what a wicked man he had been and how some day he would have to answer for his sins, Felix trembled. But he didn't repent; he only said, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee."

Poor Felix, that convenient season never came!

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Make the usual heading, and draw your little map, showing Jerusalem and Caesarea. Then write the story of Paul's imprisonment, making several little drawings to illustrate it. Draw a prison cell with bars on the door; over it write, "Paul, the prisoner for Christ." Cut out figures to represent people visiting Paul to learn more of the gospel. Draw Felix on his throne with Paul before him, telling him about Jesus.

PAUL IN CAESAREA

Acts 21 to 26

Devotional Reading: Psalm 2:1-8

GOLDEN TEXT

Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.—Acts 24:16.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul in Caesarea.

Aim: To show that Paul taught the resurrection as the only hope of life after death.

I. Paul's Courteous Defence. (Acts 24:10-12.) Paul's experience in meeting men of all classes and positions in life had taught him the value of courtesy. No matter how firmly he might deny the accusations of his enemies, his manner toward those in authority and toward men was always courteous and respectful. To show respect for the position and convictions of others, however wrong those convictions may be, opens the way for the introduction of the truth on a friendly and consequently more favorable basis than would otherwise be the case. The truth should be told without equivocation or evasion, but it should be presented in such a way as to indicate regard for the beliefs and even prejudices of others. Courtesy is Christlikeness.

II. Paul's Confession of Faith. (Vv. 14-17.) Readily acknowledging the fact that he was looked upon as a heretic, Paul proceeded to defend his faith. First he asserted that though they accused him of heresy all that he believed and taught was in harmony with the law and the prophets. His hope was the same as that held by all the tribes of Israel (26:6-8; 28:20), who looked forward to a resurrection from the dead. To attain to that happy experience he sought "to have a conscience void of offence toward God and man." A good conscience brings its own reward.

III. Paul Wins Official Favor. (Vv. 18-23.) Repeating his denial of doing anything that would detract from the holiness of the temple, Paul touched again on the great central thought of his teaching which had aroused the enmity of the Jews, the resurrection of Jesus. So logical was his reasoning and so forcefully was it presented that Felix was deeply impressed both by the argument and by the character and bearing of the man himself, and directed that every kindness possible should be shown him. Kindness wins.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

False Accusation: The quickness of the human mind to pass judgment without investigation of facts is well known. Many young people have been severely condemned because they have been seen on one occasion in company with some one of questionable reputation. Such was the case with Paul. Rather than mention the purified Jews with whom he had been seen in the temple, the priests and the people made accusation because they "suspected" he had taken an Ephesian whom they had seen with him on the street. One of the most cruel things we can do is to accuse another falsely. Such accusations have been known to lead to physical suffering, but the greatest wrong is the mental suffering and sometimes spiritual death of the victim.

Christian Self-Defense: Paul hesitated not to declare his innocence of the false accusations. Nor did he neglect to tell exactly what he had been doing. He called to his defense his rights as a Roman citizen, his Jewish nativity, and his education under Gamaliel. He even apologized to the high priest for having inadvertently spoken evil of a ruler. Not once, however, did he make a counter-charge against his accusers. Such is the pattern given us by Holy Writ for our conduct in such circumstances. If the neighborhood gossip defames you, state your innocence. If the law mistakenly arrests you, call for your just rights as a citizen, not as a law evader. If the church misunderstands or falsely accuses you, state your position clearly. But do not repeat the sin of your accusers by a counter-charge.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men."—Acts 24:16.

On different occasions Paul speaks of having a good conscience or a pure one and that he had lived up to that standard. It is said that conscience is not always a safe guide, but that depends very much on how it has been trained or educated. The vilest sinner seems to have no conscience, but Paul was different. He had a conscience that made him want to do nothing that would offend either God or man.

Having a good conscience and living up to it is a characteristic of Paul that Christians would do well to imitate. A good conscience toward God and man will go a long way toward helping the Christian live a life that will be pleasing to the Father.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Christ's Way of Life

Jesus said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14:6. Jesus expressed this same truth at another time in His parable of the sheepfold. "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture."—John 10:9. Jesus is the door to salvation. There is no other. Any attempt to attain salvation save through Jesus Christ will prove futile. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."—V. 1. We know that thieves and robbers will not inherit the kingdom (1 Cor. 6:9, 10).

Everywhere the apostles went, they preached salvation in Christ only. Peter said: "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12. Paul told the Corinthians: "But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God."—1 Cor. 6:11. Again he wrote: "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. . . . But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God."—1 Cor. 1:18, 23, 24. Christ must be accepted as the only source of life.

How to Have a Good Conscience

Very much has happened to our busy missionary since last Sunday's lesson, some discouraging, some encouraging, but always he kept to his task with the aid of his great Leader. From Ephesus he crossed over into Macedonia, stopping at Troas. Assign one in the class to tell the most unusual incident here (Acts 20:5-12). Make it real by description and discussion. Returning, he visited Philippi; Assos; Mitylene; Trogyllium; and Miletus, where the elders came over from Ephesus and he told them how he had faithfully discharged his duty. Learn Acts 20:24. Doesn't the character of Paul shine out in this verse? No wonder his conscience was clear!

Setting sail, he came to Coos, Rhodes, and Patara; they sailed on and landed at Tyre, the Syrian city of commerce. Describe the touching incident there (Acts 21:4-6). How they all must have loved the faithful Apostle! From Tyre to Ptolemais, thence to Caesarea, where we hear again of Agabus. What did he prophesy this time (Acts 21:10-14)? Next stop was Jerusalem, where Agabus' words came true, bringing much suffering to Paul. Have a good reader of your class give Paul's speech, one of the finest in all literature (Acts 22:1-21). Here is where Paul benefited by his Roman citizenship. Had he not always kept the laws of the land, he could not with a clear conscience have called upon that to aid him. His troubles were not over, however, for he was called before the council. But that night he received encouragement. What was it? How did his nephew help him? Paul was then sent by the governor to Caesarea under the protection of two hundred soldiers, where he made another wonderful speech. How did it affect Felix?

AMONG THE CHURCHES

WE ARE THANKFUL

Among the many causes for thanksgiving which we as a people possess at this time, as expressed by hundreds of appreciative readers, are the weekly visits of The Restitution Herald. For the past two years we have not missed a single issue, the paper has not been reduced in size, and no advertising matter outside of that of our own publications has been added to occupy the space now given over to timely and instructive articles dealing with the glorious truths of the Bible. For this we are exceedingly thankful. God has been very good to us.

Several of our leading exchanges have not fared so well, however. "The World's Crisis," the oldest of all Advent Christian weeklies, found it advisable for economical reasons to reduce the size of the paper by half over a year ago, and it is now just half the size of The Restitution Herald. Another excellent Advent Christian paper published in Florida contains nearly two pages of patent medicine advertising to help out with expenses. What is, perhaps, all things considered, the most acceptable exchange that reaches our desk, "The Bible Advocate," issued by the General Conference of the Church of God (Seventh Day) at Stanberry, Mo., in its last number announces that in the interest of economy it will be issued as a bi-weekly rather than a weekly as heretofore.

By the blessing of God and the faithful support afforded by the brethren The Herald carries its message forward as usual.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Sunday school which the Los Angeles church is conducting at Compton under the direction of Sr. Railsback with the able assistance of Sr. Roy Juden is progressing quite nicely. Especially in the primary department is the work gaining ground. The other classes at Long Beach and Norco are also keeping up their interest. Bro. W. A. Reid of Riverside has taken over the work in the latter place, and according to latest report is proving to be an able teacher.

The Los Angeles church is having its share of trouble: the death of Sr. Hillis came as quite a shock to her friends and relatives, who, though they knew she was in bad condition, did not realize that the situation was so critical. Bro. Eugene Howard of South Pasadena continues in low condition, now being bedridden all the time. Sr. John Saylor returned to church yesterday for the first time after a short but severe illness.

When this writing reaches The Herald, Bro. and Sr. Railsback will be on their way to attend the Northwest Conference, where Sr. Railsback will do some teaching. They also expect to visit relatives in that section.

Norman John MacLeod.

BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

The annual fall meetings are now in progress. Bro. Anderson is preaching each evening on some important part of the gospel. Large audiences greet him night after night, and we are praying much good will result. Bro. Anderson is a former pastor of the Brush Creek congregation, and his return for this series of meetings brings him back to many friends. The meetings will close on Sunday, Dec. 3. Remember us in prayer.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Bro. Cecil Smead, pastor of Blanchard church, was a welcome guest in Grand Rapids last week.

Our annual church meeting for election of officers is to be held this week on Friday night. We are praying God to direct the setting apart of those who will carry the responsibility during 1934, and that He may counsel and lead the ones so set in office to the upbuilding and edification of the church body.

Several different ones of our group have recently suffered from illness, but we thank God for His constant healing hand. We surely have much to praise God for at our Thanksgiving service, to be held at 8 o'clock the morning of November 30.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MUCH CAUSE FOR THANKSGIVING

When sending in their Thank Offering Mr. and Mrs. Howard Huey of Plymouth, Ill., say: "We have so much to be thankful for this year, more than we ever had before. Money is very scarce, but our hearts are thankful, and we are making an effort to help spread the gospel."

That alone gives ample reason for heartiest thanksgiving—to be able to help spread the gospel by which men and women may be rescued from sin and be brought under the saving power of Jesus Christ for all eternity.

PRESENT CONDITIONS MAKE MEN THINK

We who are able to read and understand God's Word have every reason to be thankful to the Father and His dear Son that we can perceive the signs that the coming of Christ is drawing closer and closer. We should lift up our heads and rejoice. Why? Because of the coming of the time of trouble? No! But because our redemption draweth near.

Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!

Too often when people have said, "Thy kingdom come," it has only been a few words. It did not come from very deep, nor did their prayer rise very high.

I trust that present conditions will make men more serious, and cause them to mean what they say.

Your brother,

J. E. Lent, Ridgeville, Ont., Rt. 1.

Thanksgiving Letters

Dear Readers of The Restitution Herald:

Our editor has requested a word of praise from each one in our Thanksgiving number. It seems to me that we should respond.

I have many things to be thankful for: God's love, and the blessed hope, the promise of our Lord's return, when He will speak peace to the restless nations and the earth will again blossom as a rose.

Let us praise the Lord, for His goodness and mercy endureth forever.

Mrs. Connie Ramsey, Morrilton, Ark.

Thanksgiving Day—for what? For home, health, and hope for the future. The value of so able a publication as The Restitution Herald to an isolated one can scarcely be expressed. It brings God's holy Word in times of trial and disappointment. Hasten the day when lasting peace will be established throughout the world.

S. T. Shirley.

Dear Brothers and Sisters of like precious faith:

It is not only my privilege, but my duty, to speak a word for my dear Savior and thank Him for His many, many blessings. I do not know just where to begin. There are so many things to be thankful for. They are as numberless as the sands of the sea.

I do thank my heavenly Father for the glorious Restitution Herald. It is getting better and better. It surely cannot improve. There are so many able writers. I do not know who is the best, all are so good.

Sister Gesin's talk and teachings to the children are so sincere and good that we adults can learn from her. God bless Sister Mary.

I thank God for my life, health, and my being. I thank and praise Him for living in a Christian land and for kind friends not only in my own church, the Church of God, but in other denominations. They are all so good and kind to this old afflicted servant of God. I get so many cheerful cards and letters and tokens of love that I thank God for all these blessings.

Although I am nearly blind and cannot hear, I will some day. Some sweet day when Christ comes these deaf ears will be opened, these dimmed eyes will see Him as He is. Oh, glory to God! I shall be like Him. Praise His name.

I ask all you dear ones to pray for me. How I do love God's children.

Your sister in faith,

E. Pendleton, 1132 Third St.
Webster City, Iowa.

Brothers and Sisters, another year has passed away. It is Thanksgiving again. I wish you all a happy Thanksgiving, a merry Christmas, and a happy New Year.

God is good and has blessed us with good health and plenty to eat. How can we pay Him? By being kind to His children.

I am thankful for this good paper.

May you all meet in God's kingdom in His own good time.

Mrs. Amy Johnson, Rt. 1, Marshalltown, Ia.

A TRIP EAST

I am back home again with our dear ones to take up the work again. The trip to Fonthill and Niagara Falls was truly enjoyed. So wonderful it was to be in the homes of our good people. They entertained us so well that I felt like sleeping for a week. These are pleasant remembrances. I am very grateful to our folks and Bro. and Sr. Randall for the spiritual uplift received.

I was glad to be in the home of the Srs. Gardiner at Lancaster, and to have the opportunity to speak there.

Another work has begun at Welland, and I want to say that here are some of the finest folks one could imagine. Not a conversion unto repentance, but Paul says, "Come ye out from among them." It seems that was the case at Welland: so many coming from other places of worship to hear the truth have accepted it with readiness of mind. God bless them, that a great work be raised up at Welland. We are so thankful to the Fonthill folks for their loyalty and for supplying each night such splendid music. May the church at Fonthill be wondrously blessed for their untiring efforts.

Leaving for home, I visited with Bro. Melville Lyon for 24 hours and enjoyed every minute of it. Bro. Lyon is doing a splendid work there. Leaving then for Culver, Ind., I spoke to the Burr Oak church and was again thrilled to have their acquaintance. While there about an hour, I received a telegram to come home at once to take charge of Sr. Riley Hoskins' funeral. So I had to cancel the two services at Clear Lake, Wis.

Arriving home, I found our dear Bro. Savage ill. Bro. Savage supplied while I was absent. The folks were loyal to him, and he gave some very fine sermons. Bro. Savage is gaining, but must be confined for awhile. Let us pray for him and for Sr. Barbaroosa, as well, who has been very sick. While I was away a girl was born to Bro. and Sr. Willcoxen and a boy to Bro. and Sr. Arnold Bonin.

Shall we keep our faces toward Jerusalem, for surely "summer is nigh."

A. E. Hoskins.

OLA S. HILLIS

Ola S. Hillis, the oldest daughter of Laura and John A. Hillis, was born in Santa Rosa, Sonoma Co., Calif. She was left an orphan by the time she was eight. An aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Kimball, gave her and her sister a home happier than most people ever know. There she saw in practice the principles of Christianity which influenced her entire life.

She was educated in the schools of Sacramento, was a graduate of the Long Beach High School and Los Angeles Normal, and studied at the University of California. She taught in five western states.

When her health failed, about six years ago, she gave up teaching and during the last three years made a home for her aunt, giving her a daughter's loving care. Her last few days were spent in trying to make her absence easier for her family. She died in her sleep, Wednesday morning, Nov. 15, 1933. She leaves a sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Bleasdale; and a niece, Laura Marie Bleasdale.

In 1923 she was baptized into the Church of God by Bro. S. J. Lindsay. She loved the Word of God; and she spent a life which should be the true consolation for those who are left to mourn her, and an example for others to follow.

Interment will be made at Stockton, Calif., in the family plot, where she waits the call of the Master when He comes.

Norman John MacLeod.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. and Sr. Wm. Austin are spending a short time in Oregon as visitors at the home of the former's sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Paul C. Johnson.

Bro. Lucian Murphy, son of our lamented Bro. Silas Murphy, who was such an active worker in the Salem church near Marshall, Ill., is now located with an oil company at Seminole, Okla., Rt. 2. Bro. Murphy recently sent for his wife to join him, indicating his expectation of permanent employment. He also enquires as to the nearest Church of God.

"Miss Virginia Eileen Shaw has come to make her home with Mr. and Mrs. Alton L. Shaw, 911 E. Elm St., Kokomo, Ind.," writes Bro. D. G. Harvey, pastor at Kokomo. Sr. Shaw will be remembered as Miss Bernice Bengé. Mr. Shaw is vice president of the senior Berean class. We join the pastor in his prayer that the "Father's blessing may rest on this happy little family."

How letters from the brethren over the country encourage us, who are trying to carry on the work in the office, to go on! Here are a few lines from Sr. Edward Tomlin of Cambridge, Neb., in point: "I just cannot get along without the paper. We have taken it so long and are so far away from our own church, every week-end I look forward to its coming."

"I have just finished reading the issue of Oct. 31, and think it would be hard to get out a better paper," says Bro. C. H. Horton of Lometa, Texas. Pray for us, Bro. Horton, that we may make the paper worthy of Him to whose service it is wholly dedicated.

With sadness we record the death of Sr. L. J. Sweet of Parsons, Kan., who fell asleep November 10, 1933, to rest until the Master calls. Thus far we have received no obituary, just a simple announcement to stop the paper for the reason given. May God comfort the bereaved. The Sweet family has been identified with the Church of God for at least three generations.

We are beginning soon a series of special articles on the coming of the Lord written by F. L. Austin, who for many years was editor of this paper. Bro. Austin is peculiarly fitted by scholarship and experience to present this vital and timely theme in a most interesting and helpful manner. Watch for the forthcoming series.

Ministerial Brethren: What are your plans for the new year? Have you announced a special service of prayer to precede your annual business meeting? Have the workers of the church, Berean society, and Sunday school been called into serious consultation regarding the needs of the congregation in the way of leadership? Let us hear from you as to what you propose to attempt for God in 1934. We'll give you space in the New Year's number.

These columns provide a place for the free exchange of spiritual treasures. Sr. Lottie E. Young of Seattle, Wash., in a footnote to her Thanksgiving letter, writes: "I heard such a fine talk last night from Jeremiah where he has the thought that no matter what might happen God is still on His throne directing the affairs of His children; so with Paul let us each one say, 'ALL things work together for good to them that love God.'"

R. A. Humphreys reports that November 2 witnessed the birth of "a pretty daughter; name, Olive Jeannine," to Ernest M. and Rachel H. Morris at Hot Springs, Ark.

Mrs. Ida Eastman has been confined for several weeks at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Faye E. Brown, 519 Eleventh St., Niagara Falls, N. Y., with a kind of lumbago. She will be remembered as a not infrequent visitor at General Conference.

Bible classes are being held each Wednesday evening at 7:30 in the homes of those interested by the recent series of meetings conducted at Welland, Ont., by C. E. Randall and A. E. Hoskins. Preaching services are being held each Sunday at 7:30 p. m. in the Wilson Hall, Division St., Welland.

A. E. Hoskins left Fonthill on Saturday, Nov. 18. He had planned to conduct meetings in Indiana and Wisconsin on his trip home, but he was called from Indiana back to Minnesota for a funeral.

Why not make this Christmas season a little different by placing special emphasis on the second coming of the Lord as well as upon His first appearance? Our next issue will contain some suggestions along this line.

Addressing her letter to us all, our beloved Sr. Diana Murphy, Marshall, Ill., sends the following greeting: "My dear Brothers and Sisters: I wish I could see you often and talk to you personally. We could have such enjoyable times together conversing about God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, and about His return to the earth."

Bro. R. H. Judd, of Toronto, Canada, who during recent months has changed his literary endeavors in a measure from prose to poetry, lately has received some highly commendatory letters concerning certain of his poems, among others for one addressed to Mr. G. P. Mackey, author of that beautiful hymn, "Tell it around, let it abound, There is life in the living Lord!" Bro. Judd's suggestion for a Thanksgiving article reached us too late for publication this time. We can use it later, however.

The church has little to fear for the future (if the Lord delays His coming) regarding a lack of literary talent to carry on its work through the press when we have writers among our young people showing the ability displayed by the special correspondent who interviewed the members of the Home for this issue.

From Sr. John Guthrie of Mullin, Texas, come the following appreciated comments: "We do enjoy so much the many good articles by so many able writers. May God bless you in publishing a paper so full of truth and encouragement for His stumbling, erring children, such as I." The prayers of our readers help to make The Herald what it is.

Our printers are busy finishing Senior Berean Book 3. This is a splendid, well-arranged series of lessons dealing principally with God's kingdom. It is fine for Berean societies, of course, but equally valuable as a guide in individual study and to put into the hands of beginners. The prices will be the same as for Senior Berean Books 1 and 2. Send orders to the NATIONAL BEREAN SOCIETY, Oregon, Ill.

A THANKSGIVING PRAYER

By D. G. Harvey

"O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name: make known his deeds among the people."—Psalm 105:1.

THE early morning Thanksgiving services were ended as through the crisp November air the many families hurried to their homes to share in the good things mothers had been preparing for many days, the Thanksgiving feast. Sad but true there was much grumbling, many such complaints as, "Nothing to be thankful for."

What a mockery—Thanksgiving?

Let us look into this shabby little home in the poorer district of this little industrial city. The father is not here! No, he has been dead now for five years, but the widowed mother has made a brave fight to keep her children together. Her boys and girls are almost men and women now. The little mother is older, but still young enough to laugh with her children; she shares both their joys and their sorrows.

But today we see the table is spread for the humble feast; and as they each sit with bowed head we hear the sweet voice of the mother, who has given so much and so willingly in her labor of love, raised in humble prayer to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

"Oh Father in heaven, we again must come to Thee to express our thanks this day for all Thou hast done for us. Father, we realize that every joy, every sorrow, has been for our good. We thank Thee for everything in our lives, for life itself.

"We thank Thee for the close bond of friendship of our many friends. We thank Thee for the care Thou hast shown in our little family circle. We thank Thee that we are blessed with health and strength. And, oh Father, when we remember the absent ones, the grandparents, the father of this household, then again we thank Thee for the gift of Thy great love, Thy only Son Jesus, and the blessed assurance of a regathering in the resurrection, when we shall meet to part no more.

"Oh Father, we thank Thee for the blessed assurance of Thy love and care for us. We thank Thee, for we know Thou and Thou alone hast been able to grant our prayers.

"We thank Thee that during these days of fear and distress Thou hast strengthened us. We thank Thee for the peace and joy we have received from the study of the inspired Book Thou by Thy Holy Spirit moved men to bring to us. And, oh Father, though at times everything seems dark and we know not where to turn, we thank Thee, for we know the spirit of Thy Son is with us and will lead us in the right paths.

"Oh Father, there are so many things for which to thank Thee, for Thou art so good to us. Thy goodness and mercy endureth forever. Therefore, Father, we thank Thee for all things. Thou knowest our hearts; receive our thanks in the name of Thy beloved Son, Jesus. Amen."

"Nothing to be thankful for," they said; but in this little home there was peace and true thanksgiving of a true, humble child of God who has followed the Lord even in the vow, "Thy will be done."

May we each count our many, many blessings and open our hearts in thanks to the Father of all, who has so blessed us and cared for us during the past year. "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name. For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations."—Psalm 100:4, 5.

THE CHRISTIAN'S THANKSGIVING

By Gerald L. Cooper

THE Thanksgiving season is here once again. Almost everyone is thankful at this time of the year and celebrates the day he knows as Thanksgiving. Many people think of it as a day of feasting and merrymaking. Some, perhaps, have a faint idea of the day's origin; while others are truly thankful to God for His care over them through another year.

Included in the last group are the Christians, who have so many things to be thankful for. Let us ponder for awhile on the things for which we, as Christians, should be thankful.

First we have a kind Father who provides us with our material needs. Who of us have really gone hungry? Who have not been properly clothed? And who have not had a shelter? Especially in these times of great depression should we be doubly thankful to God for providing us with the necessities of life, for there are so many who do not have them. Father, we thank Thee for our material needs!

The Christian should also be thankful for life itself. For without this present life we would have no opportunity to attain unto eternal life. God in His goodness has granted us mortal life; and if we truly serve Him, He will grant us eternal life. This life also affords us the opportunity for serving our fellow man and helping him to know God. Father, we thank Thee for life and its opportunities!

In Russia and many other countries the people are not permitted to worship as they please. We do not have such to contend with. Part of our great constitution of the United States provides that we worship as we please. Father, we thank Thee for religious freedom!

Our greatest cause for thanksgiving is, however, Jesus Christ, our Lord and Redeemer. Without Him all of our other blessings would be as nothing, for it was He who taught us to love one another; it was He who took our sins on Him and died on the cross for us. It was Jesus who conquered death and redeemed all mankind, providing they will accept Him. Father, we thank Thee for Jesus Christ.

So, brethren, you can see why we as Christians should especially be thankful this Thanksgiving. Let our prayer on that morning be, "Father, we thank Thee for all things!"

Papers on the Lord's Coming

By F. L. Austin

“AT OUR weekly Bible class the question arose as to what hope we may have that there will be a secret coming for the church and that its people will escape the great tribulation. What help can you give us concerning this?”

The low descending sun of this long day of Gentile rule over the city of God is already hastening behind the foremost of the horizon's swift-swirling storm clouds. Soon the day will have expired. The twilight promises to be short and awful. Gentilism will have passed forever.

In its place the Bible promises a God-crowned King, the glory of whose righteous dominion shall radiate from His throne within the Holy City unto the farthest bounds of earth. “His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.”

Gentilism, the dragon-like monster of human achievement that it is, self-exalted “above all that is called God, or that is worshipped,” encompassing the whole world in its grasping, reaching stretch for supremacy, foresees another Waterloo. With eagle eye it spies for position of advantage. It has but one resulting vision: victory. According to its vision, it is sure to scale the mountain of world dominion and plant its throne upon the fertile upland of eternal day! It will be such a natural and simple thing to bring to the full a man-made millennium of righteousness and everlasting peace!

But God says nay. He knows the boundless vision as well as the short and finite arm of man. Like the broken image of Daniel 2:34, 35, 45, so will it be with Gentile sovereignties—“no place was found for them.”

Now at some point in the ebbing of this Gentile regime will the church be caught away, preparatory to being equipped with Christ for the entering of the kingdom of God. At the exact, fitting, and proper moment, “the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God” and will snatch away His chosen and own. Query: When will that moment be? Will it be before the tribulation that results from the final paroxysms of Gentile effort, or will it follow? Also, will the forcing away of the church be done openly or in secret?

First of all, it must be apparent to all that, as such an event is sure to take place, there will be a company in complete readiness, prepared to the instant. Second, the people of that company must necessarily in some sense be very different from everybody else. Indeed, it will be a “peculiar people.” Will that peculiar difference consist merely of having a precise knowledge of just when and how that event will occur—curiosity satisfied? Or may it consist of having been lulled to ease and composure with a knowledge that that event will take place before the coming of “the great and terrible day of the Lord,” thus sparing the people of the church from the certain agony of that tribulation?

No! A myriad times, no!

Such a curious or sleeping-pill knowledge must only injure. Nor would such knowledge develop a people of any different poise from that of the great rank and file of the human race.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE

But there is that that works a difference. It is that knowledge of God's Word that genders faith. Faith in God stands one out separate and distinct from all others. And how astonishingly different are all such! Consider Moses, Elijah, David, Daniel, Jesus, Paul, John; and, just as faith in its fullness “cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God,” even so does faith toward God relative to any particular matter come “by hearing” God's Word in respect to that same matter. Therefore, to be poised in confiding faith in God as one watches the gathering, advancing, and surging storm on storm sure to be occasioned by the wave on wave of (Please turn to Page Nine)

"Thou openest thy hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing."—Psalm 145:16.

A PRAYER OF DAVID

I will extol Thee, my God, O King;
 And I will bless Thy name for ever and ever.
 Every day will I bless Thee;
 And I will praise Thy name for ever and ever.
 Great is the Lord, and highly to be praised;
 And His greatness is unsearchable.
 One generation shall laud Thy works to another,
 And shall declare Thy mighty acts.
 Of the glorious majesty of Thy honour,
 Of Thy wondrous works, will I meditate.
 And men shall speak of the might of Thy terrible acts;
 And I will declare Thy greatness.
 They shall utter the memory of Thy goodness,
 And shall sing of Thy righteousness.

SELFISHNESS AND PRAYER

IF WE accept the doctrine of the 'survival of the fittest,' wrote James Freeman Clark many years ago, "we must grant that the fittest man is the man who prays, and that prayer in some way or other has been helpful and continues to be so." All who have had personal experience with the effectiveness of prayer will acknowledge that this is true. History comes to the support of this conclusion and declares it to be true. The man who prays is in many ways to be preferred to the man who does not pray.

Wordsworth declared that prayer was "man's rational prerogative." He might also have said that it is his natural heritage, for prayer seems to have been practiced from the earliest times by all races of men.

One of the first things we observe when we come to study the history of prayer is the essentially selfish character it almost always displays. Men pray for themselves, for their own good, their own health, ease, and enrichment.

We are amused when we read the prayer of the Zulu of Africa: "Our people! I pray to you. I sacrifice these cattle to you. I pray for more cattle, and more corn, and many children; then this house will prosper, and many will praise and thank you." After all, wherein does this prayer differ materially from that of the average Christian? Do we not make our gifts, and then because of them ask for "more cattle, and more corn"?

Then there is the prayer of the Nootka Indian, who, preparing for battle, says, "Great Quahootzee! Let me live, not be sick, find the enemy, not be afraid of him, find him asleep, and kill many of him!" Does this not remind one strongly of Christian prayer offered during the World War?

Sometimes when we read of the prayers offered in great business and political conventions we recall that of the Pacific Islander, who cries:

"O thou divine Outreterer!
 We go out for plunder.
 Cause all things to sleep in the house.
 Owner of the house, sleep on!
 Threshold of the house, sleep on!
 Little insects of the house, sleep on!"

O Rongo, grant us success!"

We who worship the God of eternal righteousness and love too often do not exceed in the spirit and purpose of our praying the greed and selfishness of the savage. If we would have our prayers answered, they must be for a purpose more Christlike and less carnal, more divine and less human; and then God will add to us blessings for which we do not ask.

When Solomon asked for wisdom, God said, "Because this was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honour, nor the life of thine enemies, neither yet hast asked long life; but hast asked wisdom and knowledge for thyself, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king: wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee; and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honour, such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like."—2 Chron. 1:11, 12.

It is not wrong for us to pray for health and for material blessings; but He who said, "When ye pray say, . . . Give us this day our daily bread," also commanded, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Epictetus expressed the true Christian thought of prayer when he said: "Dare to lift thine eyes to God and say, 'Use me for what Thou wilt. I agree, and am of the same mind with Thee. I refuse nothing that seems good to Thee. Lead me where Thou wilt and I will go.'"

THE STONE OF DANIEL

By Norman John MacLeod

OUT of all the tribes of Israel three stand forth: Judah, Joseph, and Levi. These three tribes receive rewards of which none of the other tribes will partake.

Because Judah was willing to offer himself for his brother Benjamin and to be a slave rather than cause further suffering to his father, Jacob said of him: "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be."—Gen. 49:10. In that prophecy Jacob foretold the ruling power given to the tribe of Judah.

During all of the wanderings of the tribes, however, and after the setting up of their life in the new land, we have record of no ruler coming from Judah that made that prophecy true at that time. Furthermore, the first king of a united Israel came, not from Judah, but from Benjamin.

That prophecy, then, must refer to another time. Because when Moses came down from the mountain and saw the people given over to idolatry and called out for any who would come out on the Lord's side, the tribe of Levi came over; they were given the priestly offices. And the time is yet future when God will make a covenant with them (Mal. 2:4).

And in the book of First Chronicles we read: "Now the sons of Reuben the firstborn of Israel, (for he was the firstborn; but, forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright)."—1 Chronicles 5:1.

According to the old Jewish custom of the days of the patriarchs the oldest son had the birthright, and that gave him the special blessing from his father; the son thus blessed received twice as much of the father's property as the other sons. When the Mosaic law came into effect, it was no longer possible for a father to transfer that birthright and blessing to another than the eldest, but before that time the change was made in several classical instances.

When the tribes went into the land of Palestine to inherit it, we then notice that the tribe of Joseph was not mentioned, but a portion was given to the two tribes that took the names of his sons. Also, we see that Levi was given no separate inheritance because of the priesthood. The Levitical cities should be scattered among all the tribes.

Many people have followed this special birthright and

"Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."—Ezekiel 37:21, 22.

blessing of the family of Joseph through to find to their own satisfaction that the tribes that came from Joseph will yet receive a special blessing at the time of the coming of the Lord and that these two tribes are represented by two of the modern nations: Ephraim, Great Britain; and Manasseh, the United States.

Jacob in blessing Joseph said:

"But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel)." —Gen. 49:24. According to traditions, coupled with this verse, the stone which Jacob set up at Bethel when he saw the vision of the ladder ascending to heaven came down through the tribe of Joseph; and when the ten tribes were scattered into the north country at the destruction of Samaria, it was taken into Ireland, from which it was later taken to Scotland. When the Scottish king James VI became James I of England, a stone was brought down from Scotland and now rests under the throne chair of the kings of England.

The tradition according to the Scottish version is that this stone came from the Israelitish ancestors of the Scottish house of Stuart; none other, they say, than the stone mentioned in Genesis 49:24. From this they build up a line of traditions to show that the British are the tribe of Ephraim and the people of the United States the tribe of Manasseh.

If that be so, then the stone that smote the image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream on the feet is none other than the empire of Great Britain. Let us notice some other facts that are overlooked in this line of reasoning.

Each time that the tribes of Israel are mentioned in relation to the inheritance of land, Levi and Joseph are left out, and the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh are substituted. But when other blessings are mentioned, that is not the case. When the inheritance is mentioned in 1 Chronicles 5:1, the tribe of Reuben is left out, as well as Levi; and Ephraim and Manasseh are inserted. (Joseph is also mentioned.) In Deuteronomy 33, when Moses left his blessings on the tribes, the tribe of Simeon is not mentioned; and Ephraim and Manasseh are mentioned only in connection with the blessing of Joseph.

But perhaps the most interesting cases are those which we find in Ezekiel 48 and Revelation 7. In the early part of Ezekiel 48 a list of tribes is given which omits Levi and Joseph and inserts Ephraim and Manasseh; but in the latter part of the chapter another list is given that names the tribes according to the twelve sons of Jacob. Why? Because they speak of the inheritance of diverse things. But those who think that Ephraim is Great Britain, that she is to be the "stone" that strikes the image on the feet, and that she is to receive a special blessing from the Lord will look in vain for the name of Ephraim in the list given in Revelation 7: Joseph and Manasseh are given, but the names of Dan and Ephraim are omitted.

This brings to our mind another feature of tradition: According to an English sea captain, the Danes are of the tribe of Dan. If there be one of those traditions that seems to be borne out in names, here is one. Denmark is called Jutland, which, being translated from the German, means, "Jew Land."

According to this legend, then, the tribe of Dan, the first tribe, by the way, that went into idolatry, wandered clear into the frozen region of the north pole and became a blonde race of giants (the Israelites were small of stature and dark; see Numbers 13:33). After many generations these "Danites" came down into England and Denmark and were called "Danes"; and they descended upon France and were called "Normans" (men from the north). These "Normans" later went over into England. The particular people who went into England earlier than that and called themselves English had among them some people known as "Jutes" (Yutes—Jews).

From three sources, then, according to this tradition, the British people received migrations of the tribe of Dan: from the Danes; from the invasion of the Angles, Saxons, and Jutes; and from the Normans. But the tribe of Dan was left out of the sealing (Rev. 7). Furthermore, Great Britain does not meet other tests of the "stone."

First we might ask ourselves: How was the British Empire set up? By the power of God alone! (All nations are set up by God: Daniel 2:21.) Was it, in other words, "cut out of the mountain without hands"?

In connection with the setting up of the reign of Christ on the earth, read Isaiah 9:7 and Daniel 2:44.

That kingdom of God will be set up by God and will not be left to others; only by the wildest stretch of imagination could Great Britain fit any such conditions. No nation on the face of the earth can find for itself a clean slate in its conquests. True, the British Empire is the greatest political organization the world has ever seen, but how did she acquire that preeminence? Wrongdoing has been the trail of empire from earliest times; not that Great Britain is worse than any other empire; on the contrary, she is probably the best of all the large empires of history. But the history of the British Empire is one of clever diplomacy that wins the peace at the end of the war regardless of how she fared during the war: even in the war of the American Revolution when she lost thirteen of her best colonies, she gained other territory in other parts of the world and came out altogether on the side of advantage.

God does not sanction that sort of thing by giving it His divine approval and by making it the object of reward.

Not even Israel, when going into the Promised Land under God's direction, was to take of the spoils of war and use them for its own profit. How should God, then, sanction Great Britain in her taking of the spoils of war when she is not fighting God's battles?

Furthermore, the reward of the Christian has nothing to do with anything that might come through being part of either Ephraim or Manasseh. The reward is in Christ. We are told (Gal. 3:28): "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." And again: "For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all"; and, "What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; as it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one."—Romans.

Nationalism is at enmity with God. Nationalism is selfish, partisan, boastful, jealous, cruel, hateful of others, and vengeful to the extreme. These characteristics cannot be satisfactory to God. They are traits which are godless.

No wonder, then, that we are given this picture: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen (nations) for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." And again: "And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father."—Rev. 2:26, 27. "And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne."—Rev. 12:5. "And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God."—Rev. 19:15.

That is what will happen to national organizations under the reorganizing power of God and Christ. Nothing inherent in the British Empire would give her preeminence over the nations. True, she will be favored of God in many respects, for she favored the Jews in their exile. True, God is going to be on her side in that last great struggle at Megiddo, but not because she is of the tribes of Israel, but because she favored the Jew. Just as Cyrus favored the Jews because of strategic and political reasons, so have the British favored the Jew: Palestine makes a good region to guard the Suez Canal and acts as a gateway to the great Mosul oil field. There is selfishness even in her favor to the Jews.

But let us not concern ourselves over the lot of the Gentile nations and the part that they will play in the plan of God, but rather let us strive to make our own calling and election sure; let us watch ourselves and keep our garments clean, that we be not found wanting when the time comes that the kingdom of God is set up in the earth; let us put aside all those things that offend and come to the throne of grace to make our hearts pure and clean so that we may ascend into the hill of the Lord.

Foreordination and Predestination

"Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come: but your time is always ready."—John 7:6.

IF I believed that God foreordained all events and things that happen, then I would quit preaching, for I could not hope to change the Almighty's established order. Yea, if my own child were sick, I would not only consider it futile, but even criminal, to employ a physician to fight the order of God. As it would be foreordained to die at this time and place, or recover, neither the doctor's medicine nor treatment could effect recovery or even allay the pain; for the amount of its suffering would have been determined by such foreordination. Neither could I commend the good acts of the righteous nor condemn the evil deeds of the wicked, for they would be mere machines to accomplish just what they were predestined to do. Foreordination, then, would make all individuals what they be without either choice or responsibility.

We do not question the unlimited power of God to save whom He pleases to save, or His power to destroy the wicked or even the just if He should choose to do so. But we like to think of God as a God of mercy and love. But God "is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all (not elected few) should come to repentance."—2 Peter 3:9. This text alone proves: first, that man is a free moral agent to choose to live or to perish; second, that God is even sorry for those who choose to disobey and perish.

We frankly admit that God has foreordained that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7. And "the wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6:23. Therefore, all who do not accept salvation are destined to perish. Also, it is foreordained that all Christians will be saved; all who compose the body of Christ at judgment are foreordained to be saved; but it depends upon the individual as to which class he belongs to, the saved or the lost.

Jesus was foreordained (Gen. 3:15). He was the anti-type of the lamb slain from the foundation of the world (Rev. 13:8). But while He was foreordained (Rom. 8:29), yet much of His life was the result of His own choice, He being led by the Holy Spirit to discern the right. He was tempted, a thing which would have been impossible if He had no choice to make. And God acknowledged that He was well pleased. Then at the final test Jesus prayed, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt."—Matt. 26:39.

Our allotted time is about "threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore."—Psa. 90:10. Note that it is by "reason of strength," not by foreordination. Some who have extra strength reach to fivescore years. Therefore, let us strive to escape exposure to contagion and disease germs, lest we do not even reach the allotted threescore and ten; for our time is always ready (John 7:6).

Much stress is placed upon "the elect," as though the election were unconditional. Paul was one of the elect, and he said, "I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief."—1 Tim. 1:13. Furthermore, he must continue faithful unto the end to retain such favor of election; for he said, "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."—1 Cor. 9:27. Peter, also, shows that the election is conditional; for he admonishes the brethren, "Give diligence to make your calling and election sure."—2 Peter 1:10. If the election were unconditional, could diligence make it more sure? If the number of the elect is definitely predestined by being unconditionally chosen in Christ from the foundation of the world, that it therefore cannot be increased nor diminished, then would it not be impossible to sin against the Holy Ghost and be lost? The non-elect would be lost before birth, and the elect could not be lost.

We read in Revelation 22:19, "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life." Of what class would he belong prior to losing his part? Would he not be of the elect while his name was in the book of life? Then, when his part is taken out of the book of life, what becomes of his election? Christ said, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away."—John 15:2. When in Christ, are they not of the elect? Then, if these elect bear no fruit, He takes them away, and casts them into the fire and they are burned (verse 5).

Jesus said, "I came to seek and to save that which was lost." Was the lost the non-elect? When the Philippian jailer asked, "What must I do to be saved?" why did Paul not say, "Why man, you were already saved four thousand years ago"? Why did Christ say, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel," and baptize? And why does God command all men everywhere to repent (Acts 17:30)? Why repent if they are already lost? "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God."—John 1:12. How could they be given power to become sons if they were chosen four thousand years before? If predestined to be lost, then what benefit is their sonship? Such a doctrine discredits the mission of Christ and denies the atonement. What did Isaiah mean when he said, "Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord to serve him" (Isa. 56:6)?

God is not willing that any should perish (2 Peter 3:9). And whosoever will may come (Rev. 22:17). Let us not be deceived; "God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7.—J. T. Williamson in The Bible Advocate.

The Plague of the Twentieth Century

AIRPLANES whir and roar over our heads all day. The next door neighbor is arrested. Bombs are found here and there in places. Explosions occur in the subway, under the street cars, about public buildings. Groups run from shop to shop to call the workmen to strike. Excited crowds move about the streets, hardly knowing what to do next. Police, armed with guns and clubs, disperse the hostile elements that assemble for purposes of agitation. The walls of the buildings in conspicuous places are smeared and daubed with red paint. One can make out such phrases as "Workers show yourselves!" "Read the Red Youth!" among others daubed on the walls in haste. The police are keeping a vigilant eye on the movements of the masses, especially along the main thoroughfares and plazas.

It was merely another "labor outbreak" that happened not long ago. Spain has had more than her share of these "internal troubles" in the last year. But news last night shows that Portugal, her next door neighbor, is having similar ones. The morning papers, having recently told us of Salvador and Costa Rica, as well as Chile, bring us a similar story from Argentina. Germany seems to be on the verge of something ominous.

"The alarming increase of world-wide unemployment" has been aptly called by a French writer "the plague of the twentieth century." At least 15,000,000 men are idle in Europe today, and probably 8,000,000 in the United States. Spain has a half million without work. And the gravity of the situation for the people is that the outlook is hopeless and relief impossible. A caldron of seething discontent is everywhere the picture. "Something is going to happen, must happen," is on every lip. Gloom and discouragement and a hungry stomach are what make the wolf ferocious and bold in time of famine.

And never has a proverb been so true as that which says, "An idle brain is the devil's workshop, and idle hands his tools." The common people do not understand (and we sometimes wonder if anyone else does) the causes and nature of the present depression. "It's the Government!" Poor souls who direct it! I would rather be anything than a king in Europe!

Agitators and political propagandists add to the brew their infernal doctrines, and fan themselves into power on a blaze of public sentiment. Tomorrow they groan and tremble, as their feeble efforts fail to cope with the growing plague, and their promises shrivel at the chill touch of defeat. The next election hangs over their heads like a sword. And dictatorships are devised to hold the reins until another election. But their successors do no better.

Repeatedly it happens that mobs sweep down upon a grocery store or a meat market, and plunder it in the presence of the helpless proprietors. Several instances of men, women, and children plundering and looting trains of coal to protect themselves from freezing have recently happened. Guards have had to use force to eject people from the homes of landowners, the latter having been thrown out with stones and sticks by the men who formerly tilled their farms and plantations.

HORDES OF BEGGARS

In many countries of Europe, hordes of vagabonds, beggars, and "bums" throng the streets and public places, begging as they go. Many of them are merely taking advantage of the situation to beg rather than work. Others are unemployed through no fault of their own. It is reported both in the United States and in Europe that an alarming increase in immorality is prevalent, due to the fact that women and girls are turning to prostitution for a livelihood. Newspapers and prominent citizens protest against the hordes of beggars that "plague" the pedestrians and shoppers. "What can we do about it?" said the chief of police of one of Europe's large cities. "We have no place to keep them, and no money to care for them." And the beggars know it.

For many of them a jail means free board, free rent, a place of sleep, and perhaps medical care. For more reasons than one, no government wishes to convert itself into a charitable institution. So they choose the lesser of the two evils, and let the beggars roam the streets.

In America in recent years the police stations have been lodging places for transients who are roaming the country in search of a living, or at least a better living. No town cares to keep vagabonds on its hands, and bids them goodbye as soon as possible.

Prisons and penitentiaries are crowded to overflowing in almost every land. Communistic doctrines and propaganda are rampant everywhere. Youth is being filled with these doctrines in the numberless centers of instruction. Literature of the "red" type sells at every bookstand, and "courses of instruction in Marxism" and "communism" are offered for sale in the leading bookstands and newsstands of Europe.

DOCTRINE OF ANARCHY

A few nights ago a young communist and anarchist—for the name "anarchist" seems to have an enchantment for many youths today—arose in the midst of the gathering where I was speaking and tried to take the floor and rally the people to his causes. "We must burn up this city and build another one!" he shouted.

All presently existing regimes must fall, they say; the government must be run by the working people. The property of all must be confiscated and placed in the hands of the people, to be held in trust by their government. The government of the people must regulate all wages and manage all business. Divorce must be allowed in the freest manner, they claim. In many places I have seen magazines and papers boldly advocating nudism. And only recently government authorities have had to break up the practice in some quarters. Violence is the chief weapon of the anarchists.

These things I have written are not intended to reflect upon any people or any government, but merely to call attention to the seriousness of the times. What I have said is truth. And I do not mean to leave the matter there. There is not only light upon the situation, but there is a blessed hope of relief in the near future. One cannot help recalling a prophecy in the Bible describing these conditions:

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth . . . Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. . . . Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."—James 5:1-8.

Note the import of those words. Calamities await the rich. How many of the wealthy already are beginning to see the collapse of their fortunes, the failure of their vast business enterprises, and even in many lands the spoliation of their goods by infuriated mobs! "Garments are moth-eaten"—clothes stored for luxury and kept in closets and attics. Money that is in circulation never rusts. Huge bank accounts, investments in stocks and bonds, money laid away in vaults and banks—once the hope and joy of their owners—now corrupted, become valueless, to the hurt of those who amassed them.

WASTED FUNDS

"Heaped treasure"—words that so truly speak of the vast fortunes of the modern rich. Not millions, but hundreds of millions, and some among our rich have even billions of dollars! "The labourers who have reaped down your fields"—the plight of the farmer. He has not succeeded in getting the union protection and the legislation in his favor that railroad men and other laborers have obtained.

"Pleasure" and "wanton"—characteristic of a pleasure-mad and wasteful generation. While the grocery man and the clothing merchant are asked to give credit, the tobacco dealers, the grog and liquor shops, the movie houses, and all forms of business that cater to the pleasure and lust of the people must have cash. The money spent for tobacco in many lands exceeds ten times the cost of government. In many European countries the money spent for liquor exceeds government cost by twenty times. Beggars and "bums" in the street ask alms while spirals of venomous smoke go upward from the cigarettes in their mouths.

Who is to blame? The government? No, for a government is generally what the people would have it to be. Almost every man invokes its aid to avenge the wrongs done him, and fights to escape the punishment for wrongs he has committed. A detective once remarked to me, "The people are a queer lot. They curse the government because it does not enforce the law. But as soon as we land a fellow in jail, every available power is employed—lawyers, money, influence, delay, and sentiment—to set him free."

But did you notice those blessed words at the end of the scripture we quoted—"The coming of the Lord draweth nigh"? And the Prophet adds in verse 9, "Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the judge standeth before the door." I am always glad when I can point out a ray of hope. And what hope could be brighter than this, that Jesus is coming? "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Robert I. Odom.

THE POWER OF THE WORD OF GOD

A POOR student who was in the University of Leipzig had occasion to undertake a journey at a moment's notice to see his mother, who was dangerously ill, and was in want of necessary money for the purpose. In this difficulty he went to a learned Jew, a neighbor, and borrowed the money, leaving as security his Hebrew Bible and his Greek Testament, which contained the Greek and German words side by side in separate columns.

During the absence of the student, the Jew determined to read the Testament through, in order to strengthen his mind in his hatred for Jesus, to ridicule His teaching in the synagogue, and so to be better prepared to show forth his zeal for the Jewish faith. His wife and children were not permitted to see the Book, for he was determined to be the only one to discover the falsehood of the Christian religion in any or all of its parts.

But as he proceeded with his reading, his surprise increased; and a strange feeling of fear mingled with admiration and reverence came over him. As he studied the life of Christ on earth, he could hardly prevent himself from crying out, "Oh, that Jesus were my Savior!"

Having finished the Book, he was surprised to find that, however eager he might be to increase his enmity against Jesus, his study of the New Testament had taught him that Jesus was worthy, not of hatred, but of the highest respect, admiration, and love.

"Surely," he said, "this is the height of silly simplicity and blind folly. I will open the Book no more." But, however, in a short time he changed his mind and determined to read the Book a second time, resolving to be more careful in ascertaining that Jesus and His apostles were fully deserving of the hatred of all Jews in all ages.

But again he was unable to discover anything that was absurd or which bore the stamp of falsehood, while on the other hand he discovered wisdom that was more of heaven than earth, a comfort inexpressible for an afflicted mind, and a hope of immortality which seemed to deliver him from that dreadful anxiety with which the thoughts of the future had often troubled him. Still he could not overcome his prejudice, but read the New Testament for the third time, resolving that if he could find no excuse nor reason for his hatred he would become a Christian, but that if he could discover the slightest tokens of deceit or fraud he would forever detest the Christian religion.

During the third reading of the history of Jesus, His doctrines, and His promises, the Jew was quite overcome. The love of Christ filled his very soul, and like Saul of Tarsus, he cried, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Seven weeks had passed since the New Testament had been left with the Jew, and now the student returned and came to redeem his property. The Jew asked him if he would sell him the New Testament. The student was unwilling to part with it, but at last yielded.

"What do you ask for it?" said the Jew.

"Four marks will satisfy me," was the reply.

The Jew opened a drawer in the table, and, taking out a bag, counted out a hundred gold pieces. "There! Take that," said he. "Gladly will I give you more if you wish it; and if at any time I can be of use to you, only come to me, and I will help you to the utmost of my power."

The student was amazed and thought the Jew was making a joke at his expense. But he told him what a change of mind had been wrought in him by reading the New Testament. At the same time he upbraided him for setting so little store by such a Book, and finished by saying, "Oblige me by accepting that money. As for this Book, I shall never part with it."

The Jew became a sincere Christian, an active worker, not a mere professor. Nine Jewish families in that town he won to Christ, and thus did he show the power of the Word of God when the Holy Spirit applies it to the heart.—Faithful Words.

SCIENCE BUILDS A MONSTER

THE greatest progress of this progressive age is in the perfecting of appliances and methods for the scientific and wholesale destruction of human life and property.

A writer in The London Times has said, "Without any doubt the powers of destruction are gaining fast on the powers of creation and construction. We have made by our science a monster that will yet devour us."

An appeal to the scientists of the world to refuse to cooperate in research for the creation of new instruments of war, written by Prof. Albert Einstein, was read to the international conference of the opponents of war in session at Lyons, France, recently.

"Those who think that the danger of war is passed are living in a fool's paradise," Dr. Einstein wrote. "We face today a militarism far more powerful and destructive than that which brought on the World War."—Selected.

REMEMBER THE NEEDY

By D. G. Harvey

"Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies."—Psalm 41:1, 2.

THE near-zero weather of the past few days has brought to us all frozen water pipes or increased fuel bills, but to thousands it has brought untold suffering. Winter is here, and with it comes intense suffering among the thousands who can find no work.

This winter, despite the efforts of our national Government, will be harder than the last. Relief work will be doubled. Many who last year were able to care for themselves and loved ones find that their little store of funds has dwindled to nothing. Every department of the public welfare funds is overtaxed. In the county where the writer lives, the county officers were forced to borrow vast sums to carry on the work last winter. Even as spring drew near, the township trustee found his work more nerve-racking. Think of it! 2,700 tons of coal for the month of March alone; 2,800 families fed and cared for by public funds in a little city of less than 40,000! Last winter was bad, very hard; but the coming winter looks blacker than the one before.

But what does this mean to us? What can the Church of God do? Do you realize that many of our brethren are among this vast army of unemployed? Many are in dire need. Does it suffice for us only to say we regret their stress? Listen to James. "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?"—James 2:15, 16.

Let each member of the church consider the question well. Look about you. Is there need in your local field? Let each church take up needed welfare work. The Lord fed the multitude. Does it profit for our ministers, the spiritual leaders, only to point out future blessings while our brethren are suffering from lack of temporal food now? Will we hear the scornful words of the Master in the judgment, "These ought ye to have done, and not leave the other undone."

But, as has been pointed out to the writer recently, "does it pay? Consider Job; he gave much, but look how he suffered."

True, Job thirty-five hundred years ago found need, and did much of what we now call "welfare work." Let us consider his work and see wherein he erred, that we may avoid the same error. Listen to his words, "Because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy . . . I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor."—Job 29:12-16. Again, "If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering . . . if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep."—Job 31:19-22.

Where did he err? Listen to the words of Elihu, "Job hath spoken without knowledge."—Job 34:35. Have you noticed the big "I" in all Job's statements? "I was father to the poor," says Job. There was his error. It is the error, my brethren and friends, we must avoid.

If the Father of all has intrusted much in your care, if you are truly His child, it still belongs to God. You are only the means by which the gift is bestowed. Be humble before the Almighty. Be humble, yes, be thankful, you are the instrument used to relieve some of the suffering. Then, like Job, you will receive the greater blessing, for it was only after Job came to realize his mistake that the blessing came. "Behold, I am vile: what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth."—Job 40:4.

Read again the words of David in Psalm 41:1, 2. Consider the poor. But not to our own honor. Let us lay our hands over our mouths and do all to the glory of God.

PAPERS ON THE LORD'S COMING

Gentile onslaught against the entering kingdom of God and of His dear Son necessitates the "hearing" of "the word of God" concerning those things.

No Ship of Life will be able to weather the raging, pitching billows of that day unless Faith-in-God shall be the pilot. Nor human guesses, nor inventions, nor creeds can possibly give birth to that necessary faith. Such faith is born only of "the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). Therefore, this earnest and prayerful effort to discern and indicate in part in a few articles God's Word relating to the foregoing questions.

CAUGHT AWAY

That Christ will come for the church with an assembling "shout" is revealed in 1 Thessalonians 4:16. That the church "shall be caught up," "forcefully snatched away" (Crit. Lex.) is revealed in the succeeding verse.

This scripture is addressed by Paul (v. 13) to his brethren—his Christian brethren. Chapter 1:1 addresses the whole Epistle "unto the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ." It was not written to Israel and Judah, as such. It was written to the church.

Paul does not want his brethren "to be ignorant concerning them which are asleep." Ignorance breeds superstition. But they all need faith. Therefore, he tells them of God's provisions. Those people of the church who "are asleep" in death when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout" "shall rise first." Then those members that remain alive till that time shall be "changed" (1 Cor. 15:52) and "caught up with them (with the raised ones) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." The combined company of the raised ones with the living "changed" ones will constitute those "caught away," that is, the church of and to which Paul wrote.

They are to be snatched away and "meet the Lord" before the returning Lord reaches Mount Zion. How long prior is not here mentioned. Nor does this scripture indicate that the "carrying off" of the church will be done in secret.

FALLING AWAY

It was concerning the "coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him" that the Thessalonian church soon after became alarmed, "shaken in mind," "troubled" (2 Thess. 2:1, 2). It had been but a few months since Paul had written his first letter to them, but they feared that in the meantime, all unawares to them, "the day of the Lord" had set in; that Christ had called, the church had been taken; and that they had been left—had been judged unworthy of a portion with the church.

Paul entreated them to "be not quickly agitated in mind, nor alarmed, . . . as though the day of the Lord were present."—Diaglott. The day of the Lord, said Paul, shall not come "except there come a falling away first." Therefore, the day of the Lord not having come, the church had not been gathered unto Christ.

These two statements afford us key thoughts with which we may be able to understand more accurately things concerning the coming of the Lord: "the day of the Lord" will be present before "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ"; and that day shall not come "except there come a falling away first." (In the next article I will try to study these points.)

These promises are beyond all power or thought of man to fulfill. It requires faith in God before one can receive them. And receiving them as truth speaks of increased faith in Him who promised, even in Him who alone is able to fulfill.

Truly, how wonderful are the works of God!

Cruel, with wrath and fierce anger;
To make the land a desolation,
And to destroy the sinners thereof out of it."

Abreast of the Times

The United States and Soviet Russia

"Thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands."—Ezekiel 38:9.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—A nation-wide canvass of editorial opinion on President Roosevelt's recognition of Soviet Russia in which The Literary Digest has recently engaged reveals considerable doubt existing in many quarters regarding the reliance that may be placed on the assurances of the present Russian Government that its representatives in this country will refrain from undertaking here the plans so candidly put forth by them in the past to bring about a revolution in favor of communism.

The ultra-conservative and eminently American Los Angeles Times feels that there could be little to be gained by further iteration of the reasons why a large part of the American people has so long opposed recognition, reasons which the Times still believes to be sound. This paper goes on to assert that the people of this country have nothing against the great mass of people of Russia, but are suspicious and distrustful of "a handful of Russian leaders."

It is clearly observable that those men who are not altogether motivated by selfish commercial ambitions are the ones who are most inclined to question the wisdom of granting the communistic Government of the world's largest unit territory the right of unrestricted access to our shores in a diplomatic way. These farsighted observers realize that if the camel is permitted to insert his head within our door his entire body may soon be forced upon us.

The vast territory already under the sovereignty of the Soviet Government, the incalculable natural resources of the country, coupled with the enormous man power available, considered in connection with the oft-expressed determination of the International (Russian controlled) to bring about a world revolution, present a combination of dangerous elements that cannot be ignored.

The accompanying diagram illustrates the comparative size and strength of the United States and the Union of Socialistic Soviet Republics, to the latter of which Ezekiel is generally understood to refer in the 38th and 39th chapters of his prophecy.

COMPARATIVE AREA OF THE UNITED STATES AND RUSSIA:

Area of Soviet Russia, 8,144,228 Square Miles

Area of the United States, 3,026,789 Square Miles

COMPARATIVE POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES AND RUSSIA:

All-Jewish Liner to Palestine

"They that go down to the sea in ships . . . see the works of the Lord."—Psalm 107:23, 24.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—The Cleveland Plain-Dealer tells of a most significant event that is planned for the near future by the Zionist organizations of Great Britain. An all-Jewish cruise to Palestine on a "luxury liner" has been arranged. The Athenia has been chartered and will leave with a crowded passenger list for the Holy Land to celebrate the festival of Purim in Jerusalem. This feast is held in commemoration of the deliverance of the Jews recorded in the Book of Esther, and takes place on the 14th and 15th of Adar, which corresponds to March of our own calendar.

All the passengers on board the liner, as well as the chef and kitchen hands, will be Jewish, and the Jewish flag of entwined triangles (the sign of David) will be flown from the ship's stern.

The only Christians on board will be the captain, the crew, and the waiters. These will not touch the food. A rabbi appointed by the passengers will supervise the killing of the meat to be used on the voyage; a special room will be fitted up on the ship as a synagogue; and all the ship's huge supply of plates, cutlery, and cooking utensils will be replaced by new ones, so that there will be no possibility of their being touched by anyone but a Jew.

The time is coming in the not distant future when the ships of the Gentiles will be laden with Jews being returned to Palestine "for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations, . . . as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord."—Isa. 66:20.

Anti-Jewish Rioting in Hungary

"I will . . . deliver them to be . . . an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations."—Jeremiah 29:18.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Nov. 27.—Owing to persistent anti-Jewish rioting in which the students are engaged the authorities threatened today to close the universities for the remainder of the present semester. Twenty students are reported as injured in the disorders thus far.

A careful study of the entire Jewish situation in central Europe places the cause for the widespread anti-Semitism shown in Germany, Austria, and Hungary especially, in the superior business and professional ability of the higher class Jews as compared with their competitors of other nationalities. The fact seems to be that the sons of Jacob are for some reason able to make headway in business faster than many others, and are proving more successful in the so-called "learned professions," which naturally arouses the animosity of the undergraduates who will soon be looking for positions.

“HAPPY IS THE MAN THAT FINDETH WISDOM, AND THE MAN THAT GETTETH UNDERSTANDING.”—PROVERBS 3:13. •

THE UNTAMABLE TONGUE

“But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.”—James 3:8.

JAMES devotes almost a whole chapter to exhortation about governing the tongue. There are many verses in Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, too, warning us of the importance of doing so; and in fact, such warnings are to be found in many other books in the Bible. Is it such an important thing?

Probably we can all remember times when we said the wrong thing. And what a maze of difficulty those few words got us into. Perhaps we put a permanent blight on some one by our angry candor, or unthinkingly established an unkindness between us and a dearly loved friend which will never be quite forgotten.

There is a sad thing about words—or is it sad?—when they are spoken, their speaker has no power to call them back. They will be remembered, possibly, years after his death. That is a wonderful and serious thing to think of. Words are the embodiment of ideas, and ideas live after men are dead. Wouldn't it be pleasant to think that after our lives were ended, people could remember some friendly word we had said, instead of something unkind?

NATURE PROCLAIMS A DEITY

THERE is a God! The herbs of the valley, the cedars of the mountain, bless Him; the insect sports in His beam; the bird sings Him in the heavens; the ocean declares His immensity;—man alone has said there is no God! Unite in thought at the same instant the most beautiful objects in nature. Suppose that you see, at once, all the hours of the day, and all the seasons of the year: a morning of spring, and a morning of autumn,—a night bespangled with stars, and a night darkened with clouds; meadows enamelled with flowers; forests hoary with snow; fields gilded by the tints of autumn,—then alone you will have a just conception of the universe! While you are gazing on that sun which is plunging into the vault of the West, another observer admires him emerging from the gilded gates of the East. By what inconceivable power does that aged star, which is sinking fatigued and burning in the shades of the evening, reappear at the same instant fresh and humid with the rosy dew of the morning? At every hour of the day, the glorious orb is at once rising, resplendent as noon-day, and setting in the West; or, rather, our senses deceive us, and there is, properly speaking, no East or West, no North or South, in the world.—Francois Chateaubriand.

UNBELIEF

There is no unbelief:
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod
He trusts in God.

Whoever says, when clouds are in the sky,
“Be patient, heart; light breaketh by-and-by,”
Trusts the most High.

Whoever sees, 'neath Winter's field of snow,
The silent harvest of the future grow,—
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

Whoever says, “Tomorrow,” “The Unknown,”
“The Future,” trusts that Power alone,
He dares disown.

The heart that looks on when the eyelids close,
And dares to live when life has only woes,
God's comfort knows.

There is no unbelief:
And day by day, and night, unconsciously,
The heart lives by that faith, the lips deny,
God knoweth why!

KEEPING A GOAL IN SIGHT

MANY of you boys and girls who read this page have, I'm sure, high aims in life which you hope to reach in later years. And if some of you, because of studying the life of Jesus and the Apostle Paul and others, decide to be ministers of the gospel or missionaries or teachers in Sunday school, you will find a great satisfaction and happiness. Only in a life spent for others is real happiness found.

An ambition that is purely selfish may bring great rewards in the way of wealth. But it makes one's life so narrow and one's friends, true friends, I mean, so few that it is not worth while after all. An aim in life that takes into account the good of others is the only kind worth striving for. Just such an aim Paul had.

You may change your goal many times during the years you are growing up, but if you set your goal ahead a little each time, you will finally reach a worthy place in life. Paul kept only one goal in mind after he was converted and started to preach. And that was to preach the gospel in Rome, the capital city of the empire.

Many, many times it looked as if Paul never would live to reach Italy. But he had an unchanging faith in God, and he knew that if God needed him in Rome, he would get there. In today's lesson he is on the way, but how? In chains, a prisoner!

If you want to read about all the interesting and exciting things that happened to Paul on the way, look at Acts 27 and the first ten verses of 28. You will find that although Paul was a prisoner he was the most honored man on shipboard. Just so does true worth shine out regardless of surroundings.

Notice especially the speech Paul made during the terrible storm at sea which finally resulted in their being shipwrecked. We read that they had given up all hope of being saved. They fully expected to meet their death in the angry waves. For two weeks they had been tossed about, the long hours bringing hunger and pain to all of them. But Paul saw a light in the darkness, an angel of God standing by him, saying, "Fear not, Paul." And Paul believed God and managed to get the terror-stricken passengers to do as he said.

There were, no doubt, many on board who for the first time in their lives heard God's name spoken as lovingly and reverently as Paul did. Two hundred and seventy-six people saved because one had faith in God!

The story of the events on the island where they were shipwrecked is a most interesting one, also. Paul stood out again as the noblest man among them all, and brought good to all those with him, as well as the inhabitants of Melita, which we call Malta and which is in almost the exact center of the Mediterranean Sea.

For three months they were forced to remain on this island, during which time Paul was busy teaching the people about Jesus and healing their sick. No wonder they came to love Paul and were sorry when the time came for him to leave. At last he was taking the last steps on his journey toward his goal.

When Paul finally reached Rome he was respected so highly for his valuable services on the way that, though he had to be kept a prisoner, he was given many special privileges. And though he was now about sixty years old and had endured severe suffering for years, his love of the gospel was not lessened. He was at last preaching the kingdom of God in Rome! And there he remained, a prisoner, until his death.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

After the usual heading, draw a little map of Italy, locating Rome. Then write one of the stories found in Acts 27, making several little drawings to illustrate it, such as, tossing overboard some of the provisions, the shipwreck, Paul's vision, or the poison snake in Acts 28:1-6. Then draw with your colored crayon a large P. Write after it—Paul reaches in prison—on three separate lines. Do you get the idea?

Copy these lines:

"To stand within that noble line
That conquers sin with strength divine—
What greater fame could man desire?
What higher aim his heart inspire?"

"To be enrolled with those who fight
With courage bold for God and right—
What fit applause can mortals bring
To such a cause, to such a King?"

"All they who dare, who win the strife,
Shall surely wear the crown of life;
Their very names in heaven are known,
For Christ proclaims them as His own."

PAUL IN ROME

Acts 27 and 28

Devotional Reading: Psalm 23

GOLDEN TEXT

I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3:14.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Paul in Rome.

Aim: To show how one may serve God even in prison.

Basic Truth: "I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they also may obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory."—2 Timothy 2:10.

I. Paul Enters Rome. (Acts 28:11-16.) For more than a quarter of a century Paul had been traveling throughout the Roman Empire preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. His name was known among the Christians everywhere. When he entered Rome a prisoner for the Lord, the brethren who had never met him face to face hurried out to greet and welcome him. How very encouraging it must have been under the circumstances for Paul to find that even when fettered with chains he still had the support and comfort of fellow disciples who were not ashamed of him in his misery.

II. Paul Preaches in Bonds. (Acts 28:17-22.) By years of faithful service Paul won the confidence and love of the disciples of Christ. By acts of thoughtfulness he earned the friendship and respect of the Roman officers. By his obvious loyalty to Israel he for a time broke down the opposition of the non-Christian Jews in Rome. Love, kindness, sincerity, and character built upon the life and teaching of Jesus Christ win over all opposition and greatly widen the possibility of reaching men with the gospel which alone can save. "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."—Prov. 16:7.

III. Paul's Final Message. (Acts 28:30, 31.) Writing near the conclusion of his life and during his imprisonment in Rome, Paul declared, "Remember that Jesus Christ . . . was raised from the dead according to my gospel: wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound."—2 Tim. 2:8, 9. Nothing can hinder the progress of the gospel until the Master comes. Bonds and imprisonment, weakness of body and cold and heat, did not and could not stop the glad tidings of God's coming kingdom of glory from being carried forward by Paul by word of mouth, by letter, and by example of Christian devotion.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Encouragement in Trouble: When trouble overtakes us in the journey of life, we like to turn to our friends for consolation. As Paul journeyed over a stormy sea or wintered on a strange island, it was in the brethren who were with him that he found the most pleasure. As they neared Rome on what he believed would be his last voyage, he was cheered by the groups of the faithful who came to meet them. Such thoughtfulness of those in trouble may have far reaching effects. It will encourage the one who is in trouble, it will show to the world a bond of fellowship, and it will develop our own love for our fellow Christians.

Desire to Hear: Paul's diplomacy in calling to him the chief of the Jews dwelling in Rome is worthy of study. First, it set his own position fairly before them. Second, it made the Jews friendly toward him. Out of this friendly contact grew many opportunities to teach them the way of life. And some believed, and some believed not. It is certain that until we make a friendly contact with others they do not listen open-mindedly to our words. And if the church members do not show a spirit of friendly encouragement toward each other, the effect of any words they may speak for God is nullified.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Philippians 3:14.

Paul had many trials and troubles; but in spite of all of them he never gave up nor turned back, but pressed forward to reach the goal, which is the high calling. In other words, the high calling is to be called of God to be His children. What greater prize could Paul wish for to be called of God brings all the other blessings with it.

Paul, like Christ, endured his afflictions and hardships, always looking beyond this life to the glory to be obtained in everlasting life. We, too, should ever go forward realizing that the real prize lies at the end of the race and will be attained in the morning of the resurrection.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Finding and Fulfilling God's Purpose

God's purpose is revealed in His Word. We must acquaint ourselves with it before we can fulfill His purpose. Solomon, with God-given wisdom, said: "For the commandment is a lamp; and the law is light." His father David had already set the wisdom to music: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." (Prov. 6:23; Psalm 119:105.)

Satan tempted Christ in the wilderness and quoted Scripture to prove his contention. Jesus was not deceived, because He was acquainted with God's Word and knew that the scriptures quoted were incorrectly applied. His knowledge was His safeguard. There would not be so many different teachings finding a following in the world today if all the people were studying God's Word carefully and earnestly.

David asked a question of importance: "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?" Then he answers: "By taking heed thereto according to thy word."—Psalm 119:9. This emphasizes the importance of knowing God's Word. Jeremiah tells us that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked."—17:9. This wicked heart can be cleansed only by knowing God's Word.

Repentance is not optional, but mandatory. "And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent: because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness."—Acts 17:30, 31. Failure to repent and seek salvation is in itself sin against God. That sin will not go unpunished.

We can discover God's purpose in His Word. We can fulfill it by repenting, accepting His gospel, being baptized, and living according to His commandments.—H. A. S.

INTERMEDIATES

Goals to Be Reached

Many of you have certain ambitions in life which you hope to reach. Life would be purposeless without a definite goal. If you have not yet chosen one, begin to think of it and plan. Be sure to choose a goal worthy of yourself, your Christian parents, and above all your Master. But do not expect to reach that goal without sacrifice. We cannot taste everything along the way and expect to reach our destination. We must learn to weigh things and choose those that will aid us in our progress toward our ideal. How fine a person is a Christian doctor, a Christian teacher, a Christian business man or woman.

Paul had a definite goal in his life and a definite ideal. He wanted to preach the gospel in the capital of his great country and he wanted to attain the rewards which he helped so many others to attain. He let nothing interfere with these ambitions. With his surpassing education he might have become a greater teacher than his own, Gamaliel; with his unflagging energy he might have become a wealthy man of commerce. But his aim was to serve his Lord and Master, and everything in life was chosen to that end. What was his goal?

Assign two pupils to tell of the voyage to Rome during which Paul displayed courage, heroism, and foresight more than all on board. Assign two others to tell of the winter in Melita (Malta). Learn the last two verses in Acts. Finish your map.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

We hold our services in the W. C. T. U. Hall at 1904 North Main Street. Sunday school convenes every Sunday at 9:45; and Berean class every Friday evening at 7:45. Bro. Conner preaches for us on the second and fourth Sundays each month: morning service at 11:00 o'clock, and evening service at 7:30. We cordially invite all who can to meet with us in any of these services.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

It was a thankful church that gathered at 8 a. m. Thanksgiving Day to worship God and thank and praise Him for all He has done for us. And well, indeed, might we be thankful, for surely no group of people has ever been more kindly blessed by a loving Father.

On Saturday night, November 25, the church family gathered for a birthday surprise on the pastor, bringing with them everything from groceries to socks and a financial gift from the Dorcas ladies. In all it was one of the happiest birthdays any man could hope to have, and there is a depth of gratitude to God for such a loyal group of workers.

Christmas plans are now under way and we hope soon to be celebrating the birth of our Savior.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

OF INTEREST TO THE SOUTHLAND

The following communication will be of special interest to churches in the South that desire a minister to be located among them.

"To the Brethren and Sisters in Christ: I would be glad to come to your church and preach some for you, and get acquainted with you all. I (am willing) to move from here after this term of our winter school is over. School is too far for my children to walk, as my oldest boy is 13 years old and very badly crippled. I will want to move among the church brothers and sisters. Anyone that would be interested in my moving among you write me, Rt. 1, Greenbrier, Ark. I can do almost any kind of work.

"Yours in Christ,

"C. E. Weaver."

COMMUNICATIONS

Bro. Randall is doing a great work at Fonthill. He is not saying anything about himself, so we must do it for him. But in addition to his regular work, he is carrying on missionary work in Welland, holding services Wednesday evening and Sunday evening. It means that he must deliver one sermon at Niagara Falls, N. Y., on Sunday morning; allow himself 30 minutes to cross the border and be ready to conduct the service at Fonthill; then take a bite to eat and hustle off to Welland. If you don't think he's a busy man, try it. On Monday evenings he conducts a very thorough and intensive study on Revelation, and is bringing out many fine thoughts that are new to many of us. The usual attendance is about 25, and the interest is very keen indeed. He has a similar study at Niagara Falls every other Tuesday evening. He is very popular in Fonthill, often being called upon for special addresses.

It is almost Christmas, and the time is almost here when we shall see displayed, in fact we have already seen it, that lamentable word XMAS. We hope that through the columns of The Herald you will once more call attention to the fact that while national heroes and personalities everywhere are always called by their proper names the pernicious custom of referring to the date of the birth of our Savior as XMAS persists. If we have any reverence for Him whose natal day we celebrate, let us refer to it in a fitting and proper manner, and not slight Him, whom to know is life eternal.

We enjoy The Herald; do not always agree with what the writers say, of course, but we feel that the paper is improving all the time; and many to whom we have passed it tell us that it is about the only religious paper they have seen that does not contain a great deal of secular material. Those responsible for the articles, the set-up, and printing, and everything connected with The Herald are to be commended upon their ability. The section, "Abreast of the Times," is specially good. We pray daily for the success of the National Bible Institution and its work.

A THANKSGIVING LETTER

The following interesting communication reached us too late for the Thanksgiving issue, but we are glad to give it place now. It is from Sr. R. A. Robinson, of Clyde, N. C. Sr. Robinson has been a very faithful supporter of the Lord's work, both from a spiritual and from a material standpoint.

"Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ: I will drop a few lines this beautiful morning to you. Oh, how thankful I am that the weather is so pleasant on account of the men and boys having to work out in the open.

"Tomorrow will be Thanksgiving, and I am thankful for all that I have. . . . I will soon be left alone, as my boy is fixing to move out; although it will be but a few steps away, it will be lonely for awhile. But all things work together for good to those that love the Lord.

"I surely think The Herald gets better every week. I look for it as if it were my mother coming, for it gives me such good news concerning Jesus' coming to take the government on His shoulder as He has promised He would. There are so many troubled hearts in our days of depression.

"Please do not forget to pray for me and for my family."

DANIEL CLYDE KINSEY

Ruth H. and James W. Kinsey live three miles west of Meyers P. O., Ark. Early Tuesday morning, Nov. 14, Mrs. Kinsey went to her school some three miles away with Leon, her firstborn, 8, leaving Daniel Clyde, her baby, 3, in his father's care at home. In a short time Mr. Kinsey heard Daniel scream; and when he got to him, Daniel's clothes were burning off his body. So Daniel was taken to his mother at school, and from school to Hot Springs, where he died in a hospital ere noon.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 15, a goodly number met in a cemetery some 15 miles west of Hot Springs where some of our loved ones are buried to bury Daniel, the first one of our grandsons to die. A young man, one of their near neighbors and a Baptist preacher, Manual Norman, by request conducted a short funeral service, basing his sermon on John 5:28, 29 with Matthew 2:16-18, the writer helping a little.

R. A. Humphreys.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The little poetic gem with which Sr. Mary A. Gesin closed her article in our last issue, "Out of the Night a Song," was unfortunately placed in quotation marks. Sr. Gesin was the composer of the verse as well as of the article of which it was such a fitting conclusion.

The editor is indebted to several of our readers for some of the most interesting items that have gone into our "Abreast of the Times" page recently. He deeply appreciates the cooperation of the brethren in this matter, as the department is evoking many letters of appreciation.

It does the heart of any pastor good to know that his people appreciate his efforts in their behalf. We are sure that C. E. Randall, pastor of the Church of God at Fonthill, Ont., deserves all the kind things said about him in the letter appearing in this number.

A letter from Sr. Margaret Ellis of Waterloo, Iowa, says, "We are glad to have Daddy home again from the Chicago hospital. We only wish he felt better and pray that he will be better soon." This is the first information we have had of the serious illness of our beloved treasurer of the National Bible Institution, and we ask for the prayers of the entire brotherhood in his behalf.

The editor and his family were entertained for Thanksgiving dinner at Golden Rule Home. After the dinner hour and a short time spent in visiting with those who could not go out, a group of the family of the Home were taken for an auto ride in the country that they might enjoy the unusually delightful weather the Father afforded us.

The Restitution Herald will be sent to new subscribers or as a Christmas present for a full year for $1.50. What could be finer than to provide friends with a weekly reminder of your love for them and of your interest in their eternal welfare? Departments for all ages make the paper acceptable to the entire family.

GEORGIA CLEORA HOSKINS

Sr. Hoskins was born Nov. 11, 1869, at Forest Prairie, Minn., and died Nov. 14, 1933, and now rests in the cemetery at Eden Valley, Minn., awaiting her Master's coming. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Scribner, and spent her childhood in and around Eden Valley. She gave her heart to God at the age of thirteen, and was baptized by Eld. E. E. Thoms. She was married to William Riley Hoskins May 1, 1888, by Eld. Peter Matheny.

Sr. Hoskins leaves to mourn her death her husband, four children, and twelve grandchildren, along with a host of friends.

May God bless the bereaved as this good sister sleeps in death until the resurrection. In this day may our hope be sure and steadfast. A. E. Hoskins.

The Lord Came! The Lord Comes!

While the attention of the children and of the older ones is being directed to the story of the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem, why not take occasion to emphasize the fact that the second coming of the Lord will be quite as literal and much more wonderful than was His first coming?

The following brief suggestions may be of value to the program committee:

Have one or more of the older children commit to memory and repeat the story of Bethlehem as given in Luke 2:8-18. Immediately after this, or with a short and suitable song between, have another group recite the story of the ascension contained in Acts 1:1-12.

The same idea might be carried out by two small children, the first of whom could repeat the story of the wise men and their gifts, Matthew 2:1, 2, 10, 11. A second group could follow with the statement from Matthew 24:30, 31, or other similar passage.

There are generally individuals in every congregation who are able to make simple rhymes. Ask them to add a verse pertaining to the Lord's second coming to one or more of the songs selected for the Christmas program. The following exercise will provide an example of how this may be done effectively.

JESUS COMES!

An exercise for ten children, each of whom bears on a large card the initial letter of the verse he is to say.

Entire group sings:

"Jesus loves me! this I know,
For the Bible tells me so;
Little ones to Him belong;
They are weak, but He is strong.

Chorus:

"Yes, Jesus loves me!
Yes, Jesus loves me!
Yes, Jesus loves me!
The Bible tells me so."

First child:

"J" is for JESUS,
A wee little boy,
Born in a manger
To bring us much joy.

Second child:

"E" stands for the EARTH,
So gloomy and sad,
The dear baby Jesus
Once came to make glad.

Third child:

"S" is for SINGING
By angels of light,
Glad tidings of peace
That first Christmas night.

Fourth child:

"U" stands for US all,
For you and for me,
For whom Jesus died
On Calvary's tree.

Fifth child:

"S" means our SAVIOR,
Who rose from the grave;
Then went to heaven
His people to save.

Entire group sings:

Jesus loves me! He who died
All the graves to open wide,
Soon will come for you and me,
And from death will set us free.

Chorus:

"Yes, Jesus loves me!
Yes, Jesus loves me!
Yes, Jesus loves me!
The Bible tells me so."

Sixth child:

"C" is for COMING
Of Jesus our King;
With loud shouts of joy
The heavens will ring.

Seventh child:

"O" means that OVER
The earth He shall reign;
Banishing ever
All sorrow and pain.

Eighth child:

"M" tells of MEETING
With Him whom we love,
When with great glory
He comes from above.

Ninth child:

"E"—life ETERNAL—
Which Jesus will give,
That in His presence
We ever may live.

Tenth child:

"S" is SALVATION
That all will receive
Who now in Jesus
Do truly believe.

Entire group sings:

Jesus loves me! If I stay
Close beside Him, some glad day
I shall see Him face to face,
Saved forever by His grace.

Chorus:

"Yes, Jesus loves me!
Yes, Jesus loves me!
Yes, Jesus loves me!
The Bible tells me so."

THE STAR

Recitation for a small child

O you bright and shining star,
I know 'xactly what you are!
Wise men from the East were led
By your light to Jesus' bed.

And I heard my daddy say,
This same Jesus, some bright day,
Will come back. How glad I'll be,
For I know that He loves me.

O SILVERY BELLS

May be sung to the tune of "Memories of Galilee," or "Sweet Galilee"

O silv'ry bells ring loud and clear,
To aching hearts bring hope and cheer;
Send forth your message far and wide,
For love doth reign at Christmas tide.

Chorus:

The Christ is come, hosannas ring,
Glad praises with the angels sing;
For He who came by lowly birth,
Returns in triumph to the earth.

Our Lord on Zion's mount shall stand,
Ring out the tidings o'er the land;
O'er mountain, valley, hill, and plain,
For Jesus comes again to reign!

"Behold, I come!" the blessed word
Was spoken by our risen Lord;
Then let our lamps be trimmed and bright,
For He may come again tonight!

YIELD NOT TO TEMPTATION

By J. G. Haupt

WE HAVE a popular hymn which says, "Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin." The tempter may be a diabolus, in which dia is "God" and bolus, "opposer." In what is known as the Lord's Prayer we often hear the words, "Lead us not into temptation." The Bible clearly states that God tempts no man. The Greek and the Latin have a "but" and an "and." The truthful prayer would say, "Lead us, but not into temptation."

I recall an incident in Crowley where I noted a man of the street trying to lead a painter acquaintance into a saloon. On returning from my errand I noted that the man was just leading the painter into the den. What happened inside I could only conjecture, but later in the day the painter was intoxicated. The man had doubtless had a number of drinks of whiskey at the expense of the weak companion. Doubtless he was a diabolus as much as the temptation was; but the yielding was the great offender, for yielding is sin.

"Get thee behind me, Satan," said the Master. Wherever sin is in question, sin is Satan. John 6:70 gives a strong illustration of diabolus. The English word "devil" forcibly represents this Greek opposer of God. Both in the Old and the New Testaments not a few men and women like Ahab and Jezebel may be set down as concrete examples of diabolus. With a will at our command we may successfully resist all attacks of Satan. Examples present themselves daily.

Man's Origin, Nature, and Destiny

By D. M. Hudler

"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is, because there is no light in them."

IN GENESIS 2:7-16 we find a record of man's origin. God formed man out of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. And God planted a garden eastward in Eden: therein He put the man; and out of the ground He made to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food, the tree of life and the tree of knowledge, also. Then God commanded the man, saying, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Genesis 3:1-5. The deceiver, one of the beasts of the field, said unto the woman, "Did God say ye should not eat of the trees of the garden?" The woman answered, "God hath said that we may eat of the trees of the garden; but of the tree of knowledge in the midst of the garden we can neither touch nor eat, lest we die." The deceiver said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil."

The question arises, Who told the truth? If man dies, God told the truth; if man does not die, then the deceiver told the truth. We read the woman did eat and gave unto her husband, and he did eat. Then came the reckoning with man, woman, and deceiver. The deceiver was cursed "above all cattle, and above every beast of the field," and was told, "Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life: and I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." To the woman God said, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt

The author of the following article was one of the most successful evangelists of the Church of God of the past generation. While his home was in Iowa, much of his work was done in northern Illinois. An attempt has been made to retain the peculiarities of expression which were characteristic of Elder Hudler's pulpit manner.

bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." To the man He said, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life: . . . in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

1 Corinthians 15:21-47. Paul, in discussing the resurrection, says, "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. . . . Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Paul also said that the first Adam was of the earth earthy and that he was not spiritual, but the second Adam is the Lord of heaven; consequently, the first Adam could not have died a spiritual death. His death was not a moral falling away from God; but if it were a spiritual or moral death, then resurrection would be a moral restoration through Christ, for as men die in Adam they are to be made alive in Christ.

Genesis 3:22-24. "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." THE PERFECT WORD

How perfect is Thy Word!
 Thy judgments all are just;
 And ever in Thy promise, Lord,
 May man securely trust.
 Thy counsels all are plain,
 Thy precepts all are pure;
 And long as heaven and earth remain,
 Thy truth shall still endure.

I hear Thy Word in love;
 In faith Thy Word obey;
 O send Thy Spirit from above,
 And teach me, Lord, Thy way.
 O may my soul with joy,
 Trust in Thy faithful Word.
 Be it through life my glad employ
 To keep Thy precepts, Lord.

IT WAS THE HEAVENLY FATHER

A DEAR little girl of the primary department in the Sunday school came skipping across the street the other day to walk half a block with the editor, who was on his way from church to office. As we strolled along, we called attention to the western sky that was bathed in the glory of the early winter sunset; and the little girl, with a smile on her face we have learned to love, looked up and said, "I know who made all those pretty colors in the clouds, it was Jesus!"

While we gently corrected the theological error of our little friend, we rejoiced at the spontaneous outpouring of appreciation for the Master which it expressed. What a wonderful and blessed thing it is to fill the hearts and lives of boys and girls with love for Jesus Christ! We happen to know that the parents of this particular child are putting forth every effort to increase their little daughter's interest in the things of God. They do not send her to Sunday school—they accompany her there. And so throughout the journey of life. Father on one side, Mother on the other, and Jesus leading the way, they are walking down the Highway of Glory and Love that leads to the gates of the Holy City!

EVANGELISTIC VALUE OF PROPHECY

THE prophecy of the Bible is as timely as today's newspaper, and there is no branch of Bible study that will so quickly arouse the interest of the public, especially the unchurched public, in the truth of God as will the consistent and reasonable presentation of fulfilling prophecy. To tie up the events of the day in which men are immediately concerned with the Word of God, and to do it in such a conservative and consistent way that it will not bring ridicule upon the church, but rather tend strongly to increase the respect of men for the Scriptures, should be the particular aim of our ministry everywhere.

Prophecy presents in a practical way the evidence of God's being and power, and proves beyond dispute the inspiration of the Bible. The logical mind cannot evade the conclusion that events are now taking place that were predicted thousands of years ago, and that if this is true there must be a God of infinite wisdom who foresaw all these things and caused them to be written in a Book.

It was the miraculous works of Jesus that proved to the multitude of that day the divinity and the truth of His message. In the miraculous fulfillment of prophecy we have in these times an equally efficient and convincing argument to support the message of the coming kingdom of our Lord.

One of the greatest values of prophecy lies in the fact that it pictures vividly the actual preparations that are being made right now for the assembling of the nations "for the great day of God Almighty," wherein He will "sit to judge all the heathen round about." Prophecy demonstrates the necessity of the coming of a heaven-governed kingdom upon the earth, for it calls constant attention to the failures and to the obvious inability of men to establish and maintain peace and prosperity. Having set forth convincingly the evidence of men's failure, it becomes a comparatively easy matter to paint an appealing picture of the kingdom of glory that is to come.

Prophecy is thus seen to be the handmaid of the gospel. Concerned with everything that happens anywhere in the world, scientific, political, social, and religious, prophecy drives home into the consciousness of men the truth of the glad tidings of the kingdom, with all the resistless power of the logic of current events. Let us strive to make not only our own people, but the communities in which we live, prophecy conscious, and thus God conscious and gospel conscious, to the point of obedience to its demands!

Do You Read Your Bible?

IN A SUMMER conference of Christian workers, a group of men were talking about the lectures of one of the instructors. This man, a professor in a large school, had been recognized for years as a forceful speaker; but in this conference, his words carried with them compelling power. His appeals were irresistible. "Why?" they asked one another. So greatly were they impressed with the power of this man that one of their number was delegated to interview him. They longed to know his secret, that they, too, might be endued with power for true living and effectual service.

One day, the man appointed to interview the speaker lingered in the classroom where the studies were given. When he made known his request, the professor replied: "My school realized that I was rapidly approaching the state of a squeezed lemon, so they granted me a year's leave of absence for study and research. I had planned to spend this year in the universities of England. When war conditions made that impossible, I would not give up my year of research. I stayed at home, but I spent the year in research in my own study, and I have discovered the New Testament."

THE BOOK THAT EVER LIVES

THIS man of learning acknowledges thus to us that the secret of his power was his discovery of the most wonderful Book the world has ever known. His experience reminds us that the Book of books has not changed. Time passes, but the Bible ages not. It comes down to us through storm and bloodshed, unsullied and without loss of power. Floods of criticism and persecution have descended upon it, but like the ark upon the restless deep, it has ridden safely through the storm. Just as Satan combined all his forces to kill the Son of God when He walked on earth, so he has worked unceasingly to destroy the Word of God.

Cruel hands nailed the world's Redeemer to the cross, but they could not keep Him there. He was laid in the tomb, but the bands of death were broken to let Him go forth on His mission. And when Jesus Christ, the Word that dwelt in flesh, ascended, the enemy began to hurl his attacks at the Bible. But from every attack, it has come forth more than conqueror, for it is indeed and in truth the living Word of God.

When the prison, the fagot, and other means of torture failed to annihilate that wonderful Book, Satan laid other plans for its destruction. He placed a pickax in the hands of "higher critics" and set them to work chipping away at the Gibraltar of truth. But their efforts are futile so far as the Gibraltar of truth is concerned. Their broken weapons lie beside an unmarred Rock.

But the enemy of the Word had not yet played his last card. He invented a thousand other ways of keeping people from the Book that he could not keep from them. And the saddest part of the story of this conflict is the deplorable fact that he has persuaded many to leave this Book unread. No other book in the world has had such bitter foes as has the Bible. Yet no other book has had as devoted friends; for those who have really discovered the Bible have found it more precious than life itself.

A LOAD OF HAY FOR ONE HOUR'S READING

WYCLIFFE discovered the value of the Bible at a time when the minds of men in England were greatly agitated; and he saw in that Book the panacea for the ills of the age in which he lived. There was no English Bible at that time, and he felt that what England needed was an open Bible in the hands of her people. So in the face of bitter opposition, he translated the Bible into English, that others might discover the Book which transforms lives. Yes, so much did he love the Bible that he risked his life for its freedom.

And how the people appreciated that wonderful Book! "A considerable sum was paid for even a few sheets of manuscript; a load of hay was given for permission to read it one hour a day for a certain period." There is a touching incident of one Alice Collins, who was called to different gatherings to recite the Ten Commandments and other portions of the Bible she had committed to memory. The people were so hungry for God's Word!

Not only was it difficult to gain access to the Bible, but whoever studied it, studied at great risk. There was opposition to meet. "God grant us," runs the prayer in the preface to Wycliffe's Bible, "to ken and to kepe well Holie Writ, and to suffer joiefulli some paine for it." That prayer did not go unanswered. "Readers of the Book were burned with copies round their necks; men and women were executed for teaching the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments in English to their children; . . . children were forced to light the death fires under their parents; and possessors of the banned Wycliffe Bible were hunted down as if they were wild beasts." Still the people read. They risked their lives. They died rather than give up the Book, for they had discovered the Bible.

Tyndale, who came about one hundred fifty years after Wycliffe, also realized that an open Bible was England's greatest need. "We had better," said his opponent, "be without God's laws than the pope's." In indignation, Tyndale arose, and said emphatically: "I defy the pope, and all his laws; and if God spare me, I will one day make the boy that drives the plow in England to know more of Scripture than the pope does."

Tyndale prized the Book of books so highly that he decided to translate it into modern English. But where could he do his work? After searching for a place, he sadly confessed that "in all England there was no room for attempting a translation of the Scriptures." Still he did not give up. Even exile he would cheerfully accept if only he could spread the Bible over England. He left his native land, never to see it again; and in a foreign country, amid poverty, distress, and constant danger, he worked incessantly.

SMUGGLING THAT IS LAUDABLE

A YEAR or two later a small stream of Bibles began to flow across the English Channel. In cases, in barrels, in sacks of flour, in bales of cloth, and in other secret ways, the forbidden Book made its way into Tyndale's native land. Thousands of copies were seized and burned with solemn ceremony before they could reach their intended destination; but Tyndale despaired not. The Bible was worth everything to him, and his people must have it. So he worked on, feeling that in time the recently invented printing press would defy the enemy. "In burning the Books," he said, "they did none other thing than I looked for; no more shall they do if they burn me also."

His expectations were fulfilled. He was not permitted to see the wonderful change that came to England in a few short years; for in 1536 he was strangled and then burned to ashes, praying fervently as life went out, "Lord, open the king of England's eyes." Thus died another great discoverer of the Bible.

What changes time has wrought! Today we see not merely a few Bibles here and there; but the Bible, entire or in parts, is printed in more than 700 languages and dialects. And millions of copies are printed yearly.

IT MEETS THE NEED OF HUMAN HEARTS

THESE are not days when the lover of the Bible must risk his life to gaze at its sacred pages. We do not have to walk fifty miles to get a copy of the Bible, nor spend six years saving enough to buy one, as did little Welsh Mary. But these are days when we need the same love of the Bible as possessed those who hazarded their lives for the privilege of studying the Book of books. Today, as J. Q. Adams said of his time, "it is not so much praiseworthy to be acquainted with the Bible, as it is shameful to be ignorant of it."

All rejoice in the protection afforded by the Bible. We are glad that it has made our community a safe, comfortable place in which to live. We rejoice in the miracles the Book is working in heathen lands. We find real entertainment in reading the thrilling testimonials of what the Bible does for others. And such testimonials abound. They come from every corner of the globe, and from all strata of society. This chorus of witnesses proclaims emphatically that in all the vicissitudes of life, the Bible meets every need of the human heart. In heathen lands or in civilized countries, in prisons or in palaces, on the sunny hills of youth or the western slope of life, in times of famine or in days of feasting, in poverty or in prosperity, that precious Book has just the message the human heart needs. When enjoying the comforts of peace or when suffering the calamities of war; when absorbed in problems of business or when meditating on the glories to come; when thrilling with exuberant health or when languishing on the bed of sickness; when rejoicing over the cradle or when weeping over the grave; when doubt, perplexity, and fear struggle for possession, or when pleasure, wealth, and popularity lead to forgetfulness,—yes, under all circumstances, as many have testified, the human heart finds its every requirement met in the Book of God. That Book, and it alone, brings the blessed message that is needed.

"Then why does it not bring it to me?" you ask. What the Book has done for others, it can do for you and me. The Book has not failed. No, no! But we have failed, if we have not discovered the Book. To have the remedy in the home is not enough. It must be applied according to directions before its value is realized—before it is really discovered. "It is one thing to treat the Bible as a book of good moral instruction, to be heeded so far as is consistent with the spirit of the times and our position in the world; it is another thing to regard it as it really is,—the Word of the living God,—the Word that is our life, the Word that is to mold our actions, our words, and our thoughts. To hold God's Word as anything less than that is to reject it."

KNOWING GOD

By George B. Alldridge

EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON wrote, "The world is not a prison house, but a kind of spiritual kindergarten, where millions of bewildered infants are trying to spell God with the wrong blocks."

How few people we actually know, and how few people there are whom we may consider as our friends. In the Scriptures I do not find many who are named as God's friends. Abraham seems to have this great honor bestowed upon him preeminently above all the sons of men. See 2 Chronicles 20:8; Isaiah 41:8; James 2:23. Let me quote Isaiah 41:8: "But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend." Paul tells us who these are: "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Please read John 15:13-15. Note Jesus calls those His friends who, like Abraham (Gen. 18:19), do those things God delights in. God's condescension toward the children of men alone should draw us to Him.

Listen to this: "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

One of my favorite authors is the late Count Tolstoi. In one of his private letters to a friend (1901) on "Reason, Faith, and Prayer," he wrote: "The Pharisees and scribes of our time always say that one should not believe in reason, because it will deceive, but that one should believe them and they will not deceive. But what they say is untrue. If one believes in men, and, as the Gospels say, 'in the traditions of men,' then we shall all crawl astray from each other like blind puppies, and hate each other, as we do now: the Christian churchman hates the Mohammedan, the Mohammedan hates the Christian, and the Christians themselves hate each other; the (Greek) Orthodox hates the Catholic, the Old Believer (an ancient Russian sect) hates the Orthodox, and so on: but if we adhere to the voice of reason, we shall all unite, because reason is one and the same for all, and reason alone unites men and does not hinder the manifestation of the mutual love natural to them.

"Reason unites us, not only with our contemporaries, but with men who lived two thousand years before us, and with those who will live after us. Thus we profit by all that has been produced by the reason of Isaiah and Jesus, and all the men who lived before us and be-

"But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise lovingkindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord."—Jer. 9:24.

lieved in reason and served it.

"Act toward others as thou wouldest wish them to act toward thee; do not revenge good for evil; be abstinent, chaste; not only refrain from killing people, but be not angry against them; keep peace with all, and much else.

"All this is the product of reason, and all this has been preached equally by the religious philosophers of all time. It is also preached by all good people of our time, and all agree with it."

Fifty-one years ago the writer stood (according to tradition) upon the exact spot where Paul stood and preached that wonderful sermon recorded in Acts 17:22-31. From the spot in the midst of Mars' Hill a few feet from the court of the Areopagites is a series of stone steps descending to the pavement, where the elite of society would meet to discuss the current issues and questions of the day.

"Now while Paul waited for them (his friends) at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry."

As I looked upon the ruins of the temple dedicated to Minerva, the goddess of wisdom, of war, and of the liberal arts, not far away, lying upon the ground, were the massive columns of what once constituted part of the temple of Jupiter, to the men of Athens the supreme deity, the son of Saturn. The temple of the Seven Virgins and many others, all like the god Mars, the son of Jupiter and Juno—the god of war—stood specifically for one thing; and those who worshiped them—the devotees of each cult—understood why they worshiped each god or goddess and for what they stood.

In Paul's day Mars' Hill meant the sovereign tribunal at Athens, as we read in Acts 17:19. It was originally named in honor of Ares, or Mars.

As I stood there, a gentleman whose yacht was lying at anchor in the bay off Piraeus, the seaport of the city of Athens, said to me and my companion, "Boys, shall I explain to you these ruins and the history of Mars' Hill, or the Acropolis?"

We gladly placed ourselves under his tuition. As we noticed the tourists and visitors ascending the hill, he vividly described what the Parthenon was like in Paul's day, then in the zenith of its glory.

"Now," said he, "notice the wisdom of Paul in selecting this site upon which to stand as he preached. All rich, poor, and influential citizens must necessarily pass him, and be in the range of his voice on their way to enter the temple."

Paul was a wonderful scholar and was thoroughly versed in the mythological teachings and beliefs of his day, and could intelligently quote from Greek poets and philosophers. He knew what each god and each goddess stood for. Notice how he remembered the words of his Master, "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves."

Brethren, I wish I were as wise as Paul and could preach as intelligently as he, with no waste of time in introduction, but plunge at once into the heart of the subject: "For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

You see, my brethren, Paul did not as we often do, especially in our prayers, tell God and one another things already known. No. Paul sought to tell people things unknown to them.

A few years ago a colored man in our employ was bewailing to me the hard lot of the colored race. I quoted to him Acts 17:26: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."

His intelligent face was a study as he said, "Mr. Allridge, where did you read that?"

I said, "In the Bible, of course."

He requested me to write it down for him to take home and show his wife.

Do you wish to know God? Then seek to know people as God does. Be no respecter of persons, and remember that we are all of one blood.

Do you realize that, as Paul was preaching, the words of our text, "I am the Lord which exercise lovingkindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth," by him were speaking?

If those people who erected the altar to the unknown God could but have known that this God, great in power and excellent in knowledge, who orders all things and weighs the actions of men, could and would give each grace to serve Him in better knowledge of His truth and righteousness! Their gods taught them wickedness and evil; Paul's God—and, I rejoice, my God, also—teaches only good things and shows the way of everlasting life through Christ our Savior by the instruction of His Holy Spirit as expressed in His Word.

Our knowledge of each other as revealed in our physical traits means nothing, but our knowledge of each other as revealed in character and disposition means all that is worth knowing. Hence, God's person is unknown to us; but His glorious character and disposition may be fully known by the study of His Word. How true, then, are the words of Jesus: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

MAN IN DEATH

CERTAIN Fundamentalists are greatly disturbed over some of the teachings of the late E. W. Bullinger, D. D., of England, author of A Critical Lexicon and Concordance to the English and Greek New Testament, The Apocalypse, The Witness of the Stars, Figures of Speech Used in the Scriptures, and numerous other works. For one thing, it is claimed that he went too far with his dispensationalism, while he is considered entirely in error on the question of the intermediate state of man.

Now as to Dr. Bullinger's dispensational teachings, we, too, believe he went much too far. We have no sympathy with his extreme position in that connection. But as to his contention that the dead are totally unconscious and inactive between death and the resurrection, we certainly believe he was right. And we are glad for so scholarly and reverent a champion of what we believe to be an important doctrine of the Bible.

The editor of the Moody Monthly gratefully acknowledges his indebtedness to Dr. Bullinger for help received, but he goes on to say:

"The first 'jolt' however, which the writer received in following Bullinger was in coming upon his brochure on The Rich Man and Lazarus, and discovering that he did away with the intermediate state between death and the resurrection, and taught the error of soul sleeping. Indeed, as one of his English critics said, 'The unscriptural doctrine of total unconsciousness between death and resurrection did not go far enough for him, since he denied that there was any soul left to sleep or any surviving personality to be conscious. To him man was not a tripartite being, as the Bible says, but spirit and body only, which together comprise the soul.'"

We might say that we, too, have read Bullinger's Rich Man and Lazarus (published by Eyre & Spottiswoode, 33 Paternoster Row, London, England). And we do not consider him so much in error as to man in death as some of his critics would have us believe. Let us quote a few paragraphs from this pamphlet by Dr. Bullinger:

"This is why the death of believers is so often called 'sleep'; and dying is called 'falling asleep'; because of the assured hope of awakening in resurrection. It is not called 'the sleep of the body' as many express it; or 'the sleep of the soul.' Scripture knows nothing of either expression. Its language is, 'David . . . fell on sleep' (Acts 13:36); not David's body nor David's soul. 'Stephen . . . fell asleep' (Acts 7:60), 'Lazarus sleepeth' (John 11:11), which is explained, when the Lord afterwards speaks 'plainly,' as meaning 'Lazarus is dead' (v. 14).

"Now when (God) uses one thing to describe, or explain, another, He does not choose the opposite word or expression. If He speaks of night, He does not use the word light. If He speaks of daylight, He does not use the word night. He does not put 'bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter' (Isa. 5:20). He uses adultery to illustrate idolatry; He does not use virtue. And so, if He uses the word 'sleep' of death, it is because sleep illustrates to us what the condition of death is like. If tradition be the truth, He ought to have used the word awake, or wakefulness.

"But the Lord first uses a figure, and says, 'Lazarus sleepeth'; and afterwards, when He speaks 'plainly,' He says: 'Lazarus is dead.'

"Why? Because sleep expresses and describes the condition of the 'unclad' state. In normal sleep, there is no consciousness. For the Lord, therefore, to have used this word 'sleep' to represent the very opposite condition of wakefulness, would have been indeed to mislead us. But, all His words are perfect; and are for the purpose of teaching us, and not for leading us astray."

Thus, we see that Dr. Bullinger believed in the sleep of the dead, and that the figure sleep is used because death is a condition of unconsciousness and inactivity, with an awakening in the morning of the resurrection. We fail to see why any fault should be found with that. It looks reasonable enough, and scriptural, too.—L. J. Carter in Mes-siah's Advocate.

TRUE REPENTANCE

By A. E. Hoskins

TRUE repentance embraces all the conditions necessary to prepare the heart to receive salvation. Salvation is of God; but repentance, faith, and obedience are necessary conditions on man's part. Repentance is absolutely necessary in everyone before saving faith can be exercised.

A change of mind is not necessarily true repentance unless it produces the "fruits meet for repentance." "He that cometh to God must believe." To hold to unbelief is to perish.

Repentance is also called sorrow for sin. "Godly sorrow worketh repentance not to be repented of" and will cause the unrighteous man to "return unto the Lord."

To forsake sin without returning unto God will not do; and to attempt to return to God without forsaking all sin would amount to nothing, for God cannot accept that which is not holy. Repentance to be genuine must be unto life or justification.

Outward manifestations of convictions are often taken for repentance. Many will cry for mercy through fear, knowing that their condemnation is just, when there has been no real turning away of the heart from those things which they know to be contrary to God's will and Word. Such God will not hear, for it is written: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."—Psa. 66:18.

Some of the things necessary in repentance are: "Put away the evil of your doings; . . . cease to do evil; learn to do well."—Isa. 1:16, 17. "Put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man."—Eph. 4:22-24. A turning away from all sin is not all that is required. There must be a confession with the mouth. "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation."—Rom. 10:9, 10. Again, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins."—Church of God Messenger.

THE OATH-CLAD PROMISE

By B. C. Simonds

"In thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed."
 From the Scriptures of truth this conclusion we draw
 (2 Tim. 3:16; John 17:17),
 That the wisdom of men nor the work of the law
 (1 Cor. 1:19; Isa. 5:21; Rom. 3:20)
 Has the power to cleanse or forgive or to save
 (Rom. 10:4; Heb. 7:19)
 Or restore from the curse or redeem from the grave
 (Gal. 3:21-24, 16).
 Men are saved by their faith in the crucified One
 (Rom. 10:9; Acts 16:31; Heb. 11:6).
 When His love and His goodness to them are made known
 (Rom. 10:13, 15; 1 Cor. 1:21; John 3:18),
 Saving faith comes by hearing the life-giving Word
 (Rom. 10:17; John 6:63; Phil. 2:16),
 And the mercy of God through the Savior conferred
 (2 Cor. 5:19; 1 Tim. 2:4, 6).
 All who will may be saved by obedient faith
 (John 3:18),
 And may gain life unending through Christ and His grace
 (Mark 10:30; Col. 3:4);
 For the gospel salvation to all is made free
 (Mark 16:15; 1 Tim. 2:4; Tit. 2:11);
 As they heed its instructions, their judgment will be (Rom. 2:16; Mark 16:16; John 3:18).
 Endless life is for those who the gospel accept (John 3:16; Mark 10:30; Rom. 6:23),
 But death is the portion of those who reject
 (Acts 3:23; Heb. 10:26, 27; Rom. 6:23);
 For there's no other way that's revealed by the Lord
 (Acts 6:12; John 14:6)
 To redeem fallen man but through Christ and His Word
 (Tit. 2:13, 14; Gal. 3:18; John 6:63).
 The heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath He given
 (Psa. 115:16; Isa. 14:18)
 To the children of men as their home and their heaven
 (Dan. 7:27; Isa. 37:29; Matt. 6:10).
 Wicked rulers and nations thus far have borne sway
 (Dan. 2; 2 Tim. 3:13; Isa. 60:2),
 And their reign has led down from the gold to the clay
 (Dan. 2:31, 44);
 But the age for the world's promised blessing is near
 (Gen. 12:3 to 22:18; Psa. 72:17; Rev. 15:4),
 When the true Light that lighteth all men shall appear (John 1:4, 7, 9; 8:12; Dan. 2:44).
 God has been taking out from the world for His name
 (Acts 15:14; Rev. 5:9, 10)
 A faithful, tried people with the Savior to reign
 (2 Tim. 2:12; Rev. 7:14; Mark 10:30).
 Soon those sleeping in Christ from the dead will arise
 (1 Cor. 15:23, 52)
 And, joining the living, meet the Lord in the skies
 (1 Thess. 4:16, 17; Mark 13:27).
 These elect ones with Christ shall forever abide (Mark 13:27; 1 Thess. 4:17),
 And He'll honor and glorify them as His bride
 (John 3:29; Matt. 25:1; Rom. 8:17, 18).

As a body perfected the seed then will bless
(1 Cor. 12:27; Col. 1:18; Gen. 22:18)

All the nations of earth with glad tidings of peace
(Gal. 3:8, 16, 29; Luke 2:10, 14; Mark 16:15).

Then He comes to the earth with His chosen again
(Zech. 14:4, 5; 1 Thess. 3:13; Jude 14),

And will over the nations commence His just reign (Matt. 25:32; Luke 1:32, 33; Isa. 2:3; 10:6, 7).

All the powers of earth to an end shall be brought (Psa. 10; Rev. 2:26, 27; Jer. 25:29, 32),

And their rule and authority soon come to naught
(1 Cor. 15:24; Phil. 2:10);

All their glory and pride like the chaff pass away
(Dan. 2:35),

And Christ and His chosen in mercy bear sway
(Dan. 7:27; Psa. 22:27, 28; Luke 22:29, 30; 29:17).

When He speaks to the earth, she uncovers her slain
(Isa. 26:19, 21; Hos. 13:14),

And they all hear His voice and to life rise again
(John 5:25, 28; 2 Cor. 5:19).

Christ will reign 'til all things to Him are subdued
(1 Cor. 15:25, 28; 2 Cor. 5:19),

And the face of the earth from the curse is renewed
(Rev. 22:3; 21:5).

These times of refreshing from the Lord now are near (Acts 3:19, 21; Matt. 24:33),

And the life-giving power is soon to appear
(Col. 3:3, 4; Mark 10:30; John 11:25; Matt. 28:18).

Christ will banish the curse and perfection restore
(Psa. 104:30; Rev. 22:3)

And the earth fill with gladness and beauty once more
(Isa. 35:11; 10:35; 12:18).

Then sorrow and death and corruption will cease
(Rev. 21:4),

And the world shall be clothed in the garments of peace
(Zech. 9:10; Isa. 2:4).

When He rises in the earth the glad tidings are heard
(Psa. 22:28; Isa. 14:23; Acts 15:16, 17),

And the world shall remember and turn to the Lord
(Psa. 22:27; Heb. 2:14).

All nations shall worship the Lord then with fear
(Psa. 86:9; Rev. 15:4; Psa. 67:4),

And the kings join in praise when His words they shall hear
(Psa. 138:4; 102:15).

When the spirit of grace rests on Israel again
(Zech. 12:10; Rom. 11:26; Jer. 32:40)

And they look upon Him whom in wrath they have slain (Zech. 12:10; Acts 2:23, 36),

They will bitterly mourn and acknowledge their sin
(Zech. 12:10; Ezek. 34:31; 16:61, 63)

And gladly accept Him as their long-looked for King
(Isa. 25:9; Matt. 33:39; Luke 3:15).

Then the promised possession the Lord will restore (Ezek. 36:24; 37:21; Jer. 32:37),

And their numerous sins He'll remember no more (Jer. 31:33, 34; Ezek. 36:33; Rom. 11:27).

Jerusalem restored with the Lord as its light
(Acts 15:15, 16; Zech. 6:12, 13; Isa. 60:10-20; 33:20)

Is the glory of earth and its joy and delight
(Isa. 3:9, 10; 65:18, 19; Psa. 48:2).

From this city redeemed living waters shall flow
(Zech. 14:8; Joel 3:18; Rev. 22:1),

And the life-giving tree on its borders shall grow (Ezek. 47:1, 12; Rev. 22:1, 2; 2:7).

When the curse is removed, this blessed city of love
(Rev. 22:3; 20:9)

Is enlarged and made one by the city above
(Rev. 21:10, 16).

All honor and glory to the Lord now is given
(Num. 14:21; Rev. 5:12),

And His will on the earth is done as in heaven
(Matt. 6:10).

record we learn that the tree of life was the only means for the perpetuation of Adam's life and the life of his posterity.

Ezekiel 47. We learn Ezekiel was brought to the door of the house described in the last eight chapters of Ezekiel, "and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward," and the waters at one time were to his ankles, and again they were to his knees. The third time he came to the banks of the river the waters were to the loins, and the fourth time the waters had risen so that he could swim. Then the angel said, "Son of man, hast thou seen this?" and he caused Ezekiel to return to the bank of the river; and when he had returned to the river, there were many trees on the one side and on the other; and the angel said the leaves of the trees "shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine."

Revelation 22:1. John the Revelator was shown "a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."

By faith we look forward to the day when all that have died in Adam will be made alive in Christ. The second resurrection will constitute the nations that will be healed by the use of the tree of life, the same means by which Adam would have perpetuated his life.

When the restitution of all things is complete, the entire earth will become as the Garden of Eden, "and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody" (Isa. 51:3). As the Bible is the only record of man's origin and the penalty for his transgression, which was death, let us search the Scriptures and see if we can learn man's condition in the future.

A NEW DOCTRINE

SAY some: "The Adventists have not been known long; if they have the truth, why have not some of the folks discovered it before this?"

This question has often been asked. These people think we are teaching something of recent date. Many think of us as the Athenians thought of Paul, saying, as they gave him a public hearing: "May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?" But Paul was not on some "new" line; he was on the old line of Moses and the prophets, preaching "Jesus and the resurrection." According to the teaching of Paul, Jesus and the resurrection through Jesus were the world's only hope. So we teach. Therefore, our doctrine is certainly as old as Pauline theology. He comforted those who mourned the loss of friends as did his Lord, by the hope of the resurrection (1 Thess. 4:16-18; John 11:23). Paul taught that David, after he had served his own generation by (according to) the will of God, "fell on sleep." We teach the same.

At a recent funeral we heard the preacher say the dead one had gone "over the great divide," "the real person is not in this coffin but in heaven," etc., etc. It was humiliating and nauseating.

Peter confirmed Paul, saying of David, "He is both dead and buried" and "is not ascended into the heavens" (Acts 2:29, 34; 13:36). Both these men were apostles and "full of the Holy Ghost," and taught precisely as we do. These modern funeral sermons, such as we mentioned above, are not inspired by the Spirit of God.

But our faith is older than the apostles. More than three thousand years ago there lived a man whom God endorsed as "perfect and upright." He could not have been an errorist. He was a great man; some think he was one of the early kings of Edom. As was the custom of kings then, he sat in the gate to judge the cause of the people. He could not be bribed. The poor and the orphan and the widow received justice at his hand. He broke out the teeth of the sharpers who would rob them of their all. He was a learned man. His poem excels in every excellence that of Homer, the world's renowned. His writings are the oldest known. He was a man of great influence. Young men were silent in his presence, and old men rose up at his coming and stood till he passed by. His counsel was sought far and near; and when it was gotten, none other was needed. He was waited for as men wait for rain in a dry time. Suppose we seek this ancient patriarch's counsel in regard to man's state in death.

Honored Job, if you had died in infancy, where would you have been? I should "have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest." Whom would you have slept with? "With kings and counsellors of the earth, . . . with princes that had gold." Can spirit mediums or other wicked ones awaken the dead out of sleep? "There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest. There the prisoners rest together."—Job 3:13-18. "Till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14:12. Do you really expect to lie in the grave when dead? "If I wait, the grave is mine house."—Job 17:13. Do the dead know what is going on among the living? "His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them."—Job 14:21.

Jesus said all that are in the graves will hear the voice of the Son of God, and come forth (John 5:28). Do you expect to hear that call? "Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands."—Job 14:15. "For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."—Job 19:25-27. Will the wicked be raised up, too? "Do ye not know their tokens, that the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction? they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath."—Job 21:29, 30.

Here we have plainly the teachings of a God-honored man more than three thousand years ago. They are precisely the same as the Adventists teach now. The first religious newspaper ever published in America taught the same truths. We are not promulgating new things, but have found "the old paths" and are delighted to walk in them. We have the honor of being sustained by the oldest inspired book extant, by the oldest religious newspaper in America, but best of all, by the all-wise Creator in His Book of books, the Bible. "Come with us, and we will do thee good."

Crowds may come and crowds may go, but God's truth stands forever!

Big evangelists may "draw down" five thousand a week in public playhouses; but they are not preaching "present truth," nor are they thundering out the judgment message. Shekels and gospel truth do not mix well.

MAN'S PUNISHMENT

"May it not be reckoned an infinite punishment should God doom man to total annihilation?"—Herman Witsius.

"'Everlasting destruction' (2 Thess. 1:9) is an everlasting punishment."—Rev. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork, English Episcopal.

"It seems all but inconceivable, that when God is all in all there should be some dark spot where, amid endless self-inflicted suffering, or in the enhancement of ever-enduring hate, rebel hands should be forever raised against the Eternal Father and the God of everlasting love."—Bishop Elliott, The Church and the Age.

"My mind fails to conceive a grosser misinterpretation of language than when five or six of the strongest words which the Greek tongue possesses, signifying 'destroy' or 'destruction,' are explained to mean maintaining an everlasting but wretched existence. To translate black as white is nothing to this."—R. F. Weymouth.

Abreast of the Times

New Jewish Exodus

"Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord."—Zechariah 2:6.

LAUSANNE, Dec. 5.—It is estimated that 60,000 refugees have fled to surrounding countries from Germany as a result of the religious and political changes that have taken place there during the past year. Of this number 51,000 are Jews, according to James G. MacDonald of New York, High Commissioner of the refugee question before the League of Nations.

Mr. MacDonald estimated that some 16,000 are not of German nationality, all the rest being of that nation. Of the approximately 9,000 non-Jews with whom the committee has to deal a large number are Catholics and members of various Protestant denominations who will not submit to Nazi interference with their religious belief and practice. He said that 25,000 refugees had sought a haven in France, 6,500 in Palestine, 6,000 in Poland, 5,000 in Czechoslovakia, 5,000 in Holland, 3,000 in England, about 1,000 in Spain and in the United States, and the remainder were scattered among various nations.

Mr. MacDonald said in his address before the International Refugee Conference which opened here today, "I hope that Governments will consider sympathetically receiving the refugees as potential citizens." He praised the American Jewish organizations highly for the generous way in which they had contributed to the relief of their distressed people, and stressed the importance of locating the refugees where they may become "self-supporting and valiant members of their new homelands."

Three Arab Leaders Convicted

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts; . . . He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye."—Zech. 2:8.

JERUSALEM, Dec. 5.—As an aftermath of the recent anti-Jewish demonstrations in Palestine that resulted in many deaths and injuries, as reported in these columns November 14, three leaders of the Arab attacks were convicted and sentenced today. Two were given a month in jail each, and the third was released after posting a bond of $1,000 as surety for good behavior.

Anti-Semitism Sweeps World

"Our necks are under persecution: we labour, and have no rest."—Lamentations 5:5.

LAUSANNE, Dec. 6.—Prof. Chaim Weizmann, addressing the Refugee Conference, according to Associated Press despatches, said that a wave of anti-Semitism is sweeping over the entire world. The speaker urged the Jews everywhere to concentrate on what he called national retaining and said a splendid example of this is afforded in Palestine and also in Poland.

Prof. Weizmann, who represents Jewish organizations of London, asserted that his people would heartily cooperate with the governing board of the Jewish refugee organization, and believed that the problem could be solved "provided we shall not be swamped again by a new wave of refugees fleeing from their countries of origin."

Feast of Dedication

"It was at Jerusalem the feast of the dedication, and it was winter."—John 10:22.

BEGINNING on December 13 and continuing for eight days the Jews throughout the world will celebrate "Chanukah," or "The Feast of the Dedication." This is the same memorial feast at which Jesus was present in Jerusalem when He announced His Messiahship in the temple (John 10:22-40). It is celebrated annually with much festivity, and is held as a memorial of "the heroism of the Maccabees in driving out from Palestine the forces of Hellenism."

The houses of the Jews are brilliantly lighted with a separate light for each man and woman. "These lamps must be lighted immediately after sunset by the head of the family, who pronounces the following benedictions: (1) 'Blessed art Thou, Lord our God, King of the world, who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments, and enjoined upon us to light the lamps of the Feast of the Dedication.' (2) 'Blessed art Thou, Lord our God, King of the world, who hast done wonders for our forefathers in those days about this time.' And (3) 'Blessed art Thou, Lord our God, King of the world, who hast preserved us in life and health, and hast permitted us to see this day!' The third benediction is only pronounced on the first day of the feast."

Arabs Strike in Holy Land

"It is even the time of Jacob's trouble."—Jer. 30:7.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 27.—According to Associated Press dispatches today has been set for the calling of a strike of all the Arabs of Palestine, which is to continue over tomorrow as a protest against the trials of Arab leaders who participated in the recent demonstrations against Jewish immigration.

The trial of the Moslems arrested in connection with anti-Jewish riots in Jerusalem October 13, and those who engaged in similar demonstrations in Jaffa October 27, is to begin before the British magistrate here today.

The Arab disturbances resulted in the death of 25 persons and the injury of some 250 others.

"LET HIM THAT IS ATHIRST COME. AND WHOSOEVER WILL, LET HIM TAKE THE WATER OF LIFE FREELY."—REVELATION 22:17.

WHY IS CHRIST COMING AGAIN?

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."—Matthew 25:31.

ALL of us can think of innumerable things that are wrong in this world; the sadness and poverty and suffering, crime and injustice are so near all of us. Man has brought many evil conditions upon the world through sin, and he has suggested many panaceas for them. But somehow none of them ever seem to work. None of them can work, for they depend for their success on man alone. There is only one thing that can bring a permanent and complete cure from sin, and that is the return of Jesus Christ as King over the earth.

One great and important thing that Christ will do upon His return is to establish God's kingdom. Thousands of years ago, God had a kingdom on the earth. He was the great Ruler over the kingdom of Israel. But God said, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."—Ezek. 21:27. We today are waiting for the coming of the One whose right it is; but until He comes, the government of the earth is in the hands of man.

Restitution is another thing that Jesus will accomplish when He comes. The word "restitution" means restoring and replacing something lost or damaged, and that is just what Jesus will do. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3:19-21. The whole earth shall be a lovely garden, more beautiful than we can imagine. For an exquisite paean on that subject, one should read the thirty-fifth chapter of Isaiah.

When Jesus comes, there will take place the resurrection of the dead. 1 Corinthians 15:22, 23 tells us: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." What a truly wonderful thing that will be! Another very familiar text on this subject is 1 Thessalonians 4:16.

But to have life would not be very pleasant if we were afflicted with illness and physical imperfections. Those, too, are to be done away with. Jesus showed us something of how it will be when He performed many miracles of healing among the unfortunates of Judea during His life there as a mortal man. Isaiah gives us a description of the rejoicing there will be: "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert."—Isaiah 35:5, 6. "And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."—Isaiah 33:24.

Finally, Jesus will distribute rewards when He comes. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matt. 16:27. What will these rewards be? Romans 6:23 states them very clearly. They are death and eternal life.

These are the reasons we hope for the return of Jesus Christ to this earth. Through Him, and Him alone, can come that glorious new dispensation, when "God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Rev. 21:3, 4.

PRAYER

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take!
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak! we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others—that we are not always strong—
That we are sometimes overborne with care—
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled—when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?

"All kings shall fall down before him."

WHEN JESUS COMES

ONCE upon a time long, long ago an old man with a white beard, who had been studying for many years the pages of a big book, carefully placed the book upon its shelf and prepared to start out upon a wearisome journey. The proper time had at last arrived, he knew from his study of the stars as well as of the precious book.

Selling most of his worldly possessions, he purchased a camel and all its trappings. But the greater share of his wealth he used for the purchase of the most beautiful box of perfume he could find in the shops of his native city. This he was taking as a gift to the one whom he was seeking.

His clear blue eyes, wearied from the years of study, grew more rested from day to day as he proceeded on his westward journey. In his heart was a warm glow when he thought of the one at whose feet he would lay his costly gift at the end of the road. No travel was too hard, no road too rocky, if at the end he found the one he sought.

Often his eager eyes searched the star-studded heavens at night for a bright star which led the way for him. A very great scholar and a close student of the stars was our aged traveler, a man of much authority and high honor in his own country.

Far away in the little town of Bethlehem a simple Jewish man sought shelter for his young and beautiful wife. But the inns were crowded with visitors, and the only place of rest and quiet he could find was in an empty stable. Here late that night in these homely and rude surroundings a little son came to the weary young woman so far from home.

But hark! as we stand outside the stable, on the hushed stillness of the night comes the most beautiful music ever heard by mortal ear—a chorus of angel voices! And the words of their song are these: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Just around the bend in the road we see the dim outlines of the camel bearing our aged traveler who has been joined by other travelers. His gaze is turned heavenward, and as he sees his guiding star come to rest over the rude shelter he dismounts and enters, bearing in his hands the costly gift he has carried so carefully over the weary miles. At last he has come to the end of his journey!

At the feet of this tiny babe he lays his beautiful gift, while on bended knee he thanks his heavenly Father for care and protection on the way. Most of all he is grateful that now he has found the one who one day is to be King over all the world. Yes, this tiny babe!

Jesus, for that was the name His mother gave Him, has gone away to His Father now, but He is coming again some day. We who, like our aged traveler, study the Book of books know that His coming is soon, and we must be ready for it, though the exact hour we do not know.

The gift we hope to lay at Jesus' feet is not purchased with money, but is the perfume of loving deeds. A whole lifetime of kindness is not too much to give Him, for He gave His life for us. Even the kings of earth will bow before Him, for when He comes again He will be King over all kings.

The blessings He will bring to us are so wonderful we can hardly grasp them. Eternal peace, joys unnumbered, no sickness, no sorrow, no disappointment, no death! Nothing but beauty all about us—the blossom of flowers, the song of birds, and best of all, everyone loving and worshipping Jesus and His Father. For then the earth will be filled with the glory of the Lord.

Even so, come, Lord Jesus!

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Write your own story of the first Christmas. Imagine yourself one of the shepherds watching the flocks in the field near Bethlehem, or one of the wise men coming from afar bearing costly gifts to lay at the feet of the newborn babe. Then write the story of that greater Christmas to come when the King shall return to earth. Copy the words of Isaiah 35:1, 5, 6, 10; next these lines:

"Over earth the stars are beaming,
Through the dusky shadows gleaming,
With a tender message in their light;
From their everlasting glory,
Once again we hear the story
First proclaimed that Christmas night.

"Today we, too, adore Him,
And bow the knee before Him,
Even as wise men in the ancient days;
And we love Him as dearly,
As truly and sincerely,
As watching shepherds when they knelt in praise."

A VISION OF WORLD PEACE

Isaiah 11:1-9

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 2:1-5

GOLDEN TEXT

The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.—Isaiah 11:9.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: A Vision of World Peace.

Aim: To show the changes that will be made in the nature of wild animals and in the hearts of men when the knowledge of the Lord fills the earth.

Basic Truth: "He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment."—Psalm 72:2.

I. The Justice of the Messiah. (Isa. 11:1-5.) In the first five verses of this chapter the Prophet describes the justice and righteousness that will mark the rulership of the Messiah when His kingdom is established upon the earth. The angel who announced His birth declared that it provided "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." The reason why the announcement of Jesus' birth is good news to all the world is suggested in the anthem of the "heavenly host." "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke 2:10-14. The blessing promised at His first coming will be fully realized when He returns and assumes "dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."—Psalm 72:8. He will then come to be honored and beloved by all men for the justice and mercy and blessings He will bestow throughout the earth.

II. The Peace That Follows Christ's Reign. (Isa. 11:6-9.) In the remaining verses of our lesson we have pictured the results of the reign of the Messiah over the earth. With the removal of the curse pronounced upon Adam and his race because of disobedience and the ushering in of a new government of righteousness, the cause of the enmity between men and animals will also disappear and peace be made to prevail among all the inhabitants of the world. There can be no peace while selfishness holds sway over the hearts of mankind. It is only when all men are animated by the knowledge of God and become gladly conformed in their conduct to the will of Jehovah that the entire world will enjoy the peace and prosperity for which it sighs today. Jesus came the first time to announce the coming of world peace. He comes the second time to bring it to pass.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Peace in Government: Perhaps the most needed attribute in world government today is peace. Such cannot be realized as long as there remains in the hearts of men an iota of selfishness, conceit, bitterness, cruelty. Nor can it be realized until men are filled with desire and ability to understand each other. Beyond all this is the need of a ruler who can exercise perfect justice and to whom all classes of men are as one, in whom all subjects will have implicit faith.

It matters not today how great is our desire to accomplish this, the finite mind is too weak and short-sighted to bring it about. We do not understand our neighbor's conduct because we cannot know the conditions under which he works or the result of those conditions on his mind. We censure those in authority without understanding their purpose for action. The rulers are handicapped in their judgments by lack of knowledge of their subjects and by unfaithfulness in their subordinates.

Peace in Nature: Since the evacuation of the ark by Noah, there has come upon the animal kingdom a fear of each other and of man, born of the use of meat for food. The lion fears man, and man fears the lion. The fear and dread of humanity is almost as strong an instinct among animals and birds as their desire for food. It is only by a continued course of training that this can be overcome.

But in the vision given us by Isaiah there is complete peace in nature and government, brought about by a God-led return to the Edenic state in nature, and a still greater accomplishment in government, for "God himself shall be with them," and men will have put on immortality.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

At present and in past times only a few people, comparatively speaking, know or have known God. Many know Him in a way, but really to know God means much more. To know God means to love and adore Him to the extent of doing His will. The time will come when "all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's: and he is the governor among the nations."—Psalm 22:27, 28.

When the kingdom is set up and the Lord rules, then, and not till then, will the knowledge of God cover the entire earth as the waters now cover the sea. Then will be a time of world peace. A righteous ruler will make righteous people, and all will be peace and harmony.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

A Christian Christmas

Christmas was set aside primarily as a day in which to commemorate the birth of God's

Son. Because Jesus was God's gift of love to the world and because the wise men gave gifts to Jesus upon their visit to Him, it became the practice to send gifts to our friends to the neglect of those less friendly. Herein we come short of the true Christian spirit of Christmas. God gave His gift to us while we were still His enemies. We give to our friends only. God gave His gifts to those who could not give anything in return; we "exchange" gifts. We spend the most money on those from whom we expect the most expensive presents. God gave His gift because of His great love; we give from a sense of duty. The value of the gift we send is no true measure of love which prompted the giving. God's gift was a true measure of His love.

The true Christian meaning of Christmas can be gleaned from Christ's teaching about feasts. His words are: "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompence thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."—Luke 14:12-14.

Does not the above express the true spirit of God's giving to us? As those who claim to be His followers, must not we do the same? As Christians we should see that the day is a memorial to Christ. Our cards, our gifts, and our conversation should indicate that we so regard the day.—H. A. S.

PRIMARY

When Jesus Comes

Every year at this time we hear again the story of the birth of baby Jesus at Bethlehem. Won't you tell it for me this year?

I want to tell you about a man named Isaiah, who lived many years before Jesus was born. This man knew about baby Jesus, too. He told us just when and where Jesus would be born. Yes, he even told us what kind of a man Jesus would be. He told all the things He would do while He was on earth.

But, best of all, Isaiah told us of things that would happen when Jesus comes back to earth again. He painted such a beautiful picture for us. And there are children in the picture, too. He said, "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb; the leopard shall lie down with the kid (goat); and the calf and young lion together, and a little child shall lead them."

Won't that be a happy time? It will be happier than Christmas, which we think of now as the happiest time of the whole year.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

At our regular choir rehearsal on last Thursday evening, Bro. and Sr. Horace Pierce brought in a new member in the person of Robert Edward. While only two weeks old to the day, he assumed his little role and did nicely. As to his voice, he seems to have developed quite a range, but it was not fully determined whether he is a bass or tenor.

The choir is working on special Christmas numbers as a part of a program which is being arranged for the Sunday school and devotional hour on December 24.

Our next regular speaking service will be December 17.

Floyd A. Stilson, Pastor.

BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

From November 19 to December 3 it was the pleasure of the local congregation to listen to a series of inspiring sermons by Bro. J. H. Anderson, a former pastor of the Brush Creek Church of God. A good interest prevailed from beginning to end of the meetings. The attendance at Sunday school the last two Sundays was 129 and 134 respectively. We hope to average that many or more by spring.

Special song features were offered most of the evenings of the meetings as volunteer numbers. There were several surprises, and a more cheerful feeling was visible than had been seen when a regular program was followed.

Bro. Anderson's sermons dealt largely with God's promises concerning the earth and His people. The soon coming of Christ was shown to be not only true, but necessary, for the establishment of peace and the fulfillment of God's promises. Many favorable comments were heard of the various messages, and we trust to some day have the opportunity to work with Bro. Anderson again.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

BAPTISMS AT OREGON, ILLINOIS

The church at Oregon was given cause for rejoicing last Thursday night when five more adults passed through the waters of baptism in the name of Jesus Christ. This group was a part of a larger class of learners who have been contemplating taking this important step for more than a year. These five are all in middle life with the possibility of many years of useful service before them. None of them come from former Church of God families, but are the fruitage of the united efforts of the church and Sunday school during the past two years.

It may be of interest to our readers to know that four of the group were interested largely through the study of prophecy, which attracted and held their attention until they became anxious to be numbered in the family of God when the Lord comes.

Those baptized were Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Nedrow, and Mrs. Maude Eakle. A son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nedrow were immersed during conference. All are residents of Oregon. Fourteen in all have been baptized from this congregation during the present year.

They were received into the local body last Sunday night with solemn, yet joyful, observances.

G. E. Marsh, Pastor,

TO SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS AND MOTHERS

Those who have been interested in the Bible Scrapbook work on the Children's Page please write Sr. Gesin if you desire this feature continued next year. If a number write to her showing that this department is beneficial and enjoyable, it will be given for the first six months of 1934, when the life of Jesus will be studied. Drop a card at once to Mary A. Gesin, addressing her at 811 S. Fourth St., Oregon, Illinois. Thank you.

A GOLDEN WEDDING

As this paper goes into the mails, Bro. and Sr. A. J. Chaplin, Arkansas City, Kansas, celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, as they started out together December 12, 1883. The Restitution Herald wishes to join their host of friends in extending its congratulations and best wishes for the future. Fifty years is a long time as mortals count the milestones, but it will be but as a moment in the ceaseless ages of eternity which have been the goal before these dear companions for so many years. "And so shall we ever be with the Lord!"

WE SHALL SEE OUR KING!

The following letter reaches us from Mrs. Elizabeth Dauterich, 2321 E. Oliver St., Baltimore, Md. Renewing her subscription to The Restitution Herald, she says:

"I enjoy reading The Herald very much. It always has so many good things which we need so much in these distressing times to encourage us to hold fast to our faith in Christ Jesus our Lord. . . . I am so glad He is coming very soon, and we shall see our King in His beauty!"

We echo your prayer of thanksgiving, Sr. Dauterich.

PATIENCE

Brethren, have you all read Bro. Lyman Booth's article on "Patience," in The Herald of November 21? If you have not, get the paper today and begin to read it. "Begin," I say, not because it is so long, but it will stand studying.

I have been desperately sick, not able to write a letter for weeks. I have just reached Chicago after seven weeks of lying on the bed and do not feel able hardly to sit up yet, but I have happened to get Bro. Booth's article on "Patience," and it does me a lot of good.

After one has lain too sick to realize his friends, too sick to care what comes next, but hope it will be the still, quiet stop, he loses any care as to what life will be for him. I did not realize anything for one week, and it was three weeks before I could be alone in my room the most of the time. No one to talk to or read to me. Well, I felt like finding fault, but I guess I was too sick to care.

Now I am asking that those who believe in God's answering prayer will pray mightily that I and others who, about my age, are weary of life may have patience to run the race and rejoice that Christ is soon to come. We must be ready and waiting for Him with patience.

Yours, praying for God's blessing of patience for us all,

Mary A. Woodward.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our annual church meeting was held December 1, and officers were chosen for 1934. The installation service will be held the first Sunday in January.

It is the hope of the church that during the coming year there may be much noticeable growth in spiritual standing as well as in numbers. The attitude on the part of many is very devoted and Christlike, and we pray the Father to direct our work carefully in the months to come.

The Grand Rapids church extends its warmest Christmas cheer to the brothers and sisters throughout the land who are looking for the return of their Messiah.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BORN—

To Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Murry, a son, Gerald Doyle Murry. He arrived at 10:35 a. m. on November 15, at the home of the mother's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Corbaley, in Puyallup, Wash., where the mother has been visiting for several months. Later on she will return to her home in Pensacola, Fla.

MRS. LULIE WOGOMAN

Lulie C. Fisk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Fisk, was born in Carrol County, Mo., October 28, 1869, and died November 19, 1933. She attended the public schools of Carrol County until the age of 14, when she moved with her parents to Burlington, Kansas. After a stay of some time, she moved with them to Millerton, Kansas, where she grew to young womanhood.

In 1890 she was married to Thomas Meikle. From this union were born three children: Dolores, Odessie, and Faye. Mr. Meikle died in 1894. She and her children lived for a number of years with her parents in Grant County, Okla. There, in 1897, she met and married George W. Wogoman. They had one child born to them, Mrs. Myrtle Meuchke of Mayfield, Kansas. Mr. Wogoman having died March 13, 1929, she had since lived with her children. The last eight months of her life were spent in the home of Mrs. Meuchke.

Mrs. Wogoman was baptized into the Church of God by Elder S. C. Oliver during 1899.

There survive to mourn her loss four daughters, three grandsons, eight brothers and sisters, and other relatives and a host of sorrowing friends.

Funeral services for her were held in the Grant Funeral Home in Arkansas City, Kansas, on November 21 at 10 a. m. After this service, the body was taken to the North Star Church in Grant County, Okla., where at 2 p. m. another service was conducted with burial in the Springside Cemetery. Bro. George Waters of Newkirk, Okla., officiated at both services. Words of comfort and hope found in 1 Corinthians 15:6-19 and 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18 were the substance of both services.

NO MORE OLD TESTAMENT

Hitlerites are now "cracking down on" the Hebrew Bible. The head of the Nazi German Christians has ordered his followers to "cease all discussions of the Old Testament."

Needless to say, the loss will be theirs. Think of a generation of children growing up ignorant of Adam and Eve, of Moses and Aaron, of Ruth in the fields of Boaz, of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the picturesque kings of Israel, and the prophets who badgered them so often to follow the path of righteousness; of David and Goliath, of Solomon the wise, of Noah and his ark, of Daniel in the lion's den, and all the other ever-living figures of that wonderful Book.

Quite aside from its religious value, or even its historical value, considered merely as a collection of thrilling stories and beautiful poetry and practical wisdom, it is as wonderful literature as ever came from the mind and heart of man.

The Germans, needless to say, will get over that nonsense.

(Copied from editorial in recent issue of "The Kokomo Tribune." I am not so sure as the editor is that "the Germans will get over that nonsense," for there is to be a famine of hearing the Word of God in the last days—Amos 8:11.—D. G. Harvey.)

WOULD KEEP WORLDLINESS OUT OF CHURCH

In a splendid letter of December 6, Sr. Russell Harman, Grabill, Ind., makes some suggestions that are so timely and valuable that we pass them on to you.

"We surely enjoyed The Herald of November 21! We enjoy them all, but I think 'Christian Patience' (by Lyman Booth) was written especially for me. It is the kind of article, I think, that does much good, for we all need so much to hear sermons and read essays admonishing us in that Christian pathway wherein we all must walk.

"This is not a criticism, but it sometimes seems our writers run too much to the doctrinal. We need 'spiritual food' as well as temporal, and much more of it."

Sr. Harman tells how, living in a community where there is not a body of our own people, she attends a church of another denomination, and has observed "how they trust in God, and how their lives really show forth the fruits of the Spirit." She says there is among them a constant refraining from "worldly entertainment both in the home and in the church" by which she has been deeply impressed. "I surely feel that the less we take of the world into our church work and of our fellowship together, the greater will be our influence for God.

"It seems to me as I read the Scriptures that we should be so taught by our ministers and church leaders that when we come to God to give our lives into His service we should cast all such worldly things as the theater, card table, dance hall, and tobacco and drink habits aside, for how can we give our time and money to these things and yet know Christ and Him crucified only?"

It is surely an important question that Sr. Harman asks. The Lord is coming: in what will He find us engaged when that great event takes place? Let us accept Sr. Harman's splendid admonition in the kind spirit in which it is given.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Remember! The Restitution Herald can be sent for a full year as a Christmas present to a friend for $1.50.

It is time to get your orders in for the new Sunday school quarterly, material for which is now in the final stages of preparation.

Give "Jesus, the Light of the World" to children for Christmas. The life and teachings of the Messiah in story form. Order from the National Berean Society, Oregon, Ill. 25 cents a copy, postpaid. Information regarding other publications will be furnished on request.

"Bro. Cecil Smead of Blanchard, Mich., preached the Thanksgiving sermon at the Dutton church on the last Sunday in November. His discourse was much enjoyed. The same day there were 80 present in the Sunday school, 44 of whom were young people," writes Sr. Wm. Hanson of Caledonia, Mich.

Sr. Cora Cole, Watkins, Minn., when sending in her renewal to The Herald, adds this postscript: "They are holding good meetings here." May God continue to bless all efforts to advance His cause.

There are many ways of contributing to the Lord's work, and all of them are acceptable to Him, we are sure. Sr. Jessie M. B. Kauffman, Riverside, Calif., tells of the kindness of Bro. W. A. Reid of that place in taking a number from Riverside to Los Angeles to attend services recently. Sr. Kauffman also brings the pleasant news that Bro. Reid is already planning on attending General Conference next year.

Brethren of Virginia write of their appreciation of The Herald. The Virginia Church of God has always stood foursquare for the vital truths of the gospel, and the approval of our brethren there indicates that our writers are maintaining a satisfactory stand on fundamentals.

Remember! The Restitution Herald can be sent for a full year as a Christmas present to a friend for $1.50.

"We're enjoying every bit of The Restitution Herald," says Sr. William Hanson, Grand Rapids, Mich., "and look forward to its coming each week."

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

Published by National Bible Institution
Oregon, Illinois

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

Sr. Russell Harman, Grabill, Ind., asks for an exposition from our writers of 2 Peter 2:4 and Job 1:6. Concerning the latter text she asks, "Who was Satan?" Who will prepare brief explanations of these scriptures?

The faithfulness of the little Kokomo, Ind., church is still indicated by occasional reports from that city. Bro. O. J. Parker, chosen as pastor of the congregation in 1931, continues to fill that office faithfully and satisfactorily without salary. He is ably assisted in the work of the ministry by Bro. D. G. Harvey, who also contributes freely of his time and talent.

The editor must acknowledge again his appreciation of the support and encouragement he is receiving from many brethren in securing material for the "Abreast of the Times" department. In another column will be found an editorial sent in by Bro. D. G. Harvey, too late to appear in that department, but inserted in the news columns because of its timeliness.

The progressive and energetic pastor of the Church of the Golden Rule, Cleveland, Ohio, has encouraged some of the boys in his Sunday school to try selling Heralds on the street. It is evident the work has proved successful to some extent, for the first experimental order for papers has been repeated.

We are sometimes asked to publish responses to articles that have appeared in other publications. We cannot do this, as it would be unfair to the writers of the articles whose work is being reviewed, and as our readers have had no opportunity to study the opposite view. The vast majority of our readers request that such controversial matters be kept out of the paper entirely, as it is being used extensively for missionary work. One correspondent expresses the general thought of our people when he says, "You have been giving us a paper we are proud to show to our friends. . . . Continue the good work."

Bro. C. E. Weaver, who has been carrying on a successful work at McGintytown, Ark., writes that the Sunday school is progressing and that they hold a "singing service" each Saturday and Sunday night. They have recently been to considerable labor improving the church building. Hereafter Bro. Weaver will preach there the first Sunday of each month at 11 a. m., and also at night.

STRIVING TOGETHER

By S. J. Lindsay

IN PHILIPPIANS 1:27 we read: "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel."

Paul wrote to the Galatians (1:6): "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."

We fancy that Paul must have had a very aggravated case to handle to write so severely as he did in this last quotation. It must be, too, that this gospel of which Paul wrote must have been both plainly written and divinely given, so that tampering with it became a dangerous proceeding. We find that, according to the great commission, belief of the gospel together with baptism is the source of eternal life. That is why meddling with what is plainly written in connection with it is a dangerous thing. We have before us an article from an exchange in which an effort is made to show that there are five gospels, all of which combine to make another. In other words, it is a case of five in one, which is two better than the trinitarian idea of the Godhead.

The gospel as preached to Abraham includes all the elements that are found in the gospel to which Christ referred in the great commission, or to any other gospel mentioned in any other place in New Testament writings. They all include an inheritance which is to be eternal and the doctrine of resurrection by which mortals are to come into an everlasting inheritance. Anything short of this is confusing and blinding rather than helpful and enlightening. We are not sure but that Paul's exhortation to the Galatians is applicable in these days, and among what are called "our people." It is a strange thing that after striving together for the faith of the gospel for years, one should this late discover something radically wrong with us and seek to set us right after so many have gone to sleep in death trusting in the strength of something now said to be so poorly understood.

It is our desire to strengthen the brethren and not to weaken them. God has given us His plan of salvation, and we believe it may be easily understood by those who will seek it earnestly. We beg that this matter of stirring up confusion may cease and all strive together for the faith of the gospel.

If the gospel preached to Abraham had anything short of it as compared with that spoken of in the great commission, or if it differed from that of which Paul speaks to the Galatians, then it must come under the condemnation which Paul expresses. In fact, if any of the five divisions of the gospel, spoken of by the writer, fail in any of the elements of the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation (Rom. 1:16), then they are not the gospel. We define the gospel to be the good news of eternal salvation to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us unto the coming of our Lord, when it will be delivered to us if we are faithful. Thus Abraham understood it, and so have all understood it who know the Bible doctrine of the gospel.

We believe it was Mark Twain, or another of our great humorists, who said, "I don't care how much a man talks to me, just so he says it in a few words." It has always been our idea that the saving truth of the Bible is simple enough that any may understand who will, and that the various subjects presented by it are briefly stated in such common words that even the unschooled may get the sense by putting forth a little effort.—Selected.

A DIFFERENCE

By C. E. Randall

OFTEN it is said: "I don't think it makes any difference what one believes if he is sincere and conscientious in what he believes." To many this seems to be an unimpeachable statement, even confirmed by God's Word. As a rule, those who hold such a view seldom know what they do believe, and there is very little motive in searching for something definite if it makes no difference what one believes.

However, there is a way in which it makes little difference what we say or believe. Your thoughts or my thoughts don't affect the plain "thus saith the Lord." After all, it is what the Word says, and not what we may think or believe. We must bring our beliefs into harmony with the teachings of the Bible.

If we turn to the Word, we shall find that it makes a big difference what we believe and teach. "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Gal. 1:8. If we are not believing and teaching the gospel proclaimed by Paul, the curse of God is on us.

It is a very serious thing to speak evil of the things we understand not. Listen to Peter on this point. "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Pet. 2:12.

Some people are so sincere and conscientious in what they believe that they are willing to kill others, but surely such sincerity cannot be counted for righteousness (John 16:1, 2).—Church of God Messenger.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

VOLUME 23

OREGON, ILLINOIS, DECEMBER 19, 1933

NUMBER 12

Behold! The Star!

As shadows cast by cloud and sun
Flit o'er the summer grass,
So in Thy sight, Almighty One,
Earth's generations pass.
And as the years, an endless host,
Come swiftly pressing on,
The brightest names that earth can boast
Just glisten and are gone.

Yet doth the Star of Bethlehem shed
A luster pure and sweet;
And still it leads as once it led,
To the Messiah's feet.
O Father, may that holy star
Grow every year more bright,
Till Christ shall come from heaven afar
To fill the world with light!

WE THANK THEE, LORD

O God of love and truth and might,
We thank Thee for that glorious night
That marked our Savior's birth!
Naught but Thy power could achieve
A thing so great! O Lord receive,
We pray, the praise of earth!

'Twas by Thy grace He came and died,
Arose, ascended to Thy side,
Our Advocate to be.
'Tis by Thy grace He comes again,
To save the world from sin and pain—
From death to set us free.

O grant us, ever gracious Lord,
A faith firm-grounded in Thy Word,
And hearts serene and true.
May we press forward in the race,
Undaunted till we see His face
In glorious earth made new!

with no thought of disrespect for those whom we thus address.

This fact, however, does not justify the contraction of Christmas into Xmas. It simply suggests the original reason for making such an abbreviation of the word. Every reference to the eternal God and to Jesus Christ His only begotten Son should be made with the utmost regard for Their sacred natures. The Jews, it is said, out of respect for His divinity, would never utter the actual name of the Most High, but always referred to Him as "Lord." This rule was followed by the translators of the King James Version, who rendered the name Jehovah, simply Lord.

The English letter X is exactly similar in form to the Greek capital letter chi. This letter has the sound of the English hard ch, as in chord. Christ, when written out in full in Greek is Xristos, or, transliterated into English, Christos. With no more thought of offering disrespect to our Lord than we would experience when we write "Rev." for "Reverend," or "Hon." for "Honorable," when addressing distinguished men, the copyists of the New Testament manuscripts simplified their work by inscribing only the initial letter of Jesus' title, X, when they encountered the word that stood for the anointed One. From that ancient practice the custom has survived to our time, but only when referring to the one word, Christmas.

In the word Christmas we find another abbreviation that is to be deplored even more than the one to which objection is so frequently made. The last syllable of the word is a shortened form of the Latin word mass, a name which the Roman Catholic Church applies to the Lord's Supper, but which expresses a thought that is entirely foreign to that held by the Church of God and almost all other Protestant bodies with regard to that sacred emblematic feast.

According to the definition placed upon the mass in Roman Catholic Theology and Ritual, the mass signifies "the perpetual sacrifice of the new covenant, in which the body and blood of Jesus Christ are really and truly offered to God under the species of bread and wine." It is said to be the same sacrifice with that of Christ, and "is available for the living and the dead."

The word Christmas is thus seen to be of questionable origin and of unscriptural significance. How much better it would be if Protestants could establish the practice of simply referring to the day on which we celebrate the birth of our Savior as Christ's Day!

ABBREVIATING "CHRISTMAS"

A JUSTIFIABLE protest is voiced each year against the more or less common practice of abbreviating the word Christmas into Xmas. Those who are familiar with the ancient method of writing books, and with the Greek and Latin tongues, both of which are employed in the word Christmas, will need no explanation of this custom. They will realize that the second syllable in Christmas is always abbreviated and because of that abbreviation the word hides a far more dangerous error than is seen in the contraction Xmas, in which both syllables are shortened.

Before the days of printing, when all books were laboriously written by hand, there arose a natural and reasonable custom of abbreviating many familiar words and phrases to shorten the process of transcribing, conserve space, and thus reduce the cost of book-making. And even after printing was invented the practice was not entirely discontinued, for we still write Mr. for Mister, Mrs. and Miss for Mistress, Dr. for Doctor, Hon. for Honorable, and use many other contractions and abbreviations habitually

THEY ALSO SERVE

By Arlen Marsh

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

A LIGHT SNOW filtered down through the iron gray of the sky. Sleepy Jorgensen hunched his shoulders against the flakes that drifted between his frayed coat collar and his neck and stared disconsolately at the decorations in the window before him. Christmas, he reflected glumly, was not for him. Toys and bells and bright paper and books and clothes were the lot of those who walked in more fortunate ways of life, the ways that he had won and lost again. He looked at the stuffed Santa Claus tinkling his bell beside a pot on the corner, and sneered.

With chilling fervor the wind blew down his neck. He turned his back on the window and drifted down the street in a stream of pedestrians. Snatches of conversation struck his ears. He sneered again. The fools! Talking of going home, talking of ten cent books, talking of sweaters and suits and gloves and stockings. Talking, ever talking. And he, John Jorgensen, once master of a purse larger than the majority of theirs, was now the master of nothing but his fate and his unconquerable soul.

In front of the display of a huge department store he paused again. A placard on an evening gown of coal black velvet caught his eye. His face twisted into the semblance of a smile, a smile that might have brought a shudder to the dress designer had she seen it. "Only $169." It had been four years since he had seen a one hundred dollar bill. And now—he jingled the dime against the two nickels in his pocket and smiled on.

"Keep movin'," commanded a gruff voice in his ear. "Bum," it added gratuitously.

Sleepy flinched and pushed slowly away from the window. It was not the first time a policeman had urged him elsewhere, but the "bum" was entirely unnecessary and without the bounds of etiquette. Nevertheless, he moved.

In the shelter of a bank entrance he stopped and surveyed the crowd. Christmas! The word rang in his ears like a death knell. Giving? Bah! Give what? A voice in the passing throng seized his attention.

"It always seems to me that it's more blessed to give than to receive."

He started forward, impelled by a strong curiosity. The one he addressed was a man, tall, spare, with the marks of a pince nez on his nose.

"Could you," said Sleepy, dropping the culture that had been ground into him in better years, "spare a dime?"

"No!"

"Or you?" asked Sleepy bluntly of the man's companion.

"No!"

"It is," said Sleepy innocently, "more blessed to give than to receive."

The two pushed past him. The taller of the pair bent on him a haughty stare.

"These beggars," he proclaimed to his companion, "are getting worse. They're not only obnoxious, they're insolent! They should be sent up."

Sleepy grinned.

"Move on, you!" snapped a policeman harshly.

Two blocks down the street Sleepy turned the corner. The roar of the elevated sounded in his ears. The odor of gas smote his nostrils. Drops of water trickled down from the elevated track and turned the snow to oozing mush beneath his thin soles. He curled his toes against the wetness and walked on.

He became aware that he was hungry, and recalled the disturbing fact that he had not eaten for nearly twenty hours. Nevertheless, that twenty cents must be made to stretch as never twenty cents were stretched before. Dully, as he stepped gingerly on the sides of his feet to avoid the discomfort of wet soles, he pondered on the ease with which he once had considered twenty cents a meager tip for a shoe shine.

An el train crashed over the switches above his head. An el train, he thought uninterestedly, loaded with people carrying packages and talking about Christmas. Like the busses and the cars and the street cars and the trains. Every vehicle that moved carried people filled with the Yuletide spirit, or a mockery of it. His test of the man who thought it more (Please turn to Page Nine)

Some One to Care

Life is hard, at its best
And its pathway so rough
With full many a pitfall and snare;
And so many there are
Who have stumbled—yes, fell;
And been lost in the depths of despair,
But who might have been saved,
And been happy today
Had there only been some one to care!

Some one to offer a bit of cheer
When the battle was raging strong;
Some one to give a friendly smile
When everything seemed to be wrong;
Some one to reach out a friendly hand
When the burden was heavy to bear;
Some one to act the part of a friend—
Some one—just some one—to care!

There are those who are tired,
Who are lonely and sad,
Who are crushed by deep sorrow and care,
Who are ready to fall
By the wayside today,
Having no one their burden to share;
Just suppose it were you
Who were friendless and lone,
And with no one—just no one, to care!

No one to offer a bit of cheer
When the battle is raging strong;
No one to give a friendly smile
When everything seems to be wrong;
No one to reach out a friendly hand
When the burden's too heavy to bear;
No one to act the part of a friend—
No one—just no one—to care!

"ON EARTH PEACE"

By R. H. Judd

"Because of the mercy of our God, wherein the dayspring from on high shall visit us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and the shadow of death,—to guide our feet into the way of peace."

"PEACE on earth, good will toward men." So accustomed are we to regard these words as indicative of peace in a national and universal sense, foreshadowing the time when "nations shall not learn war any more," that we are apt to forget that there is a present meaning, meant to be understood and enjoyed before the ultimate ideal is realized.

Undoubtedly it is God's purpose that eventually "righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea," but until that time does arrive and universal peace is attained, God does not mean that His people shall be without peace during the intervening ages. That these words, "On earth peace, good will toward men," have more than one signification may be gathered from the Revised Version, and the readings given in the margins.

"On earth peace, good will toward men" is the reading of the Authorized Scriptures, and it undoubtedly carries a message to the world at large, both as to circumstances on the earth and the people living upon it. It is in line with those wonderful prophecies of Micah 4:3, Isaiah 65:17-25, and others. These inspiring predictions, so in contrast with conditions in the past and in our own times, have been, still are, and will be the theme of their song and the buoyancy of their hope. Not only of hope, but of restful assurance that the promise will be made good by the Promiser, for "he is faithful that promised" (Heb. 10:23).

The Revised Version reads, "On earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased," which gives to the message a much more restricted sense. Here we find a hint of peace differing in kind from that referred to above, and incidentally giving proof of divine authorship by thus portraying in one message, as Scripture frequently does, both a present and future fulfillment. In this rendering of the text, peace is not applied to earth conditions, but only as it affects "men in whom he is well pleased." It is God's provision for the present, pending the time of universal peace and concord (for such is the meaning of the word "peace") with God, when God shall be all and in all. The two marginal renderings are each representative of the readings we have given from the text, that of the literal Greek giving its weight to the reading of the Revised.

The message that "the dayspring from on high shall visit us, . . . to guide our feet into the way of peace" is indeed a wonderful message. Not that peace had not been known before. It had, as is well illustrated in Psalm 85:8, "I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people and to his saints," and perhaps better still in Psalm 119:165, "Great peace have they that love thy law: and nothing shall offend them." See also Proverbs 3:2; Isaiah 32:17; 48:18; and Jeremiah 33:6.

That the writers of these sublime passages had themselves known this inward peace because of their accord and concord with God one cannot doubt. Let the reader turn to the foregoing passages and he will admit that they are no formal declaration, but are the overflowings of experience. Moses (see Num. 6:26), Daniel, Isaiah, Ezekiel, and Jeremiah stand out as living testimonies in their day—as beacon lights on Israel's highway—of the peace that may even now be realized between man and his Maker.

Here seeming digression may give us helpful thought. Every once in a while in the vegetable kingdom, in the animal kingdom, and in the human realm, some outstanding attainment is achieved. Plants, seemingly without traceable reason, suddenly burst into a perfection unknown before; and specimens of unique strength and beauty are born into the various branches of the animal kingdom.

In the human sphere, men of unprecedented attainment along the varied lines of human endeavor, every now and again stand out in sharp contrast, not only to the ordinary level, but even to those who rank high in their respective callings. These are to the writer's mind examples of what may be, or of what, perhaps, should be; and they serve to give us a passing glimpse of the wonderful powers entrusted to mankind. Were every one of man's faculties thus similarly developed, what marvelous progress might be his if dedicated to God's service.

In the spiritual realm, Moses, David, Isaiah, Daniel, and others are indicators to us of what will be, to an even greater extent, the normal experience of man when righteousness shall cover the earth, for the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and confidence forever. Each of these heroes of the past has been a witness of the peace that the wicked do not know (Isa. 59:8), and they were also in some degree types and forerunners of Him whom Isaiah calls "the Prince of Peace."

Psalm 55:18, R. V., eloquently expresses the spiritual conflict that every earnest Christian knows something of. "He hath redeemed my soul in peace from the battle that was against me, for they were many that strove with me." One cannot help being impressed with the thought that it was such men as those we have named, who were earnest and active in the things of God, who knew most of this personal peace with the living God, and in spite of the terrible odds against which they labored could exclaim, "Thou hast covered my head in the day of battle" (Psa. 140:7).

The Christmas Message

By Alta King

JESUS was on His way from Judea to Galilee. He was passing through the country of Samaria. Being weary with His journey, He sat on the wall of Jacob's well near the city of Sychar, while His disciples went to buy bread. As He sat there, a woman of the city came to draw water. He knew that the social standards of His people forbade Him to speak to this woman of Samaria. The Samaritans were social and religious outcasts.

But Jesus was in close touch with human nature and its needs. A man of keen understanding and quick sympathies, He discerned at once that the woman before Him was in need of truth and wisdom and friendship. By some means He knew that her life lacked the beauty and the grace that belong to womanhood; that to her, marriage and home had been sensual living, unsanctified by love; that she had, after many marriages, thrown off even the semblance of being true to her womanhood, and was living with a man who was not her husband even in name. Knowing this about her and that she had little consciousness of or desire for any other kind of life, His heart went out to her in sympathy and desire to help, for she was one of His Father's children who, knowing His way of life as He knew it, would render a life of beauty and grace, showing forth His Father's glory.

With the ulterior motive of thus helping her, He set aside social barriers, compliance with which would have done much to win the favor of the leaders who were opposing Him, and said, "Give me to drink."

The woman, surprised that He should speak to her, looked up quickly. In His face she saw strength, courtesy, kindness, as she had heard them in His voice, and she was not accustomed to these in her loveless life and environments. Puzzled, she questioned Him, "How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans."

Jesus explained His unusual attitude toward Samaritans by saying, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water."

If man but knew the rich fullness and the satisfaction of the life that is God's gift, and that Jesus gives this life, man would seek Jesus and ask this richness of Him.

But man does not know, and the woman of Samaria did not know. The words "living water" carried to her no other meaning than natural water to quench physical thirst.

In the following heart-searching appeal Sister King presents the spiritual side of the Christmas message, the side that has to do not so much with the gospel of the kingdom that first draws men to God, as it has to do with the development of that spiritual apprehension and appreciation which comes as the result of Christian growth.

"Thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water? Art thou greater than our father Jacob?" She knew no source of water other than the source to which the "fathers" had gone, and no greater blessings than the material blessings they had provided. Her entire thought and experience were centered in the life of the physical senses. The full and easy satisfaction of physical needs and desires was her highest concept of life, as it is the highest concept of our own materialistic age.

Jesus ignored her lack of spiritual insight, her dullness of hearing, and pressed to her the value of the water He had to offer. "Whosoever drinketh of this water (the well water) shall thirst again: . . . but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into eternal life."

This awakened the woman's interest, though it was still centered in the life of the senses. "Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw."

Upon this request Jesus dropped figurative language and used words which dealt directly with life as she was living it and life as He knew it, the gift of God. With skill born of love He poured into her heart and mind that living water of which she was so ignorant. Gently, but without evasion, He made her see her life in its true light. He talked with her until He had told her all things she had ever done, and these things in His presence were ugly. As He talked, she felt the wisdom and the beauty of what He told her, and she remembered a religious teaching half forgotten, buried beneath the life of the senses. "I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things." Then Jesus revealed to her a truth which He refused to declare openly to those who, being convinced of it, would have placed Him on David's throne, to which He was born. To give an unknown, outcast woman confidence in what a stranger had told her about life, and to nourish the new life that His love and wisdom were generating in her, Jesus spoke words He refused to speak to serve personal ends.

"I that speak unto thee am he," fell with quiet assurance upon the ears of a woman of the city who had just been given a taste of a life that was as clean and refreshing as the living water of a mountain spring.

Filled with wonder at the dawning light of the new life and the revelation so simply spoken, the woman left her waterpot, which represented so much in her sensual life, and went her way into the city and said to the men, men so different from her friend at the well, "Come, see a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" The living water was becoming in her a well of water springing up into eternal life and overflowing to others. And these others, seeing the new life reflected in her voice and face as she told them about her new friend, received of the overflow and believed and received of the new life, also.

This same Jesus with this same power to know the hidden, even the unrealized, needs of your life and mine is alive today. No need is so trivial and no need is so blackened by sin that He does not handle it with victory. Unseen by the physical eye, He is working in the hearts and minds of people everywhere, speaking words of wisdom and love and strength. He is seeking and meeting men, women, and children. Sometimes He meets one through the written record of His words and deeds among men, for these are written that we might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and, believing in Him, have life through His name. Sometimes He meets one in a very personal way as the heart in great need goes out to Him for help. Sometimes He meets one through another to whom He has given living water as He met the people of Sychar through the woman whose life He had touched at the well; and later He meets such ones directly, when they say, as did the people of Sychar, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know indeed that this is the Christ, the Saviour of the world." Neither the individual nor the world can present a need of which Jesus is not the complete master.

Always since the beginning of His life among men Jesus has been and is seeking men, looking toward the fulfillment of His promise—"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Seeking and drawing men are the purpose that underlies all the activities of Jesus, whether those activities be the activities of the itinerant Teacher of Galilee or those of the world King on David's throne; and this purpose will motivate all His activities until in the dispensation of the fullness of times God shall have gathered together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him.

Without this purpose, Jesus' kingship is no different and no greater than any kingship that has ever ruled the nations. But with this purpose His kingship through His coming and personal presence and work again among men shall work complete fulfillment of His promise to draw all men to Himself. For then He will speak and work, not as the humble peasant of Galilee, scorned by men of influence and power. His healing, cleansing influence will reach not only His own people and a few scattered ones near by. But He shall "sprinkle many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider."—Isa. 52:15. His words and works shall be with authority, recognized and accepted by great and small, and shall bring peace to the individual and to the nations, through the beauty of truth and righteousness. He shall make good the message that attended His birth:

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

In the meantime He is calling us to come to Him with our needs even as His words and deeds called the needy multitudes to Him two thousand years ago.

Persuaded. The great scientist, Faraday, was asked on his deathbed, "What are your speculations?" "Speculations?" said Faraday, "I have none! I am resting on certainties. I know Him whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that He is able to guard that which I have committed unto Him." A scientist does not believe until his reason is convinced. It is not enough to persuade his heart, one must persuade his mind. Faraday knew, Faraday believed. Faraday was fully persuaded.—Amos R. Wells.

PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD WILL TO MEN

By Peter Bylsma

If we admit the sacred Fatherhood of a living God above us,
And thus profess our belief in the universal brotherhood of man;

And if we wish that God and our fellow man shall love us,
We must direct our lives in accordance with the divine plan.
Then let us not profess too much, but rather plan and labor
To alleviate the world's distress where there is urgent need,
And win the approval of a just God and the friendship of our neighbor

By dismissing from our heart and mind every thought of selfish greed.

This all-embracing Fatherhood of God makes every man our brother.

As God-fearing people, we've no moral right to violate this tie,

No moral right to engage in bloody warfare to kill each other;

Only the divine Creator should set the time and place for us to die.

When the cruel war drums beat their dread battle march no longer,

When all the battle flags on this earth of ours are forever
furled,

Then human faith in human beings will grow greater and far stronger;

Then will the Prince of Peace ascend His rightful throne to rule the world.

When that much longed for time shall come to pass, and only then,

Can we truthfully and thankfully say, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Papers on the Lord's Coming

The Day of the Lord

By F. L. Austin

THREE points Paul stood before us in the scripture we were considering (2 Thess. 2:1, 2, R. V.). He beseeches the brethren concerning

"The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and

"Our gathering together unto him;

"To the end that ye be not quickly shaken from your mind, nor yet be troubled, . . . as that the day of the Lord is just at hand."

In his former letter (1 Thess. 5:2) Paul had written that "the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." Also, in his previous visit to them he had taught (2 Thess. 2:5) concerning the Savior's coming and "the day of the Lord."

Soon after that first letter had been sent, some one had apparently tried to deceive them (2 Thess. 2:2, 3) to believe that "the day of the Lord is now present." If that were true, then both "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him" had taken place. To correct this error Paul wrote in his second epistle "with mine own hand" (3:17), beseeching them not to be troubled, and assuring them that "the day of the Lord" will not come "except there come a falling away first." He strongly inferred that if "the day of the Lord" had not come, then neither was Christ present, nor had the church been "gathered together unto him."

If "the coming of our Lord" and "our gathering together unto him" are directly connected with the arrival of "the day of the Lord," then it is proper and important that Christians study the prophecies relating to "the day of the Lord" in order to better comprehend the height and breadth and depth and richness of truth surrounding that focal point of Bible truth—the arrival of Him in whom and through whom God is yet to create all things unto their perfection.

WHAT IS IT?

"THE day of the LORD" is the day to immediately follow the present "man's day" mentioned in the margin of 1 Corinthians 4:3. Indeed it will crowd this, "man's day," out. It will be a day when, at tremendous cost to man, the LORD, Jehovah, will execute His mighty judgments against sin in all of its forms; when the ungodly will be brought to the depth of humility—or of death—and when Jehovah shall come to be extolled throughout the world.

Those specified to receive the first great shock of that day, and the benefit that follows the chastening thereof, are Judah and Israel. Those who were, and are, and are to be God's nationally chosen people above all people must be purged and cleansed for national status unto which they have been called. It was of them that Moses spoke, Deuteronomy 14:2: "The LORD hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth." It is a sad oversight of man that he no longer sees this choice of God. For God has sworn, and will not repent: "And the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all his commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honour; and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the LORD thy God, as he hath spoken."—Deut. 26:18, 19. To this end God hath promised that He will gather them (Ezek. 37:20-28) and perform a new covenant with them (Jer. 31:31-40), for He "is able to graff them in again" (Rom. 11:23). Therefore, "the day of the LORD of hosts" shall come; a day when Jehovah shall judge and rule and achieve, through Jesus Christ His Son, unto whom He "hath committed all judgment" (John 5:22).

Thoughtfully study Isaiah 2. Notice God reveals at verse 6 why He forsook "the house of Jacob." Then at verse 10 He commences a warning to them to enter into hiding "for fear of the LORD" whom they forsook (vv. 6-10) to accept a fullness of idols. He gives the reason as well as the relative time for this fear in verses 12-22: "For the day of the LORD of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, . . . and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the LORD alone shall be exalted in that day. . . In that day a man shall cast his idols . . . to the moles . . . for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

Not alone upon "the house of Jacob" is the terror of that day to be felt. "For the day of the LORD is near upon all the heathen: as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head."—Obad. 15, 16. And Joel 3:9-17 heralds God's words thus: "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, . . . assemble yourselves, and come, . . . for the day of the LORD is near in the valley of decision. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The LORD also will roar (call) out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the LORD will be the hope ("repair"—margin; "shelter"—Emphatic Bible) of his people, and the strength ("refuge"—Emph. B.) of the children of Israel." And in "the burden of Babylon which Isaiah . . . did see" in chapter 13, in verses 6-11 the Prophet cries: "Howl ye; for the day of the LORD is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty. . . . The stars . . . shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened . . . and the moon shall not . . . shine. And I will punish the world for their evil." Zechariah also prophesies, 14:1-11: "Behold, the day of the LORD cometh. . . . I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle. . . . And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives."

The foregoing is enough to point several

PLAIN BIBLE TRUTHS

"The day of the LORD" is a certain and specific time. Always, excepting in Isaiah 2:12, the phrase begins with the definite article "the." There are not different periods called "the day of the Lord," just one such day. In it

The lofty and proud will be humbled, and
The LORD alone shall be exalted;
Israel and Jerusalem will be fully punished, and The Gentiles will be brought to bow to the throne of heaven (Isa. 2:2-5);
The earth will quake;
The sun, moon, and stars will temporarily fail;
Famine and pestilence will cause all hearts to faint (Joel 1); and

Christ will come to the Mount of Olives.

Truly "the coming of the great and dreadful day of the LORD" will be a momentous time. Little wonder that the Thessalonian brethren, knowing "perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night," and possibly having been deceitfully informed that it had already so come—little wonder, I say, that they were "shaken in mind" and troubled. For the arrival of Christ near the beginning of "the day of the Lord" is in preparation for executing the mighty judgments of God upon a sinful world.

And, oh, how in these closing hours of "man's day" we mortals, church people and others, are flippantly "falling away" from God and His Word, and in united effort multiply new ways to practice sin!

Poor, wretched, godless generation! How much farther will sin's toboggan scoot us? Already our sled is beyond control! Earth's governments, as guides, become more and more helpless! Only Heaven can halt us.

But, even with Heaven's appointed King of kings arriving, and with the entering of "the day of the Lord"—even under these circumstances, Jesus revealed in Matthew 24:21 that there shall "be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world."

There is only one name under heaven through which and by which you, dear reader, and I can "escape all these things that shall come to pass" (Luke 21:36). That way is for the individual only. The nation, as such, has no way of escape. Faith in God finds the name. Faith, not fright. Faith in God moves one to place himself and his all at the feet of Him to whom God has given all power in heaven and in earth—Him whose name is Jesus.

P. S.—It is quite probable that the writer will have occasional later to refer to previous points made by citing THE HERALD page on which same may be found. THE "POOR PREACHER"

"The preacher has a hard time. If his hair is gray he is too old. If he is a young man, he hasn't had experience. If he has ten children, he has too many. If he has none, he should have and isn't setting a good example. If his wife sings in the choir she is presuming. If she doesn't she isn't interested in her husband's work. If he reads from notes, he is a bore. If he speaks extemporaneously, he isn't deep enough. If he calls on some very poor family, he is playing to the grandstand. If he calls at the homes of the rich, he is an aristocrat. Whatever he does some one could have told him how to do it better. He has a fine time living off donations which never come in and promises that never mature."—St. Louis Republic.

THY KINGDOM COME

By Alice B. Curtis

Thy kingdom come, O Lord, Thy kingdom come,
For Thy return and blissful reign we pray;
As men have prayed throughout the centuries,
That have elapsed since Thy ascension day.

Thy faithful bride still her long vigil keeps,
In an unfriendly world she waits for Thee;
She listens for Thy coming and the call
To meet her Lord and ever with Him be.

Incessantly, through all the passing years,
Creation groans beneath the weight of sin;
But all the earth shall be at rest and sing
When Jesus comes and brings the kingdom in.

In that day shall the mountains drop new wine,
And hill and valley with fair harvests smile;
Then men shall dwell in righteousness and peace,
Where sin shall nevermore their hearts defile.

O come, Messiah! take Thy rightful throne!
Soon shall the many crowns adorn Thy brow,
And on Thy thigh and vesture shall be seen
The written name before which all must bow.

O for the happy restitution times!
O for the reign throughout the thousand years!
Our hope mounts high, our hearts are jubilant,
For close at hand our Lord's return appears.

"ON EARTH PEACE"

In the New Testament the same truth holds good. Those who endured hardness for Christ's sake were the men who knew much of the peace of God "which passeth all understanding." So true was this fact in the experience of Paul that seven times in his epistles he speaks of God as "the God of peace," and many times, as in Galatians 1:3 and Ephesians 1:2, does he call our attention to the fact that God is Himself the source of peace. In Ephesians 2:14 he tells us that "he (Christ) is our peace."

Peter, too, seems to have been wonderfully conscious of the angel's message that Christ came to bring peace, for in Acts 10:36 he links both the Father and Son in this rapacious theme and tells us (see R. V. margin), "He (God) sent the word . . . preaching the gospel of peace by Jesus Christ."

Again and again do the New Testament epistles ring with the message of peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. I wonder if we realize that every time we read the name "Christ" we are reading of Him whom Isaiah called "the Prince of Peace." He has not yet been called by that name, but the very promise that He "shall be called" by that name is our God-given guarantee that the conditions that will entitle Him to it are sure to come.

The peace He gives is deep and strong,
A calm, majestic river.
It matters not the way is long,
I always have the Giver.

THEY ALSO SERVE

blessed to give than to receive had made him cynical. The apples of Sodom were not more bitter than his thoughts.

The crowds marched past. Sleepy, shabby, wet, and hungry, moved slowly on by restaurants and sandwich shops, according them no more attention than the passing crowds accorded him. It eased his hunger pangs a trifle not to see food. But nothing could prevent his smelling it.

On the next street corner he hesitated. Near by, standing beside the window of a tiny grill, was a boy, perhaps nineteen in Sleepy's judgment, which was seldom accurate about such things. The boy's lips moved slightly as he stared steadily through the window of the shop. Beside his thin coat, Sleepy's clothes seemed like a suit of armor.

Sleepy stepped forward.

"Hungry, kid?" he demanded.

The boy transferred his eyes from the grill window to the man. A transient gleam of hope faded as he swept Jorgensen with a glance, and he again presented a discouraged face to the window.

"Yeah," he said with strict candor. "Ain't eaten since las' night."

Sleepy considered briefly. The boy stared through the window. Regularly, endlessly, the crowds marched by. An odor of frying hamburger drifted from within the shop, and Sleepy stirred restlessly. He fingered the three coins in his pocket with calculating hand.

From somewhere down the street came the sudden roar of a radio above the racket of the traffic and the el. Probably, Sleepy decided without interest, it came from the radio store next door. The noise of the city dulled the sound. And Sleepy was feeling too hungry to lend close attention to such minor matters.

He rattled the dime against the two nickels and cogitated. He was hungry. The kid was hungry. Memory of a college professor who had used in nearly every sentence the expression made famous by Darwin and Darrow rushed upon him. He was the fittest. He had twenty cents. A fair meal could be obtained for twenty cents, two meals, or four, in case of dire necessity. But only one really good meal. And it was almost Christmas. Sleepy wanted to celebrate.

From the radio store sounded the Oxford accents of an announcer, cultured in his own estimation and plain dumb in the estimation of his listeners. Mechanically Sleepy heard mention of "God Shall Wipe Away All Tears" and "Caro Roma" and "sing," but he devoted no attention to them. He was hungry. He was pondering what to buy with his twenty cents.

Came a moment's lull in the racket of the traffic. Through the half silence drifted the roar of the radio.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes;
And there shall be no more death, neither shall there be any more pain."

Sleepy nodded slowly. "Um-hum," he said. His voice sounded jerkily. "Learned . . . church."

"They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more."

Sleepy scowled. An el train roared overhead. He picked up the thread of the song as the train took its noise into the distance.

"God shall wipe away all tears, shall wipe all tears from their eyes,
Neither shall there be any more sorrow,
For God shall wipe away all the tears."

The song ended. An el train crashed over the switches. A block away a siren shrieked. Sleepy stirred restlessly, scraped a foot through the wet snow. Thoughts of the church he had attended in better years filtered through him. He brushed a snowflake off his neck. He rubbed his nose.

The sound of a bass voice came from the radio. A voice, thought Sleepy, that started at the singer's boots and progressed upward to his skull.

"We three kings of Orient are; Bearing gifts, we traverse afar."

The traffic roared as the spotlight on the corner changed. Sleepy shivered. He stepped forward.

"Here, kid," he said. "Here's twenty cents. Go buy yourself a Christmas present."

He moved off.

Abreast of the Times

Rescued from the River Styx

"The dead know not any thing, . . . for the memory of them is forgotten."—Ecclesiastes 9:5.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—"I didn't know a thing until I found some one working on me," declared Byron De Fee when questioned as to how it felt to be dead. De Fee and a fellow automobile mechanic, Theodore Krause, had, according to U. S. Press report, just taken a round trip in Charon's famous boat across the River Styx.

A new medical discovery was employed to revive the two men after they had been "dead" for more than two hours, as the result of inhaling carbon monoxide gas while they were taking a nap in a passenger bus, whose motor had been kept idling to keep it warm.

The men were discovered by a Negro helper when he returned from lunch. He pulled them out of the bus and sent at once for the life-saving squad of the fire department, who rushed the men to the hospital. There the firemen and physicians worked over them for more than two hours before they observed indications of returning consciousness. "Ordinarily, it was said," declared the report of the incident, "if one hour's work is unsuccessful in cases of this kind, there is little hope."

As the firemen worked over the men with inhalators, Dr. R. G. Connor and Dr. Norvert Barwasser began injecting into their veins a solution of methylene blue, an aniline dye, a new discovery that has been found effective in reviving persons from carbon monoxide poisoning.

When asked concerning their experience beyond the curtain of death, they both responded as has been said, that there was nothing to tell. "I felt nothing," said Krause. "Didn't even know I was passing out. All I feel now is a terrible headache."

The experience of Lazarus was evidently the same. He had nothing to say of what he saw and felt after his death and before his restoration by Jesus, because in death there is neither sight nor feeling. It is said of those who enter into death that "their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." It is living again that men must look for if they would have life after death.

Protestantism Asked to Save New Deal

"Hear, all ye people; hearken, O earth, and all that therein is."—Micah 1:2.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 7.—According to newspaper reports Secretary Wallace today assumed the role of a modern Prophet Micah, whom he cited, and declared that a great religious reformation must sweep over Protestantism if the Government's New Deal is to be saved.

Addressing the session of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the largest interdenominational Protestant body in the world, the Secretary of Agriculture said that modern life is lived principally on the "biological level."

Referring to the prevalence of social drinking, he said, "I am astounded when I sense this practice as being associated with a sophisticated materialism. People accepting the 'dog eat dog' philosophical and biological level of human life of the nineteenth century have concluded that they may as well enjoy themselves while they may."

Mr. Wallace is said to have been "unsparing in his criticism of Protestantism despite the fact that he was addressing delegated representatives of nearly all of the Protestant groups of this country and Canada." (The Church of God is not a member of the federation.—Editor.) He charged that Protestantism has become materialistic.

He asserted that to readjust the world to the new conditions brought about by the machine age, so that the abundance produced may be equally distributed, is necessary. To achieve this, the Secretary continued, will require that a reformation far greater than that of Luther and Calvin must sweep over the country. "I know that the social machines set up by this Administration will break down unless they are inspired by men, who, in their hearts, catch a larger vision than the hard, driving profit motives of the past."

Jezebel's Tower Discovered

"There stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied . . . Jehu as he came."—2 Kings 9:17.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 10.—The tower of Jezreel, from the summit of which the wicked queen Jezebel was probably thrown to her death, after being buried for more than 2,000 years, has been uncovered and excavated to its foundations by an expedition headed by Dr. Kirsopp Lake, professor of history at Harvard.

The discovery was made through the calculations of the expedition's architect that one of the four corners of the citadel should lie in that place on the hillside. The tower not only gives an impressive idea of the strength and greatness of Jezebel's city, but verifies the accuracy of several Old Testament details recorded in 1 and 2 Kings.

According to the Associated Press reports of the discovery, the studies of Prof. Lake show that Jezebel's husband, Ahab, king of the ten northern tribes of Israel, maintained a trade route via his capital between India and the Mediterranean, then the world's great marts.

The Bible tells how Ahab married this wicked daughter of the king of Tyre who led practically all Israel into idolatry. Then it was that Elijah called for the contest between the prophets of Jehovah and of Baal, which resulted in the defeat and destruction of 450 of the false prophets whom Jezebel had introduced into Israel.

It is encouraging to observe in how many different ways the historical accuracy of the Bible is now being proved.

"THE PEOPLE THAT WALKED IN DARKNESS HAVE SEEN A GREAT LIGHT: THEY THAT DWELL IN THE LAND OF THE SHADOW OF DEATH, UPON THEM HATH THE LIGHT SHINED."—ISAIAH 9:2.

HOLY NIGHT

It's Christmas, sings Mary. This is her fifteenth Christmas, and it was never so beautiful before. Christmas Eve, and she is going to church. This is the way it was, just this sort of night, and I never knew it before, marvels Mary. There is even the Star! The star is only Venus, but it is very bright. But where are the angels? Mary thinks she can hear them singing. It is plainer when she shuts her eyes. It is not very cold. The air is soft and sweet, but there is no breeze. All the trees and bushes are utterly still. It is as if some one had commanded them, "Hush! Be very still, and wait."

Mary is sure that the first Christmas Eve was like this. She tries to conceive of the years between this Christmas and the first one. But she cannot, so she pretends this is really the night when the kings were following the Star toward the Child in the manger. My name is the same as His mother's, she thinks, and is glad.

She would rather stay outdoors than go in the church, because the night is so lovely. But it is lovely inside, too. There are only candles and the Christmas tree for light. Mary sings with the others the old Christmas songs. I wish we could sing like the angels did, thinks Mary, I wish I had been there to hear them.

"O holy night, the stars are brightly shining," they sing.

It is altogether lovely. Even the youngest child listens in rapt attention. Mary knows they are singing beautifully. She feels that they could not make a mistake, because it is the angel's song they sing:

"O night divine, O night when Christ was born!"

There is a tableau of the Holy Family, too. There is Mary, young and beautiful, and anxious Joseph, bending over the manger. The Child is really there, pretends Mary. She wonders what it would be like if this were the first Christmas, and Jesus had just been born a lowly babe. Would there have been frightened shepherds, and regal, riding wise men?

Some one reads the story, "And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the fields . . . And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them. . . . Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." . . . "Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east."

It is all over, and Mary goes out into the serene night again. The stars shine, bright and far away. The earth is still quiet and waiting. She wonders what it is waiting for. Perhaps for the angels to sing that He has come again. Yes, surely that must be it.

Mary knows she will not forget this Christmas. It is a beautiful moment to treasure always. If He would only come again when I can see Him, she sighs. Surely He will come again!

CHRISTMAS CAROL

The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young.
The heart of the jewel burns lustrous and fair
And its soul full of music breaks forth on the air
When the song of the angels is sung.

It is coming, old earth, it is coming tonight!
On the snowflakes which cover thy sod
The feet of the Christ child fall gentle and white,
And the voice of the Christ child tells out with delight
That mankind are the children of God.

On the sad and the lonely, the wretched and poor,
The voice of the Christ child shall fall,
And to every blind wanderer open the door
Of a hope that we dared not to dream of before,
With a sunshine of welcome for all.

The feet of the humblest may walk in the field
Where the feet of the holiest have trod.
This, this is the marvel to mortals revealed,
When the silvery trumpets of Christmas have pealed,
That mankind are the children of God.

LOOKING FORWARD

EVER since the day you tore November off the calendar and there before your eyes you saw December, all of you boys and girls have been looking forward to one certain day, a very special day. That day was—I can hear all of you say it—the birthday of the baby Jesus.

This is the season of the year when we think more about Jesus than we do at any other time, though He should be first in our thoughts at all times. Because God loved us so much, He gave us that wonderful gift, our Savior, and we want to give ourselves to those we love so dearly. We want to tell them about Jesus in song and story and deeds of loving-kindness.

Our final lesson in the life of Paul, our busy missionary, is quite appropriate for this Christmas season. For with Paul Jesus was always first. He gave his whole energy and all his talents to Jesus. His greatest joy in life was to tell others about his beloved Master, so that they would love Him, too.

Let us look at the picture of Paul as we see him in this last lesson of the quarter. Was he living in a beautiful home, surrounded by friends and loved ones? Did he have every comfort he could desire?

Something was making him very happy, for his first words are these: "Finally, my brethren, rejoice." I wonder what it was? It was no ordinary circumstance, because he used that word "rejoice" so often in the letter he was writing.

If we go back a little in our study, we will find out where Paul was when he wrote. In prison, yes, of all places! Not one of us, I'm afraid, would find much to make us happy in prison.

But the reason Paul was so happy is something like the reason you were all so happy when you saw December on the calendar. He was looking forward. And in this very letter, as well as in many other places, he tells us what it was he saw.

You know if there is some certain thing you want in life more than anything else, there are many things you must give up. If you want to be a good ball player, you know you must not smoke; you must not eat too many sweets; you must not miss practice.

If you want to excel in your studies, you must keep regular hours; you must study sometimes when other boys or girls are playing; you must be attentive in school.

Just so with Paul! He had his eye on a certain thing, and he tells us the advantages he might have had in the world, but which he gave up. In fact, he says he counted them all as nothing.

Then he tells us what it was he desired. He wanted to be among those whom Jesus would call forth from the grave at the resurrection. That was the prize toward which he worked. That was the thing to which he looked forward.

From the first of December on, and perhaps much before that, some of you I know have denied yourselves many little pleasures in order to give Father or Mother or some other loved one a nice little gift at Christmas time. And you've just been so happy doing it. It has brought you more joy than all the things you might yourself receive.

Now do you see why Paul was so happy while sacrificing so much? He was bringing happiness into the lives of those to whom he was telling the story of Jesus—more happiness than they could find in any other way. And at the same time he was bringing joy to his own heart.

How much the gospel message changed the lives of Paul's hearers! Those poor idol worshipers, praying to a god who had no ears to hear their prayers and no eyes to see their needs, learning of Jesus who loved them every one! And so it was that Paul brought happiness to them.

Now they, too, looked forward to receiving a great reward. For Paul tells us that the Savior is going to give him the prize of eternal life, and not him only, but all those also who love Him and look for Him.

Just as those other wise men looked for Him in the long, long ago, when He came as a little babe in His mother's arms, let us, too, be "wise men" looking for Him soon to come again, our Redeemer and Savior. Then it is He will bring that great prize to Paul and to us, too, if we love Him.

FOR YOUR SCRAPBOOK:

Look back over the lessons you have studied about the Apostle Paul and write the story of the one you like the best. Then tell what it was Paul expected Jesus to give him on the resurrection day. Add any picture you have of Paul and copy the song, "To the Work." I think you all know it.

LESSON 14. — December 31, 1933

THE LIFE OF PAUL

Philippians 3:1-14

Devotional Reading: Psalm 1

GOLDEN TEXT

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.—2 Timothy 4:7.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Life of Paul.

Aim: To teach the pupil that the prize held out to the Christian is more valuable than anything the world can offer.

Basic Truth: "I count anything a loss, compared to the supreme value of knowing Christ Jesus my Lord."—Phil. 3:8, Moffatt.

I. Paul the Pharisee. (Phil. 3:1-6.) No man aside from Jesus Himself has exerted a greater influence on the church than Paul. Endowed with great natural ability and having had the best educational advantages the time afforded, Paul was splendidly equipped for the work to which he was divinely called. Even his experience in persecuting the disciples of Jesus was not without its value in his development and preparation for future Christian service. Brought up under the influence of the Pharisees, the strictest sect of the Jews, he became the most zealous opponent of the Christians, thoroughly versed in all the arguments that could be advanced against them. The warnings he voices in this chapter are based on his own experience. He formerly had trusted in his Hebrew origin and in his own works of righteousness for salvation. With his conversion he discovered these things were but as filthy rags (Isa. 64:6) which must be discarded for the righteousness that comes by faith in the gospel.

II. Paul the Christian. (Phil. 3:7-14.) When his physical eyes were blinded with the light that fell upon him on the road to Damascus, the eyes of his spiritual understanding were opened to the truth of the gospel of salvation through faith. From that time forward, throughout his long eventful life, he continued to look with abhorrence upon the self-righteousness that had been his past dependence. He realized that it was not race, works, nor zealous adherence to past religious teaching that would justify and bring release from sin. No act of his own could wipe out the record of past iniquity. Nothing but faith in Christ and in the gospel of the kingdom He preached could accomplish such a miracle. Because of this understanding Paul placed a high valuation on knowing Jesus Christ and the power of His resurrection.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Repetition: Walking is a constant process of placing the one foot before the other. After the first few halting steps of the child, walking becomes a natural process, done without conscious effort. But in case the limbs are denied the right to function for a prolonged period, there must be a conscious effort made to establish the habit again.

Such was Paul's idea of the Christian life. He felt no apology for repeating the message over and over again; indeed, he felt there was safety in it for those over whom he had charge. We all recognize that words heard or read many times become a part of our active thoughts. So by the constant, daily repetition of God's Word our minds may be filled with the same thoughts that carried the apostles and prophets and even the Savior Himself over the temptations of everyday life.

There are certain sins and certain false teachings of which we must be watchful. How shall we recognize either as false if our mind is not filled with the Word of God?

The Forward March: Even as walking is a constant moving forward, so is the Christian life. We cannot be Christian and remain the same. There is a constant process of learning and overcoming. Paul calls it "reaching forth." We build our ideals around the life that is to be, and so our thoughts and our habits will be increasingly nearer the perfection for which we strive.—G. M. M.

THE GOLDEN TEXT

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."—2 Timothy 4:7.

Last Sunday's golden text fits in very nicely with this one in that after Paul had lived a life of sacrifice and never turned back nor given up, but pressed forward that he might win the prize of the high calling, one can see how he would feel that he had "fought a good fight" and realized that the race was nearly run, so he could say, "I have finished my course." What was more, he had kept the faith in ever trusting the Father and doing His bidding.

Christians and non-Christians, Paul has been a wonderful example. It would be well could we look at what he did and through him see the Father and His Son, that we may grow more like what They would have us be. Paul's strength and courage came from above, from whence ours, also, must and will come if we look to the Father for them.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Our Debt to Paul

Our debt to Paul is great. He was the special apostle to the Gentiles, and he magnified his office. His many years in prison caused him to admonish the church of God through epistles, thus leaving to us a most valuable collection of instructions and explanation of God's Word. Paul "labored more abundantly than they all." He not only left us a record of the gospel that is the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," but he emphasized the danger of believing a false gospel by placing a curse upon any who should so teach. See Galatians 1:6-9. Part of his farewell message to the elders of the Ephesian church was: "I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God."—Acts 20:26, 27.

His great devotion to God's cause has inspired many discouraged workers for Christ. When we "come short of the glory of God," we can take heart by remembering that he persecuted Christ through the church and yet obtained forgiveness through repentance, baptism, and a new life. If dishonest men take advantage of our Christian honesty, it will help us to know that Paul "suffered the loss of all things" that he might bring some to Christ.

When we find the new life hard and we feel discouraged, we can think of our special apostle as one who faced prison and death. He said: "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren."—2 Cor. 11:24-26. Last of all he died a martyr's death in Rome rather than forsake Christ. Should not his loyalty increase our faith?—H. A. S.

PRIMARY

Paul As Our Pattern

How I wish it were possible for me to talk to each boy and girl who has studied about the life of Paul. First I would ask you, "Don't you wish you could be like Paul?" Then I would ask you which part of Paul's life was the most interesting to you. Of course, we cannot do this; but won't you please tell them to your teacher?

Of course, we are not stoned or whipped now. We can worship as we please. But just the same it takes courage to tell people about Jesus when people make fun of us. Make a list of things we can do today that would help people to be Christian.

Let's take a journey, too. Let's go see that little boy or girl who never goes to Sunday school. Let's invite them to go with us. Next, we'll visit that little sick girl next door; and we'll travel on and on, doing little deeds of kindness here and there. And we need never stop on our journey.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Seasonal sickness has been evident among our people, but we are thankful that in most cases the troubles have not been serious, and improvement is shown.

The men had their monthly meeting December 9, and chose officers for 1934. They hope to enlarge their program over this present year's activity. Likewise the ladies had their monthly gathering with yearly election on December 13. These were the first gatherings held in the newly arranged rooms of the house next to the church which is rented by the Sunday school and which we call our "annex."

The pastor and wife and daughter Mildred arrived home safely December 13 after a hurried drive to Mt. Carroll, Ill., for the funeral of Bro. Wm. Frederick.

The Sunday school and Berean superintendents have been busy arranging a corps of teachers for the new year, and all looks bright for a progressive 1934.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

In spite of the absence from our number of Bro. and Sr. Railsback, whom we miss very much, attendance at our services in Los Angeles has been very good. Sr. Ida F. Orem has been spending her annual vacation in Los Angeles and Pasadena and was at the Howard home in Pasadena when death took Bro. Howard. Sr. Morgan was present recently with her sister Sr. Kellog and her husband from San Diego. Also, Bro. Reid came from Riverside with Sr. Hoag and husband; Bro. Reid gave a short report of his activities with the class at Norco which he is now conducting. That class, though not large, is ever enthusiastic, and from all indications is doing nicely. Mrs. Jessie Kauffman and Harriet E. Shepherd from Riverside and Redlands also were among those who paid recent visits to our morning services. If we could only have these dear ones with us more often what an encouragement it would be in the work for the Master.

Preparations for the Sunday school Christmas are under way under the direction of Mrs. Crundwell and MacLeod. From the long experience of these workers in such lines we know that there will be a good Sunday school program. The church services will also include special Christmas music, and a sermon theme for that Sunday: "Where History and Prophecy Meet."

A BULLETIN IDEA FOR PASTORS

The Layman Company is now putting out its titling pamphlets in four-page bulletin form, printed on two inside pages only, other two pages blank, for local material. The cost will give a saving of at least $5 per week to any pastor who uses four-page bulletins in his Sunday services. A good opportunity for five or ten weeks of tithe education without expense or special distribution. 32 subjects to choose from. Sample set, 15 cents. Prices 40 cents per 100; $3.00 per 1,000.

Please give your denomination, also please mention The Restitution Herald.

The Layman Company,
730 Rush St., Chicago, Ill.

REGARDING F. L. AUSTIN'S ARTICLES

Bro. F. L. Austin, whose splendid series of articles on the coming of the Lord is now running in The Restitution Herald, desires us to make an explanation concerning certain punctuation and capitalization he employs differently from the rule generally followed in The Herald. Hereafter we will attempt to follow the author's system more closely in both regards, and it would be well for the reader to bear this difference in capitalization in mind in order that he may grasp just the shade of meaning Bro. Austin wishes to convey. The article which appears in this issue was already in type when the request reached us; hence, the change could not be made until the next appears.

"My capitalizing Church is to attract attention to the outstanding difference between churches as commonly known and the one only real Church which Heaven knows and recognizes."

Our attention is also directed to a change of punctuation made by the proofreader in the first article (Dec. 5). A period, rather than a semicolon, should have followed after "the word 'John' near the end of the fifth line of the last paragraph, thus connecting the next sentence to the finished one; which I wanted to hark back to former sentences in the paragraph."

THE TRUTH SEEKERS' QUARTERLY

As we go to press with the latest issue of the "Truth Seekers' Quarterly," we appreciatively publish the following letter from E. S. Logan of Lakeville, Ind. Bro. Logan teaches a large class of intermediate boys and evidently finds help in our quarterly. We thank you, Bro. Logan, for your words of commendation.

"Without a doubt the N. B. I. quarterlies are the best in the world. That is a pretty large territory. But if they are the best in the United States, what other country in the world could have better? The 'Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly' is one which is not ashamed to give references for authority, rightly named Truth Seekers. Too many quarterlies which I have examined the last few years have two or three references and a printed lecture by some person who seldom refers to an authorized authority. It is surely a blessing to people who seek the truth to have a 'Truth Seekers' Quarterly.' To the people who prepare this, I hope there will sometime be showers of blessings from the One who giveth all, and to the hands which prepare the splendid 'Restitution Herald.'

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE REPORT

The Quarterly Northwestern Conference closed a three-day meeting December 3 at Felida, Wash.

One of the most interesting features of the conference was a series of talks by Sr. Railsback of Los Angeles, Calif. A chart was used to illustrate the subject, "The Two Covenants." Sr. Railsback also conducted several Bible studies and the prayer and praise service. This service was the most successful held in recent years, with everyone taking an active part selecting songs, scriptures, and giving testimonies and prayers.

It was noted that Felida and vicinity were well represented by residents who do not belong to the Church of God, but who took an active part in the Bible studies and the praise meeting.

Bro. A. W. Darby of Gresham, Ore., gave several discourses, the outstanding one being, "Witnessing for God." "The Man Child," a discourse delivered by Bro. J. C. Wilson of Lebanon, Ore., furnished an abundance of new thought for the prophetic student.

The communion service was observed on Sunday evening.

The attendance averaged 17, the lowest being 9 and the greatest 35.

A basket lunch was given in the church basement at noon on Sunday.

We are indeed glad to have had the opportunity of meeting Bro. and Sr. Railsback and of welcoming them to our homes. We enjoyed Sr. Railsback's sermons very much and hope that her meetings at Corvallis will be as successful as those at Felida.

May our gracious heavenly Father bless our faithful ministers and guide our footsteps in the straight and narrow path that leads to life everlasting, and may it be said of each of us that he never failed to help his fellow man spiritually as well as with his worldly goods.

The next quarterly conference will be held March 2, 3, 4 at Corvallis, the first service to be held Friday at 11:00 a. m.

Gladys Barber, Secretary.

OREGON AND WASHINGTON

Bro. and Sr. Railsback of Los Angeles, Calif., arrived in Corvallis, Ore., late in the afternoon of Thanksgiving Day. They attended Bible study at the local Church of God and stayed overnight. Leaving early Friday morning, they traveled north to Felida, Wash., where Sr. Railsback was a speaker at the Quarterly Northwestern Conference. At the close of the meetings Bro. and Sr. Railsback motored north, where visits with friends and relatives will be made at Puyallup, Seattle, and other points. On the return trip Sr. Railsback will conduct a series of meetings at the Corvallis Church of God. This is planned to begin on December 17.

Hal Gross, who left recently for Orland, Calif., to look over business prospects, expects to return to Corvallis next week. It has not been learned whether Mr. and Mrs. Gross will move to California. Sr. Gross was formerly Sr. Evelyn Kerr and is a teacher of the junior Sunday school class.

Berean books have been received by the local church. They will be used either in place of the present quarterlies or for the evening Bible study.

The annual church meeting will be held Sunday, Dec. 17, at the church.

Gladys Barber.

NELSON EUGENE HOWARD

Nelson Eugene Howard was born April 21, 1859, at Center, Rock County, Wis., where he lived with his parents for a time, until they moved to Jefferson, Iowa. In 1878 he moved to Sabetha, Kan., where he was soon followed by his parents. At that place he was married September 2, 1880, to Mary Ellen Hall. To this marriage were born three sons, two of whom, Milo Edward and Milton R., preceded their father in death. Two sisters had earlier gone the way of all flesh. He, then, is survived by his wife and their youngest son, Frank L.; and two brothers: Roy M. of Hettinger, N. D.; and Truman S. of Morrill, Kan. For approximately 50 years they lived in and near Morrill: 25 years on a farm near that town, and 25 years in retirement in the town. For the last two years they have been visiting with their son in southern California, where Bro. Howard was living at the time of his death. He was baptized in 1898 by Eld. G. M. Myers, and continued the good fight of faith until he fell asleep in Jesus November 29, 1933. Interment is to be made in Morrill. Norman John MacLeod.

ABSALOM HOOVER

Absalom Hoover, who was born and lived practically all his life along the shore of Lake Erie near Selkirk, where he farmed and conducted a fishing business, has fallen asleep (we trust in Jesus) in his 86th year.

In early life he married Cecilia Walker (who fell asleep a year and a half ago). Sixty years they traveled the journey of life together. Two sons were born to them: Jonah, the younger, died several years ago, leaving a widow and three children; Abram and wife and three children, with a host of relatives and friends, are left to mourn.

Bro. and Sr. Hoover came into the faith as we know it many years ago. A Bro. Warner of Otterville, Ont., came their way selling matches and medicine and preaching. They studied into the truth and came to believe and obey, and they endeavored to live it thereafter. They will be remembered for their pious and loving-kindness. May the dear Lord call them forth in that first resurrection.

Funeral services for Bro. Hoover were held at the home of his son at Port Dover, with interment in Waterford Cemetery. Several from the Ponthill Church of God attended.

J. E. Lent.

WILLIAM W. FREDERICK

Wm. Frederick was born in Carroll County, Ill., February 23, 1865, the son of Adam and Katherine Frederick. He was one of eleven children, only one of which now survives.

On October 17, 1888, he was married to Amanda Robinson, who has been his faithful companion through the years, and who survives to mourn his loss. Four children were born to this union. One of these died in infancy, but the other three are: Mrs. Gertie May Slick, Savanna, Ill.; Mrs. Laura Jane Devine, Breckenridge, Minn.; Mrs. Mildred Lucille Crofton, Mt. Carroll.

During the past three years Mr. Frederick's health had failed rapidly, which, coupled with other discouragements, brought his death on Thursday, Dec. 7.

Mr. Frederick's father helped to build the Union Church north of Mt. Carroll many years ago, and then later Mr. Frederick himself helped to build the Renner Church of God, commonly called among our people the "Plum River Church." He was baptized in 1889, and his faith in God and hope of the resurrection remained strong to the end.

Funeral services were conducted from the late home and the M. E. Church in Mt. Carroll on December 11, and he was laid to rest in the cemetery near by.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

BAPTISM—

by S. J. Lindsay

This is a treatise on the significance, importance, and mode of baptism by one of the most able Bible teachers. The subject is presented in an interesting and logical manner, setting forth the biblical truth that baptism by immersion in water, following a definite belief in the gospel, is essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Sr. Gilbert Bottolfs, Hammond, La., writes, "Words cannot express how thankful we are for our dear paper. May the Lord bless you one and all is my prayer."

The Christmas program of the Oregon, Ill., church will be given on Thursday night of this week, and that of the Rockford, Ill., church on Saturday night.

The Restitution Herald and its force of workers extend to our readers a joyful Christmas greeting, and wish for them every success during the new year.

In ordering The Herald sent to a friend as a Christmas present, Sr. J. E. Wilson, Archie, Mo., says, "I could think of no Christmas present that would be any better." May God help us to keep our paper worthy of its great purpose.

Sr. Conway, whose husband was for many years an able defender of the truth, is spending the winter with her daughter, Mrs. Maybelle E. Morgan, 7101 Cimarron St., Los Angeles, Calif.

Mrs. Nettie Claussen, wife of Bro. S. S. Claussen, is in the hospital at Dixon, Ill., where she will soon undergo a serious operation. Sr. Claussen has been a faithful member of the Oregon church for several years, and the prayers of the congregation arise to God on her behalf.

We are glad to report that Sr. Mary Woodward is about the house daily, feeling fairly well. There is, however, one noticeable difference: her energy and strength are soon and easily exhausted. She seems to be well for one of her age as long as she does not overtax her strength. She may be addressed at 5439 Ohio St., Austin Sta., Chicago, Ill.

DO WE NEED MIRACLES TODAY?

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

"A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas."—Matthew 16:4.

JESUS went about all Galilee teaching and preaching the good news of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people. He made the blind to see, the deaf to hear, and the lame to walk. He stilled the waves and walked on the sea. His fame went throughout the whole country. Men followed Him. He sent them to proclaim, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Multitudes followed Him. He taught them; He healed them; He fed them. His miracles proved that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, for the kingdom conditions prevailed.

His ministry was comparatively short, three brief years, possibly only one or two. His enemies, the Jewish religious leaders, became more antagonistic. They tried to catch Him with His every word and deed, but they feared the multitude.

Finally on the night before the Passover Jesus gave Himself over to His enemies. He was tried, convicted, and crucified as a criminal. His work was done. He left nothing written with pen upon parchment, yet He left a multitude upon whose minds He had written. He left a multitude that had been impressed with the words He had spoken and the deeds He had done.

Jesus the Son of God had cleansed the lepers, raised the dead, and performed many other miracles; but none were so great as the miracle of His influence upon men. Meditate for a moment on what our history would be had it not been for the Christ and His influence. Visualize our nation without His first advent. There would have been no Pilgrims, the fathers of our nation would have been gold hunters and fortune seekers instead of home-loving, God-fearing men. Our national principles may have been lower, or we may never have existed as a great nation and would only have been unadvanced heathen.

Let us look for a moment upon our individual lives. If Jesus had not come, the love and kindness in our hearts may not have been there. Indeed, the influence of Jesus on the whole world has been very great. It is by far the greatest of miracles wrought by divine power.

And now do we need miracles to prove God further? No! The effect that the Christ left upon men is full proof that there is a God, that He sent His Son Jesus, and that His Spirit and power are still here. But let us not confuse the miracles that accompanied the proclamation of the impending kingdom of heaven with the miracle of the divine answer to prayer that is promised to us today. God answers prayer. He always has, and He always will answer the prayer of faith. Jesus promised the answer to prayer, and its power has no limits, but "according to your faith be it unto you." If you pray with the faith that Jesus required, can you not surely expect an answer? I mean an affirmative answer as He promised. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15:7. Again, "Verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith. Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."—Mark 11:23, 24.

The question is not, Did Jesus really mean this promise to me in these days? but the question is this: Do I have faith? If there are miracles today being performed by God-fearing Christians because they have faith and do not doubt in their heart when they pray, who am I to say it is false just because I do not have that faith? Friend, are you sick? "Call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over (you), anointing (you) with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise (you) up; and if (you) have committed sins, they shall be forgiven (you)."—James 5:14, 15. And you, elders, go and pray for that one when you are called. Believe, and do not doubt in your heart that the Lord will do as He has promised. He has made those promises to whomsoever, and that means you and me, my beloved brother and sister.

To me, every answer of prayer is a supernatural operation by divine power unless the answer is so inevitable that it would naturally have come without God's having heard. To some people the answer of prayer may come by the power of suggestion, to some it is the result of will power, to some it may be the power of animal magnetism, but to me God answers prayer. It may be true that apparent miracles are performed by the powers of carnal men; but when one in Christ prays with faith, it is God's power that brings the answer.

Do we need miracles today? No! We are not a people seeking a sign. We know the Bible is true, we know God is faithful, and we know that His blessed Son Jesus is coming back to this earth soon. We have the promise of God's power to use it for His glory. We have the ever blessed privilege of prayer. Let us pray more, for the sick, for the afflicted, the unsaved, and for our beloved brethren.

LAND IMPROVEMENTS IN PALESTINE

A WRITER in Annals reports 325,000 acres of land in Palestine in Jewish hands, of which 212,500 acres have been acquired during the past ten years. He further adds that various Jewish bodies have spent one and a half million dollars and will spend at least another half million in reclaiming swamps and ameliorating land of the present holdings. Another million and a half dollars have been spent for water supplies, for drinking purposes, and irrigation. The total investment by public Jewish bodies, he states, in amelioration, draining, afforestation, and construction of roads is about five million dollars.—Sel.

A Voice of the Past

By D. G. Harvey

AS WE approach the close of the year of 1933, as we forget the sorrows and remember the joys, it is well to review those past events of our lives. Perhaps we have made many mistakes in our decisions. We are but mortal creatures of the dust of the earth, "liable to err, and go astray."

As we plan the work of the new year, we feel the need of advice of one in whom we all have great confidence. But where are we able to find such a man today?

Oh, for a man like the beloved Apostle Paul! If he were living today, surely he would write letters to the church as he did of old, letters of comfort, of encouragement. We today need such letters. But what would Paul write today?

As we consider the question, let us call to mind some of the words of the greatest writer of the gospel of Christ. Observe how his words, written almost two thousand years ago, still ring true when applied to the church of God even at the close of the year of 1933.

Then let us consider the following words of Paul as a letter to the church of God today from the great teacher of the Gentiles.

"Paul, called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours: grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; that in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of

In submitting this compilation of texts the writer stated it was his aim "to show the need of harmony in teaching during the coming year, and that we should avoid strife over different views."

His Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: for he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour. Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law."

"And the things which thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also. Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier."

"Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."—1 Samuel 7:12.

A NEW YEAR'S PRAYER

Gracious Father, ever dear,
Unto Thee we would draw near,
As we see a glad new year
Dawn by Thy grace.
Keep us ever close to Thee,
That from sin we may be free,
And at last in glory see
Thine own dear face.

When our blessed Lord appears,
Ush'ring in eternal years,
In a world made free from tears,
O may we meet!
Lord, keep us faithful then each day
In all things we do and say,
That we may our treasures lay
At Jesus' feet.

"HE GOETH BEFORE YOU"

THE JOYS and the sorrows, the success and the failure, of another year have faded into the distance, and a new era of opportunity is opening before us. The year 1933 was a period of wonderful blessing for the Church of God in many parts of the country. It witnessed an unusual number of men and women confess faith in the gospel of Christ and ask for baptism into His saving name. It saw new fields of activity opened up, one new state conference organized, and several old congregations revitalized through additions made to their membership by baptism.

In spite of the hand of depression that has rested so heavily upon us all during the year, most of our local congregations report increased interest in all branches of their work, larger attendance in both church services and Sunday school, and a higher spiritual tone throughout.

Several of our younger ministers have done especially well in their various fields, and their congregations are deeply appreciative of their efforts. Difficulties and problems have of course arisen to test the faith and wisdom of our leaders, young and old. But these have largely been met successfully, and in the end resulted in good to the organizations affected.

As far as the General Conference and the National Bible Institution are concerned, they find themselves, by the wonderful blessing of God, much more favorably situated than was the case a year ago. Splendid progress has been made in meeting obligations contracted in the past, and no new financial responsibilities have been assumed. As the brethren continue to come to the support of our united effort, we will, with continued watchfulness and economy and the Father's further favor, finish our long and difficult struggle with the depression successfully.

All these things, local and general, taken into consideration, we close the books of the year with a deepened sense of God's goodness to us, with a stronger faith in the eventual success of our great effort, and with a firmer conviction that Jehovah is indeed working with His people for the accomplishment of His own great purposes in the world.

As we look into the future, we do so without fear, and apply to ourselves the hope-building words of the angel who sat upon the stone before our Savior's empty tomb: "Fear not ye: for I know ye seek Jesus. . . Behold, he goeth before you . . . There shall ye see him!" With our Lord before us, shedding the light of His presence on the way, why should we fear? We'll see Him at the end of the road!

Whatever the new year may hold in store for the Church of God and its people, we can face it without anxious forebodings, for we feel that not only is the Lord Jesus just ahead, preparing the road for our coming, but the eternal God Himself is leading us on in His service. When Israel stood on the threshold of the Promised Land, the land of prosperity and spiritual achievement, they were altogether human, just as we are! They were afraid to turn back—fearful to go forward.

But God sent them an assuring message by Moses, and said, "The Lord, he it is that doth go before thee; he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed."—Deut. 31:8.

May we therefore continue on in our service for God and man, humbly striving to do God's work in God's way. Not seeking our own glory or our own advancement, but the glory of the Father and of His Son, and the advancement of the blessed work He has placed in our hands.

We realize the vastness of our task, as did David when he contemplated the building of a temple for the worship of God. "The work is great" in which we are engaged, because it "is not for man, but for the Lord God"; but we do not fear, He will be our Helper to the end.

THE Gate of the Dead

By M. W. Alldridge

DURING this present age God is calling a people to Himself by the preaching of the gospel, and this people is called for a special purpose: the Lord gives them this title: "kings and priests unto God and Christ," and their mission is to reign with Christ a thousand years. That would take them to the end of this dispensation, or age. He gave them the same title that was offered the children of Israel if they were obedient and faithful. Exodus 19:5: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel."

Now, in order to attain to that exalted position, they must stand the tests and the trials that were put upon them in the way as they journeyed through life and must be obedient believers of that gospel or good news of the kingdom that was promised them; that same kingdom that was overturned in Zedekiah's reign and that was the identical kingdom that was called "the kingdom of the Lord" in the day when Solomon sat upon its throne; the same kingdom that Amos prophesied concerning in the ninth chapter of his prophecy, when he said concerning that same kingdom, which was David's kingdom, "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old." And besides this He added this promise to the children of Israel: "And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

Now can you wonder that the disciples of Jesus asked Him the question in Acts 1:6, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" With such a promise from God, how could they help looking for and expecting the restoration of their kingdom? And just so long as they believe in God or have any confidence in His Word, they will continue to look for it. for God is not a man that he should lie: neither is he that he should repent: neither is he that he should change: neither is his shadow like the shadow of man: neither is he as we are, that he should be angry, or jealous, or quarrelsome. 1 Tim. 2:9—surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil."—Gen. 3:4, 5.

My friend, how long would you employ a man who deliberately told you lies and virtually called you a liar to your face?

Suppose your employer posted a notice to this effect: "Any employee found guilty of wilfully violating any of the rules of this establishment will be instantly dismissed, and no conciliatory measures will be considered."—Psalm 116:11.

Suppose a fellow employee should remark to you, "The boss is easy. That notice is to scare you; it does not mean what it says."

How much confidence in the integrity of your "boss" would you have? You would even doubt, probably, whether he would pay your wages.

Read Isaiah 55:11 and 45:23. If God were like you and me and all the sons of men, who change our thoughts and purposes toward each other, how long could you have confidence in Him who might change His thought towards you because of sin at any time? Do you think Paul believed these words when he wrote them? "For the wages of sin is death." Can God be true, and fail in His obligation to you, viz., pay you your just wages which you have earned?

Paul says also, "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Very well, if God fails to pay you your wages—death, how can you place confidence in Him that He will bestow His free gift—eternal life—upon you if you comply with His requirements? And that is to believe and obey His Word which has gone forth.

Surely you believe that Moses was one of the best of men, for God highly honored his memory by revealing in vision him and the Prophet Elijah upon the mount of transfiguration. See Matthew 17:1-9. Yet we read where God has been keeping him all these centuries. Deuteronomy 31:16: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers."

If you look in the margin, it reads, "Hebrew, Lie down." So if Moses is in the spirit land, then he cannot be active, for God said with his fathers he would be lying down, or as you and I do when we fall asleep.

Listen to what dear old Job, whose biography Thomas Carlyle said is the most wonderful book ever written, "So man lieth down (just what God told Moses), and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14:10-13.

Job expected some day God would raise him from the dead. In the meantime he realized that if he fell asleep or died he would need a bed and a home in which to retire. So here it is: "If I wait, the grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness."—Job 17:13.

I could quote many scriptures, but hear of Stephen, who saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. "And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep."—Acts 7:60.

I love to hear the children sing, "Dare to Be a Daniel." Well, we all want to live like him and at last die in the same faith, hope, and love he did. An angel, who stands in the presence of God, told him, "But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."—Dan. 12:13.

The two men who were asphyxiated said they remembered nothing while in that condition.

Somebody may say, "They were not actually dead."

Well, my friend, suppose you try the experiment. Put a bandage over your mouth and a clamp upon your nostrils for two hours, until your heart stops beating and you are pronounced dead. If your soul is alive during this period, why is it not conscious? "Oh," you say, "it needs the body to function."

Amen, my friend, at last we agree. God says all souls are Mine, and the soul that sinneth shall die.

I want you to read Isaiah 53, the whole chapter, and note well what Jesus experienced at death, especially as described in verses 9 and 10. If, then, it was Jesus' soul that died, please tell me what it was God raised from the dead?

We begin in Genesis with death and keep company with it all through the 66 books.

It seems that a great white throne is to be set up at some time according to Revelation 20:11-15. Now please notice it says, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God."

Now the question arises, Where do these dead come from? Well, listen and believe it, friend, for it is true, and your common sense confirms it. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (margin, "the grave") delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works."

So, my friend, when you die, if the Lord tarries, then you, like all others, will fall asleep and remember nothing more until your eyes open upon awaking out of sleep, whether that sleep be of short or long duration.

(The item "Rescued from the River Styx" to which Bro. Alldridge refers was published on page 10 of the last issue of this paper, and was contributed by him to that page.—Ed.)

A BACKWOODS preacher was asked by his board of ex-aminers: "How would you prove the divinity of Jesus Christ?" He paused and then suddenly exclaimed: "Why, He saved me!" Overwhelming and triumphant reply! "The Son quickeneth whom he will" (John 5:21); and if He has quickened me, He is the everlasting Son.—Selected.

A FIVE HUNDRED FOOT VERSE

ONE of the shortest but most powerful sermons of all time is preached by whitewashed rocks which extend nearly five hundred feet across a hillside near Arkansas City, Kansas. The brief line of Scripture reads, "Christ died for the ungodly." It is written in letters of rock sixteen feet high and whitened, so that the message can be read for miles. It took Fred T. Horton seven months to build the sermon, working after office hours. He has rebuilt the letters three times in thirty years. Mr. Horton is a train dispatcher for the Santa Fe Railroad. From his hillside pulpit he has done a great work.—Selected.

THE GOSPEL

By M. W. Perrine

DURING this present age God is calling a people to Himself by the preaching of the gospel, and this people is called for a special purpose: the Lord gives them this title: "kings and priests unto God and Christ," and their mission is to reign with Christ a thousand years. That would take them to the end of this dispensation, or age. He gave them the same title that was offered the children of Israel if they were obedient and faithful. Exodus 19:5: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel."

Now, in order to attain to that exalted position, they must stand the tests and the trials that were put upon them in the way as they journeyed through life and must be obedient believers of that gospel or good news of the kingdom that was promised them; that same kingdom that was overturned in Zedekiah's reign and that was the identical kingdom that was called "the kingdom of the Lord" in the day when Solomon sat upon its throne; the same kingdom that Amos prophesied concerning in the ninth chapter of his prophecy, when he said concerning that same kingdom, which was David's kingdom, "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old." And besides this He added this promise to the children of Israel: "And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

Now can you wonder that the disciples of Jesus asked Him the question in Acts 1:6, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" With such a promise from God, how could they help looking for and expecting the restoration of their kingdom? And just so long as they believe in God or have any confidence in His Word, they will continue to look for it, for God is not a man that He should lie, nor the son of man that He should repent (1 Sam. 15:29).

Now the restoration of this same kingdom is the good news that Jesus and His disciples preached to Israel during His whole ministry of over three years unto His crucifixion, and that, after His resurrection, He sent out to be preached in all the world; the same good news of which Paul said in Hebrews 2:1, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?" The same gospel that Paul said was the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believed it.

Jesus said in John 3:19, "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light." Jesus said, "I am the light of the world," and He disseminated that light by preaching the gospel, and that gospel is the good news of the kingdom of God. And yet, when we make that assertion, people that call themselves Christian pooh! pooh! at the idea that David's kingdom, called God's kingdom, has anything to do with our salvation, while that is the very thing that constitutes the gospel.

With the average Christian, so-called, Christ constitutes the whole of the gospel, while the Apostle to the Gentiles gives to Jesus the office and position of head of the body, and these together constitute only the ruling element in the kingdom of God; while it takes many more different elements to form a complete kingdom that is to rule the world in righteousness as set forth in Solomon's kingdom, which was given to us as a type of Christ's rule of righteousness and peace and good will toward all mankind. The kingdom was to cover all the land that was promised to Abraham, and was to extend from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

Hear the song of the redeemed ones, the first fruits unto God and the Lamb, as they sang it in their place of refuge; the company that constituted the bride, the Lamb's wife: "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."

Jesus is the head, and, as Paul says, the chief corner stone in the structure of the kingdom; yet He doesn't by any means constitute the whole kingdom. Through Him the saints are exalted to their high position in the kingdom of God. Then a place must be provided and prepared, and that on the earth, for the saints declare, "We shall reign on the earth," and since Abraham was promised the earth for an everlasting possession and Stephen said he had not received so much as to set his foot on, and since it is Abraham's seed that are to be heirs of the promise, why shouldn't we conclude that the land promised to him and which everybody understands is the Holy Land is the nucleus which is to expand and fill the whole earth?

"Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; Amen, and Amen. The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended."

Papers on the Lord's Coming

By F. L. Austin

IT SEEMS clear from scriptures cited in former articles that the coming of Christ "the second time, without sin, unto salvation," is to be in connection with "the day of the Lord." "As that the day of the Lord is now present" (Revised Version), is the way Paul reasons in 2 Thessalonians 2:1, 2, to correct the "brethren" of their erroneous fear that "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" had taken place, as also had "our gathering together unto him." Zechariah, speaking of "the day of the LORD" (14:1-4), prophesies: "His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives," thus definitely locating that event in "the day of the LORD."

Keeping in mind this fact that is so important to a thorough study of the coming of Christ, namely, that His return has to do with the unlimited tasks of "the day of the LORD," let us deviate a little at this Christmas time and consider some things concerning

THE ARRIVAL OF CHRIST

TRUE, the coming of Christ will be a great and momentous event. It will not, however, be an event like an evening of fireworks or like an ornate street parade: a show for a brief hour and then gone, no more to return. A larger study of the Scriptures almost entirely dispels such an idea. As an event Christ's coming in glory will be both beautiful and amazing. But its great meaning to God and man lies in the fact that His coming will be the signal to the whole wide world that a new day with a veritable new deal shall have dawned—a day that will continue until the millennium shall be reached, then on through it for His reign of restitution, and continue still on through the great judgment period extending to the end of the present heavens and earth. His coming will be to thoroughly fit and prepare every nook and cranny of this old sin-cursed world for another and still greater change, namely, the change to the new heavens and the new earth. The coming of Christ means a new day for man. A day when every "racket" of sin will be met and destroyed. It means a new order, with new ideals. It means a vanishing of sin and a fulling of righteousness. It means the humiliation of man and the exaltation of God.

THE BORN SAVIOR REENTERS

THE birth of Jesus was an event. The witnesses were the angels and the roomers at the inn. But had His first coming ceased with the event that coming would have meant little. Instead, that advent was merely commenced by His birth. Its presence continued till His ascension.

Now, very soon, He is about to reenter and to engage to finish "all that (He then) began both to do and teach" (Acts 1:1).

At His first advent the angels announced His arrival; the shepherds listened, and hastened to see; the wise men followed the star—saw, worshiped, and gave gifts. Later, distant points heard of Him. These things did not all occur in an instant. They followed along one after another.

So also, at His reentering there will be development, progress. He "himself shall descend from heaven with a shout." The Greek word here for "shout" means "command"; "summons"; a "signal shout that summons and assembles all at once" (Crit. Lex.). Two things here may well be noticed:

First, He then will have certain authority—for He will "command." He also will have strange, mysterious power—for He will "catch," or "snatch," them away from earth's power to the air. And,

Second, at that time, He must have been authorized by God to take those sleeping ones away from "him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. 2:14); and He must also at that time have the God-given right to take the living ones away from the authorities of men. Christ must at that time have been given authority to proceed to subdue the evil of man's way, even to subdue the authority which God, for a time, settled upon man. It must be the dawning of "the day of the Lord."

This first witnessing of the coming of the Lord will be by the Church—God's people chosen out through Abraham and Christ. Not merely a portion of those of the churches of Thessalonica and elsewhere, but of the Church as known and approved by God—without the omission of one.

Other groups in due and orderly sequence receive convincing evidences of His arrival, some after enduring heart-rending tribulation resulting from man's stubborn resistance against God and His Son. Finally, "shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."—Matt. 24:30. The beast of Revelation 19:11-21 will perish; a resurrection will follow (Rev. 20:4); the reign of "a thousand years" will proceed, witnessing early the gathering before Him of all nations in accordance with Matthew 25:31.

While at Christmas our minds joyously hark back to the Bethlehem Babe, may they also leap forward to the reentered Lord, radiating from His throne of glory worldwide righteousness blooming ever more fragrantly unto the fullness of God's peace.

Do You Read Your Bible?

THE army cannot win victories without ammunition; the engine cannot pull the train upgrade without fuel; neither can you and I live the victorious life without giving the Bible its proper place in our daily program. When an Eastern ruler asked Queen Victoria the secret of England's success, that noble Englishwoman laid her hand reverently on the Bible, saying, "That Book is the secret of England's success." And it is the secret of all true success of men and of nations. But that the Bible may do its appointed work, it must be studied with prayer, until Jesus becomes a blessed, bright reality.

"The whole Bible is a revelation of the glory of God in Christ. Received, believed, obeyed, it is the great instrumentality in the transformation of character. It is the grand stimulus, the constraining force, that quickens the physical, mental, and spiritual powers, and directs the life into right channels.

"The reason why the youth, and even those of mature years, are so easily led into temptation and sin, is that they do not study the Word of God, and meditate upon it, as they should. The lack of firm, decided will power, which is manifested in life and character, results from neglect of the sacred instruction of God's Word. They do not by earnest effort direct the mind to that which would inspire pure, holy thought, and divert it from that which is impure and untrue. There are few who choose the better part, who sit at the feet of Jesus, as did Mary, to learn of the divine Teacher. Few treasure His words in the heart, and practice them in the life.

"The truths of the Bible, received, will uplift mind and soul. If the Word of God were appreciated as it should be, both young and old would possess an inward rectitude, a strength of principle, that would enable them to resist temptation."

That "if" in the previous paragraph is the barrier between you and me and the victorious life we long to live; for I feel sure that R. F. Horton is right in saying, "There is no greater hindrance in our day to a full, triumphant Christian experience than the depreciation of Holy Scripture."

"But I understood that prayer was the secret of the victorious life," you say. So it is. But one side of prayer is Bible study, and one side of Bible study is prayer. You cannot separate the two. There can be no effectual praying while our Bibles lie unused; there can be no Bible study with transforming power in it, when our lips and hearts have no time for prayer. "But how can I ever find time for Bible study and prayer?" you ask, with a note of despair in your voice. That is a hard question to answer; yet there is a way, and we shall find it if we seek for it with all our hearts.

WHY JENNY LIND GAVE UP THE STAGE

ONE day, Jenny Lind was sitting on the seashore. In her lap lay an open Bible. Now she would gaze at its pages, now at the glorious sun sinking into the restless deep. A friend stepped up to her. He knew she had left the stage; and having wondered why she had dropped out when she had the world at her feet, he decided to ask her. She looked at him steadily, as she said quietly but with a world of meaning behind her words: "How could I do otherwise when I realized every day I was losing my appreciation of that"—pointing to the sunset—"and my love for this?"—laying her hand tenderly on the Book of books.

"They read the Journal and the News,
The Green Book and the Red;
They kept the serials of the month
Securely in their head;
They went through books both old and new,
Best sellers, too, they thought;
They read the jokes and studied styles;
No item went for naught.

"They read the sporting page; they knew
Each athlete by his name;
They read of baseball, football, golf,
Familiar with each game;
They looked the funny paper through;
They watched the mails to seize
The magazine they liked the best,
Whose columns most did please.

"But in their home there was a book
Whose pages never turned,
Whose messages of truth and hope
Were still by them unlearned—
The Book that tells of Him who came
To teach that we might know
The beauty of a sinless life,
Lived here so long ago.

"What pity 'tis they do not know
This Man of Galilee,
Who healed the lame, the blind, the deaf,
Beside the sapphire sea!
And still they read and laugh and cry
O'er stories of the hour,
And let the Book, dust-covered, lie
Unopened in its power."

But perhaps it is not reading other things that is keeping you from discovering the Bible. Perhaps you just can't get interested in it. Well, if you are not interested in the Book, if you do not love it, there is only one explanation—you do not know it. You have not been drinking deeply enough of its living waters to wash the dust of common things out of your throat. Drink deeply, and you will long for it “as the hart panteth after the water brooks.” Drink deeply, and you will seek it as the desert traveler seeks the cooling spring.

Friends, there is a way to discover the Bible; there is a way to find time for it. Jenny Lind found it. It was no small price she had to pay. But she paid it; and victory came with her choice to give the Bible preference to fame. We, too, must learn to give it preference to that which is keeping us from studying it as we should, for “the one never-failing method of living the victorious life is daily study of the Bible,—study, not hasty reading; daily, not at fitful intervals.” And the study, of course, must be with prayer and faith and a sincere desire to know the will of God in order to obey.

“But,” you say, “I do enjoy the Bible. I long for time to read it. That is my problem. How shall I solve it?” Many sympathize with you. It is difficult to find time. There are so many duties that must have attention! The day is short, the hours are full. And when night comes, the willing spirit finds the flesh too weary for study. You know how it is.

My friend, I know not how to solve your problem, but God does; and just as He helped Jenny Lind to solve hers, so will He lead you to the solution of yours, if you can truly say, “Father, take out of my life everything, however precious it is to me, that is hindering my taking time for Thy sacred Word.” It must have been hard for Jenny Lind to give up her career on the stage; and it will probably not be easy to readjust your life program so as to make room for the Bible. But it will be worth while.

Pick up the neglected Book! There is still hidden in it the same transforming power that has wrought miracles in the lives of men and women. It is still a proclamation of liberty from sin to those who really discover it. Do not take my word alone for it; take the testimonials of the host of witnesses that speak to us from every clime and age. But most of all, “taste and see that the Lord is good.” Remember, the Master who prayed, “Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth,” gives us this promise, which cannot fail: “Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.”

Free? Yes, free from “the sin which doth so easily beset us”; free from that corrosive worry which hangs over us; free from that feeling which gnaws at our heart when our neighbor passes us in a limousine while we must trudge along through the dust; free from that stinging word, that uncalled-for criticism, that needless gossip which has been so prone to soil our lips; free from the deafness that has kept us from hearing our brother’s plea; free from that blindness which has kept us from seeing the sinfulness of sin and the glorious reward of obedience; yes, “free indeed.” Free to enjoy “the peace of God, which passeth all understanding,” amid life’s troubles and perplexities, and free to live the life that wins, that wins for Christ.

—Matilda E. Andross.

A VOICE OF THE PAST

“Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him . . . ?”

“Let brotherly love continue. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body. . . Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace.”

“We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. (For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.)”

“I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. . . Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you. Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweetsmelling savour.”

“Furthermore then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication: that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God: that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter: because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit. But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another.”

“Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you.” “Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work."

"Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful."

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine."

"Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do."

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. . . . But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes. And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient."

"If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmising; perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself. But godliness with contentment is great gain." "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine."

"Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness unto all men. For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward men appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour; that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men. But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain."

"Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. . . . For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

"Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed: but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by longsuffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

"But the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil."

"Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen."

LORD'S DAY

By C. E. Randall

THESE are two days spoken of in Scripture, not 24 hour days, but periods of time called "days." The ones to which we refer are, first, "man's day." In 1 Corinthians 4:3 we read: "But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's day" (margin). The other day in consideration is the "Lord's day" (Rev. 1:10).

Man's day is that period of time in which the Gentiles hold sway and power over Jerusalem, which is called "the times of the Gentiles" (Luke 21:24), and is a dispensation when man is in judgment on the earth. Such judgment is rendered according to the sight of the eyes and hearing of the ears (Isa. 11:3); people are evil spoken of and false accusations made against them. It is a day when sin is in ascendancy and iniquity approved.

This day is not always going to exist. It soon will give way to another day. In this another day there will be no stock market crash nor unrighteous manipulation of economic laws whereby stock can be purchased or made by unholy speculators for 20 cents and sold to an unsuspecting public for 76 dollars, when it is worthless. This another day will be the Lord's day, when the Lord will reign in righteousness, will administer the governmental affairs and control all economic laws in righteousness, and will "judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth." What a day this will be! In this day nations will even learn righteousness (Isa. 26:9). Judgment will be laid to the line, and secrets of the counsels of the hearts of men will be revealed (Isa. 28:17; 1 Cor. 4:5).

Abreast of the Times

Stars Reveal Past History

"Where wast thou . . . when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?"

PASADENA, Cal., Dec. 10.—That the stars form the real "Beacon Lights of History" is affirmed by the astronomers. As we gaze at the starry skies, we see not conditions that now exist, but a reflection of what was in existence long ago. According to the Associated Press one has but to look to the skies to see things as they were at any period of the past, from a few years to times before the existence of human life on this earth.

For instance, says Alfred H. Joy, secretary of the Mount Wilson Observatory staff of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, when one looks at the great red star Betelgeuse twinkling in the eastern sky, one sees it not as it is today, but as it was in the days of the American Revolution. Over in the northwestern sky the great star Vega as seen today reveals what it was in 1898 when Dewey opened action against the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay.

Starlight travels through space at the speed of 186,284 miles a second, or 6,000,000 miles a year. Thus the light year distance of a star shows the star as it was many years ago. The well known bright Dog Star Sirius, in the extreme eastern sky, is but 8.7 light years away, corresponding with the time of the great earthquake in Japan in May, 1925. The seven stars of the great dipper, Major Majoris, fit well with the Civil War period in this country. Deneb, the lead star in the Northern Cross, is back in the time of Attila the Hun, 406 to 453 A. D., while the days of Columbus are seen in Delta Cephei.

The vast reaches of space revealed in the study of astronomy and the enormous magnitude of many of the heavenly bodies move us to echo the words of David, "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?"—Psalm 8:3, 4.

Orange Harvest in Palestine

"The land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit."—Lev. 26:4.

LONDON, England, Dec. 18.—Estimates that Palestine will grow 4,000,000 boxes of oranges this year, in comparison with 3,600,000 in 1932 and 2,500,000 in 1931, has brought the growth of the country again into the limelight.

A recent report showed that the Jordan electric power plant produced 12,000,000 kilowatt hours last year, and in 1930 the production was only 5,000,000. Since 1920 there have been launched more than 600 new industrial projects and 1,500 smaller enterprises.

Those interested in the future development of Palestine are urging the increase of facilities for Jewish immigration, pointing out that already the country has absorbed 100,000 such immigrants without straining its economic resources.

Mussolini Favors Jewish State

"How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?"—Psalm 137:4.

MILAN, Italy, Aug. 19.—According to Il Papalo d' Italia, official organ of the Government, Premier Mussolini favors the creation of a completely autonomous Jewish state outside of Palestine. A statement to that effect was made by the Premier on the eve of the world Hebrew Congress, opening August 21 at Praha, Czechoslovakia.

The only "integral solution" of the Israelite problem, the newspaper says, lies in giving the Jews a homeland where they can maintain their own government and defend themselves with their own army and navy.

It points out that the present "national home" in Palestine is under an English mandate. The contention that Palestine should pass to full Jewish control will be threshed out during the congress.

(We have been unable to secure a report of the congress to which this item refers. If any of our readers possesses such a report from the newspapers, we would appreciate it if he would send us such information.—Ed.)

Damascus to Bagdad by Bus

"The chariots shall rage in the streets, . . . they shall run like the lightnings."—Nahum 2:4.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 26.—An automobile bus more than 68 feet long, that required more than four months to build, was recently inspected by Bro. H. H. Hawkins in this city. The interesting thing with regard to this great gasoline "chariot" is the fact that it was specially designed to carry passengers over the roadless desert that stretches between Damascus and Bagdad.

When the line was first opened, a half dozen drivers were killed by bandit chiefs who hoped for loot and resisted the invasion of the desert. Their attacks were met with vigorous machine gun fire, and now the busses pass through unmolested.

The run, of something more than 470 miles, is made in well under 24 hours, as against something like 25 days required over the old route by the ancient means of transportation. There is no road even now. The bus travels across the sand, through a mountain pass, and fords two rivers.

This modern carriage runs on twenty tires, and the 180 horse power Diesel motor has twelve speeds forward and three reverse.

The question may be asked, "Why do twentieth century people want to go to Bagdad, anyway?" The answer is a single word, petroleum.

"MY SOUL LONGETH, YEA, EVEN FAINTETH FOR THE COURTS OF THE LORD: MY HEART AND MY FLESH CRY OUT FOR THE LIVING GOD."—PSALM 84:2.

REJECTED OF MEN

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."—Isaiah 55:8.

THE story has been told concerning Carlyle:

"One evening at a small literary gathering, a lady famous for her 'muslin theology' was bewailing the wickedness of the Jews in not receiving our Savior, and ended her diatribe by expressing regret that He had not appeared in our own time. 'How delighted,' said she, 'we would all be to throw our doors open to Him, and listen to His divine precepts! Don't you think so, Mr. Carlyle?'"

"The sturdy philosopher, thus appealed to, said in his broad Scotch:

"'No, madam, I don't. I think that had He come very fashionably dressed, with plenty of money, and preached doctrines palatable to the higher orders, I might have had the honor of receiving a card of invitation from you on the back of which would be written, 'To meet our Savior'; but if He had come uttering His precepts and denouncing the Pharisees, and associating with publicans and the lower orders, as He did, you would have treated Him much as the Jews did, and have cried out, 'Take Him to the Newgate, and hang Him.''"

We well know that the world is not yet ready for the coming of our Lord. It is in dire need of Him, it is true, but would not accept Him any more than did the Jews. The lowly Carpenter of Galilee is universally recognized as the greatest teacher of all ages, and yet that He would be rejected now as then is evidenced by the way the world heeds His teachings as laid down in the Scriptures of truth. Why should the world acknowledge Him and yet disregard His instructions? Mainly because people who are steeped in sin would rather continue to follow their own lusts. Indeed, to them sacrifice is something both burdensome and foolish. Their excuse is that the Master's teachings were aimed at the people of His day and therefore are not practical under modern conditions and even that some of them are not entirely dependable. In short, they do not acknowledge His divinity.

No, the world does not want Jesus Christ, no matter how badly it may need Him. It wants to solve its own problems without interference. In fact, it is so intent on having its own way and thwarting God's plans that it fails to harken to the danger signals which are manifest on every side, but is heading blindly into the "great and terrible day of the Lord," when it will be brought to its senses and to full realization of its folly by the greatest catastrophe ever experienced by mankind, even Armageddon. Then it is that the time will be ripe for the return of our Lord. The Jews will hail Him as rightful heir to the throne of David. The nations, sick of the awful judgments which they shall have so recently endured and seeing the wonderful prosperity of Israel under the reign of its Messiah, will go up to Jerusalem to seek an alliance with Him (Zech. 2:11). "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one."—Zech. 14:9.

When we let God tell us what is to be done instead of trying to tell God what to do, everything appears so much more perfect and harmonious, don't you think?

SOLITUDE

How strange a thing it is to be alone!
And yet, amidst the surging tides of men
Walking their various ways in search of where
To satisfy desire—though but a stone
When true-judged by the Holy Spirit's pen—
One knows full well its weariness and care.

How hard a thing it is alone to be!
Feeling earth's ties bind us to none below,
Yet, as we go our paths, to keep a heart
Filled with compassion unto those who see,
With careless eye, our moving to and fro;
Nor will that we with them should bear a part.

How good a thing it is alone to go!
For midst earth's clamor loud, the soul may hear,
By inner sense that learns to understand,
The voice of Him who always journeyed so.
Stepping with Him, the mind grows wondrous clear
To see and comprehend what God has planned.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him."

THE BIRTH OF A KING

OUR lesson stories for the first six months of the new year will be the most interesting in all the Bible, for they are centered around the One we love most—Jesus, our Savior. Each week we will read about a certain event in His life, and we will study His words and His actions to find out all we can about Him. And I'm sure at the end of the six months more and more of you boys and girls, and myself as well, will come to know our Savior better and to love Him more.

Perhaps if we lived in a country that had a king we might appreciate a little more of the feeling people have for their king. But we all have great respect for our president and for others of our land, and thus we can imagine some of the feeling for a king.

We must journey back a long way in order to understand the joy and happiness that came to the people of the little country of Palestine nineteen hundred and thirty-three years ago. We will call these people Jews, just as the wise men did so long ago, though their true name is Israelites.

You have all learned how God wanted a people for His very own, and so He called Abraham out from among the other people of his country, and He led him up to this very land of Palestine. God promised Abraham that he and his children and his children's children should own this land forever; that great happiness should come to the other people of earth because of him; and that a certain one of his descendants should be the most loved and honored of all. It's about that certain one we are going to study this quarter.

Perhaps most of you have followed these very children of Abraham, the Israelites, or Jews as we will call them, into Egypt in slavery, back up again to their own land led by Moses, through all their joys and sorrows. Some of you know the names of their first three kings; know how they forgot God's goodness to them and how God had to take their kingdom away from them and scatter them all over the face of the earth.

But—and here is where the joyful part comes in—when God makes a promise He keeps it. He told Abraham that a certain one was going to bring blessing to all the world, and He kept that promise by sending Jesus. Yes, Jesus is the One; He was born to be the King of the Jews, coming after some of them had given up and thought God had forgotten.

The golden text says, "He shall save his people from their sins," and that is what the Jews needed, for they had lost their kingdom because of their sins. We, too, need the Savior to save us, for we all have sinned as well as the Jews. And if we want to share in the great joy Jesus brings to all the world, we must be forgiven our sins.

But we know that Jesus didn't sit on the throne of Palestine, David's throne as they called it, when He was on earth, because the Roman rulers wouldn't let Him. They took Him prisoner and crucified Him. But God, who always watches over His own, brought Him back to life, and now He is at His Father's side waiting for Him to say it is the right time to come and take the throne and be King.

While Jesus was on earth a few people showed Him great honor. The wise men, whom we love to read about, were men of great authority, and there were other rulers who loved Him, too, as well as the common people who followed Him everywhere He went. But when He comes to take His throne, everyone will bow before Him, from the least to the greatest.

Kings will lay their kingdoms before Him; queens will kneel in His presence; all rulers will crown Him King of kings and Lord of lords. And that is the way God is going to keep His promise to Abraham.

*"As with gladness men of old
Did the guiding star behold,
As with joy they hailed its light,
Leading onward, beaming bright;
So, most gracious Lord, may we Evermore be led by Thee.*

*"As with joyful steps they sped
To that lowly manger bed,
There to bend the knee before
Him whom heaven and earth adore;
So may we with willing feet
Ever seek the mercy seat.*

*"As they offered gifts most rare
At that manger rude and bare,
So may we with holy joy,
Pure and free from sin's alloy,
All our costliest treasures bring,
Christ, to Thee, our heavenly King."*

BIRTH AND INFANCY OF JESUS

Matthew 1:1 to 2:23

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 9:2-7

GOLDEN TEXT

Thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.—Matthew 1:21.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Coming of the King.

Basic Truth: "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9:28.

I. The King's Coming Promised. (Matt. 2:1-8.) For generations the Jews had been looking for the coming of the promised Deliverer who would "turn away ungodliness from Jacob" and restore the nation to the favor of God. Many of the prophecies had been devoted to this subject, but the priests had misinterpreted or overlooked certain features of those predictions that told of the humble and peaceable coming of the Messiah the first time as a sacrifice for sin (Isa. 53). Herod feared His coming because he believed it would mean the immediate ending of his own selfish reign. The prophecies relating to Christ's second coming are quite as definite as were those that predicted His first appearance.

II. The Sign of the King's Coming. (Matt. 2:9, 10.) It is interesting to note that it was to Balaam, a Gentile prophet, that the intimation came that "there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel" (Num. 24:17), and that it was to Gentile prophets ("wise men from the east") that the Star appeared. The first coming of the Messiah was as a sacrifice for the sins of the whole world (1 John 2:2). The result of His first coming was the breaking down of the wall that separated Jew and Gentile and making them equal before God (Eph. 2:11-22). What more fitting, then, than that the sign of His appearance should be revealed to Gentiles? The signs that mark His second coming to be near at hand are being read today more by Gentile believers than by Jews.

III. The King Revealed. (Matt. 2:11, 12.) The wise men with their gifts of frankincense and myrrh were types of the rulers of the earth when the words of David are fulfilled, and "the kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents" to the King. These gifts will consist in part of assisting Israel in her return to Palestine from her long wanderings through the world (Isa. 66:18-20).

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Searching for Jesus. The wise men were searching for Jesus. They had seen His star in the East. They wanted to find Him, and not only find Him, but they wanted to worship Him that was born King of the Jews. This desire of theirs was strong enough to prompt action. They were willing to put forth an effort to find Jesus. Every person who honestly and sincerely desires to find Jesus is led to His feet. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."—Matt. 7:7. Every would-be worshiper that comes to Jesus He has promised to cast out in no wise. Our desire to find and know Him must be strong enough to prompt action. If we really want to find Him, we shall be like the wise men, willing to exert effort. The star was their light that led them to Jesus. See Psa. 119:105. The true seeker will be willing to pay the price of finding the Author and Finisher of his faith.

Fighting Against God. Herod attempted to destroy the Seed Royal. His plan was shrouded in apparent innocence and a false desire to worship. He fooled the wise men, but he couldn't fool God. His deception was an open book to Him who knoweth the hearts of men. Whether Herod realized it at the time or not we do not know, but the absurdity of trying to frustrate the plan and purpose of God is very evident to us. A battle against God is always a losing struggle. He defeats us at our own game and with our own plans.

Every searcher will find Jesus.

All plans of the Father lead to and center in Him.

Each and every warfare waged against God ends in defeat.—C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

"Thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."

The name "Jesus" signifies "Savior." When the angel said to Joseph before the birth of Christ, "Thou shalt call his name JESUS," he gave the reason for so naming Him: "For he shall save his people from their sins," or He shall be a Savior to His people. It was no little thing for Him to be a Savior; He had to humble Himself and become obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

The name "Jesus" is the name associated with "the shame" which He endured in order to "save his people from their sins." His people, therefore, never addressed Him as "Jesus," but always as "Master"; it was His enemies who called Him "Jesus." Shall we be His enemies, or shall we be His people and accept Him as a Savior, realizing that He died on the cruel cross to save those who accept?—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

The Incarnation

The first chapter of John is thought by some to teach the preexistence of Christ; but Irenaeus, who was acquainted with John and who knew John's motive for writing this portion of his Gospel, said that John was trying to refute the teaching of the Gnostic sect that Jesus was an inferior deity who created the world and who existed with the Father before creation. Irenaeus states further: "John, the disciple of the Lord, desiring by the publication of his Gospel, to root out the error which had been sown among men by Corinthus and sometime before by those who were called Nicolaitans (which I also hate. Rev. 2:6) that he might confute them, and satisfy all that there is only one God, who made all things by His word, and not as they say, one who is the creator, and another the father of the Lord."

In John 1:6 we read: "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." Jesus in His prayer to His Father said: "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them (His disciples) into the world."—John 17:18. Surely, John and the twelve were not the incarnate forms of some heavenly creatures. Were the Pharisees devils incarnate? Jesus said: "Ye are of your father, the devil." Later He added: "Ye are from beneath; I am from above."—John 8:44, 23. From the above scriptures it is evident that incarnation, if accepted, should be applied to others as well as to Christ. The Bible applies incarnation to neither.—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Wise Men Visit the Baby Jesus.

Memory Verse: "When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy."

During our Christmas holiday we have heard many times the story of Baby Jesus. I'm sure your teacher will be very glad to hear each one of you tell her which part of this story you like best. I can hear some of you saying, "Oh, I like 'The Babe in the Manger.'" Others say, "But I like the part about the shepherds." And again I hear, "The Wise Men."

Yes, children, they are all beautiful, and we like to hear them again and again. We all love the story of how the wise men traveled for miles and miles on camels to see Baby Jesus. They followed the star which led them all the way to Jerusalem.

When they arrived here, they said to King Herod, "Where is the baby that is born to be the King of the Jews?"

Herod couldn't answer their question. But when he learned, he said to the wise men, "Go to Bethlehem, and when you find the child, return and tell me where He is, that I may worship Him, too."

The wise men went to Bethlehem and there found Baby Jesus and His mother.

When the wise men were ready to return, God warned them not to go to Herod; so they went another way.

Herod did not want to worship a child, as we learn farther in this chapter, but meant to have Him killed that he himself might remain king. But God watched over Baby Jesus, and Herod was not able to carry out his plan.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

TO OUR LOCAL CORRESPONDENTS

One of the most interesting features of The Restitution Herald and the one to which our readers turn first upon receiving the paper is this department, which is devoted to news from the various churches. This is the "visiting page," and friends from all parts of the country learn of the welfare and progress of those whom they love in other places. We wish to make this department just as interesting and just as useful as we can.

To accomplish this purpose, however, it is necessary for those who have reports to send in of special local happenings to write all such events on a separate sheet from other correspondence. Please do not include church news such as reports of meetings, etc., which really should appear under the name of the church where they were held, in the middle of a personal or business letter. To do this invites many mistakes and adds greatly to the work and expense of the office.

Most of our churches are very thoughtful in this matter, and have correspondents appointed for this special purpose, either the pastor or some one else who is qualified. Others are not so considerate. We want all the important happenings of your church in The Herald. Send them in, but please try and have them on a separate sheet from your business correspondence.

PEARSON - ROHR

At 7:30 Saturday evening, Dec. 16, it was our pleasure to conduct a wedding ceremony in our home in Tippecanoe City, Ohio, in which Miss Irene Rohr became the bride of Mr. Edgar Pearson. Both bride and groom are regular attendants at our services in the Brush Creek Church of God. We pray for them a long and happy married life, and the constant keeping of the Lord. Those present for the wedding were both mothers, Mrs. Howard Pearson, Mrs. Rohr, Mr. and Mrs. Pease of Dayton, Mrs. Dittmer of Fort Mc Kinley, and Mrs. Magaw.

The newlyweds will make their home near Tippecanoe City, where Mr. Pearson is engaged in farming with his father.

Sydney E. Magaw.

AN INTERESTING CELEBRATION

The following report will be of interest to our brethren throughout the country who know of the long, faithful service which Bro. G. A. Boyer has rendered to the cause of truth.

"Mr. G. A. Boyer, who fought with dashing bravery as a member of the famous 'White's Battalion,' Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, Confederate States Army, celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday quietly at his home on West Spring Street, Woodstock, on the fifth of December. Members of the family and friends visited him during the day. Mr. Boyer risked his life and fortunes for the Southland and came back, like many other Southern boys, to a ruined, war-torn valley to begin again to build for the future. By industry, good management, and business ability he made a success of life and many friends along the way, and is now a retired farmer and a member of the board of directors of the National Bank of Woodstock. Mr. Boyer is the last living member of Company E, White's Battalion, which was in command of the late Capt. J. H. Grabill."

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

The following facts are gleaned from personal correspondence from C. E. Lapp, pastor of the Ripley church. We regret that we do not have more frequent reports from this growing congregation.

On the night of December 13 was held the annual business meeting and election of officers for both church and Sunday school. The manner in which the work of the evening was conducted manifested a Christlike spirit on the part of all, and a fraternal cooperation that the pastor highly commends.

The pastor and his wife, accompanied by the latter's mother, Sr. Edna Brewer, will leave (D.V.) Christmas Eve, following the evening service, for Dayton, Ohio, where they will spend the holiday vacation.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The Christmas spirit pervades the air as these lines are written, and we are all thanking God for the Christ child and for the Christian spirit of His followers.

On December 19 a daughter was born to Bro. and Sr. Joe Baker, and we all rejoice with them in this tender child, the manifestation of God's love.

December 31 at the morning worship hour the newly elected board and officers for 1934 are to be installed by a special consecration service. God's guidance upon each of them and upon our church work for the coming year is being earnestly besought. Will you also pray for the spiritual development of our group here?

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

What are your plans for the new year, fellow pastors and evangelists? Let us exchange ideas for our mutual benefit. Send in your suggestions at any time.

Our heart goes out in sympathy to Sr. Mattie Agard of Cleveland, Ohio, in the loss of her husband, whose death occurred suddenly on Nov. 3.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Crosby, the latter a teacher in our Sunday school at Niagara Falls, N. Y., are spending the winter under the palms of Florida. Sr. Crosby comes of a long and faithful line of Church of God workers.

The "Church of God Messenger," Fonthill, Ont., reports in its last issue that Sr. Wilda Fletcher of that place is in very poor health. We have had the pleasure of Sr. Fletcher's acquaintance for many years, and our prayers join those of the pastor of her church for her recovery.

Sr. Willis A. Roose, Nappanee, Ind., sends The Herald as a Christmas present to her aged father, John S. Wisler, 11110 Haskell Ave., San Fernando, Calif. Mr. Wisler, who will be 92 years old on Feb. 2, is in excellent health and active. We trust, too, Sr. Roose, that your father "will enjoy reading The Herald as much as we do."

Elder A. E. Hoskins, pastor of the St. Cloud, Minn., Church of God, is now issuing a four-page bulletin called "The Morning Star" that is of much interest. In the last issue the editor-pastor remarks, "Soon the old year will be history, and the new shall appear. Let us resolve before God that we will live nearer to Jesus than we did in 1933."

Our office is indebted to Bro. H. W. Patterson, the "tract evangelist" of El Cajon, Calif., for a limited supply of a tract by Dr. A. U. Michelson on "The Jews and Palestine." Dr. Michelson is a converted Jew. These tracts may be secured from Bro. Patterson at the above address.

Sr. Hilding L. Anderson, Hector, Minn., says, "We have moved into a new community and know so few people that The Herald's coming each week is like an old friend."

We are again indebted to Bro. L. A. Boice of Champaign, Ill., for furnishing our office with a year's subscription to the "Christian Herald." We find this publication of much interest and of spiritual profit.

For the benefit of those desiring clergy rates on the railroads we are placing the official list of recognized ministers of the General Conference of the Church of God on file with the three clergy bureaus. We will be glad to assist our ministers in any way we can to obtain such favors as the various transportation lines may offer.

It surely makes those of us who live where we can enjoy regular services of our own church more appreciative of our blessings when we read letters like the following, from Bro. A. J. Grubbs, Blue Mound, Ill. "The paper is fine. Don't see how we could get along without it, as it is all the preaching we have."

The brethren of Virginia request that if any of our ministers or others receive letters soliciting financial aid from anyone in their state they refer the matter directly to the secretary of the Virginia Conference, Elder Harry A. Sheets, Maurertown, Va. Such an appeal has been received by several of our ministers from one who is evidently not a member of the church nor a sympathizer with our teachings.

President Theodore P. Stevens of the Advent Christian College of Aurora, Ill., has invited several of our ministers of the Middle West to attend a ministers' conference at the college to be held Dec. 26 to 29. Several are planning to be present. We have much in common with our Adventist brethren, and we are sure to enjoy such a gathering as the one planned.

CASHMERE, WASHINGTON

The following letter under date of Nov. 26 has been somewhat delayed, but is still of interest to our readers.

"Dear Ones in Christ: We are sending in our renewal for another year and also something to help along with the publication of The Herald. We surely appreciate its weekly visits, and the labor it takes the editor and his staff, as well as the other contributors, to publish so good a paper. We remember you in our prayers, praying always that you may be able to continue your good work.

"A few weeks ago we enjoyed a short visit with Bro. and Sr. Clarence Lapp and Sr. Edna Brewer. It surely did us good to talk with these dear ones of like precious faith of the hope of the coming of our dear Lord and the setting up of His kingdom. We also enjoyed the message Bro. Lapp gave us on the Sunday evening he was with us.

"Yours in the one faith,

"E. Anderson Drake and Family."

CHRISTMAS AT OREGON, ILLINOIS

The Christmas exercises of the Oregon Sunday school were appreciatively received by an audience that filled every niche and cranny of the church last Thursday night. The earlier part of the program was given almost exclusively by the younger classes, and the beauty and impressiveness of its pageantry, together with the knowledge each little one had of his part, indicated the vast amount of time and thought and effort the committee in charge, which was headed by the pastor's wife and loyally supported by the teachers, had given to it.

At the close of the children's part the junior robed choir led a processional from the balcony through the main body of the church to the rostrum, where, under the direction of Miss Azalia Winfrey, its director, it gave a most pleasing and colorful series of carol-anthems.

The church was simply but tastefully decorated with evergreen branches, silvered pine cones, and silver stars hung from the windows and auditorium lighting fixtures, with a midnight sky effect arranged at the back of the platform. The various lighting devices, which changed from time to time as the program advanced, added much to the beauty of the finished whole. The committee in charge of the decorations were Miss Genniel Carpenter and Miss Alice Gesin.

The thought of our Lord's return was strongly stressed in the program and by the superintendent of the Sunday school in his opening remarks.

A HELPFUL SUGGESTION

The following is copied from "Golden Rule News," published by the Church of the Golden Rule (Church of God), Cleveland, Ohio, as a suggestion to other city congregations. It might be added that The Restitution Herald is furnished at an attractive price for such evangelistic purposes.

"Here's a new plan in which your cooperation will be appreciated. The Golden Rule News Club boys, who deliver your GRN each month, are going to sell copies of The Restitution Herald, our church weekly, in order to raise money. They get a commission on each copy sold. And the purchaser gets one of the finest religious magazines published in America, 16 pages of splendid articles by our best writers, as well as departments of interest to every member of the family. Special features you'll enjoy are the regular articles by our own Bro. George B. Alldridge which are read and commented on all over the United States and a department called "Abreast of the Times," featuring present-day fulfillment of Bible prophecy. We bespeak for the boys a cordial hearing. There are few places where you'll get as much for your nickel as in buying a Herald. And you'll be treating yourself to a feast of good things, and helping along a fine cause at the same time."

PLUM RIVER, ILLINOIS

We are pleased with the gradual increase in our Sunday school attendance. Last Sunday there were 39 present. The average attendance since October 1, which was our Rally Day, has been over 29 for each Sunday.

Starting on Rally Day, we have been striving for perfect attendance records. Several will be given awards for perfect attendance during this closing quarter.

The church is having a Christmas program Christmas Eve.

There is no joy like the joy of working for the Master.

Mildred L. Crofton, Sec.

GOD WANTS THE BOYS AND GIRLS

God wants the boys, the merry, merry boys,
The noisy boys, the funny boys,

The thoughtless boys—

God wants the boys, with all their joys,
That He as gold may make them pure,
And teach them trials to endure;
His heroes brave He'd have them be,
Fighting for truth and purity.

God wants the boys.

God wants the happy-hearted girls,
The loving girls, the best of girls,

The worst of girls—

God wants to make the girls His pearls,
And to reflect His holy face,
And bring to mind His wondrous grace
That beautiful the world may be,
And filled with love and purity.

God wants the girls.

MATTHEW THE PUBLICAN

Matthew, the writer of the Gospel that bears his name, was the son of Alphaeus. Before his conversion he was known as Levi. He was a tax collector under the Roman Government, and lived in Capernaum. Owing to his occupation he was detested by his Jewish compatriots. Soon after his conversion he gave a feast in the honor of his Lord to which he invited his former business associates.

"Matthew was probably a silent, unobtrusive, contemplative man, a thorough Jew, with a wide knowledge of the Old Testament Scriptures, and able to see in every detail of our Lord's life the fulfillment of prophecy."

THE GOSPEL OF MATTHEW

The Gospel According to Matthew, from which our lessons for the next six months will be taken, was probably originally written in Aramaic, the language of the common people of Palestine and the tongue in which Jesus taught. Scholars generally agree that the Greek text on which our modern translations rest was made by Matthew himself.

A careful comparison of the four records of the life of Christ which we possess shows clearly that that of Matthew is by far the richest in detail of all the group. It provides a comprehensive foundation on which to build a definite understanding of our Lord and His teaching concerning the kingdom of God.

Matthew describes to us the life and work of Jesus as the future King and Judge of Israel. The characteristics of his portrait are authority and tenderness, with special stress placed upon the facts concerning the kingdom.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD

This was the great theme of Jesus' teaching. Throughout His entire ministry His one purpose was to declare the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and its near approach. To emphasize and visualize the happy conditions that would prevail in the kingdom, He performed miracles of healing and of comfort. To the same end, He pardoned sinners. The sermon on the mount pointed out how the law of God, which is the law of love, when planted in the hearts of men, as it will be under the reign of Christ, if put into practice now, would result in peace and security to mankind.

The kingdom of God, according to the Scriptures, is to be a literal government established upon this earth when the Lord comes. Jerusalem, its capital city, will be the center from which will radiate the peace-bringing and prosperity-insuring laws of the Most High.

To obtain its highest privileges when it comes, it is necessary for one to believe in its coming, in Jesus Christ as its King; to repent of his sins and seek forgiveness through faith and baptism into Jesus Christ. Such are the essential requirements of the gospel.

GOD'S GREAT TIMEPIECE

By Glenn M. Birkey

"BELOVED, you must not ignore this one fact, that with the Lord a single day is like a thousand years, and a thousand years are like a single day. The Lord is not slow with what he promises, according to certain people's idea of slowness. No! He is long-suffering for your sake, he does not wish any to perish but all to betake them to repentance."—2 Peter 3:8, 9; Moffatt.

So far as the Gentile times are concerned, the sands in God's hourglass are running low. Often I have sat in a room where the silence was broken only by the ticking of a large clock, each sound representing a second gone, never to be used again. As we rise each morning and see and hear about the events that transpire, we cannot help but realize that God's great clock of time is ticking off the events that must come to pass as predicted in His Word before His Son returns to set up His government upon the earth.

In the same chapter of Second Peter we are reminded that in the very days in which we are living men will mock, asking, "What has become of his promised return: for from the time our forefathers fell asleep, all things continue as they have been since the creation."—2 Peter 3:4. God has through His Word given all warning that grace will not always abound. One cannot understand why so many in this world refuse their future hope of redemption when a way of escape has been provided through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The newspapers, radio, newscast, and other sources are fairly teeming with events that interest all students of prophecy, and show that God's timepiece is operating very accurately. Just to enumerate a few of the happenings: The Jews' return to their homeland. The reviving of the old Roman Empire. The growing influence of Communism.

It is said Communism has control of one sixth of the world's peoples. It is determined to cause the downfall of every Gentile nation. This will be accomplished through breaking down morality and getting a corner on other nations' wealth. It is claimed the questionable shows on the screen and questionable pictures on our magazine stands are propaganda that the Reds are using to break down the nation's morals; and it seems to be succeeding.

The dictatorships are increasing, and I believe this is preparing the world for the superman, or Antichrist. It seems very certain that democratic or representative form of government is on the wane. The recent recognition of Russia by the United States may have some prophetic significance.

Then there are signs in the heavens. Our Lord said there would be signs in the heavens and distress of nations. Astronomers tell that peculiar things are happening in the heavens. In the year 1917 there were seven total eclipses of the sun and three of the moon. This had not occurred before in two thousand years. As the sun veiled its face for the seventh time, General Allenby marched into Jerusalem and pulled down the star and crescent. Astronomers claim this strange combination of eclipses will occur again in 1936. Astronomers also tell us a star of the first magnitude hovered over Jerusalem in June, 1918, exactly six months after General Allenby entered the city. This star disappeared as suddenly as it had come. Surely there are signs showing in the heavens.

All these foregoing happenings seem to indicate a great event of unusual importance is about to occur. God's great timepiece seems to be proclaiming the following message: "The time is fulfilled. The kingdom of God is at hand. Repent and believe the gospel."

May we who have placed our faith in God and His Son Jesus Christ do our utmost to spread the great truths concerning salvation to those who have not embraced them before the days of God's grace are ended is my prayer.

HOMESICK

I pine for that long promised kingdom,
That Jesus has gone to prepare;
Its joys and delights with the present
I oft in my waiting compare.
I'm trying my best to be patient,
And meekly pass under the rod;
But submit to you, brethren, I'm homesick—
Homesick for the kingdom of God.

The weight of the years is upon me,
The joys of the world charm no more;
In weakness I pray for the kingdom,
Whose coming marks human woes o'er.
Lord Jesus, stay not Thy appearing,
E'en though I may sleep 'neath the sod;
I do declare that I'm homesick—
Homesick for the kingdom of God!

How blessed 'twill be in that kingdom
To meet with the faithful of old,
With Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,
And others of whom we are told.
I'm amazed at the works of Jehovah:
The breadth of His marvelous plan;
Including the gift of a Savior,
Who suffered and died here for man.

O brother, be patient, it's coming!
These awful times cannot last long;
Christ will soon come in His glory
Attended by angelic throng!
We've waited for Him, and He'll save us,
Though we wake or we sleep 'neath the sod;
And we'll say nevermore, "I am homesick!"
In our home in the kingdom of God!

Papers on the Lord's Coming

The Church

By F. L. Austin

THE return of Christ unto the affairs of earth will initiate most momentous changes in the relations of mankind—changes greater than ever previously recorded. His return will affect every human being, both the living and the dead. But the effect of His presence will be so varied upon different classes or groups of people that to understand the prophecies foretelling this wonderful series of events and conditions, one must endeavor to carefully distinguish between the different bodies into which God is classifying the human race.

It is because of this diversification of God's dealings with the different classes that I have felt justified in presenting the former articles in an effort to bring out the background, so to speak, in order to a better understanding as I shall direct attention to some of the outstanding facts foretold as to Christ's arrival and presence. And, for this reason, I ask the reader to bear with me in devoting yet a portion of this article to a like effort.

THE DAY OF THE LORD

To this end, you are asked to consider carefully one further point relative to "the day of the LORD." It is presented to us in Revelation 1:10. It reads: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, . . ."

John was the speaker. He was in the midst of an experience the like of which had never occurred to man. "The Revelation of Jesus Christ" (Rev. 1:1) was being presented to him. The word "revelation," Greek apokalupsis, means to reveal; to uncover; to unveil; to manifest. It was the unveiling of Christ "which God gave"; not an unveiling given by some human historian or theologian or critic, but a revelation of Christ to mankind, through John, such as had never before been made. And John says in verse 10 that he "was in the Spirit on the Lord's day" when he received his instructions.

Let me quote this clause of verse 10 from several different translations which lie before me. Diaglott: "I was in Spirit on the Lord's day." How were you "on the Lord's day," John? "In Spirit." Weymouth: "In the Spirit I found myself present on the day of the Lord." Rotherham: "I came to be in Spirit in the Lord's day." Concordant: "I came to be, in spirit, in the Lord's day." Bullinger: "I came to be, by the Spirit, in the day of the Lord." Conclusion: In spirit John was in the Lord's day.

Ezekiel, in 8:3, had an experience something similar. He describes it thus: "And the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem . . ." He was among the captive Israelites, probably in Tel-abib by the River Chebar, as stated in 3:15, several hundred miles from Jerusalem. The miraculous power of God wrought this experience upon him. Read also Ezek. 3:12-14; Acts 8:39, 40; 2 Cor. 12:1-4; and notice Obadiah's fear mentioned in 1 Kings 18:12.

John's experience took place less than one hundred years after Christ's birth. By the power of God's Spirit, he was caught forward through the centuries and placed over into the day of the Lord. There he received from God a revelation, an unveiling of Christ. But notice that it was the revelation of Christ in the activities of His labors "in the Lord's day." It was not a revelation of Christ as of today, "at the right hand of God." It was a revelation of Him at work during "the day of the Lord."

This phrase, "the Lord's day," cannot possibly refer to Sunday, the first day of the week, as so many thousands of people unjustifiably apply it. The phrase refers to one and the selfsame time as does the phrase "the day of the Lord"—just as the two types of phrases are used interchangeably in all literature.

A JUDGMENT THRONE

The things revealed to John concerning Christ in the day of the LORD include that wonderfully beautiful setting described in Revelation 4. The outstanding thing of that picture is the newly set throne (Please turn to Page Eight)

A PRAYER

We pray, dear Lord, that Thou
Wilt give us courage, strength
And faith to wait on Thee,
Through this day's length.

Not for tomorrow, Lord,
Doth our petition rise,
Just for today with all its cares,
Its troubles and its sighs.

So lead us, blessed Lord,
Safe through the present day,
And may we find at set of sun,
Thy presence near, we pray.

overtaken the churches in these latter days. Few, indeed, either in or out of the churches concern themselves about the future. They live only in and for the present. Their slogan seems to be, "Live for the present and let the future take care of itself!" We hear very little from the modern pulpit about "heaven" or "hell." The minister's time is occupied with social and political reform work of various kinds. Even when called upon for a funeral sermon he seldom mentions the situation of the deceased whether good or bad.

Of course the old idea still quite generally prevails that some hazy undefined "heaven" awaits the righteous, and that "hell," robbed of all its Jonathan Edwards fiery literality, throws open its doors to receive the ungodly at death. But when it comes to making an attempt to present these subjects scripturally these modern religionists are too indifferent toward the entire matter of future life to give sufficient study to the Bible to learn whether or not their position is scripturally defensible.

Under such conditions it is quite without value to appeal to the Bible to determine the facts in so far as the average church goer, or even minister, is concerned. They will not longer discuss or even study these subjects. "What difference does it make, anyway?" is their answer to every question along these lines.

This condition of apathy, while to us most reprehensible in the religious leaders, should, and does, open wide the doors of opportunity to us for the presentation of the truth in a positive, affirmative manner that results in conviction on the part of the hearer. The facts of the Bible are too little known in these days to provide a basis for controversy for the majority of people, and we find a great many honest seekers after salvation ready to accept the plain truths of the Scriptures when simply stated as facts, with no direct and obvious attempt being made to overthrow hazy and outgrown conceptions that no longer exercise an appreciable influence over the minds of men.

Let us, then, approach a divinely given task of evangelization from the affirmative standpoint. Let us state the truth positively, but not argumentatively. Let us assert with all the power God provides, that salvation depends upon faith in and obedience to the "things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ!"

AFFIRMATION VERSUS CONTROVERSY

THE Church of God as a denomination has apparently, and no doubt fortunately, passed largely beyond the controversial stage of its development into that of more or less dogmatic affirmation. This change is not so much due to a premeditated alteration of policy on our part as it is to a readjustment made necessary by the shifting of front on the part of other religious bodies with which we come into contact, and to the atheistic trend of the times.

Our extreme polemic tendencies of the past were created by conditions and circumstances. We were kept constantly on the defensive by those who opposed our teaching, and we naturally responded with counter attacks against their doctrinal positions.

Most of these discussions had to do with matters pertaining to the future: immortality, and how and when it could be obtained; the final destiny of the wicked; the eternal home of the saints; and the events that are to accompany and follow the Lord's coming. These were the principal points of contest. Religious people in those days were deeply interested in these matters, and "searched the scriptures daily" in order that they might support their own contentions and overthrow opposition to them.

A great change, almost revolutionary in character, has

God's Chosen People

By George B. Alldridge

"You alone, of all men, have I cared for: therefore I will punish you for all your misdeeds."—Amos 3:2, Moffatt.

DURING the convention held in Oregon, Illinois, last August, in conversation with a sister highly esteemed among the brethren for her Christian culture, I remarked that there is a natural Israel and also a spiritual Israel. She requested me to quote a scripture supporting this view, viz., natural and spiritual Israel.

For a few moments I felt nonplused; I could not recall to memory where it definitely used this phraseology—natural and spiritual Israel. I felt positively in my mind that the Scriptures do sharply differentiate between Israel after the flesh and Israel after the Spirit.

In 1 Corinthians 10:18 we read, "Behold Israel after the flesh: are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar?" Genesis 32:28 gives the origin of Israel after the flesh.

Paul proves that there are two Israels in these words: "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh: who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises." Notice one class: "my kinsmen according to the flesh," and "to whom pertaineth the adoption."

Jesus in Luke 13:34, 35 pronounced the terrible doom upon His kinsmen according to the flesh in the well known words, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets," etc.

Jesus knew the Psalms well. The above words fulfilled Psalm 106:27, "To overthrow their seed also among the nations, and to scatter them in the lands."

In Paul's beautiful allegory (Gal. 4:21-31) the two seeds, Israel who are free—spiritual—and Israel in bondage—natural—are clearly set forth.

I am writing this article as a plea upon behalf of natural Israel, commonly known as the Jews.

The columns of our daily newspapers are recording every day the bitter feeling of antipathy prevailing throughout the world against the Jew, a feeling known generally as anti-Semitic.

Sometimes I hear disparaging remarks from the lips of those professing to be followers of Jesus. Be careful, dear friends. These words to Abraham have gone forth from the mouth of God and will not return unto Him void. "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

My brethren, do we realize what a debt the world owes to the Jew? Lyman Abbott, one of America's great preachers and journalists, says this regarding the world's debt to Israel: "We Gentiles owe our life to Israel. It is Israel who has brought us the message that God is one, and that God is a just and righteous God, and demands righteousness of His children, and demands nothing else. It is Israel that has brought us the message that God is our Father. It is Israel who, in bringing us the divine law, has laid the foundation of liberty. It is Israel who had the first free institutions the world ever saw. It is Israel who has brought us our Bible, our prophets, our apostles. When sometimes our own unchristian prejudices flame out against the Jewish people, let us remember that all that we have and all that we owe, under God, to what Judaism has given us."

Brethren, we meet every first day of the week for Christian worship and fellowship and to keep the antitype of the passover, or as Paul says, "Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."

Once a year the Jew keeps the feast of the passover. Many of my readers in a casual way have read of the terrible pogroms in Russia. I have pondered over and over Ezekiel 37 and 38 and wondered, Why has God set Russia aside as a nation upon which He will pour out His fiercest judgments?

Mary Antin, Russo-American writer, in her The Promised Land, writes, "The passover season, when we celebrated our deliverance from the land of Egypt, and felt so glad and thankful as if it had only just happened, was the

Life Out of Death

The Mills of God grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small—

So soft and slow the great wheels go they scarcely move at all;

But the souls of men fall into them, and are powdered into dust,

And in that dust grow the Passion-Flowers—Love, Hope, Trust.

Most wondrous their upspringing, in the dust of the grinding mills,

And rare beyond the telling the fragrance each distils.

Some grow up tall and stately, and some grow sweet and small,

But Life from Death is in each one—with purpose grow they all.

For that dust is God's own garden, and the Lord Christ tends it fair,

With oh, such loving tenderness! and oh, such patient care!

In sorrow the seeds are planted, they are watered with bitter tears,

But their roots strike down to the Water-Springs and the Sources of the Years.

"JESUS WEPT"

By Norman John MacLeod

ONLY great emotions could make the Son of God give way to tears. His being must have been touched with a fullness of emotion that exceeded that which we ordinarily comprehend. He had all power even over death, so for Him to sorrow in the presence of death would seem strange at first thought. Some peculiar things about the death of His friend Lazarus must have presented themselves to Jesus' mind to cause His grief to rise to so high a point.

The problem of death is involved in a psychological consideration of consciousness. Consciousness is a function of the brain, just as digestion is the function of the stomach. It presents, therefore, all the phenomena of any function.

Consciousness grows gradually until maturity. It develops along with the other functions of the other parts of the body. It reaches its high point at maturity. It declines in old age. It is impaired by disease or accident which involves the operation of the brain. It ceases at death and in some diseases and because of injury to the brain. It can be restored only by restoring the functional power of the organ: in this case, the brain.

Functions of organs develop at different speeds in different individuals; so does consciousness. Some children learn to do things, learn to understand things, are aware of their own existence at a much earlier age than others. Consciousness does not develop before birth, as would be presumed in any other explanation of that phenomena besides the biological one of function. Then conscious development may be retarded because of the impairment of functions of other parts of the body: mental maturity may be long postponed because of certain physical frailties.

The maturity of conscious development is reached along with physical maturity. The full power of the intellect is sustained as long as the full power of the other bodily functions. The power to learn grows greater to about the age of thirty, when it begins to decline at the rate of about one per cent per year along with the decline in the power of the body to rebuild its worn parts. The period of highest mental powers endures longer with some individuals than with others, and lasts over a varying period of years.

One of the saddest things in the world is to see the light of consciousness gradually begin to fail in our loved ones because of disease or senility. The once powerful mind begins to lose its power as the bodily frame declines. The decline is first noticed in the coming of forgetfulness so familiar to us in absent-mindedness and impaired power of "These things said he: and after that he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep. Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well. . . . Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead. . . . And said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto him, Lord, come and see. Jesus wept. Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!"—John 11:11, 12, 14, 34-36.

learning. Then, as old age comes on, a rapid decline toward death is manifest. No place is seen in this concept for setting up some sort of mechanism aside from the brain and nerve functions which might be noted as the soul, or any such extraneous entity.

This decline, as before noted, coincides with the decline of the other functions of the body parts. Disease may cause the light of consciousness to fade more quickly, or even make it cease altogether for a time. Perhaps the most familiar of these occurrences is found in ordinary delirium brought on by fever, and the more serious instances of insanity. But, though consciousness has ceased in these cases, life is still prolonged, for the other functions of the body have not ceased. The brain is functioning only partially along other lines: consciousness has ceased. Injury to the brain also brings cessation of consciousness, or at least a partial cessation, as in the case of being stunned. Shocks of other sorts purely of an emotional or mental nature may do likewise.

Perhaps the most interesting cessation of consciousness to be here considered is that of sleep. The brain has ceased to send out its conscious impulses. The individual is still alive, but consciousness is suspended. In John 11:11-14 Jesus compared death to sleep. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope," we read from the pen of the Apostle Paul concerning the brethren who died during those early days of the church (1 Thess. 4:13).

Why did these speak of death as "sleep"? Because in both cases consciousness has ceased. We are familiar with the cessation of consciousness in sleep; death is a sleep of a longer duration. Some of the most interesting, yet baffling, phenomena of psychology are interwoven with the process of sleep. "In death there is no remembrance of thee," says the Psalmist (Psalm 6:5). Because death is a sleep!

One marked difference will be noticed, however, between sleep and death, that in the latter complete cessation of all bodily functions has taken place. Often in diseases there is only a partial cessation of brain function, as in partial paralysis, insanity, or feeble-mindedness. These could not be explained by presupposing an external entity such as a soul or mind that operates the brain, nerves, and muscles as a telephone operator would operate a switchboard.

Just as consciousness ceases with disease, sleep, or death, just so it can be restored only by a reversal of the processes

Radio in Prophecy

IN the discussion that we shall undertake, with its many startling facts beyond the realm of the human mind to explain, we will have an objective, a prophet message. Prophecy is the strangest credential of our revealed Word. The students of the Bible or Christian workers that do not major in prophecy will have missed the greatest dream and inspiration that is possible in the study of this inexhaustible Book.

That we may arrive at exactly what is meant by prophecy we shall examine two. One must be listed as an uninspired prophecy, because it is not found in the Book of inspiration, although Isaiah never wrote a line more prophetic. About ninety years ago Alfred Tennyson, the English poet, wrote these words; and he wrote them without one single item or data upon which to base such a vision. Such inventions were then never dreamed of. These are the lines:

“Men, my brothers, men the workers,
 Ever reaping something new,
 That which they have done the earnest
 Of the things that they shall do,
 For I dropped into the future,
 Far as human eye could see,
 Saw the vision of the world
 And all the wonders that would be;
 Saw the heavens filled with commerce,
 Argosies of magic sails,
 Pilots of the purple twilight,
 Dropping down their costly bales;
 Heard the heavens filled with shouting,
 And there rained a gasly dew
 From the Nation's airy navies,
 Grappling in the central blue.
 Far along the world-wide whisper
 Of the south wind blowing warm,
 With the standards of the peoples,
 Plunging through the thunderstorm,
 Till the war drums throbbed no longer,
 And the battle flags were furled
 In the parliament of man,

Now let us examine these lines.

Today there are mail routes by air touching every large city in America. There are passenger routes, station ticket offices, and aeroplanes flying on schedule time. Passengers may breakfast in San Francisco and at eight o'clock dinner in New York. Valuables are now being sent by air and “pilots” are stirring the ships in all directions, “dropping down their costly bales.”

Here is the first of five articles by Rev. C. F. Wimberley, D. D., on recent developments in radio and their position in prophecy. The series was selected for this paper from “The Pentecostal Herald” by R. A. Curtis.

There are battles ten thousand feet in the air. Then flying over cities, forts, battle-ships—dropping tons of explosives, dealing death and destruction by the “gasly dew.” All this we now know to be a reality, and woe to the warring nations that may engage in war again.

World-wide whisper sweeping around the world, giving news, events, markets, riots, storms, casualties, discourses—yes, “standards of the peoples”—all that is going on and the things they stand for in every nation under the sun. But what process, “plunging through the thunderstorm.” The whisper travels at a velocity of 186,271 miles per second with an invisible power unknown which plunges through the thunderstorm. In thousands of homes all over the world they are getting the “standards of the peoples.” At this moment there are being sent those whisperings through the air from thousands of power stations, filling all the world about us with sermons, market reports, music, grand opera, athletics, news items. They are going in every direction without conflict or jam. These whisperings, because they are silent in the air above us, are plunging, not only through storm clouds, but through great mountain ranges, as though they did not exist.

Is the vision so true, so realistic, to fail in its last couplet? We do not believe it will fail, for the mysteries and marvels of visions of commerce in the skies, battles above the clouds, dash not on the ragged brow of Lookout Mountain but five and ten thousand feet in the air; “grappling in the central blue.” The poet saw the reign of universal peace and brotherhood, when guns would be molded into tools to make all the waste places—even the wilderness—blossom as the rose.

Now let us examine a prophecy given by divine inspiration. Back yonder in the long ago lived a minor prophet whose contribution to the world literature consisted of but three short chapters, but the blaze of eternal illumination was upon him. By that strange process, known only to our Creator, this humble seer was lifted from the obscurity of that long past and was dropped down into the milling centers of twentieth century life as it is now being lived among us. Hear him—

“The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in scarlet: the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.”

Here is a picture of great military leaders, of fields red with blood; it is a picture of war. But observe the vision—thirty years ago the automobile was a toy and an expensive experiment. They would run sometimes, but not as a permanent means of transportation. Today these chariots, with their bright lights flaming against the dark skies, rage in the streets, jostle one against the other in the broad ways. There are in America more than 26,000,000 licensed motor vehicles. Every man, woman, and child in America could ride at one time. They are jamming against one another in the broad ways. More than 30,000 annually are killed and many more are maimed from raging on the broad ways, as it were. In two decades our land has built between three and four million miles of these broad highways. These chariots are running like lightning, with flaming headlights.

Then observe further: "The fir trees shall be terribly shaken." Canadian woodsmen tell us that the finest timber of their great forests is the fir tree; but within the past decade or so the fir tree has become so wind shaken that there can scarcely be found a tree that can be used for lumber. "Terribly shaken," says the Prophet. But listen to these startling words—"All these things happen in the day of his preparation." Yes, events are mobilizing, preparing for greater events.

We are living in strange times. The secrets of the universe are being so rapidly uncovered that each day brings for us some staggering accomplishment. A gentleman who was an official of the Canadian Pacific Railroad was coming from Montreal recently in his official coach, which was equipped with all the devices for outside communication. This gentleman got in touch with the office of this railroad company located in London, England. The train was going sixty miles an hour, and connection was made easily.

Yet Solomon declared, "There is nothing new under the sun." Rather a hard blow to the scholasticism of modern times; but when we examine it closely, the truth of the Hebrew sage is quite evident. There is not a new thing in the universe. The marvelous laws and the formulas of chemistry, and the facts of astronomy, were just as true when Abraham journeyed to the land God was to show him. Or, to be more exact, there is not a single organism or element of which we are now whispering around the world which was not just the same when the stars sang together in the dawn of time. Chemistry has no new law; the forces of the air have no new combinations. We now whisper across the stretches of sea and land. Of course, that is new; yet it is not new. God has butterflies endowed and equipped to communicate with each other through some medium, as our marvelous doings with what we call the Radio. We call it Radio because we have no better name. There were large butterflies that communicated daily with each other. Anyway, they do it now, and they could do it as easily then; so radio is not new.

There is a large moth, much larger than the ordinary butterfly, with wings that are from six to seven inches from tip to tip. They have a large proboscis on their heads which curls up when not engaged in the broadcasting business. When this proboscis is opened, there may be seen small black points on each side. Under the microscope they are like tiny hairs and can be unfolded to a standing position. The German scientist was the first to discover the strange powers of these butterflies. They were used by the German armies, so we have been informed. These moths go in pairs. The female would be kept in one part of the sector and the male in another far away part of the army. Codes written on tissue paper would be wound around the bodies of one or the other, and one would be released and find its mate, bearing the message across some dangerous sector.

An experiment was tried out in one of our large cities. The male was put in a glass jar at night and the female placed in another, and both were covered. She was then taken eight miles across the city and turned loose inside a screened porch. She at once opened up her proboscis and extended her antennae—the antennae are the little hairs mentioned before—which curled up on the screen and made a scratching noise. Later in the night the male was released. The next morning he was on the outside of the screen bearing marks of identification. By some kind of radio process they got in communication with each other. So even the radio is not new.

THE RUSSIAN BEAR

By C. E. Randall

THE student of prophecy has always seen the "bear of Russia" in his prophetic studies. Russia is described by Ezekiel as "Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal." Her past history, her present status, and her future role enamor one as he considers them; yet her national life has been so tragic that it causes one naturally to abhor her.

The Prophet informs us that God's face is against Russia. The reason is obvious. Russia is against God. When an individual or nation walks contrary to God, of course God must walk contrary to the individual or nation (Lev. 26:23, 24). Russia is against God because she is against His people and His Word. And we should be against Russia because she is against our God.

How any person who professes to be a follower of God can uphold the Russia of today is beyond our comprehension. The leadership of that nation is bent on blotting out every vestige of Christian thought and action. It is a crime for its nationals to possess a Bible. It is an offense of no small degree to have three or more children together and teach them religion, yet 25 million children are being taught the anti-religious and anti-moral doctrines of the Soviets. Russia is not content to confine her infernal teachings within her own borders, but is reaching to every direction of the compass. In Great Britain alone there are 126 known schools of the Russian Internationale. They are called the "Internationale Sunday Schools."

The great forces of unrighteousness are being prepared and drawn together ready for the appearance and leadership of the "man of sin." The proletariat of all nations is being marshaled in the fight on Christianity. Our defense is to be found in our God.—Church of God Messenger.

THE PROPHECY FULFILLED

THE prophecies that prognosticated the destruction of the various empires—the desolation of Babylon, Tyre, Nineveh—are met with the objection of the non-believer that it is the fate of all governments to have their rise and fall; hence, it was only shrewd guessing on the part of the Hebrew prophets. But what can be said to Moses' prophecy of the utter dispersion of the Jews among all the people of the earth? Here was not destruction, but a species of perpetual preservation; particularly is this miraculous from the fact that no other people can exist under every climatic change or condition.

The English of India and the Dutch of Java become sickly in the second generation and would cease to be if it were not for fresh importations of vigorously healthy young people, while the Jews are peculiarly and mysteriously true cosmopolitans, ubiquitous everywhere, from the coral strands of India to the frozen shores of Greenland, always rivaling the natives in bodily health and mental vigor, so that Dr. Nott and George R. Gliddon, while maintaining in their book each race of men had a distinct and separate origin, are forced to admit: "The single exception to all this may be noted in the Jews. Among all men they are isolated in religion; their isolation in a pathological sense is just as complete. There is a line of demarcation between them and the people among whom they dwell. They are neither born nor do they die like their neighbors. They have more children and more old men. They have better health and are less subject to epidemics. Their laws of marriage, their regulation of married life, their cooking, and their general hygiene distinguish them from other men. The low, crowded and abominably filthy district of Rome, in which the Jews reside with impunity, could hardly be inhabited by another people. Their ability to exist in nearly every climate of the world is a fact, however it be explained. They were domiciled in China in the third century of our era. Mungo Park found them in the heart of Africa eight hundred miles from the coast. They do as well in Norway as they do in Jerusalem, and they are located all around the equator, and are settled from pole to pole."—Messiah's Advocate.

HOW THE FINE WAS PAID

IT WAS at Grimsby County Police Court that a poor woman was fined twenty-five shillings during the Great War.

Her children had lighted the gas after having been put to bed. Thus a light shone from the window of her house at Immingham, and this was contrary to the lighting restrictions.

When she heard the amount she was ordered to pay, she answered, "I cannot pay it." She went on to tell the magistrates that her husband was serving in the army and that she had only a small sum for her children and herself to live upon.

She was told she must find the money in a fortnight, and replied that she feared it was not possible for her to do so even then.

Was she not like the transgressor who is face to face with judgment? He cannot answer for one in a thousand of his many sins. He cannot pay the awful debt he owes. A fortnight, or a year, or a century, would never enable him to blot out his guilt.

The poor woman was just leaving the court wondering how she was to meet the difficulty when one of the magistrates said, "Let her wait a moment."

Speaking with the other magistrates he soon agreed that they should pay the fine. In a few moments that amount was collected among them, and paid to the officer of the court. Then a receipt was handed to the woman, who expressed her surprise and thankfulness.

The fine was paid. The majesty of the law was upheld. But the woman was freed. She could go home in peace. Her need had been met by others.

The sinner who flees to Christ can rejoice that his need has been met. The debt he could never pay has been paid by the Son of God. His precious blood was the price of the sinner's freedom. The law's requisitions have been fully met. The claims of God's holy throne have all been answered. Justice is completely satisfied. The sinner who believes is justified from every charge.

God, who in righteousness pronounced the judgment, has Himself provided the Savior. The Son of God has borne the judgment; thus the sinner is set at rest.

The receipt has been given. The blessed proof that the demands of the throne of God have been met is found in the fact that Christ, who died for our sins, is seated on the throne in bright glory. Thus the one who trusts the Savior may be in perfect peace.—Selected.

THE OMITTED ONES

ONE day in a large church the communion service was about to be concluded. As the last members served at the altar were about to retire, the minister asked: "Have any been omitted?" A woman kneeling at the board said that it seemed to her as the minister asked this question that she could see women arise from the countries of the earth, from Japan, Korea, Africa, India, and China. They seemed to arise and cry out, "Yes, we have been omitted. No one has ever broken the Bread of Life to us."

"Sudden, before my inward, open vision,
Millions of faces crowded up to view;
Sad eyes that said, 'For us is no provision;
Give us your Savior, too.
Give us,' they cry, 'your cup of consolation.
Never to our outreaching hands 'tis passed.
We long for the Desire of every nation,
And, oh, we die so fast.'"

GOD'S CHOSEN PEOPLE

time our Gentile neighbors chose to remind us that Russia was another Egypt. It was not so bad within the pale; but in the Russian cities, and even more in the country districts, where Jewish families lived scattered by special permission of the police, who were always changing their minds about letting them stay, the Gentiles made the pass-over a time of horror for the Jews. Somebody would start up that lie about murdering Christian children, and the stupid peasants would get mad about it, and fill themselves with vodka, and set out to kill the Jews. They attacked them with knives and clubs, and scythes and axes, killed them or tortured them, and burned their houses. This was called a 'pogrom.' Jews who escaped the pogroms came with wounds on them, and horrible, horrible stories of little babies torn limb from limb before their mothers' eyes. Only to hear these things made one sob and sob and choke with pain. People who saw such things never smiled any more, no matter how long they lived; and sometimes their hair turned white in a day, and some people became insane on the spot."

After reading this it seemed some one stood at my side and quoted Romans 11:25-27, "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."

Read Isaiah 49:16, 17, "Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me. Thy children shall make haste; thy destroyers and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee."

Let me quote recent history proving this scripture literally fulfilled (Arthur James Balfour's letter to Lord Rothschild, November 2, 1917):

"I have much pleasure in conveying to you, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, the following declaration of sympathy with Jewish Zionist aspirations which has been submitted to and approved by the Cabinet: 'His Majesty's Government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any country.'"

I wish I had space to quote so many writers who are friends of Israel after the flesh. Leo Tolstoi wrote:

"What is a Jew? This question is not at all so old as it seems. Let us see what kind of peculiar creature the Jew is, which all the rulers and all nations have together and separately abused and molested, oppressed and persecuted, trampled and butchered, burned and hanged—and in spite of all this is yet alive! What is a Jew, who has never allowed himself to be led astray by all the earthly possessions which his oppressors and persecutors constantly offered him in order that he should change his faith and forsake his own Jewish religion?

"The Jew is that sacred being who has brought down from heaven the everlasting fire, and has illumined with it the entire world. He is the religious source, spring, and fountain out of which all the rest of the peoples have drawn their beliefs and their religions.

"The Jew is the pioneer of civilization. Ignorance was condemned in olden Palestine more even than it is today in civilized Europe. Moreover, in these wild and barbarous days, when neither life nor the death of anyone counted for anything at all, Rabbi Akiba did not refrain from expressing himself openly against capital punishment, a practice which is recognized today as a highly civilized way of punishment.

"The Jew is the emblem of civil and religious toleration, 'Love the stranger and the sojourner,' Moses commands, 'because you have been strangers in the land of Egypt.' And this was said in those remote and savage times when the principal ambition of the races and nations consisted in crushing and enslaving one another. As concerns religious toleration, the Jewish faith is not only far from the missionary spirit of converting people of other denominations, but on the contrary the Talmud commands the Rabbis to inform and explain to everyone who willingly comes to accept the Jewish religion, all the difficulties involved in the acceptance, and to point out to the would-be proselyte that the righteous of all nations have a share in immortality. Of such a lofty and ideal religious toleration not even the moralists of our present day can boast.

"The Jew is the emblem of eternity. He whom neither slaughter nor torture of thousands of years could destroy, he whom neither fire nor sword nor inquisition was able to wipe off from the face of the earth, he who was the first to produce the oracles of God, he who has been for so long the guardian of prophecy, and who transmitted it to the rest of the world—such a nation cannot be destroyed. The Jew is everlasting as is eternity itself."

How true God's Word is. "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities."—Amos 3:2.

PAPERS ON THE LORD'S COMING

and Him who sat thereon—God. But one of the details of that scene reveals "four beasts"—"four living ones," Diaglott; "four living creatures," Rotherham.

In chapter 1 of his prophecies Ezekiel also describes a vision of a throne of God. In connection with that throne, Ezekiel in verse 5 likewise saw "four living creatures." In chapter 10 he again had vision of a throne of Jehovah and of the same "four living creatures" of which, in verse

20, he proclaimed: "This is the living creature that I saw (in chapter 1) under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and I knew that they were the cherubims."

The description of Ezekiel's picture in respect to the "four living creatures" is very similar to the "four living creatures" of Revelation 4. They are in similar relation to the throne of God. In both they enhance the glory of the scenes. By inspiration Ezekiel names them "the cherubim."

THE MERCY SEAT AND THE CHERUBIM

Now the old covenant cherubim were always positioned as surrounding the throne or the presence of God. Especially is this true in their tabernacle settings. As described in Exodus 37:6-9 the cherubim were located within the Holy of holies, the chamber of God's throne or presence in the midst of Israel. By God's direction, Bezaleel "made two cherubims of gold, beaten out of one piece made he them, on the two ends of the mercy seat; one cherub on the end on this side, and another cherub on the other end on that side: out of the mercy seat made he the cherubims on the two ends thereof."

The mercy seat and the cherubim were of one piece. They were most important in the Holy of holies, God's room of the tabernacle. It was from upon the mercy seat and from between the cherubim that God's presence was revealed to the Aaronic priests. Both were required, to complete God's seat.

CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

Coming to the new covenant we find that the mercy seat of the old covenant illustrated none other than Christ Himself in the new. Speaking of our justification, Paul, in Romans 3:24-26, refers to "Christ Jesus: whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation . . ." The Greek word here for "propitiation" is hilasterion. In every other instance where it occurs in the New Testament, and in every instance where it occurs in the Septuagint, a Greek translation of the Old Testament, it is rendered "mercy seat." Such is the significance in Romans 3:25, for the mercy seat is the propitiatory covering, and the translators have merely given us the thought of the office and work of the mercy seat instead of giving us the word "mercy seat," itself. Paul, by inspiration, then, here says that God made Christ to be this mercy seat. And truly it is in and through Christ that God meets and rules His people under the new covenant even as it was from upon the mercy seat and between the cherubim that He manifested His presence and authority in the old covenant.

Now those furnishings, as well as the official acts, of the old tabernacle were all, an "example" (Heb. 8:5) or "patterns" (Heb. 9:23) or "shadow" (Heb. 10:1) of the furnishings, and official acts, "of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man."—Heb. 8:2. Those furnishings were inanimate; these are probably persons perfected for the glory of God. As the mercy seat was a shadow of the glorified Christ, so the cherubim, which were "made out of the mercy seat" in the old tabernacle, must have been a shadow of something in the new covenant tabernacle which was to be made out of Christ, its mercy seat—both "beaten out of one piece." Coming to Ephesians 5 we find Paul writing in verses 23-33 of Christ and the Church. In verse 30 he says, "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Speaking of the union of husband and wife in verse 31 he says: "They two shall be one flesh." He then explains his whole illustration in verse 32: "This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church." They are by God made one! That which is one with Christ, the mercy seat, is the cherubim, even the Church. It suffers with Him (Rom. 8:17) that it "may be also glorified together."

So far as I know, there is no other portion of God's creation that is of the same piece with Christ, bone of His bone, flesh of His flesh, and—may it be right to include—spirit of His spirit, as is the Church. For this reason, and for others which cannot now be presented, the writer is compelled to believe that the "four living ones" of Revelation 4, similar in description and position to the "living creatures" of Ezekiel 1 and 10, and which Ezekiel knew to be "the cherubim," are none other than the Church of the new covenant tabernacle, formed of Christ the mercy seat. From upon and through this mercy seat, surrounded by these cherubim, the Church, God will yet perfect all things.

John sees these in "the day of the Lord." The picture given to him was not a picture of things of man's day, but of things of "the Lord's day," among which he sees the Church gathered around the throne of God in the day soon to be upon us.

In the fifth chapter of Revelation John is caused to behold Christ before the throne of God, and the "four beasts," "living ones," prostrate in glad song and adoration. Christ has taken a scroll, sealed with seven seals, from the hand of God. The expectancy of mighty things thrilled them.

In chapter 6 Christ is revealed to John in verse 1 as opening the first seal. Instantly John "heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts ("living ones"—cherubim, Church) saying, . . ." As Christ successively opens seals two, three, and four, John hears the second, third, and fourth beasts ("living ones"—Church) saying. If these "living ones" are the Church, then we see the Church co-working with Christ in the judgment of that day.

The point I wish to make is that before ever Christ begins to open the seals of the scroll of Revelation 5, the Church, here called by the Diaglott "the living ones," and by Ezekiel called "cherubim," shall have been caught away to become "one" with Christ in the performance of those wonderful activities of "the day of the Lord"—activities which will precede His coming in the mighty power of Revelation 19, to overthrow the resisting human governments—the process of which overthrow, Jesus said in Matthew 24:21, will bring on a "tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."

Whether in secret or in open, the fact is that the Church will be caught away to assist Christ at the beginning of "the day of the Lord" in those judgments of this world which shall prepare it for His return to the Mount of Olives and Jerusalem for His millennial reign.

Abreast of the Times

Back to the Jubilee

"In this year of the jubilee shall ye return, every man, unto his possession."—Leviticus 25:13; Leeser.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 26.—One of the striking developments in American Jewish life, according to the Jewish Courier, is the widespread interest in and sympathy with the efforts and aspirations of the Palestinian Jewish workers, banded together in the Histadruth Haovdim Haclalith be' Eretz Yisroel (General Jewish Federation of Labor in Palestine).

This league may be described, says the Courier, as an association of progressive men and women who have united for the purpose of giving moral and material aid to the Jewish workers of Palestine, and especially to the economic and cooperative enterprises, and welfare and cultural institutions of their model organization, the Histadruth.

Among the ten fundamental objectives of the league enumerated, the first is of the greatest interest to the student of prophecy who is familiar with the land laws which were once in operation in Israel, and which, no doubt, will be restored under the Messiah. The first purpose is defined as follows:

"The redemption of the land by the Jewish National Fund, which is to keep it forever as the inalienable property of the Jewish people, and lease only so much of it to each settler as he and his family can cultivate with their own labor. This will not only obviate the evils of land speculation (see Isa. 5:8—Ed.), but make room for more settlers."

The effort to keep the land "forever as the inalienable property of the Jewish people" as a whole is in exact harmony with the divine purpose as originally stated when the land was given to Israel for an "everlasting possession." The entire earth is the Lord's, and both Jew and Gentile are but tenants by His permission.

Oldest Manuscript of the Bible

"I have found the book of the law."—2 Kings 22:8.

LONDON, Dec. 27.—What is looked upon by scholars as the oldest copy of the Bible in existence was handed over today by a special courier of the Soviet Russian Government to the custodians of the British Museum. This precious document was recently purchased, through the generosity of private contributors, for $500,000.

This exceedingly valuable copy of the Scriptures, which is known as the Codex Sinaiticus, for which the Soviet Government first demanded $2,500,000, is one of the most important of about 114 codices (manuscripts written on parchment), dating from the 4th to the 10th century. It is written in uncial Greek, and is believed to have been made as early as the 4th century.

The manuscript was originally discovered by Dr. L. F. C. Tischendorf, a German scholar, in 1859. Dr. Tischendorf found the now famous manuscript in a monastery on Mt. Sinai, and it was secured by means provided by the Tsar of Russia. His first knowledge of the codex was obtained when on a former visit to the monastery the monks presented him with 43 leaves as being of no particular value, but it was not until 15 years later that he was able to locate the remaining portions of the book.

Codex Sinaiticus was of much value to the scholars who produced the Revised Version of the Bible in 1881.

Religious Conditions in Russia

"Men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely."—Jesus.

VATICAN CITY, Dec. 27.—That the religious condition in Russia is not improved in spite of the assurance made to President Roosevelt by Commissar Litvinov (see this department of Nov. 28, 1933) is the assertion of Osservatore Romano, official Vatican newspaper, today. No change in the Soviet's bitter antagonism to religion has taken place, the paper declares. The Vatican organ says further that Litvinov merely referred Mr. Roosevelt to the Russian constitution, under which "persecution and atheism have triumphed."

Voliva Foresees the End

"The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever."—Deuteronomy 29:29.

ZION CITY, Ill., Dec. 16.—According to the teachings of Wilbur Glenn Voliva, General Overseer of the Christian Catholic Apostolic Church in Zion, and successor of John Alexander Dowie, founder of the movement, the end of the present order will be reached in 1935 or 1936. He declares that the financial difficulties through which the various business enterprises of Zion City are now passing "is the beginning of the period of great tribulation which will climax when true Christians disappear from the face of the earth to escape its horrors."

Overseer Voliva attributes the troubles that have overtaken his organization to the departure of his people from the rigid standard of virtue which he considers to have been the basis of the colony's former prosperity.

The times of the Gentiles, he affirms, will end in "four distinct epochal years," the first of which was the World War, 1914; the second, the Balfour Declaration guaranteeing the Jews a homeland in Palestine, 1917; the third, the termination of the Mohammedan caliphate, 1924; and the "end of the dispensation of grace," 1935-1936.

While the method of computation by which Voliva arrives at his conclusions may be seriously questioned, we can heartily agree with his declaration that "The age is dying! The present order of things is passing! The times of the Gentiles will soon end!"

LEST WE FORGET

ERE the tumult and the shouting die over Senior Book 3, recently published lesson series on God's kingdom, remember that the former publications of the National Berean Society are still in stock. Tracts, also, are at the disposal of any person or organization desiring them, free of all charges.

Senior books are issued in two different series: older books dated 1921-1923 and 1923-1925, but containing lessons which decidedly are not out of date, sell at 10 cents a copy; the new series (Senior Book 1, The Gospel Plan; Senior Book 2, Life and Immortality; Senior Book 3, God's Kingdom) sells at 25 cents a single copy, 22 cents a copy for 5 to 24, 20 cents a copy for 25 or more, for each volume of the series.

Junior books consist of one volume labeled "Junior Bible Lessons No. 3," selling at 10 cents a copy; the Children's Bible Story and Study Book, selling at 35 cents a single copy, 32 cents a copy for 5 to 24, 30 cents a copy for 25 or more; and The Hebrew People, selling at 30 cents a single copy, 27 cents a copy for 5 to 24, 25 cents a copy for 25 or more.

One Bible story book of the life of the Christ, entitled Jesus, the Light of the World, and written by Mrs. Mary A. Gesm, editor of this paper's Children's Page, has been issued; it is 25 cents a copy. Use it for prizes and presents in Sunday school, Berean, and church attendance or study contests.

All these books are mailed postpaid within 24 hours after receipt of the order. Remittances of over 50 cents should be sent as money orders. Place your order today for one or more of these publications with the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois.—Sales Committee.

Real Bereans study daily. Do you?

IS THIS YOUR MEETING?

COMING into the church and its services, do we find an atmosphere of enthusiasm and eager expectancy that compels attention and attracts others? Billy Sunday once described an average Christian Endeavor meeting after this fashion:

"The leader, after announcing one or two hymns, in a weak, apologetic voice says: 'This is a splendid topic, but I have not had much time for preparation so cannot say a great deal, but I am happy to have so many here to help make this a good meeting.' A pause—then some one gets up and recites a verse of Scripture and sits down. Another pause. Some one calls for Hymn No. 38 ('Oh, to Be Nothing, Nothing'). A long pause. 'Sing No. 52' ('Throw Out the Life Line'). 'And,' interpolates Mr. Sunday, 'they haven't strength to put up a clothesline.' Another pause. 'Have all taken part?' inquires the leader. Another pause, and finally a hymn and the benediction."—Selected.

"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

JESUS PROVES HIMSELF WORTHY

THE stories of the babyhood and the childhood of Jesus are stories we all love to hear and to tell over and over again. The story of any little baby is always interesting, but the one about Jesus is the very best of all. How the Son of God came to Mary in the most humble surroundings; how wise men and shepherds knelt before Him; how the angels sang a beautiful chorus, and the star of Bethlehem shed a glorious light over the earth—of all these stories we never grow tired.

Then the boy Jesus charms us, although we have only a word or two about Him. We know that Joseph and Mary fled with Jesus down into Egypt away from the cruel Herod. After that wicked ruler was dead they returned to their home up in Nazareth, where we read Jesus "was subject unto them." And I wish each one of you could tell me what you think those four words mean. Tell Mother or your teacher, won't you?

The only story we have of the boy Jesus is of His trip to Jerusalem with His mother and Joseph. You all remember that He talked with the doctors of the law in the temple and astonished all of them at His answers. And no wonder, for we read that He "grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him."

Wouldn't you like to have seen Him? I imagine there was a beautiful light in His eyes, that His shoulders were straight, and His step was firm, don't you? I can see Him in Joseph's carpenter shop, helping whenever He could. And I'm sure all the little children, as well as older ones, loved to be with Him.

At the opening of this new year if each one of you boys will take Jesus for your pattern and will try to do as you think He would in all things, you, too, will grow in wisdom as you grow in stature, and not only people will love you, but God as well. Won't you all try it?

The girls are not left out either, for the rules of life that apply to the boys are just as good for the girls. To be the sort of girl that Jesus would call good is to be a very wonderful girl indeed. And I'm sure you'll all be very happy in the trying.

Today we have the first picture of Jesus as a man. With such a boyhood behind Him, we know He would continue to please God and to obey Him in all things. If the first thing Jesus wanted to do was to be baptized, it must have been a most important thing, don't you think so?

We enter the waters of baptism to have all our sins washed away and forgiven by God. Jesus had no sins to be forgiven, but that didn't keep Him from obeying all God's commands. He wanted to be a perfect example for us, and He didn't put Himself above anyone. When you understand what God wants you to do, you will want to be baptized also.

The most wonderful part of the picture is just as Jesus and John came up out of the water. A lovely white dove fluttered down to earth, alighting on Jesus' shoulder, and a voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Just think of it! God calls us His sons and daughters if we obey Him and are baptized, and He will be well pleased with us also. You all love to have Father and Mother pleased with you, I know, and it's even better to have God pleased with you.

At the beginning of this new year let's start another club, a little different from our Bible Scrapbook Club. We'll call it, "Sons and Daughters of the King." You know, Jesus is the one we mean by the words, "the King."

To be a member of this club we must take Jesus for our pattern; we must try to do as He would do at all times. The only way we can do that is to find out what He did, and the only place to find that out is in His Book, the Bible.

So the first requirement for membership in our new club will be to study your Sunday school lesson each week, either from this page, or from the Truth Seekers' Quarterly, or as your Sunday school teacher gives it to you ahead of time. But do not forget—always with your BIBLE. Get Father or Mother to help you.

If you do not go to Sunday school, won't you start next Sunday? Or if you can't go, ask Father or Mother to have one at home and invite your neighbors to join. Teach them about our King.

Now who will be first to be a member of our "Sons and Daughters of the King" club? Drop me a card, addressing me at 811 S. Fourth St., Oregon, Ill., and your name and address and age will be given on this page. Tell me other things of interest, such as the name of your Sunday school, your teacher, your class; or if you have a Sunday school at home tell me all about it. I'm waiting to hear from you.

BAPTISM AND TEMPTATION OF JESUS

Matthew 3:1 to 4:11

Devotional Reading: Hebrews 2:11-18

GOLDEN TEXT

In all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren.—Hebrews 2:17.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Baptism and Temptation of Jesus.

Aim: To show that baptism is necessary, and that knowledge of the Bible is of great help in overcoming temptation.

Basic Truth: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it."—1 Cor. 10:13.

I. The Baptism of Jesus. (Matt. 3:13-17.) Jesus is our example in all things. He declared that to fulfill all righteousness it was necessary for Him "who did no sin" (1 Pet. 2:22) to be baptized. Had He failed in this act of obedience, He would have sinned. No requirement of God can be omitted and one be guiltless before Him.

II. The First Temptation. (Matt. 4:1-4.) There are but three ways in which temptation assails us: "For all that is in the world" in the way of sin results from "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" (1 John 2:16). Jesus' first temptation reached Him through the "lust of the flesh," i. e., through the demand made by natural hunger. To satisfy His hunger He was moved to exercise a power which God had given Him for the sole purpose of proving the divine source of His message. Cf. Matt. 11:2-6; Mark 16:17-20. Jesus reproved the multitude for seeing only the material benefits of the miracles. Cf. John 6:26, 27.

III. The Second Temptation. (Matt. 4:5-7.) To leap from the pinnacle of the temple simply to prove to Himself that God would protect Him from all danger would be a sin. Had the time ever arisen when such an act was required that He might carry on the Father's work, it would have constituted a work of righteousness. A deed that is sinful under some circumstances may become fully justified when prompted by a different motive on a later occasion.

IV. The Third Temptation. (Matt. 4:8-11.) Jesus knew He was eventually to come into possession of "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them," but to accept them at the hands of Satan and before the time assigned by God would be sin, especially at the price He was required to pay. Cf. Acts 1:6, 7.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Duty Performed; Then Approval. Yes, the Master had a work to do. It was His Father's work, work which His Father had assigned Him to do. This work started in early youth. When but a boy of twelve, He said: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"—Luke 2:49. When Christ's public ministry began, He was especially set apart for it by baptism. When He had obeyed the Father in this service, the Father showed His approval by saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The approval came after He had obeyed. This is likewise true in our individual lives. We must obey the Lord and do what He wants us to do, even being baptized before His approval will be granted us. Obedience before acceptance. Duty performed before approval won. Obedience is better than sacrifice.

Temptation Became a Door of Hope. Christ was tempted in all points like us, yet without sin. He met temptation in all its points. The mount of temptation became a door of hope to Him. He overcame temptation by relying on the Word of God. When one relies on God's Word and trusts implicitly in its teachings and truth, every temptation will have a door of hope and will become a channel of strength, for victory over temptation means additional strength. The darts of the enemy have no effect on the armor of God. It is a tried and dependable defense. The secret of Christian defense and growth is found in the Master's statement in Matt. 4:4. There is power in the Word when it is allowed free course of operation in an individual's life.

God calls man to duty; man performs the duty: then God approves, bestows His blessing, and assures a future reward.

Knowing the Word and strictly adhering to its teachings will provide a door of hope to every temptation, and the mount of temptation will become one of victory.—C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

Human nature is such that it comprehends likenesses much more readily than differences. Christ, being-made like man, is more easily understood than had He been made altogether like God. Christ walked among men; He lived with them, saw their needs, and, like men, was tempted in all points as they, yet sinned not; but having had this experience, He is able to help men when tempted.

"Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted."—Heb. 2:17, 18.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

God's Victorious Son

There are but three sources of temptations open to man. These are enumerated: "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life."—1 John 2:16. The serpent used all three when it tempted Eve.

The wily deceiver used the same three temptations against our Savior. Our admiration for Jesus should increase when we consider the intensity of His temptation compared with that of the first two. They were surrounded with plenty, while He had tasted no food for forty days. Jesus was tempted with kingdoms, while they were masters of all. Jesus could have made a spectacular jump from the temple, while there was little to feed their "pride of life."

Jesus could conquer because He could truthfully say with His father David: "With my whole heart have I sought thee."—Psa. 119:10. The devil even quoted Scripture in his attempt to deceive; but Jesus had learned from David, who said: "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee."—Psa. 119:11. Jesus had learned to "rightly" divide "the word of truth." That was His protection, and it is ours today.

Jesus had His loins girded with truth; His heart was protected with the breastplate of righteousness; on His head was the helmet of salvation. To this armor He added the shield of faith and the sword of the Spirit.—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Jesus Is Baptized.

Memory Verse: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matt. 3:17b.

Who can tell me the story about the birth of John the Baptist? (If pupils cannot, teacher should tell them.)

When John came to be a man, he was a very great preacher. He taught the people about Jesus.

One day as John was preaching to the people on the banks of the Jordan River, Jesus appeared. He asked that He, too, might be baptized as the other people were baptized.

But John refused by saying, "I am not good enough to baptize You. You should baptize me."

Jesus insisted, so John baptized Him.

When the two came up out of the water, the Spirit of God, which looked like a beautiful white dove, came down from heaven, and a voice said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Yes, it was God speaking.

Immediately after Jesus' baptism He went out into a wilderness (desert), where He went without food for forty days. There the devil tempted Him three times. But not once did Jesus do as the devil wished. But every time Jesus was prepared to answer him with a verse from the Bible. (Teacher should bring out story complete.) After the devil had gone, the angels from heaven came down and fed and cared for Jesus. Would this have happened if Jesus had obeyed the devil? I'm sure not.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

VARINA, IOWA

There will be a meeting held at the home of Harold Smith near Varina on Sunday, Jan. 7, 1934. A cordial invitation is extended to all in the vicinity to be present at this service.
Mrs. Anna Boyanovsky.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

Christ's Day program in our church was a beautiful scene, bringing to our memories again that Holy Word which became flesh and dwelt among us and how we beheld His glory as the "Bright and Morning Star." The Bible school did well in picturing this wondrous sight. The church was almost filled, even though the night was bitterly cold, thermometer registering 22 below zero.

The young people's Bereans are meeting regularly each Sunday evening to study. An old-fashioned prayer and praise service each Wednesday night keeps us moving forward.

We are now looking forward to the new year with anticipations of a greater effort for our heavenly Father and His coming kingdom. This week is a week of prayer for the coming election of officers that God's will may be done in our works. Friday of this week the officers of the church will be selected.

After the new year has come we expect to have a fellowship gathering to hear the past year's work and be inspired by the program that is before us.

God never fails; therefore, we stand before Him with childlike faith, with willingness to exercise, and more determination to serve Him.

The Restitution Herald is truly a beacon of light to us, because its pages are filled with such that keeps us from steering into the rocks. This paper should be in every Christian home. God bless our N. B. I. and all during the coming year. Let us watch and pray.
A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

A FRIENDLY CRITICISM

We are always glad to receive friendly criticisms, as they help us to correct mistakes that might otherwise be overlooked. The suggestions made in the following letter from Mrs. M. Hudson, DeLand, Florida, however, are not sufficiently specific for us to consider them intelligently. We are glad to receive the letter, nevertheless. Perhaps when we come to understand these two questioned doctrines better we may find ourselves in agreement after all.

"I have received sample copies of your paper, and think it is very good, and am enclosing my subscription for the year. I have not wasted the sample copies I have received, but have mailed them out to friends. I like most of what I find in the paper, but there are two of the doctrines it sets forth that I do not believe, or will say that taking them altogether I do not think they are scriptural, not according to my belief anyway, and I have been a student of the Bible for some 18 years."

IN MEMORIAM

Mary Campbell McLauchlan, daughter of Peter and Mary Campbell, was born February 15, 1843, near New Lisbon, Ohio. She taught school for some years in Cleveland, Ohio, and was then asked to take a position in a high school in Portsmouth, Ohio, and then at Rayen High School in Youngstown, Ohio.

After a number of years of successful teaching she was united in marriage with the late Robert McLauchlan, and resided in Cleveland, Ohio, for many years. For some fifteen years last past, she spent her winters in Miami, Fla., until last winter, when she was unable to make the accustomed trip; and during the last few years she spent her summers in the home of her nephew, Prosser Campbell, where she was tenderly cared for by her nephew and his family. She now sleeps in death awaiting the Master's call.

Aunt Mary, as she was known to her intimate friends, was, in many ways, a remarkable woman. I first met her in her spacious home in February, 1905, from which time I have known her well. She was firm in faith, intelligent, well read; and having traveled much, she was well informed and broad-minded, and withal, charitable and kind, and most generous with others, never forgetting nor neglecting those who were less fortunate than herself. It was her custom, on the stated holidays of the year, to have some lonely unfortunates seated at her generous table, to bring good cheer and encouragement into their lives. She was humble, and exercised a most contrite heart.

She kept inviolate her faith and covenants with her Lord; and at the ripe age of ninety years goes to her rest, leaving us who have associated with her closely in life to remember with gratitude her sweet influence, helpful counsel, and assistance in bearing life's burdens. An ever-green oasis in life is Aunt Mary McLauchlan, to me a most pleasant memory.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

L. E. Conner and Harvey Krogh, Jr., two of our northern Illinois pastors, attended the ministerial conference held in Aurora, Ill., at the Advent Christian College last week.

We regret to learn that Bro. D. B. Jackson of Los Angeles, Calif., has lost the sight of one eye, and that the other is nearly gone. He assures us, however, that his faith does not waver and never will until the Lord comes and restores his faculties fully and forever.

It is interesting to note the postmarks on the letters reaching our office. As we glance over a part of the afternoon's mail we see letters from Canada, Virginia, Florida, Colorado, and Minnesota. God has people everywhere who are looking for the coming of the Lord!

Sr. Amy L. Young, Seattle, Wash., adds a word of commendation for our "Abreast of the Times" page, and informs us that the Advent Christian Church which she attends has recently installed as its pastor Eld. Alvin E. Lobb, formerly of Pasadena, Calif. It was our pleasure to make the acquaintance of Eld. Lobb while in the West, and we feel sure that the church at Seattle will prosper spiritually under his leadership.

Our esteemed N. B. I. treasurer, T. J. Ellis of Waterloo, Iowa, is to return to the Illinois Central Railway Hospital in Chicago for observation on January 2. Bro. Ellis is suffering from a heart ailment, which, while not apparently of a critical nature, forbids over-exertion.

Sr. Lilian Railton of Fonthill, Ont., sends her greeting to the office, and assures us that she passed a very happy Christmas, and wishes for us all a new year filled with the best that God can provide.

The editor and his family wish to thank their friends throughout the country for the greetings they have received. It would be quite impossible for them to answer each one separately at this time, but they hope to do so in person in "the sweet by and by." It warms one's heart to be remembered on our Lord's birthday by loved ones at a distance. May God bless and keep you all.

"I am sending the 'Truth Seekers' Quarterly, to Mr. _____, who is teaching a junior class of boys and searching for additional material. I thought he would like a book like mine," writes Sr. Nora Johnson of Briggsdale, Colo. We hear much in these days about "child-centered" Sunday school literature. We try to have ours "truth-centered," "Bible-centered," and "Christ-centered." We trust the quarterly will be of much value to this teacher of boys.

Our esteemed Advent Christian contemporary, the "World's Crisis," is to be congratulated on the splendid series of articles that has recently appeared in its columns from the pen of W. E. Thompson, entitled, "The Nation Without a Country." It is needless to say that the nation referred to is that of the Jews. Without waiting for permission from the "Crisis" we are planning to republish these articles soon for the benefit of our readers.

FONTHILL, ONTARIO

The following letter, dated December 27, 1933, while evidently not intended for publication, is of such a stimulating nature that the editor feels it should appear in our columns just as it was received. This report indicates a well-organized effort has been put into effect to carry the gospel to those who are not acquainted with its beauty and appeal. The letter follows in full.

"It will soon be three months since we began our first efforts in the city of Welland. On Sunday night, Oct. 8, Bro. Hoskins of Minnesota and I started a three weeks' evangelistic campaign in the heart of the city. As previously reported by Bro. Hoskins the attendance and interest were good from the very start.

"After the meetings came to a close regular work was started. Preaching service Sunday nights and Bible study on Wednesday nights. Since beginning the regular work the Sunday night services have been handicapped by weather conditions. Excepting a couple of nights, the weather has been very inclement and has been a damper to regular attendance.

"The Wednesday night Bible classes have gone beyond our expectations, both in interest and attendance. Our highest attendance was reached on December 13 when we had 36 present. The problems to meet are different from any place I have ever labored. We have a mixture of beliefs that is rather unusual. We have Russelites, Anglicans, Baptists, Theosophists, Presbyterians, Four Square Mission, and Catholics. At our last study we had nine Italians that have left the Catholic Church. We have several of these families that are very much interested and have been very faithful in attendance.

"These attending are really 'out-called ones' from other churches who have a love for the kingdom truths. If the work can be carried on with the present momentum, there will be some real, visible results in the future. Many of these folk are energetic and capable workers and should be able to do a great work for the Lord.

"I want to add a word about Bro. Hoskins before closing this report. His work here was very commendable. One could not hope to have a worker cooperate better than he did. He is always congenial and a good mixer and above all radiates a spiritual atmosphere in all his associations. His labors here deserve commendation and I am happy to recommend him as possessing sterling qualities and worthy of full confidence.

"Trusting that shortly I can report to you some faithful fruitage from the Welland field, I remain,

"Yours fraternally,
"Clyde E. Randall."

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD

117 were in Sunday school on December 24, at which time Christmas sacks were passed out to the younger members. Bro. Clarence Lapp gave the morning sermon, speaking upon the theme, "Let No Man Take Thy Crown."

On Christmas night a Christmas cantata was given to an audience of nearly three hundred. This was the result of persistent effort on the part of Sr. Fay Pearson.

We are glad to have Sr. Brewer home again, after her long trip in the West. Bro. and Sr. Clarence Lapp, with whom she went, are spending the holidays here among relatives and brethren. Bro. Lapp is scheduled to deliver the evening sermon on Sunday, Dec. 31.

In spite of many trials through which many of the church are passing we have much for which to be grateful, and we face the New Year with zeal.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith, Kokomo, Ind., held its annual Christmas entertainment Sunday evening, Dec. 24. A program of about an hour and a half was enjoyed by a large audience. There were recitations, songs, dialogues, piano solos, a pantomime, and a playlet by the senior class.

After the entertainment a Christmas tree, which had been loaded with presents, was unloaded and each member of the Sunday school received presents. Following the Christmas tree, each one received a treat of candy, popcorn, and oranges.

There was not any member of the Sunday school who had a cheerless Christmas.

A daughter which has been named Barbara Joan has come to claim a place in the lives of Bro. and Sr. Edgar Harvey. Bro. Deo Harvey says that now there is another one to criticize his sermons. The mother was formerly Miss Mary Whittaker. May the Lord watch over them all.

COMMUNICATION

At this Christmas time my mind turns back to the past, especially those who have preached the gospel here at the Hillisburg church in Indiana. The following are a few of the ministers who have served us: Bro. A. H. Zilmer, Bro. Halstead, Bro. Wagoner, Bro. Neal, Bro. VanVactor, Bro. J. W. Williams, Bro. Austin. Those who are living I would be pleased to hear from if opportunity permits.

A BULLETIN IDEA FOR PASTORS

The Layman Company is now putting out its tithing pamphlets in four-page bulletin form, printed on two inside pages only, other two pages blank, for local material. The cost will give a saving of at least $5 per week to any pastor who uses four-page bulletins in his Sunday services. A good opportunity for five or ten weeks of tithe education without expense or special distribution. 32 subjects to choose from. Sample set, 15 cents. Prices 40 cents per 100; $3.00 per 1,000.

The Layman Company, 730 Rush St., Chicago, Ill.

ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

We hold our services in the W. C. T. U. Hall at 1904 North Main Street. Sunday school convenes every Sunday at 9:45; and Berean class every Friday evening at 7:45. Bro. Conner preaches for us on the second and fourth Sundays each month: morning service at 11:00 o'clock, and evening service at 7:30. We cordially invite all who can to meet with us in any of these services.

“JESUS WEPT”

that brought it on. In disease the impaired function must be restored to normal by healing the diseased organ. In sleep the function must be restored in order to awaken the person so affected. In death only by the restoring of the other functions of the body along with those of the brain can there be a revival. (We could not by any stretch of the imagination conceive of the brain's being revived without the other parts of the body.) Only by a resurrection, which is the greatest miracle, can complete restoration of consciousness take place.

As Jesus stood beside the tomb of Lazarus, He realized that man is in biological functions an animal: when his functions cease, his consciousness ceases; and, hence, his emotions of love, joy, and sorrow are departed. He realized that He had the power to restore those lost functions, but only temporarily at that time. But the knowledge of that better hope, coupled with the power that He had, overcame His human feelings: and He gave way to sorrow for His dead friend Lazarus. The Jews who stood by understood the emotions of the Savior, for they said: “Behold how he loved him!”

“SCATTER SEEDS OF KINDNESS”

WE REMEMBER, just as though it were yesterday, when and where we first heard the singing of this sweet song; yet fifty-five years have passed, and the boy of scarcely fourteen has been touched with the whiteness of time. We were on our journey west, to the land of promise where the sun nightly sank into the ocean and the briny deep blocked the further encroachment of man. The emigrant trains were being made up at Omaha, and the superintendent quickly and intelligently classified the passengers for the various coaches. Our father, being a physician and a minister of the gospel, placed us in the rear car of the train and among a refined and godly people. All was bustle and excitement as, in the early evening, our long train pulled out across the wide prairies of Nebraska and into the tractless desert beyond. We were nine days on that train running from Omaha to Sacramento, California. But they were happy days, and many fine people were met.

Often the whole car of people would sing gospel songs by the hour; and it was on such an occasion that a gentleman with a fine baritone voice sang, “Scatter Seeds of Kindness,” and it has clung to us ever since—

“Let us gather up the sunbeams,
Lying all around our path;
Let us keep the wheat and roses,
Casting out the thorns and chaff;
Let us find our sweetest comfort
In the blessings of today,
With a patient hand removing
All the briars from the way.”

“For many years,” said Mr. Sankey, “this was the favorite hymn of Francis Murphy, the great temperance lecturer, and was the keynote of all his meetings. I had the pleasure of attending many of his services in Chicago, and have seen him move an audience to tears by his pathetic rendering of this hymn. It is believed that thousands of drinking men have been saved through its instrumentality.”

“Strange we never prize the music
Til the sweet-voiced bird is flown!
Strange that we should slight the violets
Til the lovely flowers are gone!
Strange that summer skies and sunshine
Never seem one half so fair,
As when winter's snowy pinions
Shake the white down in the air.”

Mrs. Albert Smith, the author of this song, was childless, although very fond of children, shown in the last two verses—

“If we knew the baby fingers,
Pressed against the window pane,
Would be cold and stiff tomorrow—
Never trouble us again—
Would the bright eyes of our darling
Catch the frown upon our brow?
Would the prints of rosy fingers
Vex us then as they do now?”

“Ah! those little ice-cold fingers,
How they point our memories back
To the hasty words and actions
Strewn along our backward track!
How those little hands remind us,
As in snowy grace they lie,
Not to scatter thorns—but roses—
For our reaping by and by.”

Dear friends, what a horrible word is “regret”! It lives with us all through life. In our waking hours or during the silent watches of the night the word burns fiercely into the innermost channels of our minds and stands a constant menace to tranquillity and peace. One cannot wonder that the poet burst out with a wail of regret when he wrote, “Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these—it might have been!” Yes, it might have been! Had we not sown those hasty words and actions, how different would have been the reaping—“wheat and roses,” instead of “thorns and chaff.” Do we perform the little acts of kindness and speak the words of comfort and cheer as often as we should? Or do our companions catch the frown of irritation and vexation upon our brow all too often? Have we tried “removing all the briars from the way” with patient hand and loving heart?

Strange we never prize the music and the flowers and the sunshine until it is too late!

“Then scatter seeds of kindness,
Then scatter seeds of kindness,
THEN SCATTER SEEDS OF KINDNESS
For our reaping by and by.”

—Dr. J. B. Chapman in Messiah's Advocate.

The Nation Without a Country

THERE are times when we are brought face to face with the tragedy of retribution in the life of the individual; but in the case of nations, we are seldom permitted to witness the working out of divine justice. In our own day, the terrible retribution which a sinful nation brought upon itself has been unrolled before us like a mighty moving picture, full of startling reality. This is the recent persecution of the Jews in Germany. In Deuteronomy 28:49 this warning is given: "The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand."

When these words were written, the ancestors of the modern Germans were probably still driving their flocks and herds across the plains in their original Aryan home; and an instance of the marvelous truth of the prophecy is seen in the fact that the eagle is now the emblem of modern Germany. Under the Hitler Government the Jews have suffered the full punishment foretold in this warning.

Time after time divine utterance called the Israelites to forsake the worship of idols and turn to the true and living God. The Old Testament is full of Messianic promises. Daniel foretells the days of Christ: "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks."

In this way prophet after prophet pleaded with the rebellious Jews, but they continued to harden their hearts, until at last Christ mourned over them in His touching words: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

Throughout the centuries the wrath of God has fallen upon this disobedient people, and even in our own day the persecution they have undergone has moved all Christendom to pity.

The keynote of the following series of articles, which have just appeared in the "World's Crisis," is found in the concluding paragraph, "The Lord loveth whom he chasteneth." An inspiring note of hope runs through them all—the hope that eventually "he that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock."

For some time the eyes of the world have been turned toward the Jews in Germany, and it has been a shock to all civilized nations to learn of this outbreak of cruelty. It was well known that many of Hitler's political opponents were to be found among the Jews, but the world was thunderstruck to learn that the Hitler Government had resorted to the methods of the Inquisition in dealing with these members of the opposition. The stories which have come from Germany of torture, mutilation, and murder of Jewish men, women, and children have shocked all hearts, and the blood stains from these cruelties are leaving a mark which modern German civilization will find it hard to efface. Yet though the world has been horrified, no official protest has been made; no warship has been sent into German waters; no Government has taken action—and why not?

II

WHY has no official action been taken regarding the persecution of the Jews in Germany? Because the Jews occupy a unique and tragic place in the world. They are a nation without a country, nationals without a government, a people, and a great people, without army or navy, without president or parliament, without premier or king, and with no political body or weapon to right their wrongs.

Much has been said and written about the duty and loyalty of the citizen to his Government, of the patriot to his country, and rightly so; for the greatness of every great nation is based upon the loyalty and patriotism of its people. But there is another side of the picture at which we have looked very little. There is another aspect of the question, which has seldom been emphasized. This is the duty and responsibility of the Government to its nationals. Recently we have been given an outstanding instance of a Government ready to meet its responsibilities, and prompt to fulfill its obligations. Side by side with the accounts of Jewish sufferings in Germany the newspapers have been full of the trial of six British subjects, unfairly accused in Russia. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."—Jesus.

O GOD OUR LORD

O God our Lord, to Thee we come,
With overflowing hearts,
To praise Thee for the hope and cheer,
Thy grace to us imparts.

We lift to Thee our voice in prayer,
To laud Thy glorious name;
Through all the changes wrought by sin
Thy love remains the same.

O keep us, Lord, we humbly pray,
Within Thy shelt'ring arm,
Protected from temptation's snare,
From sin's seductive charm.

THE SUPREME COURT OF THE CHURCH

FROM the beginning of the Christian dispensation the church has frequently found itself aligned in opposition to the policies and requirements of political governments. This is unavoidable at times, and does not reflect on the patriotism or loyalty of the followers of Christ toward the Governments under which they live, nor does it assign to the Governments unworthy motives in inaugurating such policies. The law by which the church is governed is divine, and divine laws do not always appear feasible or even desirable to man's wisdom, "for they are foolishness to him."

The Christian is obligated to scrupulously obey the ordinances of state and nation wherever and whenever they do not directly conflict with the higher spiritual requirements of God. But the Lord must ever be recognized as supreme in the realm of conscience. The principle laid down by Peter and the other apostles when they were called before the high priest and the council and questioned concerning their disobedience in preaching in the name of Jesus after they had been forbidden to do so holds good today.

"Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men."—Acts 5:29. God had commanded them by an angel when He had released them from prison, to "go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life" (Acts 5:20). Here was an instance where the disciples were positively commanded to disobey the requirements of the constituted authorities, and in spite of their demands to carry on God's work faithfully.

In our "Abreast of the Times" department attention is directed today to the "rebellion" of the German Evangelical Lutherans against the demands of the Nazi Government in its anti-Semitic campaign. This unfortunate situation presents a striking illustration of the way in which the conscientious follower of the Lord may be forced at times to place himself unequivocally in opposition to the Government. No law should be enacted that provides for the restriction of religious liberty, for man's first obedience must be rendered to God.

The majority of the members of the Church of God throughout the country have strong conscientious scruples against all forms of military training or service. For the Church of God has held since the beginning of its organized activity that "the spirit of Christ's teaching is opposed to the taking of human life, and that even though Governments under which they live so command, the disciple of the Lord is not privileged to go to war, either to kill or to aid in the killing of human beings; that to do so would jeopardize their hope of eternal life."

The Bible, as the only inspired expression of God's will, must remain at all times and under all conditions, the Supreme Court of Appeal in all matters pertaining to the conscience. The fundamentally beneficent purpose of government must be recognized. Our human rulers must be honored. The laws they put into effect must be respected and obeyed in all things wherein they do not prevent our unrestricted service and obedience to God.

The laws of our land may sometimes appear to be arbitrary and despotic. But they should be obeyed by the Christian if they do not prevent his service to God. They may even be contrary to our sense of justice, yet unless they conflict with our conscientious understanding of God's will they should still be observed. It is only, we insist, when the laws of the State come into actual conflict with requirements of the Lord that the Christian is justified in refusing to comply with their demands.

Jesus made the duty of the disciple with respect to government plain when He said, "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's." Our first duty is to God, and His will only is superior in the way of authority to that of the State.

Unchristian Hate

By Lyman Booth

THIS word is sometimes used in Scripture, and in common conversation, to denote a less degree of love, or attachment, or liking. It does not always mean to detest or abhor, or to treat with contempt. For instance, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." That is to say, Jacob was God's preference. The two terms, "love" and "hate," express but the degree of love for both.

Luke 14:26 carries the same thought. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." The hate here expressed does not imply a total dislike. Not that we abhor or utterly detest any member of our household or friends. Hatred or bitter aversion finds no place in Christian character. Our Lord does not say we should cease to love the members of our household or kindred or friends, but that our love for Him should be greater. Matthew 10:37 expresses His meaning more fully. "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." Not that we should love others less, but that our love for Him and His Word should be supreme, for as our love for Him increases, so in like measure our love for others will grow.

Tillotson said, "Our Savior's meaning is to be extended no further than the readiness and willingness, wherever God shall call us to it, to quit all our temporal interests and enjoyments, and even life itself, the dearest of all other things to us, and to submit to any temporal inconvenience and suffering for His sake."

Our Lord used the word "hate" in strict conformity to His custom of stating any great truth in the most startling and extreme form of speech in order to make it impressive and to fix it firmly in the memory. Indeed, some of His forms of speech were so mandatory as to seem almost paradoxical to His hearers. It appears at times as if it were necessary that He should speak in this manner in order to gain their attention and to govern their thoughts.

Jesus presents Himself as having absolute authority over men,

His teachings breathe this authority, and it is said of Him that He taught "as one having authority, and not as the scribes" (Matt. 7:29). He counted men as belonging to Him by absolute right, as having been given Him by His Father, that He might rule over them forever. His invitations for men to follow Him were more in the nature of a command. He said to Philip, to Levi, and to the sons of Zeb-edee, "Follow me," and they left all and followed Him.

Jesus requires all to consider their lives and possessions as devoted to Him who calls Himself their Savior. Why should He not so consider them; has He not purchased them with His own blood? While He allows no rival, He is not jealous, but demands of His followers absolute and loving service, and if need be a sacrifice of everything to Him. When one has reached this high degree of resignation to Him, he can confidently exclaim with Paul, "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. 8:38, 39.

Every true Christian or follower of Christ will find in Paul's experience a description of what he himself should be, and also abundant encouragement, consolation, and guidance. In Paul we see a man in Christ Jesus. In him sin had been judged, condemned, and set aside. In such as he the spirit of Christ dwells continually. Though the flesh is in him he dwells in the Spirit. He has to mortify the deeds of the body, even though it be a constant and painful struggle. Besides this he is beset with manifold afflictions. He is living in a world of suffering and even all creation groans by reason of bondage, and he groans within himself waiting for the redemption of the body.

As we are the objects of that high degree of love which God has commended to us in His Son, it follows as a certain and sure result that no limit can be given to our happiness, no treasure in the mine too rich, no duration too long, no communion with God too close or intimate which we have not a just right to expect. As Paul has said, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how

The Cruel Cross of Life

What silences we keep year after year
With those who are most near to us and dear;
We live beside each other day by day
And speak of myriad things, but seldom say
The full sweet word that lies just in our reach,
Beneath the commonplace of common speech.

Then out of sight and out of reach they go—
These close, familiar friends who loved us so!
And sitting in the shadow they have left,
Alone with loneliness and sore bereft,
We think, with vain regret, of some fond word
That once we might have said and they have heard.

For weak and poor the love that we expressed
Now seems, beside the past, sweet unconfessed;
And slight the deeds we did to those undone,
And small the service spent to treasure won,
And undeserved the praise for word and deed
That should have overflowed the simple need.

This is the cruel cross of life, to be Full-visioned only when the ministry
Of death has been fulfilled, and in the place
Of some dear presence is but empty space.
What recollected services can then Give consolation for the "might have been"?
—Selected.

shall he not with him also freely give us all things?"—Rom. 8:32.

It is Christ that died for us, to take away our sins, and is risen again for us to clothe us in His righteousness, who is now at the right hand of God, ever making intercession for us that we may be supported under every trial and danger to strengthen in temptation, to deliver from the sin of unbelief and all other sins. To gird us about with the righteousness of faith, and to crown us with all those beautiful graces which grow out of perfect faith, that we may be admitted into the presence of the Father into which our elder brother is now entered, for He has said, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

Because of His promises of such exalted privileges, we should be humble, and depend upon His strength. Place more trust in Him and less in the arm of flesh. Cultivate greater love for Him and less for self. This preparation and training will prove useful whenever brought to a real conflict. This is the only way in which we may prove ourselves more than conquerors through Him that loved us. More than this we cannot do, and surely we should not do less if we expect to win a victor's crown.

Radio in Prophecy

There is a statement in the Bible to the effect that for every idle word we shall give an account in the day of judgment. Again it is mentioned in the Bible of a book being opened, and another book in which are recorded the deeds done in the body. Here the mind becomes amazed when it is reminded of the millions now living and of the millions that have lived since the time probation began. Only infinite omnipotence could ever devise such a stupendous conception, but in our new discoveries of this age-old organization of the elements and forces we have found out that nothing is lost. We have long known the indestructibility of matter, but now our experts of the air tell us that it is within the possibility of radio powers, and in the not very remote future, that we may penetrate the eternal archives of the universe and gather the voice of the Savior as He spoke by the Sea of Galilee—hear His sermon on the mount and His agonies in the Garden of Gethsemane; also, the orations of Demosthenes and Cicero as they thundered their anathemas at crooked politicians. This thought gives scientific confirmation to the scriptural warning about words—"Nothing is lost." A staggering thought! We may not only have on the docket in the skies our words and deeds recorded; but as we may hear the record of Caruso's voice, though he is dead, we may hear our words and know them and remember them.

Life has always been a mystery; but as we delve into eternal truths of life as it is allied to the universe and conscience, it becomes more and more a reflex of what our Bible teaches concerning God. Once a sophisticated scientist has said that he studies God as he studies any other branch of knowledge, as he studies chemical formulas or the scum on the frog pond. Think of such blasphemy!

But let us continue our journey into the mystery of our theme. Some time ago a friend of the writer gave us this little bit of air wizardry. Coming into his home parallel with his telephone wire was the radio antenna, the wires being a few feet apart. One day he tuned in as he rested after the lunch hour was over and caught three snatches of a conversation among neighbors, the voices of whom he recognized. Then he turned to his telephone and called up the first party and told him that he had been hearing his telephone conversation over the radio.

"What conversation are you talking about?" answered the neighbor. "I have had no conversation with anyone today."

"Oh, yes, you did. I heard you, and I caught enough of the conversation to get the gist of your friendly chat."

There was a silence for some moments then the neighbor exploded: "And what do you think of that—that sure is a knock-out. I did have a conversation with Jim yesterday about this same time of the day."

Then my friend called up the other parties whom he had heard in the same manner and found out that they, also, had talked just as he had caught it over the receiver, but 24 hours before the time it had been picked up by the radio.

Now let us do some conjecturing. Radio waves, they tell us, travel with the velocity of light, 186,337 miles per second, traveling around the earth seven times while the clock ticks off one second.

Now may we apply a bit of mathematics to this strange proposition, and then we shall get figures that have no meaning when applied to such a calculation. The neighbor's little chat, according to what the scientists say—and we assume that they know what they are talking about—circled the globe 604,800 times before it was caught by the radio. Then observe that there was no broadcasting machinery; no high-powered dynamos, which are used by all broadcasting stations: the words simply jumped from the telephone wire and with all their long journey seemed not to have lost anything of articulation or tone force, but they were clearly recognized. Here we may pause, remembering the words of our Master: "We must account for all our words." Record—here it is with an emphasis which overwhelms our brain cells. A man recently talked to himself around the world. The words had scarcely left his mouth before they had gone 25,000 miles, a thousand times quicker than the rebound of an echo.

We gleaned this item from a radio periodical: A man was flying in an aeroplane something like 5,000 feet high; and his speed, as he stated, was about 125 miles an hour. He tuned in with his receiving set which was installed in the cockpit and heard a program from a studio 700 miles away. The music was fully enjoyed, and the announcer's voice was distinct. We heard a gentleman not long ago from the Schenectady "House of Magic" tell of his greatest thrill one morning when he talked with a friend in far away New Zealand. He heard the conversation as distinctly as though it had been heard over the telephone.

It has been demonstrated enough to assume the results are assured that aeroplanes equipped with fighting equipment can be sent out loaded with high explosives, directed to any distance, turned about in any way desired, and also made to drop bombs any second and upon any spot the director may wish; all this without endangering a single human life. War, therefore, is possible—the most destructive kind of war without the hazard of life to the offensive army.

So, as we go farther and farther into the magic of mystery, it becomes more and more uncanny. It does not appear on "the borderland of the supernatural" but actually over there beyond it.

This was done on the streets of one of our large cities not long since: A street car was loaded with the city officials from the mayor to the members of the police and fire departments. To this car were attached three trailers, and the crowd was invited to get aboard. They were filled by the spectators. Then the radio man asked the motorman to disconnect the trolley pole so that no power could come from the wire above. Then with his device charged with invisible power he propelled this huge train of four cars loaded with human freight seven blocks through the main street of the city. This feat was next accomplished by driving an automobile through the same street in the same manner with the motor silent. It seems that there is no limit to the subtle powers controlled by radio mechanism.

There are freakish things being done in the "House of Magic" mentioned before. Here is one: A container filled with pop corn was placed between two large cakes of ice with the ice touching the container on both sides. Then with no connection whatever to any device the heat was turned on by invisible waves, and the pop corn soon began to swell, and the white popped corn flew all over the room. Then an egg was broken in a frying pan and the pan placed on a cake of ice, and by the same process the egg was fried as quickly as though it had been in a red-hot skillet.

This brings up a still more wonderful undiscovered part of this invisible continent of the air—the possibility of heat production. We may soon get our heat for all domestic use or for all industries from one great power broadcasting station. How marvelous are the plans of the great Creator! We may soon be upon a time when fuel will have been exhausted. Wood has already become a thing of the past in many sections; coal fields may soon be worked out, as well as oil and gas. All these sources of supply are but a gamble with nature, and man is powerless to go beyond her supply. It is stated on good authority that we may not only get our heat from some great central powerhouse in a city, but by the same process the entire nation may be furnished with heat.

Before the days of the radio a scientist stated that with enough money he could build a power plant at Niagara Falls that would send heat and light to the whole nation and generate heat and box it up and ship it to South Africa in such quantities that the stored-up energy would be sufficient to run a flouring mill in Cape Town. A traveler could carry a sufficient amount in his hand bag to cook his meals on the Sahara Desert. Such claims were regarded as phantasms of a hyphenated ego. But now things even more wonderful have come to pass, and there is no end in sight. One thing is certain—the great God has anticipated our needs far ahead of man's visions.

We recently clipped this interesting news item on the radio question: It is known that burglars often enter banks and drive the force of workers into the bank vault and close the door, after which they help themselves, undisturbed, to the contents of cash in the bank tills. But this no longer holds any terror. A small microphone can be installed in a bank vault ceiling, and the moment anyone may be enclosed therein he can call for help, and it is at once conveyed to police headquarters. Before the bandits can be aware of what is going on, the bank can be surrounded by police officers. This little device has been tested in some cities and found to work perfectly.—C. F. Wimberly, D. D., in The Pentecostal Herald.

ADVICE TO A YOUNG PREACHER

By S. J. Lindsay

WE ARE acquainted with a number of young preachers. They are, of course, anxious to make their lives count and to be successful, as the term goes. To all such we would say:

Study your Bible constantly and think for yourself, using all the good helps you can find.

Don't try to be and act like some one else whom you may admire. Don't let Saul burden you by trying to have David put on his armor.

Just be yourself. Have something to tell the people and then tell it in language that all can understand.

Do not forget that it is God and His Son whom you seek to glorify in all that you may do.

Do not get the idea that to be "progressive" you must be changing your mind all the time. If you are carried about by every wind of doctrine, people will soon lose confidence in you. On the other hand, once you are convinced that you have been in error, be quick to acknowledge your mistake and to correct the matter. To lead others aright, you must be right and do right yourself. Any attempt to make yourself appear scholarly is evidence to the contrary. True scholarship is self-evident and needs no boosting.

Who Was Paul?

By Lottie E. Young

WITH the single exception of Him who is the supreme exception in all things, Paul was the greatest force mentally and spiritually in the work of spreading the gospel of the kingdom of God as long as he lived, and has never been equalled since his day. He comes into our notice in the Bible as a full-grown man, but we know "great oaks from little acorns grow," and so I have found it interesting to think of him in his surroundings as boy and young man as I have studied the Sunday school lessons telling of his journeyings among both Jews and Gentiles, totaling over eight thousand miles.

The religion of Jesus had spread from Jerusalem to the country around and into Samaria, and there apparently it had stopped; at any rate the great Gentile world still remained untouched, and yet the command of the Master to His disciples had been, "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations." What was now needed was a man of great zeal, emancipated from Jewish prejudices, who would carry the "glad tidings of great joy" to the very centers of heathendom. Stephen had given promise of filling the bill, but to him belongs the honor of being the first Christian martyr. A man of fire came to the front at Stephen's death, and though he was going the wrong way, God laid His hand on him, and Paul, the persecutor, became Paul, the preacher.

What advantages did Paul have in his home life? His father was of the tribe of Benjamin, and had acquired in some way the Roman franchise which was to prove a great boon to his son in later years. Paul was born in Tarsus, a Gentile city, and while no doubt an intense Jew, still, living among foreigners, his prejudices against them may have been softened. Tarsus was a world city, much of the commerce of the ancient world passing through it, and so the boy fortunate enough to be born and brought up in it had access to the whole earth. For in it, whether one was a Jew or Gentile, one was taught Greek, the language of culture that was in use throughout the world, enabling Paul to make his way without hindrance from nation to nation, and in every city to find an audience that could hear and understand his message.

Besides this he had all the advantages of a pious Jewish home of that day. One great secret of the spiritual superiority of the Jews over all other ancient peoples was their great concern for the religious welfare of their children. Nowhere did mothers ask, "How shall we order the child, and how shall we do unto him?" with such anxiety as it was asked in Israel. And nowhere else did so many mothers ask that question of God. The best mothers in Israel did not dedicate their children to society or to business; their love for them was so deep that they could not be satisfied with anything less than their highest good, and they dedicated them to God. We may be sure Paul's parents did this in their hearts, or they would not have planned to send him to school in Jerusalem to make a rabbi of him. Besides, Paul himself tells us he was "a Hebrew of the Hebrews" and a Pharisee of the strictest and most orthodox type. Every pious Hebrew home was a religious school in which the ancient law as to instruction was rigidly followed—"Ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt write them upon the door posts of thine house, and upon thy gates."—Deut. 11:19, 20. Apparently he was sent to Jerusalem to get what we would call nowadays his theological training. Here he studied in the school of Gamaliel, a famous teacher of the Jewish law, and here Paul tells us he was "instructed according to the strict manner of the law of our fathers," and not only in the law of Moses but in the innumerable minute requirements which the rabbis had added to it.

Another advantage Paul had as a growing boy was being taught a trade. That a Hebrew father who did not teach his son something by which he could earn a living made him a thief had long been one of the teachings of the rabbis, and so Paul learned to be a tentmaker, Tarsus being the greatest market in the world for the goat hair tents used by the wandering shepherd people of the East.

What was the trouble with Paul's education? He was educated in accordance with the teachings of the Pharisees, who were intensely religious, but many were intensely unspiritual. He was taught a wonderful system of morals, but when they came to the commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour," they distorted it to suit their way of thinking and added the words, "and hate thy enemy." How foreign this was to the teachings of Jesus! If it had been the pure religion which Moses had taught the Israelites the way would have been prepared for the truth, "God so loved the world," but young Paul's Pharisaical education required him to hate God's enemies as well as his own, and accounted for his violent persecution of the early Christians.

What a miracle was accomplished when Paul, the proud Pharisee, became the humble Christian, and what a life stretched between the vision on the Damascus road and the time when in a Roman prison, awaiting a martyr's death, he could triumphantly say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." What a tremendous fight he had continuously had against jealousy, superstition, vice, cruelty, false friends, the elements, surely carrying out the words of Jesus in regard to him, "I will show him how many things he must suffer for my name's sake." And hear him in his latter days assert, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

The word "if" looms very large in our lives, for we hear, "If I had money," or, "If I had health," "I would be able to do more for the Master." Did Paul have either? On the contrary, he was a poor man all his life, often in distressing need. A weakly man who seems to have had a chronic trouble ("a thorn in the flesh") which at times was almost unendurable. Not a popular man, not eloquent, and, according to his own testimony, decidedly not impressive in appearance. Certainly people did not like his nationality, as Jews have always been a despised race. This is not the picture of a hero, or a great man, and yet in spite of all these handicaps Paul did more for civilization than any ruler who ever lived, and the world is richer today because of him than of any other being that ever lived in it, always excepting his beloved Master the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE JEW

By J. L. Wince

THE following descriptive poem is of singular interest in these days owing to the contrast it presents between the Jerusalem of 63 years ago, when it was written, and the flourishing city of the present time. J. L. Wince was one of the most able writers of the Church of God of his time. The poem was originally published in The Restitution in 1870, and is available to our readers through the courtesy of Bro. F. H. Knodle of Oregon, Illinois.

The wonder of the ages past;
A standing miracle today!
Their sky with darkness overcast—
And countless pitfalls 'long their way.
Still they exist, apart and lone,
The doomed and wand'ring exiled race,
That treads the soil of every zone,
Without a home, without a place.

Their city, old Jerusalem,
'Neath heap on heap in ruin lies;
Though once she sparkled like a gem
Beneath the blue of Orient skies;
But desolation most complete
Now sits enthroned on Zion's hill;
Her soil is pressed by alien feet;
The voice of sacred psalm is still.

To David's Son upon the throne
Is bowed no more the subject head;
No offering on the altar stone
Where once the countless victims bled;
Nor willing tribes seek Jacob's God,
To pour their songs in holy strain;
The spot where mitred Levite trod
By Moslem foot is made profane.

Opposing forces all combined—

The pestilence, and fire, and sword—
The cruelty of human kind—

Have wrought the vengeance of the Lord.
The cup of curses they have drained;
The bitter dregs their hands have pressed;
Their sinful pride the Lord has stained,—
Their weary feet have found no rest.

For years and years they've borne their shame
Beneath the proud oppressor's rod;
In lands adorned with freedom's name
Their blood has also stained the sod;
And yet beneath this deep disgrace,
As once the favored sons of old,
Exists unconquered pride of race,
Remains the quenchless thirst for gold.

Amid the changes of all time,
As fleeting empires rose and fell;
As nations filled their cup of crime,
And sunk into a nations' hell:
Though crushed beneath the conqueror's tread,
The Jews in spite of all survive;
Though as a nation counted dead,
Yet as a race they live and thrive.

Their enemies have tried in vain
To bend or break their lofty wills;
To wear as slaves the servile chain,
To toil like beasts that turn the mills.
'Mid changes wrought by time and place,
Against the march of all events,
Remains intact the ancient race,
A monument of Providence.

What people could endure so long
So much of spite and fiendish hate,
Through eighteen hundred years of wrong,
And still outlive the dreadful fate?
But soon the darkness will be gone;
The first faint tinge of light appears,
The herald of the coming dawn
That ushers in the brighter years.

When guided by an unseen hand,
Thy expatriated sons once more,
Oh, Palestine, thou sacred land!
Shall bend their steps toward thy shore,
Jerusalem shall rise and shine,
Queen city of the newborn East,
And temple service then divine
Will consecrate the solemn feast.

Then stores of blessing shall come down;
Refreshing rain and dew distill,
And wealth of verdure then shall crown
The desert, vale, and barren hill.
The Prince of David's house shall reign,
The rightful heir to David's throne,
The manger-cradled babe, once slain,
Will sway a scepter all must own.

A Crawfish Tale

By D. G. Harvey

"Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established. Turn not to the right hand nor to the left: remove thy foot from evil."—Proverbs 4:25-27.

NOT HAVING the ability as a fisherman of my very good friend and brother, S. J. Lindsay, when I awkwardly draw in my line from the small streams of my north central Indiana home, I often find on my hook a fearful looking creature known to all Hoosiers as a crawfish. I am not sure just how to class him, whether as an insect, animal, or reptile; but he is a formidable looking creature, with a body well protected by a hard shell-like armor and two large snapping claws. Surely he is well protected and fitted to cause fear among the smaller of God's creatures.

Let me tell you of John, a friend of mine in the mill. John came from the northern part of Europe. He had never seen a crawfish.

One day John complained of something killing his hens. Some of his fellow employees decided the loss was the work of a weasel and advised him to shoot it. In a day or two John came to work overjoyed.

"Me get me dat ting," he said.

It developed later that John had shot a crawfish, using both barrels of his trusty shotgun. You can imagine how bad a crawfish looked to John.

But as I take up a small stick and touch the fearful looking beast, lo, what a change! He flips his tail under him and back he goes at a rapid pace. In the language of the streets, he is "yellow," a coward.

But I am told the tail of a crawfish is good bait for fishing. Therefore, as I go forth obeying the Master's command to be a "fisher of men," I present this crawfish tale to you.

There are many crawfishing Christians, oh, so very unlike that dear Apostle Paul, who boldly could cry, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." Like our little crawfish, he was armed and protected. "Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."—Eph. 6:14-17.

Yet the crawfishing Christian who claims to possess this "whole armour of God," when he finds himself alone in strange company, let some one question his faith and, "Ah! Eh! Oh!" Crawfishing. What is wrong? Is he "yellow"?

Or perhaps funds are needed for the work. We hear him say, "I just can't afford it!" Crawfishing. Who is your master? Who owns your money? You can lie to man, but don't try to lie to God. Ananias and his wife tried to do that very thing. You remember the results; if not, read it again in Acts 5:1-5.

Or perhaps you are asked to give in some act of service, teach a class, or sing, or lead in prayer. "Oh, I can't." Crawfishing. Moses tried that once, but God provided the way. "Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say." Don't crawfish.

Do your best, and trust the Father in heaven to provide the way. God's people must be steadfast, and the true believers all through the ages. Let us consider a few examples.

There was Daniel, who had risen from a slave to a high office in the Babylonian Empire. O how easy for Daniel to crawfish when the test came! But Daniel was steadfast even to the lion's den.

There was Abraham, the father of the faithful. Did he crawfish? When God called him to leave his homeland and go into a strange country, did he say, "I am afraid I can't live there; maybe the climate won't agree with me"? No. He went, and because he obeyed and did not crawfish, he received that wonderful promise recorded in Genesis 22:18. "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice."

But some one will say, "Oh, he knew where he was going. He knew he was safe." Yes, but only by faith, confidence in his God, the assurance of protection. Listen to Paul's testimony. "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and went out, not knowing whither he went."—Heb. 11:8.

It is a Christian duty to be steadfast. It is commanded, "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. 15:58.

The Christian, the true child of God, is commanded to stand still at times, to wait, to move forward; but there is no command to turn back. You can't back up. There are no crawfishing signs all through the Word of God. "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving."—Col. 2:6, 7.

But some will say, "I desire to be bold, but how can I keep from crawfishing?"

Let the wise man answer. "Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established."—Prov. 16:3.

We begin our walk in Christ at baptism, when we arise from the water to "walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4). But we must "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."—Eph. 4:1-3.

There is a most severe penalty for crawfishing. On one occasion the Lord called one to follow Him. But the man began to crawfish. He was not like Peter, who left his work at once. This man said, "Let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house." Hear the Master's answer: "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9:61, 62.

May we ever be steadfast till He comes.

THE NATION WITHOUT A COUNTRY

the unjust condemnation of even two of its nationals was an 80 per cent embargo on Russian goods, with the result that in the course of a few weeks the Russian Government permitted the accused Britishers to return home.

Altogether unlike the situation of these well-protected British subjects has been the position of the Jews in all parts of the world, both in the past and in the present.

The Israelites began to suffer the penalty for sin and idolatry even before the days of Christ, and after their rejection of the Savior, punishment was visited more and more heavily upon them. For centuries, they have had the bitter experience of being a nation without a country. This is the keynote of Jewish history. Driven from one country to another, massacred, carried into exile and slavery, their record has indeed been that of a dispersed and persecuted nation. The phrase, "The wandering Jew," adequately describes the condition of this people for over two thousand years.

The independent political life of the Hebrews was of comparatively short duration. Their persecutions began very early. Even in the patriarchal age, they suffered the hardships of the bondage in Egypt.

The patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were followed by the judges, who were the leaders and heroes of Israel. During these early times there was merely a loose confederation of the Hebrew tribes, but common dangers led to the establishment of the monarchy under Saul. The monarchy was strengthened by David, but under Solomon oppressive taxation weakened the central Government. So great was the dissatisfaction with these heavy imposts that Solomon's son Rehoboam was soon deserted by all but two of the tribes. With them he formed the kingdom of Judah on the south, with Jerusalem as its chief city. The rebellious ten tribes established the separate northern kingdom of Israel under Jeroboam, with Samaria for its capital.

III

HAD the kingdom of David and Solomon continued as a united Government, the history of the Jews might have been very different; but the divided people, as separate political units, could offer little resistance to the strong and warlike hands, reaching out on all sides to seize them. The ten tribes of the northern kingdom of Israel maintained their independence for about two hundred years, when they were overcome by the Assyrians in 722 B. C., and carried into captivity by Sargon, king of Nineveh. The kingdom of Judah on the south stood for about three hundred years, but was at last conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who took Jerusalem and carried many Hebrews into captivity in 586 B. C. After this Judea was reduced to the position of a mere province, under the control of one great Power after another. Political independence became a thing of the past to the Jews. They enjoyed only one brief period of freedom under the Maccabees, shortly before the Christian Era.

The Hebrews suffered much under the Assyrians and Babylonians, but their woes had just begun. They next came under Greek control and endured much hardship and suffering under the Hellenes. Then Judea became a tributary of Rome, and the heavy hand of their Roman conquerors bore hardly upon its inhabitants. Under several of the Emperors, the Hebrews were comparatively free, but their lot was a difficult one, and their enemies multiplied as time went on. In the year 38 A. D., the Emperor, Caligula, ordered that divine honors be paid to himself, but the Jews refused to yield this homage. During their exile in Babylon they seem to have been finally and completely cured of the sin of idolatry, for we find no further record of their worshiping strange gods. Now upon their refusal to worship the Roman Emperor as he had decreed a frightful massacre took place at Alexandria, and the Jews might have been exterminated, but Herod Agrippa stayed the Emperor's hand.

The next general Jewish persecution occurred under Titus, son of Vespasian, who captured Jerusalem and destroyed the temple, in punishment for a Jewish uprising. Then hundreds of thousands of the Israelites were massacred or banished. Their later attempts at liberty were defeated after great butchery. Judea was laid waste, a heathen colony settled in Jerusalem, and not one Jew was permitted to remain in the City of David.

The prophecies of Moses in Deuteronomy 28 were fast coming true. Even at the beginning of the present dispensation, the Jewish record was everywhere marked by divine chastisement. Never in the history of the world has there been a nation who enjoyed such favor with God, and who experienced also His strong disfavor. God's divine justice is wonderfully shown in His dealings with the Jews. No punishment was ever visited upon that nation for their sins and wickedness without being first preceded by a series of warnings through prophet or leader, speaking as God's mouthpiece.—W. E. Thompson.

Abreast of the Times

New Jewish Secretary of the Treasury

"And Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold."—Genesis 13:2.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 1.—President Franklin D. Roosevelt today appointed Henry Morgenthau, Jr., to the cabinet as Secretary of the Treasury, which position was made vacant by the resignation of W. H. Woodin. Mr. Morgenthau is a Jewish lawyer, diplomat, and financier. He was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1856, and came to this country when he was nine years of age. He is president of the Free Synagogue in New York, and of the Mount Sinai Hospital. He has occupied various positions of distinction under the Government, including that of Ambassador to Turkey, all of which he filled with distinction. The new Secretary brings to his exceedingly responsible office the financial ability which the Jewish people have enjoyed throughout their history by the special blessing of God. As prosperity returns to make possible the amassing of the vast treasure needed by the Jewish Antichrist to carry on his nefarious work of overthrowing our so-called Christian civilization, it is of interest to note the continually increasing influence the Jewish people are exerting on the financial structure of the world. The major part of the earth's treasures must be gathered in Palestine as an incentive to bring the nations together for their final judgment just before the Lord comes (Ezek. 38:11-13; Dan. 11:40-43).

Church Troubles in Germany Continue

"We ought to obey God rather than men."—Acts 5:29.

BERLIN, Jan. 3.—The trouble that has arisen throughout Germany as the result of the Government's attempt to force its nationalist policy upon the church continues to hold the forefront of interest in the religious world. The Pastor's Emergency Federation, which is said to include more than 6,000 ministers of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, issued an ultimatum on November 30 addressed to Reichbishop Ludwig Mueller, the appointee of the Nazi Government, demanding that he moderate his policies of extreme nationalism regarding the government of the church and conform more closely to the spiritual standards set up by Martin Luther.

The anti-German Christian faction in the church, which is said to greatly outnumber the German Christians, is strongly, almost bitterly, opposed to the complete domination of the church by the political interests of the country. They hold that the church must remain universal in its sympathies, especially in its attitude toward Christians who are of Jewish descent. Furthermore, the reactionary group insists that the changes recommended by the Nazis to be made in the Bible text shall not be recognized nor permitted.

To Fight All Jews

"As I live, saith the Lord God, I will even do according to thine anger, . . . which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them."—Ezek. 35:11.

BERLIN, Germany, Jan. 3.—The intensity of anti-Jewish feeling which Hitler has developed, or attempted to develop, along all lines presents at times its amusing features as well as its tragic ones. In an interview today, according to The Chicago Tribune Press Service, Max Schmeling, the former heavyweight boxing champion, declared most emphatically that Chancellor Hitler had not refused to allow him to fight a Jew (King Levinsky), in Chicago in the near future. "On the contrary," said Schmeling, "the more Jews I fight the better Hitler will like it." Of course all this appears childish in the extreme, but it serves to reveal the depth of bitter feeling against the Jewish people as it is fostered by the present German Government.

Jewish Haven in America

"I will bless them that bless thee."—Gen. 12:3.

LAUSANNE, Switzerland, Dec. 8.—The International Conference on Refugees has appealed to the United States and to South America to lighten the burden of Europe by receiving Jews who have been forced out of Germany. The American delegate, Dr. Joseph Perkins Chamberlain, gave the Conference the assurance that his countrymen would respond generously to appeals for the large sums of money that would be required to solve the problem of transportation of the refugees. Dr. Chamberlain said he was sure the situation could not be cleared up by simply sending the refugees from one country to another, but that they must be given an opportunity to establish themselves as settlers.

Warning the Conference that a flood of refugees would continue to pour out of Germany, Victor Henry Berenger, former French Ambassador to Washington, said France had already given asylum to 30,000 persons, and had reached its limit. Lord Cecil of Great Britain, permanent chairman of the Conference, agreed with what the French delegate had declared, and added that "Europe is full up, and must look to countries further afield."

The blessing of our Lord will attend all who bring comfort to the suffering people of Jehovah, especially now that their age-long punishment is drawing to a close (Matt. 25:31-46; Psa. 122:6).—Item selected by A. E. Hoskins.

"IF YE ABIDE IN ME, AND MY WORDS ABIDE IN YOU, YE SHALL ASK WHAT YE WILL, AND IT SHALL BE DONE UNTO YOU."—JOHN 15:7.

WHAT DO YOU WANT?

ONCE a little boy thought he wanted to be a policeman more than anything else in all the wide world. His uncle was one, and he considered the trig uniform and the shiny star and the authority of the law altogether beautiful and most desirable. Now the little boy is a middle-aged policeman. He has the trig uniform and the shiny star and the authority of the law. But is he satisfied? Now he thinks that he would want nothing more if he had a little farm where he could raise White Leghorns, and never see another inebriate or another too-speedy motorist.

There was a young girl who thought she knew what she wanted, too. She got it. She married well; she has a beautiful house and pretty clothes. For a while she was happy, but now she is oh, so bored! No longer does fingering her lovely linens and silver and glass or admiring her smart dresses drive away ennui. She thinks, though, that a trip to Europe would make life interesting again.

And there is a reformer-statesman who, as an enthusiastic youngster, was determined to reform his country to match his particular kind of Utopia. He wanted it so much that he gave his time and money for years to its accomplishment. But now—he isn't even bitter because the world doesn't want to live in his Utopia. Sometimes he even wonders if he does. But he would like to be elected to Congress. . . .

Last of all, there is another man who knows what he wants more than anything else. He doesn't have it, not yet, but he is happier than the policeman and the fashionable lady and the statesman. If it had been happiness, or friends, or a good reputation, or any number of other pleasant things he had wanted, he should be content, for he has them all. But none of those was the thing he wanted most. He has wanted it for a long time, and he is sure his hopes will be realized soon. He is waiting for the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

What do you want more than anything else?

"HE LEADETH ME"

This old hymn, a favorite with many Bereans, was written by Professor Joseph Henry Gilmore, who was born in Boston in 1834. It is based on the twenty-third Psalm.

Without telling her husband, Mrs. Gilmore sent the little poem to a magazine, where it was published. Years later the author found it in a hymnal. Since its first publication it has been copied many times, and has remained a great favorite with the public.

The tune identified with it enhances the beauty of the words, without doubt. The composer was William B. Bradley. He caught the tone and spirit of the text as few composers could.

SONG

He that is down need fear no fall;
He that is low, no pride;
He that is humble ever shall
Have God to be his guide.

I am content with what I have,
Little be it or much;
And, Lord, contentment still I crave,
Because Thou savest such.

Fullness to such a burden is
That go on pilgrimage;
Now little, and hereafter bliss,
Is best from age to age.

—John Bunyan (1628-1688).

THE ANSWER

YEARS ago, in the Metropolitan Tabernacle in London, I heard Mr. Spurgeon tell an old story with new power. It was about the ship called the Central America. When the drinking water had failed and the crew were in great need, they ran up a flag of distress. The flag was answered from another ship.

"What is the matter?" came through the speaking tube.

"Water! Water! We are dying for want of water!"

And the answer came back, "Dip it up then! You are in the mouth of the Amazon."

The mighty Amazon was pouring a flood of fresh water far out to sea. They dipped it up. There was no need to ask further for drinking water. Men and women, you are in the estuary of the grace of God.—F. B. Meyer.

JESUS CALLS HELPERS

HOW HAPPY and proud you are when Father or Mother or another that you love very dearly asks you to help with a certain piece of work! That day, son, when Father asked you to hold the board very steady for him while he sawed it; that time Mother went down town, my dear, and left you in charge—those were proud moments indeed. The Sunday afternoon your teacher came along and asked you to go calling on an absent class member, you were only too happy to leave your play and go.

When you grow older and get out into the work of life you, no doubt, will be called on to leave a humble task and step into a greater one. At least, I hope you will, for that is the way you will grow and develop. Your first opportunities, even those you fill now, are just stepping stones to something better and nobler.

In our story today we see four young men (two sets of brothers they were) called from a humble task to a very much more important one. Their names, I'm sure you all know, were Peter and Andrew, and James and John. If they had not been honestly and industriously working away at their little job, do you think they would have been offered a better one?

Jesus, as of course you know, was the one who called these men. Can't you imagine how gladly, how willingly, they dropped their nets to learn what sort of work He had for them? We read that "straightway" they left their nets, and followed Him.

They didn't know very much about Jesus, but what they had heard so far was enough to cause them to desire to work for Him. In telling about Jesus, just as He began to preach, Matthew says, "The people which sat in darkness saw great light." And we all like to follow a light.

The light that Jesus carried was the light of the gospel. I'm sure you can all see how the good news Jesus brought to these discouraged people might be called a light, and a very bright one indeed. Ask Mother to tell you what the people of Israel longed for, and how Jesus came to fill that need.

And now about our new club, "Sons and Daughters of the King." I hope every boy and every girl who reads this page will join. All you need to do in order to be a member is to take Jesus as your Pattern and study your Sunday school lesson each week. A pretty certificate, with seals to attach each week that you have a good lesson, will be sent to every one of you who writes to me and asks to join.

You know, Jesus is going to need helpers for a big work when He comes again, but He is going to call those who work for Him now at the little tasks of every day. And one of the best ways to do that is to learn all you can about Him now, and then try to do as He did. The more we study His Book, the better we'll know what He did. Who will be the first member of the new club?

Now I must tell you of a Bible Scrapbook Club about which I just learned. Way over in Arkansas City, Kansas, there is a brand new church building. All the fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, uncles and aunts, nieces and nephews, put their pennies and nickels and dimes and dollars together and built it. And now we can imagine how much they all enjoy it, from the littlest tot to the oldest grandpa.

A class of junior girls in this new church is working on Bible scrapbooks, and their teacher's name is Mrs. Faye Werneke. The girls are Betty Mary Chaplin, Virginia Chaplin, Betty Luper, Marguerite Taylor, and Margaret Hains. I hope you enjoy working on those lessons about Paul, and don't forget, girls, to keep your scrapbooks and send them to our Exhibit next summer.

"Follow me, the Master said;
We will follow Jesus:
By His word and spirit led,
We will follow Jesus.
On His promise we depend,
He will succor and defend,
Help and keep us to the end:
We will follow Jesus.

"Though the way may dark appear,
We will follow Jesus:
He will make our pathway clear,
We will follow Jesus.
When this earthly course is run,
And the Master says, Well done,
Life eternal we have won:
We will follow Jesus."

If we would be loyal to Jesus, our Lord and Master, we must watch everything that may lead us to do wrong. We must see at all times that we do not deny Him by word or action.

JESUS BEGINS HIS MINISTRY

Matthew 4:12-25

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 61:1-6

GOLDEN TEXT

Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matthew 4:17.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus Begins His Ministry.

Aim: To show that Jesus needs our help to carry on His work today.

Basic Truth: "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest."—Luke 10:2.

I. Establishing Headquarters. (Matt. 4:12-16.) Owing to its central location our Lord selected Capernaum in Galilee as the center of His activity. From that point He went out in all directions preaching the gospel and performing miracles. Whether the work to be done is great or small, it is always wise to choose a place from which to carry on the effort. If one is isolated from a church organization, he should have his name placed on the roll of the nearest local body. It will cause him to feel that he is a part of the church universal; it will provide him with an agency through which he can assist in spreading the gospel; and it will give him a deeper sense of fellowship with other followers of the Lord.

II. Choosing and Preparing Workers. (Matt. 4:17-22.) Before entering fully upon His active work the Master proceeded to choose from among those already interested in Him certain ones to be developed for further service. Jesus needed men to help Him carry on the great task God had given Him to perform. He used His message to attract them. When they responded to its appeal and He was able to see the depth of interest they felt, He gave them individual instruction. Our Lord still follows the same course. Those of His followers who display special concern in His work He leads into fuller knowledge of His will, and opens up before them new avenues of service.

III. The One Great Truth. (Matt. 4:23-25.) To be sure of the truth to be taught is essential to the success of any teacher. Jesus, the only begotten Son of God, and divinely inspired, knew that the gospel of the kingdom of God was the one great truth which the Father wanted Him to give to the world. It is wise for teachers and preachers today to follow closely in Jesus' steps, and devote their time and effort to teaching the "things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ."

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Christ Brings Light. "The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." This is the natural result of coming in contact with Christ. He is light and in Him is no darkness; and if we say, "We are in Him," and dwell in darkness, we are deceiving ourselves. Christ lightens the darkened minds and brightens the gloomy outlook on life. When by faith we walk with and in Him, each step of the way has a light beam shed ahead. "Ye are all the children of light . . . : we are not of the night."—1 Thess. 5:5. Oh, Christ, lighten every path we tread, that we may see all the obstacles and avoid stumbling or falling!

Fishers of Men. In calling these fishermen, Christ had a work for them to do. Their humility and ignorance became stepping stones to great service, for they at once recognized their need of entire dependence upon their great Leader. They became great through Him. No matter how humble a station in life we may occupy, the Lord Jesus can use us. He wants us, He has called us. Have you heard the call? These men were not mentally nor spiritually equipped to do service for the Master, but they were willing to be equipped. This is the secret of preparation for Christian service. Willingness to serve Christ will be rewarded with an opportunity and ability to serve. Every member of every Sunday school or church should have something to do, yea, should do something.

They Immediately Followed. Christ acted first; then it was their turn to respond. He called, they had to give the answer. He invited, it was up to them to accept. They responded without hesitation. They were willing. They didn't have to, they wanted to!

GOLDEN TEXT

"Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matthew 4:17.

The ministry of our Lord was fourfold, although He had but two subjects, the King and the kingdom. He first presented the kingdom, then the King. Afterward He told of the rejection of the King, then of the rejection of the kingdom.

In today's lesson He tells the people to "repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." That was the need for repentance, to be prepared to enter into that kingdom. The kingdom had drawn near in the person of the King, even Jesus. But the King and the kingdom were rejected and are still in abeyance, and will be until "he come whose right it is," and it will be given Him. "For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."—1 Cor. 15:25, 26.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Jesus' first task was to present the kingdom of God to Israel. He sent seventy out with the message: "The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." The Jews didn't especially object to the preaching of the kingdom until He announced that He Himself was to be King. He came into Jerusalem as David had before Him. He was accepted by the common people and a little later rejected at the temple by the rulers. His first task was ended with the rejection of the kingdom.

Jesus announced His second work just a week before its completion. Few, if any, understood that He was to die as an atonement for sin. When He first announced this to the twelve, Peter rebuked Him for ever hinting such a thing. Patiently He explained the necessity for this, attempting to build up their faith thereby. When the time came, He yielded His life as an atonement, remained in the grave for three days, and came forth in resurrection, thereby sealing the new covenant and finishing His second task.

His third labor is that of high priest. He is now at the right hand of God making intercession for us (Heb. 7:25). He is our advocate before God (1 John 2:1), so we can have our sins forgiven daily. This means that when Jesus comes we can pass from death to life without waiting for judgment (John 5:24).—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Memory Verse: "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."—Matt. 4:19.

Have you ever gone fishing? Have you ever seen anyone fishing? How did he fish? Did he use a net?

A long time ago when Jesus was here on earth, many people earned their living by fishing. They used large nets to catch the fish.

One day as Jesus was walking beside the Sea of Galilee, He saw two men out on the sea fishing. They were Peter and Andrew.

Jesus said to them, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." Now you say what Jesus said.

Of course, Jesus didn't mean they were going to catch men in a net. He meant that they were to help Him teach people to do right. They followed Jesus at once.

Very soon Jesus came to two more fishermen, James and John. Jesus called them, also. You see, He needed many men to help Him teach the people. They followed, also.

From that time on these four men were "Fishers of Men" for Jesus. How can we be Fishers of Men? Make a picture of a net. On this net place the names of all boys and girls that you can get to come to Sunday school.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

HAMMOND, LOUISIANA

The Happy Woods Sunday School rendered a very inspiring Christmas program on Christmas Eve, "The Bethlehem Way."

We feel grateful to the heavenly Father for the many blessings, in that we have been able to carry on in these hard times.

We have begun a two weeks' meeting, having with us Bro. M. W. Lyon. We invite all near and far to come out and hear the gospel news.

Ruchie Alexander, Sec.

BLAIR, NEBRASKA

Sr. Lucille Le Crone, who has been pastor of the church here for the past two years, left this week for a charge in Helena, Okla.

We pray the Lord may abide with her, strengthen and guide her in her new work. We were sorry to see her go, as it leaves us with no regular services besides our Sunday school.

We have enjoyed working with her and feel that we have all benefited by her stay with us.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Due to continued curtailment in funds, some of the activities in which the Los Angeles church has been participating have been eliminated, at least temporarily. But nevertheless much is in anticipation with the New Year. When this goes to print the first quarterly conference of the year, to be held the second Sunday in January, will be under way. The theme and program, as well as the place, are yet undetermined, but in all probability it will be held in Los Angeles. A feast of good thoughts will undoubtedly be provided as usual.

January 1 the Stantials are holding open house for themselves, and the pastor and family. This old Scotch holiday marks the thirteenth wedding anniversary for the MacLeods, and is also an occasion when the Stantials wish to welcome all their friends in to see their new baby in her home at 2335 Highland Ave., Los Angeles.

The pastor and family attended no less than four Christmas programs on the day before Christmas: Sunday school and church in Los Angeles; Sunday school at Compton; and the Williams St. Chapel in Pomona. This gives some impression as to the many reasons why a pastor is busy.

The grim reaper has taken its sad toll in unusually heavy proportions in the Los Angeles church recently. The last weeks of 1933 have taken from us Srs. Hillis and Corbaley, and Bro. Howard. These sad thoughts have left us face to face with the great facts of life with which to confront the New Year of 1934.

Sr. Knott of Perris, Calif., (formerly of Long Beach) is seriously ill following an operation at the Community Hospital at Riverside. At the last report from Bro. W. A. Reid she was getting along nicely. We hope that she will be restored to health soon.

DIXON, ILLINOIS

The Dixon Church of God presented its annual Christmas program, Thursday evening, Dec. 21. The primary department members gave several recitations and exercises. A playlet, "The Christmas Box," was presented by the junior class. The music sung during the service was taken from "Chimes of Christmas" by Meredith, and was sung by our junior choir of fifteen members. The church auditorium was well filled and everyone was greatly inspired by the program.

Sunday morning, Dec. 31, after Sunday school, the annual Sunday school election was held. The following officers were elected: superintendent, Wm. G. Ford; assistant superintendent, Wm. Eckert; secretary, Elizabeth Ford; treasurer, Mrs. Wm. Eckert.

In looking over our Sunday school records, we find that seventeen of our members will receive pins for good attendance during the year of 1933.

We pray that God will guide and bless all His children during the year that is to come. Elizabeth Ford, Sec.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Seated on the rostrum for the consecration service Sunday morning, Dec. 31, were the three elders, four deacons, superintendents of Sunday school, Berean, and Dorcas, the three deaconesses, the secretary, the treasurer, and the pianist. These officers are assuming the responsibility for the church work during 1934 and the prayers of the entire church family are with them.

In spite of the hardships and difficult places of the past few years, we feel that God has been wonderfully kind to our group here, and it is with much courage that we face the future. Good results are sure to come with so many loyal and devoted helpers.

At the close of the consecration service on the closing day of the old year one mother came forward for baptism. What a splendid way to bury the past and start the new year properly!

HOLBROOK NEWS

The people of the Holbrook (Nebraska) church are rejoicing over the piano given as a Christmas present by Sr. Ethel Johnson of Freedom, and feel it will add much to the church service.

Bro. S. W. Harlan had the misfortune a few weeks ago to fall and break his right leg, just below the knee. He would greatly enjoy hearing from any of the brethren.

The Berean class and choir put on a pageant on Christmas Eve, depicting the birth of Christ. A pound social was given Bro. and Sr. S. W. Harlan on Christmas Eve.

There has been some improvement made on the interior of the church. It improves the acoustics and also the appearance of the interior.

On December 31 Bro. and Sr. G. W. Scott completed fifty-five years of married life. Congratulations.

MRS. JOHN A. CORBALEY

Lucinda M. Miller was born November 9, 1849, on a farm near Plymouth, Ind., and later moved into Plymouth, where she lived with her parents, Samuel and Elizabeth Miller, until her marriage to John A. Corbaley in 1871. She then moved with her husband to the state of California on a most romantic journey over the newly constructed Union Pacific Railway. Nine days of inconvenient and dangerous travel were required to take them from Omaha to Sacramento. Later they returned to Indiana, where they lived until 1904, when they returned to California, settling this time in Los Angeles, where they have lived ever since.

One year ago they celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary at the home of their son, Earl Corbaley, in Verdugo Woodlands, Glendale, Calif. Her participation in church activities in the Church of God in Los Angeles has been of most pleasant memory to all those associated with her. Her ever present good humor was an inspiration to all who were inclined to be more pessimistic; this humor was only emphasized by her age. The news of her sudden death due to heart failure on December 15 came as a great shock not only to her friends and relatives, but also to the church folks, who had come to look upon her as a guiding spirit in their many activities. Although 84 years of age she had always been in excellent health, and no session of the Dorcas Society was complete without her cheerful presence.

She is survived by her husband and two sons: Earl A. Corbaley and Richard L. Corbaley; three grandchildren; and one great-grandchild; also two sisters, Mrs. Nettie E. Ketchum of Los Angeles, Calif., and Mrs. Mary A. Boyd of Zion City, Ill. Interment was made December 18 at Forest Lawn Cemetery from the Little Church of the Flowers. Her many friends and relatives who gathered were consoled by the thought that she sleeps there to await the call of the Master when He returns, and should take thought that they, too, can live a beautiful useful life in the service of Him who died for us. That that day is not far distant when she shall be reunited with her loved ones in that blessed state in Christ's kingdom is a comfort to us all.

Norman John MacLeod.

AMY ALMA JOHNSON

Mrs. Amy Johnson was born near Stockton, Ill., October 20, 1856, the daughter of Lont. H. and Celia Hilliard. Her mother was a member of the Church of God and this enabled the daughter to a lifelong membership of the same. She married James L. Johnson of Elkader, Iowa, in 1878; and when the couple moved to Greene County, Iowa, she began to take "The Restitution" during the eighties. In 1894 they moved to Marshall County, to a farm where Mr. Johnson died in October, 1929. Mrs. Johnson was taken ill

Sunday, Dec. 17, and died from a complication of influenza and diabetes.

She is survived by two brothers, Alva Hilliard of Vinton, Iowa; Byron Hilliard of Froid, Mont.; three sons, Alfred, Fred, and Frank, at home; two daughters, Mrs. Laura Tweed, at home, and Mrs. Lillian Davis of Delhi; and nine grandchildren.

The funeral services were held in Albion at the Methodist Church with Rev. E. R. Kildow in charge at 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Dec. 24. The minister gave a fine sermon and chose his text from the Gospel of St. Mark, the fourteenth chapter and eighth verse, and the words of Jesus, who spoke in defense of the woman who poured out the very precious ointment: "She hath done what she could." There were lovely floral offerings and sympathetic friends that accompanied her to her final resting place in the Albion Cemetery.

Every year during the latter years of her life she delighted in attending the Waterloo Conference, which contributed so much to the kindly patience of a most loving mother.

Fred T. Johnson.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

A letter from N. S. Westfall, Dayton, Ohio, extends to us the season's greeting, and assures us that the writer awaits with longing the speedy coming of the Lord. How heartily we join in that desire!

Sr. Olive Wood, who recently arrived from California to make her home at Golden Rule Home, returned last week from Sugar Grove, Ill., where she had spent the holidays with relatives.

Our president and manager, L. E. Conner, brought back an enthusiastic report of the fraternal reception he and Bro. Harvey U. Krogh, Jr., received at Aurora College on their recent visit.

A letter from Sr. M. S. Guest, Fredonia, N. Y., expresses appreciation of The Herald, and says it provides much needed inspiration with its weekly visits.

We congratulate the Church of God in Helena, Okla., in securing the services of Sr. Lucille Le Crone as pastor. Sr. Le Crone has much ability and will no doubt bring a blessing to the congregation at Helena.

We know our readers will rejoice to know that Bro. Samuel E. Haney of Philadelphia, Pa., whose contributions in the past were so appreciatively received, after a prolonged illness is now able to resume his labors, and that an article from his fluent pen will appear in the near future.

The Herald wishes to congratulate Bro. T. A. Weldon of Thorold, Ont., on passing with so much vigor the eightieth milestone in the race track of life. Bro. Weldon is, as were his parents before him, a most faithful supporter of the truth, and a staunch advocate of all for which the Church of God stands. May God give him many more years of usefulness.

Christmas gift subscriptions continue to come in for The Herald, and we trust that each one who reads our little paper during 1934 may find in it much that is faith-building, much that is enlightening concerning the gracious plans of God for His children, and much of comfort and inspiration from week to week.

Sr. Jessie Donaldson, Baldwin, N. Y., directs us to send The Restitution Herald to "a very earnest young man who is endeavoring to start a Sunday school in a poorly populated part of Vermont, where there is no church for miles around." She trusts that the paper will be of spiritual and intellectual help to him. We pray God's blessing to rest upon his effort.

Sr. Chaffee of the Home is recovering nicely from a brief illness that confined her to her room for a few days.

The prayer-poem on the editorial page may be sung to the tune of "Coronation" ("All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name") by repeating the last two lines of each verse.

The Christmas exercises at the various churches passed off successfully it would seem from all reports, and the glory of our Lord's first coming was strongly emphasized.

Bro. Lyman Booth, one of our leading contributors for many years, has been suffering from a severe attack of the "flu." He reports steady improvement, however, and submits a splendid manuscript for The Herald on the love of God. It will appear in the near future.

We are informed that a little son arrived at the home of Bro. Ralph Goekler of the Marshall, Ill., church on December 13, 1933. He is to be congratulated on his admission into the circle of the Goekler family. May he be "brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," is our prayer.

Sr. Mary A. Woodward of Chicago continues to more than "hold her own." She is up and around the house much of the time, and, though lacking in strength of body, is still strong in faith and in hope.

The Golden Rule Home family greatly appreciated the greetings received from Sr. Lottie E. Young of Seattle, Wash. It does these older ones a great deal of good to be remembered by their friends at a distance.

Still another church is contemplating putting its young people to work selling The Restitution Herald from house to house and on the street. The Kokomo, Ind., church is thinking of trying the plan out in part as an advertising effort for the local church.

Attention is directed to the change in address of Elder T. A. Drinkard, who has been living until recently at Kennedale, Texas. Bro. Drinkard has now moved to Handley, Texas, where he may be reached regarding the Lord's work at any time.

In the publication of the monthly report of Bro. J. H. Anderson, we are reminded that he is the author of several splendid tracts. His tract on "The Rich Man and Lazarus" is one of the best on this subject we have seen. It may be secured by writing to J. H. Anderson, Michigantown, Ind., or to this office. The price is 5 cents each, or 35 cents per dozen, postpaid.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

"PRESENT CONDITIONS IN THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY"

Such is the title of a timely little work by Elder J. H. Anderson on the "Cause and the Remedy" of present world-wide distress and perplexity. It is a booklet of 24 pages, envelope size, that is priced at ten cents per copy, postpaid. It may be secured from the author, J. H. Anderson, Michigantown, Indiana.

PRAISE HIM

By Mildred L. Crofton

IF DAVID could praise the Lord so fervently and sincerely, how much more should we who are living in this glorious age sound His praises when we know "our redemption draweth nigh." Many things are being revealed to us, things that even Daniel and the prophets could not understand and even the angels in heaven desired to know.

Isn't it a glorious thought just to think that Christ is coming soon, perhaps during our lifetime, and that we might be among those fortunate ones who shall not sleep, but shall be changed.

And what a wonderful thought it is just to think about the translation of the church and that they shall be kept from that hour of trial, that hour which is to come upon the whole earth to try them that dwell on the earth. Think of the glory and the majesty of it. How tame any earthly thrill or pleasure would be alongside of it.

Some people look at you askance if you talk of such things and tactfully change the subject, but to me the supernatural part of God's plan is the most beautiful of all.

How thankful we can be that we have the Word of God to turn to to find an explanation for all these things we see coming to pass, for we see so many people around us walking in darkness, but "ye are children of the light."

It is astonishing how many people are putting their faith in men to straighten things out. So many would put Christ's coming off. They say, "Oh, I've heard that the last fifty years. It won't be in our time." But why not? It's as apt to be in our time as anyone's time. The last few years prophecies have been fulfilled with lightning-like rapidity.

The world is in a sorry state, and it would be a hard-shelled Christian who would close his eyes and be indifferent to the sorrows and sufferings around us. If it were not for the tragic side it would be almost amusing to see how hard people are planning and trying to untangle the mess they find themselves in, depending upon their own resources. The world reminds one of a huge ant-hill with everyone running here and there; only the ants get somewhere, but the people don't.

When I read some of Jonathan Swift's writings a few years ago I thought he was terribly cruel for satirizing humanity so mercilessly, but now I can begin to see his viewpoint, for people are so small and helpless and yet so vain and egotistic and "wise in their own conceits."

"As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

How thankful we can be that there is a Power higher than men's and that we can take His Word as a shield.

We may have to suffer persecution and scorn before this depression is over, but if we do let us do it with songs of joy in our hearts and hymns of praise on our lips as did those first brave Christian martyrs. We can remember that just beyond the darkest period there is the dawn of a new golden age when the sun will shine more brightly, heartaches will be fewer, and joy and gladness will abound.

"We will forget the old year's faults,
We'll face the new one without fear,
For God still rules the universe,
To Him we leave the coming year."

HEAVEN, LUCIFER, AND THE DEVIL

By H. B. Hathaway

MANY places in the Bible heaven is mentioned where it has no reference to where God's throne is. I will give just a few of many.

Deuteronomy 30:3, 4 refers to scattered Israel. If any be driven unto the uttermost parts of heaven, God says, He will gather them, not where He is, but back to the Holy Land, which will be His earthly throne some day. Luke 16:17 and 21:26 refer to heavens that have no reference to any place but here in connection with the earth.

The first two heavens are mentioned in 2 Peter 3:6, 7. The third is in the thirteenth verse, the one Paul was caught up to, on to, or forward to. The fourth verse of 2 Corinthians 12 says he was caught up into paradise. Where was paradise? It was in the garden God planted in Eden. I think Paul heard things concerning it when it will be restored.

One thing more in regard to heaven in Revelation 12:3, 4, 7. The old dragon drew the third part of the stars with his tail. I think all the literal stars the Lord placed in the sky are there yet. If that war of the seventh verse was where God's throne is, then there was sin there as well as here on earth, which I am positive was not so. (See Daniel 8:8-10—stars cast down and stamped upon.)

Now let us consider Isaiah 14:4 and the king of Babylon and what happened to him. The twelfth verse calls him Lucifer. In the thirteenth verse he makes the boast that he will ascend into heaven and exalt his throne above the stars of God. "I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High." In the sixteenth verse the question is asked, "Is this the man that made the earth to tremble?" So Lucifer was a man, the king of Babylon.

The first mention of devil is in Genesis 3. He deceived Mother Eve. Then there is one mentioned in Job 1:6; but it was not the same one that was in the garden, for God said the one in the garden should go on its belly all the days of its life. There were seven cast out of a woman. A number entered into a herd of swine; they ran into the sea and perished. Christ called Peter one. It seems to me James 1:13, 14 locates the seat of the devil.

A DIFFICULT VERSE Matthew 10:28

By Sydney E. Magaw

MATTHEW 10:28 is sometimes cited to prove that man is equipped with an inner something that is conscious and self-existent after the literal and visible man is dead. This, however, cannot be true because of the many positive statements that man is mortal, corruptible, and that death is a curse upon him because of sin. Furthermore many passages of Scripture show that man is unconscious in death. See Ecclesiastes 9:5, 6, and 10. When Lazarus died he began to corrupt, was buried, was raised out of the tomb, and not one word is mentioned that any living something that might be called a soul left his being and was conscious and happy while he was in the grave. Neither are we told that any conscious something came back and was reunited with him to make him alive again. And last of all, it is very noticeable that Lazarus never said a word about how he felt or where he went for those four days of death. The reason is that in death he had no knowledge. Only a resurrection could bring life and knowledge again.

A correct understanding of Matthew 10:28 necessitates a correct understanding of the word "soul," for in this verse mention is made that man cannot destroy the soul, but that God (implied) can destroy the soul in hell.

The word "soul" frequently means the very individual. "Eight souls," individuals, were saved in Noah's ark from the flood. These souls were saved, other souls were lost. It was God, too, who saved and who destroyed these souls.

More frequently, however, the word "soul" means life, and is synonymous with the word "life." The two words can very often be used interchangeably. In Matthew 16:25, 26 we read, "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Here we notice that the man may either save or lose his life, and likewise that he may save or lose his soul. To say that the soul can be lost is to show that it is not by itself to remain ever conscious or even existent. Instead, we see that if one makes no sacrifice for the Lord, that is, if he does not lose his very life, soul, in service to the Lord, the day will come when God will punish him by death. God will take away that very thing which he, the man, has clung to, his own life or his own soul. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." See Ezekiel 18:4 and 20.

Now, let us study our particular verse, Matthew 10:28: "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

First of all, from this very verse we see that God can destroy the soul. Hence, the soul here spoken of is not immortal, but perishable. Now let us ask, What is it that God can take away from us but man has no power to take away? It is life. God gave us life to use. If we waste life, if we are selfish with life, if we do not offer it to the Lord, God will take it from us. "The wages of sin is death." Contemplate the importance of our "fear" to the One who can destroy our lives, who can take away eternity from us. And contemplate how little we should fear man, who at the very most could merely slay us, but not take away our right to live eternally in the glorified earth when Christ rules.

The apostles were persecuted; all but one died as martyrs for the Lord. They lost this first mortal life, but we ask, Will it be an eternal loss, or will they not rather gain? They did not fear man. They did fear God. They lost natural life, but they shall have eternal life.

Likewise Paul was whipped, bruised, stoned, put to death. Man could destroy his body. Man did destroy his body, but no man can destroy his precious, glorified life to be given him by the One who holds the keys to his grave.

But not all who have professed the Lord have been faithful as Paul. Some have been failures. There are counterfeiters, there are "wicked hands" and "evil men and seducers." And their end is not merely to die as all men now die, but they shall die a "second death" for their own transgressions, by which not only the body shall perish

"When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye . . . knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not from whence ye are."—Jesus.

YET ONCE AGAIN, OUR FATHER

YET once again, our Father,
We in Thy presence stand
To praise Thee for the blessings
That from Thy gracious hand
Still fall in rich profusion
Upon each humble heart,
And bring the sweet assurance
Thou canst alone impart.

As reverently we ponder
Upon Thy Word divine,
May light that is supernal
Upon its pages shine.
Be Thou our inspiration,
To us Thy truth unfold,
That in each wondrous promise
We may Thy love behold.

O guide us ever onward
And upward on the way
That leads to life eternal
In realms of endless day;
When Christ shall come in glory
To reign on David's throne,
O may we then, we pray Thee,
Be numbered with His own!

"AND THE LORD SHUT HIM IN"

THESE words, recorded in Genesis the seventh chapter and the sixteenth verse, are ominously impressive in the finality of judgment which they express. They are also blessedly comforting in the positive assurance of salvation which they afford. The Lord was there to punish unbelief and sin, and the Lord was there to reward faith and righteousness. Such is ever God's way. No sinful act goes unpunished, no deed of righteousness unrewarded.

And the Lord shut him in! This was not the act of a man that it could be changed or set aside. It was a judicial deed performed by the supreme Ruler of the world who changes not! There could be no appeal from His decision, no escape from His verdict. The door was shut, shut by the hand of Almighty God! Thereafter no hand but His could open it. No man could enter and find sanctuary within those protecting walls.

The direct result of its closing was that "eight souls were saved by water" (1 Pet. 3:20), and all the rest of humanity's millions were swept out of existence by the same waters that were the means of salvation to the faithful few. Who can question God's justice, His righteousness, or His wisdom, in saving but eight souls out of all the myriads of earth, and consigning all others to destruction? "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"—Gen. 18: 25.

Our Master recalled these tragic events to illustrate the conditions that were to prevail when He comes "the second time without sin unto salvation." He declared that "as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." The course of life ran smoothly along its customary lines in those days. "Business as usual" might well have been the final news that flashed from the sinful world of unbelief to the little group within the ark before the Lord shut the door.

All those who had not believed the warning of the "preacher of righteousness," all those who had failed to appreciate the reality of the menace that threatened the world with destruction, all those who refused to embrace the opportunity of salvation afforded by the grace of God "until the day that Noe entered into the ark," all these were cut off from all possibility of deliverance when the Lord shut the door upon Noah and the eight with him!

So shall also the coming of the Son of man be!

It is true that perplexity, doubt, fear, and dread, will agitate the minds of men as the great day of the Lord's vengeance draws near. But the scoffers who will arise in those days will not be altogether wrong (as is so often the case with those who believe error) when they assert that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Pet. 3:3, 4. Few happenings are predicted for the last days that the world would look upon as other than natural in their origin. Nevertheless the "day of wrath" shall dawn at last, the hour of separation come, and "one shall be taken, and the other left," and God will shut the door of salvation forever as far as entrance into Jesus Christ, the Ark of eternal safety, is concerned, and for all on the outside there will remain "but a certain fearful looking for of judgment."

The Christian's Hope

By George B. Alldridge

"And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John 3:3.

IN THE HERALD of December 12 this item appears: "This is not a criticism, but it sometimes seems our writers run too much to the doctrinal. We need 'spiritual food' as well as temporal, and much more of it."

Maude Royden in her Beauty in Religion writes, "It is not a little thing for us English people that our version of the Bible—the old Authorized Version—was written at a time when our language was at its most perfect state. The English language is one of the noblest in the world, flexible, strong, various, musical; but it has never again been quite so beautiful as it was when Shakespeare wrote it: and just at that time our Bible was translated. The great phrases of the Bible bring sometimes a sense of their truth that argument does not bring. When you hear a verse like this: 'If with all your hearts ye truly seek him, ye shall ever surely find him'—it is partly the beauty of the words that penetrates the mind with conviction. It is not only an assurance of fact; it is that the extraordinary beauty of the form makes us know it is true, because if it were not true it could not be beautiful."

How often following the study of the Sunday school lesson or the Berean study we hear discussion chiefly confined to the letter and fail entirely in catching the import of the spiritual significance of the lesson, which relatively is of the most importance.

Jesus said, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." So it seems in Jesus' day they all heard and bore Him witness, and "wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." Presently, as He preached on, He pointed out who were the recipients of God's love and mercy in Elisha's day and the day of his master Elijah.

How did they receive this knowledge? "And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong."

Paul in writing to the Thessalonians told them that for those who were asleep they were not to sorrow even as others "which have no hope" (1 Thess. 4:13).

Jesus said, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." We have already pointed out the purity and clearness of our Authorized Version. So when Jesus used the adjective "little," do you think He meant its antonym, "great"? He meant just what He said, and if you will ponder and muse over our text a little while, you must and will agree. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

I suppose everybody possesses some kind of a hope. But how many possess—note it is in Him, part of Him—this hope, viz., "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." My brethren, I believe this with all my heart. Do you?

In these wonderful days we are learning a great deal. Psychologists tell us when we love, the image of what we love is impressed upon our minds; when we love, the spirit that we love is born within us.

All life comes from love. So, then, if you love Christ, cannot you see spiritually that Christ is born in you, the spirit of Christ becomes yours? Paul virtually says so in Galatians 2:20, 21. "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain."

Do you not see what Paul is driving at? If your righteousness is the result of keeping the law (Mosaic, of course), then why did Christ die? Hence, then, Christ, now being a quickening spirit, that is, a spirit capable of imparting its life to others, it was necessary for His mortal soul inherited from the first Adam to die and be raised an immortal spirit.

So how clear Paul's reasoning is. "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit

This Is Our Hope

O joy of joys! Earth had no joy
To be compared with this:
We came to find the buried Christ,
And angels brought a bliss
That thrills our happy, happy hearts,
And beams upon our ways,
For Christ is risen—risen? Yes!
Break forth in songs of praise!
I know He died to save my soul
From depths of night and sin;
I shout the psalmody of love,
For the glory dwells within.
I rise to tell the wondrous news
The angels brought to me:
Life, life is His who bled and died
Of late on Calvary.
Thou, Jesus, Son of God, I bow
Before Thy feet, and pray.
Look on Thy lost one—here am I—
Take all my sins away.
And be Thou all Thou wilt to me,
My succor in the strife;
Then be my resurrection joy
And everlasting life.

—B. F. M. Sours.

of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you"—"be in you": get that deep into your heart and mind—"be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness."

Dear Paul, what do you mean? Oh, I see. My carnal mind, or the mind of the flesh, in God's sight is dead because of trespasses and sins? Yes. And this new mind hath He quickened, or as you say, "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Is this what Jesus meant when He said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life"?

Do you recall that verse in 1 Corinthians 13:11? "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things."

Our gifted and able President Roosevelt was once a child back when Grover Cleveland was President.

Suppose President Cleveland had said to him, "Franklin, I want you to fill my chair as President during the next few weeks while I am away."

Everybody reading this would say, "Impossible!"

Yes, but why? As a child he lacked education and training and experience. Well, but the same life is his now as actual President as was his while a boy. Yes, but not the same mind.

Now why cannot you see that God is working with us the same way? We started out spiritually as a child.

"For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil."—Heb. 5:12-14.

If this hope in Him is "we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is," is it not logical to suppose that everybody professing to possess this hope is now striving to be like Him? Hence, why does John say, "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not"?

If the world knows us as one of its own, then it is very evident we do not possess this hope, because its function is to purify us even as He is pure. So if the world does not know us, it is because of our purity.

We pray, or I used to before my eyes became opened to the truth of God's Word, "Dear Lord, make me pure." Yes, but the text says, "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself."

Artificial flowers are made up of dead material, very beautiful to the eye. The flowers or the graces of the Spirit are living flowers and result from the power of "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" which makes us free from the law of sin and death. Sin deforms because it is destructive of moral beauty and power; but the Christ-life, having its law and method of development, builds character after the divine type. The secret lies in this: The one who possesses this hope and practices it lives the Christ-life, and of such it can be said, "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

This Christ-life gives us who possess it tastes and affinities which lead us to think on whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, and all things that are virtuous and praiseworthy; and of such materials our characters are formed.

The man who has a sensual life has tastes for sensual things and constructs a sensual character. He is a man of a different mold. He has the carnal desires of the flesh and of the mind, and his soul is abnormal in size and deformed in figure. He has not the Christ-life, and hence does not grow Christlike.

A writer says, "A good hope, through grace, animates and gives life to action, and purifies as it goes; like the highland stream that dashes from the rock, and purifies itself as it pursues its course to the ocean. The Christian needs Christ in his redemption as the object of faith, for salvation; Christ Himself the object of love, for devotion and service; and Christ in His coming glory, the object of hope, for separation from the world."

A L O N E

IT is human to stand with the crowd, it is divine to stand alone. It is manlike to follow the people, to drift with the tide; it is Godlike to follow a principle, to stem the tide.

It is natural to compromise conscience and to follow the social and religious fashion for the sake of gain or pleasure; it is divine to sacrifice both on the altar of truth and duty. "No man stood with me, but all forsook me," wrote the battle-scarred Apostle in describing his first appearance before Nero to answer for his life for believing and teaching contrary to the Roman world. Truth has been out of fashion since man changed his robe of fadeless light for a garment of faded leaves.

Daniel dined and prayed alone. Elijah sacrificed and witnessed alone. Jeremiah prophesied and wept alone. Jesus loved and died alone. And of the lonely way His disciples should walk He said: "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

And multitudes now, both in the church and in the world, applaud the courage and fortitude of the patriarchs and prophets, the apostles and martyrs, but condemn as stubbornness or foolishness like faithfulness to truth today.

Wanted, today, men and women, young and old, who will obey their convictions of truth and duty at the cost of fortune and friends and even life itself.—Selected by Lottie E. Young.

The Nation Without a Country

YEAR by year, century by century, the Jews in their exile sent up prayers and petitions for a national life of their own. It was their constant hope that they might again enjoy the blessings of political independence and freedom. Yet their sin had been too great, their rejection of the Messiah too cruel. The wrath of God was still upon them, scattering them to the four winds of heaven and dispersing them among the islands of the sea, until they should see the error of their ways and come to their own again, through the love and knowledge of the Savior, Jesus Christ.

This dispersion of the Jews was perhaps the heaviest punishment that could have been visited upon them, and it has continued through hundreds of years. While Rome was still mistress of the world, the Israelites found their way into many lands, in the train of their conquerors. They endured frequent hardships, and were subjected to harsh laws and edicts, both before and after the decline and fall of the Roman Empire.

Under the Mohammedans the Hebrews suffered little. On the whole the Moslems were friendly to them, and they enjoyed comparative peace under the Caliphs. In Turkey they were kindly received, and even when elsewhere their brethren were being persecuted, the Turkish Jews were unmolested.

In Italy the Jews frequently bought immunity from persecution at a high price. Shakespeare gives us a vivid description of the general attitude towards the Jews here by his delineation of the character Shylock.

In France the Jews were hated and reviled, robbed and banished by private tortures and royal edicts. Often their full purses brought the exiles back within a few years of their banishment. Philippe Auguste cancelled the debts the church owed the Jews, and the mortgages they held on churches, banishing them from the land. But in less than twenty years they were allowed to return. Louis IX, for the benefit of his soul, cancelled one third of the debts his subjects owed the Jews, and ordered the destruction of their sacred books. The "Rising of the Shepherds" was marked by some of the most horrible Jewish massacres which history records. Many other minor persecutions took place, but in 1395 the Hebrews were banished from France, not to return until modern times.

In early times the Jews made their way to Spain. Under Moorish rule they were well treated and happy. They occupied positions of prominence and their literature attained wonderful development, making the golden age of Spain. However, the disastrous expenditures of the nobles soon made them jealous of the prosperous Hebrews, and these aristocrats began to oppress them cruelly. Finally

In the present article, which originally appeared in "The World's Crisis," Mr. W. E. Thompson traces the tragic history of the Jews throughout the Christian centuries down to the present time, and on into the glorious future when the Lord their God shall "return, and have compassion on them, and bring them again every man to his heritage, and every man to his land."

Ferdinand and Isabella issued an edict for the expulsion of all non-Christians. The wealth which the Jews offered for the repeal of this edict did not avail, and they were banished from Spain.

II

It is probable that some Jews accompanied the Romans to England, and our Anglo-Saxon ancestors no doubt found them there. The Norman kings were favorably inclined to the Hebrews, but this thrifty race became more unpopular as their wealth increased. They were forbidden to attend the coronation of Richard Coeur-de-Lion, and when some of them were discovered there, serious trouble ensued.

In his novel Ivanhoe, Sir Walter Scott describes the treatment meted out to the Jews at this time. Their immense wealth made them a prey to the strong and lawless but poverty-stricken nobles. Norman conqueror and conquered Saxon alike treated them with disdain. Isaac of York suffered all the abuses of his race. When he begged shelter of Cedric the Saxon, he was reluctantly admitted, but no room was made for him at the banquet table; he was ignored, an outcast; and the Norman nobles found it convenient to extort gold by torture from Isaac and his wealthy brethren.

The Jews continued to suffer so much under the Plantagenet kings that in 1253 they asked permission to leave the country. For a time, the greed of their persecutors delayed their departure, but in 1290 they left England, thousands of them going to Germany and other countries.

In Germany, the Jews had already been established for several centuries. Here they were cruelly treated as elsewhere. In many German cities, as well as in the cities of other countries, the children of the Ghetto were confined to their own quarter, and here they lived as foreigners and exiles, enduring robbery and oppression, and sometimes tortured and put to death.

After the close of the Middle Ages, there was a general improvement in the treatment of these much-enduring people. They were allowed to settle again in many lands, becoming thrifty and prosperous everywhere. In spite of the prejudices against them, they frequently occupied high positions resulting from their wealth and knowledge. They are especially gifted in music, science, politics, and finance, and the Jewish roll of honor contains many distinguished names. In England, Disraeli attained the high position of Prime Minister; the names of Rothschild and Guggenheim have become synonyms of financial power and success; Einstein is the outstanding scientist of our day; and many other Hebrews have achieved world renown.

In the western world the Jews have found happiness and prosperity. There are now large numbers of them both in the United States and in Canada. In these new countries they have never known persecution, and all the bars against them are gradually being removed.

Notwithstanding the punishments which have been visited upon these people, the divine hand has followed them always. Although in Moses' day God was compelled to pronounce upon the idolatrous Israelites a series of curses, yet there are a number of more favorable promises to the faithful remnant of His people, who will acknowledge the Messiahship of Jesus Christ. Throughout the Old Testament Scriptures we read such verses as, "I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again every man to his heritage, and every man to his land." And again, "I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel." And again, "And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds."

III

IN OUR own days pogroms against the Jews have taken place in several countries. Twenty-five years ago frightful stories were current of their sufferings in Russia under the Romanoffs. Lately the tragedy of the Jews in Germany has astounded the world. Many Jews have been prominent in German life, but now a Nazi order has barred them from public offices. Famous surgeons, jurists, professors, and educationists are being dismissed. Out of the 3,400 lawyers in Berlin before the Nazi order, 2,200 were Jewish, but now very few of these will be allowed to practice.

Seldom have the Jews endured such refined cruelty as has been visited upon them by the Nazi Government. The hospitals of other countries are said to be full of refugees—lacerated, crushed, and mangled. In many cases the eyes of the victims have been beaten out and their limbs broken. Even women and girls have been mutilated. Their cruel tyrants do not even allow the unfortunate Jews to escape from the country, but attempt to keep them there, starving, and in constant terror of their lives. German officials deny all these horrors. They say the Jews are merely frightened, but the fact that they will allow no comment on the new regime looks suspicious.

No matter what provocation Hitler and his Government may have had, no matter how bitter political strife may have become, there is still no justification for inhuman cruelty and brutality. No Government has the right to single out any group of its citizens for unjust legislation or persecution. There are courts of law in which all offenders may be tried. If any of the Jews have violated the laws of the land, they should be legally prosecuted before a duly constituted tribunal. The civilization of today should have no place for massacre or mutilation of citizens. It is to be hoped that the time will soon come when no such frightful spectacle as has been recently witnessed in Germany may be possible anywhere on the earth.

Many protests are being made against the treatment of the Jews in Germany. A movement is on foot to appeal to the League of Nations on behalf of this minority people, on account of the alleged atrocities in Nazi Germany. The matter has recently been brought up in the British House of Commons, together with a petition for extended opportunities for Jewish citizenship in Palestine. The Holy Land seems the natural refuge for these persecuted Israelites; they have wandered the world over searching for a haven of rest, but finding none. Palestine is now undergoing many innovations. The Jordan River, once an eyesore, has become one of the beauty spots of the Orient, and its waters now supply the power for an extensive electrical system. The Dead Sea has lately proved to be a great bonanza through the discovery of vast quantities of salt, potassium, and other minerals; it is a storehouse worth millions to its owners.

In their adopted countries the Jews have been confronted with the message of Christianity, and Christians are anticipating the day when these forsaken people will once again come to their lawful place among the nations of the world. The Hebrews have endured and suffered much, but "the Lord loveth whom he chasteneth," and they are slowly and surely being brought to Christ. Truly God works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform, and the prophecies of the Old Testament are gradually coming to fulfillment—"I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive." And again, "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock."

"THE good workman is his own taskmaster."

A DIFFICULT VERSE

but by which all hope of life again will be destroyed. This will be when "the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." The word "hell" in our text of Matthew 10:28 is gehenna in the Greek, and refers not to an endless torture but to an eternal destruction, the second death from which there is no life, for here God destroys not only the body but all hope of living again.

Such appears to be the thought to us from our study of the text, and though it may not appear to be an exact explanation from the King James translation it is very strongly substantiated by the wording of the Emphatic Diaglott, which we quote, "Be not afraid of those who kill the body, but cannot destroy the (future) life; but rather fear Him who can utterly destroy both life and body in Gehenna."

Papers on the Lord's Coming

By F. L. Austin

ARTICLE IV of this series closed with the thought that in Revelation 6 Christ is revealed to John as having the Church present, "round about the throne" of Revelation 4:2, at work with Him in accomplishing the labors of opening the seals in "the day of the Lord"—the seven seals of the "book" which Christ had already in 5:6, 7 taken "out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne." On Page 9 of THE RESTITUTION HERALD, Number 14, is explained in part why the writer is convinced that the "four beasts" of Revelation (called "four living ones" by the Diaglott and "four living creatures" by Rotherham) are to be interpreted as the Church in its resurrection glory and service. The setting of the events is in "the day of the Lord."

Daniel in 7:9, 10 also gives a brief glimpse of this self-same throne-scene. He saw it "cast down," that is, placed, set. He saw "the Ancient of days" take His seat thereon. He saw that "thousand thousands ministered unto him"; that "ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him." And in the thrills of the realism of his vision Daniel saw that "the judgment was set, and the books were opened." In his "night visions," as told in verse 13, he also saw "one like the Son of man." How similar, in various features, were the visions of Daniel and John of the new-set throne.

At verses 25 to 27 Daniel explains briefly the judgment seat of verse 10. He says in verse 26: "The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." That is, "take away" the dominion of him who, in verse 25, is speaking and working against "the most High."

Is this not exactly what we see taking place in Revelation 6 to 19? In John 5:22 we are told that the Father "hath committed all judgment unto the Son"; and in Revelation 4 and 5 we see the judgment throne of Daniel 7:9, 10 prepared for action, and Christ taking "the book" from the hand of His Father. Then in 6:1, 2 action begins. The judgment work of taking away the dominion of all Gentile authorities starts. It is during the campaign following the opening of the sixth seal that, as stated in Revelation 6:12-18, "the kings of the earth" begin to shrink and quail. "The great . . . , the rich . . . , the chief . . . , the mighty . . . , and every bondman, . . . freeman, hid themselves in the . . . rocks, . . . and said . . . , Fall on us, and hide us . . . from the wrath of the Lamb." But in all this the "living creatures," that is, the Church, are actively working with Christ, having been "caught away to meet him in the air."

That judgment will proceed on through the opening of the seventh seal of 8:1, and on through the sounding of its seven trumpets, and still on till the seventh and last vial shall have been poured out upon God-disdaining Gentilism—until that most vitriolic blasphemous of Revelation 13:

6, 7 shall have been cast into the "lake of fire burning with brimstone" of Revelation 19:20.

Christ's judgment work will consist of much more than mere pronouncement of sentences. It will include the execution of those sentences—the penalizing of those sentenced. Revelation 13:1-9 reveals that at last one strong Gentile monarch will, for a brief time, ally with himself all other Gentile kings—yea, and for a brief period, will make a covenant with God's holy people Israel, who are sometimes termed "saints of the most High." The expressing of Christ's judgments against such a powerful confederacy (see Rev. 17:14) will result in "great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time," according to Matthew's record in 24:21.

And all of this phase of His judgment work takes place while Christ operates from the new-placed throne of "the Lord's day" as reported by John in Revelation 4, and by Daniel in chapter 7:9-11. The Church will be with Him, aiding those who resist that blasphemous power. This throne is not the throne of Luke 1:31, 32 promised to Mary's Son. Rather, if it is proper for humans to say it, it is the throne of preparation—preparing for the establishment of His throne in Jerusalem. And it is "immediately after (notice after) the tribulation of those days," Matthew reveals in 24:29, 30, that "they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

The Prophet, in Daniel 12:1, 2, was also given a foregleam of a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. "At that time" many of Daniel's "people (Israelites) will be delivered," even by way of resurrection. And, following that time of trouble, which is also referred to in Revelation 19:11-21, we see in Revelation 20:4-6 other "thrones" set, and the time begins when they shall reign "with Christ a thousand years."

After, in Luke 21:21-28, referring to the distress of nations immediately preceding His coming "with power and great glory," Jesus then urged His disciples in verses 34-36 to "watch . . . and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." There is an "escape" provided. For, "God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ."

Yes, the Church will escape the great tribulation. It will have been perfected and will be at work with Christ during its heart-rending scenes.

But the Church does not include all those received by man into church standing. It is made up of those who truly set life aside for Christ; who submit to become shapened and moulded out of the same piece of golden Faith as was Christ, the Mercy Seat.

The Challenge of the Depression

EVERY careful Bible student and Bible expositor will differentiate between interpretation and application. However, a word of warning is sometimes necessary in making this distinction. We should not be so careful in our interpretation that we have nothing of the Word of God left for ourselves. Certainly it is true that all of the Bible is for us even though all of it is not about us. We recognize the fact that there are some portions of Holy Writ that are particularly for the Jews, there are some portions that are especially for the Gentiles, and certainly there are some portions of Holy Writ that are especially directed to the church of God. However, it is our bounden duty to recognize the fact that every part of the Bible is of practical value to us in this particular age. We read in Romans 15:4, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope." So the Christian who leaves the Old Testament out of his reading is making a very sad mistake. "The New," some one has said, "lies concealed in the Old, and the Old lies revealed in the New." The principles that prevailed in ancient Israel prevail today. Sin is always visited with judgment, and sin is always a reproach to a people. Those principles are not only true of one age, they are true of all ages.

PENALTY OF MATERIALISM

As we study this portion of the Word, we find that Israel worshiped strange gods and would not harken unto God. Israel preferred to walk in her own ways and her own counsels. She was indebted to God because He had brought her out of Egyptian bondage, and yet she forgot Him, turned her back upon Him. And all of these statements are equally true, as far as the broad principles are concerned, of our own nations. God has blessed America above the nations of the earth. The blessing of God has rested upon the people, upon the inhabitants of this land from the Atlantic to the Pacific; and now America has forgotten God, has turned her back upon Him, upon revealed religion, and upon the infallible revelation of God. America has become materialistic, has worshiped the golden calf, and the church that professes the name of Christ has turned its back upon the incarnate Word and upon the written Word, and the consequences are that the judgment of God is upon the nation in the present hour. When Israel gave up God, God gave up Israel. When a man gives up God, eventually God must give that man up. And when a nation gives up God, that nation will be given up by God. Has the time come or is it near when the statement, "So God gave them up," is true in the history of our beloved country? Does God have to say, "Because of their Christ-rejection, their forsaking the faith of their fathers and the God of their fathers, I gave them up"? Certainly it is true that we are passing through the greatest economic depression of our history, and the tragedy of the situation is that there is little recognition of the spiritual factors involved. Men have lost faith in each other, they are disillusioned, they do not know where to turn in this hour of stress and trial; and, therefore, this is a most challenging period to the church of the living God. We may well ask ourselves, Has God a message for this day and this generation? Has God a message for this crisis? Has God a message for the church that bears the name of His Son?

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CHURCH

It is very interesting and, I think, significant that the only prophetic word that has come in the midst of this depression from any man that has the ears of the nation comes from a layman by the name of Roger Babson. We have listened in vain to those behind the sacred desk who have the ears of the nation for some distinctive message, for some prophetic message for the day and hour, calling the people back to God as the ancient prophets used to call their nations and their people back to God. Mr. Babson recently came back from a conference of Christian leaders where he discovered that churches are curtailing their work because of the depression, and has made this statement, "For churches to curtail their work because of the depression is like hospitals running half time because of an epidemic and reveals the fact that churches are failing to realize their responsibility in the premises. Church leaders have the same responsibility in a time of depression that doctors have in the time of an epidemic." And then he makes this appeal, "I, as a business man, appeal to the churches to awaken, to be roused, to bestir themselves, to recognize their responsibility in this solemn hour."

THE CHALLENGE

What is the challenge of the depression, what is God seeking to say, what is God's message in this hour? First of all it is a message to His people to harken unto God. That is the statement that we read in the text, "Oh, that my people had hearkened unto me." God is seeking to talk to His people in these days, and some of us have gone through stress and times of testing and difficulty in order that God might have a chance to say something to our hearts. Harken unto God! How do you treat God's Word, how do you treat His revelation? Do you think that God is indifferent to our attitude toward His Book? We are sensitive about the way men treat our word, and the most insulting thing you can do toward God is to reject His Word, His message; and men in our nation on every hand are doing that very thing. God's Word says, "For ever, O Lord, is thy word settled in heaven." "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." The challenge of the depression is for God's people to come to the Book, to come to the ways of God, the truth of God, come back to that intimate fellowship with God whereby we are in an attitude of mind where we can hear God's voice speaking to us in His revelation. Do you take time to listen to the Word of God, do you take time to get alone with Him so that He can speak to your soul through His Book?

A few weeks ago it was my privilege to attend and speak at a missionary convention in Boston. I took advantage of the opportunity to take a trip to Northfield. There was one particular spot I wanted to see, and that was Round Top. Climbing to that knoll, I stood by the grave of Dwight L. Moody, and there I read this statement on the tombstone, "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." And as I stood there, I turned to my brethren and said, "Let us pray," for I felt the need of a prayer of dedication that somehow we might be impressed with the will of God and the message of God and that we might do the will of God more perfectly. I felt like saying with the man who said, as he looked at the picture of General William Booth, "God, do it again, do it again." How we need to be men of God, like the man I have just mentioned, who take time to listen to God, hear His voice, and come forth from the inner sanctuary with the dew of heaven upon their garments and enabled to speak forth the message of God with divine unction and power.

The challenge of the depression is to trust in God. The other day I turned to my wife and said, "I have found another anti-depression text." We play a game at our home that we call, "Looking for anti-depression texts," and whenever we find one, we remind each other of it. This was in the 37th Psalm and the third verse. "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Will you put that to the test, will you trust God, will you obey Him, and will you do good? There has never in the history of this nation been a more challenging period than the one we are now passing through. The eyes of the world are upon God's people, and the men and women of the world are watching those of us who profess the name of Christ to see how we are going to act in this crisis hour, to see whether we are going to give in to discouragement, to walk as though we had no living God. This is a challenging hour to reveal to the world that there is a living God and that He has people that trust Him. Here is another anti-depression text, a remarkable statement, "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." What shall I do when trouble comes? Give in to the blues, get discouraged and downhearted? Listen, "Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." Have you learned the secret of trusting God in the midst of discouragement, or do you get panicky? People of God, show the reality of your faith, show that you have a living God in whom you are trusting in this challenging hour.—Dr. Paul Rood.

THE GREAT TRIBULATION

By H. B. Hathaway

IN THE HERALD of December 5 the question was up concerning a secret coming of the Lord for the church, and it was suggested that its people will escape the great tribulation and asked what help can be given toward preparing for it. I don't know as anything I can give will be any help, but I think there are some scriptures that indicate the church will escape the worst of it.

We are in the time of trouble now. The condition of the world shows it has commenced.

In Luke 21:25 and on, after giving a description of the condition the world will be in just prior to the coming of Christ, the thirty-sixth verse says, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

In Isaiah 26:20, 21, the Lord invites His people to a place of safety until the indignation is passed. His indignation is the cause of the tribulation, for He comes to punish the inhabitants of earth for their sins. The twentieth verse may not refer to translation: if not, what does it mean? Certainly they could not remain in a literal house with closed doors during all that time.

The firstborn of Israel escaped death by the application of blood (Exodus 12:22, 23). The slain lamb was a type of Christ. May not His blood be the means of rescuing the church He has purchased with His blood (Acts 20:28)? Zechariah 14:5 says when the Lord comes the saints will be with Him, so they must be caught up before that time.

There is only one way the translation can take place and the world not know it. I do not believe they will know, for if they did it seems to me they would not do some things the prophets have said they would do.

If there should be a great epidemic such as the 'flu was during the war that caused more deaths than the battle field, the chosen ones could be given a spirit body, and no one would know about it. It is not necessary that the old bodies we have should have anything to do with the change, for it would be just as easy to give a new body to those as it would be to do so for them that have turned to dust.

Paul makes that statement clear in 1 Corinthians 15:35-39, for he says, "God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him." In John 6:63: "The spirit . . . quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."

"We which are alive and remain" in 1 Thessalonians 4:17 does not say how long we remain after the dead are raised at the sounding of the trumpet. It does not say how long the trumpet will sound. Another thing: it does not say that they will all be caught up at the same time; but it shows the change when it takes place will be sudden, in the twinkling of an eye, to those that will be worthy to receive it.

Abreast of the Times

Nineteen Thirsty Three

"They shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been."—Obad. 16.

LONDON, Eng., Nov. 5, 1933.—According to the Sunday Chronicle, in spite of the fact that the public in England was not encouraged to drink by the restrictions of an Eighteenth Amendment, "Britain has suddenly developed a great thirst. People all over the country are drinking more, and experts declared yesterday that it is not only the hot summer of 1933 that accounted for it."

After mentioning an increase in water consumption the Chronicle says, "Britain's great thirst, however, is not confined to water. In all parts people are also drinking more beer. At the headquarters of the Brewers' Society an official stated that up to September, 1933, there had been a great increase in production."

No Children by 1970 in United States

"The streets of the city (Jerusalem) shall be full of boys and girls playing."—Zech. 8:5.

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Jan. 10.—"If the present trend of population continues, in 1970 there will be no children at all" in this country, asserted Dr. O. E. Baker, senior agricultural economist of the United States Department of Agriculture, addressing the annual convention of the extension service workers of the University of Maryland.

Speaking on "Use of Land for the Welfare of the People," Dr. Baker declared that only in the rural sections of northern New England and some rural sections of New York has the birth rate shown an increase recently. According to the Associated Press report, he said that at the present trend in 25 years the death rate will equal the birth rate, and after that will exceed it. The distinguished speaker offered figures to show that there were 600,000 fewer births in the United States last year than in 1921.

As was asserted by S. J. Lindsay many years ago, "Sin destroys itself, burns itself out, whether it be in an individual, a family, or a race."

Rome Foresees War in Pacific

"The sword of the enemy and fear is on every side."
—Jeremiah 6:25.

ROME, Jan. 6.—An authoritative Italian report on the budget estimating the cost of the navy of that country for the year 1934 was issued today in which was included a general discussion of the possibility of a Japanese-American naval war in the Pacific area. The report intimates that the present Japanese invasion of Asia has back of it the expectation of a war with the United States in the near future. Emphasis is placed on the fact that the United States is economically interested in China and throughout the Far East, and has a powerful fleet supported by ample naval bases.

The report states further that Japan "has no fear of America on account of geographical and strategic reasons," and points out that the empire of the Mikado "is able to reach the Philippines and other American naval bases in four days, while the American fleet will require twelve days to reach Manila." Attention is called to the fact that "every defensive naval battle must be fought not more than 5,000 miles from the nearest base, while San Francisco is 7,500 miles off the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands 4,800 miles away."

Attention was called in this paper some months ago to the important place Japan would probably occupy in the great gathering of nations foretold in Joel 3 and Zechariah 14. This official survey from Rome presents about the same threatening picture. "While despising the whites for their materialistic outlook, the Japanese are bent upon the triumph of their race. Tomorrow prepares a great tragedy for the world. The Japanese are advancing with a strength of arms and more, with the strength of their thoughts which are founded on belief in their presumed historic mission.

"Today they are invading and organizing China. Tomorrow, prompted by race hatred, they will fight the whites. Japan's withdrawal from the League of Nations assured her of full liberty of action."

Where Was His Soul?

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezek. 18:4.

"The dead know not any thing."—Eccl. 9:5.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—In today's Herald and Examiner Arthur Brisbane tells the story of Peter Helfrich, who suffered from amnesia for twelve years, his memory completely gone. He could recognize no one of his past friends nor recall a single event that had occurred. He was struck on the head recently in a robbery, however, and his normal memory returned.

"Some will say," Mr. Brisbane declares, "That is like shaking a watch to make it start going again. The brain and the so-called spirits that reside in it are nothing but machines, like the watch." The suggestion is not sound. Shaking a watch may make it start. Striking the head of an amnesia victim may cause the removal of some obstruction in the brain. But what makes the brain think? The blow from the blackjack did not do that."

The power to think is life, a principle which God alone can give. The time may come when the scientist may produce synthetically a "thing" having all the appearance of a living creature, but the power to think, to really live, and to be able to transmit the life principle to others can come only from the Source of all being, God Himself!

NOTE AND OBSERVE

TO INSURE prompt filing of orders for its publications, the National Berean Society requests that the following items be observed in sending money and orders for books:

First. Orders for all Berean books and tracts should be addressed to the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois, and not to the National Bible Institution.

Second. State definitely how many and what kind of books are desired, giving the complete names of the books if possible.

Third. Make out money orders, checks, and drafts to the National Berean Society, and not to any individual in Oregon or elsewhere.

Fourth. For safety's sake, send cash over fifty cents in the form of money orders, checks, or drafts. Sums under this should be sent as stamps. If cash must be sent, send it as registered mail. The Society cannot hold itself responsible for money lost in the mails.

In the past orders have been considerably delayed because these simple rules have not been observed. The Society undertakes, however, to ship all books within 24 hours after receiving an order—if these four points are observed. Liberal credit will be extended whenever it is requested.

MAKE USE OF YOUR FACILITIES

Some six centuries have passed since the immortal Chaucer declared, "On bokes for to reade I me delighe," and in that time the statement of Solomon that "of the making of books there is no end" has been proved undeniably true. But in spite of the flood of literature, good, bad, and worse, that has poured from the scribes and presses, it is still a fact that no poetry nor prose has ever been written to equal that in the Bible either from point of literary value or from point of real worth.

It is the Berean motto to "Search the Scriptures Daily." It is the Berean slogan that announces, "We stand for unity, truth, and righteousness." And with these thoughts in mind the Berean books were planned. Lessons that, if their full benefit is to be received, must be studied have been provided, and their outlines should be augmented by special assignments for research.

A class, of course, is the best place for study of almost any subject, biblical or secular; but sometimes a class is unavailable. For this reason the National Berean Society has established two home study committees to conduct lessons by correspondence under competent leadership. Mrs. Virginia Kincheloe, Box 33, Fairfax, Virginia, heads the committee dealing with all under fourteen; Miss Verna Himmelright, 206 S. MacDonald Street, Attica, Indiana, heads the senior committee. Either chairman would be very pleased to hear from prospective students.

The charge for this service is nothing, but it is urged that those availing themselves of it pay the regular dues of one dollar a year each for isolated Bereans. Certainly an investment in Bible study will pay big dividends. Try it.

Arlen Marsh.

BECAUSE OF THY GREAT BOUNTY

Because I have been given much,
I, too, shall give;
Because of Thy great bounty, Lord,
Each day I live.
I shall divide my gifts from Thee
With every brother that I see
Who has the need of help from me.

Because I have been sheltered, fed
By Thy good care,
I cannot see another's lack
And I not share
My glowing fire, my loaf of bread,
My roof's shelter overhead,
That he, too, may be comforted.

Because love has been lavished so
Upon me, Lord,
A wealth I know that was not meant
For me to hoard,
I shall give love to those in need,
The cold and hungry clothe and feed,
Thus shall I show my thanks indeed.

—Grace Noll Crowell; selected by Esther Sealine, Stanhope, Iowa.

Again we call to your attention the fact that Senior Berean Book 3, God's Kingdom, is now on sale. The Cleveland Berean Society has ordered fifty. How many will you have? 25 cents a copy, 1 to 4; 22 cents a copy, 5 to 24; 20 cents a copy, 25 or more. Order from the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God."

FOLLOWING JESUS' PATTERNS

How many of you boys have taken a piece of wood, placed a pattern upon it, and cut out the end of a book rack or magazine stand or footstool? You were very careful, I'm sure, to follow your pattern exactly, so that the finished article would be true and pleasing to the eye as well. And you enjoyed the work so much.

Or, how many of you girls have had the fun of taking a piece of material, placing a pattern upon it, cutting very carefully along the lines and sewing it up? And lo, you have a pretty new dress all of your own making!

Isn't it just the finest feeling, boys and girls, to look at some finished object of your own handiwork, either for Father or Mother or perhaps yourself? Without the pattern your work would have been faulty and the result not at all ornamental or even useful.

Jesus, you know, had a great work in mind which He began during those years He lived on earth. God had chosen Him to be King in that kingdom which He is going to set up on this earth. Remember the angel told Mary that her Son, Jesus, should sit on David's throne forever.

Last week we learned that Jesus called helpers to assist Him in that great work of telling people about God's kingdom. And all the years since He has been calling for helpers. If we want to be so highly honored as to be His assistants, there are certain things we must do, certain rules we must follow, certain patterns we must use for our lives. Those rules or patterns must be followed just as closely as the pattern you used for your dress or book rack or footstool, for a mistake in building a life is much more important than a mistake in making something of wood or cloth.

When you were getting ready, my boy, to make that book rack for Father, you cast aside that piece of wood with the big knot in it, didn't you? And when you were cutting out that apron for Mother, my girl, you didn't use a piece for the pocket that was too small, did you? Such scraps were put aside, and such knotty pieces of wood used for kindling.

Just so with our lives! We are not just getting up mornings, getting to school on time, learning our lessons, and playing fair and square with our friends. We are making a life, and if we follow Jesus' pattern the finished result will be a joy to ourselves as well as to others and something Jesus can use in His kingdom.

One of the very nicest things about Jesus is that He used for His own life the patterns He gave us for ours. He never once asked us to do something He wasn't willing to do Himself. For example, take the third pattern, verse five. God's only Son, the one who might be the proudest of all men, was always humble. He loved to help the common people and serve them in every way He could; He never tried to "show off." We must keep a steady hand to follow that pattern.

Then take pattern number six, verse eight. Every one of us can see that Jesus had a heart just like pure gold. There was never any envy in it, no mean thoughts of others, only love and good wishes and kindness for all. It takes lots of grit to stick to the "pure in heart" pattern, but in the end we'll have made something out of our lives that Jesus will be delighted with and that He can use.

I wish each one of you would take the pattern that you need the most from among these patterns Jesus has given us, and try to fashion your life by that pattern for one week. If you hear quarreling all around you, use pattern seven, verse nine, will you? Jesus will be very happy to see you using that pattern, to say nothing of Mother and even yourself. It will make everyone around you happy.

Remember the "Sons and Daughters of the King" Club members promise to use Jesus as their pattern and study about Him every week. Don't you want to join our new club?

The first members of the "Sons and Daughters of the King" Club are four of our Oregon Sunday school scholars—Kenneth, Arlene, Leota, and Francis Gruber. Their mother is teacher of the "Busy Bees" Class, and she also helps her own children with their Sunday school lesson each week. Be very strict with yourselves, boys and girls, follow Jesus' pattern very closely, and learn all you can about Him. Be club members in good standing.

"Trying to walk in the steps of the Savior,
Trying to follow our Savior and King,
Shaping our lives by His blessed example,
Happy, how happy, the songs that we bring.

"How beautiful to walk in the steps of the Savior,
Stepping in the light, stepping in the light;
How beautiful to walk in the steps of the Savior,
Led in paths of light."

LESSON 4. — January 28, 1934

STANDARDS OF THE KINGDOM

Matthew 5:1-48

Devotional Reading: Psalm 15

GOLDEN TEXT

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.—Matthew 5:8.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Standards of Righteousness.

Basic Truth: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6:31.

I. Secrets of Happiness. (Matt. 5:1-12.) In the sermon on the mount Jesus interprets in practical terms the spiritual truths He came to impart. Here He paints a picture of kingdom conditions from a moral standpoint, just as in His miracles He furnished a picture of the kingdom from a physical standpoint. And as the exemplification by Jesus of the health and life which God will bring about in the kingdom brought blessing to many at that time, so will the putting into practice now of the rules of conduct that will govern in the kingdom result in much blessedness today. All the beatitudes have to do with present action and future reward. And all that Jesus requires in the sermon on the mount will be observed by the "new creature in Christ Jesus," who "walks not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

II. The Secret of Perfection. (Matt. 5:43-48.) Our Lord contrasts the traditional interpretations placed upon the law of God by the carnally minded Jews of His day with the true and spiritual meaning God would put upon it. Jesus lifts the law out of a mere commandment to be reluctantly obeyed through fear and plants its spirit in the heart, where it becomes the motive and the desire of the individual. The letter of the law which destroys its value, together with the additions which men have made to it in order to satisfy their sinful propensities, the Master places in sharp contrast with each other. To be a child of God, He says, one must not only do what God commands, but think and feel as God thinks and feels! His motives must become godlike. Men may keep the letter of the law and hate their enemies, but they cannot observe the spirit of it and not love and serve them. For the spirit of the law is the mind of God, and leads away from all evil thinking as well as from all evil doing, into the true righteousness that comes by faith.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Laws of the Kingdom. The lesson theme is well stated, "Standards of the Kingdom." If the applications are made with equal accuracy and applied to the kingdom and not to the church, much good will result from the lesson. What a different world we would have if these laws were in operation today. When the kingdom is established on the earth, these laws will be invoked and put into operation and nations will learn righteousness. The principle and spirit of them should be deeply rooted in the hearts and actions of the followers of Christ in this age.

Pure in Heart. This is a fundamental requirement of all followers of the Lord, whether servants or sons. Without purity no man will see God. We must purify our hearts (Jas. 4:8). This is not done by self alone. The purifying comes through the acceptance of Christ and living in accordance with the teachings given us. "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? . . . He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart."—Psa. 24:3, 4.

Peace-makers. The children of God will be peace-makers and not trouble-makers. The injunction is, "Do good unto all men." This is a natural result and tendency of all living the life of Christ and permeated by the Spirit of God. God is the author of peace, and if we live in Him, we shall "live in peace." This is a different peace from that possessed by the world: for its peace we are not to seek. "Thou shalt not seek their peace nor their prosperity all thy days for ever."—Deut. 23:6.

Be Different. We must be different from the world. We are to love our enemies as well as our friends. Instead of trying to get even with our persecutors, pray for them. Be friendly toward all, for if we salute the brethren only we are no different from the world. —C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

As in the last lesson, Jesus is presenting the kingdom, but this time it is conditions or standards of kingdom times. The beatitudes are all kingdom conditions. "Blessed" means "highly favored," and it is in the kingdom that these favors will be received and fully realized. Each condition mentioned in today's lesson will have its fulfillment in the kingdom.

To be pure in heart requires great effort and care on our part, but it is worth more than all else we can put into our lives. God wants His children to live such lives that will make them acceptable to Him, that He through Christ may give them a place in His everlasting kingdom. Then shall they receive the blessings promised them.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

A Christian According to Christ

It is evident from Acts 11:26 that a Christian is a disciple of Christ. Now it becomes easier for us to determine scripturally just what constitutes a Christian. Jesus said: "If any man come to me, and hate not (care more for) his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple.

And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple . . . So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."—Luke 14:26, 27, 33. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13:34, 35. Study these scriptures carefully, for they give Christ's requirements for a Christian.

It must be remembered that living a life which conforms to Christian standards does not in itself make one a Christian. One can love his neighbor as himself without repenting of sin or even claiming to be a follower of Christ. Lodge members do many fine things which were commanded by Christ, yet which, because they are done in the name of their lodge, are "lodge acts" and not "Christian acts." This is a distinction which must be kept in mind if we would be Christians.

A Christian, then, is one who repents of his sins, is baptized, and then lives to the glory of God, doing all things in the name of Christ (Col. 3:17).—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Jesus Tells Us How to Pray.

Memory Verse: "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him."—Matt. 6:8b.

How many times we have gone to our fathers or mothers and said, "I need a new dress," or, "I need a new pair of shoes." Sometimes, perhaps, you ask for only a pencil or some paper. Your parents knew you needed them, no doubt, but because you were so kind to ask so nicely for them, they soon provided them for you.

One of the first things Jesus taught the people was that they should pray. Now when we pray, we usually ask God for something we need and, most assuredly, we thank Him for what He has done for us. God knows what we need before we ask Him. This is what Jesus said about it: "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him." You say what Jesus said.

But it does please God to have us ask Him. Jesus gave us the best little prayer in our lesson today. Perhaps most of you can say it already. Let's bow our heads and say the first line. "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name." (Teacher may continue line for line if children cannot say the prayer.)

We all must learn the "Lord's Prayer," as it is called. But let's learn also to say little prayers of thanks. Let's remember to talk to God in prayer, as we do to our fathers and mothers.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THE TIDES OF HISTORY

The Oregon congregation is particularly enjoying a new series of Sunday night sermons by their pastor. "Tides of History" is the general theme, and the second in the series, entitled, "The Rise and Fall of the Tides of God," was given last Sunday night. In this series Bro. Marsh is attempting to strengthen the faith of the younger members of our number in the unflinching presence of God over all nations, peoples, and individuals.

Nations may come, nations may go, but over all is God, a refuge at all times, but particularly in these troublous days. We wish that all readers of The Restitution Herald could listen to this most inspiring and instructive series.

Mary Gesin.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Much sickness prevails among our people, and we feel the need of our loving Father and the tender hand of the great Physician. Sr. Brandon's father died January 10, following a seige of pneumonia, and our hearts all go out to the family in their sorrow. Sr. C. H. Simpson is at St. Mary's Hospital for an operation, and Sr. Ada Simpson has been painfully ill for the past two weeks. These are some of the conditions that make our prayers rise earnestly to God.

Sunday school is averaging an attendance around three hundred, and the other activities of the church are well and faithfully attended.

God is teaching us many things by the service it is possible to render to each other.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

In spite of the storm that deluged Glendale, Montrose, and adjacent districts around Los Angeles, and frightened and hindered many people from coming to church on the last day of the old year, the first Sunday of the New Year found many of the old familiar faces in their usual places at Sunday school and church services. Bro. and Sr. E. C. Railsback had returned from their extensive trip in the northern coastal states, and Sr. Railsback told of many interesting people she had visited in the various communities of the North.

Sr. Shepherd was present from Redlands. She has been able to be with us more frequently than formerly. Sr. Hobart was back with us again after an extended illness. And, although they were not able to be present, Bro. and Sr. Rich had returned from Arizona to their home in Long Beach. At last report Sr. Knott, who underwent a serious operation recently at the Riverside Community Hospital, was doing nicely.

At the annual Sunday school election, Bro. Geo. Rahn was reelected superintendent; Bro. J. E. Hammond, assistant superintendent; Sr. Josephine Hammond, secretary-treasurer; and Sr. Bessie Blackwell was continued as Home Department secretary. Many words of commendation were given to Bro. Rahn for his splendid work during the past year, and hopes for a prosperous New Year were voiced. A Sunday school Rally Day program was decided upon for the conference Sunday, which will probably be the first Sunday in February.

Norman John MacLeod, Pastor.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Announcement is made that our "Back-to-the-Bible" evangelist, F. L. Austin, 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Ill., will conduct morning and evening services at Burr Oak, Ind., on January 21, 1934. His morning theme will be, "The Church," and in the evening he will speak on "The Great Change Coming." All who are acquainted with Bro. Austin's ability as a teacher and a student of the Word, and who can possibly attend these meetings, we are sure will make an effort to do so.

KOKOMO, INDIANA

The young people of the Church of God Sunday school of this city are asking all to whom they offer a copy of The Restitution Herald to read it carefully, prayerfully, and with the Bible in hand, that the greatest benefit may be received from their work of distributing the paper.

The price they ask, five cents, is sufficiently low so that all can avail themselves of this opportunity of enjoying this splendid publication and at the same time helping the young people in their service of the church and Sunday school, as all they make goes to the cost of maintaining religious work in Kokomo.

Ask your solicitor about the place and hour of their services. We are sure you will enjoy meeting with them.

BRUSH CREEK (OHIO) CHURCH OF GOD

Sr. Luella Underwood, secretary of our local Sunday school the past several years, was married to Mr. Henry Ryan of Cincinnati, Ohio, on Saturday, Dec. 30, 1933, at Covington, Ken. We pray them a happy journey together.

On Saturday, Jan. 6, Barbara Carol was born to Bro. and Sr. Wm. Stine. Barbara is the first daughter in the family, and her two brothers are as proud of her as the parents.

Sr. Anna Eidemiller, seventy-two years of age on December 28, 1933, is home and gaining strength after a most unusual accident which occurred last September 3. While driving to town with a horse and buggy she evidently failed to look for an approaching train before crossing the railroad. The train killed the horse, smashed the buggy into splinters, and picked up Sr. Eidemiller on the forepart of the engine. After a hasty examination she was found to be in a critical condition, so, rather than to move her, one of the trainmen rode to the next station holding her safely on the cowcatcher. As soon as Troy was reached she was taken to the hospital, where for six weeks she remained with a broken leg slowly mending. After visiting her we are now most certain that in a few more weeks she will again be able to walk. We question if even the noted Ripley has ever heard of a woman past seventy years of age riding the cowcatcher. Sr. Eidemiller is thankful for so fortunate a deliverance.

S. E. Magaw, Pastor.

VISITING THE BRETHREN

On our trip north to visit the Northwest Conference in Felida, Wash., over the first three days of December, and to look up and encourage the isolated brethren of our own state, we experienced many kinds of weather. Leaving Los Angeles on Sunday, Nov. 26, in ideal weather, we motored to Tulare, where we spent the evening with Sr. Levona Thompson and son and daughter, Wayne and Georgia, in the study of prophecy.

The next day we reached Red Bluff and spent two days with our children and grandchildren, the Moores. Wednesday night found us with others of the family near Murphy, Ore. We found the Bro. Scroggs family in usual good health and busily engaged in clearing some land for cultivation. On Thursday night we were privileged to meet in the Corvallis church with a faithful few for a Bible lesson conducted by Sr. Minnie Kerr, in whose hospitable home we spent the night.

Fog and rain had set in after our first day in Oregon and checked our speed in traveling quite noticeably, but we reached the church in Felida on Friday just as the first session of the Conference had come to a close. We were somewhat disappointed on learning that this one-time thriving group of believers has been weakened by deaths and removals until only a small company remain. Yet commendations are due them for their zeal and "stick-tuitiveness" in keeping the truth alive in this small village. We were privileged to visit in the homes of Bros. Wallace and James Woolf and Ed. L. McIrvin and can truly say that their hospitality is unexcelled. We met Bro. A. W. Darby for the first time at this conference and enjoyed the meetings conducted by him. We were also privileged to renew our acquaintance with Bro. J. C. Wilson, formerly of Lynwood, Calif. On Friday night Sr. Flora E. Hogue of Corvallis arrived with her auto load of delegates including Bro. Hathaway and Sr. Gladys Barber, the Conference secretary. Sr. Gladys' zeal and ability in promoting the work under most discouraging circumstances are very commendable and seldom excelled by those of more mature years. We truly enjoyed each session of this conference and the friendship of those who compose it.

Monday, Dec. 4, found us motoring toward Wenatchee over the Evergreen Highway on the north side of the Columbia River. We called at the home of Sr. Lucy Lapp of Sunnyside in the afternoon and reached Monitor, the home of my sister, Mrs. Cora L. Nicholson, Tuesday noon. A Bible school was in session at the Wenatchee church under the strict supervision of Bro. N. D. Titchenel. On Friday evening we were privileged to give our chart talk to this congregation. Bro. Kirby Billingsley is the student pastor under the instruction of Pastor Titchenel. We had not been in this valley long before being sought out by Bro. and Sr. A. Nichols, parents of our own Sr. Ora Knott of southern California.

We spent some time visiting them, talking over our mutual faith and hope. It was indeed a great pleasure. A heavy snowstorm gave us an experience we had not had for fourteen years, and prevented our visiting many we had hoped to see.

On Sunday we had the pleasure of speaking in the Cashmere church and making the acquaintance of Bro. Thomas Foster, the pastor, and his good wife and the congregation. Bro. Glenn Hoffman we had known in former years in Plymouth, Ind. Another family we will not soon forget is Bro. and Sr. E. Anderson Drake. Their interest and devotion to the truth is very remarkable. The week was soon spent and we continued on our journey to Seattle, where we had a delightful visit in the Young home, renewing our acquaintance with the dear little mother, who is such an interesting conversationalist for one of her years, and Lottie, Alice, and Amy, also with Sr. Carrie Cropp, who lives next door. We then visited Bro. A. L. Corbaley and family of Puyallup and spoke to his congregation in the evening. The time was too short, but we made the best of it. Next day we spent a brief period in the home of Bro. L. G. Jaeger and daughter, Sr. E. R. Burk, of Tacoma. Had our time not been limited, we should have enjoyed a much longer visit with these good people.

On our journey south we visited again with the Woolf families at Felida and in the home of Bro. Morton McErvin of Portland. We enjoyed every minute. Returning to Corvallis, we held three meetings for this faithful little group; but the rain continued so steadily that we decided not to continue longer. Among the older members of this congregation who are not able to attend services regularly are Bro. A. N. Harlan and Sr. Anna Cady, whose immediate relatives we had previously met in Holbrook, Neb. At Eugene we found Mrs. Louise Sullivan and Minnie Rogers; at Medford, Bro. and Sr. J. A. Dickenson. We made arrangements for a Berean study class at Red Bluff, which we are hoping will grow and accomplish much good. We had a pleasant visit with Bro. Geo. Renner of Wheatland and found Mrs. Fay and Lois Logan at Stockton very glad to see people from the old Hoosier stamping ground who could tell them of old friends and relatives. Sr. Fay was baptized in Yellow River, Plymouth, near our home, and her name no doubt is on the church registry at that place. The feeling of meeting an old "friend from home" was mutual. It was here that we met a Sr. Saunders, a former missionary to India from the Advent Christian Church, who is rejoicing in the visible return of Israel to the land of Palestine.

In Berkeley we spent two days with relatives. We found Sr. Ida Shepard of Madera anxious to hear a gospel talk. Sr. Marie Trusdell of Fresno has been very ill, but is able to be up at the present time. Sr. Mattie Vineyard, her sister in the flesh, has been her nurse. We also called on Sr. Bernice Roberson of that city. On Wednesday the Thomp-sons of Tulare accompanied us to Hanford, when we enjoyed a visit with Sr. Lucy Groat and also Bros. Edwin E. and Urial. We gave a talk in the union church of their locality. Ten of these isolated ones desire to be enrolled with our local organization, and we hope to keep in closer touch with them than heretofore for mutual encouragement and promotion of the gospel. We also located Bro. and Sr. J. W. Helms of McFarland, but found that Sr. Sallie Burt, formerly of Bakersfield, had moved to another part of the state. We will be glad to learn of the addresses of any other isolated members in the state.

Brethren, the Savior said, "Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." Will 1934 be the year of His coming? We do not know, but, dear ones, let us be diligent that we may be found supporting the weak, edifying one another in love, and growing up together in Him.
Emma C. Railsback.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The prayer-poem on the editorial page this week may be sung to the familiar tune of "Webb," i.e., "Stand Up! Stand Up for Jesus!"

Bro. R. H. Judd of Canada has recently had published in the "Toronto Globe" several very helpful articles which will soon reappear in our columns.

Some splendid forward-looking work is being done in Kokomo, Ind., by the faithful little group there, of which we hope to be at liberty to speak in the near future.

Sr. Elta Fitz of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has kindly offered this office some very valuable files of our older publications, which will be sent to us by some one passing through her city on his way to Oregon.

The Oregon, Ill., church and Sunday school held its annual business meeting last Wednesday evening. The usual spirit of harmony prevailed throughout, and the reports (which will appear later) were in every way encouraging.

We wish for the young people of the church at Kokomo, Ind., every success in their efforts to spread the truth of God in their city, by selling The Restitution Herald from house to house. It is a real service they are rendering to their community and to God.

The Oregon, Ill., church had the pleasure of welcoming back to local membership Bro. and Sr. Lewis Lindsay and their son Edward, after several years absence in Rockford. Bro. and Sr. Lindsay have been living in Oregon for more than a year, but have held their membership in Rockford until this time.

The editor of the Berean Page complains of lack of copy. She would especially appreciate manuscript from young people, not over 850 words in length. Reports of society lessons and activities are desirable. Address all such contributions to Miss Genniel Carpenter, R. F. D. 3, Oregon, Ill. Do not send them to The Restitution Herald. Thank you.

The work in and around Fonthill, Ont., including the splendid effort at Welland, continues to press forward under the leadership of C. E. Randall with undiminished vigor.

We cannot refrain from calling attention to the editorial that appeared on the Berean Page in our last issue. It was especially strong and appealing.

Did you notice the comments of Elder Harry A. Sheets on the "Incarnation" in the Sunday school lesson of January 7? It would pay you to read it again thoughtfully.

Sr. Amy L. Young of Seattle, Wash., in commenting on the splendid work of Sr. Mary A. Gesin on the Children's Page, says that "we of a larger growth enjoy it as well as the children."

Wendell Marsh, son of Bro. Orland Marsh of Mt. Morris, Ill., and Floyd Marsh, son of Bro. Leland Marsh, are both at the home of their grandparents, Bro. and Sr. Frank L. Marsh, at Ames, Iowa, where they are attending the state college together.

Those who do or may desire Berean lesson books or tracts are requested to read the instructions for ordering on the Berean Page of this issue, and to remember that the National Berean Society and the National Bible Institution are not the same organization.

Again we extend a hearty welcome to the many new readers who are now enjoying The Herald through the kindness of friends, and also to those who by their own desire have recently come to be numbered in our family circle.

The world continues to seethe with "wars and rumours of wars." Violence of all kinds is rampant everywhere. Political unrest agitates the minds of all classes. The masses are filled with discontent and rebellion against existing conditions. But the Christian looks up rejoicing, for he knows these things are omens of the day of peace.

IS THE LORD'S RETURN A PRACTICAL DOCTRINE?

THERE are some Christians who say that the Lord's return is not a practical doctrine. They say it doesn't have any effect on the way we live and therefore it doesn't make much difference what we believe about it. The principal thing is to live the best we can and not worry ourselves about the different theories of Christ's coming.

However, if the language of the New Testament means anything, it is evident that we cannot live our best and be indifferent to His return. In Galatians 5:22, 23 we find an enumeration of nine virtues which are the fruit of the Spirit: love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. It will be readily granted that any doctrine which tends to produce and stimulate these virtues in the lives of Christians is a practical doctrine. All of these virtues are practical, and are related to the way we live each day. Let us look at these virtues and see how, according to the Scriptures, each and every one of them is to be stimulated in the Christian by the truth of the Lord's return:

1. LOVE. (1 Thess. 3:12, 13.) "And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: to the end he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints."

2. JOY. (1 Thess. 2:19.) "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing! Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?"

3. PEACE. (2 Peter 3:14.) "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things (i.e., things related to Christ's coming. Cf. vv. 4, 10, 12), be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."

4. LONG-SUFFERING. (James 5:7, 8.) "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." The Greek word herein translated "patient" comes from the same root as the word translated "longsuffering" in Galatians 5:22.

5. GENTLENESS. (Phil. 4:5.) "Let your moderation (or gentleness) be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand."

6. GOODNESS. (2 Thess. 1:10, 11.) "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day. Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power."

7. FAITH. (1 Peter 1:7.) "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

8. MEEKNESS. (1 Tim. 6:11, 14.) "But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness." In verse 14 Timothy is charged to "keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ."

9. TEMPERANCE. (2 Peter 1:6, 15, 16.) In verse 6 we find temperance among the virtues the Christian is to add. In verses 15 and 16 we learn that these things are to be remembered in view of "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

It is evident after a study of these scriptures that, regardless of what our personal opinion may be, God considers the return of Christ a practical doctrine. If we would be virtuous then let us be "like unto men that wait for their Lord."—Roy L. Aldrich in Our Hope; selected by R. A. Curtis.

PUTTING ON CHRIST

By C. E. Randall

"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Gal. 3:27.

THIS is the Bible way to get into Christ. Man has conceived and planned many ways and has offered many substitute ways, but there is only one Bible way. Baptism is that way. It is a door that leads to Christ. Christ is the way, the truth, and the life; he that climbs up any other way is a thief and a robber (John 10:1). Paul says if we have been baptized into Christ we have put on Christ. If we haven't been baptized into Christ, have we any authority or right to say we have put on Christ? Can we escape this plain duty? If we are anxious to live up to all the teachings of the Bible, will we want to try to escape this duty? No, there is no short cut.

Baptism is for the remission of sins. Listen to this: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2:38. What could be plainer than this statement? Again: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."—Acts 22:16.

Have you, my friend, done this, or are you tarrying? If you haven't obeyed, don't tarry too long. We show our faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ by being buried with Him in baptism. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."—Col. 2:12. Baptism is the way we show our "faith of the operation of God."

We must be born of water before we can be born of the Spirit. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. Water birth occurs when we are raised to "walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:5). The Spirit birth takes place at resurrection. To insure the latter we must perform the first, or water, birth.—Church of God Messenger.

Lord, Teach Us to Pray

By Mary A. Gesin

GO WITH me, if you will, to the shores of the blue Galilee, and as we take our way over the sandy moors, perhaps the words of our beloved Master will become living words, filled with deepest meaning. On the western banks of this beautiful lake we climb to the summit of the Horns of Hattin with its twin peaks rising on either side, and we see Jesus seated, conversing with His disciples.

Often we read that our Savior went up into a mountain to escape the multitudes that awaited His every miracle, and the cause is not difficult of discernment. How precious to us are the oases of life, the moments when we escape the fret and care of everyday and refresh ourselves with living waters. And where may we find those living waters if not in the simple but significant words of our Lord?

"Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Arresting words, these! Can it be the Master meant all that might be embraced in such an invitation? Does the One who never asked in vain intend that we shall believe all that might be included in such a statement?

The favored few who were with Him on that day so long ago and heard these words as they fell from His lips realized full well that they were not empty words with Him. Times without number they had known Him to spend all night in prayer. They comprehended, too, something of the relationship existing between His hours of prayer and His life of service.

Though not thus blessed by personal contact, none the less does the promise extend to His disciples today, who perhaps more than they, stand in need of like blessing. We, as the twelve, feel the urgent necessity of learning how to ask, what to seek, and when to knock. And if the beloved Son of the omnipotent Father felt the need of spending the hours of night in learning these precious lessons, surely we can afford to devote a few of our hours to such meditation.

It is not often The Herald is able to present an article by its former associate editor other than in her regular columns on the Children's Page. This particular essay on prayer expresses, like most of Mrs. Gesin's writing, facts which each church member could well take to himself.

Times without number the humble follower of the Master has asked and received not, has sought and found not, has knocked and the door remained closed. What is the answer? Has God's promise failed, or have we presumed upon it?

The practical-minded James tells us that we ask and receive not because we ask amiss (James 4:3). But, we have often argued with ourselves, we have not asked amiss: we do not desire this "good" thing that we may consume it upon our lusts, that we may parade it before man, or enjoy it for ourselves alone. How long it takes to learn the lesson God so plainly gives us when He says, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways" (Isaiah 55:8). Perhaps we have been pleading with God to keep us, not in His ways, but in our own.

When we can truly say, "Thy will, not mine, be done," we have progressed far in our lessons and gone a long way on the journey toward fulfilled prayer. The deepest despair comes to our hearts just before we are able honestly to say that. Perhaps in God's infinite wisdom this apparently "good" thing is not to be ours. We still desire it; we suffer poignantly at the thought of relinquishing it. But, remember, God sees the end from the beginning, and "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

Ah, those last few words give us pause. Perhaps we are not walking uprightly. Constant prayer, such as the Master Himself practiced and desired on our part, leads as nothing else does to heart searching. One cannot continue in humble sincere communion with God without turning the reflector inward to see if indeed he is worthy the boon he seeks.

Thus does prayer resolve itself into a complete circle of blessing in our lives. The more we commune with our heavenly Father, the more will we attempt, with His grace, to eradicate those things in (Please turn to Page Nine)

BE WITH US NOW

The day is gently sinking to a close,
Fainter and yet more faint the sunlight glows;
O Brightness of the Father's glory, Thou
Eternal Light of Light, be with us now:
Where Thou art present, darkness cannot be;
Midnight is glorious noon, O Lord, with Thee.

C. Wordsworth.

We kneel before Thee, children of Thy love,
And wait Thy benediction from above:
O Thou who art of all mankind the Friend,
Thy richest blessing to our spirits send:
Thy word of courage to our hearts addressed,
By day inspires, at evening time gives rest.

THE BURNING BUSH OF PROPHECY

HE who approaches the study of the prophetic Word with full consciousness of its sacred origin enters upon his pleasurable task reverently, prayerfully, and with the conviction that he must take the shoes from off his feet, for the ground whereon he stands is holy ground.

He hears the very voice of God from out the burning bush of time, that bush of constantly changing happenings which is not consumed, but burns on forever with unquenchable flame! He sees on every side the footprints of Jehovah! He witnesses with awe and wonder the outpouring of judgment upon the sinful races and nations of men! And he cannot, if he would, evade the conclusion that God is here—here today upon the earth exercising that same creative energy that called the worlds into being and traced the courses of the stars through the unmarked vastness of the sky!

As he watches attentively the marvelous unfolding of events, as he observes the exactitude with which they fulfill the detailed accounts given by the prophets, as he ponders on all that which he observes, and prayerfully meditates on its meaning, he sees, he hears, he feels, the presence and power of God around him, he senses it in the very air he breathes, and his faith is strengthened and his heart is lifted up and comforted.

THE VOICE OF THE PROPHET

THE LAST issue of the World's Crisis, to which attention is called in our news columns, contains a short editorial from the pen of Elder E. A. Stockman originally published in 1882 which opens with these arresting words: "We are preeminently a prophetic people. Our especial 'calling of God' is scriptural interpretation and proclamation relative to the personal and immediate coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The disciples of Christ from the beginning have been "preeminently a prophetic people." Their every effort, as well as their hope and faith, has been inspired by the promises of God brought to their attention by the prophets. Whenever, and wherever, the church loses its prophetic vision "the people perish." It is the voice of God that sustains, comforts, and encourages His people to remain steadfast in their faithfulness and service to Him through persecution and distress, and that voice of infinite power reaches them through the prophetic Word.

The God-given function of the prophet was twofold. As the mouthpiece of Jehovah it was his duty to announce in advance of their coming both the blessings and the punishments of the Lord; and, second, to "reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and doctrine," the people to turn away from their sins.

This dual commission of the prophet is conferred upon a "prophetic people" who, through their searching of the Scriptures, have come to understand and to believe the warnings God has issued and the promises He has made, and though they may not be individually inspired to speak for God in the same way as were those "holy men" of old, yet may they voice with divine authority and approval the admonitions and appeals of the Lord.

It is to be carefully observed that both the warnings and the blessings revealed to the prophets were directed first of all to God's people. The prophets were seldom required to warn, admonish, or to instruct the Gentiles of the world concerning the will of God. Their messages were to be given to Israel, to God's people.

This should be kept in mind by the church today. Its first duty is to preach the gospel to the world, but its admonitions and its reproofs and warnings are to be addressed to the children of God. It is the church, not the world, that is to be made ready for the Lord's coming.

GOD IS LOVE

By Lyman Booth

IN JOHN 4:24 we read, according to the common version, "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." The Diaglott rendering omits the indefinite article "a" and reads, "God is spirit." In 1 John 4:16 we read, "God is love." Now we have two simple, plain statements. One is, "God is spirit," the other, "God is love." Thus saying He is both "spirit" and "love." This does not imply that love is spirit, or that spirit is love, though we sometimes speak of the spirit of love, or the love of the spirit. Neither love nor spirit constitutes God's personal identity, but both represent different elements or essences of His divine character. Love is an attribute or essence peculiar to living, sentient beings, but not their personality. It is an attractive, impelling, drawing power or force of one object or being that draws others to it.

This principle can be nicely illustrated with a magnet.

A common piece of iron or steel has no power to attract and draw other objects to itself; but if it should be magnetized it is then given the drawing or attractive force which will cause it to draw and cling to other objects. So long as they remain in contact or union the same magnetic power will fill every particle of material composing both. If we separate them beyond the reach of the attractive force of the magnet the other object will lose that influence and can neither draw nor be drawn to the magnet, until replaced within the range of its drawing force.

In John 6:44, 45 we read Jesus' words: "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." This is a drawing which, if sought, will never be withheld, and if imparted will surely prevail. Jesus directed the attention of the murmuring Jews to the fact that faith is God's works in them and repeated His words, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." First the Father draws them, and then gives them to His Son, thus making

His drawing a gift to His Son. This is a beautiful expression to denote the secret work of divine love in men who were burdened with guilt and estranged from God. To the last sinner who will seek after the Redeemer this drawing by the Father and giving to His Son will continue. We thus learn that God's love both draws and sends. It draws and instructs men, then sends them forth on errands of mercy to teach others. None come to Christ except the Father draw them; but how many does the Father draw who yet refuse to come? Man's will is an agent of such fearful, stubborn power that it may even resist the Holy Spirit and the Father's entreaties as it does the Son's invitation to come.

If a man cannot come without being drawn, and the drawing consists in being taught, we can see readily the difficulty when we ask the question, Why cannot men be taught of God? Why do they reject His instructions, and why do they not obey? It cannot be for lack of mental capacity, for God's words are plain and easy to be understood. Jesus answered the question when He said, "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life."

Isaiah says, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children."—54:13. Then God's drawing consists in teaching. It is not an uncertain excitement of feeling, but it is the divine voice through the medium of His written word penetrating into the mind and conscience, which teaches, and which imparts great peace and joy. Yes, all shall be taught of God; but it is only they who hear and learn what the Father seeks to impart. His words and those of His Son are the same, for the Son spoke only those words given Him by the Father, and it is the entrance of His words that giveth light.

Since God is from everlasting to everlasting His love must run parallel with His existence. Therefore it is eternal and infinite. The highest act of love is the sacrifice of self; the highest act of God's infinite love to man was in man's redemption; but because He could not sacrifice Himself He sacrificed His only begotten Son, the nearest and dearest object to Him.

The Jew

Scattered by God's avenging hand,
Afflicted and forlorn,
Sad wanderers from their pleasant land,
Do Judah's children mourn;
And e'en in Christian countries, few
Breathe thoughts of pity for the Jew.

Yet listen, Gentile, do you love
The Bible's precious page?
Then let your heart with kindness move
To Israel's heritage;
Who traced those lines of love for you?
Each sacred writer was a Jew.

And then as years and ages passed,
And nations rose and fell,
Though clouds and darkness oft were cast
O'er captive Israel,
The oracles of God for you
Were kept in safety by the Jew.

And when the great Redeemer came
For guilty man to bleed,
He did not take an angel's name.
No—born of Abraham's seed,
Jesus, who gave His life for you,
The gentle Savior, was a Jew.

And though His own received Him not,
And turned in pride away,
Whence is the Gentile's happier lot?
Are you more just than they?
No; God in pity turned to you—
Have you not pity for the Jew?

Go, then, and bend your knee to pray
For Israel's ancient race;
Ask the dear Savior every day
To call them by His grace;
Go, for a debt of love is due
From Christian Gentiles to the Jew.

—Selected by G. M. Birkey.

This was the main cause of Jesus' coming, that man might know how much God loves him, that he might be filled with that affection for Him who first loved him.

To be able to love God is really a gift from Him, for He, when He was not loved, loved us and gave us both power and liberty to love Him. When men were displeasing to Him, still He loved them, that there might be given them that whereby they might please Him. We love God because that original love which is in Him is moving, inspiring, and drawing us to Him. To use the Apostle's words, "It is God's own love shed forth in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us." If we trace it to its source we will find it is not man's love, but God's love returned to Him by reflection. It does not take its rise in our own bosoms; we have no property in it except to reflect and give it back, like a mirror. Then if this be true, if our love to God be only His love to us reflected from our lives, how clear must it be that the more we expose ourselves to His love the more lovely we shall appear, and the more we shall be loved by Him, unless, perhaps, we be poor reflectors.

Our love for our brethren is the evidence and measure of our love for Christ. He who has not enough love in his bosom for a being like himself, whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen, and whose goodness and mercy, which are far above our knowledge, demand supreme love? Here is a sure rule: He that loveth not a member of the Christ body loveth not Christ; and he who groweth in his love to his brethren groweth in like measure in his love for Christ. True love will not only cast out all fear, but it will root out and destroy all malice, envy, and jealousy, and sectional strife.

God's love is infinite, eternal, and universal. It radiates from His throne to the remotest bound of His infinite universe. It descends in perpetual flow from heaven, encircling the world. No country, however large or small; no city nor hamlet; no church nor society, however blessed; no religious organization, however wide and strong its influence may be, has a monopoly on it. The rich cannot buy it; but the poor and pure receive it as a gift.

Jerome records a touching and thrilling incident in the life of the Apostle of Love, who in his extreme old age, when he was too weak to walk to the assembly, was carried. Being unable to deliver a long discourse he simply said, "Little children, love one another." When asked why he continually repeated this exhortation, he replied, "Because this is the command of the Lord, and enough is done if this command is obeyed." O how true, for as God is love, love to Him and the brethren is the essence and sum total of religion and morality, and "the fulfilling of the law and the prophets."

In the same degree that men are near to Christ we are to consider them near to us. We must remember that all humanity have a claim upon our affectionate sympathy. It is vain for us to suppose we can let God's love flow in if we cannot and do not let it flow out to others. We are to let the love we receive have free course, flowing through such works as it will beget. It must not only dwell in us, but it must show to others what God is to us. Hence, the person who is prompted or impelled by any degree of hatred or revenge, or that holds a grudge against a brother, and cannot and will not forgive him, cannot really be said to let God love him; for God's love is a forgiving love.

It is easy to see that John centered all virtues in love. It most aptly describes the heart of God, and reveals the meaning of His ways and works. The creation was the act of His love, because it laid the foundation for its future manifestation of power and glory. The law and promise, which were designed to draw all men to Christ, were the revelation of that love. On our part, love to God and man constitutes the sum of our duty and virtue. It lies at the foot of all the Apostle's exhortations.

James considers Christianity mainly law and obedience, but he crowns love queen of the law. Paul, the apostle of righteousness and faith, calls love the "bond of perfectness," the most precious of all gifts. So strong is that bond that Paul asserts that "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. 8:38, 39. The mysterious power of a magnet which draws other objects to itself may be broken; but that mysterious bond which ties us to God's love in Christ cannot be severed, because it is all-powerful, all-absorbing, and all-conquering. Can words be found that will better express the consolation and comfort such thoughts inspire?

John gives us an unailing rule by which we may "know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments . . . and his commandments are not grievous."—1 John 5:2, 3. Love is a beautiful plant and has a most beautiful flower, with unequaled fragrance, but it grows and blooms only in the fertile soil of willing obedience. The devotion to God and His service which will grow and ripen in the life of a Christian includes a tendency to feeling and impulse, but is not composed of them. It is much more.

God's "commandments are not grievous," for they come from the most loving of fathers. They enjoin only love and good will, and they find all true obedience supremely joyous. The service of love is a perpetual charm, growing more brilliant with advancing years.

Love wears no mask, no cloak of deceit or hypocrisy. It is free-hearted and cheerful. Its face is wreathed in smiles, and its eyes gleam with the fervor of zeal and intense devotion. It reaches out and spreads its mantle over all about us. It is the parent of all virtues. It possesses every quality that exalts, and every trait that adorns the Christian character. Then how necessary that we hold fast the love of God on which our future, as well as our present happiness, depends! Much that we see now will fail and pass away, for they "are only in part," and we see but dimly, but "when that which is perfect is come," may we with the fullness of vision behold the radiance of eternal day, and "see face to face," and in "the love that passeth all knowledge," "know as we are known."

Radio in Prophecy

WE WISH now to enumerate some of the amazing results that have already been attained in this new field of magic. When viewed from the critical viewpoint of cause and effect, the feats of the radio seem not unlike the magic wand in the hands of a skillful conjurer—the wizard.

Some time ago a receiver was placed in the tunnel under the Hudson River and a violin solo was rendered in a city twelve hundred miles away. In the passage from the studio to the receiver, the music passed through two high mountain ranges, then through thirty feet of water and thirty feet of earth, masonry, and steel. Not one velvety note of the solo was lost, not even the soft harmonies. You may go into the largest bank of a city, down in the basement where are located the great steel vaults, and close the door, and messages from the outside world will enter without even a jarring tone; they pass through brick walls and huge steel doors as though they did not exist.

Last autumn a great football game was played in the famous Rose Bowl at Pasadena, California. The game, play by play, was sent to the National Broadcasting Company in New York City by telephone. This was done for "hook-up" purposes, as it was a game of nation-wide interest. The game by plays was sent to the broadcasting station a mile from the big stadium where the game was being played; then it was broadcasted to New York and relayed and distributed by the big chain system to every part of the land. The whole process went across the continent three times, and was then sent to the homes of America—all done in less than one fourth of a second.

Some time ago the great H. J. Heinz Company of the "57 Varieties" fame celebrated the eightieth anniversary of the old gentleman's birth, and at the same time the fifty-seventh anniversary of the concern. The matter was arranged to have a simultaneous banquet for all employees of the Heinz Company. They have 64 large factories; 57 of them in the United States, four in England, one each in Australia and other large cities outside of this country. The headquarters, or home plant, is located at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and the time was so checked up through the day and the night with the banquet at Pittsburgh, which was eight o'clock in the evening, they were all to eat at exactly the same time.

Promptly at eight o'clock the toastmaster at the banquet hall in Pittsburgh sounded the gong, and the banquet halls of the other 64 cities arose for the prayer and grace to be given for the meal. Each speaker stood before the microphone and spoke for all those in America, England, Scotland, and Australia. The President of the United States was an invited speaker of the occasion, but he was unable to attend; whereupon he delivered his message by long distance telephone, which was relayed at the banquet hall in Pittsburgh, and by means of the powerful KDKA broadcasting station he spoke to all the guests of the H. J. Heinz Company scattered among the nations mentioned.

This remarkable fact was published: "The diners in England and on the Pacific Coast heard the messages before those sitting in the rear end of the hall at Pittsburgh heard them."

This is no more strange than that on last Christmas a gentleman in Berlin addressed a German friend in America, and that the pope of Rome spoke for all the world recently from the Vatican. Such things as these daze the mind, for the wonders of it are fast becoming so common that little notice is taken of them.

Now from the big laboratories, which are, in truth, known as the House of Magic, they are prepared to tell us that before long not only may we sit in our rooms and hear the football game in the Rose Bowl, but we may actually, by means of television, which is now an assured accomplishment but not fully perfected, look upon the great gridiron battle; or actually see the Giants and Athletics playing the world series in New York or in Washington.

We may not only hear the speakers of Berlin and Rome, but we may see them as they deliver their messages thousands of miles away as if we were in their very presence. Sweethearts cannot only hear the words of love over the 'phone, but they may see their smiles and flashing eyes each to the other.

Photographs have been taken of mob scenes occurring early in the morning in Europe, and these pictures can appear in the evening papers of America the same day. The Air Travel News tells us that a new device has been affixed to an aeroplane—a combination photographic lens and radio equipment. By this device the plane may soar over the scenes in the jungle lands of Africa or the dead or forgotten cities of South America and not only photograph the scenes, but transmit the films thousands of miles away to the studios. Scenes of wild life may be gotten in the same manner without the danger of travel adventure entering these obscure places. The camera lens is mounted on the floor of the plane and the photographic eye pointing to the ground catches the scenes as a plane sweeps through the sky.

The powers of radio are springing continual surprises on the world, and the shocks are so frequent and so terrific that the nervous system of the nations is becoming so adjusted to them that the shocks are scarcely felt any more. The experts tell us that soon static will be entirely eliminated and, also, that messages may be sent in one direction instead of the waves going out, not only in circles, but up as well as down. In other words, the radio communication can be private as is now on the telephone.

Then again, imagine a 600 word letter traveling to a destination a thousand miles away in one minute. This is said to have been made possible through the new radio photograph apparatus invented by one of the scientists in one of the laboratories in the Westinghouse Electrical Manu-

The Last Night

IT WAS the feast day. Jesus was in Jerusalem; He taught in the temple and in the street, and the people listened with joy to His words. The malice of His foes was strengthened; they feared the loss of place and power; and, at last, enraged, mad, they made a proclamation that if any man knew where Jesus was, he should show it, that they might seize Him.

Jesus and the twelve abode in an upper room. Suddenly the thought sprang up in the mind of Judas that he might betray Him, and reap some advantage thereby. He tried to satisfy himself, as bad men bent on evil deeds are wont to do, that such a course could not be regarded as really wrong. If He were indeed the Messiah (thus he reasoned) then He could easily free Himself from their grasp; and if He were a deceiver, then it could be no sin to end His career at once. Thus he wavered between the love of money and the love of right.

In this state of mind, he met his Master and his brethren to keep the feast. And how must Jesus' words have pierced his soul, "Ye are clean, but not all!" He felt now that his secret had been revealed. No longer, then, could he share esteem or confidence of his associates. He saw the horror depicted upon their countenances when Jesus spoke of a traitor among His friends. Should he remain, and be despised and abhorred? Fierce passions were aroused; and as the benevolent John looked upon him, his countenance darkened as though Satan had entered into him. The sorrowful expression of Jesus, the grief of the disciples, cut him to the quick and for a moment he wavered.

Jesus said, "What thou doest, do quickly. Now is the moment—wouldst thou relent?" The disciples, we are told, knew not why Jesus had thus spoken. But Judas, as soon as he had received the sop, went immediately out: and it was night. And such a night has never since cast its dark shadows over our world! Still are the Jews buried in its awful gloom, while He whom they have slain has proved a light unto the Gentiles and salvation unto the ends of the earth.

This last night was a night of suffering to the anointed Son of God. Long after the traitor went out did He remain to counsel and console those who, at His death, would be scattered like sheep without a shepherd.

On the Mount of Olives, while His disciples slept, did He pour forth His soul in prayer to God. Oft before had He fled to that sacred retreat and beneath the ever-burning stars sought strength from God. But never had He needed aid as now. Again and again, and yet again, did He fall prostrate on the ground, while the cool night breeze fanned His fevered brow, and poured out His spirit in supplication and prayer.

He foresaw the glory which would crown the labors of

His life and the agony of His death; but He was a man, and from His innermost heart He cried aloud, "O, my Father! if it be possible, let this cup pass from me!" But Hope,

"Like the rainbow, a creature of light Is born like the rainbow, in tears";
and He was able to say, "Thy will be done!"

But hark! on the still night air harsh and discordant sounds were heard. Lights flashed upon the darkness, and gleaming weapons were seen. A multitude approached, seeking Jesus of Nazareth; and the miserable traitor stepped forward to betray his Master by a kiss. "Friend," said Jesus, "betrayest thou Me with a kiss?" Approaching the guard, He asked, "Whom seek ye?" "Jesus of Nazareth," was again their reply. "I have told you that I am He. But if ye seek Me only, let these, My friends, go their way."

They bore them away—the betrayer and the Betrayed. The mental agony of Christ was past. Not all the fury of the mob, the judgment hall with its dark array of frowning faces, the cruel mockery, and the more cruel death could move Him now or shake His high resolve. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

But the agony of Judas was yet to come. It was deep night in his soul when he forsook that upper room. He paused not for that, but went quickly to his tempters and bargained to deliver Jesus into their hands. But now, the deed once done, the bribe in his hands, came the hour of thought and grief. Too late has it come to thee, thou fallen one! Thou canst not redeem thy Master from the hand of His foes. Alas! how often comes too late the hour of reflection and sorrow! The deed is done, the fatal word is spoken, and we cannot unseal the book to whiten or amend its defaced and blotted pages! Now Judas lamented that Jesus must die. The mild look of Christ fired him with remorse and shame; His words, "Friend, betrayest thou Me with a kiss?" lingered on his ear and tortured his heart. "He shall not die!" And, casting his ill-gotten gain at the feet of those who had hired him (guilty as himself), he exclaimed, "I have sinned, in that I have betrayed innocent blood!" But they laughed him to scorn. "What is that to us? See thou to that." Overcome with horror, the poor wretch rushed from their presence and put an end to his life.

Thus perished this unhappy man; and have we no tear, no pity, as we contemplate his sad fate?

We freely overlook the denial of the fickle, profane Peter, while his repentance was no deeper nor more sincere than that of the wretched traitor.

With the example of Christ before us, calling Him Friend while perfidy was in His heart, we will not pronounce Him accursed! Rather will we watch and pray, lest, for a more paltry sum, we betray Christ or dishonor His truth.

But why was Judas elected to the apostleship? We cannot decide. Of one thing we are sure. Judas knew the whole private life of Jesus; he also knew His integrity of character. Had He been a deceiver, had He ever meditated evil, Judas, who knew and had seen all, could have divulged the plot. But not even as an excuse would he prefer a charge against Him. Was it not well that he was chosen, and that we have this testimony from a traitor and foe, "I have betrayed innocent blood"?

Who can fail to couple this with Pilate's remarkable words, "I find no fault with this man"?

Truly, as we muse upon the events of that night, we are moved to exclaim, as did one who beheld Jesus upon the cross, "This man was the Son of God!"—Rev. Alpheus Crosby; selected by Elizabeth Louise May.

America's Latest God

"And it shall be, if thou at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish."—Deut. 8:19.

A NEW god has appeared in America,—or to be more exact he has only recently developed to such colossal proportions. At his altars millions of dollars' worth of property is burned every year in preventable fires. One would think that among a nation of mammon worshipers like the American people such a god would be unpopular; but this is far from the real situation. The best of all our land is given up to this god. Those who preach and defend him and succeed in increasing the number and enthusiasm of his devotees are exalted and enriched above almost everybody else. We pay our President of the United States the paltry sum of $75,000 a year. But the chief high priest of this god would consider such a salary only small pocket change, contemptible indeed if offered to him as remuneration for his vast services.

But this is not all. Not only are billions in money spent to supply incense for this god every year, this is the smallest consideration. Health, brains, energy, and even human life are liberally offered to him. Thousands of boys and girls each year blast their health, dwarf their brains, renounce ambition, and mortgage life in loyalty to this great god. Fathers poison thousands of their own children every year because of their devotion to him. And late years thousands of mothers when faced with the necessity of choosing between the highest good of their own babes and faithfulness to this god choose to burn incense to him. By so doing a mother lessens her babe's chance for life by half, poisons his liver, heart, kidneys and other vital organs before he is born, cuts off his natural food supply after he is born, weakens his body, shortens his life, cripples his brain, paralyzes his moral sense and robs him of his hope of life eternal.

Many a father is too poor to supply his children with milk, meat, and eggs. He permits organized charity to do that and even stands in the bread line himself. But he is not too poor to make his daily offering to this god. He cannot find money to buy coal to keep the home fires burning. His children neither have clothes nor books to attend school.

But he does find the price of incense for this god every day.

This is a very shrewd god too. He is not exactly all-wise. But he is able by some means to persuade men that he is only a little thing, and that loyalty to him is in no way inconsistent with loyalty to Jehovah God. Multitudes of professing Christians sing lustily, "I am bound for the promised land," or some other similar falsehood while they contribute from two to ten times as much to this god as they do to the Christ they pretend to serve. They sing, "I know I love Thee better, Lord, than any earthly joy," repudiate their pledge to their pastor because times are hard, plead that they must as Christians provide for their families because "he that will not provide for his own is worse than an infidel," but always have money to buy incense for their daily worship of this god. The writer knows of a "devout" old "saint" who has "belonged" to the good old _____ Church for "forty years," who this last winter went to his pastor greatly grieved and between sobs asked the pastor to drop his church "because we are simply too poor out here to pay you. We can't even buy groceries any more. I've sold badly needed stock this winter in order to live." And yet his mouth was at that moment full, his chin stained magnificently, and his face beautifully deformed from his constant paying homage to his favorite god.

Do we go to extremes to call tobacco a god? No! Anything that has first claim on all a man has all the time; anything for which he will sacrifice his health, his strength, his reason, his conscience, his fortune, his property, his own children, his soul's salvation, and the salvation of those about him is his god. Verily, America is prostrate at the feet of the great god Tobacco. The Master said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," and it has been exemplified that people cannot serve both tobacco and Jehovah. Let us have a revival of old-fashioned, heartfelt, sin-killing religion and we shall have a wholesale destruction of these heathen altars and the priests of tobacco will be slain as were those of Baal under Ahab of old.—Loren E. Page in The Pentecostal Herald.

Knowing and Doing

By George B. Alldridge

"Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God."—1 John 3:21.

THERE are some statements in the Scriptures which cannot be overlooked. Paul, writing to the Corinthians, says, "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world."—1 Cor. 11:31, 32.

It is a serious matter to pass judgment upon another, but it is a wholesome thing to examine ourselves. So we are exhorted by Paul again in 2 Corinthians 13:5 to "examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"

As we read the Word of God, our minds are deeply impressed with the knowledge of this fact, that we can deceive our own hearts by believing that we are building upon the rock when we are building upon the sand.

How can we know for sure that we will be approved of God and accepted by Him?

To all our questions God gives a definite answer. Here is one test we may judge ourselves by: "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Rom. 8:9. John the Baptist testified of Jesus, "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace . . . For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him."

How often people pray for God to fill them with His Holy Spirit. Suppose God answered your prayer and filled you with His Holy Spirit, what would you do with it? This is what Peter says Jesus did with it: "The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:) that word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him."

Somebody may be saying, "I want the Holy Spirit to help me overcome sin and to make me a true child of God."

A very noble aspiration, my brother, but this was not the ambition of Jesus, for I read He said Himself, "And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him."—John 8:29. If Jesus had not always done the things that pleased His Father, how long would God have been with Him?

John's baptism was only for transgressors against the law covenant—for the remission of sins. No wonder he protested against baptizing Jesus, for is it not written, "For such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." Then why was Jesus baptized?

It seems that James and John, the sons of Zebedee, desired of Jesus the highest positions next to Himself in the kingdom. Now notice Jesus' answer to their request: "Ye know not what ye ask: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" "But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!"

What was this? Here is the answer: "For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God."—Rom. 6:10.

When John immersed Jesus into the waters of Jordan, he left there Jesus' human will, dead and inactive from henceforth, no longer to serve Him or His desires, but to obey another will which the Prophet uttered years before of Him, "Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God."—Heb. 10:7. And Psalm 40:7, 8: "I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart."

At baptismal services the speaker always enlarges upon the thought of being buried with Christ into His death (Rom. 6:1-5; Gal. 3:26-29). How many at that time realize what death? It took Jesus three and a half years to die His death unto sin, ended when He bowed His head and said, "It is finished." Not once during that period did He violate His vow to die unto sin.

How is it with us? Whose will is ruling in our hearts, our own or the Father's? Now we all want the spirit of Christ. Is this the Holy Spirit? Surely my readers are not trinitarians! Where did Jesus obtain His personal spirit, which always pleased His Father? James says, "But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." In the verses preceding he describes the opposite spirit to this.

Jesus' personal spirit was always as described above. How did He obtain this? From His Father? No, He obtained it by living and daily practicing it in His life and conversation. Let me quote again: "For I do always those things that please him." Hence, then, to obtain the spirit of Christ we must daily exemplify in our lives and conversation this same spirit always exemplified in His own.

Read Matthew 7:21-29. Note Jesus says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." That is just how Jesus won the kingdom, and it is the only way we can win it. "Therefore," He says, "whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock."

In Galatians 5:22 we read, "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." Paul had just pointed out what are the works of the flesh and warned them that those who do such things cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

This is what Peter says, "As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance: but as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy. And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear."

Read 1 Timothy 3:15, 16. Paul tells us that Jesus revealed God's perfect and beautiful character. Now how did Jesus find out all this about God? Did God take Him as an automaton and just portray Himself in the life of Jesus? I do not think so. Jesus spent all night in prayer alone with God. His mind was always steeped with the Word of God, and upon every occasion in His life He exemplified that Word in harmony with God's will and purpose.

Do you wish people to know and understand God? How much time do you devote in prayer and the study of His Word? Can a lawyer understand the profession if he is ignorant of Blackstone's Commentaries?

Today there would be no Jewish people if they had remained ignorant of their torch. It is this, the Word of God, that holds them together and existing as God's chosen people.

I am convinced that the only way to possess the spirit of Jesus is to daily practice it and to continually remember Peter's words, "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth."

LORD, TEACH US TO PRAY

our lives that are not pleasing to Him. And the more we succeed, in His strength, to "walk uprightly," the more will our prayers be answered. For the less will we ask what is amiss, what is not in accord with God's will for us, learning more and more, as we continue in communion with Him, to know His ways and His thoughts.

The further teachings of Jesus on prayer, as found in Matthew 21:22 and elsewhere, add the element of faith as an essential accomplishment of fulfillment. Thus do we learn our lesson, line upon line, precept upon precept. That almost indefinable and elusive quality, faith, has been likened for our clearer perception to our eyes that see what is offered, our ears that hear the voice that offers, our hands that take what is offered. We have merely skimmed the surface of God's desire to provide for us, His creatures. Oh, the infinite patience and love that are our heavenly Father's.

These lines have been written for a friend who stands in need of courage, hope, and trust in the loving watch-care of our Father and His Son. May they, by God's grace, bring comfort, assistance, and blessing. Many of us, myself included, have learned but the first lessons in prayer. Let us continue our study until that glad day when faith shall become sight. Grace Noll Crowell says that "Despair may tangle darkly at your feet,

Your faith be dimmed, and hope, once cool and sweet,
Be lost; but suddenly above a hill,
A heavenly lamp, set on a heavenly sill,
Will shine for you and point the way to go;
How well I know!

"For I have waited through the dark, and I
Have seen a star rise in the blackest sky
Repeatedly—it has not failed me yet.
I have learned God never will forget
To light His lamp. If we but wait for it,
It will be lit."

PETER AND THE MASTER

How comforting it must have been to Peter's heart when the Master, in sending word by the women that He had risen from the dead, said, "Tell my disciples and Peter." It seemed that the Master knew Peter would need encouragement at this time, so He wanted to designate him in particular that he might be cheered with the thought that he was not forgotten. Methinks Peter's heart swelled with new hope and courage as he received this message. He doubtless said to himself, "After all, the Master loves me, notwithstanding the fact that I denied Him, that I followed Him afar off, that I slept when the burden of the world's sin was upon Him, that I could not watch with Him one hour when He was treading the winepress alone, that I forsook Him when He most needed me; yes, in spite of all these failures and weaknesses on my part, the Master remembers and loves me still. How strong His love must be to forget all these things so unlovely in me, and remember only my declarations of fidelity and devotion which, in my days of strength, I sincerely avowed to Him."—Selected.

Abreast of the Times

Borrowing Ten Billion Dollars

"Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."—Mal. 3:9.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 8.—The President of the United States during the next six months is to borrow $10,000,000,000. That is equal to more than one dollar for every minute that has elapsed since the birth of Christ. It is nearly twice as much money as there is in the United States at the present time. It is said that although his task certainly is gigantic, it is not impossible. This money is to be used in a general way to further the cost of national recovery from the depression.

In this issue of THE HERALD the president of the National Bible Institution is asking our brotherhood to contribute $2,000 to assist our publishing plant and other enterprises out of the depression. This is not for material gain, but for the spiritual blessing of mankind, and represents but a small fraction of the money God has placed in our hands. Is this small sum too much to expect?

War and Civilization

"They . . . gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16:14.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 20.—Two scientists of Harvard University, Prof. Pitirim A. Sorokin, chairman of the Department of Sociology, and Nicholas N. Golovin, formerly a Lieutenant-General in the Imperial Russian Army, have recently concluded a painstaking study of all the wars known to have taken place in Europe, ancient Greece, and the Western Roman Empire over a period of more than 2,400 years, from 500 B. C. to 1925 A. D. During this period, the major portion of which fell within the so-called Christian centuries, according to the report of their findings by The Literary Digest, there have occurred in this region 902 wars (not battles).

Each of these struggles was studied from five points of view: the duration of the war, the size of the fighting force, the number of casualties, including killed and wounded, the number of countries involved, and the proportion of the combatants to the total population of the countries involved.

The scientists believe that the history of war as measured by these studies indicates an almost uninterrupted increase in the progress of war. "Adding together the index numbers for the wars of Central Europe, England, France, Russia, Netherlands, Spain, Italy, and Germany, they learned that the index of European war grew from 2.678 in the twelfth century to 13,735.98 in the first twenty-five years of the twentieth century."

A question that naturally arises is this: What relation does war bear to civilization, or, What effect does civilization have upon war? Does its development serve to retard war? In the opinion of Professor Sorokin and General Golovin their investigation "refutes completely the theory that war tends to disappear with the progress of civilization. It means also that all the commendable hopes that war will disappear in the near future are based on nothing more substantial than hope and a belief in miracles."

However repugnant the idea may be the conclusion cannot be avoided that two thousand years of Christian effort have not resulted in diminishing the world's tendency to appeal to arms to settle its disputes. The spirit of the Nazarene has not reached the carnal heart of the nations and transformed their hatred into love. At the disarmament conference held July, 1931, Ramsay MacDonald, Premier of Great Britain, said:

"The great Armageddon struggle must come at last, and the end will not be cheers of victory, but the silence of exhaustion. Mankind will be—I was going to say almost wiped out—mankind is to be exhausted, and all his works of civilization annihilated."

Mr. MacDonald was right. He was right from the standpoint of prophecy, history, science, and reason. "But the end is not yet!"

“IF YE FORGIVE MEN THEIR TRESPASSES, YOUR HEAVENLY FATHER WILL ALSO FORGIVE YOU.”—MATTHEW 6:14.

A PRAYER

ALMIGHTY GOD, and most merciful Father, give us, we beseech Thee, that grace that we may duly examine the inmost of our hearts, and our most secret thoughts, how we stand before Thee; and that we may henceforward never be drawn to do anything that may dishonor Thy name: but may persevere in all good purposes, and in Thy holy service, unto our life's end; and grant that we may now this present day, seeing it is as good as nothing that we have done hitherto, perfectly begin to walk before Thee, as becometh those that are called to an inheritance of light in Christ. Amen.—George Hickes.

JUST A LITTLE WHITE CROSS

A few months ago while driving through the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Georgia with my employer, we noticed a large number of small white crosses along the highways. Nothing was said until going through the Cumberland Pass, when I noticed a small cross at the end of a long steep mountain and said that it was surely unexpected to meet death while enjoying the scenery of those hills. I thought of the words as written, “A step between me and death.” This is true in any case, as we know that we must die; yet it is sudden when we come face to face with it.

This small white cross somehow reminded my employer of a large number of white crosses which are in a far away land, Flanders field. Each cross there represents a person who one moment was alive and probably enjoying the comradeship of his buddies, yet in the twinkling of an eye slipped out into that vast darkness which is death. How many of those who are now resting under the sod in France had accepted the all-saving name of Christ we do not know. Yet it is evident that some who are now sleeping under the sod over there and at home will be among those who will be everlastingly destroyed and banished into death more dark, more pitiful, the second death, from which the Bible states there is no resurrection.

Are we as those who are to be elevated into the glorious realm of the kingdom, or numbered among those who are to be destroyed in the second death? You do not know whether I am in the true church class, and vice versa; yet we can try our own lives and see, if we are unbiased and use the Scripture guide in Galatians 5:22, 23: “But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.”

You say that this is true in a Christian life, yet in civil life this does not hold true. We are told, “Submit yourselves unto every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake.” Yet we who are led by the Spirit break one of these laws every three seconds, surely not willfully, but unconsciously. For there have been placed in the law books so many laws that we cannot keep all laws. Some laws have been passed which are of no effect, yet still exist.

Your cross may not be violation of some minor law, but maybe it is your neighbor who delights in causing trouble which is unlawful in some places; or maybe it is a brother who does not do as you think he should. You must bear all small crosses, but remember this: there is One who bore a crueller cross than we must ever be called on to bear. He carried no small white cross, but a large heavy cross. One may never be erected over the spot of your death, yet you have placed a small white cross back there at the place where you died a spiritual death. Have you left that cross standing and pushed forward as a new being, or have you retraced your steps to that spot to view that space just beyond the little white cross and wished you could return and remove it? Remember the Master's words, “No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.”

Let that cross stand for the world to see where some one has suddenly departed from their midst and has died to the pleasures of this life in disguised sins and has shown that he is dead in the truth of God's Word to this form of pleasures. Then we who are alive in Him have a small white cross erected by our confession of past sins and are alive to glance over our new lives with profit from our past mistakes.

Let that cross stand.—Charles Martin, Kokomo, Ind.

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

AS A CHRISTIAN SERVES

"WELL, I'M not going to play at any old charity concert. You can do as you please, Theodora. So there!" And with these scornful words Annabelle turned in at her own gate and disappeared around the bend of the walk.

Theodora walked slowly and thoughtfully on to her own home in the next block. She didn't want to go away over on the other side of town either, particularly on the night when the girls of her crowd had planned to make fudge at Lou's house and spend a delightful evening together.

But, she mused, for some reason their music teacher had his heart set on taking his two star pupils to assist with the benefit program he was giving for an old acquaintance. This, he had explained, was an aged musician whose fingers were no longer nimble enough to skip over the keys and bring forth the liquid notes of melody.

Theodora and Annabelle, chums from babyhood, made an excellent two-piano team, and one felt lost without the other. Still, Theodora decided, she had two or three solo numbers with which she might do her teacher credit.

All the remainder of the week Annabelle was firm in her declaration that she "couldn't be bothered," and when Friday night came Theodora went alone with Mother and her teacher to the hall. Thinking of the forlorn figure for whom the concert was being given and the hopeless look in his eyes, Theodora gave her contributions to the program with exquisite sympathy and her usual skill. And before eleven o'clock she was back home and tucked into bed.

The next day was the one for her regular music lesson, and she and Annabelle met as usual at their teacher's home. When Theodora had finished her lesson the professor told her he had some news for her. It seemed the committee which acted as judges to determine who should receive a term's lessons each year under the finest instructor in a near by city music school had been present at the concert, and the lucky one had been chosen that night.

"I'm very happy to tell you, Theodora, that of all those who so gladly gave their services you are the one who has been chosen for that honor," he ended. And Theodora hurried home as if in a dream to share the wonderful news with her family, too sorry for Annabelle to say even a word to her about it. For she knew how greatly Annabelle had coveted that scholarship.

Jesus, our beloved Master, was the first one to teach us, by word and example, just what God's kingdom will be like. He was chosen by His Father to be King in that kingdom which will fill the whole earth. And He lived just the sort of life all the people of that kingdom will finally be able to live.

We try nowadays to follow His example as nearly as we can. In the three lessons for January 28 and February 4 and 11, we are studying the rules Jesus laid down for those who want to win the great honor of being His helpers in God's kingdom.

You know we can't think only of ourselves, treat others mean, grab the best of everything, quarrel with those around us, and then expect to walk right into God's kingdom and take a seat next to the King. No, indeed! The ones who will be chosen for that honor will be those who have thought of themselves and their own pleasure last of all.

Jesus, you know, never thought of Himself. As long as anyone needed Him, He was there to serve. Haven't you read how, when He was so tired He could hardly stand, He fed five thousand people with a few loaves and fishes? And how He stood long hours telling the people about God's love and trying to get them to follow His way?

Why, He wouldn't use the power His Father gave Him even to turn stones into bread for Himself when He hadn't had anything to eat for over a month! You see, God had given Him that power to do things for others so that they might learn about God's love that way. And that's the way He lived His whole life.

Now the "Sons and Daughters of the King" have some more new members this week. Jeannette Siple, age 10, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Ina Ruth Graham, age 7, of St. Louis, Mo. Also J. J. Handley, of Colorado, Texas, and how old do you think he is? He's 91 years young, and he says he can hardly wait till some one reads the Page to him. You see, my dears, he has been blind for many years. That gives you something to be very thankful for, doesn't it? You can see God's beautiful sunshine and snow; he can only feel them. You can see in reality the faces of those you love; he can only see them in imagination. You can read God's Book yourself; he must wait for some one to read it to him.

Remember, the "Sons and Daughters of the King" try to do as Jesus would do in everything, and they study their Bibles every week. Don't you want to join us?

FROM TRUTH SEEKERS' QUARTERLY

LESSON 5. — February 4, 1934

PUTTING GOD'S KINGDOM FIRST

Matthew 6:1-34

Devotional Reading: Psalm 19:7-14

GOLDEN TEXT

Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6:33.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Putting God's Kingdom First.

Aim: To show that spiritual values outweigh material considerations; that to believe the gospel of the kingdom of God is of first importance.

Basic Truth: "I count all things but loss . . . if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—Phil. 3:8, 11.

I. Lasting Treasures. (Matt. 6:19-21.) The temporal riches for which the worldly give their lives are transient and subject to sudden and unexpected loss, as many discovered during the depression. But spiritual treasures neither rust nor fade away. They cannot be stolen. Yet they are constantly available for our daily use! At the same time they are being reserved in heaven for our eternal comfort and blessing when Jesus comes.

II. Single Service. (Matt. 6:22-24.) Jesus taught that we cannot serve both God and worldliness. It must be the one or the other. Yet there are many who try to do this very thing! They count themselves as Christians, but give their lives over to all manner of worldly pleasures and ambitions. God demands our entire devotion, but He pays the highest wages in the end. Whatever we do along material lines must be made to contribute to the success of His spiritual work. He has given us His best—His only begotten Son—and He should receive our best in return!

III. The Kingdom of God Comes First. (Matt. 6:25-33.) A four-year-old boy whose parents had a fervent faith in God's goodness, and who often faced but never suffered real want, on one occasion, when an especially pressing need had been unexpectedly supplied, said to his mother, "In one way or ano'ver the Lord will provide, for Him do, don't Him, Mamma!" And He does, He always does!

"Despond then no longer,

The Lord will provide:

And this is the token—

No word He hath spoken

Was ever yet broken,

The Lord will provide!"

The promise will be kept: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you!"

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

First Duty. Man's first duty is to the Lord. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me."—Matt. 10:37. Of course, this will not cause one to neglect his family. For whoever seeks the Lord first makes a better father, mother, husband, or wife, as the case may be. The great purpose in life should be to make our calling and election sure (2 Pet. 1:10, 11). The treasures of this life are fleeting and very insecure. If our life and entire strength are spent on the accumulation of lustful treasures, our hearts, also, will be inclined and will be so enamored with and calloused by them that righteousness will have but a passing appeal to us.

One Master. Alas, what a truth! The number is legion who are attempting the impossible, trying to serve two masters, God and the world. If we are to serve the Lord Jesus, we must cut loose from the world and touch not, taste not, and handle not of the accursed things. There is no middle ground. We are either for or against God. God is a jealous God and requires faithful devotion, loyal service, and true-hearted obedience that is not frocked in deceitfulness. There are two roads, one leading toward God and the other leading away from Him. If we are traveling the narrow way, we are going toward the Father. If we are walking the broad way, we are going away from God. And if we are absolutely honest with ourselves, we know pretty well which road we are on. "For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things."—1 John 3:20.

Life's Necessities. If man will place himself in the hands of God and at His disposal and will do His will with an eye single to His glory, God will care for him.—C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6:33.

Most important things should come first. To a greater or less extent we all do the things we want done most. We buy what we most desire whether it be a useful article or a toy. We go to the place where we expect the most pleasure whether it be the dance hall or the house of prayer.

Our text tells us that the kingdom of God should be uppermost in our minds, because it is the all-important thing, and future life will be enjoyed there. There will be no future life without the kingdom; and as life is the thing that everyone desires, it is up to us as well as those in olden times to seek and try to obtain the thing (that is, the kingdom of God, and His righteousness) that God has in store for us, life eternal in the kingdom.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Putting First Things First

One of the secrets of success is learning to place the proper value upon the things of life. Man places the greatest value upon things temporal, while God places the eternal first. If we would gain life everlasting, we must learn to accept God's standard of value.

Man places wealth, pleasure, world power, and prestige very high. Our golden text gives God's standard of first value. Paul tells us that if we have "food and raiment let us be therewith content." "For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out."—1 Tim. 6:8, 7. In the next few verses he adds: "But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition . . . But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life. . . . Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not highminded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate."

Man has learned to his sorrow that "the paths of glory lead but to the grave." Thousands died that Caesar might be great, but he came finally to the ides of March. The path to true greatness leads in a different direction. Jesus has told us that if we would seek to be greatest in the kingdom we must become the servants of all in this life. Jesus did the work of a servant when He washed the disciples' feet and suffered for mankind, but He will be the first in the kingdom. He learned to put first things first.—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: God's Care for Us.

Memory Verse: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God."—Matt. 6:33a.

If I were to ask you what kind of a dress the bluebird wears, you would wonder just what I meant. If I were to ask what kind of feathers a bluebird has, you would say blue. Now aren't the bluebird's feathers his dress? What kind of a dress does the dandelion wear? Just think of the lily, what a lovely dress it wears.

My next question is: Who dresses the birds and the flowers so beautifully? God does. Every bird and every flower has had their beautiful clothes made by God.

God will clothe and feed us, too. He will take care of us if we but trust Him. True, we have to work for what we eat and wear, but does not the little bird have to work to find its food? Jesus didn't teach that we shouldn't work, but rather that we should do God's work first.

It is so easy for us to do our church work when we haven't anything else to do. I'm sure that if we see that God's work is done we will be as well clothed and fed as the birds and the flowers. That is what Jesus meant when He said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God."—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

TO OUR BROTHERHOOD

I am coming to you with a financial proposition. It is this: I feel that I can assure you that if our brotherhood generally can guarantee to contribute $2,000 to be paid within reasonable time, in addition to what I already have, I can lift our indebtedness of approximately $7,000 to the bank and clear us of that obligation.

Approximately all of that that was subscribed at our last General Conference meeting has come in. We have that ready for application and if I can have $2,000 more I feel quite sure that I can lift the whole indebtedness of $7,000. This means that with the assurance that I now have and with your help in raising fifty per cent, or one half of that amount, I can lift the entire indebtedness. I must have assurance, however, before I can proceed under the arrangement that I have in mind, that if my proposition is accepted, the $2,000 will be forthcoming.

I cannot go into detail in the matter, but if you can trust me and assure me that the amount I have mentioned will be paid within a reasonable but definite period of time, I will proceed with the proposition I have in mind. But it is useless for me to undertake it without the assurance above mentioned.

This is an opportunity that I feel we cannot afford to allow to pass by. It will mean a saving of $3,500 to this Institution and yet preserve the honor and integrity of the National Bible Institution.

Let me hear from you at your very earliest possible convenience, as we are approaching an emergency that must be met. We have done splendidly during the past year. It would even surprise you if I were to tell you how well you have all done and how well we have been getting along in this regard.

Trusting that I may receive favorable replies that will show that each one is doing his utmost to meet the crisis, I am yours for service,
L. E. Conner, Manager.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Sunday school attendance holds around the three hundred mark. Berean activity is noticeably on the increase, and the other church services are well attended.

The ladies' and young ladies' classes had a combination meeting at the Annex January 17, and a special feature of the evening was a "going-away shower" on Marjorie Siple. She expects to enter the school of nursing at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, the first of February.

Sr. C. H. Simpson is convalescing from a serious operation, and Sr. Ada (Harold) Simpson is improving from a long and serious illness at her home in Grandville. Others of our sick ones are better as these lines are written.

We are glad to observe several who are not members show a genuine interest in the gospel and the church work recently. The field is unlimited if there could be time, strength, and means enough to take advantage of all the opportunities.

THE MINISTERIAL LIST

Since the publication of the list of ministers recognized by the General Conference several have written asking how the names are secured and by what authority they are declared eligible. To clear up this matter in the minds of all we make the following explanation.

The General Conference has no authority under its present constitution to grant ministerial certificates. This right is left to the several state conferences and to the local churches which are not connected with any conference. The secretaries or other officials of these various bodies are asked each year to submit a list of the men and women who are counted worthy of being thus recognized, and the General Conference is required to publish the names thus sent in.

KOSZTA, IOWA

O. J. Allard preached to a large audience last Sunday morning and conducted a Bible class of twenty-one on the subject of the tempter.

The Dorcas Circle are still planning to build a church during 1934.

On November 12 I organized the Cono Bible school six miles northwest of Marengo with twenty-five to thirty in attendance, meeting at 2 p. m. They gave a very good Christmas program on the eve of the 23rd. Good interest is being manifested and much good is hoped to be accomplished in the study of God's Word.

Our Bible reading contest at Koszta began October 15 and closed December 31 with the winners reading 8,560 chapters and the losers 4,307, total being 12,867. Max Cronbaugh, age 9, won first, reading 1,301 chapters. It is hoped that much good will be derived from this contest. The losers will give a supper to the winners Friday evening, Jan. 19, and the winners will furnish the entertainment.

Sr. Anna Boyanovsky of Marathon, Iowa, wishes us to announce that there will be services held at the home of Guy Selleck near Storm Lake, Iowa, on Sunday, Feb. 4, and that all interested ones are invited to come and bring their friends.

CALIFORNIA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

The California Quarterly Conference (postponed on account of the holidays and the torrential rains which fell around the beginning of the New Year) will be held the first Sunday in February. At a meeting of the Conference board held at the home of the president on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, the program was worked out to include several new features as well as some new speakers.

The day's program will begin at 9:45 a. m. by a Rally Day Sunday school session which the Los Angeles church feels will help its own particular work there. The other people of California have in many cases specified their cooperation in this matter. At the regular worship service, which will begin at 10:45, Bro. Norman MacLeod will occupy the pulpit, his subject being: "Is the Stress of the Times Destroying Spirituality?" Following the morning sermon Bro. J. E. Adamson will have charge of the communion.

A potluck dinner will be served at the church at noon, and afternoon services will begin at 2:00. Bro. E. E. Groat of Hanford has been asked to give one of the chief sermons of the afternoon, which will be followed by a short inspirational period. Bro. J. E. Hammond of Anaheim will then conclude the conference with a sermon. Appropriate music and other special features will mark the day.

All who can are urged to attend for the whole day, for we feel that we are going to have the best conference yet.

Jessie M. B. Kauffman, Secretary.

OREGON, ILLINOIS

The annual business meeting of the Church of God of Oregon, Ill., was held at the church January 10, 1934, at 7:45 p.m. A short session of prayer preceded the business meeting.

The report of the treasurer showed a total income of $1,155.13 during the year 1933.

The following report was given by Bro. G. E. Marsh, the pastor:

Sermons: Oregon regular services, 98; Conference services, 2; funeral services, 9; total, 109.

Sunday school classes taught, 50; midweek services conducted, 50; annual Bible school classes taught, 9; total Bible classes, 109.

Communion services conducted, 12; baptismal services conducted, 5; total number baptized, 23; baptized in this community, 14 (of this number 13 united with the local church); marriages, 1; total services conducted by the pastor, 237; deaths in the Oregon congregation, 1; net increase in membership for the year, 12.

The following resolution regarding military service was presented by the pastor and board of elders. This resolution was accepted and passed unanimously.

"As loyal citizens of our country we pledge our willing obedience to its just and beneficent laws in so far as such laws do not prohibit the free exercise of our religious convictions.

"Recognizing the supreme authority of God in all matters pertaining to the conscience, and sincerely believing the spirit and teaching of Christ to be opposed to the taking of human life, and that for a Christian to engage in war would jeopardize his hope of eternal salvation; we claim the right of exemption, under the Constitution of the United States of America, from all forms of military service for the members of this body who truly hold such convictions."

The following officers were elected: Bro. Geo. Siple was elected elder in addition to the three already in office; Bro. Delos Andrew, trustee; Bros. Paul Johnson, Frederick Claussen, Charles Gesin, and Lewis Lindsay, deacons; Srs. Mabel Lindsay and Mabel Andrew, deaconesses; Sr. Mabel Andrew, secretary; Sr. Elizabeth Ordnung, treasurer; and Sr. Grace Marsh, minister of music.

ELIZABETH EVALINE LAKE

Mrs. Elizabeth Evaline Lake was born October 13, 1848, to Philo Edward and Evaline Henry and died in January, 1934. She wrote her own obituary shortly before her death, but owing to its length it cannot be given room here. Her mother died when the baby was thirteen days old, and thereafter care of her and her brother fell to the maternal grandmother. In March, 1871, she united with the Baptist Church at Cooperstown, Ill., later (July 20, 1915) being baptized into the Church of God by S. J. Lindsay. On April 5, 1871, she married Joseph R. Lear, who died December 6, 1911. Nine children were born to them, five of whom are now living: Laura Smith, Canton, Ill.; Thomas Edwin, Good Hope, Ill.; Otis, Alton, Ill.; Harry, Canton; and Edith McKees, Rushville, Ill. There are 26 grandchildren, eight dead, and 21 great-grandchildren, five dead. On December 3, 1922, she married Solomon W. Lake, who died January 21, 1926. Mrs. Lake herself died at her home in Rushville, Ill., and funeral services were conducted by Gerald Lee Cooper from the Lawleis Funeral Home in that village.

"Oh! my children," wrote Mrs. Lake, "Heaven bless you. If you ever expect to see your mother again after she leaves this world, make your peace with God. Put on the whole armor and work for Jesus. You will never regret the start. Now, dear children, when this is read to you or you read it, remember it is your dear mother's last request to give yourselves to Jesus."

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Hereafter, in a box on these news pages, we shall endeavor to keep the readers of The Restitution Herald informed as to the leading articles to appear in the next issue. This feature is begun today under the heading, "We Look Ahead."

Sr. Sarah Dashwood, a member of the Fonthill, Ont., congregation, is reported as being in the hospital at Dunnville, Ont. She requests the prayers of the brotherhood on her behalf.

A brief announcement is made in the "Church of God Messenger" of Fonthill, Ont., of "a big improvement" that will soon be forthcoming. We await with interest a more definite announcement from this active church.

Bro. Paul M. Hatch, a graduate of our Bible Training School, in submitting an article for publication expressed regret that more of our Training Class "boys" (would you exempt the "girls," Bro. Hatch?) do not write more frequently for the paper. The editor heartily echoes the same sentiment.

Sr. Mary E. Allard of California, eighty-five years old, writes that she greatly enjoys Bro. Austin's series of articles on the Lord's coming, and that while she is a great sufferer she does not lose her hope in the glories of the future. Sr. Allard has been a most faithful supporter of the work for many years. Her former home was in Eagle Grove, Iowa.

The "World's Crisis," which is familiar to many of our readers as one of the strongest Adventist papers in America, has just issued its Eightieth Anniversary number. It is a fine sixteen page paper with a cover, and filled with interesting matter drawn from editorials appearing in its columns during the past eight decades. We heartily congratulate the "Crisis" on its long and vigorous defense of conditional immortality, and for the earnest manner in which it has advocated the literalness of the coming of our Lord, as well as upon the splendid appearance of this particular issue of the paper.

A quarter buys the best series of forty lessons on God's coming kingdom ever produced by the Church of God. Address the National Berean Society, Oregon, Ill., and ask for the book "God's Kingdom."

Let no one overlook Manager L. E. Conner's appeal that appears in this issue. It has been a good many months since such an appeal has been made, and the amount needed right now is a modest one. Let us encourage him by responding generously to his request for help.

The last issue of "The Morning Star," published by Eld. A. E. Hoskins, pastor of the church at St. Cloud, Minn., conveys a splendid lesson on the title page, where with three illustrations of thermometers is pictured three stages of Christian activity and inactivity: the hot (active), lukewarm (inactive), and cold (spiritually dead).

The article "The Highroad to Victory" appearing in this issue was first submitted by the author, R. H. Judd, to the "Toronto Globe," in which it was published as a regular religious editorial. Bro. Judd received a personal note of thanks for his contribution from the editor of the "Globe."

Bro. Glenn M. Birkey, elder of the Oregon, Ill., church, expresses the conviction in a recent letter that we perhaps have been too negligent in the putting forth of efforts to evangelize among the Jews of our own country. We agree with Bro. Birkey that such a work would be most commendable, but we regret that we have no channel through which to carry it on at this time.

"Our seventh son was born on the sixth of this month," writes Eld. J. W. Williams of Gladbrook, Iowa, "so now, with the same list of children as Job had I feel more than ever like him." Bro. Williams' reference to Job will be appreciated the most by those who have had the pleasure of following his splendid lessons based on that book. Bro. Williams is a "Job specialist." Our best wishes are extended to both parents.

THE HIGHROAD TO VICTORY

By R. H. Judd

"Do You Read Your Bible?" One Matilda E. Andross asks the question in an article in THE RESTITUTION HERALD, and, in an enlightening manner, points out the necessity of daily meditation upon the Word of God and prayer if the Christian is ever to live a victorious life.

"The army cannot win victories without ammunition; the engine cannot pull the train upgrade without fuel; neither can you and I live the victorious life without giving the Bible its proper place in our daily program," avers the writer, and the Christian who has set out determined to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" will assent to the truth of that statement.

"When an Eastern ruler asked Queen Victoria the secret of England's success, that noble Englishwoman laid her hand reverently upon the Bible, saying: 'That Book is the secret of all true success of men and nations.' But that the Bible may do its appointed work, it must be studied with prayer, until Jesus becomes a blessed, bright reality."

The writer further asserts that "the reason why youth, and even those of mature years, are so easily led into temptation and sin, is that they do not study the Word of God, and meditate upon it, as they should. The lack of firm, decided will power, which is manifested in life and character, results from neglect of the sacred instruction of God's Word . . . The truths of the Bible, received, will uplift mind and soul. If the Word of God were appreciated as it should be, both young and old would possess an inward rectitude, a strength of principle, that would enable them to resist temptation. That 'if,' " continues the writer, "is the barrier between you and me and the victorious life we long to live; for I feel sure that R. F. Horton is right in saying: 'There is no greater hindrance in our day to a full, triumphant Christian experience than the depreciation of Holy Scriptures.'"

Prayer and Bible study are set forth as the means of grace toward a life of victory for the man or woman who desires to live victoriously. "You cannot separate the two. There can be no effectual praying while our Bibles lie unused; there can be no Bible study with transforming power in it when our lips and hearts have no time for prayer."

The individual and the church need victory now, as never before. Is the time not ripe for the laying aside of a million and one books that deal with incidentals, and the picking up of the neglected Book of books? We must confess to a feeling of utter despair as we listen to sermon after sermon about anything and everything but God's Word. If the church and the individual are ever to be sanctified, there is but one highroad to that coveted experience—the Word of God and prayer. If the Lord's prayer is to be answered: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth," then we must find time to drink deeply at the fountain of truth. It is, therefore, fitting that the New Year's resolutions should find us budgeting our time so that the Word of God and prayer will have a larger place in our daily program. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." What a promise! And it remains with us to make that promise a fact.

"THAT religion is not worth having which is not good enough to advertise."

RADIO IN PROPHECY

facturing Company of Pittsburgh. In one minute it can send a facsimile letter of 630 words and will transmit a complete photograph in the same length of time. An ordinary photograph is placed on a cylinder, and as the cylinder rotates slowly, and at the same time moves forward longitudinally, a beam of light plays over the photograph and the message and is reflected by a system of mirrors to electric cells. By this means the actual letter, as it appears from the hand of the writer, can be sent to the ends of the earth in one minute.

But here is the most fearful revelation of all, and one that should frighten not only our nation, but all the world. Mr. Marconi, who is creating new wonders all the time, has invented a small radio set. By the use of this little radio set Mr. Marconi can touch a button and stop the electric power anywhere on land and sea; he could darken a city at any distance; he could stop electrically driven machinery anywhere; he could halt the progress of one of the American Navy's huge electrically-driven super-dreadnaughts; he could darken New York City, stop every electric car going out from the Grand Central Station, and darken San Francisco and London, all in the twinkling of an eye. Mr. Marconi says: "It is very simple with my duplicate stand wireless set, which anyone may be able to have one of these days. It has a short-wave aerial fifteen inches high and is made entirely from materials of our own country."

Let the mind of the writer contemplate for one moment the consequences of this device in the keeping of a nation that might be ambitious to rule all the other nations. Suppose Mussolini should put his scheme of Imperial Rome into effect one of these days. Not long since an Italian lady is said to have had a vision of Italy's future with the man of mysteries domineering all Europe and America. You say that is only a wild hallucination of a Mussolini worshiper; but suppose this iron-fisted dictator should undertake to start something, knowing that one of his subjects practically held the world at his hands. Yes, we are only surmising, of course; but when such powers are in the hands of one man, it is indeed fearful to contemplate. God grant that such may never come to pass.—C. F. Wimberly, D. D., in The Pentecostal Herald.

Isaiah's Prophecy Fulfilled

IN SYRIA, as also in Palestine, under French administration, progress has been made. Today you can travel all over the country on first-class roads, in the greatest of comfort, by both busses and motor cars, so that any part of the country, from the River Jordan on the one hand, and from Beyrout, with its excellent harbor, on the other, is easy of access. The proposed new Haifa-Baghdad railway will also cut through part of Syria. This will all tend to make possible the movement of war material, troops, etc., at a terrific speed for the last great world conflict, a thing that would have been utterly impossible say fifty years ago under Turkish rule, as roads were practically unknown then.

The reader may be astonished at the military tone in this article, but when we bear in mind that developments must be carried out to make such a conflict as Armageddon at all possible on the largest scale of any war ever fought or known, it will then be seen that roads, railways, and mechanical transport are absolutely necessary, hence my reason for calling the attention of the reader to the present-day achievements along these lines. When one realizes that Armageddon has to take place on the Plain of Esdraelon, and that perhaps in the lifetime of the present generation, one is not surprised at the new harbor in Haifa, the proposed program for the enlarging and improving of the Jaffa harbor, the opening up of a new railway, the building, banking, and making of up-to-date asphalt roads all over these countries. Does it not appear on the face of things, as we find them today, that all this is part of God's program for the furthering of His plan for the coming King? The writer thinks so.

IRAQ

It may help the reader in studying Scripture to know that the Assyria of prophecy is the modern Iraq.

In Iraq, you have the Babylonia of Nebuchadnezzar's day, the Mesopotamia of pre-war days, and the Iraq of today.

The late King Feisal brought to an end, under his able

This article, authoritatively written by Major Lee Spratt of the British Army, concerns the remarkably detailed fulfillment of certain prophecies regarding Assyria, the modern Iraq. It was selected for this paper by Glenn M. Birkey from "Prophetic News."

administration, within twelve years, the mandatory regime, planned for twice that length of time, which it had already challenged with considerable success nine years previous, when the first Anglo-Iraqi Treaty was signed in June, 1924. With national ism as the country's driving force, the new state is facing the future with no lack of confidence.

Iraq is endowed with considerable resources, both in land, its two great rivers, and its oil. The revenue from the oil alone amounted to half a million sterling in 1932-33, and this figure will be considerably increased when the pipe line now under construction is completed in 1935.

THE PIPE LINE

A telephone line, to assist the engineers in making communication easy, was constructed along the pipe line course.

The task of laying the pipe line is enormous. The main pipe is in forty foot lengths, and has an interior diameter of twelve inches, and twelve and three fourths inches exterior. Up to July last, 907 miles of pipe had been strung; 162,058 tons of metal had been shipped to Haifa, Tripoli, and Basra on the Persian Gulf.

The transport personnel experience difficulties which would scarcely be found anywhere else in the world. The route consists of every kind met with almost anywhere, for its surface varies between loose sand, which in itself is most difficult to negotiate, crumbling gypsum, irrigated farm land, limestone grit, chert boulders, and last, but not least, basalt lava. To add to these difficulties, a large part of the desert becomes a quagmire for short periods during the winter.

These pipes, after arriving on the site, have to be buried in trenches twenty-six inches wide and six feet deep, and these trenches have to be made in all kinds of material, from soft soil to hard stone.

The workmen are provided with up-to-date ditchers for the purpose. The distance covered in a day depends on the ground, but under normal conditions, a mile per day can be trenched.

THE EDITOR'S PRAYER

TEACH me to live, O Lord, that I may think Thy thoughts after Thee; that I may love others as Thou hast loved me; that I may forgive my fellow men as Thou, Father, hast forgiven me. Lead me into paths of self-forgetful service that others may rejoice in Thy salvation through me, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

JESUS WILL COME FROM THE FRAME

DR. ROBERT Horton of Great Britain related the following touching incident. "An American father," he said, "who was absent on a trip in the Far East had a child at home over whose bed hung the father's portrait. Every morning the child looked lovingly at it, and one day said to his mother: 'Mother, I wish Father would come out from the frame!'"

Our blessed Lord has gone to a "far country." It is impossible for mortal eyes to see Him there seated at the right hand of eternal power. Yet we know He is there! We know He lives and pleads our cause! We picture Him, each one of us no doubt in a different way, as He appears to us framed in the glory of the Father's throne. But like the little child of whom Dr. Horton speaks, how much we wish to have Him "come out from the frame!" We want to see Him eye to eye and face to face! We want to feel His tender hand upon our heads, His loving arms circling our shoulders! We want our Lord to be with us here on earth. For nothing in all the world can comfort, uplift, and strengthen us so much as the actual presence of Jesus Christ.

"In the crimson of the morning, in the whiteness of the noon,
In the ember glory of the day's retreat,
In the midnight, robed in darkness, or the gleaming of the moon,
I listen for the coming of His feet.

"He is coming, O my spirit! with His everlasting peace,
With His blessedness immortal and complete.
He is coming, O my spirit! and His coming brings release,
I listen for the coming of His feet!"

CHRIST DOES NOT REJECT

"A MAN Without a Country!" This familiar phrase might well be applied to the American millionaire who for many months has been a fugitive from justice, finding reluctant sanctuary in Greece. But Greece does not want him. England and the other nations of the world will not receive him. No doors are open to admit him anywhere except in the United States, where he would be welcomed only to a court of justice or to the gate of prison!

Accused of crimes that have wrecked great commercial enterprises, forced thousands into bankruptcy, reduced many to penury, and driven no small number to a suicide's grave, this much wanted, and much unwanted, man has no place to go except to the barred cell of the felon.

However just his punishment may be, the situation in which he finds himself is not without its pathetic elements. No spot in all the world where he may set his foot without fear! No friends save those whose questionable fidelity he has purchased with his ill-gotten gains! No one beyond the circle of his own family who cares whether he lives or dies, whether he is happy or sorry!

Terrible indeed is the punishment that sin brings upon its victims!

But there is One who stands ready and willing to receive even so vile a criminal as this! There is One who still loves with the tenderest compassion this man whom all others abhor! There is One who actually died to prove the depth of His friendship for this man so steeped in iniquity! It is Jesus Christ, the Son of God!

The blessed Savior of men came into the world for the express purpose of seeking out such lonely, forsaken, sin-stained wretches as this sad victim of selfishness! "Go ye," He cried, "and learn what this meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."—Matt. 9:13.

The governments of men would call the sinner back that he might be punished. The Savior of men would call him back that he might be redeemed from iniquity and cleansed from sin, that out of the old vile nature might arise a glorious new creature in Christ Jesus. No one can be so evil that the blood of Jesus Christ cannot wash away his sin. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."—Isa. 1:18.

At the End of the Year An Observance

By Paul M. Hatch

A MOMENTOUS year indeed has passed by. In the annals of recent years it is certainly true that A. D. 1933 holds captive a host of significant events in the ebb and tide of man and his government. Even the man of the street can sense this with his very small stock of coppers that jingle in his pockets, crying out the need of cautious buying; but ever and anon his thievish eyes register the day's happenings from the news stands that are passed by. Editors are acclaiming it as full of astonishing and swift changes. Problems have mounted that will need active and thoughtful attention if the status quo is to be maintained. News-men and reporters will from these very problems be alert, probing the unfolding of these events into broader and broader circles that will eventually affect most peoples of the world. In short, A. D. 1933 can be seen a sowing era, but what the growing era and harvest will be, time will eventually tell. The man of the street will have to wait. Editor, newsman, and reporter will be active in their waiting.

What interests us most is the problem as it relates to the time chart of the Almighty. Certainly the scales of our eyes are beginning to fall and we see a little more distinctly the events in a limelight of faith-strengthening assurance. God is keeping His word in truth. To the worldly-wise this is not observable. To the learned professionals there is yet a way out, and superior thought and supervision of these problems will eventually triumph over these dark conditions. Let us leave these gentlemen in their cogitations, to review a few of the events outstanding in 1933, coupling them if possible into a solution of impending movements.

When 1933 dawned upon the world the wily Japanese had already secured in their clutches a portion of north China, consolidated their gains, and were preparing a new conquest. Shortly after, their armies began the penetration of the Kingan Mountains to secure the province of Jehol. This was done in the face of a pronounced disapproval by the League of Nations. However, the Japanese paid not much attention to these futile attempts to stop them, but pushed further their conquest. This was done to wipe out a salient of boundary line that developed between Mongolia and Manchuria. These moves were a thorn in Russia's side, and the Japanese seem determined to push the thorn in further. Mongolia had previously fallen victim to Soviet teaching, so would naturally turn to Russia in case of war. China was nominally the loser in these moves, and she lost Jehol in less than one week's time.

Russia in the meantime, observing these movements, but expressing very little about them because of a still strong prejudice toward her by the world generally, began a new policy of peace instead of her former world revolution. This policy has been carried out with great energy and constant diligence. To say that Russia has not been successful in her endeavors of flattering the nations into a complacent trust of her peaceful mien would brand one of gross ignorance. So astonishing has been the success of this policy that even Russia has gone beyond her most rosy expectations. There were of course a great many things that contributed to this accomplishment. In the first place the Russian five year plan beginning in 1928 and ending in 1933 was generally conceded to be more successful than most nations opposed to Russia's government policy at the beginning thought possible. Russia had regained some measure of world confidence that commanded the respect of most of the nations. This led to a very easy breaking down of barriers that various nations had erected.

Russian trade was a thing to be sought after.

The Soviet Commissar of Foreign Relations, making capital of this lessening of opposition, busied himself in making trade treaties with various nations that met in gatherings of world importance. He did this by making agreeable approaches to various representatives of different nations, securing marvelous headway when the conferences themselves resulted in miserable failures. Then at last, at a voluntary gesture from Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Maxim Litvinov was sent by the Soviet Government to negotiate a trade treaty between the two nations. Thus as Japan consolidated her military gains in China and invited the disapproval and distrust of the world, Russia on the other hand consolidated gains of friendship of the nations preparatory to the inevitable day of battle with Japan. It May Be He Carries for You

We look for the coming of Jesus:
His advent must be about due.
My friend, are you ready to meet Him?
It may be He carries for you.

He said He would come for His people;
We know that His promise is true.
My friend, are you longing to greet Him?
It may be He carries for you.

He died on the cross to redeem us;
He lives, and the saved will live, too,
Forever with Him in His kingdom.
It may be He carries for you.

The prophecies fast in fulfillment
Will soon bring the King into view,
Descending in power from heaven.
It may be He carries for you.

For you, dear unsaved one, for you;
It may be He carries for you.
Oh, why not accept Him as Savior?
It may be He carries for you.
—Linden J. Carter in "Present Truth Messenger."

Germany changed, through her elections in March, to an exceedingly volatile and radical government under Adolf Hitler. Hitler's means of crushing all opposition has been marvelously swift, extending itself in all departments of civil and social control. His methods have been relentlessly cruel by suppressing all democratic self-government, erecting in its stead an almost absolute dictatorship. Although it is essentially a national movement, it has also sought to dictate and domineer over one of its closest neighbor nations.

The policy of anti-Semitism has been most relentlessly carried out. This policy has put thousands of Jewish people in bad plight, so that numbers of them have become exiles in an unfriendly world. In fact this rash act on the part of Hitler has caused a delicate international problem. Who knows but what on the solution of that problem the peace of the world is hanging?

Hitler has also defied the further enforcement of the Versailles Treaty, and in doing so has withdrawn membership from the League of Nations, as also Japan had previously done when censured by the findings of the Lytton report.

Italy has become increasingly defiant to the League of Nations for the reason that the League is founded mainly on democratic principles which are opposed to socialistic principles in government.

The League of Nations, therefore, has lost much in its prestige as a means of peace and amicable solution of national differences. The European nations especially are returning to the system of alliances to maintain a balance of power. This engenders hatred and enmity, which in turn are an impetus to heavy armament. Because of these conditions the so-called disarmament conferences should be rightly called armament conferences instead, for that is practically what is discussed at such gatherings.

Other nations have had their problems and crises. But in it all there is discernible an increasing list toward socialism in its various heads and degrees. Russia is dominated by the most radical form of socialism, and is international. While Italy and Germany are dominated by national policy, but are nevertheless dangerous to the liberties of mankind. Even the United States has elements of socialism in its present government under Mr. Roosevelt.

However, the radical form as exhibited to us in Russia should be to all Christians a signal to sober thought. Russia is avowedly anti-God and pro-man in its revolutionary teaching and administration of judicial decisions. Reliable sources of information declare this to be so, that in Russia it is far safer to be a murderer than to be a preacher or pastor of any Christian church. The Russian Government has empowered the OGPU or secret police to deal with such cases and execute without trial. Invariably a murderer will have at least a small chance of escaping capital punishment, while religious people and teachers possess none whatever.

Russia has promoted and is promoting her principles to the Russian people through the poster cartoon, the motion picture, and the lecture platform. Her policy is to promote the idea that man need not rely on any but himself. Therefore man and his works are lauded to the skies, while God is debased to a weak sort of ineffectual superstition. This kind of education of the mass of Russian people is fast solidifying their power. Posters that are used with great effect in this promotion are most bombastic of the prowess of man. It has been the good fortune of the writer to see and have explained some of these posters. Always in every case man or man's mechanical creations are placed at the top of the card, while the object of scorn is placed in a ridiculous position or experiencing the might of the Russian Government. One of these posters especially remains strong in the mind. It was a picture of two gigantic Russian soldiers striding across the world. In the heavens above, Jehovah, Allah, and other named gods were drawing back in consternation, while under the feet of the soldiers churches were being trampled down and the religious people were fleeing terror-stricken in every direction. From the mouth of one of these gigantic figures proceeded the words of inquiry, "Comrade, are you ready for Armageddon?" The other makes reply, "Yea, comrade, I am ready."

Yet for all of Russia's zeal under the five year plan, with all her tractors, factories, agricultural machines and implements, she has not been able to grow enough foodstuff to sustain a starving population. Why? Well, for one thing herds of cattle and horses have been diminishing from one cause and another. Russia's land is deficient in fertilizers, and machinery will not produce fertility no matter how much they make. Cannot Russia rectify this condition? Well, no doubt she can or will, but how? She has not a great deal of natural fertilizer beds nor material for the manufacture of them. She will be compelled to look beyond her borders for this necessity.

Close at hand great chemical and fertilizer plants are beginning to turn out in increasing quantities this important world commodity. Tests of those salts contained in the Dead Sea by chemists have brought the astonishing disclosure that there lies in that sea wealth to more than two thirds of all the rest of the world combined. To this source Russia will naturally look, and it has ever been a coveted land to Russia. In Peter the Great's will, it is said, appears a statement that Russia must have Constantinople, even if it requires a hundred thousand lives to take it. Russia must have fertilizer. The Scripture says that Gog is going down to take a spoil and take a prey in the latter times (Ezekiel 38). Russia will sacrifice many thousands of lives to take it if it cannot be procured otherwise.

Taking a look at Palestine, it appears that that land has not experienced any depression but has forged ahead and has been able to easily absorb all immigration so far. Jews, because of an ever-increasing hostility of peoples in the world, are looking to its shores as a haven of safety. But here trouble also lurks in the Arabian breast. But it is the will of the God that scattered Israel to regather them again in their ancient homeland (Jer. 3:10-13; Ezek. 36:19, 24). This is working out in a wonderful way.

One incident that happened in 1933 should fill all Christian breasts with satisfaction. A most precious possession has been transferred from unholy hands to those more worthy. Reference is to the Codex Sinaiticus. This manuscript of the New Testament is reckoned one of two most ancient copies of the original Scripture. It is the only complete ancient manuscript of the New Testament. Discovered and brought to light in its complete form by Konstantin Tischendorf in 1858, this document, together with the partial one in the Vatican in Rome, is considered by biblical students the authority of the probable original writings. Russia sold it to the British Museum. It was one of the relics possessed by the late Tsar of Russia, a gift of the monastery at Sinai. To have so valuable a possession intact expresses anew the gracious overseeing of the Father in His gifts to the children of men.

A Lost Man

By Lyman Booth

How often do we see in the daily papers the account of some man having disappeared from home and friends. Many reasons may be given for his unexpected absence. It may be a case of suicide, murder, or perhaps he has been kidnapped and held for ransom. These advertisements often appear; but oh, how many are lost for whom no advertisements are ever published, who disappear and are forgotten. Some lose their memory and reason and wander away, sicken and die, and are buried among the unknown, while relatives and friends miss and mourn their loss.

But oh, how many have wandered from the path of virtue and righteousness to return no more. Of their sad fate no one knows the story. They are gone and the tearful eyes that wait and watch for them weep and watch in vain. God only knows the end of life's story of many lost wanderers. They were loved and esteemed by all who knew them. They may have had good homes and plenty, and given promise of usefulness and influence in the affairs of the nation; but they are gone, but where? Death may have claimed them, temptation and sin may have engulfed them, despondency may have bereft them of reason; we know not; we have missed them, and they cannot be traced, and dark mystery conceals the end.

How sad to have the faces of loved ones and friends fade forever from sight and memory and to feel that they shall return no more. Though their fate may be unknown it would be a relief and consolation if we but knew they had died in the Lord; we could weep over their graves, and at the same time rejoice in hope. They drifted away among the treacherous currents and engulfing waves and dashed against hidden reefs and went down in the whirlpool. But we leave them with the Lord, for He is just. He knows the story of every prodigal. He knows the secret of every wayward life. He knows where each lost sheep is straying, and He knows how to find it and how to bring it back.

Let prayers ascend to God for the missing. Let cries arise to the holy One for those who have been tempted and led astray and gone, perhaps, never more to return. While the seasons of joy come and go, and as we greet our friends who remain, and we think of the absent ones, let prayers arise for those, who, like sheep, have strayed from us. Let them not be forgotten by Him who forgave a poor outcast woman and bade her "go, and sin no more."

If some poor wanderer should read these lines, let me entreat of you, come home to God, to a father who loves you, to a mother whose eyes are dimmed with tears at the mention of your name; come home to a wife who waits and weeps in weariness, broken in health and heart, to children who would rejoice in a father's love—poor wanderer, please come home, you will be welcome. There is forgiveness for the lost and mercy for the wayward. Remember, there is joy "in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance."—Luke 15:7.

Jesus, your best friend, is waiting to receive and bless you if you will only come. Do this and you will find the love and fellowship of former days will return and a flood of joy will gladden your heart. Fear not to come. Jacob feared the wrath of his brother Esau whom he had greatly wronged, but after a night's struggle in prayer and tears with the angel he received a blessing and was encouraged to return and meet his brother whom he had offended. Esau was in the Lord's hands and met Jacob in fond embrace.

Thus if you turn homeward toward God, and you plead for His mercy, He will meet you even when you are a great way off and will make haste to bring you to His home, where you may abide forever, and as the prodigal was met, kissed, and wept over, and clad and decked with fancy robe, and feasted, so you may cause joy in heaven, and peace and happiness for yourself, and finally be given a robe clean and white, "which is the righteousness of saints."

When the cold waters of death shall have passed, and the King of kings reigns in majesty and power, and earth is hallowed by His presence, then you will have reached the final victory and the crown. Then the age of sorrow and tears will give way to the age of joy. The old world will be followed by the new. The weary will find rest, the wanderer an eternal abode and a life that shall never end.

Papers on the Lord's Coming Israel and Jerusalem

By F. L. Austin

“O JERUSALEM, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

“Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

“For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.”—Matt. 23:37-39.

It was Jesus speaking. He addressed Jerusalem. Not Jerusalem composed of stone, masonry, and wood, but Jerusalem made up of God's chosen people—the Jews; Israel.

Jerusalem was (and still is) “the City of God.” “Great is the LORD,” exclaimed the Psalmist in 48:1, “and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King.” Again at 87:3: “Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God.” It was there that Solomon built the temple of God, as promised in 2 Samuel 7:13. When he dedicated that temple, in Jerusalem, “fire came down from heaven,” we are told in 2 Chronicles 7:1-3, “and the glory of the LORD filled the house. And the priests could not enter into the house of the LORD, because the glory of the LORD had filled the LORD's house.” This spectacle of the grandeur of God's glory was revealed in no other place than in Jerusalem, the City of God. It emphasized that the power of God's Presence filled the house, and that He sustained Solomon, Israel's King. So loyal to Jehovah was Jerusalem at that time that her children “bowed themselves with their faces to the ground. . . , and worshipped, and praised the LORD.” How God's mercy was always showered upon Jerusalem as long as she was faithful to Him!

But, what a change! How, in the days of Jesus, she had revolted. Guilty of “all the righteous blood shed upon the earth” was the Savior's accusation against Jerusalem in Matthew 23:35. Already Jerusalem was whetting her appetite in readiness for adding the righteous blood of the Son of God to that already overflowing the vats of her indignation against righteous Zacharias and others. Jesus told her people at John 8:21 that “I go my way, and ye shall seek me, . . . whither I go, ye cannot come.” Then, later, in Matthew 23:39: “Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.”

Bullinger, whom Dr. Gray, when president of the Moody Bible Institute, called “the greatest living theologian,” commenting on the clause “which is to come,” in Revelation 1:8, says, “This also is a definite title of Christ; ho erchomenos, THE COMING ONE.” His comment continues:

“It is not, who ‘is about to come,’ as though it were announcing a fact or act, as being at hand: but, it decides a Person who has this for His special title, by which He came to be known. He has borne that title ever since the great prophecy and promise of Gen. 3:15. From that time ‘the seed of the woman’ has always been the hope of God's People, and hence He is ‘The Coming One.’”

For the benefit of any who may wish to make careful study of this thought I quote further from Bullinger's Apocalypse, page 22, where he also includes the text under consideration (Matt. 23:19) as one of the nineteen in the New Testament containing the Greek title ho erchomenos, which, being translated for rigid accuracy, reads “The Coming”; but, to translate the thought, reads “The Coming One.” He writes:

“The title is never once used in any of the Church epistles. We have it variously rendered:—

“‘That cometh,’ Luke 19:38; John 12:13.

“‘He that cometh,’ Matt. 3:11; 21:9; 23:39; John 1:15; 3:31 (twice).

“‘Who coming,’ John 1:27.

“‘He that shall come,’ Heb. 10:37.

“‘Which (or that) should come,’ John 6:14; 11:27.

“‘He that (or which) should come,’ Matt. 11:3; Luke 7:19, 20; Acts 19:4.

“‘Which is (or art) to come,’ Rev. 1:4, 8; 4:8.”

In none of the above texts is it the event of Christ's return that is emphasized. Rather it is “The Coming One,” promised of old, that is pointed to as though with the index finger.

Nor is this all we find in the phrase in Matthew 23:29. Jesus there quoted from Psalm 1:18, 26 where the word “LORD” is, in Hebrew, “Jehovah.” Therefore the word “Lord” in Matthew 23:29 does not refer to the Lordship of Jesus as some might infer, but to Jehovah—He who established His covenant for Abraham's Israelitish seed, even for Jerusalem. And for One to be “in the name of the Lord” is for One to be authorized by Him; empowered by Him; motivated by Him. He is Jehovah's Appointed One.

All this Jerusalem denied as referring to Jesus. They fully anticipated The Coming One who should be their Messiah—John 4:25. They expected The Coming One of Abraham's seed to bless Israel and Gentiles—Luke 1:30-32; Acts 3:25. They waited for The Coming One to sit on David's throne—Matthew 22:41-46.

Radio in Prophecy

THUS FAR our investigations have been confined to the physical realm, although in many instances it seems to be far more than physical. But it is now known that the strange powers of radio are not confined to the physical order, but also reign in the realm of the mind. One thing is sure, the power of personality can be sent over air waves. Last summer a man in Springfield, Massachusetts, hypnotized two men in a Boston hotel 150 miles away. The effort was tried on three at the same time—one a Harvard student—and it failed on him, but two men were put to sleep through this strange medium of physical and psychical force. It is a power very difficult to analyze even when demonstrated by contact. But to be able to bring a subject under its power across the country and through walls of masonry passes all understanding.

But here it is again in the realm of the mind—a radio device makes thought audible. Thought is a deep mystery; it is the most intangible phenomenon of all that pertains to life; but this demonstration was made by a prominent teacher of psychology and research work of one of the great American universities. A student of psychology listened to her brain work with the instrument perfected by this distinguished teacher. At the university mentioned the young lady held in her mouth tiny electrodes and disturbances set up in her tongue by nerve impulses from her thought were amplified and made audible by the novel combinations of the instruments. It is now possible actually to hear the wheels of the brain go round. The teacher mentioned is an authority on speech defects, and this led his experiments into this field of his discovery.

It seems that the powers of radio operate in the mental and spiritual world, as well as in the physical. Mr. Drummond says in his Natural Laws in the Spiritual World that all law is the same. It differs in that it touches higher forms of life, beginning with the clod and ascending step by step until it reaches the spirit world. We quoted the opinion of one scientist, who suggested that life was but a higher form of vibrations beginning with low tones and increasing beyond the powers of hearing—into heat, light, electricity, and, perhaps, life. If this theory be correct, we see that electricity is very closely allied with life. Radio is the highest development thus far of electrical control, and it should not be surprising that in the very infancy of this mysterious power of the air transmission the realm of the mind should be invaded.

We wish now to pause in our discussion for awhile with a few side comments; yet they are vital and germane to all this study. It has been stated and published that eighty per cent of all the teachers of biology were either atheists, agnostics, or infidels, touching the revelation and inspiration of the Bible; that even one who studies deeply into the thousand mysteries and perfections of the human body could doubt that every heart beat, the blood flow, respiration, functions of any and all the five senses reveal a Designer of omniscience and omnipotence! There is not a biologist nor chemist on earth that could tell the how or the why of any functional process of the human body.

Then when we inspect the powers of the mind—thought, reason, judgment, will power, memory—then as all these and others affect and control the higher powers of our being, such as love, reverence, worship, and faith, no one but a super-educated, conceited, intellectual blockhead could but know that behind all these there can be but one answer—God.

There has been much talk about the monkey theory, prehistoric man, etc., etc., all of which is competent to produce mental nausea. This modern line of stuff has as a basis the long-ago exploded theory of evolution, a dogma that Mr. Darwin himself doubted before he died. It sounds scholastic to become associated with the big idea of evolution. It creates a form of ego which is monumental in its proportions. The evolutionist, be he teacher, preacher, or layman, self-appoints himself to a very discriminating class. It carries of necessity a form of hyphenated egotism which looks with pity and contempt on the dullards who have not evolved to the sublime heights of satisfied certainty where they bask in the consciousness of superiority complex.

Now let us go into the evolutionary theory of creation—not from the standpoint of a scientist—for this writer lays no claim to be either a scholar or a scientist; but we do claim some fence-rail, homespun philosophy. If the evolutionary theory of creation is true, then it is nonsense to talk of monkey origin. The monkey is only a link in the long chain of development. If evolution is true, then life started (we do not know how) far back in the slimy ooze of the pond—not a frog pond, for there were no frogs. Some way, life—strange, unfathomable life—just naturally happened. Note: It came naturally. We presume that the rays of the sun back in that dim universe of chaos just twinkled about on the slime until—presto! Life came into being and little infinitesimal protozoa began to wiggle. They kept on wiggling until they sprouted legs. Then the sun kept beating on the wiggling forms of life until eyes happened. No one knows how—they just happened. Then on and on they kept moving, seeing, sprouting, until sex happened—happened, as Uncle Remus explained, as the Negro's hair became kinky. He told the little boy that the Negro fell into a mudhole and, behold, when he came out his hair was kinky.

“But, Uncle Remus,” said the lad, “how would falling in the mudhole make his hair kinky?”

Uncle Remus replied, “Oh, you must not ask any more questions. It was jus' obleeged to be.”

There you have it—a perfectly rational answer as to how they happened—legs, hands, feet, eyes, skin—with pores for the elimination of impurities—and last, sex.

Well, anyway, here we are, and we just evolved and evolved until we have produced a race of highly developed protozoa; and their little stomachs (as the lowest form of life is only stomach), legless, sightless, mindless, sexless, forms of life, have given to the world—man, teachers of biology, doctors, lawyers, merchants, statesmen, tramps, criminals, queens, actresses, prostitutes, mothers, wives, flappers.

But we must not leave our findings until the pathway of life (beginning at the beginning) is followed to an ultimate, logical conclusion. The conclusion is that we must no longer slander the monkey as being our progenitor. Our kinship extends farther back than that. If life on this planet is here by blind force of chance, beginning with the cell unit, and has reached the present diversified infinite variety of insects and animal species by a process of a survival of the fittest, then we are kin to all life below us. However, it is passing strange how all these lower species remain—and unchanged. The monkey as we now have him, all sizes, types, and aspects, from the little, fuzzy-faced, long-tailed mona to the huge gorilla without any tail, all seem not to be in the process of evolution now. As far as the memory of man runneth back, no joints of the monkey's tail have been lost. There are no ape-men coming out of the jungle developed into a being with human consciousness. Why do we see no more evolution working?

But again observe, we are tracing our kinship. The fact remains and cannot be set aside by any process of logic or arguments: if evolution is true, we are kin to and direct descendants from all life—the animalculi in the green skum, the frogs, spiders, snakes, buzzards, polecats, hyenas, bears, bulldogs, and wildcats.

Then we face another problem as we eat our food of the fowls of the air and the beasts of the field. We are cannibals, eating our helpless relations. Every chicken served, all swine butchered and sheep brought to the slaughter are our poor relations. We are cannibals touching the fowls of the barnyard, and especially chargeable to the ministers of the gospel. If their gastronomic desires have not been slandered, they are the chief of cannibals.

No, a thousand times no! In the old Book, which some of us still believe, the program of creation in all its beginnings, species as we now have them, the record says God made. God created, touching each order from the lowest to the highest. There was a specific act of creation; and, furthermore, it says: "Male and female created he them." The human species—biped—genus homo—may go back and find that some of its ancestors hung by a rope around their necks, but did not hang by their tails.—C. F. Wimberly, D.D., in The Pentecostal Herald.

PAPERS ON THE LORD'S COMING

In every sense Jesus was THE COMING ONE. But Jerusalem denied Him; crucified Him.

In the light of all this, what pathos there is in the words of Jesus—"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say," Blessed, The Coming One, in the name of the LORD. Jesus knew their blindness toward Himself. He knew with what amazing pains their blindness would be healed.

Jerusalem still longs for its promised Coming One. But her children still resent every thought that Jesus of Nazareth is that One. Now Christ's word was

"YE SHALL NOT SEE ME TILL"

That small word "till" is large in meaning. Here, its first meaning is, they will at sometime see Him. Its second meaning is that their next sight of Him will be after they—Jerusalem, the Jews, Israel—repent and recognize Him as being The Promised Coming One blessed with the name of Jehovah. That will be after "The Coming One" shall have returned to Jerusalem.

Long ago Jehovah chose Israel to be His special people. He set them apart for Himself. Therefore, because they were set apart, they were frequently called "saints." "He also exalteth the horn of his people," reads Psalm 148:14, "the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people near unto him." See also Daniel 7:27. They are also called "his elect," as in Matthew 24:31.

It is also clearly stated that Jerusalem—the City of God, made up of God's Israel, God's saints—which has been under Gentile lordship ever since in Daniel 2 God gave such lordship to Nebuchadnezzar—shall continue to "be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24). It is in connection with the close of Gentile times, Luke indicates in verse 25, that "there shall be signs in the sun. . .," and "then," at that time, "they shall see the Son of man coming. . ." But it is prior to the fullness of Gentile times that Luke, in verse 20, places "armies" around Jerusalem, and warns, verses 21, 22, all to flee. Matthew in 24:15-22, referring to the same time, warns them to flee because it will "be great tribulation."

Now, according to Isaiah 13:6-12 and Joel 3:9-17 and Revelation 6:12-17, the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, and the tribulation immediately preceding those signs, are all located in "the day of the LORD." Jerusalem passes through these self-attracted tortures. Some of Jerusalem's children will accept the seal of God in their foreheads, John tells in Revelation 7:3-8, instead of the seal of the beast of Revelation 13, and will be led and kept by Him who shall then be opening the seals of the book.

Thus we see an entirely different line of thought relating to Jerusalem's approach to the coming of The Coming One from the thought relating to the Church of God. The Church will attain perfection prior to the tribulation; Jerusalem, by it. The Church will be caught away; the nation, with pangs, will toil through. The Church will become one with Christ; the chosen nation will bow to the rule of The Coming One, who will occupy the throne of David, and rule over the house of Jacob forever.

Thus and then, when The Coming One shall have been received, Jerusalem will quickly come to be perfected. Then the world shall behold the glorified City of God.

ISAIAH'S PROPHECY FULFILLED

Kirkuk in Iraq, to Tripoli in the north, and to Haifa in the south; the northern section to Tripoli is completed, whilst work on the southern section is in progress.

THE NEW RAILWAY

In Isaiah 19:23, we read: "In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria"—Iraq.

This highway is already an accomplished fact; for did not our British engineers lay part of this "highway" during the years of the War? As our forces marched north from the Suez Canal, the engineers laid a "metal way" behind them, until they joined up with the railway at Lud (Lydda). That line is still in existence, so that today you can travel in comfort from Egypt to Lud, thence to Jerusalem on the one hand, and to Jaffa-Haifa-Damascus on the other; but the new line, which will begin at Haifa in the near future, will run as follows: It will ascend the River Kishon, thence on to the historic Plain of Esdraelon, or Armageddon, thence across the Jordan south of the Sea of Galilee, over the hills of Gilead, to the plateau of eastern Trans-jordan, then across the Syrian desert, after which it will enter Iraq, and join the existing air and motor way to Baghdad at the lonely well near the landing ground and Rest House of Rutba, thence to Baghdad on its way to the oil fields near Mosul. The total length of the line will be approximately 690 miles. The highest point will be 2,972 feet above sea level, when it crosses the lava country of Trans-jordan, and its lowest will be 872 feet below sea level in the Jordan Valley.

Is it not remarkable that those who undertook the survey in 1930-31 should decide to take the railway from Haifa, with its spacious harbor, and then right on to the "field" for the last great world conflict? Why not a short direct line from Beyrout?

Think for a moment of the two rail heads—one on the Mediterranean, for the King of the South; with the other almost on the border of Russia, for the King of the North, and all this being brought into being in 1933. Is it not startling?

HOW THE COUNTRY WAS OPENED UP

Soon after the war, British interest in a direct non-Turkish route to Baghdad and Persia revived, and in 1923, through the daring enterprise and push of Mr. Norman Nairn (an Australian, I believe), a motor car mail route was inaugurated from Beyrout, via Damascus, to Baghdad. Since that day, many rival companies have butted in, with the result that it is possible to travel today from Damascus to Baghdad, a distance of 550 miles, by luxurious motor cars, for the sum of $15.00. This has opened up the country to the tourist, on the one hand for the purpose of visiting the biblical sites of Babylon, Ur of the Chaldees, Nineveh, etc., whilst on the other hand, it has brought England and India within easy reach of each other, so that civil and military officers, as well as business men of all classes, from India, can add a few weeks to their home leave by taking this route. Air transport to and from India is on the increase, but at present is too expensive to be popular. There is not the least doubt that with the advent of the new railway, plus the new harbor at Haifa, this will become a favorite route to India and the Far East in the near future.

It is interesting to note that by an agreement annexed to the 1930 Treaty of Alliance the right to use railways in Iraq for the conveyance of military forces and supplies is expressly reserved to Great Britain. In conjunction with the existing line from Baghdad to Basra, the proposed railway would provide an alternate route to the east, which, being independent of the Suez Canal, might prove indispensable for the transport of troops and munitions to the Persian Gulf and India.

AGRICULTURE

There is not the least doubt that in the days of King Nebuchadnezzar, the whole of this country was like the Garden of Eden. One can see all over the country the broken-down banks of canals that intersected the country like a cobweb at one time. This made the country both fertile and productive, but for the present those days have gone.

It is inevitable that agriculture must once more come into its own, and must be the chief means of subsistence of the majority of the population. With this end in view, modern methods of agriculture are being introduced into the country, and a company called the Latifyah Estates, is, in cooperation with the Government, demonstrating what can be done on an area of sixty thousand acres of land. Excellent results have been achieved.

It would appear that the secret of Iraq's greatness in the agricultural world will spring from a right use of her two great rivers, plus modern methods, and there is not the least doubt about it, that her future will be one of marked progress and success.

It is interesting to note that just as Palestine is largely dependent on her export trade of fruit—viz., oranges, Iraq is also dependent on her export of dates. These account for about one third of the value of her exports.

Agriculture cannot meet the needs of the country at present, owing to the general world depression. It is therefore a great boon to the Iraqis that at this difficult period in their early history they are within sight of the development of their oil industry, which will tide them over a crisis and bring a measure of prosperity that would be otherwise lacking.

It will be seen from the foregoing developments that all have come into being during the post-war years. Little or nothing was known by the British reading public of these countries until after the war; since then progress has been most marked in all four countries, but especially in Palestine and Iraq.

It will be interesting to watch future developments, as such are sure to take place in the near future, so as to bring the whole of this territory into line with God's covenant promise to Abraham. This territory forms a triangle from the river of Egypt, on the one hand, to a line running along the west bank of the Euphrates River, from its source to the Persian Gulf.

Abreast of the Times

"Their Children Will Not Even Know!"

"They have forgotten the Lord their God."—Jer. 3:21.

BALTIMORE, Md.—A pathetic little story is related in the current issue of The American Magazine by Dr. Maurice Chideckel, a physician of this city, which graphically illustrates the change that has overtaken the younger generation of the Jews and the sorrow which their disregard for the religion of their fathers brings to the older ones. The physician draws briefly from notations made on his case records as follows:

"I have become hardened to death. But today I wept at the bedside of an old man.

" 'This is the last hour of my life,' said aged Abraham Cohen. 'Won't you please listen while I sing?'

"I said I would.

" 'I am going to sing Lord of the Universe,' he said. 'In Hebrew they call it Adon Olem. I will sing it with the same refrain as when I was a cantor in Kovno. I am the last of the Cohens to sing it.

" 'Did you see my sons in the next room? They will not listen to me. This song dies with me. They will sing different songs, and their children will not even know that once people found solace in sacred music.'

"Simple, pathetic words of an old man dying. But with what emotions these words were charged! He sang from the depths of his broken heart, sang as he died. He never finished the melody.

"Tears were in my eyes as I opened the door to tell his sons that their father was dead. It was difficult for me to attract their attention. They were listening to the radio. A tenor was singing The Last Round-Up."

The sorrows of Israel are drawing toward their close. The sacred songs of Zion will one day reverberate again with all their old appeal to the profound spiritual emotions of Israel. The Lord's name and the Lord's songs will be recalled, and the hills of Zion be made to ring once more with glad anthems of joyful adoration to Jehovah of hosts!

The Christian as well as the Jew awaits with hope the dawning of that day!

A Former Saloon Keeper Speaks

"At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Prov. 23:32.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The following letter, which appeared recently in The Minneapolis Tribune, was brought to our attention by Eld. A. E. Hoskins of Eden Valley.

"To the Editor of The Tribune:

"I have just been listening to the action of the Utah legislature as well as the proceedings in Washington attending the final repeal of prohibition.

"It seems to be hailed as a proclamation of emancipa-tion whereas in effect it is a proclamation of slavery.

"It has been promoted as a means of recovery from depression and as a valuable source of revenue to our cities, states, and nation.

"As to bringing prosperity the wish is father to the thought and a bitter awakening will dispel the dream.

"As a source of revenue, for every dollar it brings in there will be such an expanse of woe and poverty and suffering as only those of us old enough to remember can estimate.

"I, who write, am fully qualified to make these statements.

"For years I both drank it freely and to excess and sold it over my bar. What I saw of its disastrous effects on myself as well as my customers convinced me that it was a hellish business and I dare not accept the consequences even though my profits were $500 to $600 a month.

"Unfortunately those who assumed charge of the effort to promote temperance made of it a political issue and did not hesitate to use any means, right or wrong, to effect their end.

"Let those who believe in temperance learn by history that it must be by education and not by law that people shall become total abstainers, in which only there is safety.

"FORMER SALOON KEEPER."

Austrian Menace to Jewry

"Among these nations shalt thou find no ease, . . . and thou shalt fear day and night."—Deut. 28:65, 66.

CHICAGO, Ill.—Dr. Nathaniel Clough, associate professor of history at Wagner College, S. I., declares in a recent article in the Jewish Forum that "a National Socialist government in Austria would undoubtedly mean even greater persecution of the Jews than that which has taken place in Germany."

"The mere fact Hitler is an Austrian by birth and developed his anti-Semitism while a young boy in Vienna, should open the eyes of Jews all over the world to the dangers inherent in the Austrian situation," Dr. Clough asserts. "It is the formal determination of Hitler and the German Nazis that National Socialism shall triumph in Austria. This would be the first step toward an eventual union of Austria and Germany, which is the one thing above all others which Hitler wishes to accomplish.

"The Jewish press in Vienna has attacked Hitler bitterly since the Nazi revolution in Germany. This means that the Austrian Nazis will take drastic measures in revenge if they have the opportunity," the professor continued. "History is moving forward at a rapid pace in Europe. Today Germany stands alone (in the persecution of the Jews). Tomorrow she may have allies—Hungary and Italy."—Daily Jewish Courier.

“THE PEOPLE WHICH SAT IN DARKNESS SAW GREAT LIGHT; AND TO THEM WHICH SAT IN THE REGION AND SHADOW OF DEATH LIGHT IS SPRUNG UP.”

IMMORTALIZATION OF THE SAINTS

WE LEARN from the Scriptures that man by nature is mortal and God and His Son only have immortality. We are told in 1 Timothy 6:16, “Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto.” We are also told in Romans 2:7 that immortality is something that we should seek: “To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life.” This life is conditional, so that only those that do the will of God may inherit it and live forever.

1 John 2:17: “And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.” After the resurrection the saints shall reign with Christ and nothing can separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. Paul tells us that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him.—Charlotte Rahn, Los Angeles, Calif.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

THE Berean Society of the Church of God of St. Cloud, Minn., held their annual election Sunday, Dec. 31. The officers for the ensuing year are as follows: president, John Savage; vice president, Pheraba Hoskins; second vice president, Carol Hoskins (attendance and social affairs); third vice president, Bernice Johnson (subjects for discussion); secretary-treasurer, Lola Skinner; organist, Bernice Johnson.

We have entered the new year with nineteen enrolled members and an average of eleven attending. We hope to increase interest till all members are in attendance.

Lola Skinner, Secretary.

The above report possesses unusual interest owing to the novel organization it describes. It is not improbable that other Berean societies could find something of considerable value in the vice presidential duties mentioned. Certainly it is always wise, whatever system of organization is adopted, to have standing committees to attend to the business of securing new members and keeping the old ones interested and of determining what the program for each meeting shall be. Hit-or-miss teaching and class sessions never arouse enough interest to justify a society's existence.

Arlen Marsh.

A great hue and cry has been raised in these columns over the publication of Senior Book 3, God's Kingdom; but remember that the other books are still in stock: Book 1, The Gospel Plan, and Book 2, Life and Immortality, at the same old price. Each of the three books retails at 25 cents a copy for 1 to 4, 22 cents a copy for 5 to 24, and 20 cents a copy for 25 or more. Order from the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois. All books are sent postpaid within twenty-four hours after the receipt of an order.

MY SOUL THIRSTETH FOR GOD

I thirst, but not as once I did,
The vain delights of earth to share;
Thy wounds, Emmanuel, all forbid
That I should seek my pleasures there.

It was the sight of Thy dear cross
First wean'd my soul from earthly things;
And taught me to esteem as dross
The mirth of fools and pomp of kings.

I want that grace that springs from Thee,
That quickens all things where it flows,
And makes a wretched thorn like me
Bloom as the myrtle, or the rose.

Dear fountain of delight unknown!
No longer sink below the brim;
But overflow, and pour me down
A living and life-giving stream!

For sure of all the plants that share
The notice of thy Father's eye,
None proves less grateful to His care,
Or yields him meaner fruit than I.

—William Cowper.

We've read lately that the discovery of the Standard Oil wells in Egypt resulted from a tip given in Exodus 2:3. “And daubed it with slime and with pitch.” One of the directors who read this passage figured that where there is pitch there must be oil. A number of oil wells are now on the ground near where Moses was born. It pays to read the Bible.—Boston Transcript.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father."

JESUS WARNS US

ONCE upon a time there were two brothers who had worked hard and saved very carefully for many years. These two brothers had the same purpose in mind—to build homes for themselves which they might enjoy all the rest of their days.

One of them, whom we will call John, selected the spot on which to build and soon commenced work. His whole thought was on the beauty of the finished house. In imagination he could see every line of it, its color and form, as he dug the foundation.

How much his little family was going to enjoy this house, which they would soon make into a real home! The broad porches, the sunny windows, the sweep of the driveway—oh, it was all going to be just like his "dream" house.

The older brother, David by name, may have been a little less imaginative by nature, but he was a most dependable person. "Dependable David," his friends called him. His plans were all blue printed, and every step outlined ahead of time. He, too, set out to accomplish his cherished desire.

And so "Joyful John" and "Dependable David" built their houses, happy at the prospect of soon being able to move into them. But before either one was entirely completed, a dreadful thing happened.

One sultry night dark clouds piled up one above another, lightning flashed, and thunder rolled. Then great torrents of rain fell. The wind arose and drove the flood of waters into every crack and crevice, spreading havoc everywhere.

"Joyful John," hastening over to his little house next morning to commence work, was shocked at the sight that met his eyes. For the little house was almost a total wreck. A corner sagged here; a wall was broken down there; the pillars to the beautiful porch lay on the rain soaked earth.

Thinking of his brother and the possible fate of his little house also, John hurried over to where he was building. Merrily whistling and hammering away was "Dependable David," his little structure erect and firm in the dazzling morning sun.

Eager questions and answers passed between the two brothers, while they tried to discover the reason for the fall of John's house. David explained to John just where he had hastened too much in the laying of his foundation and where he had tried to spare expense in not using safe and sure materials.

"Yes, I see now, David," said John, "why you took so much greater pains with your foundation. When I thought you were so foolish and slow, you were building on rock."

When one of your young friends tells you that it doesn't make any difference whether you heed the good advice Father gives you, that boy or girl is building his house on sand. For you know we are all building our houses of life in everything we do.

When your friend says, "Take one little drink with me; it won't hurt you a bit," he is just as sure to see the day when his life will be ruined as John saw the day his little house was wrecked by the storm.

Don't let anyone tell you that strong drink of any kind can't hurt you, for that person is deceiving you. Boys and girls, don't take your first drink! It is just as the wisest man that ever lived said—strong drink is like a poisonous serpent. It fastens itself upon you, and you cannot shake it off. It brings ruin and death in the end.

This week, fellow club members, I got the nicest letter from Ruth Shipman, Marietta, South Carolina, Route 2, who asks that she and her sister, Ethel, and brothers, Hugh and Everett, may enter our "Sons and Daughters of the King" Club. Ruth says they live 'way back in the mountains where there isn't any Sunday school of our own to attend. Just think, some of us have never even seen a mountain, while Ruth and her brothers and sisters and their father live right among the mountains! I wish I could stand beside them some morning and watch the sunrise. Don't you?

But listen, boys and girls, their mother is dead, and Ruth, who is only fourteen, is the little mother of the family. Doesn't that make you all sad for them? Ruth says that, though they have no mother to help them study their Bibles, they do the best they can. Run right now and give Mother a good hug and tell her how glad you are you have her. And then act like it!

And now, won't each of you boys write to Hugh and Everett, and you girls to Ruth and Ethel? Do it tonight before you forget. Describe your home and your Sunday school to them. They will be so happy to hear from us.

Then we have Jack Parsley of Abilene, Texas, who is 5 years old and who was one of the first members of our Bible Scrapbook Club. He sent such a nice scrapbook for the Exhibit.

Welcome, new members, all.

LESSON 6. — February 11, 1934

TIMELY WARNINGS

Matthew 7:1-29

Devotional Reading: Proverbs 2:1-8

GOLDEN TEXT

Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.—Matthew 7:19.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Timely Warnings.

Basic Truth: "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he: Eat and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee."—Prov. 23:7.

I. The Golden Rule. (Matt. 7:12.) No rule of conduct was ever devised that meets every situation that can arise between men as does this remarkable teaching of Jesus Christ. If it were permitted to govern the conduct of all men everywhere, it would speedily revolutionize the world for good. Nothing but kindness and justice tempered with mercy could prevail where the golden rule held sway.

II. The Two Gateways. (Matt. 7:13, 14.) It was no new idea Jesus introduced when He used the illustration of the two gates, one narrow and the other wide. God pointed out the same thing to Israel through Moses (Deut. 30:19). We enter the narrow gate, or we enter the wide gate, by our own choice. Life or death is ours by our own choice. Paul told the Jews who rejected the gospel that they judged themselves "unworthy of everlasting life." They were responsible for the results that followed, for the loss they sustained.

III. Danger Through False Leadership. (Matt. 7:15-23.) The best test of any teaching, or of any habit or institution, is the fruit it bears. Jesus brings this thought out clearly in this lesson in connection with the dangers that arise from false religious teaching, but the same rule holds good in the matter of the use of intoxicating liquors. One never knew a man to offer a better prayer, or to preach a better sermon because he had been drinking. Liquor always leads down, never up.

IV. The Two Foundations. (Matt. 7:24-27.) The trials of life sweep over all men alike, but their ability to bear up under their difficulties depends upon the principles by which their lives are ruled. If they have built upon the sand of material prosperity alone, times of depression will sweep them away. But if their deepest hopes are of eternal things, distress causes them to lift up their heads and rejoice, for their redemption draws near (Luke 21:28).

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Beware (v. 12) what you do, and be sure that you are doing unto others what you desire others to do unto you. What a marvelous rule! This law of life and conduct covers every sphere of activity. Don't say anything about your brother church member, your neighbor, or friend that you wouldn't want him to say about you. If this rule is practiced, it will clamp tongues down and do away with harmful gossip. Again, in all your business dealings treat and use others as you would want them to deal with you. If people the world over would do this, there would be no crooked deals.

Beware (vv. 13, 14) of the road you travel. Don't expect to reach the kingdom of God and travel the road that takes you in the opposite direction. Find out where the road is leading on which you are traveling. It may be there are many traveling on the same way, but this is no indication that they are going to the place where you want to go. In case you are traveling on the wrong road, you had better turn around; otherwise you may get so far away from the destination which you wish to reach you won't have time to get back and meet the King when He comes.

Beware (vv. 15-20). True and false prophets are not distinguished by the garbs they wear. Both work in the same field of activity and use similar methods. The true prophet uncovers man's sins, and the other covers them up by deception, although he professes to uncover. If we wish to discover the true from the false, there is a sure and tried way, their fruit (Gal. 5:22-25).

Beware (vv. 21-23). It is going to take more than lip service to get into the kingdom of God. We can make people believe here that we are doing the will of God when we are not, but such deception will not work when we come to seek entrance in the kingdom of God. The truth will be revealed then, and the secrets of every heart will be opened (1 Cor. 4:5). Deception is like a boomerang. It begins with the individual, makes a big swerve, and ends up where it began. The beginner is the finisher and the loser. Deception deceives the deceiver.—C. E. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS Drastic Methods for a Deadly Evil

Carnal people will not long submit to any drastic method. The history of prison methods and of the Eighteenth Amendment proves the truth of this statement. After all, the only effective control for any evil, whether the liquor evil or another, is repentance, baptism, and a new life in Christ Jesus. Jesus was sent into the world to save people from their sins. He works through reformation, and not restraint; through the change of heart, and not the mere curbing of lust.

If the evils of mankind could be corrected by drastic methods, then the old law, based upon the principle of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, should have been most effective; but Paul tells that this law made no one perfect (Heb. 7:19).

God gave us this severe law to teach us that righteousness could not be obtained through statutes. The law was a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; but has it filled its mission if we continue to place our confidence in acts of Congress? Salvation of man, in this life and the next, is in Christ and His gospel.

When the love of God fills the human heart, drunkenness will cease. Christ knew the proper method to use to curb sin, and He commanded us to preach the gospel to every creature. When one really repents, no law will be necessary. He will conduct himself properly at all times. Restraint and drastic methods will fail, but reformation will succeed.

—H. A. S.

GOLDEN TEXT

A man's life is likened unto a tree; it may yield a bountiful crop of good fruit, or it may not produce any fruit, or if it does it may be knotty and useless. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

A true Christian brings forth fruit unto righteousness; the drunkard brings nothing but pain and despair. It is just as impossible for a drunkard to be a Christian and bring forth righteousness as it is for a corrupt tree to bring forth good fruits. Note the end of the evil tree and compare it with the person who does the will of the Father. Which end do you consider preferable? Seek ye the kingdom.—L. A. R.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Doing Good Deeds for Jesus.

Memory Verse: "By their fruits ye shall know them."—Matt. 7:20.

How I wish I could be with every boy and girl in their class this morning! If I could, this is what I would do. I would draw a picture of a tree. On one side I'd draw a great strong branch, on the other side a tiny, thin branch. Then I'd put an apple on the tree, but I wouldn't tell you that it was an apple. I'd say, "What kind of a tree is this?" I know you'd say, "Apple tree." Next I'd ask, "How do you know?" And you'd answer, "By the apple on the tree." "What kind of an apple would you expect on the big branch?" would be my next question. "A fine big apple," you'd reply. "Now, what kind on the little branch?" "Well, one that is not so large," would come next.

Jesus used the same example to teach us a lesson. He said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Say it. He meant we can tell when boys and girls are good by the things they do.

Jesus is the tree or vine. We are the branches. Which would you like to be, the big strong branch or the tiny one? The great strong one, of course. If we are, we grow good big apples for Jesus. "Apples of Kindness, Apples of Helpfulness." You name others and put them on a tree you draw yourself.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Sunday, Jan. 21, was dedication Sunday at Los Angeles. Not the dedication of a building or a piece of ground, but of a group of people whose hearts and minds are rededicated to the service of the Lord for another year. Installation of officers for the coming year was the feature of the occasion: Bros. J. E. Hammond and E. C. Railsback continue as elders to direct our work; Bros. A. L. Brady and Wilson Calkins will serve as deacons; Sr. Geo. Rahn as treasurer; and Sr. Laura Bleasdale as secretary. The prayers of the church, not only in Los Angeles and California, but elsewhere in the nation are asked for the support of these officers for the work of the Lord.

Norman John MacLeod, Jr., initiated a birthday offering box in the Los Angeles Sunday school on his second birthday anniversary, Jan. 21. Much to the surprise of those in Sunday school he began something that ended in birthday offerings by various others: Srs. S. T. Stantial, Gertrude Johns, and Bro. and Sr. E. C. Railsback.

Norman John MacLeod.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

Our pastor, Bro. LeCrone, returned from his over the holidays vacation trip to his home in Nebraska January 13. We were glad he could have an enjoyable trip, but very glad to have him back again. The two Sundays that he was gone Bro. Denchfield came from St. Cloud and filled the pulpit. All midweek meetings during this time were postponed due to the absence of the pastor and sickness and bad roads.

This past week the midweek meetings were resumed, although the Bible study and prayer meeting Wednesday evening, Jan. 17, at W. F. Hoskins' was poorly attended. Those present did some committee work that had been appointed by the church board.

Thursday evening the church board held their quarterly meeting at the J. B. Gaspar home. A profitable and enjoyable evening was spent.

Then Friday evening, the Bereans held their social and business meeting at the Alvin Bennett home. Those present report a very pleasant evening. We are glad to notice that the Bereans are stepping more and more into the church work. They are overtaking the work of the choir under the leadership of Bro. LeCrone. Now they are planning to raise money for improvements. We hope to be able to report more later on.

The attendance at Sunday school has been good considering that this is a bad time for the children to get in from the country.

The Ladies' Aid met January 4 at the home of Mrs. William Ruhn. A large crowd was present and work on the butterfly quilt continued and another quilt partly quilted. The ladies also quilted on Wednesday, Jan. 10, at Mrs. Arthur Otto's and on Tuesday, Jan. 16, at Mrs. W. F. Hoskins'.

A number of the children have had such severe colds that they have been unable to attend either school or Sunday school while the flu is making its regular winter calls among the adults. Mrs. Earl Brossard has been confined to her bed for the last two weeks.

Mrs. Herman Ruhn, Church Clerk.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

The people of the Church of God at Ripley, Ill., are glad to report that Bro. and Sr. Lapp are now residents of our town. They now receive their mail at the Ripley post office.

The ladies of the church held a fruit shower for the pastor and his wife on the afternoon of January 25. They received several quarts of fruit and vegetables.

Our Sunday school attendance is growing. We have Bible class each Wednesday evening. The lessons are very interesting and the attendance good.

We feel we have had many blessings in the past year in our work here and pray the heavenly Father's guidance in the future.

Ednah Cooper, Secretary.

WE LOOK AHEAD

February 6, 1934

"Should I Apologize?" Norman John MacLeod. The pastor of the Los Angeles Church of God again writes of history and Israel's future.

"Christ the Power and Wisdom of God," George B. Alldridge. Regarding the power of the Christ over earth's governments.

"Is It an Ordinance?" Emma C. Railsback. Mrs. Railsback speaks of foot washing.

"Faith in God," S. J. Lindsay. A former editor of this paper points out that faith in God consists of evidence regarding His existence.

And other articles, serials, and features.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

At the close of morning service January 21 two more, a man and wife, came forward to offer themselves in service to their Lord.

A special feature is planned for the first Sunday night in February. This is to be Parents' Night. The Sunday school children are urged to ask their parents to be present, and a service especially adapted to parents is being planned.

Added interest in our devotional services on Tuesday nights is being manifested. We are thankful for this, as spiritual growth and strength are sure to follow.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

HAMMOND, LOUISIANA

The annual meeting at the Happy Woods Church, near Hammond, La., came to a close Sunday, Jan. 14, after eleven days of services. Ideal weather prevailed for most of the time. Although some of the active workers were absent, splendid cooperation was evident throughout. It was a real pleasure to meet again with the Happy Woods brethren, and to note that they are carrying on the work with as much enthusiasm as ever. They have recently improved the church building again by the addition of two Sunday school classrooms, formed by partitioning off the two ends of the rostrum. We are glad to see that still further constructive plans for the future are being considered.

On the closing day, under a warm sun, a large group of the brethren gathered at the river to witness the obedience in baptism of Peter H. Hutchinson, and his son-in-law, Nathan Durbin, both of Hammond. There is no more loyal member of the church than Sr. Hutchinson. Two of her boys were baptized two years ago, one last year, and now her happiness is complete in having her husband with her in the faith. It was an especially happy occasion for Sr. Irma Durbin, who was present to see the obedience of her husband and her father both in the same day.

The people in the Blood River district, below Springfield, were unable to attend the Happy Woods meetings, so at their request, we decided to remain over another week and hold meetings in their locality. These were held around at the homes, and excellent interest maintained throughout the entire week. The young people, especially, deserve credit for cooperating so faithfully. We feel that this effort more than justified itself, and that there is a rich field for work there. This is the first opportunity the writer has had to really get acquainted with the people and the situation there.

On another beautiful closing Sunday, Jan. 21, we gathered at the water's edge, where we assisted William H. Hutchinson in putting on Christ by baptism. His wife preceded him in the faith a year ago, and their daughter Annie two years ago. Bro. Hutchinson is a cousin to the other one at Happy Woods. His address is Hammond, Rt. 1, S. 20. Both are the fathers of large families. We thank God for the example they are setting for their other children to follow.

It was our privilege to attend sessions of both the Hammond and the Springfield Berean societies. The one was organized three years ago, and the other two years ago. We are glad to see that both have continued in such a splendid way. They have done much, we are sure, to build up the work in their respective localities.

OREGON

We were very happy to have Bro. and Sr. E. C. Railsback spend several days in Corvallis. Sr. Railsback held services at the local church, instructing us in the gospel and exhorting us to work faithfully for the Master. The attendance averaged seventeen. We wish that these dear brethren who are so earnest in their work for Jesus could have stayed longer, and we hope that they will attend our meetings in Corvallis this summer.

Sr. Ethel Ebi and daughter Virginia of Hood River, Ore., were visitors at the local church services on Sunday morning, Jan. 21. They are visiting at the homes of Sr. Minnie Kerr and Bro. Bruce Morgan, brother and sister of Sr. Ebi.

Mr. and Mrs. Hal Gross, who left December 25 for Orland, Calif., have returned to Corvallis after a four weeks' vacation. They will make their home here.

Bro. Maurice Kerr and wife of Klamath Falls; Bro. Platt Hathaway and wife and daughter Beverly, and Sr. Anna Cady, all of Corvallis, attended Sr. Railsback's meetings at the church.

We extend our sincere sympathy to Srs. Lena Hathaway, W. H. Tremaine, and Lela Taylor, whose aunt, Mrs. John Taylor, passed away recently.

Word has been received of the death last week of Mr. Thomas Anderson. Among surviving relatives are a daughter, Sr. Fred P. Darby; three nieces, Sr. T. J. Stinette, Ethel Ebi, and Minnie Kerr; and two nephews, Bros. Ralph and Bruce Morgan.

ISAAC DAVID LOBELL

Isaac David Lobell, son of Adam and Luella Lobell, was born August 9, 1921, and died on January 19, 1934. Sleep came to bring rest to the pain-wracked little body when, after a siege of malarial fever complicated by influenza, his weakened heart was unable to stand the load any longer. Because of afflictions of body and mind, his short life of twelve years was not the happiest, but because of his affectionate nature, he endeared himself to all who knew him. The parting was hard, but we know he will awake in a better day when "the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick." So we laid him tenderly to rest to await the time when the Savior shall bring him again "from the land of the enemy."

He leaves, besides his parents, eight brothers and sisters and many other relatives who will miss him keenly. May God guide and comfort them in their loss.

ELIZABETH MACHADER

Within a month's time the Cleveland church has lost two of its old and faithful members, Sr. Mary D. C. McLaughlan the first of December, and Sr. Elizabeth Machader, whose death occurred on New Year's Day. Her passing was a great shock to all, for it came without warning, from a heart attack. Only a few days before, she had been enjoying the Christmas festivities with the rest. Her smiling face and cheery greeting will be greatly missed in church and Sunday school, for she was a faithful attendant at both.

Though no longer young in years, her spirit never grew old, and she was always ready to contribute her part of fun and gayety to help cheer those around her. She was an ardent lover of her Lord and His work and delighted in the growth of the church and the spreading of the gospel. Just a short while before her death, she had enthusiastically spoken to the writer of her interest in the progress the church was making.

With sorrowing but hopeful hearts, we laid her to rest on January 3 to await the resurrection call of the great Life-giver, in whom she trusted.

ELMER CLARENCE HANSON

Elmer Clarence Hanson was born February 4, 1898, in Glendorado, Minn., where he spent his entire life. He was the only son of Mrs. Sarah Denison and the late Eric Hanson.

He had been in poor health for three years and had been confined to his bed since May 8. His ailment was diagnosed as T. B. of the type known as Addison's disease. Since last Christmas Mr. Hanson failed rapidly, and passed away Thursday morning, Jan. 18, being 35 years, 11 months, and 14 days old at the time of his death.

Besides his mother he leaves two sisters, Maybelle of Chicago and Mrs. Clara Stowe; one brother-in-law, Henry Stowe; and three uncles, Adolph, Albert, and Andrew Wager of this community; and other relatives and friends.

Pallbearers were Carl Knutson, Fred Ford, Arvil Cook, John Nelson, Ed Almlie, and Leonard Micekason, close friends.

Esther and Bernice, Oliver and Carl Wager, cousins of Mr. Hanson, sang, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," "Jesus Lover of My Soul," "It Is Well With My Soul." Mrs. Ed Erickson of Oak Park sang, "One Solemn Thought."

The family wish to thank the people of the entire country who by their cheery visits, letters, gifts, and loyal help in every way have helped to make these long months bearable to their dear son and brother.

A. E. Hoskins.

MRS. ELIZABETH ELLEN MORTON

Mrs. Morton was born in Laporte Co., Ind., February 3, 1851. She was the daughter of George and Cynthia Welker and had lived in Laporte all her life, except when visiting her daughters elsewhere. On March 17, 1868, she was united in marriage to Nelson Morton, who preceded her in death six years ago. She was a member of the Church of God of South Bend, also of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Old Glory Club of Laporte.

She is survived by six daughters and one son, as follows: Mrs. Emma Cushing, Michigan City, Ind.; Mrs. Arthur Freese, Rochester, Ind.; Mrs. Florence Scott, Portland, Ore.; Mrs. Elizabeth Pratt, Laporte, Ind.; Mrs. Adelle Hutchins, San Diego, Calif.; Mrs. Myrtle McCurdy, Erie, Pa.; and Jens H. Morton, Rolling Prairie, Ind. Two sisters and a brother also survive: Mrs. A. L. Ames, Laporte; Mrs. C. A. Pippenger, Los Angeles; and John Welker, Laporte.

The last five months of her life were spent in Michigan City with her daughter, Mrs. Cushing, where she died November 17, 1933, being eighty-two years old. Funeral services were held in Michigan City and interment in Pine Lake Cemetery, Laporte, beside her husband.

Sr. Morton lived a long and useful life. To know her was to love her. Having known her in former years, when we, too, were members of the South Bend church, we enjoyed visits with her here in southern California, where she came frequently to visit her daughter and sister.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The great purpose of the editorial and mechanical force of The Herald could not be more clearly stated than it is by Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Sprinkle, Cheyenne, Wyo., when they write that "The Restitution Herald is full of good things which inspire those who read it to press onward toward the mark of the high calling."

Responses are beginning to come in from the recent appeal of our manager for help in lifting the notes held by the bank which failed last year. We are beginning to see in the distance the possibility of devoting the entire strength of the National Bible Institution and its faithful supporters to the spiritual side of the work. The world needs the gospel and the Church of God needs a deeper sensibility of God's presence in its individual lives. To these objects let us give our special attention.

Commenting on the pleasure she has derived from the articles on the Lord's coming by F. L. Austin, Mrs. Nettie B. Crundwell, Los Angeles, Calif., says she would like a little more information concerning the "four and twenty elders" and the "four beasts," especially regarding their identity and position in the Lord's day developments. Perhaps Bro. Austin may enlarge upon these phases of his work at some future time.

An interesting outline for the study of the history of Israel is being prepared by Sr. Alta King, Cedar Falls, Iowa. The first is now ready for publication and will soon appear in our columns. Bible classes for mature students will find the series helpful.

Those who have attended the Iowa Conference in past years will be interested in learning that Mr. Carl Bean, son of Mrs. J. M. Kiger of Marengo, Iowa, is now playing in the Frankie Masters Orchestra of Chicago. Mr. Bean will be remembered for the music he contributed to the Berean Day programs in years gone by.

Sr. Ruth H. Kinsey of Arkansas says that she finds much consolation in The Restitution Herald which she greatly needs since the tragic loss of her baby by fire last November. "If possible, the paper is getting better and better all the time," she continues. "My entire family enjoys it. It seems the writers know what each of us needs."

A recent letter from Bro. J. W. Cooper, Ripley, Ill., informs us that Sr. Cooper has again been undergoing a prolonged period of illness. Sr. Cooper is a faithful member of the church in that place, and we pray that she may soon be restored to her place in the congregation.

THY KINGDOM COME

How often is the petition, "Thy kingdom come," repeated by human lips in many languages, yet how few understand what this petition really means. It does not mean the church, nor can it possibly mean the present dispensation, or the conversion of the world by the preaching of the gospel. It does not mean a gradual betterment of the present age; nor does it mean a social or a spiritual kingdom. The Jewish disciples to whom this prayer was given knew nothing of a spiritual kingdom, but they all knew that Jehovah had promised to Israel a literal kingdom of power and glory. When they prayed, "Thy kingdom come," they knew they were praying for that promised kingdom which must come before there can be righteousness and peace on the earth. The meaning of this petition has not been changed since that time. It still means the same thing. That able exegete, Adolph Saphir, wrote many years ago on the true meaning of this petition, which will help some to get the right conception:

"The petition, 'Thy kingdom come,' refers primarily and directly to the Messianic kingdom on earth, of which all Scripture testifies. . . . The King of this kingdom is the Lord Jesus, the Son of David; the subjects of it are Israel and the nations—the chosen people fulfilling the mission which, according to the election of God, is assigned unto them, of being the medium of blessing unto all the nations of the earth; the center of the kingdom is Jerusalem, and the means of its establishment is the coming and the visible appearing of the Savior Jesus Christ. When we pray, 'Thy kingdom come,' our true meaning is Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly! . . . No doctrine, not even the fundamental doctrine of justification by faith, has assigned to it in the inspired Word so large a place as the doctrine of the second coming of Christ and His kingdom. It is not confined to a few isolated passages, it is not the subject of one or two books of Scripture, but it pervades the whole Bible. When we are asked, Where is it spoken of? We are tempted to reply, Ask rather, where is it not spoken of? . . .

"It is true that much obscurity attaches to prophecy as regards detail and the chronological sequence of events. It is also conceded that it is very difficult, and sometimes almost impossible, to conceive the manner in which predicted events will be brought about, and that we can only rest by faith in the wisdom and power of God, who will surely fulfill His Word, and to whom all things are possible. But that the general outline of prophecy is vague and indistinct must be emphatically denied. The Scripture gives forth no uncertain sound as to the great question, Is Christ to come before or after the kingdom of righteousness and peace? No truth is more fully and more clearly taught in Scripture than this—that the promises given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, renewed to David and confirmed by the prophets, and finally by the Lord Jesus Himself, will yet be fulfilled on earth; that Israel is not merely a type of the church, but has a future before it, in which it will have a central position on earth; and that before the final consummation there will be a glorious kingdom ushered in by the coming of Christ."

The intelligent believer will pray, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." For we know that before His kingdom is established by the visible and glorious appearing of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, His saints will be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. Only after this coming for His saints can the kingdom come for the earth.

OUR ONLY TRUE BIBLE

By J. G. Haupt

OUR REAL Bible consists chiefly of that part of the Old Testament written by inspired Hebrews. The Old Testament period had Pharisees and Sadducees. These two sects acted as continual watchers. From the beginning of Genesis to the end of Malachi there is no question as to the correctness of the text. Bound with the Old Testament books some editions add the Old Testament Apocrypha, historical, literary, and sometimes fabulous. These additions were not written by the prophets or other Old Testament writers. Where they agree with the Bible expressions elsewhere, belief in them can do no harm. Where they do not agree, the Bible scholar cannot accept them as trustworthy. The Old Testament seems to have had no other additions and depends upon true translation to make it a subject of faith.

The true New Testament was all written in the uncial or old style Greek. The New Testament evidently had a fraudulent person write some false additions to Matthew and the first epistle of John. This was done to the Greek text about the year 1400 A. D. Close students of the truth conclude that Matthew had added to it in the twenty-eighth chapter the participial phrase, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The fifth chapter of First John has similar additions, Matthew and John alike having served to influence numerous readers and preachers to dire falsehoods.

One Old Testament critic makes much ado over the writings of Moses. This seems entirely without valid reason. The inspired writings of Moses covered many years. A great variety of topics were treated. Some words appearing in one book are not found in another. This is perfectly natural. We have more than a dozen histories of the United States. No two of these use the same language. Every one of them has a variety of expressions on its many pages.

The only true Bible is the Hebrew of the Old Testament and the Greek of the New. No translation nor version can be called a portion of the true Bible. Without a capable preacher or other helpful works the most sincere reader must often be at a loss. God's church and its preachers may be regarded as true guides.

SHOULD I APOLOGIZE?

By Norman John MacLeod

WHEN the ancient Roman Empire declined to its disastrous end in the barbarian invasions, the Christians of the day looked on with mixed feelings. Surely now had at last come the period of trouble which should precede the coming of our Lord from heaven. They looked upon themselves as the last remnant of a high civilization that was about to disappear; the last vestiges of a once lofty idealized religious culture were being swept away; the barbarian hordes who swarmed over the border destroying all before them were certainly the multitudes of the Antichrist. They went to their deaths rejoicing that they were the last martyrs of a lost cause. Soon would Christ come and set all these aright. But they died and the times changed. "New faces, other minds" took charge and carried that people to heights undreamed of by the ancient Romans.

The new civilization developed its new aristocracy of brains and culture and Christianity. New overlords looked upon themselves as the people; became wealthy because of the commercial revolution started by Columbus' famous voyage of discovery to the New World; and again their culture became stagnant. The French Revolution came to upset all that was sacred in the lives of the elite. The priestly and religious rulers who went to their deaths on the guillotine thought that they were the martyrs in the cause of right. They thought that they were the last righteous people that should live before the coming of the great storm that should usher in the age of everlasting righteousness. They went to the guillotine with joy in their hearts. They smiled as they awaited the awful death by execution. They thought of the saying of old Louis XV when he danced on the edge of the thin ice of terrorism when he defied the mobs of Paris with grapeshot and said: "After us, the deluge." They felt that his prediction was surely the truth. But the French Revolution did its work of changing the world into an industrial democracy, and then passed on its banner to a new order. The violence of the reign of terror was a passing episode in a great drama.

In reviewing my work for the last two years in the pulpit I was quite surprised to find that the majority of the sermons that I had preached (many of which were published in The Restitution Herald) were on the subject of the Return and Restoration of Israel. So predominant was this subject that I wonder if I should not change. Should I apologize?—N. J. M.

Even so could we trace almost innumerable cases in the history of mankind. The Russian Revolution with its machine as a missile of destruction made the aristocracy of the Czar feel that they were the Christian martyrs of a latter day that were suffering before the godless Russian Bolsheviks. Even so did all the people feel who were representing civilizations which had grown stale and were being in necessity of rejuvenation by new blood. With this thought in mind we turn to a page from history.

Half buried beneath the desert sands that surrounded the Great Sphynx in Egypt was found a document which told a similar tale. That document dated from about 2200 B. C. An ancient Egyptian aristocrat wrote his impressions of a social revolution that was taking place in his day: the rich were becoming poor; the poor were seizing the property of their wealthy neighbors; violence was rife in the land; no one was safe on the highways; homes were being pillaged by the upstart labor unionists (yes, they had them in those days!); in other words a period of terror was present in the land of kindly people which made that ancient scribe feel much like a Republican in December, 1932 A. D. Almost could his notes have been written at so late a date had other names appeared in them. But they told of a time so remote from our own that the thing seems almost uncanny in its modernness. He even went so far as to complain of the Hebrews and how they were taking money from his people and thus causing financial stress in the fair land of Egypt. Such is the history of mankind. Ever changing; yet ever the same! !

A WARRIOR'S PRAYER

I pray Thee, Lord, that when it comes to me
To say if I will follow Truth and Thee,
Or choose instead to win as better worth
My pains, some cloying recompense of earth—

Grant me, great Father, from a hard-fought field,
Forespent and bruised, upon a battered shield,
Home to obscure endurance to be borne
Rather than live my own mean gains to scorn.

Mean ends to win and therewith be content—
Save me from that! Direct Thou the event
As suits Thy will: where'er the prizes go,
Grant me the struggle, that my soul may grow.

JUSTICE OF CONDITIONALISM

“CONDITIONALISM,” that is, the belief that eternal life is not inherent in each individual, and that it can be obtained only at the coming of Christ by those who have believed and obeyed the gospel, is but the recognition of God's intrinsic right to determine on any basis the destiny of all created things. “He hath made us, and not we ourselves,” and consequently it is just and right that He should make the continuation or renewal of life contingent upon such conditions as He may see fit to impose. Man's conception of justice does not of necessity enter into the divine thought of justice. It is impossible for us to compare God's sense of justice with that of man. Whatever God does is just. An act that is altogether just when performed by God may be absolutely unjust when practiced by man.

Conditionalism teaches that certain ones, a limited number who believe the gospel and live in harmony with its requirements, shall obtain salvation, eternal life, at the resurrection of the dead. Of necessity it also includes the thought that a much larger group of people, those who wilfully reject the redemption provided in Jesus Christ, shall suffer the condemnation of God, which involves the loss of life, for “the wages of sin is death.”

God has a mighty work to accomplish, a work that covers as to time eternity itself, and as to extent the entire universe. To complete or to maintain that work He has created angels and men, the earth, the heavens and the “fulness thereof.” Each created thing must contribute its part to the carrying out of the heavenly design.

Of all earthly creatures man alone was given “dominion” over the Creator's works. To qualify him for his task of ruling the world for God, he was given intellectual powers that exceed those possessed by any other creature. The faculty of reason involves the right of self-determination and choice. Man was made a responsible individual before God. He has the power to decide many matters for himself. This power or right of judgment makes it possible for man to direct in a great measure his own development, and it is apparently on the basis of that self-development that God judges him.

Fitness and willingness to render the service required by Jehovah are the conditions upon which divine selection rests. If one presents, that is, gives freely and willingly by his own desire, his body with all its forces and powers to God as “a living sacrifice,” his service is acceptable to the Father, and he is chosen to be one of acknowledged and authorized agents of the Lord for the carrying on of the divine purposes.

“Ye are my friends,” said Jesus, “if ye do whatsoever I command you.” That is conditionalism defined by our Lord. Like Moses, the friend of Jesus chooses by his own desire “rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.”—Heb. 11:25. He becomes a voluntary coworker with the Father. He chooses, he elects, he determines for himself what course of action he will follow. And because of the wisdom of his choice and because of the faithful manner in which he carries out his purpose to serve God, the fruitage of his life is “holiness, and the end everlasting life.”

On the other hand one may choose “to enjoy the pleasures of sin” rather than “to suffer affliction with the people of God.” Should such a decision be made, the loss encountered would surely be due to the individual making it rather than to God. Paul made this very plain to the Jews of Antioch in Pisidia when they rejected his message. “It was necessary,” he said, “that the word of God should first have been spoken of you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles.”—Acts 13:46. In rejecting the gospel they had judged themselves unworthy, and for the loss suffered they were alone responsible.

Christ the Power and Wisdom of God

By George B. Alldridge

"But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God."

READING between the lines of Bro. Austin's interesting and instructive articles, "Papers on the Lord's Coming," I glean this thought: Christ will perform stupendous miracles of a universal character before He reveals Himself in power and great glory to the nations of the world.

We forget and fail to recognize the momentous events now transpiring in every country upon the face of the earth, "from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strands." Wireless telegraphy, the telephone, aeroplanes, radium, antiseptics, antitoxins, spectrum analysis, and Roentgen rays, the automobiles, electric machinery of all descriptions and power, massive dams erected so as to increase vast areas and thus by irrigation bring thousands of acres under cultivation which a few years ago were vast sandy wastes. Wherein lies the secret for all this? Paul says in Romans 1:4, "And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."

Paul is only reiterating the words of Jesus as translated by Moffatt. "Then Jesus came forward to them and said, Full authority has been given to me in heaven and on earth; go and make disciples of all nations."—Matthew 28:19.

I believe with all my heart God's Word. "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel, and his redeemer the Lord of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God. . . . Fear ye not, neither be afraid: have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it? ye are even my witnesses. Is there a God beside me? yea, there is no God; I know not any."—Isa. 44:6-8.

Christendom, claiming to be His friends, says, "There is the one you cast out of heaven to harass and lead us into sin and to become the god of this world."

God says there is none, I know not any.

Now Jesus claims God has, since His resurrection, invested Him with all power in heaven and in earth. Do you believe that? I do; hence, to me Bro. Austin's papers are very opportune, as they explain to me rationally why, during the past fifty years, such wonderful changes and discoveries have been made.

When I speak to some people about the Lord's coming they treat it with ridicule, and if I suggest that maybe He is even now beginning to prepare the earth for the establishment of the kingdom of God I am met with this rebuttal, "I do not see any evidence of the resurrection of the dead, and those who are firm believers of this doctrine do not seem to be passing off very fast."

Well, as I read my Bible, I cannot find any authority for the belief that the world at large will be cognizant of the resurrection of the dead sleeping in Christ or of the change of the living. The point I wish to make is that it took 430 years for God to work out His plans in organizing the family of Israel until we read, "And it came to pass the selfsame day, that the Lord did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their armies."

Let me quote H. G. Wells, "Some day it may begin to dawn upon men why these things are so, and then our race will get to business. But I do not believe that atomic energy is into human affairs until such names as Einstein, Curie, and Soddy and so forth, seem as remote and past as do the names of Archimedes and Hero today. Hero, as the reader will remember, described a turbine steam engine nineteen centuries before it became of any utility. The primary properties of frictional electricity were on record in the time of Aristotle. The fruit of those curious flowers of knowledge took a score of centuries to ripen."

Listen to what Prof. Soddy, speaking of radio-activity, says: "It seems incredible, but nevertheless it is true that science up to the close of the nineteenth century had no suspicion even of the existence of the original sources of natural energy. The vista which has been opened up by these new discoveries (of the radio-active properties of some substances) admittedly is without parallel in the whole history of science."

It is not necessary for Christ to be actually present in person, upon this earth, to direct the preliminary stages of His establishment of the kingdom of God. All power is given unto Him in heaven and earth. In writing to John by His angel He said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

If Christ is sitting with God upon His throne, and all power in heaven is invested in Him, then Christ, like His

Shine Just Where You Are

Don't waste your time in longing
For bright, impossible things;
Don't sit supinely yearning
For the swiftness of angel wings;
Don't spurn to be a rushlight,
Because you are not a star;
But brighten some bit of darkness
By shining just where you are.

There is need of the tiniest candle
As well as the garish sun;
The humblest deed is ennobled
When it is worthily done;
You may never be called to brighten
The darkened regions afar:
So fill for the day your mission
By shining just where you are.

Just where you are, my brother,
Just where God bids you stand,
Though down in the deepest shadow,
Instead of the sunlit land,
You may carry a brightness with you
That no gloom nor darkness can mar,
For the light of a Christlike spirit
Will be shining wherever you are.
—Selected.

Father, can manipulate the forces of nature and direct the affairs of the nations and their governments as His Father did before His resurrection. Do you believe what Daniel said? I do. "And he changeth the times and the seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings; he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding."

Do you think the Psalmist understood what he wrote (Psalm 75:6, 7)? "For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south. But God is the judge: he putteth down one, and setteth up another."

I wish I had space to quote these texts, but look up 2 Chronicles 36:22, 23 and Isaiah 45:1-5. God actually calls Cyrus His anointed. Very well, if God in the past, prior to raising His own anointed Son from the dead, did all these things without being seen by the sons of men, surely Christ can do likewise.

How long think you it will take to fulfill this promise? "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind."—Isa. 65:17.

Do you think for one moment after looking over a map of the world and attempting to tabulate the diversities of languages and governments existing today the change will be instantaneous? Then recall the condition of the world when our first President died—1799. Again, everybody who reads knows of the terrible condition of the slums in our cities. During the last decade the civilized Governments have begun to awaken to the needs of the poor and the improvement of their environments.

Here is another scripture that seems to be upon the eve of fulfillment: "Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it."—Isa. 28:17, 18.

One of, if not the greatest living writers, H. G. Wells, today is by his writings opening men's minds to see the truth. He writes, "For a third of a century since his col-

Is It an Ordinance?

By Emma C. Railsback

IT IS thought by some that the events recorded in John 13:1-16 took place in Bethany at the home of Simon the leper some time before the ordinance of the communion was instituted by our Savior in the upper room in Jerusalem, that a careful examination of Matthew 26 and Mark 14 will prove this to be true, and that the supper mentioned by John in 13:2 was not the Lord's Supper or communion. Whether this be true or not it is quite evident from Luke 22:24-27 that there had been strife among the apostles as to who should be greatest in the kingdom, and the Savior saw great need of a lesson on service to those whom He was about to leave.

Had He meant the example He gave to them should be observed as a church ordinance, there would surely be an account of its observance in the book of Acts and in the epistles of the apostles. Instead we find it mentioned but once in any succeeding writings, and that where it is classed with good works of widows, such as "bringing up children and entertaining strangers." In scriptural times it was practiced as an act of hospitality, as recorded in Genesis 18:4, and from 1 Samuel 25:41 we gather that it was the duty of servants to perform this service for a guest; and the Savior made use of the custom to give the striving apostles a much needed lesson in service and humility.

Certainly no true follower of the meek and lowly Jesus would refuse to observe the commandment if he understood that He had given it to be observed as a church ordinance until He came again. It is a question of rightly dividing the Word, of "taking from or adding to" the things delivered to us by the apostles.

The Apostle Paul was very explicit in delivering the ordinances of baptism in Romans 6 and of the communion in 1 Corinthians 11:23-28, and he stated plainly in Acts 20:27 that he had not shunned to declare all the counsel of God; but never a hint of how feet-washing should be observed. He does, however, in his instructions to Timothy (5:10 of first epistle), concerning destitute widows who might be considered worthy of support by the church, include it in a list of good works, such as bringing up children and lodging strangers.

The sect of the Pharisees practiced many types of moral purity, but they were often rebuked by the Savior for practicing these external symbols of purity, while the heart was far from clean. As we look about among our own brethren and see the evidences of the lack of the spirit of Christ of one group refusing to cooperate or fellowship another group, and remember the words of the Apostle, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his," we wonder if we, too, have not come to be pharisaical in our practices.

Dear ones, let us look inward, examine ourselves, and try not to be so critical of our brethren. Let us practice love and good will, be more kindly and patient toward those who cannot see as we do. The Savior is coming soon. Will He find us ready?

Jehovah's Covenant With Abraham

THIS covenant of the Almighty made so long ago with Abraham, "the father of the faithful," still remains as the Magna Charta of all who are of the faith of Abraham. Ages and dispensations have come and gone; peoples of all races, nations, and languages, who have been scripturally informed, have poised their hopes upon it. Shall they be disappointed? As the Almighty liveth and abideth faithful forever, we answer, No! Truth never disappoints those who lean upon their God, and truth is never disappointed. We are living in an hour so tragic in human destiny that civilization seems to be at an utter end. The very props and foundations of order shake and totter to go down in crash, in catastrophe and chaos. But God's covenant abides. We are not attempting the impossible, nor are we trying to play a tune on a fiddle with one string. We are not riding an old horse to death. The veracity of the Almighty is at stake in the matter. It is as certain of realization as the existence of the Deity. What is more, it is about to speak in all its beauty of life and incorruptible inheritance in the oncoming eternal order.

"Creation groans and travails with danger,
The wise see its peril, and look for the end;
The bride is in exile, a pilgrim and stranger,
Expecting the Bridegroom will soon her defend.
She longs to lay by her sad garments of mourning,
And put on the robe which her Lover will bring;
To strike the keynote of the loud, choral anthem,
At the coronation of Jesus, her King."

Those patriarchs in yonder Machpelah will shortly awaken from their long slumbers to die no more. Oh, glory be to the name of our God! We are dealing with some of the "deep" things of the unfolding and revealing of the mind and purpose of the Almighty. Simple? Plain? Yes, but they are eternal verities. The very first principle to be noted in this covenant is land, not heaven. This sacred land covenant cannot be spiritualized away from its positive material aspect any more than the Constitution of the United States of America. It cannot be transferred to any such a realm as that above the starry skies. No, it must have its intended location below: "under the whole heaven" (Dan. 7:27). It is impossible to change the divine arrangement and please God. There are no bodiless spooks in this transaction. Nothing short of the acquisition of real estate will meet the demands of the covenant made with Abraham and his heirs.

Deeper aspects of this covenant spread themselves out before the devout mind in the investigation. Another phase of the great transaction is seen in the words: "And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered."

Those words are repeated, and to them is added another impossible thing—the numbering of the "stars"; and, then, still another impossibility: the counting of the "sands" of the seashore (Gen. 22:15-18). Numberless as the stars of the firmament. Think of it! Ponder it well! Face the issues as God would have you do it. All this was spoken when as yet Abraham had no posterity. Isaac, the heir with him of the same promise, was not yet born, and a miracle in the realm of paternity had to be performed, for Sarah was past the period of motherhood. A small beginning, surely, and yet it was here that Abraham received the change of name from "Abram," the "exalted father," to "Abraham," the "father of nations," the sire of a "multitude." "Numberless as the stars." The best that our modern astronomers can do as they are equipped with their scientific appliances for the reading of the heavens is to count the stars by hundreds of millions. One versed in astronomy has placed the number of the stars as 1,650,000,000. Be that as it may, we know that no mathematical formula can number the spiritual "seed" of Abraham. But God can do it. Not a name will be missed in the "Book of life" when it is opened at the coming of the Lord (the "Father" of the immortal family, Isaiah 9:6, 7). Not a single member of that new spiritual race who has "filed" his claim to the Abrahamic estate will be forgotten when the morning breaks in all its foretold, and untold, glory. Praise God!

My brother, sister, have you recorded your name as a candidate for this heritage of life and inheritance? If not, why not? The chief estate office is in heaven, where Jesus is with the Father as our Advocate, Savior, and coming King. There is a way to the throne room of sovereign grace. It is by Christ Jesus the Lord (Heb. 11:6; John 14:6). While we affirm that the chief proprietor and owner of the landed estate (Christ) is in heaven functioning in the priestly office, nevertheless, the agents are all about us interested in the business of gathering out a people for the new order, now due.

The covenant was restated to Isaac, and to Jacob his firstborn son. This act of restatement, as we may please to call it, gives additional weight to the divine contract. It is just a wholesome repetition. But that is not all. It is confirmed unto Gentile believers: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." Christ is the seed, and through Him, and by Him alone, can we become joint heirs in the inheritance. All the earth will be "blessed with faithful Abraham." Then what? "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." That is good news for the Gentile peoples of every nation and language.

There are yet deeper depths and wider ranges we must explore before we can visualize the fullest extent of the sublime import of this covenant. This gracious enactment was laid in the Almighty Himself. The following words from the Epistle to the Hebrews reveal the fact of ratification involving no less authority than the Deity together with all that It implies: "For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee."

What need we more? There is more; let us hearken to the voice of inspiration speaking: "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."—Samuel Forsby in Messiah's Advocate.

Faith in God

By S. J. Lindsay

"But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11:6.

IT WOULD be a difficult thing to come unto one of whom we have no knowledge. Having knowledge, it is necessary to have faith, else there would be no object in coming to him. This thought is well set forth by Paul when he says, "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?"—Romans 10:13-14.

In other words, we must have the evidence of God. Faith, then, requires evidence.

Is there an all-wise God? What evidence have we? We want to know God and we want to come to Him, but we must first know that He is and that He is a rewarder of them that seek Him if we are to come to Him and believe in Him. The first part of Hebrews 11 tells us that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

The evidences are of two kinds, we believe. First, the evidence of our reason, and second, the evidence of revelation and experience.

No thinking mind can observe the powers that exist without concluding that all these must have their origin in a great central power. The power that sends the lightning crashing to earth; the power that moves continents in the earthquake; the power that moves the destructive winds; the power which in its season operates to cause all earth to spring forth with life; all these must have their origin in a great central head which has the power to order them and cause them to cease. The earth is full of power manifestations over which we puny human creatures have no control. We must acknowledge these to be greater than we are. Not only do these powers exist, but we know, too, that they are controlled by fixed laws. These laws show that they are backed up by an intelligence which ours cannot measure.

The light of our intelligence compares with that great intelligence as the candle with the sun.

God has revealed Himself to us in no uncertain way. The fact that He has revealed Himself by the power of prophecy should be sufficient to the thinking man. He Himself points out this fact as evidence of His being. In Isaiah 42:9 we read: "Behold, the former things have come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them." Again we read the Master's language in John 13:18, 19: "I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen: but that the scripture may be fulfilled, He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me. Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he."

No one with human intelligence can with any certainty reveal future events. This belongs only to that power that is superhuman. God is revealed to us by prophecy. Prophecy fulfilled to the very letter is our evidence that there is a God.

Another strong evidence is that we receive by experience. We know that the way of the flesh is not the way of God. We know, too, that to follow the way of the flesh brings us all sorts of suffering and destruction. God points this out to us. He says: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Isa. 55:8, 9.

Knowing that His ways are best, we follow after. Experience teaches us that His ways are best and we profit thereby. The very fact that love and hate, right and wrong, joy and gloom are in the world, is evidence that there is a great Judge who discerns between these, warning us to flee from the evil of the one and to cling to the benefits of the other.—Selected.

Radio in Prophecy

AS WE have been taking a survey of the facts and mysteries of radio, the question that naturally assumes a front seat consideration is, What is the meaning of all this? As has been stated, the organized elements whereby faces, scenes, psychological powers, and voices are transmitted through the air with the speed of light were as fixed and certain in the days of Abraham as they are now. The great Creator has done no new thing for us in these last days. There was in the divine mind some far reaching purpose, but it was allowed to sleep through the centuries, awaiting this hour. The plan of human redemption was in the divine program from the foundation of the world, and at the earliest possible moment of race consciousness the plan was put into operation. Men were taught to find God by ceremonies and sacrificial offerings, leading up to the supreme offering of Calvary.

The race needed redemption from the beginning, but did not need radio; it waited for the hour of need. Now the why and the what of it all should concern thoughtful students of God's Word. With many, it seems to be just another novelty—a toy for our amusement. A fine alibi to remain home from church services on Sunday, with the excuse: "We had a fine sermon on the air today." Yes, they have sermons, but they have vaudeville skits, jazz orchestras, and comic operas—Amos an' Andy with the rest. No, something far more important was in the mind of God when He adjusted the elements, making possible this greatest of all discoveries. It has not been invented, but just now uncovered. America was here before Columbus landed on San Salvador and found a new continent. We have moved in upon a new continent of the air.

We repeat—what does it all mean? We shall not be dogmatic in our theories as to the exact thought in the Creator's mind, but we are going to suggest some plausible propositions, placing the burden upon those who oppose to show why and how it could not be so. We should like to have some one come forward and tell us what God had in mind, if not some of the things we shall offer. Tell us how radio powers are to be utilized for the coming generations. Will it be a plaything for them? Is God only interested in our amusement, and fixing things for big business and high-powered commercialism? But all we have said and will say is to open up some windows, as it were, looking out upon a glorious landscape, which may be only a child of the imagination; but the conception, as a possibility, is not without foundation and reason.

There has been no little ridicule heaped upon those who believe in the personal, bodily appearing of Christ to the world and of His reign on earth with His saints—"They lived and reigned with him a thousand years." They tell us it materializes spiritual things. The critics of His physical birth can bring up the same argument. Why not spiritualize this old story of the Child in the manger? They tell us that His bodily appearing is debasing and unscriptural. So say they of His virgin birth. What we contend for is all stated in unmistakable language and must be believed or eliminated. "Know ye not that the righteous shall inherit the earth?" "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." "His feet shall stand . . . on the mount of Olives." "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds with power and great glory." "They shall sit with me on my throne." But, "I do not believe it," says the critic. Very well; but he must tell us why and how these words are not true. We are not disposed to eliminate or wrest the Scriptures.

The Bible teaches beyond a doubt, if we are to believe its plain statements, that this world, now so worn and bleeding and bruised by sin—cursed by every devouring thing—will see Christ return, bind Satan, and establish His rulership on earth. Paul speaks of the whole creation groaning, waiting for the restitution of all things. The prophetic books are filled with visions of a glorious day coming, when the desert will be turned into a garden; parched areas will be redeemed by springs of water; animal life shall be tamed and lose its cruelty; and "sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Time and again the New Testament speaks of "in that day," "his day," "the day of the Lord," and "his coming." What can all these statements mean, but exactly what they say? Our Lord has had no day yet; while on earth, He was denied, condemned, and finally executed as a criminal. When and where has His voice been heard and heeded in the big doings on earth? We have written books about Him, painted masterpieces of scenes in His life, written poetry and music about Him, and sung His praise; but, with rare exceptions, that ended it all. His day has not yet come; but it will come.

Civilization has marched along the pathway of war and tragedy from the dawn; the race has suffered and groaned with poverty and disease. But for a small minority, humanity has dragged its toil-worn steps with endless struggle to get daily food, to say nothing about luxuries and pleasures. The mill continues to grind finer, and the world tragedy continues to grow more bitter and widespread. The whole scheme of the universe is a gigantic delusion if what has been done and is doing should complete the picture until the curtain falls for the last judgment. We do not think so, and neither did the holy prophets and apostles think so; but shining out from almost every page of Holy Writ there are prophetic foregleams of a coming day of universal rejoicing, the prototype of which was the Jewish year of jubilee. Thank God for the "blessed hope of his glorious appearing," when the "mists have rolled in splendor."

Then what will Jesus do? What will be His program—with an apology for this overworked term? What will happen, and how will He proceed? He is going to judge this world in righteousness—not as the judge at a court, when the testimony is given, and a verdict is rendered; but He will judge as did the judges of old who judged Israel, in the capacity of administrator and executor of everything pertaining to life. He will clear the deck by ridding the earth of Satan and his cohorts. The government will be on His shoulders, and His rule will be forever. He is the stone cut from the mountain without hands, which filled all the earth. He is the Ancient of days coming to His own, setting up a kingdom that shall never end. John, looking through his prophetic telescope, saw a marvelous sight: “The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and his Christ.” All the kingdoms—fifty or more—to be His one kingdom.—C. F. Wimberly in The Pentecostal Herald.

THE more we love, the better we are, and the greater our friendships are, the dearer we are to God.—Jeremy Taylor.

CHRIST THE POWER AND WISDOM OF GOD

lege days the writer has watched this flow of necromancy, telepathic experiment, and pseudo-scientific inquiry; for some years he was a member of the English Society for Psychical Research; he has observed the exploits of clairvoyants, read occult books so far as such books are readable, heard the late W. T. Stead relate the adventures of his double, watched the careers of Sir Conan Doyle and Sir Oliver Lodge, endured the marvelous histories of many inferior story tellers. And his growing conviction is that in this vast cloud of witnesses, in this fog of unprogressive assertions, there is no grain of any substantial reality, that there is nothing in it at all beyond deliberate fraud, unconscious fraud, self-deception, the will to believe marvels, the craving to be marvelous, the suggestibility of unguarded minds, tricks of divided personalities, uncritical treatment of coincidences and resemblances, the obstinacy of men committed to a view, very ancient traditions about ghosts and magic, received as fables and then strengthening to belief, reinforcing legends from the East, hallucinations fostered and welcomed, and last, but not least, the moral decay and imaginative excesses due to the use of drugs.”

Last evening my mind was deeply impressed with the words of Jesus, “Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand.”—Matt. 12:25.

Last evening the Communists were commemorating the tenth anniversary of the death of Viadimir Dgitsh Lenin, founder of the Soviet Government of Russia. Their principal speaker declared, “The road of Roosevelt is the road to Fascism, which is only a worse form of capitalism, and to an inevitable war. It is plain to see that Roosevelt is even now preparing for war by mobilizing the industries, establishing C. C. C. camps, and building up the country's strength. War is inevitable unless the workers mobilize and strike at the right moment.”

On the other hand, the Communists' most formidable enemy—Charles E. Coughlin—upheld the President's policy both financially and industrially, declaring it was either “Roosevelt or ruin.”

How real Jesus' words came to me, “Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword.”—Matt. 10:34. I amend Father Coughlin's declaration by saying, “Christ and prosperity.”

SHOULD I APOLOGIZE?

the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.” What are we to think? How are we to know we are right? How are we to tell when things have come to the right place in history to look for the promise of Christ's coming to be fulfilled? Are we merely illusioned as was that ancient Egyptian scribe who thought that all the good people were to die with him? Are we adding another chapter to the story of disappointed martyrs who died with joy in their hearts that the end was near at hand? Or can we know?

God has given us a guidepost that tells us where we are in the stream of time, and that is Israel. Should I, therefore, apologize for speaking of that downtrodden people and the things that they are doing? Should I apologize for taking time to speak and space to write of the movements that are observable among them? Should I not rather apologize for holding back on this great truth? Should I not rather apologize for failing to stress it enough? It involves in its intricacies of thought some of the most sacred truths that dwell in the Christian's breast. But let us notice another feature that will make our point clearer.

Many people speak in the same breath of the return or regathering of Israel with that of the restoration of Israel. They are not the same thing; they are related, but still entirely distinct. The return and regathering of Israel in their own land only a blind man could deny. Our fathers looked forward with hope to see that day: we see it an accomplished fact. Our fathers knew that God would do what He had promised: we see the fact as history. Just how much has taken place we cannot tell from this distant point: by some reports all is in readiness for our Lord's return; by other reports much remains to be done. But no matter what is done or what remains to be done: the Jews are there! And what is more important, they are there to stay if we can read the other signs correctly.

On that momentous day when Jesus and His disciples went out on the Mount of Olives before His ascension, the most natural question came: “Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Is this the time, Lord, for the "restoration" of Israel? Israel has been regathered, is the restoration to take place? A noncommittal answer such as Jesus often gave was their only consolation before He was taken from them. No! The time had not come!

III

This brings us to the question: what was taken away that should be restored? To the last reigning prince of the house of Judah came the Prophet Ezekiel to say: "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."—Ezek. 21:25-27. To what did Ezekiel refer by "it"? Was it the people of Israel that should be no more until "he come whose right it is"? No, they are with us even yet! Was it the nation of Israel? No, that nation was reorganized at least in a shadowy way under the rule of the priests who returned from Persia. No, rather was it the royal house that was overturned, not to be restored until He comes whose right it is. No such event by any stretch of the imagination has ever happened. When the Jews returned from Babylon their false prophets made them believe that that return was false to such an extent that the Jews of lordly wealth remained behind in Babylon where they had made many a lucrative connection. Only a miserable remnant returned under the various leaders that marched out across the desert. Still do we look forward to that time when the "restoration" of Israel shall take place. That will be when He comes whose right it is. That will take place when our Lord returns from heaven and no sooner. That will be the great event toward which we are all looking. And it will come when other things are ready for His appearing.

The signs about us in the world of stress, of strife, of approaching war clouds can when connected with this great fact of prophecy and history make us know that we are not living through another period of disillusionment. We are living in a time that should make us ponder our lives and our past deeds as we pass the threshold of the new year. We are one step nearer to the "restoration" of the great King who shall rule in righteousness when the times of refreshing come from the presence of the Lord. We should go forth with the new year resolved to live as we never have lived before. We should rededicate our lives to His work, to His love, to His life.

Should I apologize for speaking of the return of Israel? No, for it is the great key subject to unlock the great truths of God's gospel. It is the open sesame to the treasure-house of the great age yet to come. It is the magic clew that gives us the golden path upon which to tread the paths of glory that shall lead to the everlasting kingdom of God on earth with all its attendant blessings. May we all follow toward that goal and reach the situation of that glorious day in full measure of time, and a place at the "restoration of Israel."

THE VISION OF THE FUTURE

GOD IN His Holy Word has given to His people a glorious vision concerning the future. Often Christians who hold to God's Word and fully believe in the divine predictions concerning this present age and its end in apostasy and judgment receive the same compliment which the King of Israel paid to Micaiah. (See 1 Kings 22:8.) They call us who believe the witness of the Spirit of God concerning this age and what will follow "pessimists." The believer in the revelation of God is not a pessimist, one who only looks upon the dark side. The Word of God speaks of the present age as "a dark place." It holds out no hope that the deplorable conditions into which sin has plunged this earth can ever be remedied by man, by his schemes, inventions, or human progress. Again and again the seemingly bright hopes of this age have been marred and shattered. At present the outlook of the world among the civilized nations is very, very dark. It is far worse in heathen lands. The world has its grave fears, and evil forebodings are often expressed by great statesmen.

But a Christian who knows and believes in the Word of God has the vision of a glorious future for this earth. He knows what God has promised to do and what He will do. The social future, the political and the physical future of this earth are revealed in the Bible. It is a future of glory. This future centers in "that Man," whom God has raised from the dead, and who is now at His own right hand. Our Lord Jesus Christ will be King; He will reign in righteousness; He will right all wrong; He will still the angry waves of sin and bring His glorious peace to this earth. His omnipotent power will even in due time deliver groaning creation from the curse and hush its groans. It is this vision of the future our God wants us to see. It is this vision which is the inspiration and power for the present time. When evils multiply, when suffering increases, when unrighteousness and all its attending miseries face us on all sides, then we can turn to God's promises and know that better things will come, and this bright and glorious optimism, the true optimism, lifts us way above the darkness of the present. Yes, we see the bright side as God sees it and are content to wait till it bursts upon us in all its glory. It is likewise the mightiest incentive to labor and to service, to live righteously, soberly, and godly in this present evil age.—Selected from Our Hope by R. A. Curtis.

JEWISH NATIONAL HOME

SOME of England's Jewish leaders are seeking to form a Jewish State which shall be a national home land. According to Genesis 15:18, they believe that such a state should include Palestine, Transjordan as far east as Egypt, and Iraq, an area variously estimated at from 250,000 to 300,000 square miles. They further believe that while Arabs and other non-Jewish inhabitants will doubtless raise objections, the resources of the country when developed are sufficient to maintain both the Jewish and non-Jewish populations.—Selected.

Abreast of the Times

"Ectoplasmic Fingerprints"

"The living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing."—Eccl. 9:5.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 3.—"Ectoplasmic fingerprints" alleged to have been made by "Walter," brother of "Margery," Boston medium, are arousing much controversy in psychical circles, according to The Literary Digest. The interest seems to have been intensified by the announcement made by the National Broadcasting Company that Sir Oliver Lodge, scientist and exponent of spiritism of England, will broadcast an address on March 9 on the subject of "Do We Survive?"

It appears that these ghostly fingerprints were made in Boston last year, and that their authenticity is defended by the American Society for Psychical Research, but on the other hand the Boston Society of Psychical Research has issued an official bulletin "in which three well-known authorities on psychic research presented evidence purporting to show that the fingerprints belonged to a dentist living in Boston instead of to a dead person."

"It has been proven time and time again that many of the phenomena of spiritualism are shot through with fraud," continues The Digest. The originators of modern spiritualism were the three Fox sisters of Hydeville, N. Y., (1848), at least one of whom, Margaret, "afterward recanted and confessed to fraud. At a public demonstration in New York City she said: 'I am here tonight as one of the founders of spiritualism to denounce it as an absolute falsehood from beginning to end, as the flimsiest of superstitions, the most wicked blasphemy known to the world.' Two years ago Nino Pecararo, who is said to have deceived Conan Doyle, told New York reporters that all his seeming supernatural accomplishments were pure deception—sleight-of-hand tricks."

Such deceptions serve to emphasize the importance of watchfulness against all who "say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8:19, 20.

Insanity Gains

"They shall drink, . . . and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them."—Jer. 25:16.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—In an address before the Executives' Club delivered yesterday by Dr. David Seabury, eminent psychologist of New York, the astonishing statement was made that the entire human race will be insane by 2139 A. D., if the present rate of increase in insanity is maintained. Statisticians have reached the conclusion, he declared, that there has been a thirty per cent increase in insanity during the past ten years. He ascribed the increase largely to worry brought on by the hectic conditions prevailing in modern life.

Faith in God and the peace and security of mind which it brings are the most powerful preventives of insanity. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment."—1 John 4:18.—Selected by D. G. Harvey.

The Spectre of Fear

"Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty."—Isa. 13:6.

PARIS, Jan. 20.—In an article appearing in the Chicago Herald and Examiner on January 14, Premier Mussolini called attention to the menacing situation in the Far East. "Two armies," he said, those of Japan and Russia, "confront each other at the frontier of Russia and Manchuria; the peril of war exists. This does not only interest Russia and Japan; it also involves China and the United States and, directly and indirectly, England, France, and Holland."

To the solemn warning of the dictator of Italy is now added that of Edouard Herriot, former Premier of France. "All wise Governments should watch the extreme East with the greatest vigilance. Between Japan and the United States on the one hand, and between Japan and the Soviets on the other, tension is obvious. The world is afraid it is going to see three great powers, the United States, Russia, and Japan, enter into conflict."

Referring again to the same threatening situation, Mussolini declared some time ago that in his estimation "there is no doubt that Japan is going through a period of dynamic imperialism. She is no longer bound by accords of an international order and has her hands free, be it for peace or war. The choice depends upon Japan.

"The pressure of a so-called international public opinion," the Duce continued, "has no influence on a people with as closed and militaristic psychology as that of the Japanese, or on the ruling classes, which religiously believe in the warlike spirit as the highest expression of the virtue of the race."

That fear of a new Russia-Japanese war is not limited to statesmen of other countries is evident. Universal News Service asserts that an "official informant" of the Soviet Government said that armed conflict between that country and Japan in 1934 is regarded as a "possibility" by a highly placed Russian official.

LATER: The rejection by France of the British plan for the rearmament of Germany adds greatly to the tenseness of the situation in both Europe and the Far East. As one of our contributors wrote recently, we may look for many startling changes and multiplying dangers to occur during the present year.

RECONSTRUCTION AND RESTORATION

RECONSTRUCTION" means to make over again. "Restoration of man" means the act of bringing man back to the original strength and beauty of perfect manhood. One of the primary purposes of the new heaven and new earth, which constitute the new world, is that man might be reconstructed and restored and righteousness forever established among men. The sacrificial death and resurrection of Christ Jesus made available the great ransom price. The overthrow of Satan's empire and the restraining of the enemy will remove the powers that were actively hindering man from making progress in righteousness.

Can man, then, unaided, bring himself back into harmony with God? He can not. Since thousands of years the human race has been traveling the broad road of unrighteousness that leads to degradation and destruction. After such a long period of sin the race is wicked. The slums of the great cities, the insane asylums, hospitals, prison houses, financial centers, crowded streets and subways, the boats, the dance halls and like places—here observe the works of the devil.

The death and resurrection alone of Christ will not undo these evils. The overthrow of Satan's empire will not undo these evils. There is one thing else that must be done, and it will be done. It is written: "He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3:8. "He (God) shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3:19-21.

Several thousand years of misrule by Satan have wrought all the evils among humankind. Now God will show to all of His intelligent creatures that one thousand years' rule by His beloved Son, Jesus, can and will undo all the evil that has been done, and will restore all the willing and obedient ones to the full glory and beauty of perfect manhood.

With heaven and earth made up of perfect, glorious creatures, all under one Head, Christ Jesus, they will be an eternal monument, forever testifying to the wisdom, power, and loving-kindness of our God. The great Eternal One intends to use His Son for the purpose of reconstructing and restoring the people of the earth. "Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. . . I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house."—Isaiah 42:1-7. "I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; that thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places. They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them."—Isaiah 49:8-10.

The Scriptures show that the reconstruction and restoration work will embrace a period of one thousand years. During that time the entire human race will be under the control of Christ, who will gradually lead the obedient ones back into harmony with God. Furthermore, the Scriptures show that this blessed work will begin with the overthrowing of Satan and the establishment on earth of the kingdom of God.

NEWS FROM LOUISIANA

On January 1, 1934, the Hammond Berean Society held its annual business meeting for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year.

Warren Landry was elected president of the class, with Anna Mae Bottolfs as vice president. Ruchie Alexander was elected secretary and treasurer.

BREMEN, INDIANA

The following letter accompanied an order for ten copies of the senior Berean lesson series for 1923-25:

"We have just one lesson yet; then the book we have is finished. We have a class of twenty-two enrolled, and they attend regularly and take good interest in the lessons. We also have a junior class of ten or twelve. We meet on Wednesday evening of each week. Have only missed two meetings, and then we were attending Bible school."

The letter was signed by Mrs. Martha H. Senff of Bremen, Indiana.

"They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

THE HEALTH AND HAPPINESS DOCTOR

IT WAS summer time. Lazy white clouds floated overhead, and the warm sun shone down upon the sandy seashore. But from the beautiful blue lake soft breezes came and cooled the air.

There was no lovelier spot in all that country, no fairer scene by day, nor more magic one by night. One thing only lessened its beauty. All about were sick people—people with crippled limbs, blinded eyes, diseases which the doctors didn't understand and couldn't cure.

And then one day a wonderful doctor came to this beautiful country. A doctor who could cure every sickness, it was said. The news spread from one to another, and people came from far and near to have this great doctor heal them.

One man with paralysis, whom the other doctors had said could never walk again, was healed and could walk as well as ever. A woman who had been ill for twelve years was made well. Two blind men, well known to everyone, had their sight restored and were once more able to work.

All these and many more did this great doctor cure. And then one day a little girl died, the only daughter of a wealthy ruler in the city. The father had heard of the great doctor's work, and in his deep sorrow he went to him. He told him that he believed if he would just come and lay his hand on the little girl's head, she would come back to life.

This great doctor felt so sorry for the poor father that he followed him to his home. The people standing around weeping only laughed when some one whispered that he was going to bring the little girl back to them alive.

But, too wonderful to behold, the doctor went into the room where she lay and in a moment came out leading her by the hand. And the doctor's name was—have you guessed it?—yes, it was Jesus!

Jesus found so much to do, so many who needed healing, so many who must be told about God and God's kingdom, that He called helpers to go with Him. Do you know whom He called in today's lesson? Was he a fisherman like the first four helpers? Look in verse 9.

If Jesus should come to our land today, He would find just as much to do, wouldn't He? He would find sick people, and blind people, and crippled people. And He would also find wicked people.

You know He could heal people who were sick because of their sins, when He lived on earth so long ago. He forgave their sins, and He was the only one besides God who could do that.

We all need Jesus to heal us of our sins. The reason we are sick today, just as they were so long ago, is because we do wrong in some way or another. We don't always intend to do wrong, and sometimes we don't even realize it till afterwards. But we only need to say, "Forgive me, dear Jesus, and help me to do better," and He will.

After these crippled, blind, sick people had been healed by Jesus, can't you just picture to yourselves how happy they must have been? And to know their sins had been forgiven and they could start life with a fresh, clean page, that must have made them happier than anything else. And it makes us happy, too.

In forgiving the people of their sins and healing them of their sicknesses, Jesus was showing them how it will be in God's kingdom. There will be no sickness at all then, and everyone will learn how to live just as Jesus wants him to live.

Jesus will need helpers, too, in His kingdom, as He did so long ago. We can be His helpers if we obey Him now. Just think of being able to help King Jesus cure sick people, open blind eyes and deaf ears, and best of all, tell them about Him and His Father! Everybody will be well and happy then over the whole world.

Our "Sons and Daughters of the King" have a new member this week—a little seven and a half year old lassie, Erma Jane Hunt. It was Erma Jane's mother, you know, boys and girls, whom you all came to love because of the Bible stories she told you on this page for so many years.

We are very happy to have you for a member, Erma Jane. Come right in and take a chair next to Ina Ruth. Erma Jane lives in South Bend, Indiana, and her Sunday school teacher is Mrs. Lulu Stilson. I think her teacher must be very happy because Erma Jane says Daddy gave her a Bible for Christmas and she likes to read it.

Next week all the members of the "Sons and Daughters of the King" Club will get their membership cards and seals. Each week that you study your lesson you paste a seal, which looks like an open Bible, over that square. And don't forget—try to do just as Jesus would like you to do each day.

JESUS' POWER TO HELP

Matthew 8:1 to 9:34

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 35:1-6

GOLDEN TEXT

I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners.—Matthew 9:13.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Basic Truth: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—1 Timothy 1:15.

I. Jesus Forgives Sin. (Matt. 9:1-7.) The natural desire of all men is for physical health and material well-being. The friends of the paralytic in the lesson brought him to Jesus, not that his sins might be pardoned, but that his body might be healed. But the Great Physician diagnosed the cause of the man's trouble as sin. When the healing remedy of divine forgiveness was applied, the man's sickness disappeared. When the Lord comes and establishes His kingdom in the earth, "the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick," for "the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity" (Isa. 33:24). The removal of sin means the removal of the cause of disease and death. This is frequently true today. When one turns from sinful habits of self-indulgence, the general health improves and longer life results.

II. Jesus Calls Sinners. (Matt. 9:8, 9.) One of the twelve men chosen by the Lord to be an apostle was Matthew the publican, one who was looked upon by his fellow Jews as the most depraved of men. So vile was the class to which he belonged considered that the priests would not accept the gifts they brought to the temple. Yet Jesus saw in Matthew elements of character that He knew could be developed for splendid usefulness to God and man. If this "sinner saved by grace" had done nothing more than to provide us with the record of Jesus' life we are now studying, our Lord was justified in calling him into His service. Jesus can find the seeds of good in every heart and cause them to grow and bear fruit to His glory.

III. Jesus Sees the Sinner's Need. (Matt. 9:10-13.) Matthew, sinner though he was, rejoiced in the fellowship of Jesus Christ, and invited his sinful friends to hear the message that had brought him comfort. Jesus sees the needs of those who are far from God, and finds His most happy task in seeking them out and bringing them into the Father's house.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Helping the Needy. Jesus was always touched by the needs of other people. His daily work was a ministration of service to others. With the great power which Jesus possessed He could bless in every field of need. We cannot do this, but we can use the talents we do possess in aiding the less fortunate. True righteousness will not allow one member of the church to have an excessive amount and another member to be in dire need. The spirit of the Master will bridge this gap, and they both will have all things in common. When others' burdens are lightened by our efforts in the name of the Father, there comes to our hearts a joy and peace that the world knows nothing of.

"Follow Me." This command was not given to a man such as the priests and scribes would pick. They prohibited such from entering the temple. A despised and hated group were the tax-gatherers. These people, like all others, were made in the image and likeness of the Creator. The Father's love covered them as well as all others. Yes, the plan of God had a place for such people. Christ, in His selection of helpers, was not guided by the apparel and possessions of a man (Jas. 2:1-4). It was the man that He wanted.

Sick People. "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." There is no sickness quite so contagious and destructive as the disease of sin. Once it takes hold of man there is no medicine known to man that can cure. There are many remedies that soothe the pain of conscience, but none can destroy the virus that continuously re-infects. This is a disease that the world of mankind is affected with and of whose destructiveness it is unaware. It feeds on the life that now is and disqualifies one for the life that is to come. There is only one remedy for this malady, that is Christ.—C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

Let us liken a sick person to a sinner. When one is seriously ill, no time is lost in securing help in the person of a competent doctor. When one is steeped in sin, the need for help is scarcely realized, though that need be much greater than in the case of being sick. Jesus came to call just sinners to repentance, that they leave the sinful path and follow after righteousness.

Jesus, our Lord and Savior, is indeed merciful that He can forgive the vilest sinner when the call to come unto Him is answered and repentance assured. This mercy extends to you and to me if we have or will accept it. The righteous need no helper, but few, if any, belong to that class.—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Jesus Meeting Human Needs

The greatest need of the human race is deliverance from sin. Sin brought sickness and death. This has resulted in untold loss to the sons of Adam. Colds alone annually cost millions of dollars to the people of the United States. Think of the cost of death and its loss to us. Edison accumulated a vast amount of knowledge which would have been even a greater blessing to people if failing health had not slowed his mind and body. All of this knowledge was completely lost by his death. Think of the accumulated knowledge and wisdom that has been thus lost. Can we for one moment comprehend the blessing that could come from one righteous person who had accumulated wisdom for a million years? It will be our privilege to know such blessing if we accept Jesus' invitation to live with Him throughout eternity.

Many of the needs met by Jesus are obvious. The world needs love to end greed, scheming, stealing, adultery, murder, war. Jesus came to fill this need, too. He gave us an example of this love by giving His life for us while we were still His enemies. His teachings, if faithfully followed, will result in great happiness to all in this life and in the age to come, life everlasting.

All worth while things have a corresponding price attached. That is life as we know it. A price has been placed upon these blessings. God is willing that all should enjoy them, so He has placed the price within the reach of everyone. He has asked us to curb our carnal natures, repent, be baptized, and walk in a new life filled with faith. Are you willing to pay that kind of a price for the priceless blessings God has in store for the faithful?—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Jesus Helps a Little Girl.

Memory Verse: "In him was life."—John 1:4a.

As Jesus went about teaching and preaching, He cured many, many people that were sick or blind or lame. One day a man came up to Him and said, "My daughter is dead, but come, lay Your hands on her, and she will live."

Jesus followed the man until they came to the man's house. Jesus' disciples followed, too. Jesus saw the great crowd gathered there and said to them, "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth." The people just laughed at Jesus.

Then Jesus had all the people get out of the room. He took the mother and father of the little girl, as well as three of His disciples, and went to where the little girl lay. Jesus took the little girl by the hand and said, "Damsel (little maid), I say unto thee, Arise." The little girl got up from her bed, and Jesus asked her parents to give her something to eat. How happy they must have been. And how surprised the people were to see the little girl alive and well.

God gave Jesus the power to give life to people who were dead. He still has that power and will use it when He comes again to bring all dead people back to life.

"In him was life" may be said of God or Jesus, and I'm sure you can see why. Let's all say it together, "In him was life."—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

TO OUR BROTHERHOOD

Since making my appeal for $2,000, it has occurred to me that perhaps some may conceive that in case contributions are made in answer to this call and there should not be sufficient received to liquidate the indebtedness mentioned, the amounts thus received would be used in payment of other bills, operating expenses, etc. I therefore make this pledge to you: Strict account of all contributions to this particular fund will be kept with name of contributors and amounts contributed respectively, and in case I am unable to liquidate the indebtedness in question, which is approximately $7,000, then and in that case the amount you have thus contributed will be returned to you so that you will not lose what is contributed unless you shall state that your contribution may be used for another purpose. If you cannot send the full amount you desire to contribute to this fund, if you will kindly send in your pledge with amount of pledge to be paid on or before June 1, 1934, so that I may know just what I can safely depend upon, and then make payments as you may be able to do so, it will be satisfactory and much appreciated. I need not emphasize the importance of our giving attention to this matter nor what it means to the N. B. I. I explained that fully at our last General Conference. The crisis of which I spoke at that meeting has been delayed longer than I at that time had good reason to think might be done, for which we have all been thankful. But it will come, and we must meet it, and the best way I have been able to devise and suggest, and that is generally the case in such matters, is the way of sacrifice, and if we are not willing nor able to follow this course in this matter I am unable at this time to suggest another way out with honor to our Institution. Responses with contributions to this call are already coming, and it is our sincere hope that our people generally will be able to realize the importance of taking care of this obligation before it is too late, and the proposition I have submitted means a saving of approximately $3,300 to the National Bible Institution if I am able to put it over. I am undertaking to do this, but I cannot proceed farther than I have already gone until I have the necessary amount on hand.

Trusting that you may be able to understand and appreciate the situation and our earnest desire to get this matter off our hands, and that you will make every sacrifice that you may be able to make in order that I may be able to carry through this proposition, and thanking you very sincerely for what has already been done in this matter, I am, yours for service,

L. E. Conner, Manager.

RICE-SECORD

In the presence of thirty or forty of our church people at the pastor's home Friday night, Jan. 26, Mr. Harold Rice and Miss Alice Secord were married. Harold is the son of Sr. Hazel Pixley, grandson of Bro. and Sr. Richard Skeels, and has been a member of our church for several years. Alice was an attendant of our Sunday school until her family moved to Marne some months ago.

The pastor joins their many friends in wishing for them the best that life contains as they live their lives together.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

According to a card from Mrs. Dewey Overmyer, secretary of the Burr Oak Church of God, F. L. Austin, Back-to-the-Bible Evangelist of Chicago, was expected to deliver discourses at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. on February 4 at the Burr Oak church. His morning subject was to be "The Holy People of God," his evening theme "No Man Liveth Unto Himself." We regret that this notice reached us too late for inclusion in our last issue.

BLANCHARD, MICHIGAN

Hereafter the Sunday evening service, the Lord willing, will follow the following program:

Meeting opens at 7:15 with Berean classes for young people and adults. At 7:45 all assemble in the main auditorium for a diversified Worship Service, which will include singing, special music, Scripture reading by two young people, prayer, short talk by one of the young folks, and sermon by the pastor. It is designed that the entire service shall last about an hour and a half, or from 7:15 to 8:45.

Hereafter the evening Worship Service will be the only preaching service at the church on Sundays, as the pastor will preach at a schoolhouse in Wyman in the mornings.

Fine interest and good attendance are being registered by the people living in the vicinity of Shepard Schoolhouse for our Thursday evening meetings there. This is due in great part to the fact that the children have been of such help with special songs and playlets.

The first one of the young people to give a short talk at the church will be Emery Toogood, who will speak on "The Religious Situation in Germany," on the night of February 11.

A cordial invitation is extended to you to worship with us at any of these services.

Cecil A. Smead, Pastor.

COMMUNICATION

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

This beautiful eve I will drop a few lines of thanks in return for the beautiful Christmas cards I received, as I haven't been very well and have been putting it off. One was from a sister I am personally acquainted with, Mrs. E. Good of Colorado Springs, Colo. Oh, I trust the good Lord will bless her and hers all through the New Year, as He is Father of all comfort and peace. And the other sister is Mrs. L. Briggs of Blanchard, Mich. I am not personally acquainted with her, although I feel that I know all of the good Lord's children, as our minds are all of Christ's mind. I sure do thank you for remembering me, as I am alone around here and also in my home although there are some that have begun to open their eyes. I trust the good Lord will remember you and yours through the New Year. This is my prayer for all of God's children.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

We realize the rapid passage of time when we are informed that plans are again under way for the great annual spring meeting at Fonthill, Ont., which is always the first of summer conferences and Bible schools, being held during the last week in May.

"The Morning Star," published by Pastor A. E. Hoskins, St. Cloud, Minn., contains the following: "On everybody's tongue: 'Have you read last week's Restitution Herald?' It will be a welcome guest in your home. Why not subscribe now?" Thank you, Bro. Hoskins, we will do as much for you some day!

Pastor Hoskins calls attention in "The Morning Star" to the fact that Bro. George Rennard of Niagara Falls, N. Y., has not missed a business meeting of his church in thirty-six years. It might well be added that Bro. Rennard has not in that time missed any service of the church which he could by any possibility attend. Such faithfulness is not unusual, however, in Niagara Falls.

The pastor of the Oregon, Ill., church is announcing a new evening sermon series to begin in the near future. It will have to do with the problem of the church, its nature, purpose, organization in the past, present, and future. Next Sunday night he will (D. V.) give a special address on "Prohibition, Pacifism, and Common Sense."

A letter from D. G. Harvey remarks that the Kokomo, Ind., Church of God plans "to interest some doctors, lawyers, and barbers by leaving copies in their offices and shops." "Copies," of course, refers to The Herald, which the Kokomo young people are selling on the streets.

The statement of the manager appearing in these columns should be thoughtfully considered. In case the full amount required is not received the money contributed will be returned if the donors so desire. All are anxious to get the National Bible Institution out of debt at the earliest possible moment, and if Bro. Conner's splendid suggestion is carried out it will result in a much larger reduction of our indebtedness than the amount asked for represents. Watch succeeding issues for the progress of this effort.

Bro. Jesse Harrold, Blythedale, Mo., sending for extra copies of The Herald of January 23, says, "I think 'Radio in Prophecy' and 'America's Latest God' are especially fine articles. I believe we are living in the last days of Gentile times, and may look for wonderful things to happen."

The editor deeply appreciates the interest our readers are taking in our "Abreast of the Times" department. Many excellent contributions have been received, and have helped much in making this department interesting and profitable.

Our attention has been called to an omission which was made in the report of the business meeting of the Oregon, Ill., church, which appeared in our issue of January 23. The report should have read as follows: "The report of the treasurer showed a total income of $1,646.41 for the year of 1933. Received in the current fund, $1,155.13. Received in the building fund, $491.28. Total receipts for the year, $1,646.41." This, of course, does not include the generous contributions this faithful little group makes annually to the N. B. I.

UNITED MINISTERIAL VIEWPOINT

At the Ministerial Conference held last August in connection with the General Conference, a statement was compiled covering in a general way the outstanding elements of faith for which the ministers of the Church of God unitedly stand. This statement was in no wise designed or intended to be a "creed," but to be a simple expression of those great truths which distinguish us as a people, and which it is thought should be strongly emphasized by our ministry.

The eight-page pamphlet is now being sent out on the orders received at conference. Others desiring quantities of these statements may secure them at this office at one dollar per hundred. They are attractive in appearance and instructive as to contents, and should prove very useful to pastors and evangelists for wide distribution.

Change of Address.—When ordering change of address be sure to send us both old and new addresses.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

RUSSIAN ATHEISM AND PERSECUTION

THE Russian Soviet Government is not satisfied with her present program of atheism and persecution of Christianity. A missionary magazine tells us that 1,767,600 Christians have been murdered in that country during the last five years. Probably no one knows just how many Christians have died in Russia during this period, but it is certain that a great number have lost their lives rather than to deny Jesus Christ. Russia seems determined to stamp out with an iron heel every trace of religion.

St. Isaac's Cathedral in Leningrad, which was forty years in building, has been changed into an anti-religious museum. Groups of young people are taken through it to see models and pictures which are intended to teach hatred for religion. Parades, bearing the most grotesque cartoons and blasphemous inscriptions, through the streets of their cities are common. Parents are forbidden to teach religion or to mention the name of God to their children. The child reporting such of his parents is rewarded.

Now the Russian Government has launched a new five-year program of persecution. We are told that the plan is embodied in a decree which has been sent to all the regional committees of the Somarkom (Council of Young People's Commission). The aim of the decree was put in these words:

"On May 1, 1937, there must not remain on the territory of the U. S. S. R. a single house of prayer to God, and the very conception 'God' will be banished from the boundaries of the Soviet Union, as a survival of the Middle Ages which has served as an instrument for the suppression of the working masses."

How long before Russia will come to realize that it is futile to fight against God? In the present depression she is in the most distressing circumstances. One can realize, in a way, why the people revolted against the corruption and superstition of the Russian Orthodox Church, which was the tool of the Tsar and loaned itself to his program of suppression. We can but hope that the day will come, if our Lord tarries, when Russia shall discover that God is not mocked, and pure religion shall grip the hearts of that great people.—D. L. C. in World's Crisis.

THE NIGHT COMETH

By E. E. Giesler

ISAIAH 60:2: "For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee." Amos 5:20: "Shall not the day of the Lord be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?" Daniel 12:10: "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand."

The bottomless pit of Revelation 9 has been opened, the red beast of Revelation 12 and Revelation 17 raises its head in Europe where infidelity and modernism hold sway, the rider with his red horse of Revelation 6 is about to take peace from all the earth, the deadly poison seed of modernism and infidelity has been sown in our own land, and (Isa. 59:14, 15) "judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey: and the Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment." From the school child to the statesman it is so. If one chooses to walk in the straight and narrow path he will be made a prey for modernism.

Creedless leaders, ungodly church members, Christless churches, evolution in the schools, closed prayer rooms, and parents that spend their time at clubs and cards and Sunday dinners instead of being at church and Sunday school, all tend to blacken the darkness until the weary traveler is made to lose his way, and the poor sinner goes on in sin and tries to still his conscience with thoughts of infidelity and the idea that nobody cares for his soul.

The writer's attention was recently called by our postmaster and druggist to an article in the Lincoln State Journal by Mr. Elias Tobenkin, under the heading, "Russian Nation Is Making Plans for a World War." Mr. Tobenkin, having been born in Russia, and returning at frequent intervals, is particularly qualified to observe what is happening there and to establish facts. He says:

"The pacific mind of the Russian soldier is backed by complete and most desperate readiness for war. In my travels through Russia for the last ten months I find the entire population solidly behind Joseph Stalin in his determination not to yield an inch of Russian ground on any frontier.

"In a public school in Moscow, during the hour for discussing current problems, a boy put up his hand. According to figures in this morning's newspaper, he said to his teacher, we have raised nearly a third more of grain in the last twelve months than in the year before. So why is bread still rationed? The teacher, an alert young Communist, replied that this was a topic that they would take up later in the year. When the class was dismissed he called the pupil into his office. You should not put such questions publicly, the teacher warned. We are saving bread for the next war."

Brethren, does this mean anything to you? Is Russia with her sixty million children under seventeen about to fulfill Ezekiel, chapters 38 and 39? The Soviet system of education demands that all children pass through a military mold, and do not expect to be defeated in the next war.

Brethren, the end is near, the night cometh, soon no man can work. The only light this sin-sick world has is the true children of God that will not compromise with error or sin in any form.

We have some of the salt of the earth here at Moorefield that has stood true through trials, and will stand till Jesus comes, and we know there are many others of like precious faith, and we say to one and all in the language of the Master (Luke 21:36), "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

HITLER OPPOSED BY A REAL FORCE

CATHOLIC and Protestant joined in a great common cause—that is a phenomenon brought about by the excesses of German Hitler and his Nazi movement! Subservient clergymen have been reported as currying the favor of the Nazi regime by proposing a Bible with the Old Testament eliminated, the New Testament arbitrarily revised, and a militant and heroic Jesus substituted for the meek and gentle Christ.

The recent celebration of the 450th anniversary of Martin Luther's birth under the auspices of the new Hitlerite regime took on a marked political character. Sweeping aside age-old grudges, the Protestants and the Roman Catholics of Germany denounced the movement to Hitlerize Christianity and thundered defiance from three thousand pulpits.

An editorial in the Catholic Germania rallies the real Christian forces to a common defence, with such words as these: "Belief in Christ—the thing that Protestantism and Catholicism have in common—is at stake. If this is destroyed, we Catholics, too, will strike." The situation has aroused international interest in this conflict between fundamental Christianity and a radical new political system of government.

The revolution in Russia was followed by a ruthless attempt to destroy the Christian religion. The serfs, ground down by age-long oppression, bowed in terrified submission, but there are evidences that the faith still lives among them. The Germans, however, are a different race, a people of culture and education, who have enjoyed a far greater measure of freedom of thought and action. It remains to be seen whether they will submit to the political revision of their fundamental religious faith.—The Courier, Gibson City, Ill.

TOWARD ORTHODOXY

IT is a paradox that Judaism in the United States has defied all religious trends during the past few years by going conservative instead of going radical. This paradox can equally well be applied to all Jewish life. The reason for it can be found in a juxtaposition of terms. By conservatism we do not actually mean conservatism, but sanity. The conservatism that is evident at the present time is nothing more than a reaction against imbecility, which was running away with Jewish life. That prosperity in Jewish life was coupled with radicalism, and that poverty is linked with conservatism, are nothing more than an indication that American Jewry is well on the way to sober paths.

The trend from radicalism to sanity in Jewish life has virtually amounted to a revolution. It has expressed itself in terms of a violent change from economic to intellectual thought, not only in the leadership but in the ideology of Jewish life. The result has been a process to reduce Jewish life to simple terms and to get away from the complexity which has almost been responsible for its ruin.

This trend has drawn American Jewry closer together than ever before. The fact is that American Jews have never approached a more harmonious outlook than at the present time. It is true that at one time American Jewry was more closely united than it can be said to be now, but this was a unity that resulted solely out of an emergency, and the fundamental and widespread differences in outlook still remained. At the present time we are confronted with an opposite situation. The divisions in Jewish life are manifest, yet the ideology and outlook of Jews are more consistently similar than at the time of the war, when American Jewry succeeded in uniting on a single platform.

Today the differences between the assimilationists and the nationalists, the Zionists and the non-Zionists, the Reform and the Orthodox, are growing so less manifest that what is implied is nothing more than a pusillanimity of spirit on the part of the "nons" which is nothing more than an objection to the personal and social habits of the opposite group. There are even some who are rash enough to predict that the time is not far off when American Jewry will have a single outlook, even on the religious question, and some of us are confronted by the amazing spectacle of the Reform group so militantly Jewish in deed and in action that they put the Orthodox Jews to shame.

It is on the religious question, however, that the tendency toward conservatism has been so marked, and in this case it is a real movement toward a conservative outlook. In this matter Judaism defies religious trends elsewhere, for other religions have been confronted for many years past with an increasing tendency toward neologism. The trend toward conservatism has been more specifically a trend toward the Conservative Party in Jewish religious life. For here we have not only the spectacle of Reform Jews going conservative, but also of the Orthodox Jews going conservative. We discover the Reform group becoming more Jewish and the Orthodox group becoming more American, and the result is a philosophy of Jewish life which attempts to be both wholeheartedly Jewish and American at the same time. This fact speaks well for the future of American Jewish life.

The conservatization of Reform was bound sooner or later to come. Reform Judaism came into existence chiefly to secure the economic, political, and social emancipation of the Orthodox Jew who clung persistently to his Orthodox views in the face of political and economic persecution. The Reform group might have had a mission to perform at the end of the last century and the beginning of the present, but this mission ceased when the closing of Jewish immigration to the United States deprived Orthodoxy of its very lifeblood, and with the closing of immigration die-hard Orthodoxy began to totter and the ghettos began to break up. Since that time the Americanization of the Orthodox Jew has been slowly accomplished without any pressure from without. If Christianity were to leave the Jew alone for a generation or two, Eastern European Orthodoxy in this country would receive its last crushing blow. There might even develop a universal American Judaism.

The fact remains that religious trends are slowly merging toward conservatism, which supplies the Jew with a vital and robust Judaism while at the same time making concessions to modernity. This is the direction in which a devitalized Reform Judaism is going and the direction in which an obsolete Orthodox Judaism is proceeding. Such a conservatism can be the only true basis for an American Judaism, which will be distinctly an American Judaism and not a Judaism in America, which is another thing.—Louis Minsky in Toronto Jewish Standard.

THE PLEDGE OF CHRIST'S RETURN

Obedient to Thy sacred Word,
 "This do, remembering me,"
 Once more, dear Master, at Thy board
 We meet in love to Thee.

With us, as with the twelve of old,
 Sit down, O Friend divine,
 To bless and break the paschal bread,
 And pour with thanks the wine.

Behind this rite which Love supplies,
 Our grateful hearts discern
 The body of the sacrifice
 And pledge of Thy return.

By faith partaking of the flesh
 And the atoning blood,
 O let us feel the life afresh
 Of our redeeming Lord.

BAPTISM AND THE LORD'S SUPPER

THE value of a symbol lies in the impression it makes on the mind and heart of the observer, and the depth and lasting quality of the impression depends to a great extent upon the setting of the symbol. That is, the outward circumstances of the service of which the symbolism is a part adds to or detracts from the impression made on the worshiper.

For instance we have taken part in a baptismal service that was conducted beside a stream running through a pasture where cattle were grazing. Among them was a fierce brute which manifested a disposition to attack those gathered on the river's brink. Several men were required to hold him at a distance until the service could be completed, and as there were a number to be baptized the anxiety was somewhat prolonged. When the service was over and we turned away it was obvious that the minds of those present were not on the beautiful symbolism of baptism, but given over to the picture of that angry beast. Little thought was being devoted to the miracle of regeneration we had just witnessed, and the great spiritual lesson was lost both to those newborn in Christ Jesus and to the ones who had assisted in the act.

Just as the frame of a picture adds to or detracts from its beauty, so the physical setting of a spiritual service contributes to its impressiveness or robs it of its richness of meaning.

Baptism, marking as it does the most tremendous change that can occur in one's entire lifetime, the death of the old man of sin and the birth of a new creature in Christ Jesus, should be conducted in such a way as to enhance to the utmost the sacred nature of the rite. Every memory connected with it should be a beautiful and tender suggestion of God's wondrous love and grace that through the sacrifice of Christ have brought purity to the sin-stained heart. No effort should be considered too great that this end may be accomplished, for the lasting value of the service to the individual immersed depends upon the impression made at the time the baptism takes place.

What is true of the baptismal service is also true of the Lord's Supper. The solemn and sacred circumstances under which it was established, just preceding and prefiguring the Lord's death, when taken into consideration with the historic and prophetic significance of the ordinance, combine to make this service of richest meaning and of the greatest spiritual value to the communicant.

It is evident that the more closely united the participants are in faith, love, and mutual interest, the more blessed and helpful will be the service in which they engage together. This is not a service for the world, but for the disciples of Christ who have consecrated their lives to Him fully, who have "been buried with him in baptism" and have arisen with Him to a new and glorious spiritual experience.

In the communion service the believer renews his covenant with God, confesses again his faith in the reality and saving power of the Lord's death and resurrection, and expresses in symbols his unfaltering hope in the coming of Christ to raise the dead and immortalize the living saints of the most High.

Surely services so vital to our spiritual development should be conducted under the most dignified and impressive circumstances. To accomplish this purpose the service need neither be long nor elaborate. It should never be allowed to become a mere formality, but should be sufficiently varied to keep it vital with life and meaning.

The Dispensations

By M. W. Perrine

WE may readily learn as we study the Bible that time as it passes by, though it pass ever so swiftly, always has left a bloody track behind, and that is the reason why nations are crying peace. When we see the flower of every nation, the youth and manhood upon which a nation depends for its upbuilding, growth, and strength, being ruthlessly swept into eternity by the cruel hand of war, do we wonder that the fathers, mothers, and wives of these brave lads with bleeding hearts cry out for a halt in this cruel, pitiless slaughter?

All this has been handed down to us from a dispensation that passed off the stage of action some nineteen hundred years ago, a dispensation which had the principle an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth as its underlying principle, which always has a tendency to incite war.

Paul says the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ; and this ushered in a new dispensation founded upon God's favor and God's love, a dispensation of which Jesus is the mediator, He who could say (Rev. 1:18), "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death," a living mediator, while the one that passed had Moses, who was dead, for its mediator. The one could give life, for Jesus, its mediator, said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," while the other had no life in it and could bring only death.

Paul compares the working out of the two laws: the one he calls "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," and the other "the law of sin and death" (Rom. 8:1-6). "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

Now Jesus introduced this new doctrine which Paul calls "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," because Jesus declared Himself to be the life, and Paul declares

(2 Tim. 1:9), speaking of Jesus, "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Verse 10: "But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

Jesus in coming into the world preached the gospel, not to show us that we were already in possession of eternal life, but to show that if immortality was patiently sought after we would be counted worthy and would put it on at the resurrection, for it is at that time that Paul says this mortal must put on immortality (1 Cor. 15:53) and putting it on gives us eternal life.

Jesus said in His prayer to the Father (John 17:3), "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

To know Jesus is to know of His doctrine and manner of life, to know what He taught and how He walked. One thing He attended to with diligence during His entire ministry, the Bible tells us, was to declare the good news, or glad tidings, of the kingdom of God (Luke 8:1). He made that first. It mattered not how deeply He was engrossed in His ministry of healing and other good works, He said, "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent."

God has revealed in His Word that He has a wonderful work to perform, which Peter speaks of and calls a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Acts 3:21-23: "The times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." This was partially fulfilled.

But God has given us His Word that that same nation of Israel shall live again, for they have a wonderful future before them. (But first He has promised to send His

The Gospel According to You

You are writing a Gospel, a chapter each day,
By deeds that you do, by words that you say.
Men read what you write, whether faithless or true.

Say, what is the Gospel according to you?

Men read and admire the gospel of Christ,
With its love so unfailing and true;
But what do they say, and what do they think
Of the Gospel "according to you"?

It's a wonderful story, that Gospel of Love,
As it shines in the Christlike Divine,
And oh, that its truth might be told again
In the story of your life and mine.

Unselfishness mirrors in every scene;
Love blossoms on every sod:
And back from its vision the heart comes to tell
The wonderful goodness of God.

You are writing each day a letter to men,
Take care that the writing is true,
'Tis the only Gospel some men will read,
That Gospel according to you.—Selected.

Son, Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto them). God has promised to redeem Israel from the hand of her enemies (Micah 4:10). Though Israel was pronounced dead as a nation and the question was asked of the Prophet Ezekiel (Ezek. 37:3), "Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest," God subsequently declared (v. 11), "Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel," and He further declared (v. 5), "Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live." Paul asked the question (Rom. 11:1), "I say then, Hath God cast away his people?" and in verse 2 he answered it: "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew."

God has a work for Israel to perform after Jesus comes and establishes His kingdom with Himself as King, reigning over the house of Jacob together with His saints. For the angel said unto Mary His mother (Luke 1:32), "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

What use does He make of Israel? God declared by the Prophet Ezekiel (39:28), "But I have gathered them (Israel) unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there. Neither will I hide my face any more from them: for I have poured (Please turn to Page Nine)

The Disappointed Jews

By Harry Goekler

THE JEWS, from the time of their decline as a great nation to the ultimate destruction of Jerusalem, had been forced to see what they termed Gentile outcasts pollute the Holy Land, and exercise lordship over the chosen people of Jehovah. They longed for the time to come when, under the leadership of a promised Messiah, they could drive out their enemies and once more become a great nation.

Such was the belief prevalent among the majority of the Jews at the time of Christ's birth. Many traces of this belief in a near approach of the Messianic reign are to be found in the New Testament Scriptures. We read in Luke 2:25 of a man named Simeon, just and devout, who was waiting for the consolation of Israel. The same thought is expressed in verse 38, also. Joseph of Arimathea is mentioned as one of those waiting for the kingdom of God (Luke 23:51).

The queer part about the whole thing was the fact that when the Messiah did come He was rejected and disowned by those most anxious to see a deliverer come. We may safely say that from the time of His birth to the moment of His ascension, His devoted followers were subjected to numerous disappointments, as we shall briefly relate.

To begin with, the manner of His birth was a keen disappointment to many, for they had expected their Messiah to come in power and great glory, driving their enemies before Him. But the idea of their Messiah being a babe and born in a manger was a little more than they could understand. Disappointed and discouraged though they were, they continued looking for a Redeemer.

The years passed by, and one day as John the Baptist was baptizing in the River Jordan, Jesus approached and requested to be baptized. From that time on, Jesus began to preach and to show to the Jews that He was their long hoped-for Messiah. Some rejected His teaching, others doubted; but gradually He gathered around Him a small but devoted group of disciples who firmly believed that within a short time He would assume His rightful place on the throne. Alas! They were doomed to disappointment. For over three years the disciples labored with their Master, awaiting eagerly the time of the nation's deliverance. But instead of this triumphal event, their Leader was cruelly betrayed and crucified. Although Jesus had explained to them before that He must suffer death, they failed to comprehend His teaching and as a result, when He was put to death, their hopes were crushed. Gone was their dream of a Messiah; gone was their hope of driving the hated Romans from their land. Observe their keen disappointment as recorded in Luke 24:21, "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done."

Jesus had also told His disciples that He would rise again and finally, when He had convinced all of them that He was alive once more, their hopes and dreams took on new life. Surely their Master would now establish His kingdom. Consequently, as they walked with Jesus to the Mount of Olives they broached the subject nearest their heart, recorded in Acts 1:6, "When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" And once again their fondest hopes went crashing to the ground, so to speak, as Jesus informed them that it was not for them to know when this would come to pass, but His Father only. Immediately He was caught away into heaven and they saw Him no more.

Almost two thousand years have passed since that incident and still the Jews wait and hope for their Redeemer and Messiah to come. Though disappointed so many times in the past, yet they have the promise that He is coming back again and this time there will be no disappointment. May you and I be worthy to share with them the moment when their sorrow is turned to joy.

And So We Read

By Arlen Marsh

PAUL stood in the midst of Mars' Hill and debated with the Greek philosophers. That is an easy thing to say. It was a hard thing to do. For the Greek philosophers were men of an intelligence comparable with the cerebral attributes of Dr. Albert Einstein. They were men (Greece knew no nineteenth amendment; women were alien to mental labor and to politics) who had evolved systems of thought of such vigor that none before or since could equal them, save only in the field of religion.

Paul had the power of the Holy Spirit. Paul had the power of an omniscient God to guide him. Paul held locked in the chambers of a thoroughly trained mind the latent power concealed in a detailed knowledge of the Bible. Paul had been educated in the school of Gamaliel, who, although a Jew, was famed throughout the Mediterranean world as a philosopher, sage, and lawyer. Paul was a preacher of Christianity.

So Paul quoted from Phaenomena, by Aratus, a Cilician poet, and from Virgil, and other of the Grecian literary tribe. "As certain also of your own poets have said," he thundered at the assembled ancient Brain Trust, "For we also are his offspring." And the disciples of Socrates, Aristotle, and Plato, the advocates of Epicurean doctrines, and the doubtfully phlegmatic Stoics hitched up their togas and their cloaks and lent a willing ear.

With such an introduction, and with mention of the row of altars which those Greeks who were not atheists had strung about the Areopagus, the Apostle continued through an argument which ended in the usual dissension. The Greeks always objected. If they could think of nothing else, they objected to objectors. So when Paul concluded his remarks, with habit strong upon them, they gleefully leaped to a dissection of his logic. Inevitably some called him a fool; some lost their Grecian attitude and adopted the Mexican manana, saying, "We will hear thee again of this matter"; and some believed. And Paul took himself to Corinth.

Like the stories of the eighties, this brief chronicle has a moral, sharply defined and apparently more bitter than any apples that ever grew in Sodom. The Greeks squatted on the cold stones of Mars' Hill or stood chattering like senators when Congress is in session, not to hear Paul quote long reams of Scripture, but because he had engaged their attention with something about which they knew. Every item of the Apostle's God-given address to the Athenians up to the time that he finished with the poets touched on a doctrine held by some one or all of the vast assortment of Greek philosophies.

It was Paul's reading that won those Grecian converts, Damaris, Dionysius, and the others. Nor was it altogether pouring over musty tomes on religious technicalities that did it. Paul had burned as much of the midnight oil in his study of contemporary literature as in his study of apologetics, homiletics, and theology in general. The latter alone meant nothing to the Greeks.

Paul permitted himself no ruddy road to priesthood in God's kingdom. He soared above the ruts. He bound himself by no specific scholar. He taught the gospel as occasion demanded. He was all things to all men. He admitted it himself.

Human nature does not change. That is a platitude as ancient as the Khinjan Hills. The Greeks today include a mighty number. Their needs, their tastes, their desires are basically the same as those of the Athenians of A. D. 55. The same methods must be used to woo and win them.

Paul knew the Bible. Without it he would have been powerless. The passing of twenty, or of a thousand, centuries would not affect the truth of the teachings of that Book. Basically it must forever be the reading of every Christian worker. Nothing is more important.

But to read the lexicons and commentaries of the theologians alone is narrowing. The human mind that sees only in a single path is as boring and as useless as the man who talks only of himself. To read THE RESTITUTION HERALD, Lightfoot, or Fosdick, and naught else, is to do the very type of thing that Paul did not.

Appeal to outside minds. Read H. G. Wells and Doyle. Read Harpers, The Forum, The Modern Thinker, The Literary Digest, The Ladies' Home Journal. Find out what the world is doing. Discover what it thinks about the church, and why. Study daily papers, remembering that "Abreast of the Times" in THE RESTITUTION HERALD is not the only source of prophetic information. Read good fiction. It is modern humanity put in print. Approach the people as Paul did—first with what they like, and then with what they need.

Paul was modern. He recognized that to attain success he must draw interest to his work. His introductions were of a sort to make men listen. His language indicated knowledge of the affairs of all humanity. His speech was marked with quotations from the popular writers and leaders of the day. He, like the Master whom he followed, read, and profited thereby.

The Church of God needs breadth. It sings about love broader than the ocean wide and preaches and teaches in a way more narrow than a needle's eye. The Bible should be its mainstay. The Christ's doctrines cannot change. But the Christian's reading should. It should broaden, encompass in its sweep everything that can possibly serve to interest some citizen in God. The Lord's Prayer was taken from ancient Hebrew literature. So were many of the parables. God's church should use God's ways.

 4. Previous contacts with God which built up this response. Gen. 4:25, 26; 5:24; 6:5-9 with the fact that oral history handed from father to son played an important part in the lives of early peoples. What are some of the stories Noah would have told Abram when he was a little boy?
 5. Favored by God's covenant. Meaning of the word "covenant." Parties: Gen. 12:1-3. Is there a mutual agreement between two parties, or does God covenant Himself to do certain things and command Abram to do certain things? Do you find an "if" in the covenant? Items of the covenant. Make a list.
 6. Name changed and covenant enlarged. Meaning of new name. New items in the covenant. Gen. 17:1-8. Note the tense of the verbs and give a reason.
 - f. Character of life in Canaan. Gen. 12:6-9; 13:1-4; Heb. 11:9, 10, 13. Nomad shepherds. Altar building and calling on the name of the Lord. Show that this was the beginning of the blessing of the nations.
 - g. Character of Abram. Fearless, adventurous. (Recall the response he made to God's call.) Untruthful and selfish, Gen. 12:10-20. Placed his own welfare above that of a woman. Was his belief in God complete and unswerving? See also Gen. 15:1-4. Note the desire to substitute his own way for God's instead of taking God at His bare word. See also Gen. 16:1-4.
 - h. Abram's vision of the future. John 8:56; Heb. 11:8-19; Gen. 12:3; 17:4-8. What were some of the things that made Abram rejoice when he caught a glimpse of the day of Christ? Were this vision and the faith and the convictions it developed the product of Abraham's natural thinking, or that of God's direct dealing with a man chosen from among idolaters? Note the contrast between Abram in Gen. 12:10-20 and 17:15-21 and Abraham in Gen. 22:1-19 with Heb. 11:17-19. Was the faith that gave Sarah strength to conceive in her old age a faith that was hers by nature? See Gen. 18:9-15. Why did God not drop her as an instrument to fulfill His purpose when she laughed at Him and then lied about it? Isa. 55:11. Is this the reason there are no "ifs" in this covenant? Abraham also laughed at one time. Gen. 17:15-17.

Radio in Prophecy

JEREMIAH, looking from a much earlier mount of vision, saw the whole world under the absolute dominion of God's Son. "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them."—Jer. 31:34. Preachers are seeking to help the world to know the Lord. We build churches, hospitals, colleges, community houses, support ministers and missionaries—for what? To help men and women to know the Lord. In that glad day all this shall be done with; "they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest." Keep in mind—they shall all know Him. Far into the remote recesses of the mountains and congested centers, where now are filth and squalor, this knowledge will be general. Observe, it does not say, know about Him, but know Him—a personal acquaintance. No more revival sermons, no more evangelistic campaigns needed.

Then observe another seer from long ago looking through his prophetic telescope. "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one."—Zech. 14:9. Note the language—"in that day," a far-off time the Lord shall be supreme ruler—"king over all the earth." "King of kings, and Lord of lords." "There will be one ruling Lord, and his name one." Today, the religious lordship is legion—all kinds and characters: Confucius, Mahomet, Ghandi, Mrs. Eddy, Brigham Young. In that day, there will be one religious leader—the Lord Jesus Christ—the Son of God. Not the spirit of Jesus, not the influence of Jesus—but Jesus Himself. All nations and tongues shall know Him personally. Zechariah's words are very pertinent and far reaching. Think of our Savior—omnipotent, omniscient—being King of all the earth! No other kings, czars, emperors, or presidents. One name shall be sounded to the remote corners of the islands of the sea; and everyone shall know Him "from the least of them unto the greatest."

We bring one more witness on the Bible forum; one more testimony on this important subject. "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Hab. 2:14. Observe the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of Him. Oh, yes, all will know Him; but we must examine more closely: knowledge of His glory. The earth may now know of Him; certainly all civilization knows of our Christ; but to the world, as it is, now living, Christ is only a name. There are some, we are glad, to whom He is more than a name; but to this sinful, unbelieving, adulterous generation, He is nothing more. But in that day, they shall know of His glory. John was permitted from his rock-ribbed observation to behold His glory.

Here is the last of a series of articles on the biblical aspects of a new science and the future kingdom of God. The series was written by C. F. Wimberly, D. D., and was selected by R. A. Curtis from "The Pentecostal Herald."

The purpose of the book of Revelation was the unveiling of Jesus Christ. Even His very own knew but little of His glory. Those who were with Him on the holy mount of transfiguration got a glimpse of His glory to be.

But in that glad day His glory will fill and cover the earth, as the waters cover the basins of the sea. There is a glorious tomorrow awaiting this toil-worn, bleeding world. It is now "waxing old as a garment." It is impoverished in soil, cursed with all manner of vile and destructive insects. Weeds and thorns spring up to choke out the fields and gardens. There is a fight continually to bring food from the ground. Man eats by the sweat of his face.

Let us examine the conclusion of this whole discussion. Let us see if our findings are far-fetched and overdrawn. The windows are open, and the landscape is in full view. After all that has been said and suggested—what about the radio? We call it radio, as no other name has been thought of. But what about the uncanny, miraculous, overwhelming powers of the air, capable of transmitting—quick as thought—words, deeds, thoughts, visions, faces, scenes, personality, heat, and every other power known to man? All the above are known, and have been demonstrated beyond a doubt. Then what about the radio? This name may not fit when the Master Scientist of the universe takes over the manipulation of the machinery. "Radio" may not half convey the meaning when all the facts are known.

In a conversation, not long since, a minister, who was something of a scholar but who did not believe in the personal and bodily appearing and reign of Christ on earth, said: "Suppose Christ should establish His throne at Jerusalem; how could He give personal touch and oversight to every nook and corner of the world? He could not do it when He was here before. He had to go away so the Holy Ghost could come to abide with His church everywhere. It all seems like an impossible fairy story."

We do not claim that our Lord is going to use the radio as we have outlined and suggested in this discussion. He may have something very superior to the radio—but if what we have said is not plausible, possible, reasonable, and practical for His perfect administration in every spot on the earth—by that which we already know touching the proposition—it is necessary for some one to explain why it is not. Remember all static will be eliminated; messages will be sent in one direction; messages, faces, personality. How marvelous! All may see His face, hear His voice, feel His presence—in every spot on land or sea. Every hour in the day or night words of truth and inspiration may be given out by Him.

Maybe it sounds like nonsense; but what big idea could our Creator have had when such powers were formulated and made possible? Just had to be so—accidental! We cannot believe it for one moment. God does not work haphazardly. He has not done so in all things we have thus far discovered. There is a perfection, a certainty, a plan, a purpose in the most minute items of His creation. The human eye has 800 parts, and we need all of them for the transmission of light and scenes to be photographed on the retina of our invisible camera. Was the construction of the eye an accident—just happened to be that way? No, there are no happened-to-be-so's in the great plans and processes of our Creator. It is a glorious conception—this world under the supervision of One who can tell the whole race exactly what to do with her problems; tell how to destroy the curses, visible and invisible. The enemies of field and garden can then be disposed of, and the whole earth brought back to Edenic beauty and glory. There will be no more famines and pestilences; no more weeping widows and hungry children.

“Sickness, sorrow, pain, and death,
Be felt and feared no more.”

“The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose.”
Think of the vast Sahara all out in full bloom—a garden, where now there is desolation and death. The wide stretches of Wyoming, Idaho, and New Mexico bringing forth their abundant harvests. The dry region along the Cascades with growing orchards needing no more irrigation. The millions of acres in our great West composed of volcanic ashes, rich beyond computation with all the minerals for growing the best of vegetables and grain, waiting for His touch for it to spring into life. “The parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water.”

No more droughts, no more tornadoes, no more earthquakes, no more tidal waves, no cyclones, no more freezing of early fruit, no more boll weevil and cankerworm. At the helm of this planetary Ship of State will be the strong, imperial Hand that can guide it into havens of peace, plenty, and joy forever. We shall hear Him speak to us over the air. We shall see His face. When the curtains of night enfold us, we shall know that “the wicked have ceased from troubling, and the weary are at rest.” We are glad to register our faith in the blessed hope of His glorious appearing. And doubtless there will resound from earth, sea, and sky, like the voice of many waters—“Allelujah! For the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!”

PARAGON

“PARAGON” as defined by Webster is: “A model or pattern by way of distinction, implying superior excellence.” In Christ’s memorable sermon on the mountain He says: “Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.” “Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.” In every avenue of life we can find something worthy of our imitation. The progressive farmer provides himself with the best of agricultural literature, and from it selects the best methods of farming. He visits the model farmer, the one who has made a success in farming; he uses the most useful implements, plants the best seed, hires the best men when needed, and the result is, his home is an ideal of thrift, of success, and of culture. His children grow up and go forth into the world with minds well stored with habits of thrift, of virtue, and with the genial sunshine of home, from which they took their model.

Thus it is with any vocation in life: men either progress or retrograde. If a man or people or nation patterns after that which is elevating, he will reach a higher station, not only intellectually, physically, but both socially and morally. But if he patterns after things that are degrading, he will at last be found wanting in all the essential elements of character, and sink to rise no more.

We must have a standard or model; and who is worthy to be our pattern but the perfect One—the Christ? Does not all fullness dwell in Him? Is He not the polar star of all our hopes? Is He not the ideal of all perfection? Where is our oasis in this dreary desert but the Christ? Is He not our rest, our bread of life, and our immortality? Who is the sure foundation but Christ? Is He not the one that is altogether lovely, the chiefest among ten thousand? Is He beautiful? “Out of Zion the perfection of beauty God hath shined.”

Now mankind have the marks of sin, but who could portray the change if all had the impress of Jesus on their faces? And some day, some time, that radical change will come to those that love the Son now; unto those that “love his appearing,” shall the King come in all His glory, to transform, to eradicate even the semblance of imperfection in our likeness or nature, and we shall then be elevated to that condition of being like Him, for we shall see our model as He is. “Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God.”

“Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.” “That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.”
—N. R. Smith in Messiah’s Advocate.

THE NEW SANHEDRIN

ABOUT a year ago some Jews in Denver, Colorado, formed the idea of having a new trial of Jesus by a Sanhedrin of modern Jewish leaders, to go over the evidence presented at His first trial in Jerusalem and determine whether He was unjustly condemned or not. A recent issue of The Hebrew Messenger carries a report of this new trial, which was held in the city of Jerusalem last July, before a packed assembly. Interest among Jews was intense. Dr. Beldeissel, a prominent jurist, opened the proceedings; and Dr. Blandisler spoke for the "prosecution," upholding the judgment of the old Sanhedrin. Dr. Reichswehr was "defense" counsel, and he spoke for five hours, maintaining that the judgment of the old Sanhedrin was unjust, and that Jesus' crucifixion was a "judicial murder." When the verdict was brought in, by an almost unanimous vote Jesus was declared innocent, the complaint against Him was termed a "dreadful mistake," and further, the body declared their conviction that divine judgment would continue to follow the Jewish people until they "freed themselves of their horrible sin."

This action by these erstwhile enemies of Jesus ought to go a long way in breaking down the prejudice of the Jewish race against Christianity. May the Lord open their eyes and hearts that they may receive Him as their Savior before it is too late.—Selected by Lottie E. Young.

THE DISPENSATIONS

out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God."

We know what effect the pouring out of God's spirit upon a people would have when we read of Pentecost. That is the people that God has and uses as a nucleus to reign over when He establishes His kingdom, which eventually spreads till it reaches "from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth," and He uses that nation in His work of subduing and bringing into subjection all the nations of the earth, for "all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him." Psalm 72:12: "For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy." He shall keep up the good work until all nations shall be blessed, and the whole earth be filled with His glory

I attended a church recently during their holiday memorial services. And they opened them by singing,

"A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify,
A never dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky."

I couldn't help but notice the difference in doctrine and sentiment which the redeemed sang from their place of refuge in the heavens from the storm of God's wrath, which He poured out upon the inhabitants of the earth during the opening of the seals; a song which they sang in honor of their newly crowned King (Rev. 5:9): "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

By H. B. Hathaway

Where was it? Who had it? Where is it now? Where will it be when restored? The following scriptures answer these questions:

Kingdom of God taken from Jews (Matt. 21:43).

Was taken by force (Matt. 11:12).

Jesus' promise to the twelve apostles about when it is restored (Matt. 19:28).

David's throne promised to Jesus (Luke 1:30-34).

Promise to overcomers (Rev. 3:21).

Christ to sit on David's throne (Acts 2:29-37).

It is overturned and is to remain so until Christ returns (Ezek. 21:25-27).

To come to pass in the last days: the Lord's house to be established in the top of the mountain at Jerusalem (Isa. 2:1-6; also Mic. 4:1-9).

Kingdom of heaven to start in a small way and grow until it includes the whole world (Matt. 13:31, 32).

Psalm 72 gives a fine description of the future reign of Christ.

The kingdoms of this world to become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ (Rev. 11:15).

His glorious reign in Jerusalem (Isa. 25:6-9).

The kingdom postponed (Luke 19:11-13) until Christ returns (Acts 1:10, 11).

Christ to judge the living and dead at His appearing and kingdom (2 Tim. 4:1-5).

A river will proceed out of the throne of God and the Lamb (Rev. 22:1-6). A more complete description of the river is given in Ezekiel 47.

Redemption of the ruling element of the kingdom (Rev. 5:9, 10).

Little flock promised the kingdom (Luke 12:32).

The apostles asked Christ if He would restore it to them at that time (Acts 1:6).

The earth given to the children of men (Psa. 115:15, 16).

The saints will possess the kingdom (Dan. 7:22) when Christ comes (Hos. 3:4, 5; Amos 9:11).

The house of many mansions (John 14:2, 3). Where it will be located (Acts 15:15, 16; also Isa. 60 and Isa. 9:6, 7).

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth." When that prayer is answered the throne of the Lord will be in Jerusalem (Jer. 3:14-19).

Abreast of the Times

Reject Moralistic View of Sex

"If a man beget an hundred children, . . . and his soul be not filled with good, . . . I say, that an untimely birth is better than he."—Eccl. 6:3.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 16.—"There is a widespread disposition on the part of intelligent, serious, and ethical" (?) "persons to reject, theoretically and in practice, what I have called the moralistic view of sex, and to regard sex expression as a physiological, romantic, and aesthetic aspect of life, rather than a peculiarly and specifically moral matter," was the declaration made by Prof. Howard M. Parshley, instructor in zoology at Smith's College, today in an address to five hundred women at the birth control conference.

This departure from what he termed the old "moralistic sex restrictions" the professor looked upon as a "great moral advance," and he predicted that in the future "it will become fully possible, and, indeed, inevitable, for our society openly to adopt as fundamental the biological view of sex."

With teachings like these introduced into women's colleges and finding expression in our high schools it is not surprising that looseness in the sex relations is so rapidly developing. God has placed sex relations on the highest possible plane. In creation itself He indicated that one man and one woman should constitute the basis of the family, and that these two should become in their children "one flesh."

Again the Alarm of War!

"Thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war."—Jer. 4:19.

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—Only the decisive action of President Roosevelt can delay the coming of the worst war of history was the unanimous conclusion of four eminent speakers who addressed the Foreign Policy Association today. Carlton J. H. Hayes, professor of history at Columbia University; Sisley Huddleston, European correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor; Arnold Wolfers of Yale University; and Dorothy Thompson joined in urging strong measures to combat "the militant nationalism" of the chief European Powers.

The speakers insisted that if such a conflict took place the United States would "almost certainly" be drawn into active participation in it.

The present "state of latent warfare" was attributed first to France, and then to Germany, Italy, Soviet Russia, and Japan. The speakers were agreed that the nations responsible for the menace of war that now hangs over the entire world were the larger rather than the smaller Powers.—Selected by O. F. Marsh.

Worker's Revolution Forecast

"Every man's sword shall be against his brother."—Ezek. 38:21.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 5.—A major war at this time, such as one between Russia and Japan, or Russia and Germany, would rapidly resolve itself into a civil war between classes because of the well organized Communist parties which are said now to be fully prepared to take advantage of such a struggle to bring about the long planned world revolution was the opinion voiced by I. O. Ford, leader of the Communist Party in this city.

Ford predicted that in the near future all industrial nations, including the United States, would have governments modeled after that of Soviet Russia. "Now that the NRA, CWA, AAA, and other alphabetical illusions have failed," Ford said, "the workers want and are working for the revolution more than ever."

Labor unrest is world-wide, and we may expect many outbreaks and riots to occur not only in Europe, but in America as well. With little or no religious impulse to restrain them the laboring classes of the great cities will be easily led into dangerous excesses that will, unless speedily checked, lead to violence and bloodshed.

The time is at hand when One shall come to "judge the poor of the people, . . . save the children of the needy, and . . . break in pieces the oppressor."—Psalm 72:4.—Item selected by George B. Alldridge.

New German Heaven Planned

"This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, . . . walk after other gods, to serve them."—Jer. 13:10.

BERLIN, Germany, Feb. 2.—The old German paganism is finding many advocates in modern Germany. About 100,000 have already announced their return to the Nordic faith of pre-Christian times. At a convention held in Eisenach they passed the following resolution: "We are adherents of a Germanic faith which derives its guiding strength from the religious inheritance of the German people, whose creative religious power has remained alive through more than a thousand years and into our present day.

"We all confess that, rooting in divine reality, we are responsible with our Germanic origin before this divine reality, and before our people for a German-born faith."

Adherents of the new movement, which is receiving much encouragement from highly placed officials of the Government, are demanding that it be recognized as one of the religions approved by the State, and that school children be given the privilege of choosing between the Catholic, Protestant, and Germanic religions. They ask further that the State collect their church taxes as it does those of other denominations.

SALES POLICY

IN ORDER to clarify any questions in the minds of those having dealings with the National Berean Society, the definite policy of the Society concerning the sale of its publications is hereby described. The Society asks that prospective or regular purchasers of Berean publications study the announcement carefully.

Sample copies of any of the Society's publications will be mailed to any applicant on an approval basis. Not more than one copy of each type of book will be sent to any one person. Books not purchased are to be returned at the expense of the individual receiving the samples within thirty days from the time the books are received. If an order is placed, the books not purchased are to be returned; samples of the type of book ordered will be counted as a part of the order. If samples are not returned within thirty days after their receipt, the usual list price will be charged for them. Postage expended in forwarding sample copies will not be charged.

Books will be shipped by mail or express, prepaid, within twenty-four hours after an order has been received, provided that the exact name and address of the purchaser and an accurate statement as to the number and name of the books wanted is included in the order. The twenty-four hour guarantee cannot hold good if insufficient information is furnished by the order.

Credit will be extended as long as is necessary to purchasers; but it is asked that those having open accounts remember that the Society's bills are quite as important as the bills of the grocer and the baker, and should be paid as promptly. Statements will be forwarded at the time an order bought on credit is mailed out, and will be sent thereafter at the end of each month until the bill is paid.

Money orders should be made out to the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois, and not to any individual nor to the National Bible Institution. The N. B. I. does not handle Berean publications. No money should be sent the Oregon Berean office except money in payment for books. Dues, offerings, and miscellaneous payments should be made to the treasurer, Mr. Virgil Claypool, 506 East Chestnut Street, Robinson, Illinois.

Price lists of Berean lesson and story books and any further information will be furnished by the Society. Address the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois.

Tracts are sent free and postpaid in any quantity requested from the stock on hand.

LIFE OF PAUL

PAUL, who later was called Paul, was a Jew born in Tarsus. He was a very well educated man, being taught by Gamaliel, who was one of the greatest teachers of that time. He was a Pharisee, one of a religious group of people who believed in the resurrection of the dead. He believed and worshiped God, keeping the laws taught by the Jews. He was also a Roman citizen, living in the Roman Empire. Paul was an important man even before he became a Christian. Later in Paul's life, God sent him to go into the world and preach the gospel.

Paul's conversion was the turning point of his life. On his way to Damascus with letters giving him power to bring Christians from their peaceful worship and prayer and cast them into prison, a very bright light shone down from heaven, blinding him so he could not see. He heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Jesus told him to go into Damascus, so the men that were with him led him into the city.

Paul was then baptized and became a Christian. He started his work in Antioch, where he was the first apostle of the Gentiles. One important event in Paul's life happened at Lystra. The people of that town were very angry at Paul, so they decided to stone him. He was stoned until thought dead; he was thrown outside the city. But Paul arose and continued his work. One day in a vision Paul saw a man beckoning to him and saying, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us."

He did so, and Lydia, a seller of purple dye, was the first convert to Christianity in Europe. Paul was arrested and thrown into prison. An earthquake opened the doors of the prison. As a result of this, the jailer and his household were converted.

At Berea, the people heard him gladly, and searched the Scriptures daily to prove the truth of the things they heard. This is why we call our Bible classes Bereans. Paul made three missionary journeys besides the one to Rome. He was arrested in Jerusalem and the Jews plotted to kill him. His nephew revealed the plot to the authorities, and he was taken by night to Caesarea, where he was held a prisoner for two years. He finally appealed to Caesar.

When he was sent to Caesar, he was shipwrecked on the way and landed on the island of Melita. At Rome he dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, preaching the kingdom of God to all that came to him. He wrote fourteen letters to the different churches and individuals.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven."

WANTED: HELPERS FOR JESUS

How many of you have made your way through a great crowd of people attending a game or event of some kind? You looked at the faces of the people about you and thought how queer they looked. Or perhaps you wondered what some of them were thinking because of the expression of their faces. You couldn't help but feel sorry for some of them.

Jesus had just such an experience one day. As He went about His work great crowds always followed Him, either to ask some favor or to hear what He had to say.

To Jesus the people seemed to be blindly stumbling along without a leader. And He realized that they needed help very, very much. There was so much work to do and so few to help do it.

Up to this time He had been doing His work almost alone. He had chosen five men to help, but they needed so much instruction before they knew how to go ahead. On this day that He had seen such sad and doubtful looks upon the faces of the people, He chose seven more men to go out with the other five.

Matthew 10 gives us the instructions He gave them as they started out. Notice that they were to take no money with them, no extra clothing or shoes. Isn't that strange? Jesus, the Son of God, to whom the whole earth belongs, could have given them a purse filled with gold and all the extra clothing they could carry, but He didn't.

Do you know what He gave them that was worth more than anything money could buy? Look in verses 1, 8, 30, and 31, and see what it was. He didn't tell them that they would have an easy time, did He?

You'd think they would have been afraid to start out when He told them they would be beaten, put in prison, driven from one place to another, and even put to death. If they hadn't had faith enough in their Leader to go ahead in spite of danger, they wouldn't have been worthy of being His helpers. They had a chance to back out if they wanted to do so. Jesus told them that the one who wouldn't take up his cross and follow Him wasn't worthy of Him.

But He also told them that if they kept to their task and remained true to Him, great reward would come to them. How many of you know what that reward was? Find the verses that tell you.

Now let's see what we can find out about these twelve men. Simon was a fisherman from Bethsaida, living at Capernaum. Jesus changed his name to Peter afterwards. "Simon" means "obedient." Who knows what "Peter" means? Andrew was his brother and partner in the fishing business; his name means "a strong man."

James and John, brothers, were probably cousins of Jesus. Their father was Zebedee, who no doubt owned the large fishing boat they used. What is there about fishermen which would make them good helpers for Jesus?

Matthew, also called Levi, wrote this very book we are studying. He collected taxes for the Roman Government. Ask Mother to tell you why the Jews hated the tax collectors. His name means "a reward."

Philip, which means "a lover of horses," brought his friend, Bartholomew, to Jesus and both of them became His helpers. Bartholomew was also called Nathanael, "gift of God." Now the "Bar" in Bartholomew means "son of"; so he was the son of Tolmai.

Thomas, meaning "a twin," was the doubter, you know. Can you find the story of his doubt? Then there was another James, son of Alphaeus, also, Lebbaeus Thaddeus, and another Simon, called Zelotes, or the Zealot, one of those who desired to throw off the power of the Roman Government.

Last and saddest of all was Judas, who betrayed his Lord for thirty pieces of silver. His other name, "Iscaiot," comes from the name of his birthplace, Kerioth, a village in Judea. Now how many of you can name all twelve? This will help you:

"As Jesus went about and _____,
And preached, and deeds of healing wrought,
He saw the crowds like sheep astray,
Who shepherdless had lost their _____.
Twelve friends He called whom He would teach,
Then sent them forth to heal and _____.
Of these twelve men the first four names
Are _____, _____, _____, and _____;
Then Philip and _____,
Doubting Thomas, and _____, too;
James, the son of Alphaeus,
Simon the Zealot, and _____.
Of all the twelve, the one dark blot
Was _____, called _____.
These twelve were given power and told
To be courageous, tactful, _____,
To freely give what they'd received, Confessing Him whom they _____."

—Matthew 9:37, 38.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Twelve Sent Forth.

Aim: There is no other work so satisfying as getting others to become Christians.

Basic Truth: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations."—Matt. 24:14.

I. Jesus Needs Workers. (Matt. 9:35-38.) God has always used men and women to carry on His work on earth. It is true that angelic beings have appeared on rare occasions to assist humans in their efforts to accomplish the divine purposes, but the larger part of the work has ever been done by man under God's direction. Jesus taught His disciples to be useful to God and to their fellows, for that was the purpose of man's creation. Jesus still needs workers to carry His great message forward into all the world, and will continue to need such coloborers with Him until He comes.

II. Jesus Prepares His Workers. (Matt. 10:1-6.) Those whom He calls into service need never work alone. When Jesus sent forth the twelve, He sent them two by two, that they might daily have the comfort of mutual sympathy. But more than that, He sent them out equipped with His own divine power, the power that comes from God. He was not with them in person, but He was constantly with them in spirit and power. This is still true of those who work for the Lord. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," is a promise which Jesus faithfully keeps.

III. Jesus Provides the Message. (Matt. 10:7, 8, 32, 33.) The instructions issued by the Lord were plain. They had but to be imitators of Himself. They had been with Him for a long time, listening to His words, witnessing His works, and observing His reactions to human need. They were now to follow His steps. They were to preach the same truth, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand"; they were to admonish the people to repent, as He had done; they were to be constantly helpful in every way possible, both spiritually and from a material standpoint; and they were themselves to be prayerful and watchful until He came to equip them for eternal service. In all this the apostles have left us an example to faithfully follow in our lives.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Harvest and Workers. When the Master saw the multitudes and their ignorance of the "way of life" and those things pertaining to the kingdom of God, He was moved with compassion and expressed to His disciples the world's need of harvest laborers. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." If such were the conditions in the time of the Master, surely the needs of today are more distressing. People are in ignorance and are not aware of the fact. They are not acquainted with the real gospel of the kingdom. There is a great need for laborers who understand and know the gospel message to go forth and tell the people the truth concerning the coming kingdom of God and the reign of the King of kings. Sunday school teachers will do well to urge and stress the need of the individual's giving himself over to this great work.

Worthy His Hire. "The workman is worthy his meat." Because a man separates himself to the ministry of the gospel is no reason why he should not receive sufficient remuneration to provide him and his family with the necessities of life. He who feeds his flock with spiritual meat and food is entitled according to God's plan and should receive the carnal things from those whom he feeds the spiritual. God holds the laity responsible for the proper discharge of this duty.

Confession and Denial. Confession of Christ before men is a necessary, yes, very important, part of a Christian's responsibility. The acceptance of an individual by the Father is dependent on the individual's confession before men of the Father. When a person begins and endeavors to continue his Christian career in secret, it is evidence of weakness and insincerity, and is not recognized by the Father. —C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."—Matthew 9:37, 38.

It is just as true today as it was in the time of Christ that the harvest is plentiful and the laborers few. There are only a few, comparatively speaking, who care to give up all else to work in the Master's vineyard. People seem to think that the sacrifice is too great; but how little we realize no harvest gathers itself: it must have laborers to reap and garner the sheaves into the fold.

Well may our prayers be that each Christian be a laborer and a reaper and gatherer in the Lord's harvest, that it may be said of us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Jesus commanded His followers to preach the gospel to all people that they might have the opportunity to believe and repent and thereby escape the wrath of God. If we would have salvation for ourselves, we must strive to win others to Christ. It is a part of God's plan to save people by the foolishness of preaching (1 Cor. 1:21). This work has been delegated to us. It is our responsibility, and we must accept it if we would have life.

We are commanded to keep the golden rule. We want others to tell us of the good that God has promised. We also want them to point out the things which will keep us from realizing these blessings. This makes it necessary for us to try to win others to Christ and then help them in their struggle against sin and death.

This is a selfish reason, which also works to the glory of God. We desire salvation and glory for ourselves. We cannot obtain this without obeying the command of Jesus to preach the gospel to every creature (Mark 16:15, 16). Our future happiness and honor are increased by winning others to Christ (1 Thess. 2:19, 20). Daniel 12:3 tells us that they who turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever. God is calling out from among the Gentiles a people for His great name. When He has all He needs for His work, He will send Jesus with our reward. We want our promised reward as soon as possible, so let us work to save others. Just a selfish reason, but it will seem generous indeed to the one saved through the gospel as administered by us.—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Jesus' Friends Work for Him.

Memory Verse: "Freely ye have received, freely give."—Matt. 10:8b.

Do you remember the story about Jesus calling the fishermen as His helpers? He called eight others, also, making twelve in all.

One day He called them together and said, "I am going to send you out to work for Me. Go not to the Gentiles, but to people of Israel. Here are the things I want you to do: Preach about God's kingdom, heal the sick, and raise the dead."

Now suppose we were given power to do all these things, wouldn't we feel that a great gift had been given to us? And wouldn't we want to use it to heal all our friends who were sick? Yes, I'm sure we would.

I think Jesus wanted the disciples to know what a great gift had been given to them, too, and wanted them to use it to help others, for He said to them, "Freely ye have received, freely give." Now you say just what Jesus said.

We do not have the great gift that the disciples had, but there are many, many other things that we can do to help others: running errands, smiling, being kind, taking others to church and Sunday school. Name others. If we do good to others, Jesus says it is doing good for Him.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THE HISTORY OF ISRAEL

The following letter accompanied the manuscript by Alta King published in this paper under the above title. Miss King's address is 1103 Main St., Cedar Falls, Iowa.

"Inclosed is the first installment of an outline of the history of Israel which I began about two years ago. It is intended as a guide to the study of the history of God's chosen people, and it is suggested that it be used as outlines are used in school. I am sending it for publication hoping that it may help to meet the need of home study, especially among isolated believers. The outline could be copied in a notebook and under each topic could be jotted down brief notes and comments as they are gleaned from the reading of the references. Also questions for future consideration. Blank outline maps could be placed in the notebook and the names of the places written as they come up in the lessons. If this outline proves that it meets a need in either class or home study, I shall be glad to continue it, and I would welcome suggestions and criticisms that would make it more serviceable."

PUYALLUP, WASHINGTON

Possibly the brethren might be interested in knowing what the Church of God at Puyallup, Wash., is doing in these strenuous times of unrest and uncertainty all over the world. We are all deeply interested in watching the signs, so rapidly developing, of the soon coming of the Lord; and are earnestly striving to be prepared for that glorious event.

At our business meeting on January 2, when the church met to elect officers for the ensuing year and to attend to other matters connected with the welfare of the body, Lyle Rankin, son of Bro. J. C. Rankin, was selected by the church to be a minister of the gospel. Bro. Lyle is a young man of ability and sterling integrity, has a pleasing personality, and is very convincing and logical in his presentation of the doctrines of the Bible; and above all, he has the full confidence of the membership. For some time past he has alternated with me at our Sunday morning services, and we can confidently recommend him to the brethren with whom he may meet.

Sunday morning, Jan. 7, the church membership went by autos to Tacoma, to a home there, where Mrs. Alice Dracup was confined to her bed with that dread malady, inward cancer. She was carried in a chair from the bed to the bathroom, and was baptized in a bathtub. She exhibited wonderful fortitude and faith, her only regret being that she had not been obedient earlier in life, so that she might have been of service to her Master while in full health and strength. After the baptism the Christian ordinances were attended to, then later we all went to the home of Sr. Hoganson (a sister of Sr. Dracup), where we had a bounteous repast, then a second meeting before returning to our homes.

Bro. L. G. Jaeger is very sick with heart trouble. At times his life was despaired of. His daughter, Sr. Burk, and her husband, who live near his home in Tacoma, are caring for him. Pray for him, brethren, that if it be the Lord's will, he may be restored to health once more.

QUARTERLY NORTHWESTERN CONFERENCE

The quarterly Northwestern Conference of Oregon and Washington will be held March 2, 3, and 4 at Corvallis, Ore.

The question of securing a minister for Oregon and Washington will come before the house, therefore we urge all members and officers to be present.

We are appealing to the brethren of these two states to pray for the success of these meetings, and to cooperate in every possible way with the officers of the conference and churches in their work of promoting the cause here.

Should you find it utterly impossible to come to Corvallis, write us a letter and let us know of the work that you are doing in your locality. Perhaps we can help you solve some of your problems.

A cordial invitation is extended to all. "Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent."

In His service,
Gladys Barber.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Mrs. Dewey Overmyer, church secretary, has announced that a service will be held at the Burr Oak Church of God on Sunday, Feb. 18. Paul M. Hatch of Harvey, Ill., will speak morning and evening. "Everyone is cordially invited. Come and bring your neighbor."

CALIFORNIA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

The California Quarterly Conference of the Church of God was held Sunday, Feb. 4, in Los Angeles with around one hundred in attendance.

At ten o'clock there was a Sunday School Rally with recitations by the little folks, songs, and a very lovely violin solo played by Marie Bleasdale, accompanied by her mother, Sr. Bleasdale. A one act play, "The Three Resolutions," was well given by the little children and much credit is due Sr. MacLeod, who directed the program. Bro. George Rahn, superintendent of the Sunday school, reviewed the lesson, a very enjoyable hour for all present.

There was a welcome by Bro. MacLeod of Los Angeles; Bro. Adamson of Pomona; Bro. Reid from Riverside; Pasadena, Bro. S. G. Elton; Long Beach, Sr. Railsback.

The Morning Worship Service was opened by the choir singing "The Lord Is in His Holy Temple" and a solo by Mrs. Wm. Prickett of Pomona. Bro. MacLeod gave one of his masterful sermons on "Is the Stress of the Times Destroying Spirituality?" He said in part these times test the metal of which we are made, and asked if it is turning us from God, and are we warning the world what is coming, and if not will the blood be on our heads. He left the subject with the question to each one of us, Is the stress of the times destroying spirituality? Bro. Adamson of Pomona had charge of the communion table and read some of the wonderful old scriptures concerning the Passover and presented the truth as to who is eligible to partake of the emblems. Another selection by the choir, "Till He Comes," and "they sung a song, and went out." A goodly crowd went to the park for a picnic dinner, and the weather was balmy and warm, just ideal for such an outing.

The afternoon sessions started with one of Sr. Railsback's good plain talks on the things we never grow tired of. She stands before you with the gospel message expressed in all its simplicity and beauty, quoting scripture after scripture. She spoke of the Jews not seeking the Lord yet, but they are going back to Jerusalem for judgment. The shirt manufacturers must be doing a good business these days, as we hear of the brown shirts—all colors, the black shirt, the brown shirt, the blue shirt, and now the silver shirt here in America. To keep up with the times one must read much. After Sr. Railsback's talk the meeting was turned over to an old-fashioned social or praise meeting with Sr. Jessie Kauffman leader. Our whole theme throughout the day was spirituality; and there were a few remarks we should believe the Lord was in our midst, that we should talk to Him and exhort one another, sing praises and not forget that we are chosen, and not forget the Lord, for we are told if we do forget we shall perish. Several were up on their feet expressing themselves as to the love of God and His wonder-

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

The "Parents' Night" service for Sunday night, Feb. 4, was a gratifying success. The house was packed, with chairs in the aisles, and some appreciated special music was given. The sermon was entitled "The Biggest Job in Life."

On Saturday night, Feb. 3, about 55 of our church family gathered at the "Annex" for a utility shower on Mr. and Mrs. Harold Rice, the young couple who were married the previous week. A pleasant evening was enjoyed and many fine gifts presented to the bride and groom.

And now our church family is rejoicing with another bride and groom. Bro. Durwood York and Sr. Iva Downing were married February 6, and all wish this splendid young couple the best in life's way.

Sunday school attendance on February 4 was 334. Plans and preparations are being worked out to take care of the largest Sunday school in our history during the next few months. And the church is happy to welcome new attendants at its various meetings.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

ful goodness, and one brother said he thought we don't get up and say such things enough these days, for we are told we should do it all the more as we see that day approaching. Some of the old favorite hymns were asked for, and it seemed to be a worth while session in the conference.

This was followed by a short business meeting. It was decided the time and place for the next conference would be left to the board. Bro. Hammond closed the conference with one of his enthusiastic, forceful talks, his subject being "Lights on the Way to Salvation." He said when he started to look up references on the subject there were so many they swamped him. How easy to find if we seek. How many times the kingdom is spoken of, and how few ever know there is such a place.

And so ended a very uplifting day, filled full of the good things we are looking for and striving for. We believe we carried out our hope that this conference would be a renewing of spirituality. It seemed all threw out of their hearts the thoughts of the flesh and tried to be in the spirit of Christ. For all the brethren scattered abroad what a blessing it is to be gathered together, to worship, sing, and pray, to exhort, to be filled with God's love for us so we can separate with the assurance of receiving more strength to help on the way to eternal life.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Miss Jessie M. Wilson requests that her change of address be noted in The Herald. She now lives at 1718 E. 20th St., Oakland, Calif.

Sr. Mary Elma Bell, Long Beach, Calif., renewing her subscription, declares she finds much comfort in the pages of The Herald, and prays for its continued success.

We wish to call special attention to the brief definition of reverence by John M. Kelley, reprinted in this issue from the "World's Crisis." Lack of respect for God's house is one of the greatest evils in our modern church services.

The article by H. B. Hathaway, "The Kingdom of Heaven," appearing in this issue is to be published soon by the author as a tract in an edition limited to 150 copies.

The price of the eight page pamphlet issued by the Ministerial Association of the Church of God covering the essential teaching of the church is as follows: Single copies, 5 cents; 10 copies, 25 cents; or $1.00 per hundred. Order from this office.

Sr. G. B. Sprinkle, Cheyenne, Wyo., says, "We pray that the funds needed just now may be raised in due time, and that this good work may continue until Jesus returns. We need to be filled with the spirit that Paul had when he said, 'I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.'" How true that is!

Writing from Cleveland, Ark., R. M. Shewmake says regarding The Herald, "We really feel that now we cannot do without it." That's the way we want all of our readers to feel, that the paper is a necessity in their homes. May God help us to make it acceptable to Him.

We gladly welcome to our Church of God ministerial fellowship Bro. Lyle Rankin of Washington, and pray that his service may be wonderfully blessed of God. Bro. Rankin was chosen for his sacred calling by action of the Church of God at Puyallup, Wash., on January 2, 1934.

Word from the John B. Adams family of Silvis, Ill., reflects the same difficult financial conditions under which all communities have suffered for so long a time. They speak of the loss of their dear son, Thurlow, but look forward hopefully to a glad reunion at the Lord's coming. Thank God for the blessed hope set before us!

The following suggestive quotation was attached to a letter from Sr. Lottie Young, Seattle, Wash., and is too good to lose. May all take it to heart in connection with the needs of the N. B. I. as outlined by our manager recently. "If thou hast abundance, give alms accordingly: if thou hast but a little, be not afraid to give according to that little."—Tobit 4:8.

The church at Eldorado, Ill., has just installed a large furnace stove, an improvement that was greatly needed and which adds much to the comfort of the congregation.

Sr. C. W. Howe of Waterloo, Iowa, was a welcome visitor at the services of the Rockford, Ill., church last Sunday. The services were unusually well attended due to reasons which will appear in our next issue.

Mrs. Ervena S. Nye, whose permanent address is North Anson, Maine, is spending the remainder of the winter at the home of her cousins, at "Lakewood," Madison, Maine. Sr. Nye is well known to many of our brethren, especially in the Niagara district.

Word from Sr. Beulah Wilson, Holbrook, Nebr., tells of the rapid recovery of her mother, Sr. A. B. Wilson, from a serious operation for appendicitis and gallstones. Mrs. Wilson is in the Brewster Hospital in Holdrege, Nebr., but expects to be able to return to her home in a few days.

The committee appointed to completely revise the constitution of the General Conference is mapping out a plan and will soon be actively at work on this important and necessary effort. Among other matters to be considered by the committee are certain changes and additions to be made in the statement of doctrinal teaching that it may conform more closely to the generally accepted thought of the church at large.

A delayed report reaches us of interesting services that were held by C. E. Lapp, pastor of the Ripley, Ill., church, at St. Louis, Mo., early in January and at the beginning of the present month. Dr. Logan of that city furnished a large room in her apartment building in which the meetings were held. The attendance was good on both occasions, and it is hoped that the good seed sown will bear fruit unto life eternal.

One of our most able younger ministers writes, "I wish you would stress tithing more in The Restitution Herald. To me it makes a spiritual growth in the individual." Tithing is a systematic method of making freewill offerings to the Lord's work. Those who have tried it have found that it does greatly encourage spiritual development. Would not this young minister write an article for us along the line suggested?

A most interesting letter reaches us from Sr. Lucille LeCrone, formerly of Blair, Neb., but now pastor of a community church in Helena, Okla. The work there is growing in interest and attendance since Sr. LeCrone's arrival. Her grandmother, Sr. Fanny LeCrone, has been teaching the adult class in the Sunday school there for five years, and has prepared many to receive with open minds the truth as presented so ably by Sr. Lucille. Let us all ask God's blessing to rest upon this work.

REVERENCE

BY REVERENCE we mean "that feeling of profound respect for a person, place, or thing, which is expressed in words; or a silent attitude of love which permeates the entire being."

There should be reverence for the home, for each and every one connected with the home; for the meetinghouse though it be ever so humble; and for every beautiful thing in the world that appeals to the finer senses of man. Reverence is a trait of all noble types of humanity. Thoreau loved the woods and flowers about Walden Pond and we are told that his love was shown by a reverence and respect for all the country about Walden. Emerson used to sit and muse on the banks of the Concord River, and one time he told Louise M. Aleott that the stream flowed "from some place out of heaven, in order to create a love for nature in the children of the world." I have read: "Whenever Daniel Webster entered Faneuil Hall in Boston, he always bowed his head in silence, for a minute or two, in order to express his reverence for the 'Cradle of Liberty.'"

For many years I have been convinced that there is a woeful lack of reverence on the part of many professed Christians for the house of worship. We seem to forget at times that every meetinghouse has been dedicated to God for His service, and for the purpose of worshiping Him. The spirit of the Lord should be felt in every house of worship, and yet the confusion and noise at times in churches prevents any growth of the feeling of reverence, and tends to thoughts which would repel the spirit we are seeking. Often as a Christian minister have I seen choir members reading, and, what is worse still, even gossiping during the sermon. I am sure that in many instances it was not due to a lack of interest in the preacher, or in the welfare of the church, but simply through thoughtlessness on the part of well-meaning friends. I believe that this very thing has proved a source of discouragement to many a faithful servant of the Lord.

The less talking there is before the people are called together the better, for it is not always easy to supplant idle thoughts with good and wholesome ones. Lack of reverence for sacred things seems to be almost wholly an American characteristic. Too often children are allowed to destroy the very soul of a meeting by whispering and lack of reverence.

It is said that it is "an inspiring sight to watch the children enter St. Peter's at Rome for services, on Sunday morning." On approaching the great entrance they "cross their hands, offer prayers, and take part in some Gregorian chant." On entering "they never once think of carrying on some idle conversation," as we often do in our meetinghouses, but "during the entire time they are at services, only the utmost reverence is shown for the church and those who officiate in the ordinances!"

No one, I am sure, can deny the fact that at times it is hard to obtain the spirit of the Lord in our places of worship. God's spirit will not enter a place of confusion and disorder, or where reverence is lacking. This is a problem which should be of interest to all true worshipers of God. Anything that will add tone to our church services and thus make them more attractive should be welcomed by all those who have the welfare of our churches at heart.—John M. Kelley in World's Crisis.

MINISTERIAL PLATFORM

WE reproduce below the cover of the statement of teaching principles compiled last summer at the conference of ministers of the Church of God to which attention was called in our last issue.

As we review this brief analysis we experience a sense of satisfaction at the unity of thought among us that alone could make such a statement possible. And as we compare this latest analysis of truths emphasized by the Church of God leaders with similar outlines issued during the past 90 years, we are further impressed with the degree of harmony shown between them all. In not one essential doctrine do they disagree!

Bible Study for Personal Spiritual Growth

LET US note at the outset that it is the Bible of which we are to think in this discussion; not books about the Bible, no matter how many, or how helpful, or how accessible they may be. Let us also bear in mind that it is Bible study that is to engage our attention, not the subject of Bible reading, although we might profitably spend much time upon that. Nor are we to consider the subject of Bible listening, although that is almost a lost art in these days. It is Bible study which we are to emphasize, with all that the word "study" means to us as students. Moreover, it is Bible study for personal growth. It is not that form of Bible study designed to equip us to lead others, one by one, to Jesus Christ, although it furnishes an essential part of our equipment for such work. Nor is the object of such study first of all to enable us to help other Christians spiritually, by preparing us to give Bible readings, or to make spiritual talks, or to teach Bible classes, or to guide the Bible study of others, although it will prove invaluable as a preparation for all such work. It is Bible study for each man's own life which we shall keep clearly before us. Its object is personal growth.

What kind of growth is meant? Not growth in knowledge, although the world could far better afford to lose any other sixty-six books than these, viewing them simply as a storehouse of essential knowledge. Not intellectual growth, although it may be stated confidently that there is no other group of writings the study of which affords the same intellectual suggestiveness, grasp, breadth, and power. Above and beyond all this is the meaning of the term to which we shall limit our thought—Bible study for each man's spiritual growth. It is that Bible study which will make us better men tomorrow than today; which will find us far higher up the mountain path of Christian experience a year hence than at present; which enables us to meet God and to hear His voice and to know that it is His voice. It is that Bible study which opens up to us, each day, further and further vistas into the possibilities of the life hid with Christ in God.

Let us consider the importance of devotional Bible study.

This is the first part of an address delivered by John R. Mott which was first published by the "World's Morning Watch" in 1902. The succeeding installment will appear in an early issue of this paper.

may be on the roll of His professed disciples, but that is not sufficient proof. The real test is the life, and that is not possible apart from devotional Bible study. If you abide in the Word—that is, if you spend time there, if you dwell there, if you live there—then will you necessarily be a true disciple. Such Bible study alone shows us the needs of our spiritual lives. It reveals to us the weak places in our armor, the points of least resistance in our lives. It shows us ourselves as we are, and therefore as God sees us. Chrysostom says, "The cause of all our evils is our not knowing the Scriptures." Therefore, if we would overcome doubts, temptations, passion, evil imaginations, unclean, unholy, and proud thoughts let us center our energies upon such study. The devotional study of the Bible alone shows us the possibilities of our spiritual lives. Why be satisfied with living on the dead level or in the valley, if God intends that we be climbing in the peaks?

(2) To us as Christian workers. Would we work without friction, strain, anxiety, worry? Then let us apply ourselves to this kind of Bible study. We may not work so many hours, but we shall accomplish more, and when we leave, our work will not have to be undone. Without deep devotional study there is danger that our work become purely mechanical. It alone will make our experience fresh, rich, and full, and keep the realities of our faith vivid. If we would shape the work, and not be shaped by it, we must through these studies preserve a strong and ever-expanding inner life. Moreover, our fruitfulness in Christian work is absolutely conditional on our abiding in the Word. Above all, it is impossible to have the power of the Spirit of God as a constant possession apart from the study of the Bible. To do the work of God we must have the power of God. To have the power of God we must have the Spirit of God. The Bible is the channel through which the Spirit comes into the life. We do not

(1) To us as Christians. It is the test of true discipleship. Christ says, "If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples." We may call ourselves His disciples, but that does not prove that we are. Our names

"Arise, O Lord; let not man prevail: let the heathen be judged in thy sight. Put them in fear, O Lord: that the nations may know themselves to be but men."—Psalm 9:19, 20.

THE EDITOR'S PRAYER

MOST gracious God: As we view the threatening conditions in the world today, as we hearken to the voice of Time as it tells of the sorrows and anxieties that fill the earth with woe, we come unto Thee, the Author of all good and our only hope in these hours of distress and fear, asking Thee to strengthen us in our determination to stand firm and unyielding in the face of every event until the Lord comes. We thank Thee, O God, for the sustaining assurance the hope of a coming Savior provides. Amen.

WORLD UNREST

THE rapidity with which events are moving forward in Europe and the Far East makes careful analysis difficult if not impossible. It has been apparent for months that the rulers of the world have been seated on the lid of a madly boiling cauldron of widespread unrest which threatened to explode at any moment and shatter the peace of the world.

Developments in Austria, Germany, France, Spain, and Italy during the past few weeks seem to indicate very definitely that the forces of discontent and rebellion are beginning to escape with reverberating detonations and devastating results from the influences that have thus far held them in check. Just what the immediate outcome will be it is impossible to determine at the present time. The most optimistic observers, however, now acknowledge that the situation is exceedingly menacing, and that we may at any moment expect an explosion of cataclysmic proportions to occur.

Strange as it may seem, this very obviousness of the danger provides the only hope that the storm may not break at once, for it is generally when men are crying "peace and safety" the most loudly that "sudden destruction" comes upon them.

Be that as it may, the faithful disciple of the Lord has little to fear for himself whatever may happen to the world. If the events now happening really mark the "beginning of the end," as we believe they do, the Christian's deliverance from all danger and from all suffering for evermore is near at hand.

WHAT SHALL WE PREACH?

ONE OF the most difficult questions which the conscientious pastor faces constantly is, "What shall I preach about next Sunday?" And the longer he remains in the same locality the greater becomes the problem. He realizes the weight of the responsibility that rests upon him. He is the mouthpiece of God. He is the prophet of the most High. He must "preach the word" faithfully at all times, but his problem is to determine just what the individual members of his congregation need in the way of spiritual and intellectual diet from week to week. The truth of God is so vast and so varied, it is so rich in potential blessing and power, that he finds himself frequently at a loss to choose his subject.

The pastor should prayerfully study the character of his congregation, and endeavor to meet the needs of its individual members. For example, if, as is generally the case, the attendance at the morning service is largely drawn from the membership of the church, the need will be for spiritual food, for the "strong meat" of the Word. Not the hard technical questions of "doctrine," which all too frequently are considered to be "strong meat," but the glorious truths that lead men and women by meditation and prayer to draw near unto God, to enter into personal communion and fellowship with God, that they may know Him better and appreciate Him more.

If the evening service is attended to a considerable extent by non-members of the body of Christ, as it should be, the sermon should take on the nature of an evangelistic effort. The gospel of the kingdom in all its rich and varied elements should be presented. The entire scope of biblical teaching may be drawn upon in a gospel sermon, for the kingdom of God is the center of the entire scheme of salvation. The coming of the Lord, the resurrection of the dead, and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth should form the foundation of all evangelistic preaching. Upon this foundation should be placed the facts concerning the saving power of Jesus Christ: His death, burial, resurrection, and ascension; the necessity of faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins. These, and a thousand other related subjects, may be presented to the evening audience with profit to the hearer and to the glory of God.

"Father, I Thank Thee"

By Mary A. Gesin

THAT WE might comprehend a little of the nature of God and His Son, Jesus our Savior, the various relationships of this life are afforded us. The infinite can only be understood by comparison with the finite, the eternal by our experience with the temporal. Perhaps the more we attempt to understand those about us, the nearer we will come to a true conception of the divine nature.

For that very purpose God sent His Son into the world. In His great desire that the creatures of His hand should be drawn more closely to their Creator, God gave us Jesus, our Friend, our elder Brother, our Master, our Savior.

If you are so fortunate as to possess a friend, one to whom the very motives of your life are known, how much clearer is your comprehension of that greater Friend. If you have been blessed with friendship of that rarer sort, whether of the ties of blood or otherwise, your appreciation of the worth of friendship with the Master is the keener. For an earthly friend is limited by the bounds of mortality, while our heavenly Friend has at His command the resources of the universe.

Nothing is more pleasing to a real friend than that his friend shall come to him at all times with the affairs of his life. In times of sorrow, times of joy, times of need, and times of plenty, true friends find much to say to each other. Think you, then, that our heavenly Friend does not find greater joy when we confide in Him all that is in our hearts? And that is just what prayer is; that is the real essence of communion with God.

All of us realize that when a friend bestows a gift or a favor, whether of greater or lesser value, our natural response is one of gratitude, and a poor friend indeed it would be who left the gracious words unsaid. Even the beloved Son of God, who knew that all that His Father possessed was His, poured out expressions of thankfulness for those gifts of inestimable value. Let us scan a few of them.

In Matthew 11:25, we find an instance wherein our Lord spoke to His Father, expressing His gratitude. Notice His first words, "I thank thee, O Father." Gratitude for what? The revelation of His Father's will to the common ones of earth. Reason therein for thankfulness on our part as well? Abundant reason. We have only to search His Word.

Turn to the Gospel of John, chapter 11, where we have the account of the resurrection of Lazarus, that record which is a veritable treasure-house of comfort and instruction. Our interest just now is in the first words addressed by the Master to God, "Father, I thank thee." Observe that though Jesus knew that His Father heard Him on all occasions, yet He did not fail to thank Him for that priceless blessing.

If we did not believe deep in our hearts that God hears us, we would turn from Him to worship idols. For where would be the advantage? But do we pause often enough to thank Him for such unmerited favor? Suppose that God should act as an earthly friend might justly act—cease bestowing blessings that are not appreciated? The universe, including even His own followers, would soon be in a much more lamentable state than at present.

The Savior even thanked God for testings and sorrows. We have His very words to that effect. Study the record given us of the last supper with His disciples. Matthew and Luke both lend their pens to portray this sorrowful occasion. We read that Jesus "gave thanks" for the bread and the cup, and then He proceeded to explain to the apostles how the bread represented His body broken for them, and the cup His life spent in their service and finally offered up on the cross of pain and death. And He thanked God for that!

Then that marvelous seventeenth chapter of John which is wholly given over to our Savior's last prayer to His Father before His arrest at the hands of the relentless Roman soldiers. Though we do not find the identical words of gratitude, He breathes the very spirit of thankfulness to God for the opportunity given Him to proclaim His Father to the world and win a few to acceptance of eternal life, which is the result of knowing God. And at what a cost to Himself!

Brother, sister, in contemplation of our Savior's life and death, the spontaneous outburst of our hearts should be, "Father, we thank Thee for everything"—the very air we breathe, the comforts which daily sustain us, the opportunity of working for Thee, yes, even suffering for Thee, and best of all, that "blessed hope" which transforms the gloom that envelops the world into glory for His faithful ones.

Take What You Will

Take what you will and pay no heed to any bar that stands between you and the righteous need of your triumphant hands.

Be certain that your fond desire, the thing which you should be, alone has power to lift you higher, alone can set you free.

The man who turns and doubts and gropes and hesitates always, too weak of faith to trust his hopes, will tread no victor's ways.

Take what you will with knowledge sure that life was meant for this: that every aspiration pure at last must win to bliss.

For life should be a joyous thing, and man, serene, proud, bold, should wear existence as a king, his robes of cloth of gold.

A Great Denominational Need

THIS need is scripturally expressed in Romans 12:11—“Fervent in spirit; serving the Lord.”

Nothing is more needed among us than the divine, energizing life that will make us fervent in spirit in all that relates to Christ and His work.

In a book written several years ago, that has been quite widely read, it is stated that Adventists are diligent Bible students but lacking in spiritual experience and power. We fear that there has been a measure of truth in this charge; perhaps we have been argumentative in spirit, and dogmatic in spirit, but not fervent in the sense of Romans 12:11.

There has been a distinct forward movement among us in relation to spiritual life and power in the last year or two. We are hoping and praying that this may continue until even our enemies shall be constrained to declare that we are not only a doctrinal people but a people of great spiritual power and influence.

We are fundamentalists, but it is not sufficient that we believe all of the inspired doctrines of the Bible, we must also live by them; and to be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, is a part of that truth by which we must live. The question is not whether or not we are more in earnest than some churches about us, but whether or not we are living by all the Word of God.

We are plainly told by Christ that the Word which He has spoken shall judge us in the last day, John 18:48; so, that we live by the standards set by the modern church will profit us nothing unless the standards are those of the Bible.

Having thus introduced the question, may we examine more critically the verse under consideration.

WHAT DOES “FERVENT” IN SPIRIT MEAN?

There are three Greek words that are rendered “fervent” in the New Testament.

In 2 Corinthians 7:7 Paul is speaking of the fervent mind of the Corinthian church toward him; and here the Greek word is zētos, and the primary significance of the word is zeal. Their minds were evidently filled with zeal for the great cause which Paul represented.

Let us now turn to the second word rendered “fervent,” found in 1 Peter 4:8, where we read: “Above all things have fervent charity (“love,” R. V.) among yourselves.” Here the Greek word is ektenes, the meaning of which is extended, stretched out; and seems to teach that Christians should have a love for each other so extended that it will reach to the last and least of Christ’s followers; so stretched out that it will cover all the idiosyncrasies and peculiarities of God’s children.

The request for spiritual food by many readers of The Herald is beautifully answered with this essay by Dr. Irving F. Barnes, pastor of the Advent Christian Church, Somerville, Massachusetts. Although written for another denomination, Dr. Barnes’ words apply equally well to the Church of God.

The third word rendered “fervent” is that of the verse under consideration, Romans 12:11, and here the Greek word is different from either of the words already considered, the English pronunciation being zeo and the lexicon defines zeo as—“to boil, be hot, fervid.”

Here, then, we find not an impulsive Peter nor a loving, emotional John, but Paul, the greatest logician and the most learned of them all, telling us under inspiration that we should be boiling in spirit, in our service toward God. To be boiling in spirit does not of necessity mean physical demonstration, but an inward earnestness that is intense: a love for Christ that burns and throbs with an intense desire to please Him in every thought, emotion, and act of our lives; an intensity of love and earnestness that makes us one with our great Master in His desires and purposes for humanity; that makes us forget self, selfish ease, and selfish pleasures; that gives us more joy in the consciousness that we are pleasing Christ and doing His work than we could ever find in any phase of worldly pleasure, honor, or success.

This we believe to be one of the great needs of the denomination of which we are a part.

SOLUTION OF DENOMINATIONAL PROBLEMS

In fact, to come into this experience would solve many of the problems that confront us as a people today.

First. If we were boiling, fervid in spirit, there would be little trouble in paying the bills necessary to the conduct of the work of Christ, for His work would come first. It would be much easier to pay our subscriptions to our religious publications than to buy gas for our cars or for any other relatively non-essential thing. Our fervent love for Christ would put the things in which He is interested before every human interest.

Second. The next great thing that this would do for us would be to bring new life, warmth, and interest to our meetings. There would be nothing trite, stale, or stereotyped about an experience of this sort.

The world is weary of religious platitudes. We are constantly hearing of people hungry for spiritual food, who having attended certain churches have declared that the church has nothing to offer. This could never be true of a church where all were fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; for such a church would be spirit-guided; and led and taught by the Holy Spirit they would always have something to give those who were truly hungry for God and truth. The very warmth of a church fervent in spirit would be an attraction to such as desire more than mere form.

Papers on the Lord's Coming

The Inspired Screen

By F. L. Austin

THE INSPIRED Page, like the delicately responsive screen before a battery of focused projectors, is most exquisitely beautified with the mellow richness of ever-changing faces and colorings portraying countless projected visions of Infinite contemplations of the development and fullness of "his eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." It is an Inspired Screen that, scroll-like, has glided silently before the focused eyes of the projectors of all of God's prophets and has been stamped in indelible colorings with visions of the mind of the Eternal. Folded, this Inspired Screen becomes an Inspired Album of priceless value. Its every tracing and shading is certified by the unerasable and unchangeable Word of God.

Sometimes, in rapturous joy, we behold within a single passage a number of distinctive features assembled into one harmonious whole each in proper relation to its outstanding figure—the whole presenting restful completion; then, sometimes, in breathless pause, our minds are entranced with the glories painted by the wording of a single clause, only to see them at once dissolved, as it were, by a superimposed glory of a different picture painted by a succeeding clause—then, like the changing patterns of mottled sunshine beneath the shade tree whose leaves are playing in the zephyr breezes, these glories are alternated back and forth, or are even added to by still other glories, until the completed passage has lifted us to a mountain peak amidst the Visions of God. Thus, God would seemingly keep before the mental eye of way-lost returning man the close relation between distinctly different types of works and workers, as well as the interdependence of each upon the other.

One of the pictures of God's Inspired Reels is The Portrayal of His Son in Second Advent Power Perfecting the Creation of Things Enduring. Hundreds of times from Genesis 3:15 to Revelation 22:20 do God's prophetically projected visions of His Son glorify the pages of His Sacred Album. Without them that Album would be incomplete. It would be untrue—in that the portrayed fullness of creation is not to be realized except by the return of His Son unto the creative work awaiting His tried and tested Hand, awaiting His unflinching and unwavering Faith.

One of the shorter Reels portrays, as it were, certain mountain peaks of the life of Christ from birth to time age-abiding. God projected it through the Prophet Isaiah. Now, as projector of scenes of the Infinite Hand, Isaiah's task is clearly stated in 1:1. It was that he throw upon the Screen "the vision . . . which he saw concerning JUDAH AND JERUSALEM." (All added capitals are the writer's.) Therefore any other characters introduced by Isaiah must be understood by us according to their respective influence upon God's Chosen People and God's Chosen City. This brief Reel displaying an outline of the life of God's Son reveals "Judah and Jerusalem" rising from the ashes of the centuries unto the exalted place "above all nations," as prophesied in Deuteronomy 26:16-19. It also surrounds Christ with an accompanying halo of light that keeps Him visible to us as He penetrates the great deep depths of the endless future. I quote it in word and type arrangement from Rotherham's Emphatic Bible. It reads, Isaiah 9:6, 7:

"For A Child hath been born to us,
A Son hath been given to us,
And the dominion is upon his shoulder,—
And his Name hath been called Wonderful Counselor,
Mighty God,
Father of Futurity,
Prince of Prosperity.
Of the increase of his dominion and prosperity
There shall be no end—
Upon the throne of David, and Upon his kingdom,
By establishing it, and
By sustaining it,
With justice, and
With righteousness,—
From henceforth,
Even unto times age-abiding:
The jealousy of Yahweh of hosts will perform this!"

Let us briefly study some of the details of this entrancing picture:

"A Child" born to "us," namely, to "Judah and Jerusalem," is the central setting. That "Child" becomes "Son"—Heir—upon whom the Crown of Judah's "dominion" is placed. His marvelous fourfold "Name" reveals powers of God divinely placed upon Him.

All is for a specific purpose—"For (promoting)," Leeser—"the increase of dominion and prosperity" without "end," through "David's throne" and "dominion," unto "times age-abiding."

What a picture!

And, at no place, for even a brief moment, is the Church flashed upon the scene. Just this unspeakably great God-given Child, exalted to the heirship of "A Son"; returned to Jerusalem with all the Divine Power announced in the Divine Majesty of His fourfold "Name";—David's throne renewed; his dominion reestablished unto endless ages!

What a Child! How Jerusalem needs His return!

DEDICATION

By Norman John MacLeod

"But Solomon built him an house. Howbeit the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest? Hath not my hand made all these things?"—Acts 7:47-50.

WHAT a memorable day in the history of Israel that was when Solomon led his people in the dedication of his temple to the Lord! Great was the splendor of the occasion. Stately music floated on the breeze from the thousand-voiced choirs. Sweet incense filled the nostrils of the crowds that assembled. Colorful costumes and elaborate ritual intrigued the eye. Solemn prayers led the thoughts to God. But these things did not make the real dedication of that building to the Lord. They were only the outward show that spoke of the greater offerings from the hearts of men. Men had been led to God and His ways by a great and right-minded ruler. And God accepted of that offering by most peculiar phenomena: "Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house. And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord, because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house."—2 Chron. 7:1, 2.

David had dedicated that true building some time before. He had had it in his heart to build a building for God, but instead God accepted his offering of a good heart by establishing an everlasting covenant with him. The temple was dedicated and accepted before it was ever begun. A righteous ruler had submitted his ways to God, and God had accepted the offering. The sweet incense of prayer had ascended to the throne of God. It did not fill the nostrils of a host of worshipers as they sat in spellbound silence in a dazzling building. It did not ascend to God in well polished phrases perhaps. But it came from the heart of that shepherd king of Israel as he went in before God and poured out his thanksgiving for the most precious promise of the royal Seed. There was the great dedication of the house of God. There the real acceptance of the finished building!

Suppose that Moses when he built the tabernacle in the wilderness had failed to construct it "according to the pattern in the mount." Suppose that the wrong materials had been used by the workmen that wrought. Suppose that it had been carelessly constructed in some of its details. Would God have accepted it? Would the whole have been received by the manifestation of the cloud of God's glory that filled it so that Moses could not enter it (Exodus 40:34, 35)? If Solomon's workmen had not secured the right sort of materials; if the temple had not been made according to pattern; if the offerings at the temple dedication had been made only as a matter of form; if carelessness had entered in in any form; if the parts of the construction had been made in indifference as to the result, would God have accepted it? Would the fire of God have consumed the sacrifice on the altar? Would the cloud of glory have filled the temple so that the priests could not have performed their functions? Would Solomon have received his vision of acceptance as is recorded in the holy Scriptures (2 Chron. 7:12ff)? If the hearts of the king and his people had not been turned truly to God, would God have manifested His presence with them? If the hearts of Moses and the congregation had not been turned toward God in true worship, would God have accepted the tabernacle? Most assuredly not! Rather would He have deserted the people or have consumed them in His displeasure. Rather would the wrath of God have been manifested in terrible destruction. Why did God hear David's prayer and establish with him an everlasting covenant? Because his heart was right. Why did God accept of Solomon's dedication of the temple? Because his heart was right. Indifference, carelessness, half-hearted effort were not found in those great works. Had David taken for granted that the Lord knew his heart and that if he kept quiet and went about his business God would have made the same promises, would we have that beautifully touching prayer offered to God (2 Sam. 7)? Would that covenant have ever been made with him by God? Perhaps! But we have no reason to believe that it would! The words of David coming from a full heart were used as the occasion for God to give His pledge to men.

But more important to us are those words recorded in 1 Corinthians 3:9: "For we are labourers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." And again, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—1 Cor. 3:16, 17. How often do we forget these things! How often do we enter into these things with a half-hearted, indifferent attitude! How often do we consider these things lightly! Let our hearts be filled with a true spirit of worship as we come before God to worship Him and meditate upon the precious truths of His Word. Let our minds dwell on the things of God from day to day. Let us forget those things that might fill our hearts with shame and self-contempt for the neglect that we have used to defile the temple of God. We are the temple of God, not the house in which we might meet. We are the building of God in which His Spirit shall dwell. We are God's husbandry, chosen by Him to work with Him: shall we neglect so great an opportunity! Shall we turn aside! If we do, God shall destroy us as it is written here. Think you that God will spare us any more than He spared those Israelites of old who made solemn covenant with God and then turned aside in the paths of carelessness; into the paths of disloyalty toward God? It is not only by sinning sins of violence, bloodshed, and crime that we can defile the temple of God. If the temple that we build is of the wrong kind of material God will not accept it. It must be wrought by the greatest cunning that God has granted us. It must be made of the materials of love and gentleness; of truth and righteousness; of brotherly kindness and humbleness of heart. It must be dedicated in sincerity and truth; then only will it be filled with the glory of God. Then only will God accept of its sacrifices.

Many are the men who build great buildings in which to carry on the rites that they call services to God. They build great structures of steel and stone; adorn them with all manner of costly furnishings; fill them with magnificent music from the voices of trained singers and the notes of great-mouthed pipe organs; and sit back in golden-covered ease of mind in what they think is the service of God. Yet they have robbed the widow and the fatherless. They have committed all sorts of robberies and foul deeds of extortion in order to obtain that money with which to build and adorn that building. When King Herod of Israel built a new temple in Jerusalem it was perhaps in many of its appointments more costly, more richly furnished, more beautifully decorated, more elaborately designed than that of Solomon. But did God show His acceptance of that temple as He did on the day of the dedication of Solomon's temple? We have no record of such! Rather do we call to mind the saying of Christ that it should be utterly destroyed; rather do we have record that the veil in that temple was rent in twain from top to bottom when the Lord was crucified. Why? Because it was built in iniquity; it was defiled by the money changers; it was desecrated by the sacrifices of unholy priests. God could not accept such a building. The Spirit of God could not dwell with men in such surroundings. We are the temple of God; if we defile that temple, God will destroy us even as the temple of Herod was destroyed. Let us make no mistake about that!

We are renewing our minds in dedication of a new year of service to God. The officers who have been selected by you to administer your affairs for the coming year must serve in spirit and in truth. But they must also have your most hearty encouragement; they must have your prayers. You must help in the dedication to the service of God along with them for this year. We must determine at this the beginning of another year to do our utmost to make this a year of true service and worship of God. Then when the great temple of God is dedicated at the return of the Savior from heaven we will be found acceptable to Him. When the glory of the Lord fills that temple as was shown to the Prophet Ezekiel we will want to have part in those awe-inspiring services. Let us not sit back in ease to feel that we have been accepted of God unless we have done our utmost to be pleasing to Him. Only when we have left no stone unturned to carry on His work will He accept of us, and not until then. May we dedicate our hearts to His service through the coming year, so that if Jesus should return at any moment we would be counted worthy to be part of that great priesthood that shall carry on the services of that greater temple of God in the Age to Come.

UNSPEAKABLE JOY

"Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory."—1 Peter 1:8.

THUS Peter wrote to his brethren in the dispersion. What a testimony it is to the reality of the faith of these early Christians! Peter had known the Lord, walked in fellowship with Him, heard Him speak, and knowing Him, he loved Him.

Those to whom he wrote, like ourselves, had not seen the Lord Jesus; but believing, they rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory, because they loved Him, were attached to Him, suffered with Him, and waited for His coming revelation.

There are many joys on earth, but none is satisfying and none is lasting. It is different with the joy of the Lord and the rejoicing in the Lord. It satisfies the heart and it is an everlasting joy, for He who is our joy, in whom we glory, is the everlasting Lord of glory.

But how can we know such unspeakable joy, a joy that passeth all other joys, a joy which satisfies, a joy that is our real strength? For it is written, "The joy of the Lord is your strength."

Many true believers mourn over the fact that this joy unspeakable and full of glory is not their daily portion, as it should be. So many children of God lack this real joy, which helps to overcome difficulties and show patience in suffering; which leaves a calm when all things go wrong.

Rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory is the result of believing in the Lord and having Him constantly before the heart. He must be the one great object of our lives. The happiest occupation must be the hour when we seek His face and are in communion with Him. To cultivate a more real and holy intimacy with Him must become increasingly our ambition. And as a result of such a fellowship with Him, there will be a greater self-surrender, self-effacement, and humility. This is the path that will increase our rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

up in an Adventist home desired to have his little girl attend an Advent Christian Sunday school. He took her to one of our churches at the noon hour, left her, and called for her at the close. This he did for several Sundays, without being asked to remain.

Feeling that he would like to attend a men's class and hear once more the truths made familiar in childhood, he determined to linger a little, for a personal invitation to remain. He did so; several members of the church spoke with him, including officers of the church, and finally the pastor greeted him, but not one of them had interest enough to ask him to remain to Sunday school. He went away from the church disgusted with so-called religious life, and to this day is an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, largely because of this experience with a church that was not fervent in spirit.

FISHERS OF MEN

Our Master said: "I have made you fishers of men." The best fishermen are those who are fervent in spirit, catching fish. The writer used to wonder why he seldom caught as many fish as did the fellows with whom he went fishing. The matter is very clear to him now. He was not much interested in catching fish.

Frequently he would take a book that he wished to read or study, and would, if fishing from the shore, balance the pole across fence or stump and proceed to read. If the fish were anxious enough to be caught, so that they would fasten themselves onto the hook, thus causing the pole to dip, he would proceed to pull in the fish; otherwise little attention was paid to the matter of fishing.

Since becoming preacher and pastor, I have been constrained to believe that the majority of professed Christians are just balancing the pole. One who is fervent in spirit has an inner urge that makes fishing for men the first business of his life.

Is not this a need in our churches today?

NEEDED TO ATTRACT AND HOLD THE YOUNG

The speaker does not believe that young people should be expected to act and feel like older persons. That they require some social life and recreation by the very fact of their youth and physical buoyancy seems evident; but he does believe, because of his long and varied experience, that there is nothing that will so appeal and hold the young to true religion as genuine spiritual life in the church, as portrayed in the words: "Fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

In the prayer meetings of our church, averaging well over a hundred, nearly one half are persons properly described as young. Why are they there? Because the meetings are characterized by fervency of spirit, by a spirit of rejoicing that Christ saves to the uttermost. The older members are not talking of what took place twenty years ago, but of present experiences. They are not speaking of an experience with Christ when they were converted, but of meeting Christ this week.

We do not urge them to speak; why should we, if they are boiling over in spirit?

TAKE GOD'S WORD SERIOUSLY

Dear friends, God has not inspired this verse to be written that we should treat it lightly, but that we should measure up to the possibility revealed here. It either means what it says or it means nothing. If it means nothing, then the rest of the New Testament means the same.

Let us receive it and live it, or confess that religion is a failure. This text is one of God's commandments. Let us come into harmony with it. It does not stand alone. Christ's message to the church of the last days, Revelation 3:15, was that He "would thou wert cold or hot," clearly indicating that He would rather that we were cold than lukewarm; and truly our influence is more dangerous as lukewarm professors than as if we made no profession.

UP AND AT IT

WE ARE all liable to mishaps, errors, and defeats. We undertake to do things which are beyond our power, and we often fail in our undertakings. Things do not turn out as we expected; we become discouraged, and are inclined to despond; but this is not the way of wisdom. A temporary failure may be a real and permanent blessing: there may have been a lesson which we have been slow to learn, which is emphasized by defeat. We have possibly trusted too much in our own strength, and needed to learn more about our weakness and helplessness; and now when the lesson is learned, we may be better fitted than ever before for activity, usefulness, and success. It is a great thing to learn our weakness, to be made acquainted with our infirmities and our faults, and to understand wherein our strength lies. If we can only learn the lesson soon enough, if we are not too dull of hearing, we may gain instruction from the chastenings of the heavenly Father, and may say, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I learned thy law."

Trusting in God, though we fall we shall not be utterly cast down. We have failed once, let us try again. We may have suffered defeat through disobedience, but if we follow Christ we are sure of victory.—A. M. Jones in Messiah's Advocate.

PAPERS ON THE LORD'S COMING

At present He awaits "at the right hand of God" till time for "the restitution of all things spoken"—beginning with the restitution of God's Holy People and Holy City.

Gabriel projected a brief Reel upon the Inspired Screen at Luke 1:26-33. It adds some detail to the above. Gabriel portrays God as the Giver to this Son of "the throne of his father David," and as the One who will assure His "reign over the house of Jacob FOR EVER."

Joel flooded the Sacred Screen with still another detail. At 3:9-17 he focused the multi-colored rays of his strong projection upon the very threshold of the throne room of the arriving Son "whose right it is" to reign. He pictures Gentile powers, prepared to the last word for warfare, rushing their armies round about the Holy City. Like beasts of prey, each seeks if need be to tear and rend the victim, that in so doing the supreme command of all the world may be secured. With startled surprise we see advancing from the rolling tempestuous clouds of war, rapidly assuming form and power, the new-rising throne of Jerusalem. Joel moves slightly the bright searching rays to focus upon the ecstasy of God "roar"-ing—as a lioness calling her cubs to the catch—"out of Zion" for His Holy People. Heaven and earth may shudder,

"But Yahweh shall be a shelter to his people,

And a refuge to the sons of Israel."—Emph. Bible.

The throne of Jerusalem is again the throne of Heaven! (Don't fail to stay for the climax of this Reel in verse 17.)

Leading up to this transition scene Joel brightly portrays the living God, active in His supernatural power, darkening the sun and moon and stars. Just as His Hand is all-powerful against heaven's luminaries, so, also, in that "day of the Lord," is it all-powerful against Gentile luminaries "in the valley of decision." And, remember, His Hand will always work through Him of fourfold "Name," who, returned, will enter upon the fullness of Matthew 28:18: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

Many, many, different poses of His Returned Son at work in mighty power are flashed rapidly across the Screen of Holy Inspiration. One that was projected through Christ Himself, in colors fast set, is recorded in Luke 21:23-32. It pictures the helplessness of Israel in the hour of the termination of Gentile times. It presents Gentile times as being ended by the actual arriving of the Son of man "with power and great glory." In Matthew 25:31, Jesus portrayed that "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, . . . then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Immediately He comes in His glory, His unbounded work begins: "and before him shall be gathered all nations. . . ."

The scene of the arrival of the Son of man is completed, —Gentile times are ended; the throne of David is restored; the Son and Heir is King, with "the Queen in gold of Ophir" at His right hand: His Creative Work is launched.

As Israel, trapped between the sea and Pharaoh's host, was given heart by the wondrous words of God to Moses, so also will Israel, trapped midst the death struggles of Gentile powers, become heartened by enactment of the time-scheduled works of God. For, just as the budding fig tree, true to Nature's laws, is assurance that summer is nigh, so will the darkened heavens and shuddering nations, true to God's word, assure the quick arrival of God's returning Son.

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

In the meantime, if there are those Israelites who would change their roles in the scenes soon to be enacted, let them withdraw from Israel and her cherished hopes and ally themselves with the Church, giving themselves instantly into the Hand of its Builder and Trainer. If there are Gentiles who would draw closer to God and to His Savior-Son, let them, as the Israelites, vow allegiance to the One and only Mediator of the New Testament. Let them all fittingly obey those Divine Laws referred to in Galatians 3:27-29. Having so done let them remain conscious that God no longer regards them as Israelites or Gentiles, but as those whose entire fortunes are computed with the fortunes of the Church of Christ. In the role of the Church God regards neither race, nor sex, nor social standing. Be-seeing acceptance to this position, God has sent His call to all the world.

Till the Church shall be "caught away" is but a brief time. The "Entrance Door" to its rights and privileges as God's sons and heirs will then automatically close. It will open no more.

Your decision must come from you. May it be affirmative.

been considered—that everything we have has come from God, that everything we can hope to have must come from Him—we are moved to say with the author of the lines,

"I can never count the blessings
I receive from day to day,
Nor begin to name the mercies
That surround me all the way;
They are more than can be numbered,
Mortal tongue can never tell
All the wondrous things He does
For those who in His spirit dwell.

"Every day new joys await me
That I never knew before;
Every night I see new visions
Of still greater joys in store;
And I feel more hope and purpose,
Living on from day to day,
When I know that God is leading
In His own appointed way."

Abreast of the Times

There Is No Hell—Heaven Doubtful

"Henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine."—Paul.

EVANSTON, Ill., Feb. 7.—There is no hell, and the existence of heaven is exceedingly doubtful, was the conclusion expressed by a majority of the 1,039 Protestant ministers of the Chicago Federation of Churches who responded to a questionnaire sent out by Dr. George H. Betts, professor of education in Northwestern University. Sixty-nine per cent denied the existence of hell, and 31 per cent the existence of heaven. Only 20 per cent would teach a literal hell of burning fire.

Perhaps the most significant reply to the questionnaire of all had to do with the Bible. Only 27 per cent would have children taught that it was written down as God told men to write, while 71 per cent disagreed with that view, and 2 per cent were uncertain.

Seventy-two per cent said Jesus was God; 26 per cent denied this; the rest were uncertain. In answer to the question, "Are we sons of God as much as Jesus?" 42 per cent answered "Yes," 44 per cent, "No," and the others were uncertain.

An even more suggestive fact revealed in the answers to the questionnaire is mentioned by Dr. Betts, who declares that "no difference of opinion was revealed between representatives of major denominations on the questions." This would indicate the larger denominations in most cases have forsaken their old teaching on heaven and hell, and on the inspiration of the Bible. Their conclusion evidently was that the divine origin of the Bible is at best doubtful, and consequently that we possess no definite knowledge concerning future rewards and punishments.

In getting away from some of the gross doctrinal errors formerly held, these "blind leaders of the blind" have not turned back to the Scriptures to correct the inconsistencies they have discovered in their theology, but have plunged altogether from the solid rock of God's Word to wallow in the mire of "humanism," "internationalism," and politics. Under such conditions it is not surprising that a thoughtful writer in Harpers for February cries, "God save the church!"

Compulsory Military Training

"Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."—Jesus.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 17.—The agitation against compulsory military training in the high schools and colleges of the country continues to grow, according to The Literary Digest. Never before has the voice of organized religion been raised so unanimously in opposition to it as at the present time. Formerly few religious bodies openly refused to sanction military training, the Quakers being the outstanding exception to this rule. But now practically all of the larger denominations are aligning themselves against it, and smaller churches are following their lead in the matter.

As a result, at least one of the larger institutions of higher education, De Pauw University, has petitioned the Government to withdraw its military unit from the school. "The compulsory feature of military training was abolished in 1928, when Dr. G. Bromley Oxnam succeeded to the presidency. He was decidedly opposed to military drill on pedagogical and moral grounds."

Commenting on what it terms a previous "exhibition of littleness" at Ohio State University, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch asserts, "so is the dismissal of students because they want to spend valuable time at college in studying something besides how to carry a gun and how to stab the head of a dummy."

Regardless of the apparent growth of anti-militaristic sentiment, let no one conclude that exemption from war service will be easily attained when war comes. War-time feeling runs high, and the American people, like other races, are easily and quickly swept off their feet in times of stress. The conscientious objector should prepare himself for persecution of the most serious sort if he is determined to stand firmly by his convictions when war breaks.

Austrian Civil War

"A time to hate; a time of war."—Eccl. 3:8.

VIENNA, Austria, Feb. 14.—Civil war, which had threatened Austria for months, broke out in awful fury in the capital, and has raged through its streets for the past three days, taking a toll of from 1,000 to 1,500 lives, and causing the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property.

The horror of the situation was augmented by the fact that the main battle was fought within the thickly populated city. A correspondent of The Chicago Tribune paints a vivid picture of the scene of carnage.

"Scores of women and children, many of whom died by the side of their husbands, fathers, or brothers, were among the victims of this ruthless war to establish a Fascist dictatorship in the erstwhile Austrian republic. Many of the women and children were killed in the terrific bombardment by howitzers of the municipal apartment houses such as the Karl Marzhof, the Schlingerhof, and the Sandleitenhof."

While the Government forces are again in control in the city, the result in the provinces is undecided, and other nations may be drawn in at any time.

LIFE OF SAINT PAUL

ONE of the most interesting characters of the Bible is Paul, the Apostle of our Savior Jesus Christ. He is admired partly because of his earnest zeal and his forceful character, which are obvious throughout his life.

Saul, as he was early called, was a native of Tarsus, a commercial and chief city of the province of Cilicia. He was born of Jewish parents of the tribe of Benjamin. His father had received the Roman franchise for his services for the Romans, probably during civil wars. Saul was taught the occupation of tentmaker. His family was apparently well-to-do, for their son was given a good education. He was sent to Jerusalem to study under Gamaliel, a most learned student of Hebrew Scriptures of his day.

From his early youth he was a strict Pharisee. The new doctrines of Christianity seemed to Saul to attack the religion of the Jews. He was present and approved of the death of the first Christian martyr, Stephen. After Stephen's death, he became even stronger against the Christians.

He even obtained letters from a high priest to seize prisoners and bring them bound back to Jerusalem. He was on his way to Damascus when a wonderful thing happened to Saul. As he and his companions came near Damascus a very bright light, brighter than the brightest sun, shone down, bringing them to a halt and forcing them to the ground. Saul alone was stricken blind, and had a vision of the Son of God. He revealed Himself to Saul, showing him his wickedness in persecuting the Christians. Then Saul asked, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He then, totally blind, was brought to a friend, Judas, where he stayed three days without sight in prayer and supplication.

Meanwhile, the Savior appeared to Ananias, and told him to restore Saul's sight and baptize him. Then Saul, meaning "demanded," was called Paul, meaning "a worker," after his conversion. From Damascus he went to Arabia Petraea by command. Here he was in close communion with God, and learned the great truths of Christianity. He returned to Damascus and preached. As a conspiracy formed against him, he fled to Jerusalem as a guest of Saint Peter, and was presented to the church. He nearly lost his life by his opposers here, and hurried to Caesarea, then to Tarsus. He had received a vision from the Savior to go and preach the gospel to the Gentiles, which was his special calling.

He then went to Antioch with Barnabas. Paul, Barnabas, and John Mark (Barnabas' cousin) in 45 A. D. went on the first missionary journey. They went to Salamis, then to Paphos, where a magician teaching false doctrines was struck blind for his wickedness. Then they went to Perga, and from there to Antioch, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe, and to Antioch in Syria. This took three years, and they were very successful in preaching and miracles. They made a report to the church and continued their preaching. A dispute rose in the church about whether circumcision was necessary, and it was found unnecessary.

Paul started on his second mission journey, which covered four years and introduced Christianity in Europe. This trip was made with Silas and Timothy. It was even more successful than the first, with the conversion of many Gentiles.

Then Paul went on his third and last journey. He went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia. It took about four years. He parted from his brethren in these places with grief. His companions were Timothy, Titus, and Luke.

He went to Jerusalem and was arrested for his teachings. He was tried by Felix and Festus, and was finally taken to Rome and declared innocent. In these last years he wrote Philippians, Colossians, Ephesians, Philemon, and the last epistle to Timothy. He traveled extensively, but at Ephesus he was arrested, because Nero was at this time persecuting unmercifully. At Rome in 66 A. D. he was beheaded, a martyr for Christianity.

He is described as a short man with a long face, aquiline nose, gray eyes, and a winning expression. His force and fearlessness in the conveyance of his speeches and writings give us another true impression of the great Apostle.—Josephine Hammond, Los Angeles, Calif.

Sunday schools, Berean societies, teachers, and individuals generally should remember that Jesus, the Light of the World, makes an excellent contest prize or present for children up to ten or twelve. It sells for 25 cents a copy, post-paid. Order from the National Berean Society, Oregon, Ill.

"WHERE there is no state organization, any local society may be admitted to membership in the National Society if they hold regular meetings and use the Berean lesson books. . . . Isolated individuals are eligible for membership who use the Berean lesson books and pay dues regularly."

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?"

WHO IS JESUS?

How many of you boys and girls have asked some one who a certain new boy is in your class at school? And how many times your question has been answered by saying, "Why, he is Mr. Smith's son," or, "He is the son of that storekeeper on the corner."

You have decided then that you should have known it, because he is just like his father. He walks like his father, talks like him, and looks like him. In fact, he's the "image" of his father.

You know, Jesus was just like that. People who were always asking, "Who is Jesus?" should have known, because He was so much like His Father. There was this difference, though. They had never really seen God, only as they saw Him through Jesus.

And that is the very reason God sent His Son, so that people could come to know a little about Himself. Never having seen God and never being able to see Him, they could not learn much about Him. God wanted people to know Him, to understand Him, and to love Him. And so He sent some one just like Himself that they could know and understand and love.

When you think of God in that way, boys and girls, it makes Him seem so much nearer to you, doesn't it? Why, Jesus is one we all love and love dearly. When we read about the things He did while He was on earth, we know He loved everyone, for He did nothing but good.

So when we read that Jesus is the only beloved Son of God, we know that God is just such a person, too. He loves us; He cares for us; He wants to see us all happy, just as Jesus does. He wants all you boys and girls to be strong and well, good and true.

The very things that Jesus did proclaim to the whole world that He was God's Son. He healed those whom the doctors had given up; He fed thousands with food enough for only a very few. But more than all this, He brought those back to life who had died. No one has ever been able to do that except Him.

Jesus did not get proud over these great powers that were given Him. He loved the common people as much as ever. Look at His loving words in the golden text. How many of you can fill in the blanks in these verses without looking in the Bible?

"Come unto _____, all ye that _____ and are heavy _____, and I will give you _____. Take my _____ upon you, and learn of _____; for I am _____ and _____ in heart: and ye shall find _____ unto your souls. For my _____ is _____, and my _____ is _____."

Try it all of you, won't you?

Now, if Jesus was preaching about God's kingdom of which He is to be the King, and showing by example just what sort of people will be in that kingdom, we learn a little more about God, don't we? We know He will set up a kingdom that will be filled with joy and health and right living. And every one of us wants to live in such a kingdom.

Often we must miss school because of sickness, and that sets us back in our work. We have to lose out in some good times because we are not strong enough, or for some other reason. But in the kingdom there will be no such disappointments at all for any of us. Isn't it worth everything to try to be there?

Let us all bow our heads while we talk to our Father in heaven: Dear heavenly Father, we thank Thee that Thou didst send Thy Son, Jesus our Savior, into the world. We thank Thee that through Him we may come to know Thee. We ask that Thou wilt help us through Jesus to be more like Thee, to live more as Thou wouldst have us live, so that when Jesus comes to be King we may be called to be His helpers. For Jesus' sake, Amen.

"Jesus is our Pattern,
Let us strive each day
To be like Him, sinless,
And His will obey;
Loving, gentle, kindly,
Helping where we might,
Let us be like Jesus,
Always doing right.

"Jesus is our Pattern,
Lest forget we may,
We must daily seek Him,
When we kneel to pray;
In this sacred duty,
Call it not a task,
He will surely hear you,
Grant you what you ask."

JESUS' TESTIMONY CONCERNING HIMSELF

Matthew 11:2 to 12:50

Devotional Reading: Revelation 1:12-18

GOLDEN TEXT

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.—Matthew 11:28.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Jesus' Testimony Concerning Himself.

Aim: To impress upon the pupil the great kindness and love of Jesus, and the way in which He can help us daily.

Basic Truth: "I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, . . . nor things present, nor things to come, . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. 8:38, 39.

I. Evidence of Jesus' Messiahship. (Matt. 11:2-6.) While faith rests wholly upon the promises of God, nevertheless the Father provides the thoughtful with many facts to strengthen his faith. The proof of the truth of Jesus' teaching consisted of the works He did by the power of God. His life was the evidence He gave to show that He was the Son of God. So it is with us. Our professions mean little to the world, but our conduct means much. We must prove to the world by our actions that we are the children of God, otherwise they will not believe.

II. Jesus Reproves Inconsistency. (Vv. 16-19.) The Pharisees were constantly attempting to catch Jesus in His words, but they always failed to do so. He, on the other hand, often caught them in gross inconsistencies, as in this lesson. How childish it is for us to pretend to be what we really are not! We know in our hearts what we are. Knowing our own weakness and mistakes, we should be more charitable in our judgment of others.

III. Jesus the Friend of the Humble. (Vv. 25-30.) No utterance of our Savior is more blessed and comforting than that contained in these verses. Jesus thanked God that His truth had been revealed to the humble ones of earth. He then asserted that He alone knew God perfectly, and, consequently, was able to reveal Him to others faithfully. In the next verses Jesus reveals the Father by inviting all needy and burdened ones to bring their sorrows and their perplexities and their sins to Him whom God has provided to relieve them and bring them rest and peace. There is no burden too heavy for Jesus to bear, no cross that He will not carry for us if we will but come to Him in fullness of faith.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Works Proof of Ministry. Jesus relied on His works as proof of His divine mission. People could not listen to Him without realizing that the one speaking was surely the Son of God. Nor could they behold the evidences of His work, such as sight restored to the blind, speech to the dumb, hearing to the deaf, health to the sick, and life to the dead, without giving credence to the claims of Jesus that He was their King and was offering to them the kingdom. Every man that is true to his convictions and attempts to let his light shine will be known by his works. A true life cannot be concealed. And it can be said without fear of contradiction that those who are trying to live true lives will not try to conceal the fact.

Always an Excuse. The generation living during the ministries of John and Christ was a "generation of excusers." They offered an excuse for the rejection of John's teaching on the ground that they thought he had a devil because he didn't eat and drink as they did. They didn't want to accept his teachings, so they conceived this excuse. Likewise with Christ. He came eating and drinking, and they called Him a "glutton and winebibber," just an excuse to avoid doing their duty. This is the story of mankind, trying to avoid duty by offering an excuse. There is a difference between an excuse and a reason. People are always offering excuses for not attending church. The simple truth is they don't want to attend, and to cover up this fact they offer excuses.

A Place of Rest. Christ is a rest to all who come unto Him, rest to the mind, rest to the weary-hearted, rest to all the troubles and ills of life. He is what each of us needs. He is what the world needs. It is our duty to present Him to the world as the answer and solution for its every requirement.—C. E. R.

Even today there seems to be considerable doubt on the part of some as to whether Jesus was really the Christ. Some think that He was no greater than other great teachers of religion, but we know that only one who was inspired by the power of God could give such wonderful pictures of the last day conditions. Truly, Jesus was the Son of God.—H. A. S.

GOLDEN TEXT

"Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

—Matthew 11:28.

"Here Christ refers, not to sins, but to service; not to guilt, but to labor; not to the conscience, but to the heart; not to repentance, but to learning; not to finding forgiveness, but to finding rest."—C. B. The "all" in this verse does not mean everyone, but is limited to those who labor and are seeking rest. We must find rest in Christ.

The Master is good to His followers. He knows their every need and is able to supply every want; but many times we want things that are not best for us to have, so He knows enough to withhold them from us. "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."—Psalm 37:3. Can we do this?—L. A. R.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Jesus, the Friend of Everybody.

Memory Verse: "Come unto me."—Matt. 11:28a.

In our lesson today we learn something more of John the Baptist. John had been cast into prison. As he sat in prison, this question kept coming to his mind, "Now was that Man I baptized and the One whom I have heard so much about really Jesus?"

For some time John thought about this. Then one day he sent two of his disciples to Jesus. He told them to ask Jesus this question, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?"

This is what Jesus answered, "You go tell John that you have seen the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk; the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them."

John knew from his study that Jesus would do these things when He came. When we think of all the marvelous things Jesus did when He was here on earth and then stop to think of all He will do when He comes again, it certainly makes us want to follow Him just as closely as we can.

We may, too, for Jesus said, "Come unto me." Just to remind us of Jesus' willingness to help us, let's all repeat, "Come unto me," together.—V. C. T.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Jesus Tells Who He Is

Jesus seemed reluctant to make a direct statement regarding His Messiahship when talking to those of Israel. He didn't give a direct reply even to John the Baptist when John sent to seek an answer from Him (Matt. 11:4-6). Jesus didn't need to give a direct answer; neither should it be necessary for us to tell people that we are Christians. Those acquainted with the teachings of Christ will know from our works without word of mouth.

When Jesus met the Samaritan woman at the well, He told her plainly: "I that speak unto thee am he."—John 4:26. This woman had little opportunity to learn what the Messiah would do; so Jesus told her plainly, not wanting her to doubt. However, it was not so much His words as His works, even then, that convinced her, for she went back and told the people to "come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did." In the final analysis it is always actions that bear testimony. It may be permissible to tell people we are Christians if our lives prove the statement.

Jesus chose to let works identify Him. This allowed much speculation. The disciples told Jesus about these many rumors and then added their own testimony that "thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

Our services on Sunday, Feb. 11, were of more than usual interest. Bro. Conner, our pastor, was celebrating a double anniversary. It was his 73rd birthday anniversary (which in reality was on Friday, Feb. 9), and also the 48th anniversary of his entrance into the ministry.

The weather man added his bit to the celebration and gave us a beautiful, warm, sunny day. We had an interesting Sunday school service with more than forty in attendance. There were 34 present for the morning sermon, which was a very timely one on "Prayer."

At the conclusion of the morning service Bro. Conner was very unsuspectingly ushered into the dining room at the hall where a long table was set with birthday cakes, candles, roses, and other things necessary for a birthday dinner. Upon entering the dining room he was greeted by the primary Sunday school classes with the old familiar song, "Happy Birthday to You." Needless to say, this part of the program was a surprise to Bro. and Sr. Conner. Dinner was served to 41.

The anniversary sermon was given in the evening. Bro. Conner's subject was "Charity"; his text, 1 Corinthians 13. This was the same subject and text he used in presenting his first sermon 48 years ago. Before the sermon he gave a brief resume of his life, speaking of how good everyone had been to him throughout life and especially emphasizing the heavenly Father's goodness and love to him. At the close of his sermon he gave a reading of some very touching lines depicting his early boyhood, his home life, and his mother, and expressing his faith in a reunion with loved ones in the kingdom of God. "In the Sweet By and By" was the beautiful old hymn he chose for concluding the service.

"Will You Meet Me There," sung by the male quartet, and also a duet, were given by way of special music for the service.

The attendance at the evening service numbered 53, the largest attendance we have ever had for a preaching service. It included out-of-town brethren from Oregon; Dixon; Rochelle; Beloit, Wis.; and Waterloo, Iowa. (Our resident membership is only sixteen. We mention this so that some of our larger congregations can appreciate our enthusiasm over an attendance of 53.)

We are thankful to our heavenly Father for Bro. Conner's long and useful life, which has been an inspiration to so many of us, and we pray that he may be given many more years in which to labor in our Master's service.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

Bro. C. E. Lapp has kindly consented to preach for us the Thursday evening before the first Sunday of each month. The last two meetings were held at Sr. Logan's home, 4318 Olive St., and each time 28 were present. The next meeting will be March 2, at 4318 Olive St., at 8 p. m. Anyone passing through our city or those living in the near vicinity will be welcome, and they will have an opportunity to hear the gospel proclaimed by one of His able servants.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

A baptismal service is planned for Sunday night, Feb. 25, and it is hoped that several will obey the gospel at that time.

Beginning the first Sunday in March our Sunday night meetings will begin at 7:30 instead of 7 o'clock.

An effort is being made by the church to purchase the house next door to the church which has been rented by the Sunday school for some months past. In order to relieve the terribly congested condition in the church building the classes below ten years of age have been organized into a junior Sunday school with Sr. Hall as superintendent. This department convenes in the Annex (the house next door) and holds its entire session there. There were 128 in that department the first Sunday of its arrangement, with a total Sunday school of 334.

Some special plans are already being made for Easter. We hope to make it a real day of sincere worship in honor of our resurrected Lord.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

The preaching services here are held each Sunday of the month, except the first and fifth. Bro. C. E. Lapp goes to Eldorado the first Sunday.

The Wednesday evening Bible class is gaining in attendance. We are studying characters and events of the Bible from the beginning of time.

Bro. and Sr. Orville Lynd are the parents of a daughter, Rose Eileen, born February 2, 1934. Sr. Lynd may be remembered by some of our readers as Phoebe Densmore.

The past year our Sunday school gave perfect attendance pins. Those receiving year pins were: Esther Laning, Marjorie Burnett, Kathleen Lindsay, Lozelle Burnett, Collis Clark, Francis Burnett, Gerald L. Cooper, Tessa Laning, and C. E. Lapp.

About thirty members of the church met at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. W. Cooper on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, to hold services with Sr. Cooper. She has been an invalid for over two years. Bro. Lapp made a short talk. A song and prayer service was enjoyed and the communion service held. This service was much appreciated by Sr. Cooper and her family.

Sr. Emma Paisley has gone to St. Joseph, Mo., for a visit with her daughter, Sr. Vera Cox, and family.

We would be very glad to welcome visitors at any and all of our church services.

Ednah Cooper, Secretary.

YORK-DOWNING

A quiet home wedding was solemnized on February 6 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Downing, Himes St., Grand Rapids, when their daughter Iva became the wife of Quentin Durwood York.

The groom was the third person baptized by the pastor after coming here in 1930. He is a frank, honest young man who has the respect of the entire church and community, and has recently helped materially in developing plans for our young men's class.

The bride was one of the first group of girls baptized here by the pastor the year following his coming. Quiet, reserved, and industrious, Iva is loved and honored by her many friends, and she has the best wishes of us all as she enters this important part of her life's work.

Mr. and Mrs. York are at home 429 Sheldon Ave., S. E., Grand Rapids, Mich.

F. E. Siple.

NILS LEONARD ANDERSON

Mrs. Albertina Anderson, herself a member of the Church of God, and living at 2223 E. McKinley St., Des Moines, Iowa, has acquainted the editors with the death of her husband, Nils Leonard Anderson, who was baptized in 1913 by A. J. Eychaner. Mr. Anderson was born in Sweden in 1866 and came to America when he was 22 years old. Surviving him are his widow, and the children, Nils, Estella, Eugene, and Lillian. The funeral services were conducted by a Lutheran minister, whose discourse was mainly Bible reading; and Mr. Anderson was laid to rest in Glendale Cemetery to await the coming of the Master.

MARILYN D. ROUCH

A feeling of gloom and sadness came over the church at South Bend, Ind., when the enemy death laid his dreaded hand upon the home of Bro. and Sr. Dale Rouch to take from the family circle their last born, Marilyn D. She was born May 15, 1932, and, although her sojourn among us was so soon cut off, the sweet influence of her loving and sunny life will long be felt among her family and friends.

Pneumonia and scarlet fever were more than her frail little body could stand, and after all that medical aid and loving hands could do to sustain life, she succumbed on February 6, 1934.

She is survived by her parents; one brother, Robert; and sister, Marjory; and her grandmothers on each side, (Srs.) Mrs. Wm. Porter and Mrs. Charles Warren.

On account of quarantine the words of comfort were spoken at the grave in Bremen by Bro. J. H. Anderson, and there we left her in the care of Him who is the resurrection and the life, and who said, "Surely I come quickly," and we echo back with John from Patmos, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

F. A. Stilson.

THE COMFORT OF FELLOWSHIP

I want to thank all the people of the church for all the kind letters that were sent to my brother Elmer Hanson after the notice of his illness was published in The Herald. He received dozens of interesting letters and cards from the Bereans and older members from all over the United States. This made him very, very happy and helped a great deal to pass away his hours of pain, as for many months he could not raise his head from his pillow. People little realize how much happiness can be given to a shut-in by letters, as they are like a cheery visit from the writer himself.

May our Father reward you all is the wish of a grateful family.

Your sister in Christ,

Maybelle Hanson,

5601 N. Crawford Ave., Chicago, Ill.

CLIMBING THE LADDER

"Going up!" That's what we're doing! With the help of the brethren the National Bible Institution is climbing out of the morass of debt into which it was cast by the depression. Our manager believes that when we have reached the goal of Two Thousand Dollars he will be able to negotiate a satisfactory and final settlement with the failed bank whose notes represent our heaviest indebtedness.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Golden Rule Home has been unusually fortunate this winter in that its family have been reasonably free from serious illness. A letter to each of the members or to the entire family would be appreciated we know. Old people as well as young folks need frequent cheering up.

For the benefit of the Berean correspondence committees, we again request that the full addresses of bereaved, married, newly baptized, and invalids or isolated be included in reports to appear in these columns.

Bro. M. W. Perrine, Everett, Wash., whose writings are so much enjoyed by our readers, declares that the "paper improves with every issue. Keep shouting the good news, 'Jesus is coming!' It sounds better every time it is repeated." We agree with you, Bro. Perrine.

It makes glad the heart of a former pastor of the Niagara Falls church to learn that two of his beloved sons in the Lord, Edward and James Engel, whom he baptized on Mother's Day, May 9, 1926, have been chosen as officers in the Sunday school, and that two other young people, equally dear to his heart, occupy the other offices in the school. May God bless them all.

Beginning last Sunday with an all-day meeting the Fonthill, Ont., church has engaged in a week of special services in celebration of the 25th anniversary of the building of the present attractive house of worship. Full reports of this gathering will be published later. Pastor C. E. Randall is being assisted by Bro. F. L. Austin throughout the week. Bro. Austin was pastor of the church both before and for many years after the building of the church.

What wonderful days these are for the thoughtful student of prophecy! Everything points to the speedy coming of the Lord, and how our hearts rejoice that this is true.

Another group of young people are trying out the sale of The Restitution Herald on the street and from house to house. This time the work is being carried on under the guiding hand of Eld. Cecil Smead of Blanchard, Mich.

"A well balanced diet, we are told, benefits greatly. We find it true in good literature, especially so in The Restitution Herald."—"The Morning Star," Eden Valley, Minn.

Next Saturday, Feb. 24, will mark the eighty-eighth birthday of Bro. Jesse Harrold of Blythedale, Mo. The Herald extends its hearty congratulations to Bro. Harrold, and prays that he may yet live to see the Lord come.

As you will see from the "ladder" this week, responses continue to come in to Bro. Conner's appeal for help to climb over the top with $2,000 in his hands to meet the special need of our indebtedness to the closed bank of Oregon. We thank you, brethren, for your cooperation. May the good work go on!

The accidental death of Albert, King of the Belgians, has cast a shadow over the whole of Europe. Leopold, who is to ascend the throne Friday of this week, will have to prove himself before other nations reach confidence in the stability of his reign. Peace meanwhile, and the settlement of economic problems, must hang by a thread. Read your daily papers for a detailed description of the accident and an analysis of its possible effects.

Ladder
to Success

ARE YOU ALONE?

By D. G. Harvey

"I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life."

HAVE you ever felt alone? Have you felt that all your efforts to serve your Lord were in vain? Are there not times that the adversary seems too strong? when you have no help? disappointment on every hand? You then become a victim of that affliction which none desire, but few escape—"the blues."

But even the so-called "blues" result in a blessing if we do not become bitter. We remember the prophets of Israel were often so afflicted. They, too, had many disappointments.

Elijah was a faithful man of God, yet he, too, had the blues. He felt so alone he cried to his God, "I, even I only, am left." He could see no help, there was no man at his side. But think of the joy that must have been his when his God spoke those words of cheer and hope recorded in the eighteenth verse of the same chapter. "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal." And Elijah was blue.

But some will say, "God does not so speak today." Very true. Such wonders are no longer needed. For today we have means of communication that in Elijah's day were unknown.

But today, with cheap postal rates, the telephone by which your voice may be carried to a distant friend, the voice of God is not needed to tell us we are not alone. But there are still times when everything seems to go wrong and we feel so discouraged, so alone in the work. It is then we often receive such wonderful letters, just as if a brother or sister had grasped our hand and said, "I am with you." Perhaps you may never have had the privilege of grasping that hand literally, but you feel its presence. Let us, then, not forget the small but important matter—our letters. Often just a word on a post card means much to the one who is so alone and "blue."

When Jonah at last had obeyed the command of God and had prophesied the destruction of Nineveh, the people repented and God spared the city. Then Jonah was "blue" because of God's mercy. He felt so sorry for himself. Often we make the same mistake. We plan and proclaim certain events. They do not occur as we expect. We are blue. We forget God knows best, and, like Jonah, we feel it were better to die than live (Jonah 4:3).

The apostles of the Master had discouragements. They, too, had these "spells of blues," for we read in Luke 24:21, "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." They had met great disappointment. Their hope was gone. Their Master and Lord had died.

Yes, even the Lord Jesus Himself suffered many such disappointments. His chosen apostles, His only earthly friends, could not watch with Him one hour. When the test came they fled and followed afar off. On the cross He was alone, for we hear His cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"—Matt. 27:46.

But why should the Son of God be discouraged? His apostles were alone to carry on His work on the earth. They had fled. He had no other plans. But it was the all-wise Father's will. Still, to die now seemed in vain. God alone in that dark hour knew the apostles chosen by His Son would not fail. But to the Son, it was a supreme test.

Some one has compared the tempering of steel to the tempering of the Christian by disappointments. It is surely a good comparison, for that common article of industry is yet a strange metal. Untempered, it can be cut, or heated, it bends easily to the uses desired; but the fire was compared to the desires of natural man, for such desires allowed to excess will bring destruction of health and even life itself. Any steel worker will tell you a bar of steel left too long in the fire will melt. We call it "burn up"; it is gone. Exposing it to the air has a softening effect, but the tool is of no value. But it is dashed in cold water, and by watching the changing color in the steel it is brought to the proper hardness for the work required. So it is with us. Left to our own natural desires, we burn ourselves up. We take honor to ourselves. But when the all-wise Father tests us with the cold water of disappointments, He, too, is watching the changing color. We are being tempered to the proper degree to be of use to the Master Builder.

Such disappointments at times result in the blues. But blues are not sin, but a test of faith, a guard to ward off self-exaltation, to humble us and increase patience. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8:28.

Can we cheerfully meet the test? For, like Paul, we should glory in tribulations—"Knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost (power of God) which is given unto us."—Rom. 5:3-5.

BIBLE STUDY FOR PERSONAL SPIRITUAL GROWTH

find Spirit-filled men apart from deep, devotional Bible students. If we would be filled with the Spirit, keep filled, and have our capacity constantly increase, let us become possessed with the Bible study passion.

(3) To us as Christian leaders. If those over whom God has placed us are to be spiritual, we must be spiritual leaders. The stream never rises above the fountain head. Moreover, if we would be safe leaders we must study with intensity the mind of God concerning our work and problems. The Bible is the principal place where that is revealed. More than all, if we would have the true idea and spirit of Christian leadership, we must study with diligence the life of that Leader of leaders, as clearly set forth in the Scriptures.

JIG-SAW PUZZLES

By Lucille LeCrone

JESUS the Christ taught much by parables, taking the ordinary things of life with which the people were familiar and drawing great spiritual lessons from them. I believe that it is possible to glean a lesson from the activities and pastimes of all our daily lives.

Recently the fad for jig-saw puzzles swept the country. Old and young alike spent many hours in fitting together the tiny, odd-shaped pieces. "A waste of time and energy," said those who had not yet been caught in its fascinating grip. "A lot of foolishness," says the man of the world concerning religion. "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness." But whether it be jig-saw puzzles or religion, the one who has tried it is fascinated and enthused about it.

When work is started on the puzzle the one putting it together has no idea what the completed picture will be. But each piece fitted into its proper place makes the rest more lovely. Some pieces just don't seem to fit anywhere and are tried unsuccessfully in many positions before the right place is found. The nearer complete the puzzle becomes, the more exciting and interesting becomes the game.

When a person first begins to learn the truth he has no idea of the beauty of God's plan of the ages. But each new bit of knowledge he gains in harmony with what he has already learned makes the picture of God's love, mercy, and grace more beautiful. Some scriptures, which even a few years ago just didn't seem to be understandable, are now being fitted into their proper places and are easily understood and applied. The closer we come to the end of this dispensation, the stronger becomes the desire to correctly understand and apply the Scriptures. Just as in the jig-saw puzzle the last few pieces go together more quickly and more easily than the first, so it is in religion.

Life, too, may be compared to a jig-saw puzzle. As we gaze at the tiny babe in all its sweetness and innocence little do we know how long it will take to complete that picture of life. Nor can we even guess what the completed picture will be. It may be a beautiful life dedicated to the service of the Master, or it may be one of hideous crime.

The puzzle can only be put together a piece at a time.

Our lives can only be lived one day at a time. "Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself."

Sometimes there are many odd-shaped, colorless pieces in the puzzle which don't seem to fit in with the others which are so gayly colored. Yet the picture cannot be completed without them. Then they serve to bring out more strongly the beauty of the whole.

Sorrows, disappointments, discouragements, and failures are often our lot. At the time of their happening we may be unable to see how any good could possibly result therefrom. Later as we look back upon these events we can see how they helped to make our life picture more beautiful. Especially is this so if we view them in the light of the promise given that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Oftentimes one working alone on a puzzle comes to a standstill and is ready to give up. Some one else may easily find the right pieces and with the help thus given the picture is easily completed. Little do we realize the vast amount of good that a cheery smile, a hearty handshake, or a word of cheer may do. Such seemingly unimportant and trivial things have been known to cause people who were discouraged and tired of living to get a new lease on life. Thus a life which otherwise would have been ugly and blighted has been turned into one of beauty and usefulness. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

And never, never lose sight of that "friend that sticketh closer than a brother." He is always near, always ready and willing, yes, even anxious, to help bear our burdens. Learn to take your problems, your troubles, your cares, whether small or great, to Him. For He has said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

So we see that many lessons may be drawn from even a jig-saw puzzle.

THE EDITOR'S PRAYER

A beam of promise pierces through the clouds
Of hopelessness that all the world enshrouds;
And we, O Lord, our drooping heads uplift
To catch the gleam of glory through the rift.

The very dread and fear that men now feel,
As like a drunkard, back and forth they reel
Perplexed and troubled, serves but for to raise
Our fondest hopes, our hearts attune to praise!

PRAYER AND THE LORD'S COMING

OF ALL the great doctrines emphasized strongly by the Church of God none is more rich in its devotional quality and appeal than the hope of the Lord's return. The necessity for prayer, for deepest consecration, for humbleness of mind, for devotion and for worship, are inseparably connected with the expectation that the Lord may momentarily call His own to meet Him in the air.

Those who hold firmly to the literality of the second advent of Christ, that is, that our blessed Lord will come again to the earth visibly just as He went away, are constantly reminded that they may soon see Him face to face, that they will actually stand in His presence even as the disciples did in the past, and with them rejoice in the fellowship of their Lord.

These considerations and convictions make Jesus seem very real and very near to them now. They can almost hear His voice saying to them in gentle admonition, "Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is."—Mark 13:33. And they respond to His appeal.

The lowering clouds of disaster that are filling the hearts of thoughtful men with fear, to the Christian point unmistakably to the speedy coming of Him who said, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21:28.

Such "looking up" is naturally expressed in an outpouring of the thankful heart in prayer. Only those who find in the doctrine of the Lord's coming merely a biblical theory to be defended, rather than an inspiring truth to be joyfully announced to the world, miss the spiritual value of the blessed hope.

THE PROBLEM CHILD

MUCH is being said and written these days about the so-called "problem child," and how best to correct his unfortunate tendencies to lawlessness. The "problem child" is generally looked upon as a temperamental youngster, who, though he may not be actually depraved, is at least overly mischievous, and one whose misbehavior can be attributed to nothing short of wilful disobedience and disregard for the rights of others.

Sometimes his violent disposition is said to have been inherited from his "Aunt Ella, on his father's side"; and again to his great-grandpa on the other side of the house, depending largely on whether it is father or mother who is apologizing for his conduct to the visitor. But whichever relative may be blamed for the boy's outbursts of temper it is seldom that it is either of his immediate parents. "Why, that boy is exactly what his Uncle John was at his age. He was absolutely incorrigible!" Such are the explanations not infrequently made in the child's presence to account for his reprehensible conduct.

Dr. W. A. Evans declares that it is "suspected" by men who have made this question a matter of scientific investigation "that most of the problem children belong to problem parents, and come from problem homes."

It is true that the child's physical inheritance does have more or less to do with his disposition, because the bodily strength or weakness he has received from past generations of his family exercises an undoubted influence on his mental attitude, which in turn contributes to the development of his character.

By far the more powerful influence, however, that makes him what he is is the atmosphere of his own home. The conversation of father and mother, and even the way in which reproofs are made and punishments inflicted, the little incidents of everyday life, these more than all else determine whether the boy will be a "problem child" or a constant source of comfort to his parents and friends.

In short, if the parents themselves meet their own moral and spiritual problems successfully, the "problem child" will largely cease to be a problem. The child is the most imitative and adaptable creature in the world, and readily absorbs all that he sees and hears and makes it a part of his own life and character. He is largely a product of his environment, a reflection of the life around him, and therefore an expression of his parents' home life.

RIGHTEOUSNESS

By M. W. Perrine

WE often hear the remark from people who seem to be intelligent and fairly well versed in the Scriptures, when speaking of some member of the body of Christ to whom they had evidently taken a dislike, "I am just as good as that man. If he gets to heaven, I think I will get there," ignoring the fact that Jesus told His own disciples that they couldn't go there (John 13:33) and also that He said to Nicodemus (John 3:13), "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." And these people don't even profess to be Christians. It shows how limited the knowledge is of a great many people, not alone of unbelievers, but even of those who profess to be believers.

Question: What is required of a person that he may even be accounted as righteous, for it is evident that man has no righteousness that he can claim as his own, nor can he live a life so perfect that he is a living example of righteousness? Isaiah says (64:6), "But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away."

Now, if we know that we have no righteousness of our own that would be acceptable to God and that Jesus said (Matt. 6:33), "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all else will be added unto you." this gives us some idea that God required something better than our own righteousness to reach up to the divine standard.

That was where the Jews fell short. Hear the Apostle Paul commending his own people for their zeal toward God, which he said was not according to knowledge, and lamenting their failure to attain to God's righteousness, which is a righteousness to be obtained only through faith, as Abraham's was, and not by their own works. Romans 10:1-4: "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness (of works), have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."

So we can readily see that the righteousness which is of God is a righteousness which comes by faith, and the ending of it must be in Christ Jesus and not in self or works, which satisfied the old law.

So Paul triumphantly exclaims, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God."—Rom. 5:1, 2. And this is the faith which Paul says comes by hearing the Word of God (Rom. 10:17), the faith that comes by hearing the gospel, which Paul says is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." This is the faith which, when heard and believed, fits one for baptism into the name of the Lord Jesus Christ for the remission of his sins and constitutes him an heir of the great salvation of which Paul says (Heb. 2:1-4), "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?"

In Christ Jesus is our place of refuge when the storms of God's judgments overwhelm the peoples of the earth. Then says David (Psalm 57:2), "I will cry unto God most high; unto God that performeth all things for me. He shall send from heaven, and save me from the reproach of him that would swallow me up. Selah. God shall send forth his mercy and his truth."

Our righteousness, if we have any, will come and be accounted to us for righteousness through our faith in God's Word of promise; for faith comes by hearing and believing God's Word, and when it is believed, we are accounted as righteous even as Abraham was.

David said (Psalm 145:17), "The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works. The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth. He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them." David could also say (Psalm 145:10), "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints (Please turn to Page Nine)

Thy Kingdom Come

Yes! a brighter morn is breaking,
Better days are coming on;
All the world will be awaking
In the new and Golden Dawn.

In the day of coming Glory,
Men will show fraternal hand;
Each will tell to each the Story,
Till it spreads to every land.

From the earth's remotest stations,
Men will come to hear the Word;
And, in all the world, the nations
Shall be nations of the Lord.

FORTIFICATION

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."—Romans 8:28.

THE family fortune had vanished. The father's position was lost and he felt his loss and burden so heavily that he cried out in anguish to God: "All is gone, there is nothing left! Oh Lord! what shall I do?" His little daughter, who had been playing with her doll in an adjoining room, heard and came in. She saw him kneeling with his head in his hands and she comfortingly said, "Daddy, I'm still here." The little girl's mother in the kitchen heard and came also and said, "You still have me."

They began to talk things over and found that only a temporal fortune and temporal position had been lost. They still had life, that all-important one of our possessions. They still had their health, without which it is difficult to be happy. God was still alive and so was His Son Jesus, and God is the one who gives every good and perfect gift. Jesus is the one who is the Savior of men, that they might not perish.

The whole trouble lay in putting too much importance on the family fortune and the breadwinner's high position. Paul made a little exhortation to the Colossian brethren that may fit in well here. "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth."—Col. 3:2. There are two great classes of things upon which we may set our affection, things temporal, and things eternal.

If we set our mind or affection wholly on things temporal, disappointment is certain to follow; but if we set our mind wholly on things eternal, we shall not be disappointed. How many of us think only of things eternal? Not one of us. We cling to things on earth. We are tied to the natural. We cannot throw off every thought of the natural and carnal. If we could, we would be like the Christ and would have no need of Him.

But, even though we have many of our thoughts on temporal things, if we set more of our affection on things in heaven it will help us wonderfully. It is a glorious thing to be fortified against disappointments, trials, and losses in life. When the most disheartening thing comes to you it gives you strength to know that Paul was inspired when he wrote Romans 8:28.

We find noble examples of men who met disappointments with the help of God. Job served faithfully and trusted in the Lord, but troubles came. He lost his possessions, his servants, his children, his health, all but his life; yet he still trusted in God. He did not give up hope, nor did he blaspheme; and God rewarded him for his patience.

Daniel was a very young man, a prince of Judah, when he was carried away captive to Babylon. If his affection was on being a prominent ruler in the nation of Judah, his hopes were shattered. Daniel's hope was in Jehovah, and he became a great prophet and a mighty man of God.

David's affection was on things above. He was anointed to be king of Judah and Israel, but he was chased over hill and valley. He was driven from the country by Saul and his army. David's life was sought, yet because he trusted in God he was fortified against these trials. Hear his words: "I have set the Lord always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."—Psalm 16:8. Is not this defense? Defense against what? Against every enemy, against every disappointment, against every trial, against every loss, against all harm. David knew what to do, and we can profit with his exhortation: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."—Psalm 55:22. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee (the Lord)."—Isa. 26:3.

The man whose trust is in the Lord, whose affection is on things above, is the one who is fortified against the undesirable. He is the man of God. He shall not be moved.

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? . . . Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. 8:35, 37-39.

These words would be incomplete without the words of Jesus, the greatest of all teachers, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."—Matt. 6:19-21.

Thieves, rust, and moths make disappointments. They are the cause of loss. Let us set our minds on things above, things eternal, on the Lord, and our armament will be made and our fortification will be ready to protect us against all the disappointments in life. May we be able to boldly say, "In all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."

Some Things for Which We Stand

Here is presented the complete tract published by concerted action of the ministers of the Church of God as advertised in preceding issues of this paper. Copies of the tract may be obtained from The Herald office at 5 cents each, 10 for 25 cents, or $1.00 a hundred.

You can buy homes and bread with gold, but more important than these is the home of tomorrow and the bread of everlasting life. You cannot buy them. They are God's gift to you when you believe and live His truths.

A deep, trusting faith in God the Creator is necessary and is evidence of Christian stature, for "he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. 11:6.

Jesus the Christ, God's only begotten Son, is "the way, the truth, and the life."—John 14:6.

God in His great mercy toward sinful man "gave his only begotten Son," who "was once offered to bear the sins of many" and "died for our sins according to the scriptures." Heb. 9:28; 1 Cor. 15:3.

Man is a mortal being, subject to death. His only hope beyond this present life is to look to Jesus, who said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."—John 10:10.

Jesus attained His exalted position and was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."—Rom. 1:4. Herein lies our hope of future life, for "if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?"—1 Cor. 15:12. Jesus' resurrection brought Him forth a new creature, a new species of life, "a spiritual body," the first fruits from the dead, to the new life of immortality (1 Cor. 15:23, 44).

The work of Jesus as the representative of His Father has been to "visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name."—Acts 15:14. He is calling out during this age a group, the church, to stand for Him now, for "if so be that we suffer with him . . . we may be also glorified together."—Rom. 8:17.

The Father "hath committed all judgment unto the Son."—John 5:22. The church is judged as its members live their lives today, and the wicked will be dealt with "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord."—2 Thess. 1:7-9.

Our Lord was taken up; but the men in white apparel said, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1:11. We, therefore, believe that "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9:28.

When Jesus comes again, "then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory" (Matt. 25:31), "the throne of his father David" (Luke 1:32). Thus we see Jesus and His chosen ruling in the future over the house of Israel, which will have been regathered to Jerusalem and Palestine (Matt. 19:28; Jer. 16:14, 15).

The kingdom thus established as a small stone in Daniel's interpretation "became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." God's kingdom "shall break in pieces and consume all these (other) kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."—Dan. 2:35, 44. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever."—Isa. 9:7. The literal kingdom under Christ will extend from "sea to sea," be universal in its scope.

God only "hath immortality." Man is mortal. But this "mortal" man "must put on immortality." Christ, who brought "life and immortality to light," is the only One through whom God's gift of immortality, even "eternal life," is promised. Therefore, the widely proclaimed doctrine of human immortality, or of man's immortal soul, together with the resultant doctrine that all Christians at death go to heaven and that all those not Christian go at death to an unending torture of hell fire, is unbiblical and untrue. And since untruths cannot create true faith in God, these teachings are injurious to Christian faith. 1 Tim. 6:15, 16; Job 4:17; Rom. 6:12; 8:11; 1 Cor. 15:53; 2 Tim. 1:10; Rom. 6:23.

Righteousness, which is faith, transforms the believer, works in him that life which wins for him a "crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give" him at the resurrection (2 Tim. 4:8), and leads him to a fuller appreciation of God.

Repentance is the first act of the believer, for we are commanded to "repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."—Acts 26:20.

Baptism (immersion) is the token of Christian faith and is the "answer of a good conscience toward God"; it is also a figure of death, burial, and resurrection, for "we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead . . . even so we also should walk in newness of life." 1 Pet. 3:21; Rom. 6:4.

A consecrated life is the result of repentance and baptism, for "as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation."—1 Pet. 1:15.

Effective faith in God and in His Son impels one to consecrate his life to them. Such consecration brings one to turn continuously to God in prayer for guidance and strength; it brings one to worship Him. Prayer and worship that are "in spirit and in truth" evidence Christian stature.

The Christian today has the assurance of "the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."—Eph. 4:30. Evidence of such sealing is manifested in the "fruits" of spirit-filled lives (Gal. 5:22-24), in contrast with the evident "works of the flesh" (Gal. 5:19-21).

Thus, in a service of faith to the God of all creation and of all order, Jesus Christ guides man in scaling the great ascent in an orderly way from the Adam nature to that of God's exalted Son. The Christian serves today; he is glorified tomorrow.

Giving According to the Scripture

"And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury."—Mark 12:41.

YES, and He is sitting there still and watching the gifts of His people with deep discernment and appreciation. There is no part of our Christian life that more perfectly expresses our spiritual character and our love to God than our giving and the use of our money. From the very beginning the worship of God has always been associated with the recognition of His right in our property. Cain and Abel in the first act of public worship recorded in the Scripture brought their best to offer to Jehovah (Gen. 4:3, 4). Abraham presented to Melchisedek, whom he recognized as God's high priest and representative, tithes of all he possessed (Gen. 14:20). Jacob signaled his first meeting with God and his conversion by the dedication of a tenth part of all his means (Gen. 28:22).

Moses established a regular system of tithes which amounted to nearly three tenths of the annual produce of the land for the service of God. There was one tenth for the maintenance of the priests and Levites, out of which they gave a tenth for the support of the high priest. Then there was a second tithe to meet the expenses of the great annual festivals. And every three years there was a third tithe for the poor and the stranger. All this in addition to the silver half shekel which they offered when they entered the tabernacle and the regular offerings of first fruits and sacrifices. They were never poor so long as they were faithful to God in their giving, but when in later years the spirit of selfishness and worldliness possessed them and they robbed God of His portion, their land was smitten with blight and mildew, their soil impoverished, and the nation reduced to bankruptcy and ruin.

One of the longest chapters in the Bible, Numbers 7, containing eighty-nine verses and nearly two thousand words, is all about giving. It is the story of the offerings of the princes of Israel at the setting up of the tabernacle in the wilderness. These offerings occupied twelve successive days; it required six wagons and twelve oxen to carry the precious tribute of gold, silver, and costly vessels. Nowadays it would take twelve oxen to drag some of our unwilling givers to the altar of sacrifice. When all this service of loving beneficence had been completed, it is added in token of God's acceptance of their gifts that "when Moses was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation to speak with him (God), then he heard the voice of one speaking unto him from off the mercy seat that was upon the ark of testimony, from between the two cherubims." So still, God loves to meet with those who are faithful to their trust, and perhaps the reason we do not oftener hear the voice of God speaking unto us is because we have not honored Him more faithfully and lovingly with the sacrificial gifts of our willing liberality. The whole Mosaic system is eloquent of Christian liberality, and surely they gave as a matter of law rather than of love. Surely the power of love and the impulse of grace ought to prompt us to give all.

Passing on to the kingly period, we next find David giving for the building of the temple in 1 Chronicles 29. Before such liberality our noblest gifts pale into insignificance.

Coming next to the times of the Restoration, we find a beautiful incident in Zechariah 6:11-14, showing the tender appreciation which God expressed toward the gifts of the captives of Babylon who had sent their silver and gold to aid in the restoration of the city and temple.

But now we come to the New Testament and still we find the giving keeps pace always with faith and love. The wise men that came to hail the Savior's birth brought their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh, and they were not despised. The Master Himself as He walked about the world in poverty and toil was not ashamed to live on the gifts of the women that ministered unto Him. The offering that was poured upon His head by the loving Mary was accepted with a commendation that has made her name a heritage of love and honor wherever the gospel shall be preached to the end of time. And here in our text we find

Palestine, the Key to Jewish Solidarity

THESSE are days of self-scrutiny, for the world in which we Jews live seems on the verge of radical alteration. It is not only the German situation which troubles us, but it seems that the ground underneath our feet in every land is shifting and breaking. Disturbed by growing fear, realizing that the cracking of the world creates fissures that more and more physically separate and isolate Jews, many voices are heard, clamoring for union in self-defense, for a common program of action.

It is now over thirty-five years since Theodore Herzl established the Zionist Organization and created the Shekel, a universal register to be set up to record the names of those in agreement with the aims of the Basle program, who wanted to join the international brotherhood of the Jewish Renaissance. The Shekel was the token and the evidence of the numerical strength supporting the national ideal. The organization in all its varied forms—territorial, national, and local; parties and factions; subsidiary propaganda and financial institutions—rested upon the basic representation of Shekel payers.

Through this organization it has been possible to create and maintain corporate and continuous responsibility for the Jewish Renaissance and the national work in Palestine, and to arouse and maintain a continuous sense of universal Jewish solidarity. The Zionist Organization was the voice that aroused a sleeping Jewry, calling Jews back to consciousness of nationhood. The Zionist Organization was the hand that laid the foundations of the Jewish National Home—it was the planter, the builder, the teacher, the negotiator. For the first time since the days of dispersion the Jewish people had an organ through which to speak and act. This voice and hand, authorized and responsible, received validation and sanction through its recognition by the League of Nations as the Jewish Agency for Palestine.

Today, the Zionist Organization encircles the globe. In truth, it may be said the sun never sets upon this empire of suffering and struggle which is carried on by the organized forces of Zionism. In every corner of the earth, wherever there are a minyan of Jews there is a microcosm of Jewish national life in the form of organized Zionist activities. If Jewish rights are invaded or violated, if there is national building to be done and sacrifice to be made, these groups spring to life, assuming responsibility for action and registering in one form or another the beating of the Jewish national pulse.

If there are new suggestions that the Jewish nationality be accorded a place and a voice in the deliberations of the League of Nations, it is due in large measure to the fact that a precedent was created in the recognition of the Zionist Organization as the corporate representative of Jewish national interests in Palestine; as the carrier of the burden of Jewish destiny. It is due to the fact that in the Zionist Organization national strength has been accumulated and focused upon the Zionist objective, which is the solution of the Jewish problem. It is due to the fact that in the Zionist Organization you have a nucleus of substantial power and influence constantly working and struggling for the increase of Jewish unified strength, which does not fail us in time of crisis.

Louis Lipsky, American member of the World Zionist Executive, herein reviews the world Jewish position and describes the value of the Zionist Movement. The article is reprinted here as a fair example of the present Jewish desire to find permanent haven in Palestine, revived by the Movement.

All that is needed is an expansion of the existing forms of Jewish unity as represented by the Jewish Agency for Palestine to transform this limited union into a union of all active Jewish elements interested in the common destiny. And that should not be difficult in view of the fact that there are now hundreds of thousands of Jews who are in full accord with Zionist aims and that these masses are merely not integrated within the Zionist Organization as registered Shekel payers. Not by attempting to form a new vessel for Jewish action, but by building upon the bases of the unity already created by the Zionist Organization is it possible at this time, in the face of our unparalleled difficulties, to establish the desired unity within the House of Israel.

Within the Zionist Organization forms have been worked out for the integration of the Shekel payers. They are the electors of the Zionist Congress. Through the delegates whom the electors send to the Zionist Congress, the policies and tendencies of the Zionist Movement are formed and determined. The electors are thus enabled to influence the movement at the source of its organized authority. And congresses have always reflected the actual state of mind of the participating electors on a wide range of Jewish problems. They always reflect, as in a looking-glass, the authentic features of the struggling opinions and hopes of the Jewish people with regard to their common destiny.

Jews of America are now called upon by a manifesto of the Zionist Executive to do their duty and to register as electors of the Zionist Congress by the payment of the Shekel of fifty cents through the various Shekel national commissions that have been set up in each community. It is an annual head tax and every taxpayer is recorded in the Register of Voters. His Shekel receipt is evidence of the payment of the tax and of his enrollment, and when Zionist Congress elections are held, the Shekel receipt is the identification card of the voter.

With a population of 4,500,000 in America, it is not unreasonable to expect less than 300,000 adults eligible for voting in the Congress elections. It all depends upon the diligence, thoroughness, and devotion of the Zionist workers. It is humiliating that this last year only sixty thousand electors were eligible to vote in the elections of the Prague Congress. Surely, there are at least four times that number of convinced Zionists in the United States.

A large registration of the Zionist electors (Shekel payers) means that faith in the ultimate triumph of Zionism has not weakened by reason of the difficult conditions that prevail either in the Golith or in Palestine. Zionist workers are therefore urged to regard the enrollment of Zionist electors as a matter of primary duty. They are urged to spread the Shekel enrollment this year over a large surface and to bring in new recruits to our cause and to assist in maintaining the Zionist Organization as the most important agency of universal Jewish unity. This is an activity which unites all Zionist parties and factions, for in this work the Labor Party, the Mizrahi Party, the Revisionists, the General Zionists, are equally concerned, and they should unite with all their forces in furthering an interest which promotes the general good of the entire Zionist Movement as well as of the whole Jewish people. The register of Zionist electors is, in fact, the only real census of nationally conscious Jews we now have.

For once in our history let us be thorough and consequent. Let us not throw away that instrument of unity it has taken us thirty-five years to create in favor of a new device for achieving Jewish unity. Even if this new union is achieved, in crippled or complete form, it will have to go through the same trials and tribulations as the Zionist Congress has had to go through. And the chances of its survival, in the existing circumstances, are not probable in view of the desperate, limiting conditions in which so many Jews now find themselves. By building up the unity within the Zionist Organization through the Shekel registration, we are perfecting an instrument of self-emancipation which can become representative of the Jewish interests, based upon an experience in nation-building of over thirty-five years. Let us build upon that experience and unite all Jews through the agency created by Theodore Herzl.—The Daily Jewish Courier.

Bible Study for Personal Spiritual Growth

LET us clear the ground, first of all, of that supposed hindrance—lack of time. In each country that we visit the students and Christian workers claim that they are busier than those of any other country. We have had to admit this point in at least fifteen countries within the past fifteen months. There are many persons who conscientiously think they do not have half an hour a day to spend in Bible study. Let us suggest two ways of meeting this hindrance. There is time to do the will of God. Is it the will of God that I grow spiritually? Yes; for He does not wish me to become unspiritual or to stand still. Has a man ever grown spiritually apart from devotional Bible study? We have not found that man. Have you? Therefore, there is time to study the Bible daily for our own spiritual growth. This, you say, is logical but theoretical. Well, then, will you for one month try the plan of spending the first half hour of the day in Bible study, and at the end of the time let us know whether it has interfered with your regular work or standing or efficiency? Hundreds of persons in different parts of the world have accepted this challenge. Thus far not one has reported that his work or standing has suffered in the least. On the other hand, many of them report that such study has enabled them to do more and better work. Is it fair, therefore, for any of us, without trying it, to say that this cannot be done?

Some people are kept from this kind of Bible study by the fact that they are studying the Bible for other purposes. Some students have said: "We are studying the Bible in the college curriculum; will not that take the place of this form of Bible study?" It certainly will not, for the simple reason that each student has his own needs and temptations which may not be known to the teacher; and, even if they were, they could not be taken up and met in public. Each student needs to have God speak to him personally each day. On the other hand, some say, "We are teaching Bible classes. Will not the preparation for teaching take the place of such special devotional Bible study?" The answer is much the same as before. Each teacher has his personal and peculiar needs, which may not be those of his pupils.

Many conscientious Christians raise the question whether the reading of devotional books will not take the place of Bible study? We firmly believe that much of the lack of spiritual fibre among Christians today is due to a second-hand knowledge of the books of God. We would not, be misunderstood, for we have derived too much benefit from such books as The Confessions of St. Augustine, The Imitation of Christ by Thomas a Kempis, The Spiritual Letters of Fenelon, Baxter's Saints' Everlasting Rest, Jeremy Taylor's two spiritual classics, Law's Serious Call, and the more recent writings of Murray, Moule, and Miss Havergal. The point is, why not go to first sources? One, in speaking of these writings, has said that in their most appealing tones they echo the voices of the Bible. After all, these things ought we to have done and not to have left the other undone.

Some people are hindered from studying the Bible devotionally because they are afraid to do so. One day while in India two young men said to us: "If we study the Bible in this way, we are afraid it will compel us to abandon our plan of entering Government service, and to devote ourselves to Christian work." A Mohammedan student in Egypt told us that, if he studied the Bible in this way, he would have to become a Christian. In another college a young man said it would make it necessary for him to give up a certain bad habit. Afraid of the light: How unscientific and unscholarly and cowardly!

MANNER OF DEVOTIONAL BIBLE STUDY

(1) Break up the subject to be studied into convenient or suitable daily subdivisions. In this way there will be some definite thing to take up each day, and valuable time will not be lost casting about to find out where to begin. If we are to really search the Scriptures, we must have things in mind for which we will search.

(2) Be alone, if possible, while engaged in such devotional study. This will often be difficult, but it is well worth the effort. We need to be where we can speak aloud to God. It is said David Brainerd, in order to be alone for meditation upon the Word, was in the habit of committing to memory passages of Scripture, and then walking alone in the streets of New Haven, or in the neighboring fields, revolving these passages in his mind, applying them to his life, and conversing with God.

(3) Keep in mind constantly the object of this kind of Bible study. It is to meet my spiritual need, not that of another. It is to enrich my life. It is to lift my ideals. It is to enable me to meet God and to hear His voice, to me, personally. We do well to remind ourselves of this object many times during our study.

(4) Let there be resolute detachment of mind. Let us keep our thoughts from the thing which we have just been doing and from the thing which we mean to do next, and shut ourselves in alone with God and His Word. This is all the more important if our time be limited. If we have but half an hour to devote to such study each morning, we do not wish to spend half of it getting the mind fixed upon the subject.

(5) Do not be diverted from the main purpose of the study. This is the peril of most students. We come to something which, as Peter says, is hard to be understood, and are apt to think that that difficulty must be removed before we can go further in our devotional study. Not so. Let us keep a paper on which we can note any difficulty that we come to, and at some subsequent time, as true scholars, let us seek to understand it. But let us not be cheated out of our daily spiritual food by mere intellectual curiosity, important as that is in its proper place.

(6) Be thorough. We have far too much surface study of the Bible. Gold dust is often found on the surface, but as a rule we have to dig for the nuggets. We need to sink a shaft in the Scriptures in order to get at the deep things of God.

(7) Meditate. Jeremiah best defines this process: "Thy words were found, and I did eat them"; that is, I take these words into my mind, I store them in memory, I revolve them over and over again, I let them touch the springs of conscience, I let them find me, I let the will act upon them and apply them, I give them right of way in my life, I make them part of myself, I realize in actual experience that the words of Christ "are spirit and are life."

(8) Record results. If you put down one point each day you will gain over three hundred points within the year. Most of us keep a financial record. All of us are in the habit of taking notes on what we hear men say. Is it not worth while to keep a careful record of God's dealings with us? It is our practice to carry slips of paper in the Bible constantly, on which to note such points. We would rather part with the notes taken when listening to the most distinguished lecturers we have ever heard than with these little papers which contain the record of our own soul struggles and of God's personal dealings with us.

STALIN A MODERN NERO

SEVERAL books have appeared in Germany picturing the horrors of the Russian persecution. We have just finished reading The Cries for Help From Russia, consisting of sixty letters written by eyewitnesses. It makes horrible reading. This German book gives the truth about what is going on in Russia; it urges intercession for these hundreds of suffering members of the body of Christ; it strengthens one's faith in reading of the Christian heroism; and it tells us that the very end of the age is upon us.

Hundreds of excellent Mennonite Christians are being starved to death, as well as others. In one settlement every man, woman, and child was cruelly slaughtered. Only a young girl escaped to tell the story. She hid herself and they did not discover her hiding place. Hundreds were sent last winter to Siberia and scores of infants froze to death. In another place thirty-six young children were taken and wantonly killed. They cry, "Has God ceased to be merciful?" These suffering Christians wonder why the League of Nations, the United States and England and other nations do not act and stop these horrors.

Atheistic Bolshevism is controlled by the murderer from the beginning, and he tries to crush out every bit of true Christianity wherever it shows itself. Yet we have in this country men, educators, truly just as atheistic as these Russian beasts, who advocate communism and applaud these vicious satanic murderers of innocent children. How long, oh Lord, how long?—Selected by R. A. Curtis.

shall bless thee," because all God's works are done in righteousness.

It is the righteous that "shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever" (Psalm 37:29).

If we depended upon our own good works for our righteousness and our salvation, we surely would come short of the glory of God. Hear what the Apostle Paul says with reference to righteousness obtained by our own good works (Titus 3:5): "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour." It is a righteousness accounted to us through faith and obedience by God's mercy that saves.

Abreast of the Times

We Could All Live in Kansas

"Marvel not at this: for . . . all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."—John 5:28, 29.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Sir Raymond Unwin, an English authority on housing problems, asserts: "Giving every family four hundred square yards of garden, by building ten houses to an acre, the whole population of the United States could be housed comfortably in Kansas and have the rest of the country to play in."

This estimate of the territory required to furnish home sites for the people of this country rather emphatically disposes of the objection so often advanced that the earth itself could not provide standing room for all the people who have lived upon the earth were they called forth from their graves simultaneously.

"Where There Is Smoke—"

"There shall come from the north a smoke."—Isa. 14:31.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—For generations the covetous eyes of the Russian Bear have been turned longingly toward Turkey and Palestine. Even the radical changes that have taken place in the Government have not overcome that persistent determination to reach forth and grasp, first, control over the Dardanelles; second, the city of Istanbul (Constantinople); and, third, the land of Palestine, that the way to India, "the granary and the treasure-house of the world," might be made possible.

On each of the many occasions when such attempts have been made in the past the God of heaven has "put hooks" in the jaws (Ezek. 38:4) of the beast of the north and drawn him resistingly back into the less favored region from whence he came.

It now appears that that which Russia could not accomplish by force of arms is to be attempted by Bolshevistic propaganda and commercial intrigue. The following dispatch to The Chicago Tribune from London gives point to this conclusion.

"Russia is trying to circumvent Turkish plans to buy abroad for development of the Turkish five year plan. The departure of the Turkish trade mission for western Europe and the United States has been delayed.

"The official reason given for the delay is that the Government is awaiting further reports from experts and that central Europe is in a too unsettled condition. The real reason, it was learned, is that Russia has protested against Turkish orders going either to Europe or America. The Soviets desire these orders for themselves.

"Just how much weight this protest will carry depends on the outcome of the growing split in the Turkish cabinet. The generals who have ruled Turkey for ten years, including Dictator Mustafa, Kemal Pasha, favor Russia for military reasons. Civilian economists headed by Djelal Bey, financial expert, wish to buy the best goods in the cheapest market and fear that acceptance of Russian loans and credits means the eventual absorption of Turkey in the Soviet system.

"Djelal, who has been regarded for years as Kemal's successor, now seems to have lost favor with the great man, and he is ready to make a fight for the independence of Turkey from outside influences."

Another Superstition Exploded

"Shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness."—2 Tim. 2:16.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—It is astonishing how long certain forms of superstition linger among an otherwise enlightened people. One can understand perhaps how voodooism still finds its worshipers among the negroes of the West Indies, or even of our own Southland. But it is surprising to learn of the thousands in America, many of whom are professing Christians, who still believe in the efficacy of mystic signs and "pow-wow" incantations, all of which are contrary to the spirit and teaching of the Scriptures, and actually forbidden in them.

Attention has been directed to the matter of superstition by the recent exposure of the failure of "Pharaoh's curse," which was said to follow all those who had had anything to do with the exhumation of King Tut-ankhamen, whose tomb was opened in Egypt in 1923.

It has been frequently reported that an inscription was found in the tomb which pronounced a curse upon anyone who would disturb the resting place of that monarch. Recently, however, Herbert E. Winlock, Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, who has deciphered every scrap of inscription unearthed with the Pharaoh's remains, pointed out, according to The Literary Digest, that there was no curse either stated or implied on those inscriptions.

"Moreover," continues The Digest, "many of the men whose deaths were popularly attributed to the curse were not even present at the exhumation. On the other hand, the man who alone found the steps to the tomb, Howard Carter, is now sixty years old and alive and healthy."

Abandons $1,700 Gold

"They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed."—Ezek. 7:19.

SNOQUALMIE, Wash., Feb. 10.—Some one afraid of the Government drive against gold hoarders left a sack full of gold coins worth $1,700 on the porch of Postmaster Reinig.

THE SILENT WATCH

"His watchmen are blind."—Isaiah 56:10.

ON THE battlefield of far off France were a large number of soldiers in a small hut, resting after their work in the great battle was finished for the present. The commanding officer appointed one lone sentry to watch for the enemy. As this sentry had been on active duty for a few days with his companions, who were now sound asleep, he, too, became sleepy. Soon he was asleep with his companions.

The enemy decided to attack at this time. When the sentry awoke, it was to see his brother soldiers engaged in hand-to-hand combat with the foe. All perished through the fault of one.

What would you do if you awoke as this sentry did to find his charge in hand-to-hand conflict with death? You say there is no danger of this. You are wrong. What if one of your friends should be before the court of God and say, "No one told me the truth." Some one was a silent watchman, one who could not stand hardship, who fell asleep after a few days of work for the Master.

There is now in Kokomo a converted Jew, who, after the first time he heard the name of Christ and learned "Jesus Loves Me," was beaten severely by his parents. When at the age of sixteen he found joy in accepting Christ he was beaten till the blood ran down his back and disowned by his parents. We claim to be persecuted for the name of Christ, and at the same time we are silent at times when our voice and help are needed. Are you one of the silent ones who never write, teach, talk, or preach in some way of the One whom you have found who brings peace, joy, and blessings? We have noticed in the Berean Page our editor lamenting for lack of material. Wake up, use your talent, and express your ideas by sending articles to Miss Genniel Carpenter, R. F. D. 3, Berean editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD, Oregon, Illinois.

Then you will not be in the position of the sentinel who saw his friends go into death through his neglect.

SPRINGFIELD, LOUISIANA

THE Springfield Berean Society held its weekly meeting on January 28 at the home of Bro. and Sr. William Hutchinson. After the regular class services, election of the new officers for 1934 was held. They are as follows: president, Mrs. Annie McKinney; vice president, Bernard Lobell; secretary-treasurer, Miss Lula Mae Richardson. (The address of each of these officers is Rt. 1, Hammond, La.)

Mrs. Ophie Lobell and Mrs. A. M. Lobell were appointed by the president for the new Membership Committee.

As a result of the protracted meeting held in the Blood River district by Bro. Melville Lyon during the third week in January, Bro. William Hutchinson was immersed into Christ on January 21. Also the old members of the body of Christ were strengthened and encouraged very much by his successful sermons. I am sure that his presence among our brethren will be very useful throughout this year and the years to come.

Our class is only two years old; therefore, we are praying that God's helping hand will lead us to grow in strength and knowledge each day as well as in members.

—Lula Mae Richardson, Secretary.

"The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

PICTURES OF THE KINGDOM

TO Jesus the kingdom of God was the most important thing He knew about, and He spent all of His time trying to make it just that to others. And that was really the most natural thing for Him to do. Hadn't God, His Father, sent Him into the world for that very purpose?

Everywhere Jesus went He "preached" the kingdom of God. But His preaching wasn't only in sermons. He taught by example and by picture, also. In today's lesson He drew several word pictures of the kingdom.

You have often drawn word pictures yourself. You don't know what I mean? Yes, you do! When you come home from school and want to tell Mother about something that happened during the day, the words fly thick and fast. And Mother can just see it all as if she had been there herself. Those are your word pictures.

Let's look at these pictures our beloved Jesus drew for us about God's kingdom. Remember, He was seated near the shore of the beautiful blue Galilee. Before Him lay the sandy soil, a little farther away the more fertile rolling fields, where even then a man might have been sowing seed.

Every one of us has wondered at a tiny tomato seed, for instance, growing into a large plant and producing more than a bushel of tomatoes in one season. Jesus took the mustard seed for an example, because it is so tiny and the plant from it grows so tall, especially in Palestine.

We can all see the word picture here. The tiny beginning was Jesus' preaching; then the growth, the twelve apostles'. Afterwards, came the seventy and others later. Even down to us today, we are still trying to get others to see the beauty of God's kingdom. Can you repeat the verse that tells us that some day everyone will know about it?

The second picture shows us a woman baking bread. Just such simple tasks did Jesus use to illustrate what He wanted to teach! The next time Mother bakes ask her to show you how the yeast or baking powder or whatever she is using to make her baking "light," goes through the whole mass and makes it all the same.

Then remember, some one who is gentle and kind always helps to make the cross little boy or girl next to him a little more loving. And that is helping to spread the good news of God's kingdom in one of the very best ways every day.

Let's walk along farther in our gallery and look at the next picture. Ah, we see a man with such a happy face! Digging one day in a field, he came upon some gold to his great surprise and joy. As soon as he could he bought that field. Can you see how the kingdom of God is just like the gold in that field?

A merchant, looking for pearls, finds one of rare beauty. He invests all he has in that one, so that he can make more money selling it to a wealthy customer. We may look at this religion and that; we may study them all, but we will not find one that shines so pure and true as the one that Jesus taught when He drew these pictures of God's kingdom.

Back of Jesus was the Lake of Galilee, and fishermen were always busy there. The people listening to the master Teacher understood the different ways that were employed to catch fish. He says the teaching of God's kingdom is just like a net being cast into the sea. Many fish are gathered, but only the good are of any use.

Even so, many hear about God's kingdom but do not care much about it. To those who care, it becomes the greatest thing in life, the "pearl" of great price, the "treasure" in the field. Jesus' pictures are not so difficult to understand after all, are they?

The last picture has only a few words in it, but many beautiful scenes come to our minds as we look at it. Read it over, verse 52. Jesus says the one who learns about God's kingdom is like one who has a friend come to see him. He shows him all the fine things he has bought since his friend's last visit. We all do that, don't we?

Here are some of the "treasures" we have to show to our friends: Jesus, the King in God's kingdom; His helpers, those who are true to Him now, even some of us, perhaps; the kingdom extending over all the world; nothing but happiness, peace, and beauty everywhere. There'll be no sickness, no sorrow, no weeds, no wild animals, nothing to hurt us in God's kingdom that will be right here on the earth.

We are looking for King Jesus to come soon, you know. Then He will make all the wrong things right, and those who are stubborn and will not obey Him will be destroyed. But those who love and obey Him will shine just like the jewels in His crown. Wouldn't you like to be a "diamond" for Jesus?

Which picture do you like best?

PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM

Matthew 13:1-52

Devotional Reading: Proverbs 3:13-24

GOLDEN TEXT

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end.—Isaiah 9:7.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Parables of the Kingdom.

Aim: To show that the parables provide pictures of different phases of the kingdom of God that Jesus is to set up when He comes.

Basic Truth: "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."—Psalm 72:8.

I. Parables of the Kingdom of God. (Matt. 13:31-52.) The kingdom of God forms the most splendid and vital theme in the Bible. From the opening chapter of Genesis to the final verse of Revelation the central purpose of the Scriptures is to reveal God's plans for the rulership of the earth and its people, and to point out the place that men may occupy in those plans throughout eternity if they will meet the requirements of Jehovah.

Practically all of the Lord's parables apply directly to some phase of the kingdom of God. They paint vivid pictures of kingdom conditions and of the results of its establishment. They also suggest what one must do to obtain an entrance into the kingdom.

There are certain facts that must be borne in mind with regard to the parables if we are to understand them. 1st. They have to do with the kingdom, and not directly with the church. 2nd. They were designed for the instruction of the disciples, and not of the world. 3rd. They were given in such a way as to hide their true meaning from the opponents of Christ, and must be privately interpreted to the disciples.

In this limited space we can attempt to suggest the meaning of but one of the parables presented in the lesson, that of the net cast into the sea. As Jesus did not interpret this one as He did some of the others, our understanding of it may be incorrect.

It would seem that in this parable Jesus was emphasizing the supreme value of salvation in the kingdom of God. To place too much stress on details of a parable nullifies its value. Here our Lord points out that to obtain the life eternal hidden in the future kingdom of God would justify the sacrifice of all things that this present life affords. This seems to have been the idea of Paul, who counted all things but loss that he might attain to the resurrection of the dead and a place in the kingdom.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Growth. The parables along with other Scripture indicate that there is growth concerning the kingdom. The kingdom when set up is as a mustard seed or a stone, and it grows until it fills the whole world. This is not the church, for the church is not the kingdom. However, there must be growth in the church as there will be growth in the kingdom. The church is composed and made up of individuals. These members at the beginning, or when they first become members of the church, are babes. They need the sincere milk of the Word (1 Pet. 2:2). But as we grow and develop, we come to a full age when we can endure the meat of the Word (Heb. 5:12-14). And there must be growth (2 Pet. 3:18). Many never grow nor develop due to the fact that they starve themselves of that "bread of life" that is so essential to the spiritual life of every person. This is the tragedy of professed but not possessed Christianity.

Paying the Price. The parables of our lesson indicate that a price has been paid for the kingdom of God. That price was the life of our Lord Jesus. Anything worth possessing is worth paying for. Christianity is worth while; it is worth all that we possess or ever will own. Unless we are willing to purchase it by placing ourselves at the disposal and use of the Lord Jesus Christ, we wouldn't appreciate it nor use it if it were placed at our command. Whatever it costs us in sacrifice of self, let us pay the price willingly (Rom. 12:1, 2).

Separation. There is coming a day when the good and bad are going to be separated. We are not going to pick the good and bad ones, either. In the parable the fish were the same in the net as they were in the sea. Netting didn't change them and make them good or bad. What we are now will determine what we are going to be.—C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end."—Isaiah 9:7.

This prophecy concerning Christ was spoken nearly 750 years before His birth. As yet it has not been fulfilled, but it will be just as surely as God is on the throne. The kingdom age is the time for its fulfillment. This is He of whom the angel said unto Mary, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1:32, 33.

Then there will be such peace that the wolf and the lamb will dwell together; the leopard will lie down with the kid, and the calf and young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. See Isaiah 11:6. Is that worth living for?—L. A. R.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Pictures of the Kingdom

Parables are not the most vivid pictures of the kingdom because they are merely familiar circumstances of life intended to teach a lesson less obvious than that seen on the surface. These deeper teachings are forceful and beneficial when properly understood. Frequently too much is read into these parables, or an incorrect interpretation is placed upon them. This results in distorted pictures of the kingdom.

The clearest pictures are those given us by Christ when He was "showing the glad tidings of the kingdom." In these we see our future King, in all His power, majesty, and wisdom, portraying kingdom conditions. We see Him as a righteous judge refusing to condemn the woman taken in adultery, yet rebuking the hypocritical scribes and Pharisees for closing the doors to the kingdom. He changed water to wine, walked on the waves, stilled the storm, and cursed the fruitless fig tree, thus proving that all nature will respond to His command.

The most satisfying picture is that of Jesus restoring sight and hearing, cleansing the lepers, curing the demented and the paralytic, and then raising the dead. What a picture of the kingdom! True, it is but a small snapshot, but King Jesus will enlarge it when He comes again. "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."—Isa. 35:5, 6. Cf. Rev. 21:4.—H. A. S.

PRIMARY CLASS

Topic: Hearing and Doing.

Memory Verse: "Blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear."—Matt. 13:16.

The Bible contains many beautiful stories that Jesus told. They are called parables. In today's lesson we have one of these parables.

One day as Jesus was sitting by the sea side, a great crowd of people gathered around Him. There was such a crowd that Jesus got in a ship and talked to them from the ship. This is the story He told:

A sower (man) went out to sow some seed. As he sowed some of the seeds along the sides of the field, the birds ate them. Some of the seeds fell where it was very stony. These little seeds tried to grow, but there wasn't enough earth; so when the sun came up, they died. Some fell where there were thorns. The thorns soon choked the little plants out. Last of all some fell on good ground, and oh! how these little plants did grow.

The people could not understand the lesson Jesus was trying to teach, but He told what it meant to His disciples. (Teacher should tell this to children.)

Jesus said to His disciples, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear." They could understand, but the people could not. Let's all say just what Jesus said about the disciples' eyes and ears.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

1934 GENERAL CONFERENCE 1934

Each succeeding year brings us just that much closer to the last General Conference of the Church of God, when the faithful of all ages shall meet in the presence of the King. As we realize the passage of time, the shortening of opportunity for labor, and the importance of preparation for the glorious consummation of all our hopes we naturally are moved to deeper consecration and to more earnest service.

The time will soon be here for another great meeting at Oregon, Ill., like those that have been held for so many years in the past. The date has already been set, July 31 to August 12, inclusive, and plans are being mapped out for the most blessed assembly of our people in history.

Pray now for the success of the gathering, and begin at once to budget your time and resources in such a way that, by the blessing of God, you may be able to attend.

Remember the date—July 31 to August 12, 1934.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, SPEAKS

When I opened The Restitution Herald of February 13 and read your splendid editorial on "Baptism and the Lord's Supper" I felt impelled to drop a line to you to express my deep appreciation of the thoughts expressed. How often the real and beautiful significance of an act is lost sight of when the setting is obscured or marred. Those two ordinances are the most outstanding as pertaining to us His followers of all He has given, and how needful for us to sense them as such. Since the earthquake of March 10, 1933, it is with great difficulty I write, so with these few lines I close with a prayer for you while you labor under such trying circumstances. We are in a normal degree of health for one of our age.

In Christian love,

C. E. Hatch.

"Our Stewardship," James A. Patrick. The former president of the General Conference discusses the necessity for tithing.

"The Kidnaper," Richard LeCrone. Illustrating Bible doctrines with modern crime. By the pastor at Eden Valley, Minn.

"Signs of the Times in the Religious World," Dr. Irving F. Barnes. A study of 2 Timothy 3:1-5.

"Like Priest, Like People." Observations from the "World Evangel" on ministerial living.

"Jehovah's Covenant With Abraham," Samuel Forsby. An Advent Christian editor points out that the Jews must go home.

And other material of value to Bible students.

RANSOM - LEWIS

On the evening of Saturday, Feb. 17, Ernest G. Ransom and Miss Thelma A. Lewis were united in marriage at the home of the pastor. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, a brother of the bride and his wife, of Camden, Ill. The vows were exchanged and the single ring service was said, after which the bridal party went to the home of the bride's mother.

Both the bride and groom are of high standing in the community and we all join in wishing them God's richest blessings. Miss Lewis has been a very faithful member of our church for several years.

They will make their home about thirty miles north of Ripley where Mr. Ransom is employed.

C. E. Lapp.

Begin to plan now to attend your state and national conferences this next summer. You need the inspiration these great gatherings give.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Our group feels very deeply appreciative of God's watch-care in that the most of our sick ones are much improved in condition.

Bro. Jack Calcutt, one of our deacons, is recuperating from an operation at this time.

Berean activity and attendance have picked up materially. The adult class is now studying the book of Revelation, and a keen interest is being shown.

Preparation is being made for the proper observance of the Easter season. We trust that the resurrection spirit may move us all to new life and effort in our Lord's service.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

LOCAL CHURCH ADVERTISING

For some time the Church of God at Kokomo, Ind., has been distributing The Restitution Herald in that city as an aid in building up interest in the work of the church. Young people of the congregation sell as many papers as they can and remaining copies are given away where it is thought they may do the most good.

Recently Bro. Charles Martin, who has charge of this work in Kokomo, left a copy of The Herald at the office of the Kokomo "Tribune." After examining the paper, a reporter said that while he did not agree with the writers in some things, The Restitution Herald was one of the best papers of its class he had ever seen.

The next issue of the daily called attention to the article that appeared in our columns from the pen of Miss Prichard, and advertised the services of the church in its news section as follows:

"Miss Ellen Prichard, 1100 East Vaile Ave., has an interesting article in The Restitution Herald, the national publication of the Church of God, of which the local church at 1244 South Jay is a part. This paper is published at Oregon, Ill.

"Miss Prichard wrote on 'Reconstruction and Restoration' and her article is . . . interesting and well composed. She said that the slums of the great cities, the insane asylums, hospitals, prisons, are the result of sins and man unaided cannot erase any of these evils altogether but that the return of Christ would undo these evils after a period of time."

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed.

JONATHAN H. LEAVITT

The news reaches us that Bro. Jonathan H. Leavitt, a resident of Wewahitchka, Fla., now sleeps with the faithful awaiting the Master's call. His death occurred November 25, 1933. The executor of his estate, Theodore D. Levins of the same city, informs us that Bro. Leavitt left a memorandum in his own handwriting asking that we should be notified when the event took place. We have no further information than that contained in this brief announcement, but our beloved Lord knows the circumstances of his birth, his life, his successes and his failures, and we may leave his final destiny in His hands without fear.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Sr. Mary A. Gesin, editor of the Children's Page, has been confined to her home for the past ten days by illness, but is slowly improving. But in spite of her weakness she prepared her usual copy for her beloved children.

Why not ask a friend to subscribe to The Restitution Herald? The price to new subscribers is only $1.50 for a full year.

Pastor friends: How many of your congregation do not subscribe to The Restitution Herald? We will gladly send them sample copies if you will send us their names.

We are planning a great Easter issue of The Herald. You will want to begin at once making out the list of friends to whom you will want copies of this paper sent. The price will be five cents a copy.

"The articles on prophecy in the issue of January 23 were the best I have ever read," writes Sr. C. Seely of California in a recent letter.

Sr. W. H. Eidemiller, Troy, Ohio, whose very strange and serious accident was reported some months ago, writes that she is mending slowly from her injuries that resulted from her being struck by a railway train.

Watch us climb! Letters and pledges continue to come in encouragingly. Large or small, these splendid assurances of support are deeply appreciated by the board.

It required twelve oxen to haul the gifts of the princes of Israel to the dedication of the tabernacle. "Nowadays," observes A. B. Simpson in "Giving According to Scripture," "it would take twelve oxen to drag some of our unwilling givers to the altar of sacrifice."

Bro. and Sr. T. J. Ellis of Waterloo, Iowa, were guests of the Oregon, Ill., church over Sunday. Bro. Ellis was called to Oregon to attend a special meeting of the board of the National Bible Institution on Saturday. A report of the meeting will appear later.

Help the N. B. I. to climb the ladder to financial security!

Bro. H. B. Hathaway, Corvallis, Ore., writes, "The Herald surely has some splendid articles." He includes with the letter from which the statement is taken an interesting clipping on "Ideas of the Kingdom of God," which will soon appear in our columns with editorial comments.

"Satan does not tempt those who are already his."

Sr. Emma C. Railsback of Los Angeles, one of the most faithful supporters of the work from both a material and spiritual standpoint, contemplates a visit to brethren in San Diego in the near future. Sr. Railsback for many years has acted voluntarily but efficiently as a sort of "pastor-at-large" for the entire state of California, a form of service for which she is peculiarly fitted.

Bro. S. G. Elton, formerly of Pasadena, Calif., but now of 2321 Sunset Dr., Ventura, Calif., sends a most interesting personal letter addressed to the editor and associate editor, the larger portion of which we desire to publish in the near future, as it contains some very important suggestions.

Buy Berean books for personal Bible study. Lesson outlines for all ages. Stories of Bible characters for children. Sermon guides for pastors. Address the National Berean Society, Oregon, Ill., for further information.

Change of Address.—When ordering change of address be sure to send us both old and new addresses.

Receipts.—The change of date on your address label is your receipt. If date is not changed in two weeks after payment of subscription, please notify this office.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

"THE HEBREW PEOPLE"

The new Junior Berean Book, "The Hebrew People," is now ready for distribution. The price is 30 cents for single copies; 27 cents each for 5 to 25 copies; 25 cents each for 25 or more copies. This book contains an illustration of the finding of the baby Moses.

Send all orders to National BEREAN Society, Oregon, Illinois.

BAPTISM—

by S. J. Lindsay

This is a treatise on the significance, importance, and mode of baptism by one of the most able Bible teachers. The subject is presented in an interesting and logical manner, setting forth the biblical truth that baptism by immersion in water, following a definite belief in the gospel, is essential to salvation.

8 pages—2 for 5¢; per dozen 20¢; per hundred $1.20.

ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

We hold our services in the W. C. T. U. Hall at 1904 North Main Street. Sunday school convenes every Sunday at 9:45; and Berean class every Friday evening at 7:45. Bro. Conner preaches for us on the second and fourth Sundays each month: morning service at 11:00 o'clock, and evening service at 7:30. We cordially invite all who can to meet with us in any of these services.

Please send all remittances by postal money order rather than by personal checks, as we are compelled to pay a high rate of exchange to get checks cashed.

STILL GOING UP!

Rung by rung we're climbing the ladder out of the depression. By way of encouragement, and to indicate the effort the board is making to economize in every way possible, we are pleased to tell you that when our books were closed for the year they indicated a net gain of more than $2,800. Last year our gain was about $800. It is needless to remind you that this was accomplished in years of great economic difficulty. Due to changes made at our last board meeting the overhead of the office was again reduced more than $30 per month.

So the board joins with the brethren in lifting this load from the Institution. The need represented by the appeal now being made is the most pressing one, but with continued united action we are surely going to meet it.

GIVING ACCORDING TO THE SCRIPTURES

the Master sitting down over against the treasury and watching the gifts of the people with intense interest. One by one the wealthy passed by and cast in much. But their largest gifts did not seem to attract His attention. A poor widow had just passed by, and modestly hiding her hand lest any should see her two little mites, she silently dropped them into the treasury and was gone. But she had not escaped His eye. He called the disciples to note her noble gift. "Verily," He said, "she hath cast in more than they all." And with fond appreciation He dwelt upon the gift and held it up to the emulation of all succeeding ages and established the principle and standard by which God judges all our giving, namely, not the quantity, but the proportion; not the amount of money, but the amount of heart; not the weight of the coin, but the weight of love.

When Ananias and Sapphira came to claim the glory and honor of special generosity without the merit of honesty and sincerity, they became the fearful examples of God's heart-searching judgment. So we may be sure that whenever the Holy Spirit rules in the hearts of God's people there will not only be liberal giving, but there will be honest giving, clean giving, giving with holy hands as well as loving hearts. May God purge His church today from the sin of simony, and the unhallowed means of financial support which are withering the spiritual support of so many Christian congregations!

Now let us look at the teaching of the apostles respecting Christian beneficence. The eighth and ninth chapters of 2 Corinthians lay down the principles of the ministry of giving.

1. It is a grace. That does not merely mean that it is a gracious thing to give, but more particularly that it is something given to us by the grace of God, and that we never give scripturally until we learn to do it in the power of the Holy Ghost. It follows from this:

2. It is the privilege of the poor as well as the rich. If it is through God's grace, then it is not dependent merely on our ability. "Of thine own have we given thee," and, "All things come of thee," was David's exposition of true giving.

3. We can give beyond our own ability. So the Corinthians gave, and the saints of Macedonia. And Paul bears them record that to their power, and yea, beyond their power, they were willing of themselves to give.

4. All true giving begins with self-consecration, for "they gave themselves first to the Lord, and then to us by the will of God." It is not difficult to surrender our property when God has won our hearts.

5. True giving is to be by faith. We give not according to what we see, but how much we can trust. Therefore, the principle of voluntary pledges and trustful preparation for the ministry of giving is undoubtedly authorized by the examples here presented. In the tenth verse of chapter

8 it is certainly implied that the Corinthian Christians had been purposing to give these offerings a year before, and they were not exhorted to perform the doing of it "that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have." And so we find Paul arranging on this occasion to send on the brethren before to help them to prepare for their next offering, "that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness."

There is something very beautiful in thus planning and purposing to give to the cause of Christ, and then going forth to our business in partnership with the Lord to trust Him so to prosper and bless us that we shall find that we are but giving Him that which is His own. It is indeed true that "there is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." God is able to multiply the humblest means and prove to the trusting heart that giving is a grace and that it pays to be honest with the Lord.

6. True giving is by love. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." This makes all giving easy.

7. Finally, giving should be with joy. "The abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality." Here we have a sacred paradox in which the deepest poverty and affliction overflow into the highest joy and generosity. These are paradoxes that only grace can explain. "God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. 9:7. The word expresses the most exuberant joy and is the Greek word "hilarious." It is indeed true that we never find the heights of spiritual happiness until we touch the fountain of sacrifice.

"Where is heaven?" was asked by one of our eccentric preachers, and the answer was a good one. "Go out to that wretched alley where yonder widow and her fatherless and shivering children are sitting on their miserable furniture which has just been hustled out of their poor tenement by a writ of ejection. Go and pay her rent and put her back into her home. Light the kitchen fire. Send in the hampers from butcher and grocer and coal dealer, and leave them weeping with joy and gratitude and you will find out a little of where heaven is."

"It is more blessed to give than to receive." We never reach the true standard of giving until we give till it hurts, and then keep on until it ceases to hurt.—A. B. Simpson in an Asher Tract.
